Amen brother. George Gillett had to have a long talk with one [ATF] yesterday because we heard he was one of the "hand wringers" on this deal and asking why we weren't shutting this deal down now. I had Gillett call him and "counsel" him on why we weren't going to do that and if he had anymore concerns to contact us directly and not worry so much about those things he has absolutely no control over, or say in for that matter. By the way isn't he the head of the SWB Group??

INVESTIGATIONS

Division I – National Security Investigations

Counter Proliferation Unit

On February 20, 2010, SAC Phoenix Border Enforcement Security Task Force (BEST) agents seized 41 AK-47 style firearms and 43 AK-47 style magazines on the Tohono O'odham Nation Indian reservation. Angela VENTURA and Kina MIGUEL, both U.S. citizens, were transporting the weapons to Mexico when BEST agents requested CBP Border Patrol (BP) assistance in conducting a traffic stop, which resulted in the seizure. Both subjects were interviewed, and upon concurrence with the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Arizona, VENTURA and MIGUEL were released to be charged at a later date. This is a joint ICE and ATF investigation with CBP BP assistance.

One of the TNW, .50 caliber rifles seized was the one in April, 2009 in
pictures of this gun, mounted in the back of a pickup behind a man-made shooting platform, fed the rumor mill on the internet and the media of the people who believe that this gun, and many more like it, come from the Central/South American black market or are "stolen" from the Mexican military. Not true at least not in this case and from what we see on a daily basis - including the 42 AK-47 rifles we seized this past Saturday west of Tucson and a mile from the border. The Casa Grande Border Patrol folks assisted us in an outstanding manner with this. The two cars carrying these firearms were about to cross into Mexico. Bill,

I totally concur with your comments. With your operation pending we need to take a strategic approach in an effort to impact the DTO's. As you know all too well we can identify, arrest and hopefully prosecute straw purchasers all day long. The question we need to ask ourselves as a federal agency is what is the impact we are having on the root of the problem (DTOs).

As you also know we continue to lack human intelligence coming from Mexico. I believe this is where we need to focus our assets if we are going to be truly successful.

I continue to bring this issue to my colleagues and the increase in personnel within country will help but I am still not sure we really understand the dynamics that exist in Mexico which will allow ATF to have a significant impact.

With the recent changes at HQ I will continue to support you and your staff in anyway I can. Please help me help you by providing me your suggestions and requests so that ATF can be successful.

Regards,
 Jim

As you know over the past several days there have been several brazen attacks in Mexico against police and Gov't officials. The State Security Director in Michoacán's convoy was attacked (4 killed and 10 wounded including 2 and 12 year old girls). Used in the attack was a .50 cal due to her SUV being lightly armored. (The spike in .50 cal is something we've been highlighting for 2.5 years and explaining the reasons why - exactly what occurred in this recent attack). Now that these tactics have supposedly "changed", which I dispute because we've been talking about that for two years, expect the rhetoric from Mexico regarding firearms from the U.S. to intensify. It's one thing when bad guys are killing bad guys but when top level officials are being specifically targeted at all levels then all bets are off.

Mexico says cartels turning attacks on authorities

By MARK STEVENSON

The Associated Press

11:21 p.m. Sunday, April 25, 2010

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's drug cartels have changed tactics and are turning more attacks on authorities, rather than focusing their fire on rivals gangs, the country's top security official said Sunday.

Interior Secretary Fernandez Gomez-Mont said at a news conference that two back-to-back, bloody ambushes of government convoys — both blamed on cartels — represent a new tactic.

"In the last few weeks the dynamics of the violence have changed. The criminals have decided to directly confront and attack the authorities," Gomez-Mont said.

"They are trying to direct their fire power at what they fear most at this moment, which is the authorities," he said.

Officials here have long said that more than 90 percent of the death toll in Mexico's wave of drug violence — which has claimed more than 22,700 lives since a government crackdown began in December 2006 — are victims of disputes between rival gangs.

Mexican drug gangs have been known to target security officials. The nation's acting federal police chief was shot dead in May 2008 in an attack attributed to drug traffickers lashing back at President Felipe Calderon's offensive against organized crime.

But such high-profile attacks were rare in comparison to inter-gang warfare. But after the large-scale attacks on officials Friday and Saturday, "casualties among the authorities are beginning to increase in this battle," Gomez-Mont said.

On Saturday, gunmen armed with assault rifles and grenades attacked a convoy carrying the top security official of the western state of Michoacan, in what appeared to be a carefully planned ambush.

The official survived with non-life-threatening wounds — she was traveling in a bullet-resistant SUV — but two of her bodyguards and two passers-by were killed. Of the other nine people wounded, most were bystanders, including two girls ages 2 and 12.

Gomez-Mont said the attack was carried out by a group known as "The Resistance," an outgrowth of the Michoacan-based La Familia drug cartel.

It came a day after, gunmen ambushed two police vehicles at a busy intersection in the northern border city of Ciudad Juarez, killing seven officers and a 17-year-old boy caught in the crossfire. Two more officers were seriously wounded.

Hours after that attack, a painted message directed at top federal police commanders and claiming responsibility for the attack appeared on a wall in downtown Ciudad Juarez. It was apparently signed by La Linea, the enforcement arm of the Juarez drug cartel. The Juarez cartel has been locked in a bloody turf battle with the Sinaloa cartel, led by Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman.

"This will happen to you ... for being with El Chapo Guzman and to all the dirtbags who support him. Sincerely, La Linea," the message read. The authenticity of the message could not be independently verified.

Gomez-Mont, who is responsible for domestic security affairs, said the United States has to do more to stop cross-border gangs and illicit trade in weapons and money.

He said some gangs "find a certain kind of sanctuary on the other side of the border," referring to Los Aztecas, a Ciudad Juarez gang that also operates in the United States, where it is known as the Barrio Azteca gang.

"They (the United States) contribute very important components in the dynamic of violence," Gomez-Mont said.

"We need the Americans to step up and recognize the fact that it is their money, their drug demand, that foments and encourages the violence in Mexico. We need the Americans to assume their responsibility," he said.

The U.S. has supported Mexico's offensive, providing helicopters, dogs, surveillance gear and other law-enforcement support through the $1.3 billion Merida Initiative. "That is not a small amount, but it is not sufficient," Gomez-Mont said.

A few hours before his comments, the military reported that Mexican soldiers killed five men Saturday in a shootout with assailants in a town near the northern city of Monterrey and detained six police officers on suspicion of helping the attackers. The Defense Department alleged the police tried to interfere with the troops during the confrontation.

Drug cartels are known to operate in the area, and many members of local police forces are suspected of aiding the gangs.

In the Pacific coast state of Guerrero, a drive-by shooting killed the local leader of the tiny Labor Party outside his home Sunday, state police reported. Former legislator Rey Hernandez Garcia was hit by seven gunshots.

Police did not offer any information on a possible motive in the attack.
