CBS

3/8/2011 Now to Mexico's drug wars and an update of our investigation into a controversial operation in which u.s. agents may have been ordered not to intervene as american guns flow to mexican gangs. investigative correspondent sharyl attkisson who's been reporting on this story has now discovered this may have been going on for many years.

reporter: it's a rare glimpse glimpse into a.t.f.'s controversial undercover operations. this photo obtained by cbs news shows an astonishing array of high-powered weapons put on display for buyers from mexican drug cartels. a.t.f. allegedly let gunrunners walk off with weapons-- thousands of them-- to see if they'd end up in the hands of the cartels. the justice department and a.t.f. have denied it ever happened. special agent john doddson works in a.t.f.'s phoenix office and has blown the whistle on the controversial strategy known as "letting guns walk." are there other a.t.f. operations going on that have done the same thing?

i believe so, yes, ma'am.

reporter: now multiple sources tell cbs news the questionable tactics were used in more than one operation and date as far back as 2008 in the tucson area. one case was called

"wide receiver." Sources tell cbs news licensed gun dealers often wanted no part of selling to suspicious characters who could be supplying cartels but that a.t.f. enlisted the gun dealers as paid confidential informants and encouraged them to sell even more. a.t.f. has asked me to assist in an official investigation, reads one agreement. Gun salesmen closed the deals and A.T.F. watched and listened with recording devices. a.t.f. special agents conducted surveillance and identified the dates and times that the conspirators crossed the international border says one court document. doddson argues that should never be done. because it's a lot of people that are going to get hurt with those firearms between the time we let them go and the time they're recovered again in a crime. reporter: sources tell cbs news these a.t.f. operations involved about 450 weapons and that despite the risk two years later the same strategy was expanded to include thousands of guns.
