Mr. William F. Marshall
425 Third Street SW, Suite 800
Washington, DC 20024

Dear Mr. Marshall:

I refer to our letter dated January 27, 2017, regarding the release of certain Department of State material under the Freedom of Information Act (the "FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The processing of records responsive to your request is ongoing and has yielded an additional 1209 documents. After reviewing these documents, we have determined that 495 may be released in full, 712 may be released with excisions, and 2 must be withheld in full. All released material is enclosed.

An enclosure explains the FOIA exemptions and other grounds for withholding material. Where we have made excisions, the applicable exemptions are marked on each document. All non-exempt material that is reasonably segregable from the exempt material has been released. For the documents withheld in full, we have cited FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6, 5 U.S.C. §§552 (b)(5) and (b)(6).

We will keep you informed as your case progresses. If you have any questions, your attorney may contact Trial Attorney, James Bickford, at (202) 305-7632 or James.Bickford@usdoj.gov. Please refer to the case number shown above in all correspondence about this case.

Sincerely,

Eric F. Stein, Director
Office of Information Programs and Services

Enclosure: As stated

The Freedom of Information Act (5 USC 552)

FOIA Exemptions

- (b)(1) Information specifically authorized by an executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy. Executive Order 13526 includes the following classification categories:

- 1.4(a) Military plans, systems, or operations
- 1.4(b) Foreign government information
- 1.4(c) Intelligence activities, sources or methods, or cryptology
- 1.4(d) Foreign relations or foreign activities of the US, including confidential sources
- 1.4(e) Scientific, technological, or economic matters relating to national security, including defense against transnational terrorism
- 1.4(f) U.S. Government programs for safeguarding nuclear materials or facilities
- 1.4(g) Vulnerabilities or capabilities of systems, installations, infrastructures, projects, plans, or protection services relating to US national security, including defense against transnational terrorism
- 1.4(h) Weapons of mass destruction

- (b)(2) Related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency

- (b)(3) Specifically exempted from disclosure by statute (other than 5 USC 552), for example:

ARMS EXP	Arms Export Control Act, 50a USC 2411(c)
CIA PERS/ORG	Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949, 50 USC 403(g)
EXPORT CONTROL	Export Administration Act of 1979, 50 USC App. Sec. 2411(c)
FS ACT	Foreign Service Act of 1980, 22 USC 4004
INA	Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 USC 1202(f), Sec. 222(f)
IRAN	Iran Claims Settlement Act, Public Law 99-99, Sec. 505

- (b)(4) Trade secrets and confidential commercial or financial information

- (b)(5) Interagency or intra-agency communications forming part of the deliberative process, attorney-client privilege, or attorney work product

- (b)(6) Personal privacy information

- (b)(7) Law enforcement information whose disclosure would:
- (A) interfere with enforcement proceedings
 - (B) deprive a person of a fair trial
 - (C) constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy
 - (D) disclose confidential sources
 - (E) disclose investigation techniques
 - (F) endanger life or physical safety of an individual

- (b)(8) Prepared by or for a government agency regulating or supervising financial institutions

- (b)(9) Geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells

Other Grounds for Withholding

- NR Material not responsive to a FOIA request excised with the agreement of the requester

Sidney

As we discussed on the phone, the VMI Distinguished Diplomat Award for Secretary Clinton has gone ☐agley☐ in the matter of a mutually doable date for presentation in Lexington. Some 50 dates have been proposed. None were workable because of problems with her schedule. As I mentioned to you, the yearly cycle has resulted in the selection of General Jones, for this year, but this in no way supersedes her selection. They await the time when they can honor her. If they have to wait until she leaves office, they will gladly do that.

At the same time, the Marshall Foundation which is located at VMI but is not a part of VMI, is giving her an award on the 2nd of June at the Building Museum in Washington. Splendid idea, but this has nothing to do with VMI. These are two different institutions.

The difference in these two awards would be worth explaining.

Best

hour but the good news is that they can't keep us out here longer than 3 hours! So, I want to go to plan B--pls do all you can to get us flying and if that doesn't work, I want to drive so have asked Service and DS to try to work that out

"We are deeply saddened by the passing of First Lady Betty Ford. As a staunch advocate for women's and equal rights, Betty paved the way for generations of women to follow. Her courage, compassion, and commitment to helping our nation deal with drug and alcohol abuse and addiction has served thousands of Americans and helped save countless families. We were honored to host President and First Lady Ford at the White House in 1998 when they received the Congressional Gold Medal for their dedication and service to our nation.

Betty was a remarkable woman and her legacy will live on in people around the country whose lives are longer and better because of her work. Our thoughts and prayers are with her children and grandchildren. We are grateful for her many contributions, and we will miss her."

The following are speeches I want to give if possible in the next 18 months:

Islamic Center at Oxford--the Kuwaiti FM has asked me every time we talk and I would like to do it but we'd have to coordinate w a trip to Europe and the FM's schedule.

Clinton school/library in Ark:

I've been asked to come to Ark as part of their ongoing Speaker's series and altho I have no specific time in mind, I'd like to do it before 2013.

VMI I'd still like to do this if we can ever get a date--lets try for early next year

CAP--Neera has asked me to speak at a conference CAP is doing in the Fall in DC. Her preferred date is Oct 12--can I do that?

Econ speech--I have no idea when it will be ready and where I will give it but will do so

SUBJECT: Diplomatic and strategic lessons from Vietnam for Extrication from Afghanistan

The similarities between the U.S. dilemma in Afghanistan today and its dilemma in Vietnam forty years ago suggest useful lessons. The strategy the Nixon administration eventually adopted managed to extricate the United States from the war in early 1973 but failed to head off a South Vietnamese collapse two years later. In today's different environment, a similar strategy of extrication should work better, permitting both U.S. withdrawal and the maintenance of acceptable local conditions following our departure. To improve the odds of achieving both these goals simultaneously, however, it will be important to blur the outlines of U.S. troop withdrawals with careful public rhetoric and diplomacy, cover the strategic retreat with tactical advances, and remain committed to Afghanistan even after U.S. combat troops have been withdrawn.

Nixon's Military Strategy

Coming to office in January 1969, Nixon initially decided to pursue a familiar goal—a negotiated settlement with the Communists that left the South Vietnamese regime intact and secure—with new means: expanded military operations, engagement with Moscow to restrain its North Vietnamese proxy, and attempts to transfer the capacity and responsibility for fighting to the South Vietnamese themselves.

But the first Nixon strategy failed, because the North Vietnamese did not give in. And rather than buy time for extended diplomacy, limited American troop withdrawals (begun in June) whetted rather than satisfied public desire for more. So by the end of 1969, Nixon and Kissinger devised what might be termed the second Nixon strategy, the goal of which was American extrication from the war no later than the end of 1972, in time for the next presidential election. This new approach consisted of gradual but steady U.S. troop withdrawals along with formal protection of the Thieu regime, together with a concerted effort to enshrine these elements in a negotiated settlement.

In the spring of 1969, there were almost 550,000 American troops in Vietnam. By the end of 1970, this number had dropped to 280,000; by the end of 1971, to 150,000; and by late spring 1972, to fewer than 70,000. Because the Communists had not stopped fighting, the only way for the troop withdrawals not to lead to an enemy victory was to have them replaced with something else. A vital part of the replacement package was aid and training for the South Vietnamese army (ARVN). Still, this alone could not create a true bulwark in the time allotted. So the Nixon administration supplemented aid to ARVN with other measures to keep the Communists off balance and entice them into a negotiated agreement.

One set of actions sought to make progress in counterinsurgency, including intensified efforts to “pacify” the South. Another set of actions constituted, in effect, a proactive defense. Rather than wait passively for new Communist attacks to emerge, the administration sought to disrupt them by striking at the base areas from which the attacks would be launched. So even as U.S. troop withdrawals undermined the long-term security of the Thieu regime, other U.S. measures made sure that regime was protected over the short term.

The Diplomatic Dimension

The administration followed the same pattern at the negotiating table. Kissinger met repeatedly in secret with the North Vietnamese in an attempt to formalize the American extrication in a written agreement, at first to little avail. In September 1970, Nixon and Kissinger went so far as to agree that the North’s troops could remain after a settlement in the parts of the South they controlled. Any agreement based on such a “cease-fire-in-place” would make eventual Communist victory likely absent continued U.S. involvement in the war. But the North Vietnamese remained intransigent, demanding the one concession American leaders refused to make—direct betrayal of Thieu in the short term.

Thanks to an intricate sequence of events in a changed international context (marked by détente with the Soviets and the U.S. opening to China), the second Nixon strategy eventually resulted in the 1973 Paris Accords. The process began in the spring of 1972, when the North Vietnamese—eager to take advantage of the near-complete withdrawal of U.S. ground troops—launched a massive attack on the South. This Easter Offensive made significant advances at first, but was eventually halted by a combination of ARVN resistance, American tactical air support, and American strategic bombing. By late summer 1972, the North Vietnamese, facing few opportunities for further military success and calculating that Nixon might be more motivated to cut a deal before reelection than after it, appeared willing to continue their struggle on the political front alone for a while. The Nixon administration, for its part, wanted to take credit for ending the war during its first term—and if still unwilling to dump Thieu, was nonetheless prepared to make further concessions affecting the long-term viability of his regime. Under these conditions, the negotiations began to move forward.

The United States agreed to accept the formation of a tripartite electoral commission—made up of the Thieu government, southern neutralists, and the Viet Cong—which would be formally responsible for handling political issues remaining in the South following a cease-fire-in-place. The North Vietnamese agreed to permit the continuation of the Thieu regime—as long as the legitimacy of the southern Communists’ political entity, the PRG, was acknowledged as well. By mid-October, Kissinger and his counterpart Le Duc Tho had worked out a draft agreement calling for the removal of the remaining U.S. troops and the return of the U.S. prisoners of war within sixty days after a cease-fire. Both men agreed to be responsible for the compliance of their respective sides in the conflict and they set a signing date for the end of October.

When Thieu realized that the Americans were serious about making a deal, however, he refused to cooperate, so the negotiations stalled. As the 1972 American presidential election came and went, the deadlock remained. Tantalized and frustrated by the prospect of a settlement just out of reach, Nixon and his advisers decided on a final pair of moves to end the war. First, to corral Thieu, they ordered a massive quick infusion of aid to the South and secretly promised him they would “respond with full force” to any Communist violations of the accords, while at the same time explicitly threatening to abandon him if he didn’t fall into line. Second, to get the North Vietnamese back to the table, they ordered a new round of devastating air strikes. This “Christmas Bombing” succeeded in the limited goals of extracting a few minor concessions, compelling a North Vietnamese signature, and showing everybody that Nixon could buck public outrage. It also helped cover up American insistence that the South sign an agreement similar to the one negotiated in October.

Pulling along a reluctant ally and enemy, the United States signed the Paris Accords on January 27, 1973, formally extricating itself from the Vietnam War. The Nixon administration’s policies had enabled the United States to get its troops out and its prisoners back without directly betraying its client—though the conditions of the agreement left that client acutely vulnerable.

The Aftermath

The Nixon administration came to office recognizing that America’s global economic position had declined in recent years and wanting to bring America’s commitments into line with its reduced capabilities. This general attitude not only reinforced the domestic imperative of withdrawal from Vietnam; it also guided the policy of détente with the Soviet Union and the administration’s opening to China. Yet Nixon and Kissinger understood that retrenchment came with its own dangers, and wanted to make sure that in Vietnam and elsewhere, their retreat did not become a rout.

The central problem the administration faced in Vietnam, therefore, was how to extricate the United States from the war without looking too bad. Nixon and Kissinger first tried to win by escalating, bluffing, and negotiating. When that approach achieved little, they decided to disengage unilaterally while continuing to protect the Thieu regime. Such a gradual withdrawal might spell eventual doom for a non-Communist South Vietnam, but if the U.S. could credibly say that it had not betrayed an ally, the international ramifications and humiliation of such an outcome would be diminished—and that seems to have been senior policymakers’ chief concern.

In August 1972, for example, Nixon privately told Kissinger, “Let’s be perfectly cold-blooded about it. . . . South Vietnam probably is never gonna survive anyway. . . . [C]an we have a viable foreign policy if a year from now or two years from now, North Vietnam gobbles up South Vietnam? That’s the real question.” Kissinger replied, “We can have a viable foreign policy if it looks as if it’s the result of South Vietnamese incompetence. . . . So we’ve got to find some formula that holds the thing together a year or two, after which—after a year, Mr. President, Vietnam will be a backwater.”

Yet if Nixon and Kissinger accepted the possibility of an eventual South Vietnamese collapse, they hoped it could somehow be avoided and sincerely intended to do what they could to keep it at bay. They were unable to do so, however, largely because of Congressional insistence on cutting Saigon loose following the Paris Accords and the administration’s own weakness and distraction stemming from the Watergate scandal.

In June 1973 Congress ordered that all U.S. military operations in Indochina cease by the end of the summer, and in November passed the War Powers Act restricting the president's ability to send troops into battle without congressional authorization. Congress also cut the aid the United States gave to South Vietnam, from about $2.3 billion in 1973 to about $1 billion in 1974 and still less after that.

The local belligerents had continued small-scale fighting even after the accords were signed, and in October 1974, the North Vietnamese leadership met to consider plans for future operations. The conference resolution summarized their conclusion: "Now that the United States has pulled out of the South, it will be hard for them to jump back in." So they attacked. Saigon made some clumsy moves in response, at which point the North stepped up its offensive and never stopped. Thieu outlasted Nixon by eight months, and on May Day 1975, Communist soldiers hoisted their flag above the erstwhile capital of South Vietnam, now Ho Chi Minh City.

Many have argued that this outcome was inevitable. Nixon and Kissinger have always taken the opposite position. The truth is somewhere in the middle. If events in Washington had played out differently—with Watergate not crippling the administration and with Congress less hell-bent on slamming the door behind the departing U.S. ground troops—Nixon might have been able to continue sending enough aid and airpower to keep the Thieu regime in power. Yet as Nixon and Kissinger knew full well, the settlement they had negotiated left the South vulnerable to future attacks, and it was precisely because a guarantee of renewed U.S. military intervention would have been political poison that Nixon had to keep his final promises of continued support to Thieu secret. Even without Watergate, in other words, it would have been difficult for the Nixon administration to counter northern actions.

The Implications of the Vietnam Experience for U.S. Policy in Afghanistan

In many ways, the situation today is similar to the situation four decades ago:

- Then as now, the United States finds itself embroiled in a thankless counterinsurgency in a remote theater of operations with little intrinsic strategic importance.
- Then as now, the enemy we are confronting appears capable, implacable, and unwilling to accept defeat or negotiate a partial solution—and is tied to a global anti-American ideological movement.
- Then as now, our local ally is relatively ineffective, corrupt, and difficult to deal with—and there seems little prospect of nurturing a robust friendly local political order in a reasonable period of time.
- Then as now, the enemy can make use of easily accessible sanctuaries in a neighboring country as bases of operations and staging areas for attacks.
- Then as now, the American public has tired of the war.

- Then as now, the U.S. global economic position is declining and a broader policy of grand strategic reorientation is under consideration.
- Then as now, a new administration has been elected with the de facto mandate of cleaning up the mess left behind by its predecessor, and has tried initially to end the war on positive terms through a new strategy—which has not yielded any settlement.

The good news is that the differences between the Vietnam and Afghanistan situations make the latter significantly more promising:

- The enemy is weaker today, more like the southern guerrilla forces in Vietnam than the regular northern conventional army that conquered Saigon.
- Domestic U.S. opposition to continued participation in the war effort today is less fervent, giving the administration more breathing room and making another forced abandonment of our local ally improbable.
- The administration's political position and the U.S. global position are both stronger.

All this suggests that it should be possible to achieve a more successful extrication this time around—one that not only withdraws U.S. ground combat forces from battle, but also protects U.S. interests in the area afterward.

A Successful Extrication

The key to pulling off such a feat lies in facing the situation squarely and acknowledging honestly (at least in private) the nature of the policy choice being made. Extrication is not victory, nor is it persistence (which essentially is hanging on in the hopes of eventual victory). It does not involve “conditions-based withdrawal,” at least if those conditions are defined as “having a high degree of confidence that the major objectives of the war have been sustainably achieved.” Extrication involves moving toward withdrawal even if such conditions have not been fully achieved. But nor is extrication the same as concession. Extrication is a policy designed to remove U.S. ground forces from combat without having that removal lead to defeat, whether actual or perceived.

Extrication involves presenting withdrawal, and supplementing it with other policies, so that its potential downsides are mitigated and kept at bay for as long as possible:

- Complete transparency is not desirable, and declaratory policy should diverge from actual policy. Withdrawal is being undertaken without all the war's objectives having been sustainably achieved, but that is something to be obscured rather than highlighted. Similarly, withdrawal is being undertaken because of a desire to avoid continued payment of the costs of war, but that too is something to be obscured. And withdrawal is likely to leave one's local ally in a somewhat uncertain position afterward, but that fact should be denied as strenuously as possible to everybody. The goal of declaratory policy during extrication, in short, should be to minimize the significance of what is occurring so that one's enemies are not encouraged or one's friends disheartened.

- Strategic retreat should be complemented by tactical aggression. The goal here should be to make it clear that the removal of U.S. ground troops will not create a safe environment for enemy maneuver and advance. In practice, this could mean that operations such as drone strikes or raids into heretofore protected areas would increase rather than decrease as troop withdrawals move forward. (This principle led to some of the Nixon administration's most controversial policies in Indochina—such as the “secret” bombing of the Ho Chi Minh trail and the attacks on enemy sanctuaries in Cambodia and Laos in 1970 and 1971—so it is worth noting that on this front, conditions today have changed dramatically for the better. Technological advances have made it possible to carry out such operations at far less human, diplomatic, and financial cost.)
- If possible, enshrine extrication in a formal negotiated settlement. This is not an absolute necessity (especially since in Afghanistan, unlike Vietnam, there are practically no U.S. prisoners of war in enemy hands whose return has to be engineered). But it is obviously desirable, particularly for the opportunity it would provide for the American public to gain a sense of psychological closure. If negotiations can lead to a plausible arrangement for demobilization, political integration, and power-sharing among the local belligerents, that would be a bonus. But in a pinch, a fig leaf that presents at least the appearance of such a deal will do (as with the Paris Accords). Pay careful attention to the sequencing of any agreement's stages—implementation of anything truly critical should be front-loaded, since later stages of such agreements are often left undone. Here again, of course, declaratory policy should obscure any agreement's shortcomings.
- “Linkage” is worth trying but not getting hung up on. Nixon and Kissinger made a big point of how all the administration's major negotiations were supposedly mutually reinforcing. In truth, though, such “linkage” never really worked, nor did they let their fetish for it get in the way of the negotiating logic of each track. Thus, they repeatedly sought Soviet and Chinese help in easing facilitating withdrawal from Vietnam, but these efforts never produced much. And when the 1972 Easter Offensive threatened to topple Saigon, Nixon insisted on doing whatever was necessary to help stop it—including bombing Hanoi and mining Haiphong Harbor—even at the risk of potentially disrupting a crucial upcoming

U.S.-Soviet summit. (His boldness paid off—the line was held in Vietnam and the Soviets let the summit continue unaffected.) In spite of what Nixon and Kissinger would say themselves, therefore, the real takeaway seems to be to pursue each major negotiating track largely on its own terms, since both hopes and fears of possible linkages between tracks will probably be overblown.

- Following the withdrawal of U.S. ground troops, other aspects of U.S. power should be brought to bear in order to prevent Afghanistan from once again becoming a source of major regional and global instability. This means continuing to supply economic aid, military advisers, intelligence, air power, and indirect military support so that local U.S. allies have as good a chance as possible at holding their own in the continuing struggle. Rather than withdrawal of ground troops amounting to the end of U.S. involvement in the conflict, in other words—which it might eventually be trumpeted as doing for domestic consumption—U.S. involvement there should be sustained at as high a level and in as diverse ways as necessary and possible.

Dear Cheryl,

Two quick things beside a thank you for your work in the world:

[1] John Doar's former colleagues are preparing a 2-day event for his 90th birthday, Oct 27-28, at Justice and Sidwell Friends. ☐ Please let Hillary know in case she'd like to be involved somehow. ☐ I know she admires Doar from her work on the Nixon impeachment committee.

[2] ☐ Do you know the proper channel at the White House ☐ to suggest Doar for the Medal of Freedom? ☐ (One of my former co-authors, Bill Russell, received it this year.) ☐ If so, I'd appreciate any tip on the process. ☐ ☐ Plenty of people working on the 90th would gather info if necessary.

Best,

Hi Jake,

In several ways,

The example of Kim Dae Jung in Korea is a good one: as a candidate for pres he bitterly opposed the IMF program. But then supported in the national interest -- which not only saved the economy from bankruptcy but lead to its dramatic revival. And he came across as a hero for putting the national interest above party interests and for the ultimate success of the policy. I was financial advisor to Korea at the time -- and the national unity this produced had a profound impact on markets and respect for Korea around the world.

See you soon,
Bob

Meanwhile we have forgotten how to make things work in DC. Your statement on the mess here was also great.

Jake-

Thanks for coming out on Friday. It was great to see you.

I mentioned mangos to you. Our first shipment arrive in the US last Thursday. This is one of the initiatives that the Secretary announced during her October 2009 visit. It's been a major struggle getting the sanitary and phyto-sanitary regimes in place but it's done! This season the price is high and supply is targeted to stores in New York and Texas, but it will go down significantly next year and beyond.

I've attached three photos for you. The design on the boxes is a bit cheesy but I thought RCH would have gotten a kick out of it. =) The Pakistanis renamed a plane in the PIA fleet for the inaugural trip which was unexpected but a nice touch.

Anyway, I can't tell you how much time I've spent on this and RCH was quit immersed in the specific details of the process as well. He brought it up with Zardari and others to press for action when things got jammed in the bureaucracy. He liked to throw them off by getting into crazy minutia as well as the big strategic issues to show just how much we were involved in.

My two partners in crime who lived and breathed this effort in the field were coerced early on by RCH and all they asked for in return was an autographed picture of Secretary Clinton. Both are huge fans and RCH of course said "no problem, just get this done!" I'm hoping that you might help me fulfill his outstanding promise to them?

The two individuals are: Marc Gilkey who is our regional APHIS rep based out of Embassy New Delhi. He's been SUPERB at keeping USDA focused and a real miracle worker at finding solutions to the internal USG technical regulatory issues. The other is Joe Carroll who just left post but has served as our Agricultural Attaché at Embassy Islamabad for the past 2 plus years. Joe is moving on to Australia next but spent over two years patiently educating the GOP on the details of the SPS issues.

I'm happy to help facilitate in any way and appreciate your help. It'd be nice to close this chapter with these folks getting some well deserved recognition.

Many thanks-

Subject: Hey Boss... I could use your assistance... Fw: Department of State

Our friend, General Joe Ballard owns The Ravens Group. Our friend, General Johnnie Wilson, is on Ballard's board... They do extraordinary work across govt agencies including full management of Walter Reid, administrative work at NIH and management of facilities at the VA. They also do GSA work and DoD work... They carry all desired statuses such as Service Connected Disabled Veteran, minority, etc...

The Ravens Group has a consistent and strong track record in government services.

I've sought to have the Gens meet Under Secretary Kennedy. I don't know if my requests have made it to him... We know of specific opportunities State is seeking and we know that there are some timely opportunities, too.

You will see below some lower level work outreach that has taken place at State... But there are more opportunities than just those mentioned below...

I'd love the opportunity for our Gens to come in for appropriate meetings, which seems to be Under Secretary Kennedy. I think, while lower level outreach is going on, having this top level meeting would be invaluable for State to know and be aware of a govt contracting group with the best possible scores, results, status and cost saving measures...

I know Gens Ballard and Wilson would greatly appreciate your consideration in helping them share their work and meet the right folks.

Thanks so much. B.

Good afternoon, Sir

It was a pleasure to speak with you today. Per our conversation, I am sending you this email with the details of the opportunities that I have uncovered. I am currently working on some opportunities at the Department of State. I am scheduled to meet with Bill Black at the Rosslyn office on the 25th to discuss two separate administrative support contracts that are scheduled to be released in October 2011 and March 2012 to place various skill sets. The re-compete in October is worth $100 million, and the re-compete in March is worth about $160 million ($375 million ceiling). The personnel provided will need to have a Secret clearance. The incumbent for the October re-compete is ARTI/Paradigm Solutions. The incumbent for the March re-compete is Alutiiq.

I have also discovered a requirement for Facilities Management and Support Services which will include a total of five (5) buildings at the Potomac Annex. This opportunity looks to be a new requirement. I am still gathering information for this opportunity. The latest information received is that the RFP will be scheduled to be released October 2011. The key contacts for the facilities operations for BRAC properties are Stephen Falsetto, Charles Mays, and Vincent Chaverini, Jr. This requirement is coming out of the Bureau of Administration / Facilities Management Services, Office of Operations (A/OPR/FMS).

I am looking forward to working with you.

Respectfully,
Dawn

Subject: Wangari Maathai passes away

It is with great sadness that the family of Professor Wangari Maathai announces her passing away on 26th September, 2011, at the Nairobi Hospital, after a prolonged and bravely borne struggle with cancer. Her loved ones were with her at the time.

Professor Maathai's departure is untimely and a very great loss to all who knew her - as a mother, relative, co-worker, colleague, role model, and heroine; or who admired her determination to make the world a more peaceful, healthier, and better place.

Prof. Wangari Muta Maathai started the Green Belt Movement in 1977, working with women to improve their livelihoods by increasing their access to resources like firewood for cooking and clean water. She became a great advocate for better management of natural resources and for sustainability, equity, and justice. A synopsis of her life and work can be read here.

Prof. Maathai leaves her three children—Waweru, Wanjira, and Muta—and a granddaughter, Ruth Wangari. They are truly very grateful for all the prayers and support they have received.

Further information on how Prof's life will be celebrated, where to share memories and condolences, and how to join us to build her legacy for generations to come will be provided shortly.

Wangari Muta Maathai*A Life of FirstsRELEASE IN FULL

Wangari Muta Maathai (1940–2011): Nobel Peace Laureate; environmentalist; scientist; parliamentarian; founder of the Green Belt Movement; advocate for social justice, human rights, and democracy; elder; and peacemaker. She lived and worked in Nairobi, Kenya.

“Every person who has ever achieved anything has been knocked down many times. But all of them picked themselves up and kept going, and that is what I have always tried to do.”

“You cannot protect the environment unless you empower people, you inform them, and you help them understand that these resources are their own, that they must protect them.”

Wangari Maathai was born in the village of Ithite, near Nyeri, in the Central Highlands of Kenya on April 1, 1940. At a time when most Kenyan girls were not educated, she went to school at the instigation of her elder brother, Nderitu. Principally taught by Catholic missionary nuns, she graduated from Loreto Girls' High School in 1959. The following year she was part of the “Kennedy airlift,” a scholarship program of the U.S. government and the Kennedy family that took her to Mount St. Scholastica (now Benedictine College) in Atchison, Kansas, where she completed a bachelor's degree in biological sciences.

In 1966 she earned a master's degree at the University of Pittsburgh. That year she returned to a newly independent Kenya, and soon after joined the School of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Nairobi. In 1971 she received a Ph.D., the first woman in east and central Africa to do so. She became the first woman to chair a department at the University and the first to be appointed a professor.

In the 1970s Professor Maathai became active in a number of environmental and humanitarian organizations in Nairobi, including the National Council of Women of Kenya (NCWK). Through her work representing women academics in the NCWK, she spoke to rural women and learned from them about the deteriorating environmental and social conditions affecting poor, rural Kenyans—especially women. The women told her that they lacked firewood for cooking and heating, that clean water was scarce, and nutritious food was limited.

Professor Maathai suggested to them that planting trees might be an answer. The trees would provide wood for cooking, fodder for livestock, and material for fencing; they would protect watersheds and stabilize the soil, improving agriculture. This was the beginning of the Green Belt Movement (GBM), which was formally established in 1977. GBM has since mobilized hundreds of thousands of women and men to plant more than 47 million trees, restoring degraded environments and improving the quality of life for people in poverty.

As GBM's work expanded, Professor Maathai realized that behind poverty and environmental destruction were deeper issues of disempowerment, bad governance, and a loss of the values that had enabled communities to sustain their land and livelihoods, and what was best in their cultures. The planting of trees became an entry-point for a larger social, economic, and environmental agenda.

In the 1980s and 1990s the Green Belt Movement joined with other pro-democracy advocates to press for an end to the abuses of the dictatorial regime of then Kenyan president Daniel arap Moi. Professor Maathai initiated campaigns that halted the construction of a skyscraper in Uhuru ("Freedom") Park in downtown Nairobi, and stopped the grabbing of public land in Karura Forest, just north of the city center. She also helped lead a yearlong vigil with the mothers of political prisoners that resulted in freedom for 51 men held by the government.

As a consequence of these and other advocacy efforts, Professor Maathai and GBM staff and colleagues were repeatedly beaten, jailed, harassed, and publicly vilified by the Moi regime. Professor Maathai's fearlessness and persistence resulted in her becoming one of the best-known and most respected women in Kenya. Internationally, she also gained recognition for her courageous stand for the rights of people and the environment.

Professor Maathai's commitment to a democratic Kenya never faltered. In December 2002, in the first free-and-fair elections in her country for a generation, she was elected as Member of Parliament for Tetu, a constituency close to where she grew up. In 2003 President Mwai Kibaki appointed her Deputy Minister for the Environment in the new government. Professor Maathai brought GBM's strategy of grassroots empowerment and commitment to participatory, transparent governance to the Ministry of Environment and the management of Tetu's constituency development fund (CDF). As an MP, she emphasized: reforestation, forest protection, and the restoration of degraded land; education initiatives, including scholarships for those orphaned by HIV/AIDS; and expanded access to voluntary counseling and testing (VCT) as well as improved nutrition for those living with HIV/AIDS.

In the violence that followed the contested 2007 Kenyan elections, Professor Maathai served as a mediator and a critical voice for peace, accountability, and justice. In addition, she and GBM were instrumental in ensuring that the new Kenyan constitution, ratified by a public vote in 2010, included the right of all citizens to a clean and healthy environment, and that the constitution's drafting was truly consultative.

In 2004 Professor Maathai was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in recognition of her work for sustainable development, democracy, and peace—the first African woman and the first environmentalist to receive this honor. In announcing the award, the Norwegian Nobel Committee said that Professor Maathai “stands at the front of the fight to promote ecologically viable social, economic and cultural development in Kenya and in Africa.” It praised the “holistic approach” of her work and called her “a strong voice speaking for the best forces in Africa to promote peace and good living conditions on that continent.”

In 2006 Professor Maathai co-founded the Nobel Women's Initiative with five of her fellow female peace laureates to advocate for justice, equality, and peace worldwide.

In recent years Professor Maathai played an increasingly important role in global efforts to address climate change, specifically by advocating for the protection of indigenous forests and the inclusion of civil society in policy decisions. In 2005 ten Central African governments appointed her the goodwill ambassador for the Congo Basin rainforest and that same year she accepted the position of presiding officer of the African Union's Economic, Social, and Cultural Council (ECOSOCC).

In 2006 Professor Maathai joined with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to launch a campaign to plant a billion trees around the world. That goal was met in less than a year; the target now stands at 14 billion. In 2007 Professor Maathai became co-chair (with former Canadian Prime Minister Paul Martin) of the Congo Basin Forest Fund, an initiative of the British and Norwegian governments, and in 2009 she was designated a United Nations messenger of peace by Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon.

In 2010, Professor Maathai became a trustee of the Karura Forest Environmental Education Trust. That same year, in partnership with the University of Nairobi, she established the Wangari Maathai Institute for Peace and Environmental Studies (WMI). The WMI will bring together academic research—e.g. in land use, forestry, agriculture, resource-based conflicts, and peace studies—with the Green Belt Movement approach and members of the organization. Through sharing their experiences, academics and those working at the grassroots will learn from and educate each other on the linkages between livelihoods and ecosystems.

Professor Maathai received a number of honors. Those bestowed on her by governments include: the Order of the Rising Sun (Japan, 2009), the Legion D'Honneur (France, 2006), and Elder of the Golden Heart and Elder of the Burning Spear (Kenya, 2004, 2003). Professor Maathai also received awards from many organizations and institutions throughout the world, including: the Nelson Mandela Award for Health and Human Rights (2007), the Kenya National Commission on Human Rights Lifetime Achievement Award (2006), the Sophie Prize (2004), the Goldman Prize (1991), the Right Livelihood Award (1984); and honorary doctorates from Yale University and Morehouse College in the U.S., Ochanomizu University in Japan, and the University of Norway, among others.

Professor Maathai documented her life, work, and perspectives in four books: The Green Belt Movement: Sharing the Approach and the Experience (2003), which charts the organization's development and methods; Unbowed (2006), her autobiography; The Challenge for Africa (2008), which examines the social, economic, and political bottlenecks that have held back the continent's development, and provides a manifesto for change; and Replenishing the Earth: Spiritual Values for Healing Ourselves and the World (2010), which explores the values that underpin the Green Belt Movement and suggests how they can be applied.

Professor Maathai is survived by her three children—Waweru, Wanjira, and Muta, and her granddaughter, Ruth Wangari.

"I have always believed that, no matter how dark the cloud, there is always a thin, silver lining, and that is what we must look for."

"We cannot tire or give up. We owe it to the present and future generations of all species to rise up and walk!"

Subject: Invitation for the Secretary

Dear Madame Secretary:

I hope you are well. I am very proud of your remarkable work. You may remember that during the Clinton Administration I was Under Secretary of State for Economic, Business, and Agricultural Affairs and I was the chief U.S. negotiator for the Kyoto Protocol. Todd Stern and Jonathan Pershing were key parts of my team.

I have been doing pro bono representation of a remarkable organization fronted by Jeff Horowitz, Avoided Deforestation Partners, which combines many of the country's major environmental groups with a number of large electric utility companies. We are dedicated to reducing the rate of global deforestation, which is a major contribution to greater gas emissions. Tropical forests are also crucial as habitats for a majority of the world's species, and poor people depend upon forests for their livelihood.

Our inspiration has been Wangari Maathai, with whom I worked daily. Her premature passing is a genuine tragedy. I know you share my admiration for her.

I am attaching a letter from me and Jeff Horowitz asking that you agree to do a short video for an event at the Durban COP, honoring Wangari and supporting forest preservation.

Thank you for your consideration.

Best wishes.

Dear Hillary,

I have just arrived in NYC, [redacted]

[redacted] Thank you. That was SO thoughtful of you to do that.

[redacted]
If there is a chance to meet up even briefly either in DC or NYC, that would be great. Of course I could come down to DC any other time too, as I am pretty foot loose and fancy free this trip.

The Pakistan-US relationship is certainly facing some major challenges, but I am hopeful that with some clear thinking, honest intentions and good diplomacy many of these challenges can be resolved. What did you think of our new foreign minister? I sure hope that the conversations behind the scenes are more positive than what is going on in the public arena both in the US and Pakistan.

With love and best wishes,

Clinton Adopts Jobs's 'Think Different' Motto on China

By Flavia Krause-Jackson and Nicole Gaouette

(Adds reaction to State Department policy starting in 18th paragraph.)

Oct. 14 (Bloomberg) -- The U.S. must face the challenge of rising economic and political powers such as Brazil, India and China by making economic concerns central to its foreign policy, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said today.

In a speech to the New York Economic Club, Clinton gave her views on how to deploy diplomacy to spur job growth, lower trade barriers and learn the lessons from the European debt crisis and the Arab Spring. She cited a maxim of Steve Jobs, the late founder of Apple Inc., who urged all to "think different."

China has been "gaming the system to hold down the value of its currency to give its companies a leg up," she said. Brazil and India, whose rapidly growing economies have transformed them into world powers, have put "economics at the center of their foreign policies," Clinton said.

Economic rivals are entering markets directly or deploying natural resources "to build and exercise power," she said.

That "critical concern" hit home for U.S. officials last year when China cut production of rare earth minerals -- used in products as diverse as flat-screen televisions and weapons systems. China controls more than 90 percent of the supply.

"The challenges of a changing world and the needs of the American people demand that our foreign policy community -- as Steve Jobs put it -- think different," Clinton said. "We have to position ourselves to lead in a world where security is shaped in boardrooms and on trading floors, as well as on battlefields," she said.

Free Trade Pacts

Her address follows this week's congressional approval of free-trade agreements with South Korea, Colombia and Panama, ending years of stalemate. Supporters said the accords are the biggest opportunity for exporters in decades.

Clinton spoke as European officials are outlining a rescue plan that may include deeper investor losses on Greek bonds, higher bank capital levels and increased firepower for bailouts and the International Monetary Fund.

Slovakia this week completed ratification of an expanded bailout fund of 440 billion euros ($604 billion) to prevent contagion from a debt crisis that has spread from Greece to other countries in the 17-nation bloc. Slovakia, which joined the euro in 2009 as a former communist nation seeking economic opportunity, was the last euro nation to clear it.

"We have seen governments toppled by economic crisis," Clinton said to the 104-year-old club. The sovereign debt crisis that began at the end of 2009 has triggered changes of governments in Greece, Portugal and Ireland.

Arab Revolutions

Clinton cited the impact of popular uprisings in the Middle East, which caught the U.S. off guard and were triggered by record-high food prices and other economic hardships.

"Revolutions born in a Tunisian marketplace have swept across an entire region," Clinton said, referring to the 26-year-old unemployed seller of fruit and vegetables who set himself on fire to protest his treatment by Tunisian police.

"To succeed, the Arab political awakening must also be an economic awakening," she told the audience of business leaders.

Clinton has focused increasingly on the economy since taking over at the State Department in 2009, shifting the focus of the world's biggest economy toward rivals in Asia.

She has held export promotion events during stops in Australia, attended meetings on trade while in India and discussed new regional trade agreements during visits to Vietnam. Today, she is pledging to build in the Pacific the same type of institutional framework that binds the U.S. and its Atlantic neighbors, according to State Department officials who weren't authorized to comment on the record.

Economic Statecraft

Clinton said agencies such as the Commerce Department and the U.S. Trade Representative oversee parts of the agenda and the Obama administration will work to coordinate those efforts more closely.

Diplomacy in support of business will be crucial to the future of U.S. power and prosperity, said Leslie Gelb of the Council on Foreign Relations in New York.

"The economy is the basis of our security, the basis of our power abroad, the basis of our military might," Gelb said in a telephone interview. "You want us to protect ourselves in the world, we've got to rebuild our economy. In terms of foreign policy, there's nothing anywhere near as important."

One aim of Clinton's initiative is to ensure that U.S. companies have a "level playing field" in global markets, where they sometimes encounter protectionist procurement programs, subsidized state-backed firms or demands that they hand over proprietary technology in exchange for entering markets.

'New Barriers'

"We are confronting new barriers that are emerging not at borders but behind them, denying our companies a chance to compete on the merits," Clinton said today.

Stephen S. Cohen, co-director of the Berkeley Roundtable on the International Economy at the University of California, Berkeley, said he had doubts.

The State Department "has been doing that for 50 years -- not trying to level the playing field, but talking about it," he said. "Right now they just say the same old stuff."

The free-market model -- now tarnished by the global financial crisis -- had worked in large part because the U.S. was willing and able to absorb the massive export drives of countries like China and Japan, a role it can no longer afford.

"It's the same game we've seen for the last 40 years that really started to crescendo in the 1990s -- open capital markets and free trade in all directions -- but it really didn't work to America's advantage," Cohen said in a telephone interview.

'Get Serious'

The State Department should "get serious about opening markets and leveraging the advantage to the U.S. side now," Cohen said. The administration should also "forget ideas and just look very concretely at the economy" and what each sector needs to be restored, he said.

Nina Hachigian, a senior fellow at the Center for American Progress, a Washington policy group with close ties to the White House, said that Clinton is taking all the right steps. The U.S. has "a long way to go" to catch up, she said.

"The kind of assistance we're talking about -- American diplomats helping American businessmen -- is pretty mild, relatively beginning steps," said Hachigian, a former National Security Council staff member. "Even our European friends do a lot more to help their companies than we do."

Hillary Clinton ingests the Commerce Department

Posted By David Rothkopf

If you have been wondering where America's Commerce Secretary was, I have finally found the answer. Hillary Clinton ate him.

The evidence for this assertion is that once again Hillary Clinton has demonstrated just the kind of leadership and insight into international economic policies that one might hope for from a Commerce Secretary if Congress actually thought the position important enough to confirm one.

Of course, I am kidding. About Hillary Clinton eating the Commerce Secretary. Not about anyone thinking the job was important enough to fill. Clearly, the Republicans in Congress don't seem to think that confirming a business leader like John Bryson to add needed heft and his considerable and useful experience to the President's team is a good idea in the middle of the kind of economic crisis we are currently enduring.

No, I make the comment about Clinton because once again she has stepped up and shown herself to be both an innovative Secretary of State and President Obama's most valuable cabinet member. For the second week in a row she is devoting her Friday to demonstrating how central she sees economic work to be to the job of the State Department and the international standing of the United States. Last week, the interaction turned on a meeting with the President's job council at which the focus was how to help America grow through international economic engagement, such as the smart initiative led by her Under Secretary Bob Hormats to promote more foreign investment in the United States. (It's what I call the OPM Stimulus...in which OPM stands for "other people's money.")

Today, Clinton spoke at the Economic Club of New York, delivering a speech entitled "Economic Statecraft for a New Era." The speech is part of a series of four she is delivering on key themes of this key dimension of the administration's foreign policy agenda. As she noted in the speech, according to a pre-delivery draft I reviewed.

.. Economic forces are transforming foreign policy realities around the globe. We have seen governments toppled by economic crisis. Revolutions born in a Tunisian marketplace have swept across an entire region. Europe faces its strongest test in a generation, thanks to recession and debt. And everywhere I travel, I see countries gaining influence not because of the size of their armies, but because of the growth of their economies.

She then went on to say, Simply put, America's economic strength and our global leadership are a package deal. A strong American economy has long been a quiet pillar of our power in the world. It gives us the leverage we need to exert influence and advance our interests. It gives other countries confidence in our leadership and a greater stake in a deeper partnership with us. And over time, it underwrites all the elements of "smart power": robust diplomacy and development and the strongest military the world has ever seen.

The speech turned on four key points -- that the administration is "updating foreign policy priorities to include economics every step of the way", that the State Department is "honing" its "ability to find and execute economic solutions to strategic challenges" (from energy to supporting democracy in the Middle East), that the Obama team is "modernizing our agenda on trade, investment and commercial diplomacy to deliver jobs and growth", and that they are focusing on the challenge of growing wealth being wielded by state controlled funds and companies

That a Secretary of State asserts an economic agenda is not news. Clinton's predecessors have regularly done so and the reality of course is that economics has always played a big role in foreign policy from wars fought over oil to the centrality of revitalizing economies to enhance security as during the Marshall Plan. That a leading figure in a government whose fate depends on job creation and restarting growth would raise such an issue is also not that shocking. What makes this speech different is that Clinton is not just talking the talk she is walking the walk, restructuring State to enhance its economic resources significantly, placing economic issues more central to our policies in places like the Middle East where promoting reforms that create opportunity is seen as a better alternative than say, invasion, when it comes to enhancing stability, mobilizing her team and embassies around the world on these issues and simply by actually credibly engaging with the business community in a way that has eluded many of her predecessors

Like her excellent Hong Kong speech regarding the administration's "pivot" toward Asia-another element of foreign policy with important economic consequences and in which economics is among the most vital levers -- the New York Economic Club leader provides among the very best examples of the Obama Administration taking its international economic policies and putting them in a coherent framework. Take Clinton's good work in this regard, the recent trade deals and Tim Geithner's excellent and, one might add, courageous engagement with the Europeans in the recent crisis, and you have the most impressive sustained international economic initiative the U.S. has mounted in years.

And early in this administration it was hardly a foregone conclusion there was ever going to be such an initiative. I recall eating a soggy tuna fish on whole wheat toast sandwich in the White House mess with a former senior Obama official who said, "this administration isn't like we were back in the Clinton administration. Back then, international economics was one of our central priorities. Today, it seldom comes up except in terms of financial markets." That was in the wake of the 2008-2009 crisis and the focus on stimulus and health care had put domestic issues center stage. Inevitably however, what has happened is that the administration has come to realize that there are no such thing as domestic economic issues that don't have important international components -- nor are there security interests worldwide without economic components.

The Clinton speech therefore is not only a sign of a successful Secretary of State continuing to work to reinvent the department she leads -- to "think different" in the words of Steve Jobs which she quoted in today's remarks -- it is also the sign of an administration maturing and developing better priorities and vital competencies where they are needed. (Although it still might help to have a Secretary of Commerce. I'm just sayin' .)

In fact, the Clinton speech has to be seen as a big success except for one egregious error. Seeking to describe the changes she seeks within State, Clinton asserted, "We need to be a Department where more people can read both Foreign Affairs and a Bloomberg Terminal." I get the bit about a Bloomberg Terminal. But I think she misspoke. A really forward-thinking State Department should probably be turning to a different foreign policy-focused media organization, don't you think?

Subject: Afghanistan Trip

I hope that when you are in Kabul you can do a small, (no matter how brief) meeting with some of the key women leaders, even if you do a larger NGO meeting. It is my strong sense from recent visits and emails that the women are feeling particularly apprehensive and isolated. They tell me all the time that because of you they have whatever standing they've been able to maintain. Rina Amiri is just back and told me that the women told her they "bought almost 3 years" because you've been their validator with their own govt -- from the London Conf to Kabul Conf to peace jirga and more. This is a very challenging time for them. No one knows better than you the ongoing upheavals, and they are worried they will be more marginalized in the transition and pushed back, even though their contributions have been significant. Rina also feels it is important to meet with the women.

Also with the ramp up to Bonn, their participation in their own government's delegation remains a question. Almost 10 years ago at the first Bonn conf, there was significant women's representation in both the official delegation and civil society meeting. Karzai has committed 25 percent for the December Bonn meeting, but we have to hold him to it. Also, some of the women members in the House are planning a Codel to Bonn to support the Afghan women.

I'm told that the segment on Afghanistan in "Women, War and Peace" series is very strong and has very moving footage of your meeting with the Afghan women before the Kabul Conf -- which when premiered on the Hill was met with applause. I also met with Kay Granger this week and she asked that we let her know how she can better support the Afghan women.

I feel very strongly that even a brief meeting with the women (with the cameras capturing it) will have huge substantive and psychological value. Moreover, since we have all new US personnel in Kabul, the women don't have the same kind of access that they did in the past.

Lastly, re: Central Asia and the Silk Road vision, we have been working to incorporate the economic role women can and must play from ag to small business in the region. The Bishkek econ conf we did with SCA is already paying dividends. For example, we are developing cross border econ projects between Tajik and Afghan women. If there's a chance to do even a photo with some of the businesswomen in Tajikistan, it would validate their efforts.

I hope the celebrations in LA are terrific.

Thx

Lona/Huma/Alice:

As we wrap up one of the more demanding trips the Secretary has been on in awhile, I'd like to propose the Secretary drop by the Line, the Executive Office, and the Correspondence and Records unit sometime between now and the end of the year. The whole swing could be finished in less than 15 minutes, with a few minutes in each of the three locations to say thanks for the support, and it would really help a lot with morale. The most critical is the line, most of whose employees have spent largely sleepless nights over the past week, but it would be nice to include the other two adjacent offices, since I don't think the Secretary has visited (but I defer to you with greater institutional memories).

Many thanks,

Steve

RELEASE IN PART
B6

Hi Huma,

Could you pass the following note along to the Secretary of State from Bono? We sent off a note of condolence this morning in the mail.

Thanks!
Catriona

Hillary,

Your spirit is strong here today... this morning I was thinking of you while writing about your mother... I nipped off for lunch, came back to hear news of your extraordinary speech. Its not like an Irish lyricist to be short on words, but, Wow....you just made a well thought out idea an official line in the sand. I think of the faith of all of those campaigners, I think of the science that now makes this vision of an AIDS free generation possible, but most of all I think about leadership, because leadership will get it done. You have had this in your heart and mind a long time...I hope we can be the wind at your back.

Your fan as always,

Bono

Subject: Bento Box

If you open the attached it's a photo of the bento with descriptions

I still see a prawn head so will work on that

Let me know if there are any items that will not work- I'll work on the wording on the menu so it doesn't sound too Asian, but again, these are all locally sourced items from Hawaiian islands.

In order to do the bento for this lunch it has to be served room temperature. In order to do any hot items we would need to scratch this plan and do a plated 2-3 course lunch that I wouldn't advise due to time constraints and the make-up of the room. It will be somewhat tight.

Thanks

- condolence notes continue to flood in. We will keep working on responses for you to sign when you get back.

- on trip, if you are up for dinner tonite, you should go in hotel, there's a casual outdoor place. Willard and dan piccuta are there as is kurt tong and they have the night open. We planned for larger pre-brief for tomorrow morning to go through everything.

- also, we are going to add a meeting this week with reps levin, mcdermott and brady who are in town for apec. You don't really see them elsewhere and they are asking.

- there is quite a lot of sensitivity about looking too lavish in these economic times or looking like we are on vacation. Apparently there was commentary about cannes being over the top. So we are starting to take down things like leis and fancy gifts. nothing that affects you. Just so you know.

MEXICO CITY (Reuters) - A helicopter carrying Mexican Interior Minister Francisco Blake crashed in the south of Mexico City on Friday, Mexican media said.

Blake, 45, was travelling between Mexico City and the state of Morelos just to the south, his ministry said.

It was not clear whether the minister had survived the crash or what caused it.

I understand there is one ethnic minority woman selected for the civil society session from the group we are funding. We've not had much role in the process so I don't know more since bringing to EAP's attention.

As for Bonn, I'm working with Huma. We'll figure out how to maximize the opportunity.

Just got an email from Claudia Kennedy that she'll participate in our women in public service event.

I wanted to mention a few things to you as there is travel ahead and there won't be a chance.

Your trip to Burma, in addition to the promise of change and its historic aspects, will be a great opportunity for the women of Burma. It will be a balancing act between the geo-political implications of the thaw and the on-going human rights issues. There will be much attention on you and Aung San Suu Kyi. She for the symbol of democracy that she has been and you for the human rights/women's rights symbol that you have been. As the keeper of your flame, I am only too aware of all the times over the years that you have been a voice for ASSK. I remember your signing the Beijing poster to ASSK for Albright to take to her right after the conference in 1995!

A few years back, you were on the stage at Vital Voices when we honored the Burmese women and ran the drum of over 100 names of women imprisoned there, and then last year VV honored ASSK. In the interview with her, she mentioned you and what you have represented to her several times. Moreover, she agreed to the interview because of your association with VV. So, it's no surprise for all of this, that I'm inundated with messages from the Nobel women, offices of women Senators, Mrs. Bush to the myriad NGOs wishing you well on your journey and urging you not to forget the women. Hopefully, when you're back we can do some kind of response based on your experience.

The whole minorities issue is that much worse because rape has been used repeatedly as a tool in the oppression and this point especially the Nobel women asked to be raised.

Also, you should know that our office has been funding a coalition of women's groups in Burma for leadership in civil society building. They have already trained several hundred women and the work is continuing. The grant was for $100k (a sizeable amount for Burma) and is being done through the embassy. I've told Kurt and company about the women and I'm hoping that some will be included in your civil society meeting. Our belief has been that progress needs to happen and women will be key.

Secondly, Bonn

In the last days we've had it confirmed that, in addition to 1/2 the civil society delegation, 32% of the official Afghan delegation will be comprised of women, including some of the best and including an opposition parliamentarian. Moreover, we also learned that the health results there are improving significantly, including a huge drop in maternal mortality! Minister Dalil (whom you know) will be coming to Bonn. Since you have been instrumental in support to lower the maternal mortality rates and made it an issue at the Kabul conference, I hope you will be able to do a side event at the Bonn conference with Minister Dalil to spotlight the progress as well as a brief meeting with the Afghan women's delegation.

Third, Women and Public Service (aka "Seven Sisters).

As you know, we've been partnering with Farah's office on this and June Shih has been dedicated to the project full time. We now have some excellent deliverables so the event will have wind at its back to go forward. This includes a program that will be done with Asia University for Women, so some of the young women in the region will be inspired to go into public service. We are still hoping to pull in non- 7 Sisters schools to make commitments, like Scripps, Spellman, etc. They are interested and we are working on that. We also have a growing roster of impressive women coming, including a message yesterday from the President of Kosovo. (She would also like to have a bilat with you when she is here). I'm thrilled that Christine Lagarde has accepted (she was fabulous at APEC/SF), and we are hoping that you will be able to work the schedule so you and she will be able to share the stage.

Fourth, the National Action Plan

You had asked Anita on Monday where things stood with DOD and they are going forward (and thanks for raising with Panetta)

We all agree that if you could speak earlier in the day on the 16th in addition to your ICG evening remarks, it would give the message its due and accommodate the broader community which has a stake in this.

A happy Thanksgiving to all the Clintons. I will hope to see you fleetingly in Busan.

Subject: for review: S speech on development

Here's the latest draft of the keynote Sec. Clinton will give in Busan November 30. Please send me your comments and edits by noon ET on Saturday if possible.

It's about 300 words too long, so I welcome suggestions for cuts.

Thanks,

So strange. My phone didn't even ring

I can go over everything else I see you in the morning, nothing urgent.

Only thing I wanted to raise tonite is re calmy rey. She said for last 2 days she wasn't coming to geneva. Well, she's back and confirmed bilat. You mentioned giving her something like a certificate but might be a difficult precedent. Are you ok with a nice personal gift? We have some nice new oscar de la renta jewelry pieces or other jewelry. Post is saying she would really value the final photo with you. We could always have you sign it after trip and send as farewell gift.

Subject: Final Notional Schedule and Latest Bilat List

Huma and Lona,

Of course we will continue to update things as we learn more, but this is probably the final notional schedule. As of tomorrow, I should have the final schedule from advance for Bonn and then I will have the schedule for each day the preceding day. Will Lona approve these, or will Huma do it via email? Happy to send to either or both of you.

The latest bilat list is also attached. We have contingency BCLs for most of these meetings, so if you approve them, we can be ready. Let me know if you want to add any to these, or if we can decline any politely.

Do you want to do focused trip calls tomorrow or form the plane on Sunday? I've asked Matt Irwin to stand by for a weekend call. It would be really helpful to get guidance to Mark Matthews about the dueling bilat requests from the [REDACTED] as soon as we can. Email guidance is also fine for him.

I think the trip looks fairly solid at this point, but of course we will keep refining the details down to the last minute. Let me know what else you may need.

Thanks and talk soon.

Subject: updates heard today went well. the restaurant in vilnius is set up like last time if you want to go, arrangements are made. pir suggested drinks with press which there is a good space to do as well. they may also have a band...

tomorrow, we are ok, just lots of bilats. osce thrilled you are coming at all even though you are not spending all day there.

calmy-rey has switched on us again. she wont be in geneva so you will see her in vilnius tomorrow for the farewell call.

we are adding more bilats to brussels including davutoglu and if we have time the new Finnish and new Latvian FM who you have also not had a bilat with.

for tomorrow night, dan only specifically mentioned bringing megan rooney and muke posner but is obviously fine with whatever you want. can be expanded to traveling team as well unless you want to also add the real expanded...donahoe, brimmer, beyer, countryman etc. i dont think you need to take all travelers out since you will likely end up with them tonite at the bed and breakfast.

there has been some nice feedback about cvc nytimes story yesterday.
i am going to send you latest draft of holiday card tonite to get your thoughts.

Hillary-

It was great to see you for a bit at Thanksgiving and hope we can find some time soon to catch up.

I am writing to ask if you'd be interested in speaking at the Truman National Security Project's annual conference from May 4th to the 6th? It is an incredible organization and network of our nation's young foreign and domestic policy leaders (I am a little biased as a Truman fellow). This group is filled with smart, pragmatic, and idealistic young leaders from across the nation and I consider myself incredibly fortunate to be a part of it. I think you will really enjoy getting to spend a little time with some of them.

I've attached a letter with more info from Rachel Kleinfeld, the CEO and founder, who I think you've met a few times before.

Hope your trip is going well and know that you make all of us so proud.

Love and best, Zach

November 10, 2011

Dear Secretary Clinton,

We would be honored to have you join us as the keynote speaker at our annual conference for rising leaders in foreign policy and progressive politics on Friday May 4th as our keynote speaker. Past keynote speakers have included Secretary Leon Panetta, General David Petraeus, former National Security Adviser James Jones, UN Ambassador Susan Rice, and Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano, among other great leaders. We would, of course, accommodate your schedule.

This conference brings together approximately 300 members of the Truman Community. They include Truman Fellows – rising policy leaders such as a number of members of your own Policy Planning staff, speechwriters and special assistants for President Obama, senior Hill staffers, and others. Truman Partners who will attend include emerging political leaders, from a number of veterans running for Congress, to the political director of Netroots Nation, state senators, and other political leaders from across the country.

At this conference we wish to challenge our Fellows and Partners. We want them to think expansively, and effectively. We hope to enjoin them to consider the big ideas that could really improve how America conduct our foreign policy and think critically about how to achieve these policies through politics, especially during this election year. We can think of no one better than you to provide them with the inspiration, ingenuity, and effectiveness we seek to instill.

I would be happy to speak with you or your staff to provide further information on the Truman Project, the leadership programs, or the event itself. We can also speak on December 19th when I believe we will be together at your Foreign Policy Board meeting, for which I was honored to be selected. Thank you so much for your time. It would be a great joy to have you join us.

Sincerely,

Dr. Rachel Kleinfeld
CEO and Co-Founder

This text has been cleaned up of typos and omissions and should be the one to be forwarded. I apologize for loading your in box. Tom Cheryl:

I would be grateful if you would pass this to the Secretary.

"Dear Madam Secretary:

It was a pleasure to sit beside you last evening.

I particularly enjoyed your speech and the key points it made. All that day and for many days previously I had been engaged with senior Palestinians and other Arabs and Israelis talking about the peace issue.

Your remarks raised a new and very important point for me which I would like briefly to set out for you.

Our group concluded rightly that we need to see a game changer in the region to make any progress.

Netanyahu is not going to move for anything that the Palestinians can offer him which they can deliver.

His coalition is too hard over and likely to divide on the key issues.

He cannot deliver anything the Palestinians can accept without our help. He is much more satisfied with the status quo than with the risks of change.

The Palestinians are divided and in the same position – nothing they can do politically can meet even their minimal needs as they see them and attract the Israelis to the process much less move them

We have little we can offer to break the stalemate; for years it has been clear that the curse for the Middle East peace effort is that it is never more than two years away from a major American election.

You may not agree with my points above, but I see no signs that there is a different conclusion possible. We are stuck and maybe for a long time

A stalemate has its own dangers. Things never get better on their own – the reverse is always true. There is no status quo possible in this region.

In the past a game changer put us in a position to help both parties and gave them incentives.

We have tended to see game changers as a war – the Yom Kippur-Ramadan War in 1973, Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990.

No one can wish a war on the region, even or especially with Iran – it much too dangerous, particularly with all that is happening there - despite the fact that it might be a game changer,

Your speech suggested a different kind of game changer.

It would be a slow roller and hard to catalyze for us and others, and maybe one in which it will be a struggle to develop confidence.

You spoke of the power and capacity of women to move events and noted the Liberia and Cote d'Ivoire model.

The Middle East is not West Africa – I have lived and worked in both - but I have always believed that a Gandhian approach might work in the region and particularly with Israel.

After listening to you, I am more convinced that it may be the one hope we have slowly but necessarily to see the region move to the point where both sides will come again to want a deal and seek our help. But it has to come from them and their own people.

What will change the situation is a major effort to use non-violent protests and demonstrations to put peace back in the center of people's aspirations as well as their thoughts, and use that to influence the political leadership. This is far from a sure thing, but far, in my humble view, from hopeless. Women can and ought to be at the center of these demonstrations. Many men and others will denigrate the idea. I don't and I don't think that was your message.

Several thoughts about how.

It must be all and only women. Why? On the Palestinian side the male culture is to use force. Bedouins were for years tribal raiders and bride stealers from other tribes. It defined the male being and the Arabs invented 'macho'. Palestinian men will not for long patiently demonstrate – they will be inclined over time and much too soon to be frustrated and use force. Their male culture comes close to requiring it.

The Palestinian women have to begin this. Some few already have. They should use peaceful demonstrations and sit-ins in their own territories calling for peace and seeking to get their own leadership – which is more than willing – also to support them if they look successful. They must develop growth and momentum, just like Tahrir Square, and attract more women to participate and thus gain world attention – not easy to do in their area and under their conditions. Their leadership has shied away from this idea because they can't control it; they too are afraid of being replaced by a Tahrir Square style action. Women acting alone could help counteract that thinking.

The Palestinian women should also stimulate a supporting, parallel and congruent effort by women in Israel, both Jews and Arabs, to do the same thing on their side of the dividing line. They too should keep the men away. If the Palestinians see men engaged they will jump in and the soldiers of the IDF will sooner or later use force. This comes from several former senior Israeli military officers I have spoken with. The soldiers are fearful, nervous, outnumbered, insecure and brought up on a severe distrust of Palestinian males whom almost all of them have never spoken to except at roadblocks.

Finally, the women must have a strategy. It must be long term and find a way to bring continuing pressure to change minds at the top. There should be no effort physically to cross dividing lines, but there might be peaceful demonstrations against all aspects of the occupation on the Palestinian sides – roadblocks, land confiscations, new settlement activity, around military government installations and perhaps in Area C which they do not control. This ought to be done with care but it could help to create the kind of action which no army can easily use force to deal with. There would be a chance force would be misused against them. With all and only women demonstrating peacefully under the eyes of the world the chances are much less force will be used against them, since that action has its own consequences. But in truth, I cannot minimize the fact that the dangers are not small.

On the Israeli side, it must be public demonstrations and show growth as well. Outside the Prime Minister's office and the major squares and parks in Jerusalem and elsewhere have been the traditional places for demonstrations like this for peace and change to begin and persevere. Rabin Square in Tell Aviv would be right. The Peace Now organization (Shalom Akshav), despite its decline, is one starting point.

Most of all the United States, in my view, cannot be seen to have stimulated, encouraged or be the power behind it for reasons you will understand better than anyone. I believe third parties and a number NGOs on both sides would help, particularly if there were an outline of a peace document with parameters which, like those at the end of the Clinton administration, promised a fair and lasting peace and which the women on both sides could agree to support.

You may well think this is too far out, with too many moving parts, and it may well be and that there are better ideas. If so, I would be the first to understand. But the dangers of doing nothing are real too – conflict, certainly change and not for the better, and with a certainty as well of no progress. If it is as the President has said peace in this part of the world is a vital interest for the US, then something like this may fit the need."

Sounds good. I suspect you will have regular PCs on Tuesday at 5:15pm and 4:30pm on Wednesday but there were no topics set as of yesterday for either one. Other than those two potential PCs, you have the usual senior staff and A/S meetings but that is all, we kept them completely flexible and open for full days of office time

I'd like to take either a flight from White Plains or the shuttle around 9-10am Tuesday to DC and back to WP around 6pm Wednesday.

Please tell the USSS I have personal meetings in the City starting at 10am Thursday morning [redacted]

Cheryl has an appt request I'd like to do either day.

Do you have any more info about the schedule in the office those two days?

You will see on call list that bill psacrell called. He will not give anyone in H the topic and says its personal so we have no call sheet.

Also, I gave jon your personal passport for punta cana. Its not your official passport we use for travel. I usually just keep it with me but he said you asked for it.

Hi Mom, Cheryl and Huma - The silliest thing about my blanking on the call this morning was that I was actually on the phone with my friend [redacted] who is distraught about his current visa conundrum (ie talking about something firmly in your world!). I asked him to write out an explanation and send it to me so that I could see if there was anything the collective you could do to help him given the challenge originated from a miscommunication and a snafu and no ill intent (quite the opposite). If however, as ever, there is nothing that can be done, please let me know that and I'll tell him he has to just go back into the US Embassy queue in London. Any advice appreciated. Thanks.

Hey Chels -

Cripes, I feel like such an idiot for managing to screw this up, I just didn't think it would be an issue. Below is my "story" and I have attached the letters of recommendation I had with me - any advice appreciated!

Can't wait to see you - I still hope very soon :-)

Oh deary deary me...

F xxx

I am the [redacted] a UK-based market research firm with offices around the world. We have been developing a new way of measuring opinion online for [redacted] here in the UK, and it is now time to launch this new technology for [redacted] the largest global hub of [redacted].

Although I will continue to be [redacted] here in the UK (we have 10 employees) I will therefore need to spend large amounts of time consulting with the US company over the course of the project, which will last up to one year. I will continue to be paid by [redacted] as normal in the UK and will return at the end of the project.

During the course of that period I will be going to and fro, with no continuous stretch of time in the US longer than two months. The first stay will be approx one month - I have a flight booked for Sunday 29th January, returning at the end of February to the UK.

Instead of coming to and fro on a visa waiver, I thought it would be better to get a proper visa. I was advised by our attorneys in the US that a B1 visa was the appropriate visa to apply for, which I then did.

Unfortunately on my application I said I would be there for a year, and at my visa interview at the US embassy on Friday, and when the guy asked me how long I was intending on being in the US for, I said "up to one year" - and given that the B1 visa has a maximum six month stay, he rejected my application. My initial stay is actually only one month - I was not clear in explaining it.

Given that my flight is next Sunday 29th, and I have a packed schedule all set up in the New York office that week, what is the best way of sorting this out? Should I -

- Go for the initial month on a visa waiver and sort out a more robust solution when I am back in the UK at the beginning of March (but will I now be rejected for an ESTA because of the recent visa denial? Ah!)
- Try to get an emergency appointment at the US embassy this week and reapply for a B1 visa
- Be paid by the [redacted] directly and apply for an L-1 intracompany transferee visa (would rather not do this but is possible)

Help!

Hey Chels -

Cripes, I feel like such an idiot for managing to screw this up, I just didn't think it would be an issue. Below is my "story" and I have attached the letters of recommendation I had with me - any advice appreciated!

Can't wait to see you - I still hope very soon :-)

Oh deary deary me...

F xxx

I am the [REDACTED] a joint venture company with [REDACTED] a UK-based market research firm with offices around the world. We have been developing a new way of measuring opinion online for [REDACTED] here in the UK, and it is now time to launch this new technology for [redacted] the largest global hub of [redacted].

Although I will continue to be [redacted] here in the UK (we have 10 employees) I will therefore need to spend large amounts of time consulting with the US company over the course of the project, which will last up to one year. I will continue to be paid by [redacted] as normal in the UK and will return at the end of the project.

B6

During the course of that period I will be going to and fro, with no continuous stretch of time in the US longer than two months. The first stay will be approx one month - I have a flight booked for Sunday 29th January, returning at the end of February to the UK.

Instead of coming to and fro on a visa waiver, I thought it would be better to get a proper visa. I was advised by our attorneys in the US that a B1 visa was the appropriate visa to apply for, which I then did.

Unfortunately on my application I said I would be there for a year, and at my visa interview at the US embassy on Friday, and when the guy asked me how long I was intending on being in the US for, I said "up to one year" - and given that the B1 visa has a maximum six month stay, he rejected my application. My initial stay is actually only one month - I was not clear in explaining it.

Given that my flight is next Sunday 29th, and I have a packed schedule all set up in the New York office that week, what is the best way of sorting this out? Should I -

- Go for the initial month on a visa waiver and sort out a more robust solution when I am back in the UK at the beginning of March (but will I now be rejected for an ESTA because of the recent visa denial? Ah!)

- Try to get an emergency appointment at the US embassy this week and reapply for a B1 visa

- Be paid by the [redacted] directly and apply for an L-1 intracompany transferee visa (would rather not do this but is possible)

Help!

Subject: Cuba

I spoke with Marco Aurelio Garcia this morning about Alan Gross and Dilma's upcoming trip to Cuba. Following up on a conversation I had with him several days earlier, I underscored our interest in securing Gross' release. I walked him through our efforts up to this point, and noted that mixed messages from the Cubans in New York, and their disastrous handling of the Richardson visit, had raised real doubts about their willingness or ability to resolve this problem. I said we needed direct communication with Raul Castro, and I asked for Dilma to raise this issue with the Cuban president when they meet this coming week.

Marco Aurelio agreed to raise this request with Dilma. While he could not anticipate her response, he said that she is aware of the Gross case, understands its importance, and would like to find a successful resolution to it. (Earlier in the week he had told me that the GOB would remain seized with this issue and was prepared to be helpful to both sides.)

Marco Aurelio is currently in Porto Alegre, but is returning to Brasilia later today. He is then traveling on Sunday to Salvador da Bahia with Dilma to participate in a Holocaust Remembrance ceremony. Both will depart for Cuba directly from Salvador. I will speak with him before he leaves for Cuba.

Time has not yet been confirmed. Faxing this to you as well.

The Secretary's Call Sheet for

Brazilian Foreign Minister Antonio Patriota

Purpose of Call: To enlist Brazilian support to press the Government of Cuba to release Alan Gross.

B5

Upcoming High-Level Visits: We look forward to President Rousseff's visit to Washington and continue to coordinate with the White House on dates. I understand that we are now looking at the possibility of the meeting occurring during the week of April 9. We welcome the opportunity to meet with you in advance of or during her visit and to work with the Brazilian Government on a substantive and productive visit that highlights our close economic ties and outstanding cooperation in education and science and technology. Under Secretary Sherman is also looking forward to her planned visit to Brasilia and Recife on February 2-4, and Deputy Secretary Burns is looking forward to his visit to Rio de Janeiro and Brasilia on March 1-2.

Issuance of a Visa to Yoani Sanchez: I would like to express our appreciation for Brazil's issuance of a visa to prominent Cuban dissident Yoani Sanchez. Ms. Sanchez's efforts are just one example of the desire of the Cuban people to freely determine their future, and your support is appreciated.

Background: December 3, 2011, marked two years of imprisonment for USAID subcontractor Alan Gross. He was arrested on December 3, 2009, and in March 2011 sentenced to 15 years in prison for "crimes against the independence and territorial integrity of the state" by a Cuban court, when in fact he was merely working to help connect Jewish communities on the island to the internet. Gross is an international development worker who has worked in more than 50 countries over the past 25 years. We believe strongly that Gross was wrongly convicted and his continued incarceration serves as a major impediment to U.S.-Cuba relations. Given that Brazil's substantial ($750 million) investment in the Port of Mariel is in part motivated by anticipated future trade with the United States, the Government of Brazil should have an interest in seeing an improvement in U.S.-Cuban relations. Brazilian President Rousseff's stated commitment to human rights, and her past personal experience suffering human rights abuses and imprisonment by an authoritarian regime, may make her more receptive to humanitarian arguments favoring Gross's release. Cuban government interlocutors may compare this imprisonment to the Cuban Five. We reject all attempts to link the two cases.

Just heard from Susan. If you skip cabinet meeting, she will stay in NY. If you go to cabinet mtg then fly to NY after, she will ask for a ride.

Right now Lona is planning for you to go to cabinet mtg.

MoHan

We received the attached transcript from Stratcom after the book was at the residence. It is reading in advance of her Half the Sky interview tomorrow. I have a printed copy for S when she arrives in the morning, but since it is lengthy and she doesn't have much office time before the interviews, thought maybe you could print for her tonight/tomorrow at the residence. If not, no worries and I will give her the paper copy tomorrow.

Thanks!

FAREED ZAKARIA GPS

The Role of Women in the World; Interview With Robot Comedian

Aired September 4, 2011

THIS IS A RUSH TRANSCRIPT. THIS COPY MAY NOT BE IN ITS FINAL FORM AND MAY BE UPDATED.

FAREED ZAKARIA, HOST: This is GPS, THE GLOBAL PUBLIC SQUARE. Welcome to all of our viewers in the United States and around the world. I'm Fareed Zakaria.

We have a terrific show for you today, filled with some of the most interesting thinkers in their fields. First up, a new way to think about the role of women in the world with a terrific, important panel.

Then a first for GPS, I will have a robot as a guest. You will want to meet my new friend, Data.

Next, a man who made me think differently about innovation, the world renowned architect, Frank Gehry. He designs buildings like nothing you've ever seen before. How does he innovate?

Then, how do you capture the essence of a world leader? I'll talk to the acclaimed and innovative photographer Platon.

And finally, think you can't sell chopsticks to China? Think again.

But first, here's my take. These are the dog days of summer, and in this hot, sweltering weather, most Americans are busy working. I know, I know, not you folks in the Hamptons, but the others.

Meanwhile, most Europeans are busy vacationing. Thus it has ever been, only it's getting worse. Nowadays the average European gets about three times as many days of paid vacation as his counterpart in America.

Italy has the most vacation days, with the average worker there getting 42 paid days off according to the World Tourism Organization.

Next was France, with 37 days; Germany with 35; Brazil at 34; the U.K. at 28; Canada, 26; Korea and Japan both with 25. The United States was near the bottom of the list, with the average worker getting 13 paid days off.

Why do we do this to ourselves? Well, the conventional answer is that this attitude towards work makes the American economy the envy of the world. America is a hectic turbo-charged system that builds, destroys, rebuilds all at warp speed. It's what created the information revolution, Silicone Valley, hedge funds, biotechnology, nanotechnology - whatever that is - and so on, and there's no time for lolling at the beach. In fact, it's not clear at all that working for a few extra weeks in the summer is what makes a nation's economy hum.

Take a look at these numbers from Ipsos, a consulting firm, on the percentage of citizens that actually use all of their vacation days.

The French, predictably, lead the pack. Eighty-nine percent take all of their days; but 75 percent of the Germans - and their economy is strong - take their allotted days; 70 percent of Indonesians, in a country enjoying a booming economy, use all of their days; but only 57 percent of Americans take advantage of their days. And we have fewer paid vacation days than almost any other major country. Even with those just 13 days off, only 57 percent of Americans take them all. To remind you again, 89 percent of the French use all of their days off.

If you're worried that working less will mean America lags behind, don't worry. America's growth historically has been fueled mostly by investment, education, productivity, innovation and immigration. The one thing that doesn't seem to have anything to do with America's growth rate is a brutal work schedule.

After all, we were working hard during the very slow years of the 1970s, we're working hard now. In fact, some experts believe that working harder might actually depress productivity numbers because the additional hours worked rarely generate strong output. We are not as productive at 8:00 P.M. as we are at 9:00 A.M.

So, take a break. Go to the beach. Read a book. Watch TV. Wait a minute, you're already watching TV. So, well done.

Let's get started.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

ZAKARIA: I want to spend a little time today talking about an absolutely crucial issue, the role of women in the world. One of the most important indicators, for example, of how the revolutions in the Middle East will go is how well they will treat women. Throughout the Arab world and in Africa, women remain second class citizens, beholden for life to a male relative.

Is this changing? How fast? What else is happening with women in the world?

We brought together a terrific panel to talk about this issue. Let's turn to "New York Times" columnist Nicholas Kristof, who with his wife, the journalist Sheryl Wudunn, together wrote "Half The Sky."

One of the great stories from that book is that of Zainab Salbi, who also joins us. She is the founder of Women for Women International.

Nick, how much of the treatment of women is culture, how much of it is religion, and how much of it is Islam in particular?

NICHOLAS KRISTOF, COLUMNIST, THE NEW YORK TIMES: There's no question that organized religions in general tended to take a social hierarchy that typically had men very much in top and sanctified it, kind of placed the stamp of God on top of it. And this is true of a number of religions.

On the other hand, it is clear empirically, if you look around the world, that the places where women are most likely to run into terrible problems are predominantly Muslim countries. My own take is that has much less to do with the Koran and with Islam, as such, and rather more to do with culture and that the insecurity, the violence, the social conflict has less to do with the Koran and rather more to do with a cycle of not educating girls, of marginalizing women, which leads to very high birth rates, which leads to a very high demographic cohort of young people aged 15 to 24, which is the most destabilizing thing a country can have.

And the way out of that is to do what a number of Muslim countries have done - Bangladesh, Indonesia, Malaysia - which is to educate girls. And, you know, the reason that Bangladesh is so different from Pakistan today, even though they started as one country, in part is that Bangladesh has done a superb job educating girls and now has more girls in high school than boys.

ZAKARIA: And both countries are 95 - 99 percent Muslim.

KRISTOF: And both are - both are Muslim countries. I mean it's - and they read the same Koran. But Pakistan is a real mess, and Bangladesh is not.

ZAKARIA: What about China? Because, I mean, to my - to me, when you hear about the treatment of women, you know, if you go back 100 years in China, women's feet were bound, which, you know, people have to understand that that basically meant you were breaking the feet of every woman in -

SHERYL WUDUNN, CO-AUTHOR, "HALF THE SKY": Absolutely. A hundred years ago, China was probably the worst place on earth to be born female. My grandmother's feet were bound. But what gives me extreme amount of hope is that in one generation that was eradicated. This is a centuries-old practice.

And yet, partly because they had people inside China and people outside China that were foreign missionaries also, who thought this was a horrendous practice. They got together and they actually formed a strategy. They really were able to basically launch a counterattack against this practice, and in one generation eradicate it in China.

And then, what Mao did was that he said - and this is really critical. He said that education for everybody, including girls. So that meant that girls could go to school with the boys, and it was just mandatory education for everybody in the country.

But then, what was even more important - and this is a critical fact, especially for places like Saudi Arabia and Japan - the girls were not only educated, they were able to work in the formal labor force. The society accepted them in the formal labor force, and that was critical. They could get jobs, they could work in factories. And that was the beginning of China's economic revolution. Light industry, which employed women, making the clothes - the clothes we wear, the shoes we wear, the - the bags that we - we carry, they were made by women, and that jumpstarted China's economic revolution.

KRISTOF: I think China is a good antidote to the way we tend to psych ourselves out about the Muslim world. And, yes, indeed in a number of harder line Muslim countries, you know, because of culture, women don't have opportunities. But culture is not immutable. Culture can change, and China is the best evidence of that.

And the other thing is that I think we tend to psych ourselves out and say, you know, should - isn't it a little bit imperialist for us to be telling other countries how to treat women? You know, isn't that a value that we should leave it to them to decide?

And I think, again, you know, Sheryl just feel - feel so fortunate that there were outsiders who were willing to push against the practice of foot binding. And I think there are some practices that you just have to say are not acceptable.

ZAKARIA: Well, in India, you know, the - there used to be a practice, a Hindu practice, that the woman was tossed on the - on the funeral pyre, on the burning funeral pyre of the man, in a - into - as a kind of sacrifice. And the British basically just outlawed it, a governor general called William Bentinck, said this is abhorrent and I don't care what people think, and it caused riots and all that.

But talk about Islam, because this is something - what, you know, we come back to, writers like Ayaan Hirsi Ali say it's Islam, and, you know, until you change the religion really, you can't change anything.

ZAINAB SALBI, FOUNDER & CEO, WOMEN FOR WOMEN

INTERNATIONAL: No, I don't believe that, because Christianity at one point had that, Judaism had that. Every religion has this patriarchy and horrible practice towards women. It changed. It evolved.

I think -

ZAKARIA: But it is true that right now the Muslim world -

SALBI: It's our Dark Ages.

ZAKARIA: Yes.

SALBI: Yes. I think the Muslim world is - is living in the Dark Ages, and if you look at it historically, as what happened in Europe and other religion, then it makes historical sense. And it's - I do believe we can evolve and we can - the religion can - and we can do that in a few things.

A) I think revival of historical characters in Islam, such as Khadija.

Muhammad's wife was 20 years older than him. She was a very successful business woman. She hired him as her employee. She chose to marry him, and she was the first one who - who helped him believe in God's message.

The revival of characters like Khadija - if she was alive today, she would probably - to quote President Clinton when he went to Saudi Arabia, she probably would be the biggest business woman, actually, in today's history. And everyone accepts her personality and character.

We need to revive her in a much more vibrant way.

So I do believe in the possibility of a cultural and a religious evolution, as all religions went through this historical period.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

ZAKARIA: We'll be back in a moment with more from the panel, including why international aid groups now realize it is much smarter to give money to women than men. Why? When we come back.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KRISTOF: Between 50 and 110 million females are missing around the globe. This is an astonishing figure. It means that in any one decade more girls are discriminated against to death around the world than all the people who died in all the genocides of the 20th century, which is a, you know, it's a staggering scope.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

ZAKARIA: It is a truism in the world of international development that if you give an aid dollar to a man, he is likely to spend it at the bar or on guns. If you give that same aid dollar to a woman, she will buy necessities, food or diapers, or invest it in the family or a moneymaking venture.

And we are back with Nick Kristof, Sheryl Wudunn and Zainab Salbi, talking about women, culture, Islam - all kinds of things.

Nick, when you look at this - this statistic, why do you think that that's true?

KRISTOF: You know, that's the part that we really don't know, and there are various theories. Some people think that it's biological, nurturing instinct. Other people think that's nonsense, that it's essentially the way we're socialized.

But what is clear is that across continents, across religions, across cultural traditions, that women are more likely to take income that they have, and also if they have titled-over assets, if they have financial assets, more likely to convert those to the benefit of their children and more likely to invest in small businesses.

ZAKARIA: Do you - have you seen this in action? I mean, are there stories of - when you went around, do you feel as though there are places where you actually could see this vividly? WUDUNN: Well, there are many different ways that this comes to - that this surfaces. For instance, in microfinance, which is a very typical way that - that many people have gotten involved in this issue. If you give a loan to a woman she really seems to tend to take it very far. When you give a loan to a man, he can take it somewhere, but often the repayment rates are much lower.

So big micro financing institutions like Grameen and - and BRAC, which basically started these things in Bangladesh, they didn't want to be discriminatory, so they wanted to give to men and to women. But they found that women were just repaying at much higher rates than men.

They were losing money by giving micro loans to men. So they've now switched to 97 percent of lending to women.

ZAKARIA: Zainab, what - what do you think about this? What's your response - I mean, do you see this on the ground, that the women put the money to work productively?

SALBI: Very much so. I mean, statistically, women, re-spend 97 percent of their income or whatever their investment are, on their families, compared to men, who spend - re-spend 40 percent on their families.

But this reminds me of a story. I was in Afghanistan a few months ago, and I met a woman who was promised to be married at six - at the age of six, was married at the age of 15, was a widow and single mother at the age of 16. And she talks about how, you know, her life led and what she's done with it.

So she - during the Taliban she was very poor. The Taliban beat her up for working in the streets with the very shoes - with the only shoes she owned, and they broke her shoes, and she was very bitter and - and sad about that.

And when I met her right now, she is working. She's earning $450 a month, which is very significant in Afghanistan. She's sending her daughter to school and determined that her daughter will not get married until she finish college. And she's going back to her own school. She's finishing her own education.

There's a correlation - if you want to change practices from child marriages to women education and women working and the economy, there's a correlation between that and investing in their mothers. And that mother, in her case, knows that I will not repeat to my daughter what I've gone through. And she is changing that culture practices in Afghanistan, or the behavior practice in Afghanistan.

So there's no better investment, in talking about Afghans as an example, than investments in women who gets it. My money goes to my daughter who will go to college, who will get a better life.

ZAKARIA: What - what is the most successful place in which you've operated? You're - you deal with women in distress in - in so many places. What's your big success story?

SALBI: You know, all of them are successful. I mean, we work from Congo to Rwanda to Sudan to Afghanistan and Iraq.

ZAKARIA: And you started in Bosnia.

SALBI: And we started in Bosnia.

A couple of things is. One is we're noticing that the first investment a woman make in terms of who they hire in their business is actually their husbands or their sons. The first decision they make. All of them - in Africa tend to - women tend to actually run with that $1 investment and do so much of it, and that seems to be the most vibrant place in terms of change.

I recently met a woman in Congo, in the midst - I mean, right now, as we speak right now, hundreds of thousands of women are getting raped in Congo. And this woman - it's the same story usually. It's a pattern of a story. She's displaced, she doesn't have anything, poverty. Her husband doesn't know how to deal with the situation.

She went through Women for Women International's program. We taught her - part of what we do is teach vocational and business skills for women, very poor women, to help them stand on their feet and earn their own income.

She learned soap making. He was cynical about her soap. She gave it to - she gave him samples to show it to his friends, and - and he started believing in her soap. And instead of her running a separate business of soap making, she actually made him a partner, but a different kind of partner, in which he goes and sell, gives her the money back, she is the one managing the money. And you see change -

Again, I'm interested in the changing of social patterns. She changed the relationship from she gives him all the money and he spend it on his, as you mentioned earlier, on his alcohol and cigarettes and prostitution or weapons. And now she reversed it. Now he goes and works and brings her the money and they manage it together about their sending their kids to school, better housing and better life's conditions for both of them.

And so the - I would say Africa in general actually, where the investment is - goes triple the way than other countries.

ZAKARIA: You know, there's - there's a lot of good news in - in this book, but there's also a lot of bad news in the sense that - paint the picture of just how bad it is for women in many parts of the world.

KRISTOF: Maybe the best gauge of the discrimination against women and girls is that how much of it is lethal. We don't tend to think of discrimination, gender discrimination as being lethal. In much of the world, it is, and you can measure that by looking at the population ratios.

In India, for example, for the first year of life male and female mortality rates are fairly similar, because they're depending upon the breast, and the breast doesn't have a son preference. In age one to age five, a girl is 50 percent more likely to die than a boy, and that's because they're depending upon their parents, who do have a son preference, who don't give that girl the same access to food and health care. And the upshot of - of this is differential levels of mortality that mean that between 50 and 110 million females are missing around globe.

This is an astonishing figure. It means that in any one decade more girls are discriminated against to death around the world than all the people who died in all the genocides of the 20th century, which is a, you know, it's a staggering scope.

ZAKARIA: Final thought, what can we - what can people do?

WUDUNN: Oh, there are many ways. First of all, people have to care. They have to say this is unacceptable, as Zainab was saying. And once each individual can actually say that and take a step, then the politicians will start beginning to notice that this is something that
- it's an issue that the voters care about.

It really does start with individuals and a mass of individuals to join a movement to create change. It isn't just something that the government does from the top down. The governments have to play the role as well, but you also need bottom up. You need grassroots, bottom-up movement that really starts to change perception and attitudes around the world.

ZAKARIA: Thank you very much. We will be right back.

Subject: Art for outer office

As you will remember, we discussed borrowing art from arts in embassies program with beth dozoretz last fall. We have been talking about options with them and there is a memo coming to you tomorrow with suggestions. Their staff came to measure so everything you see will fit in office (except for one piece and I asked claire to make a note of that one for you)

Arts in embassies will take care of transporting, installing and insuring. Of course, if you like none, they can suggest alternatives. Or we just stick with art bank options.

RELEASE IN PART B6

Full Text of Netanyahu AIPAC speech

From: Abbaszadeh, Nima
Sent: Monday, March 05, 2012 11:47 PM
To: Hanley, Monica R
Cc: Sullivan, Jacob J; S_SpecialAssistants; Macmanus, Joseph E (S)
Subject: Full Text of Netanyahu AIPAC speech

Monica: I'll have a printed copy of this for you in the morning, but in case S wants to see it earlier, below is PM Netanyahu's AIPAC speech delivered this evening.

Thank you for the warm reception. It could be heard as far away as Jerusalem – the eternal and united capital of Israel. More than two thirds of the Congress is in attendance here tonight. I deeply appreciate your being here.

Last May when I addressed the Congress, you stood up to applaud the state of Israel. Now I ask the 13,000 friends of IL here to stand up and applaud you, the representatives of the American people. Democrats and Republicans alike, we applaud your unwavering commitment to Israel.

I want to recognize Yossi Peled who is here tonight. Yossi was born in Belgium. His parents hid him with a Christian family during World War II. His father, and many other members of his family, were murdered at Auschwitz. His mother survived the Holocaust, returned to reclaim Yossi, and brought him to Israel. He became one of Israel's bravest and greatest generals.

And today, Yossi Peled serves as a minister in my government. Yossi's life is the story of the Jewish people – the story of a powerless and stateless people who became a strong and proud nation able to defend itself. And ladies and gentlemen, Israel must always reserve the right to defend itself.

I'd like to talk to you about a subject no one has been talking about recently....Iran. Every day, I open the papers and read about these red lines and these time lines. I read about what Israel has decided to do or what Israel might do. Well, I'm not going to talk to you about what Israel will do or will not do. I, never talk about that. But I do want to talk to you about the dangers of a nuclear-armed Iran. I want to explain why Iran must never be allowed to develop nuclear weapons.

President Obama has reiterated his commitment to prevent this from happening. He stated clearly that all options remain on the table, and that American policy is not containment. Well, Israel has the same policy. We are determined to prevent Iran from developing nuclear weapons. We leave all options on the table. And containment is definitely not an option.

The Jewish state will not allow those seeking our destruction to possess the means to achieve that goal. A nuclear armed Iran must be stopped. Amazingly, some people refuse to acknowledge that Iran's goal is to develop nuclear weapons. You see, Iran claims that it's enriching uranium to develop medical research. Yeah, right. A country that builds underground nuclear facilities, develops intercontinental ballistic missiles, manufactures thousands of centrifuges, and absorbs crippling sanctions – is doing all that in order to advance...medical research. So you see, when that Iranian ICBM is flying through the air to a location near you, you've got nothing to worry about. It's only carrying medical isotopes.

Ladies and Gentlemen, if it looks like a duck, walks like a duck, and quacks like a duck, then what is it? That's right, it's a duck –but this duck is a nuclear duck. And it's time the world started calling a duck a duck.

Fortunately, President Obama and most world leaders understand that the idea that Iran's goal is not to develop nuclear weapons is ridiculous. Yet incredibly, some are prepared to accept an idea only slightly less preposterous:

That we should accept a world in which the Ayatollahs have atomic bombs. Sure, they say, Iran is cruel, but it's not crazy. It's detestable but it's deterrable. Responsible leaders should not bet the security of their countries on the belief that the world's most dangerous regime won't use the world's most dangerous weapons. And I promise you that as Prime Minister, I will never gamble with the security of Israel.

From the beginning, the Ayatollah regime has broken every international rule and flouted every norm. It has seized embassies, targeted diplomats and sent its own children through mine fields. It hangs gays and stones women. It supports Assad's brutal slaughter of the Syrian people. Iran is the world's foremost sponsor of terror. It sponsors Hezbollah in Lebanon, Hamas in Gaza and terrorists throughout the Middle East, Africa, and South America. Iran's proxies have dispatched hundreds of suicide bombers, planted thousands of roadside bombs, and fired over twenty thousand missiles at civilians. Through terror from the skies and terror on the ground, Iran is responsible for the murder of hundreds, if not thousands, of Americans. In 1983, Iran's proxy Hezbollah blew up the Marine barracks in Lebanon, killing 240 American servicemen.

In the last decade, its been responsible for murdering and maiming American soldiers in Afghanistan and Iraq. Just a few months ago, it tried to assassinate the Saudi Ambassador in a restaurant just a few blocks from here. The assassins didn't care that several Senators and members of Congress would have been murdered in the process. Iran accuses the American government of orchestrating 9/11, and it denies the Holocaust. Iran brazenly calls for Israel's destruction, and they work for its destruction – each day, every day.

This is how Iran behaves today, without nuclear weapons. Think of how they will behave tomorrow, with nuclear weapons. Iran will be even more reckless and far more dangerous.

There's been plenty of talk recently about the costs of stopping Iran. I think it's time to talk about the costs of not stopping Iran.

A nuclear-armed Iran would dramatically increase terrorism by giving terrorists a nuclear umbrella. That means that Iran's terror proxies like Hezbollah, Hamas will be emboldened to attack America, Israel, and others because they will be backed by a power with atomic weapons.

A nuclear-armed Iran could choke off the world's oil supply and make real its threat to close the Straits of Hormuz. If you're worried about the price of oil today, imagine how high oil prices will be when a nuclear-armed Iran starts blackmailing the world. If Iran gets nuclear weapons, this would set off a mad dash by Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Egypt and others to acquire nuclear weapons of their own.

The world's most volatile region would become a nuclear tinderbox waiting to go off. And the worst nightmare of all, Iran could threaten all of us with nuclear terrorism. It could put a nuclear device in a ship heading to any port or in a truck parked in any city. Think about what it would mean to have nuclear weapons in the hands of radicals who lead millions in chants of "Death to America" and "Death to Israel."

For the sake of our prosperity, for the sake of our security, for the sake of our children, Iran must not be allowed to get nuclear weapons!

The best outcome would be if Iran abandoned its nuclear weapons program peacefully. No one would be happier than me and the people of Israel if Iran actually dismantled its program.

But so far, that hasn't happened.

For fifteen years, I've been warning that a nuclear-armed Iran is a grave danger to my country and to the peace and security of the world. For the last decade, the international community has tried diplomacy. It hasn't worked.

For six years, the international community has applied sanctions. That hasn't worked either. I appreciate President Obama's recent efforts to impose even tougher sanctions against Iran. Those sanctions are hurting Iran's economy. But unfortunately, Iran's nuclear march goes on. Israel has waited patiently for the international community to resolve this issue.

We've waited for diplomacy to work. We've waited for sanctions to work. None of us can afford to wait much longer.

As Prime Minister of Israel, I will never let my people live under the shadow of annihilation.

Some commentators would have you believe that stopping Iran from getting the bomb is more dangerous than letting Iran have the bomb.

They say that a military confrontation with Iran would undermine the efforts already underway, that it would be ineffective, and that it would provoke even more vindictive action by Iran. I've heard these arguments before. In fact, I've read them before. In my desk, I have copies of an exchange of letters between the World Jewish Congress and the US War Department. The year was 1944. The World Jewish Congress implored the American government to bomb Auschwitz. The reply came five days later. I want to read it to you. Such an operation could be executed only by diverting considerable air support essential to the success of our forces elsewhere.....and in any case would be of such doubtful efficacy that it would not warrant the use of our resources....And here's the most remarkable sentence of all. And I quote: Such an effort might provoke even more vindictive action by the Germans. Think about that – “even more vindictive action” — than the Holocaust.

My Friends, 2012 is not 1944. The American government today is different. You heard it in President Obama's speech yesterday. But here's my point.

The Jewish people are also different. Today we have a state of our own. The purpose of the Jewish state is to secure the Jewish future. That is why Israel must always have the ability to defend itself, by itself, against any threat.

We deeply appreciate the great alliance between our two countries. But when it comes to Israel's survival, we must always remain the masters of our fate. Israel's fate is to continue to be the forward position of freedom in the Middle East. The only place where minorities enjoy full civil rights; The only place where Arabs enjoy full civil rights. The only place where Christians are free to practice their faith; The only place where real judges protect the rule of law; And as Prime Minister of Israel, I will never allow anything to threaten Israel's democratic way of life. And most especially, I will never tolerate any discrimination against women.

This week, we will read how one woman changed Jewish history. In Synagogues throughout the world, the Jewish people will celebrate the festival of Purim. We will read how some 2,500 years ago, a Persian anti-Semite tried to annihilate the Jewish people. We will read how his plot was foiled by one courageous woman – Esther. In every generation, there are those who wish to destroy the Jewish people.

We are blessed to live in an age when there is a Jewish state capable of defending the Jewish people. And we are doubly blessed to have so many friends like you, Jews and non-Jews alike, who love the State of Israel and support its right to defend itself. Thank you for your friendship, Thank you for your courage, Thank you for standing up for the one and only Jewish state.

Subject: Request for a book blurb from Secretary Clinton
Attach: ENTREPRENEURIAL NATION (final version), by Ro Khanna.doc

B6

Dear Huma,

Hope you're well. I hope Secretary Clinton may remember me from the 2008 campaign. I would like to request for a book blurb from her that would mean the world to me. I am a first time author, and I hope she may have a soft spot for me as someone who went to her alma mater (YLS 2001), and has been inspired by her commitment to public service. Her providing a two line blurb would mean the world to me and a gesture I'd always appreciate. There is no one whom I admire more in politics than her and, of course, President Clinton.

As you know, I was Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce in the Obama Administration where I oversaw 109 of our domestic offices. McGraw-Hill will be publishing my book this August entitled, "Entrepreneurial Nation: Why Manufacturing is Still Key to America's Future." The book profiles successful American manufacturers I met on my travels, and makes the case that our democratic and entrepreneurial culture gives us an advantage over low-wage countries. It also makes the case for why manufacturing still matters for our nation, and recommends bipartisan policies to help build our industrial base.

I hope Secretary Clinton could offer a few line blurb about how standing up for our economic interests is a critical component of foreign policy and how she remains optimistic about America remaining the economic superpower in the 21st century.

Eric Schmidt (Fmr. CEO of Google), Paul Otellini (CEO of Intel), Elon Musk (CEO of Tesla), John Podesta and Ambassador Huntsman are providing book blurbs. Secretary Clinton would be a huge addition to this list.

A manuscript is attached.

Thanks so much for your consideration. Hope to hear. Best, Ro

Questions before making Ouattara call--and copying Jake to help

What is status of their IMF debt plan and the cocoa reforms?

And is there any other issue from my visit that we had said we would follow up on like the request to fund the construction of girls' schools?

Oscar is printing 3 call sheets for you.

1. Ivoirian President Ouattara -- AF and P would like you to make this call today and Jake endorses. There is also a confidential IM on the situation in Mali that they would like you to read which we will send to you if you'd like to make the call today. Let us know.
2. Ethiopian PM Meles -- you mentioned that you would like to see the call sheet before deciding to make the call.
3. Ugandan President Museveni -- you mentioned that you would like to see the call sheet before deciding to make the call.
4. Per AF's recommendation, Jake says we can stand down on the call to Mashebane.

Just connected with wendy. She agrees 100 percent that if we tell people you personally want something intimate with just your counterparts, everyone will be ok. We agreed she will host the plus 1s somewhere else.

I'm thinking we ask hellenic center for their space to put extra security and essential staff so only ministers are allowed access to your house. I'm going to move forward with this plan if you are ok

RELEASE IN FULL

1) When Thaci comes, pls be sure MCC Pres Yohannes is in mtg

2) I'd like to arrange a visit before July to the National Security Agency. Gen Alexander heads it. I would take Jake and maybe Cheryl FM Hague visited on his last trip and it was a little odd that I hadn't.

3) I want to see Alec Ross in next few weeks.

4) I heard Pres Lobo of Honduras is coming to DC week of 3/26. What's his schedule?

5) I have a meeting in NY at 4 on April 27th at Marcum LLP where I went two weeks ago so will need to take the 2pm shuttle to NY on that Friday. Also, pls tell Bill's office about it because he will go too.

6) I'd like to take the late shuttle (is it 9pm?) to NY next Wed 4/5 after Cheryl's dinner and back to DC on 4/8 on the 7pm shuttle.

7) If I go to Durban on S Africa trip, I'd like to stay at the Oyster Box Hotel

USUN is all set for you today. Scott Turner from USUN will greet you upon arrival and take care of escorting you up to the secure room and then back down to the car after the call is completed. We will make sure Ops and USSS are all looped in so this is as smooth as possible.

Subject: Today

MS, Claire and I are going on a tour of the CIA this morning (along with a few folks from Stratcomm) and cannot bring our blackberries/cell phone so will be off line until 12:15pm or so. Bernadette is here if you need to track us down in the next few hours. One call note from Claire – Tom Nides called for you earlier, not urgent. Thank you!

Subject: Schedule

MS – Happy Easter! Please find below the final draft of tomorrow. One adjustment – Legal ruled that we needed to do the signings with Brazil at State (as opposed to at the Chamber of Commerce) so we separated that out as a 15-minute event in the Treaty Room in the afternoon. Also added a meeting with Mark Grossman who would like to give you his latest update as well as P5+1 with Wendy and team at Jake's direction. Thank you!
