Enclosure(s)

In response to your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request, enclosed is a processed copy of Bates Stamped documents, FBI(18-cv-154)-2036 through FBI(18-cv-154)-2535. The enclosed documents represent the sixth interim release of information responsive to your request.

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.

The FBI conducted email searches for any email communication between Peter Strzok and Lisa Page. This search located both official government records and non-record personal communications between these two individuals.

The FBI reviewed 500 pages of these emails. While conducting this review, the FBI individually analyzed the emails to determine whether they pertained to official government business constituting records under the FOIA or whether they consisted of purely personal communications between the two individuals. As a result of the FBI's review, it determined 74 pages were non-record, personal communications not subject to the FOIA; and 426 pages consisted of responsive FBI records.

As previously indicated, document(s) were located which originated with, or contained information concerning another agency (ies). We are consulting with the other agency (ies) and are awaiting their response. Our office has processed all other information currently in our possession. The FBI will correspond with you regarding those documents when the consultation is completed.

To minimize costs to both you and the FBI, duplicate copies of the same document were not processed.

Though it was not their primary mission, FBI agents who investigated Hillary Clinton's email collected significant evidence that she and her team violated federal record-keeping laws, including persisting to use a private Blackberry and server to conduct State Department business after being warned they posed legal and security risks, government sources tell Circa.
The evidence was compelling enough to force multiple witnesses in the FBI investigation to assert their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and even convinced Director James Comey that the Clinton team had not complied with the law, the sources said.
But in the end the bureau chose to defer to Mrs. Clinton's former employer, the State Department, to decide whether to recommend anyone to the Justice Department for misdemeanor criminal prosecution or administrative action, the sources said, speaking only on condition of anonymity.
Each transmission of a government document across private email that was not preserved or turned over to the State Department from Mrs. Clinton's tenure could theoretically be considered a violation of the Federal Records Act, the main law governing preservation of government records and data.
Intentionally concealing, removing or destroying federal records as defined under the Act, including those kept in private email, carries a fine and imprisonment of up to three years. But such a conviction carries an even more devastating political impact for a candidate seeking to occupy the White House, because the law states that any violator "shall forfeit his office and be disqualified from holding any office under the United States."

The FBI "indirectly documented hundreds, and likely thousands, of violations of the Records Act," one source with direct knowledge of the FBI's investigation told Circa. Using forensics, the FBI recovered from computer drives and other witnesses about 15,000 emails from Mrs. Clinton's private account that dealt with government business covered by the Records Act and had not been turned over by her or her aides, the sources said. Some of the recovered records impacted document requests under the Freedom of Information Act or pending congressional investigations at the time they were deleted or not turned over, the sources added.

Accounts from witnesses suggested the efforts to keep Mrs. Clinton's government email communications on a device and server outside the reach of the law – and therefore away from public or congressional disclosure – were "systemic and intentional" and began as soon as Mrs. Clinton took office in 2009, one source told Circa.

For instance, the sources said agents secured testimony and documents suggesting that Mrs. Clinton's team:

- Was informed in 2009 that she an obligation under the records law to forward any government-related records contained in private email to a new record preservation system known as SMART but chose not to do so because her office wanted to keep control over "sensitive" data.
- Was specifically questioned in 2009 by a State Departmenrt aide who worked on her private email server in the Clinton family home in New York whether the arrangement was appropriate for a government official under the federal records law. A top aide to Mrs. Clinton dismissed his concerns.
- Wanted to keep her private Blackerry email service because of fears a government email address would be subject to public scrutiny under the Freedom of Information Act.
- Were aware that government officers complying with congressional or FOIA requests did not have access to search Mrs. Clinton's private email for responsive records.
- Persisted in allowing her to use private email to conduct State Department business even after a cable was sent under her name in 2011 to all diplomats worldwide urging them to stop using private email because of foreign hacking fears.
- Allowed Clinton to keep using the private email system after after she personally received a 2011 classified presentation warning of dangers of the private email for government business.
- Failed to preserve private emails from Clinton that clearly involved significant government business, including discussions wth Army Gen. David Petraues, Benghazi, meeting with foreign leaders and the State Department's quadrennial policy and performance review.
- Had prior reason from earlier legal cases involving their conduct to know that emails covering government business were legally required to be preserved and turned over to their agency and the National Archives.

During a brief aside at a House Judiciary Committee hearing in July, FBI Director James Comey was asked by a congressman if he believed Clinton complied with State Department procedures and federal recordkeeping laws.

""I don't think so. I know you have the State inspector general here, who's more of an expert on all the department's policies, but at least in some respects, no," he answered. Comey, however, offered no explanation why charges weren't filed.

Attorney General Loretta Lynch said in mid-July that she did not believe her department had assessed whether Clinton or her team violated the Federal Records Act. "I don't know if that was under the purview of the investigation. I don't recall a specific opinion on that," she said.

The Clinton campaign did not respond to a request for comment. But Mrs. Clinton has said she regrets using private email to conduct official State Department business and wishes she could do it over. Her former chief of staff Cheryl Mills also expressed some regret, saying Mrs. Clinton thought her records would be preserved because her private emails usually went to other government acounts but that was mistaken.

Former President Bill Clinton was less apologetic, strongly dismissing Comey's and the FBI's criticism of his wife. "This is the biggest load of bull I ever heard," he said a few weeks ago.

A retired federal prosecutor told Circa the FBI and DOJ could easily have brought a case if the evidence pointed toward intentional violations.

"If you get enough instances of people violating the Federal Records Act and if it's a group of folks then you could look at things like a conspiracy, or a criminal enterprise, that could bump it up to a felony," said Matt Whitaker, who served as U.S. Attorney for Iowa under President George W. Bush and President Barack Obama and now runs a conservative-leaning government ethics group.

"There are alot of intentional acts including the setting up of the private email server that probably could go to a question of was this intentional and was this violation of both the records act and the handling of classified material."

Whitaker said he believes a special prosecutor should be appointed to review the Records Act questions because "in this political silly season it appears that the FBI and especially the Department of Justice doesn't have the stomach to pursue the potential charges that emanate from this behavior."

Ronald Hosko, who retired two years ago as the Assistant FBI Director in charge of the bureau's criminal division, agreed Mrs. Clinton's actions at the State Department showed a disregard for her obligation to preserve and protect sensitive government information.

Such responsibilities were "taken seriously" inside the FBI but that "does not appear to be the case in the State Department under Hillary Clinton. To me, this was a systemic failure at State, top to bottom."

But Hosko said a misdemeanor case wouldn't be sexy enough for an FBI -- stretched by higher terrorism, organized crime and cybersecurity priorities -- to pursue, especially against a candidate leading the presidential race right now in a polarizing election.

"The FBI is an agency with finite resources. Seldom do you expend resources when the top available penalty is a misdemeanor," he said. "... I'm not saying you don't consider it or contemplate it. I would say you contemplate it if the facts are so compelling and the intent is so overwhelmingly clear, that her desire was to violate that statute

"But we are in a hyper-politicized time in America. Would the electorate take to that? You have to take that all into consideration."

Sources directly familiar with the FBI's thinking said the bureau was not concerned about the election and did make a short reference to Federal Records Act issues in its final report to the Justice Department.

But it chose to defer to State to decide if criminal charges should be filed. "It's their records and their determination to make," one source said, describing the philosophy that governed the FBI's final decision.

In a noninvestigative report in June, the State Department's internal watchdog concluded Mrs. Clinton was one of only three senior department officials in the last two decades to use a private email account exclusively for government business and that her team did not comply with record-keeping policies of the Federal Records Act.

Douglas Welty, a spokesman for the State IG, said Thursday the office has no further work planned on the Clinton email scandal. "The OIG has completed its work. The OIG does not comment on whether or not it has referred, or will refer, any particular matter to DOJ," he wrote in an email to Circa.

State Department officials declined comment.

The Federal Records Act was passed by Congress 66 years ago to ensure federal agencies properly managed and maintained government records so they are preserved for historical purposes at the National Archives and for public access and congressional oversight. The law was updated by lawmakers in 2014, legislation that President Obama himself signed.

A separate law provides criminal penalties for intentional violations of the Act.

Since the late 1990s, the State Department has made clear to its wmployees that emails were public records covered by the Act, even those sent on their private accounts.

Much of the focus during the presidential race has been on the more than 100 emails that moved between Mrs. Clinton and her top aides that contained intellgence classified at the confidential, secret and top-secret level at the time it was transmitted.

Comey announced earlier this summer that Mrs. Clinton's and her staff's handling of intelligence was "extremely careless" but the bureau decided not to request criminal charges for violating national security laws because agents found insufficient evidence of intent and motive.

After her private email system was discovered, Mrs. Clinton eventually turned over 55,000 pages from about 30,000 emails involving State Department work. But FBI officials recovered about 15,000 additional emails on her private account that involved government business by sweeping her old devices and servers or scouring the government emails of other people she corresponded with.

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.
"There was plenty of evidence from our interviews, especially from technical and compliance staff, as to the intention of creating a private email system outside the State Department's record keeping. It was well known, and it persisted even after people raised legal and security concerns," one source told Circa.

Multiple witnesses in the technical community involved in setting up, maintaining or wiping Clinton's email equipment were concerned enough about their legal liability to invoke their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, the sources said. At least one cited concerns about records laws, the sources said.

One witness who initially invoked the Fifth and got immunity from prosecution was Bryan Pagliano, a former State Department worker who helped on the side to set up and maintain Mrs. Clinton's private email server at her home in New York. Sources familiar with his account say he told the FBI he inquired with Mrs. Clinton's inner circle whether the server arrangement ran afoul of any federal records laws and was assured there were no problems.

Among the strongest evidence gathered by investigators occurred in late 2010, when Mrs. Clinton was directly approached by one of her top deputies and informed that her government emails from her private account were not reaching State Department officials and possibly were going to spam. Mrs. Clinton was encouraged to get an official State email address.

Mrs. Clinton told her deputy she was willing to get a government email address if she could be assured her personal emails wouldn't be "accessible" to the public. Rather than create the government email address, State officials went to a technical person maintaining her private server and made adjustments to the server to ensure emails wouldn't be treated by the agency's email screening systems as spam, the sources said.

Around the same time, two information management employees inside State began raising concerns that material in Clinton's personal email server likely contained government records that needed to be preserved under the Federal Records Act. One raised the concern to a supervisor at a staff meeting but was scolded and eventually told never to raise the issue of Secretary Clinton's personal email account again, according to the sources.

Agents also found evidence Mrs. Clinton herself was acutely aware of the security and legal dangers of using her private Blackberry to conduct government business. For instance:

- In 2009, Mrs. Clinton and her chief of staff were briefed in a classified memo from the Assistant Secratary for Diplomatic Security on the security dangers of private Blackberry service and the secretary of state responded to that official a few days later that she "gets it."
- Mrs. Clinton received a second classified email in March 2011about foreign government hacking attemps specifically aimed at State Department officials. The memo included this warning: "We also urge Department users to minimize the use of personal Web email for business" citing evidence of "compromised home systems." A version of that briefing was found in Mrs. Clinton's personal files at State.
- In June 2011, a cable entitled "securing personal email accounts" was sent to all U.S. diplomatic posts worldwide under Clinton's own name that highlighted growing cybersecurity threats and specifically warned "to avoid conducting official department business from your personal email accounts."
- By that time, officials maintaining Mrs. Clinton's private email server had detected attempts to hack into it but still she persisted in using the private email to conduct government business.

Agents also found evidence hinting at a possible mtoive for Clinton's team to maintain a private email server: a fear records on it could be obtained by the public via FOIA.

In 2011, shortly after the information management staff raised concerns about her private email, Mrs. Clinton's top aides discussed replacing her private Blackberry with a government-owned device, but that idea was scrapped after a top aide warned the materials on the government Blackberry would be subject to FOIA.

"You should be aware that any email would go through the Department's infrastructure and be subject to FOIA searches," a top State official warned.

The government Blackberry was never issued.

When Mills, Clinton's former chief of staff, was recently deposed in a civil lawsuit over FOIA practices brought by the watchdog group Judicial Watch, she admitted that State Department FOIA officers would not have had access to Mrs. Clinton's private email to search for responsive records.

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.

"No is the answer," Mills testified. "I don't think I reflected on were there occasions where there might still be something with respect to a personal e-mail where someone had either e-mailed me or I had responded back or the system had been down and we ultimately needed to use it, that there was information that hadn't been captured. And I wish it had."

Regret for lost government records isn't new to the Clinton political machine.

Both Mills and Mrs. Clinton were mentioned in a lawsuit in the late 1990s during Bill Clinton's presidency over the loss of more than 1 million White House emails that were not saved for FOIA, congressional or criminal investigations. The Clinton White House blamed a technical error for the loss of the records. But subsequent litigation by the Judicial Watch group found evidence that a White House official disabled the archiving function for White House emails. A federal judge sharply criticized the Clinton White House for what he called a "fiasco" and singled out Mills, who had been a deputy white house counsel for Bill Clinton for having "failed miserably" to resolve the problem or give the court accurate information.

In another embrassment, Sandy Berger, President Clinton's national security adviser and a longtime confident of both Bill and Hillary Clinton, was caught trying to secret classified information about terrorism out of the National Archives in his socks. He pled guilty and apologized.

Here's the proposed headline/title on the statement. If anyone has suggested edits for that we just need to keep the title short:
Headline: FBI releases documents in Hillary Clinton e-mail investigation.

This is the (hopefully) the final version of the OPA statement to accompany the release of the 302 and LHM. We have still not received final concurrence from State, so it is not ready for release yet. Please let me know if folks have comments. Thanks.

The 302 and LHM should be being uploaded to the Vault as we speak. I have copies, but they are on red only at this point. Thanks to everyone for their truly tireless work on this.

Not sure if it's an issue, but just received a call that on pages 6 and 7 of the 302, there are 3 instances of an (S) portion marking. I'm guessing the (S) should have been redacted...

Not sure if it's a significant deal or not.

Just wanted to let someone know.

Jon: The Director is under the impression that folks are working on a draft "Op-Ed" for him to release (possibly as early as next week). I just spoke to the DD who said that you might have the pen on such a rough draft. Below is the boss' thinking generally if it provides a guidepost for your efforts.

A lot of interesting quotes in here. Is Trisha's write up done?

JULIAN ASSANGE, Founder, WikiLeaks: I'm afraid I must correct you, Judy. I didn't say that we would be releasing information that has been hacked from the DNC.

We said that we have a significant amount of information, and the information itself is significant, and it pertains to Hillary Clinton's campaign. And we will be releasing it in several batches as we are finished with the journalistic work on each batch.

http://www.pbs.org/newshour/bb/dnc-information-come-says-wikileaks-founder/

More DNC information to come, says WikiLeaks founder

In the aftermath of a devastating email-hacking incident involving top Democratic party officials, WikiLeaks is preparing to release new information "on a range of important issues." According to organization founder Julian Assange, WikiLeaks is now immersed in formatting the information to be easily accessible to journalists and the general public. Judy Woodruff interviews Assange for details.

Hi team. Here is the latest version of the MYE letter, with DOJ's comments (and our thoughts from this morning's meeting) inputted. I just called to walk him through our thinking and to explain why we rejected the handful of comments that we did. There is only one point of contention at this time; he suggested that I am comfortable accepting this change, but of course, would like everyone's input. I would like to provide this to the Deputy and Director this evening so that they have plenty of time to review it. Please let me know if you have any showstoppers. Thank you!

No, that was the basis of the discussion this morning -- we did NOT make the (b)(5) and other FOIA redactions. We were considering doing so, but for a variety of reasons decided against it. Obviously, that is not clear from the email below. I'll give it a tweak to better reflect what wasn't redacted. Thanks!

(Fo[redacted]benefit): At the 100th MYE meeting you missed this week, we decided that Andy needed to make a call to Pat Kennedy to inform him of our decision to produce the classified emails in an unredacted form (other than the PII). Andy decided that he preferred to do so via email instead. Could you all please review the email below and let me know what you think? Once I have your comments, I'll send to Jim and Trisha for their review as well. I will probably (although I don't want to), send a separate email to DOJ to inform them of our thinking. Feds debate releasing Clinton's FBI interview

The Obama administration is urgently debating how to respond to congressional demands for the official report on Hillary Clinton's three-and-a-half-hour interview at FBI headquarters, as some inside and outside government raise concerns about giving lawmakers access to politically sensitive records of the FBI's investigation into Hillary Clinton's private email system.

During congressional testimony last month, FBI Director James Comey promised to respond promptly to lawmakers' requests for the interview summaries known as "302s" for Clinton and other witnesses, as well as other information gathered in the course of the year-long FBI probe.

"I'll commit to giving you everything I can possibly give you under the law and to doing it as quickly as possible," Comey told the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee July 7.

Oversight Committee Chairman Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah) sent Comey a letter the same day requesting the entire "investigative file" on the Clinton email issue. Senate Homeland Security and Government Affairs Committee Chairman Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) also asked Comey for all 302 reports related to the case, requesting that they be turned over by the end of last month.

Comey and the FBI are pressing to send at least some of the requested information to the Hill soon, but others in government have stepped in to question such a move, officials tracking the debate said.

Among those involved in the discussions are State Department officials, since many of those interviewed in the FBI probe are current or former State employees.

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.

A State spokeswoman denied her agency has objected to any disclosure of interview transcripts to Congress, but acknowledged that State has asked to be informed about what FBI plans to send to the Hill.

"The State Department has cooperated — and will continue to cooperate — with the FBI every step of the way. We support and understand the FBI's desire to provide information to Congress. Any suggestion to the contrary is false," State Department Director of Press Relations Elizabeth Trudeau said in a statement.

"The State Department has asked the FBI that we be kept apprised of information to be provided to Congress that contains sensitive information related to State Department equities and for an opportunity to review it. Such an opportunity for review is in keeping with the standard interagency review process when dealing with another agency's documents or equities," Trudeau added. She noted that in relevant cases State checks in with the FBI before sending information to Congress or making it public under the Freedom of Information Act.

Comey has already faced criticism both for the unusual public statement he made about the conclusion of the Clinton email probe and for the decision not to recommend prosecution in the case. Whatever the FBI turns over, or chooses not to turn over, seems certain to trigger another round of political recriminations.

Some former Justice Department officials said the FBI should not be opening its files to members of Congress.

"The Justice Department would be right to be concerned about the effect that disclosure will have in the future on people being candid with investigators," said former Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs Ron Weich, now dean at the University of Baltimore Law School. "It's important that the FBI and Justice Department be able to gather evidence and deliberate about potential culpability without fearing that material will be viewed by the public ... Congress needs to stay out of law enforcement. Their job is to pass laws and the executive branch's job is to carry them out. For me, this is very straightforward."

Justice Department prosecutors' statements and thoughts about the Clinton probe could be among the requested FBI matetrials, since prosecutors were present at the interview with Clinton and asked questions, and court records indicate prosecutors interacted with Justice's National Security Division as the probe progressed.

"Really, the Hill wants to second-guess the investigation. Congress wants to put on their Sherlock Holmes hats and decide whether Hillary Clinton should've been indicted," Weich added.

At the moment, it's unclear what role the Justice Department is playing in the disclosure debate.

"I'm sure this is causing a lot of consternation at main Justice," said Anne Weismann, a former Justice Department official now with the non-profit Campaign for Accountability.

The FBI is part of the Justice Department but has traditionally operated with more autonomy than other agencies. When Comey made his unusual, 15-minute press statement last month announcing that he was recommending no prosecution over the Clinton emails, he proudly said he had not sought approval for his decision to speak out about the FBI's findings.

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.

"I have not coordinated or reviewed this statement in any way with the Department of Justice or any other part of the government. They do not know what I am about to say," Comey said.

During a House Judiciary Committee hearing last month, Attorney General Loretta Lynch repeatedly noted that Comey's statement departed from the way Justice usually handles cases that result in no charges. However, she never clearly said if she agreed with his decision or not and she declined to add any detail beyond what Comey stated.

"I believe the FBI has provided extraordinary clarity and insight," Lynch said.

However, some former officials said Lynch is unlikely to seek to block disclosure in the email saga—in part because of the uproar over her meeting with President Bill Clinton just days before his wife's FBI interview.

Spokespeople for the Justice Department and the FBI declined to comment for this story.

A House Oversight Committee spokesperson said discussions with the FBI are ongoing, but declined to elaborate.

Release of the interviews Clinton and others gave during the investigation could be also complicated by classification issues. During his testimony last month, Comey indicated Clinton's interview got into some of the classified matters investigators determined were discussed in her email, making the interview itself classified as Top Secret, Sensitive Compartmented Information.

"For example, the 302 of Secretary Clinton, it's classified at the TS/SCI level. We got to sort through all that. But we'll do it, we'll do it quickly," Comey said.

The FBI could send a redacted copy to the Hill in unclassified form, but that would surely generate charges that the most damaging or exculpatory portions of the interview were being kept from the public. Sending it to Congress in classified form would be sure to prompt leaks, as well as claims and counter-claims about whether Clinton contradicted her prior public statements.

One former Justice Department official warned against rushing the process for political reasons.

"Justice should go through its usual process, taking into account interagency equities, the fact that much of the file would be classified, and the relevant precedents for dealing with these requests," said former Justice spokesman Matthew Miller. "What they absolutely should not do is short circuit that process just because of political pressure from the Hill. Hillary Clinton shouldn't be treated any worse than any other American just because Republicans want to keep politicizing this case."

Each side in the debate can point to precedents for keeping investigative records in high-profile cases secret or for making them public.

Republican lawmakers have noted that the House was provided with 302s and other records from the FBI's now-closed investigation into the political targeting of non-profit groups at the IRS. And in 2011, Attorney General Eric Holder provided Congress with records about internal Justice Department deliberations related to the aftermath of the Fast and Furious gunrunning operation.

However, Justice has dug in its heels on other matters similar in some respects to the Clinton email probe

Obtained via FOIA by Judicial Watch, Inc.

When Congress demanded access to interviews with senior George W. Bush White House officials interviewed in connection with the leak of a CIA operative's identity, the Justice Department resisted many of the requests, with Attorney General Michael Mukasey eventually persuading Bush to invoke executive privilege. Mukasey warned that granting the request "would chill deliberations among future White House officials and impede future Department of Justice criminal investigations involving official White House conduct."

FBI 302 reports are routinely turned over to criminal defendants and often discussed or shown at trials. However, in certain cases, the Justice Department has fought making them public, even in closed investigations.

Justice has argued that when FBI agents are working closely with prosecutors, the agents should be considered part of the prosecutors' deliberative process and their 302 reports should be protected as attorney "work product" even though those interviewed know what they were asked and how they answered. Such an argument was successfully used to shield records of the investigation into the deaths of detainees in CIA custody, although a court case on the issue is still pending.

But some of Justice's more theoretical arguments against disclosure may have already been mooted by Comey's detailed press statement and his marathon, four-and-a-half hour House testimony last month. The FBI director may have laid bare so much of the process and of Clinton's testimony that—for better or worse—he doomed efforts to limit disclosure about the probe.

As Comey said during the session: "I'm a big fan of transparency."

Intel Committee Ranking Member Schiff Statement on Receiving FBI Notes on Clinton Interview

Washington, DC – Today, Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA), the Ranking Member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, released the following statement:

"Today, HPSCI received the FBI witness interview reports, including that of Secretary Clinton's interview, along with other materials from the FBI's now closed investigative file. With the exception of the classified emails that had been found on the private server, I can see little legitimate purpose to which Congress will put these materials. Instead, as the now-discredited Benghazi Committee demonstrated, their contents will simply be leaked for political purposes.

"This will neither serve the interests of justice nor aid Congress in its responsibilities and will merely set a precedent for the FBI to turn over closed case files whenever one party in Congress does not like a prosecutorial decision. This has been done in the name of transparency, but as this precedent chills the cooperation of other witnesses in the future, I suspect the Department of Justice will later come to refer to it by a different name – mistake."

I conveyed our view that in order to obtain the documents they are seeking they need to submit a request pursuant to the Privacy Act and FOIA. I said OK.

Good morning, Jason. We have all the documents ready in the NSLB conference room; OCA will just need to put the binders together and deliver. We won't be able to use our conference room all day so if we can meet there at 830 or 930 (?) (I have a 9 am) for a hand-off and explanation, that would be great. Bring a cart!

Folks,

As I discussed with some of you yesterday, attached is the FOIA/PA request from David Kendall on behalf of Secretary Clinton for certain materials. In my view, we need to move as quickly as possible on this, but pursuant to David's oral request last night, we should focus first on Secretary Clinton's 302.

I am not sure who is best positioned to take the lead on reviewing the document and making the appropriate redactions. I suggest that NSLB do so, and work with DOJ/NSD/CES to coordinate as appropriate. In terms of deadlines, I don't know what is reasonable to ask. Is the end of this week out of the question for her 302?

Please let me know if anyone has a different view.

Thanks.

Jim

Folks,

As I discussed with some of you yesterday, attached is the FOIA/PA request from David Kendall on behalf of Secretary Clinton for certain materials. In my view, we need to move as quickly as possible on this, but pursuant to David's oral request last night, we should focus first on Secretary Clinton's 302.

I am not sure who is best positioned to take the lead on reviewing the document and making the appropriate redactions. I suggest that NSLB do so, and work with DOJ/NSD/CES to coordinate as appropriate [redacted] b5 -1

Please let me know if anyone has a different view.

Thanks.

Hillary Clinton Must Answer Written E-Mail Questions, Judge Rules
By Pete Williams

A federal judge in Washington ruled Friday that Hillary Clinton must answer written questions from a group that filed a lawsuit over her private e-mail server.

Lawyers for Judicial Watch, a conservative government watchdog organization, asked to interview her under oath as part of their Freedom of Information Act lawsuit against the State Department.

But Judge Emmet Sullivan said Friday that the group "has failed to demonstrate that it cannot obtain the discovery it seeks through other, less burdensome or intrusive means such as interrogatories."

He gave the group until October 14 to submit the questions. She has 30 days to answer them.

If the group wants to ask her follow-up questions in writing, it must go back to the judge and get permission.

The group is seeking the details of Huma Abedin's relationship with the State Department that permitted her to do outside work while she was a top aide to Secretary Clinton.

Judicial Watch lawyers told the judge that only by interviewing Clinton under oath could they hope to learn why set up up a private e-mail server.

Mrs. Clinton's lawyers argued that because so much has previously been disclosed -- through her testimony to Congress, the report of the State Department's inspector general, and the findings of the FBI -- there was no need to depose her about the e-mail server her in order to learn the details of Huma Abedin's contract.

Judicial Watch insisted that none of those other inquiries delved into why a private server was used in the first place. "Secretary Clinton has never testified under oath why she created and used the clintonemail.com system to conduct official government business. Her only public statements on the issue are unsworn," the group's lawyers said in court filings.

In Friday's order, Judge Sullivan said her written testimony is necessary "to enable her to explain on the record the purpose for the creation and operation of the clintonemail.com system for State Department Business."

Despite all her statements and congressional testimony, the judge said, she still hasn't explained why she set up the server.

Folks,

As I discussed with some of you yesterday, attached is the FOIA/PA request from David Kendall on behalf of Secretary Clinton for certain materials. In my view, we need to move as quickly as possible on this, but pursuant to David's oral request last night, we should focus first on Secretary Clinton's 302.

I am not sure who is best positioned to take the lead on reviewing the document and making the appropriate redactions. I suggest that NSLB do so, and work with DOJ/NSD/CES to coordinate as appropriate [redacted] b5 -1

Please let me know if anyone has a different view.

Thanks.

Folks,

As I discussed with some of you yesterday, attached is the FOIA/PA request from David Kendall on behalf of Secretary Clinton for certain materials. In my view, we need to move as quickly as possible on this, but pursuant to David's oral request last night, we should focus first on Secretary Clinton's 302.

I am not sure who is best positioned to take the lead on reviewing the document and making the appropriate redactions. I suggest that NSLB do so, and work with DOJ/NSD/CES to coordinate as appropriate. [redacted]

Please let me know if anyone has a different view.

Thanks.

We told them COB today. I have not seen anything from DoS yet. I understand that CIA called and begged [redacted] for more time and that he advised them NLT noon on Thursday but that they really should shoot for COB today. I haven't gone to the SCIF to check SCION yet today so I'm not sure whether there is any response from CIA waiting there. (I suspect not.) b6 -1 b7C -1

I don't see a problem with giving Kendall a head's up.

[redacted] (who stopped by my office the other day to pump me for information and who I then sicced on you, Lisa – sorry) said that NSD would like copies before they're posted as well. I told him that I have very little control over when things get posted (and was otherwise non-committal). So we may want to give NSD (whether through [redacted] or [redacted] final versions or a head's up as well. b6 -2 b7C -2

Are we still tracking on getting docs back from State/OGA today? Do we know? Do we have a planned course of action if we do not get redactions back from them? I think Jim wants to give Kendall a heads up before the documents hit the Vault, which seems reasonable to me. Please keep me in the loop if you learn anything more. Thanks!

Hi, all. I'm working on a story for tomorrow re: Sec. Clinton's attorneys and their storing of her emails in the offices of Williams & Connolly. I just wanted to clarify/check one point that Dir. Comey made in his testimony before the House oversight committee.

Chairman Chaffetz asked him if Sec. Clinton's attorneys had the clearances they needed to have access to classified information. The director said, "They did not." I understand that Sec. Clinton's attorneys have said that they previously had security clearances from the State Dept. for their work representing her on matters before the Benghazi committee. Can I just confirm, is it still the FBI's position that her attorneys did not have the clearances they needed?

Thank you.

Interesting wrinkle.
The reporter has been pinging me this evening. He plans to put out a story tonight. If we don't think we can resolve this question and provide a statement he'll have to put us down as a no comment. So just let me know if you think that's the way we need to go.

Subject: Dir. Comey statement on security clearances

Hi, all. I'm working on a story for tomorrow re: Sec. Clinton's attorneys and their storing of her emails in the offices of Williams & Connolly. I just wanted to clarify/check one point that Dir. Comey made in his testimony before the House oversight committee.

Chairman Chaffetz asked him if Sec. Clinton's attorneys had the clearances they needed to have access to classified information. The director said, "They did not." I understand that Sec. Clinton's attorneys have said that they previously had security clearances from the State Dept. for their work representing her on matters before the Benghazi committee. Can I just confirm, is it still the FBI's position that her attorneys did not have the clearances they needed?

Thank you.

Nope. No problem. We will keep with the original plan, and I'll inform the Director's office. For tomorrow's brief to Andy, since our time is so limited anyway, let's just skip and set a placeholder for the Monday brief. Bill, in case you haven't already, please explain to Jim Trainor that we will be starting the Director's pre-brief 15 minutes early to cover sensitive OGA reporting. I will ensure that their calendar invite reflects the right time for each group. Thanks all.

Ok. I just went through the LHM to do the more "surgical" redactions as requested by the DD, but I'm going to need some additional input from the investigative team. In some cases, I'm not sure why the paragraph is classified at all so I can't determine what needs to be redacted to make it unclassified. Is it possible to meet tomorrow am? Possibly after the CH meeting? I told RMD I'd have them a first-cut of the redaction tomorrow morning.

– This is just FYI for you. I'll get you a copy of the LHM highlighted with the classified redactions as soon as possible tomorrow.

Hi John. The Director is appearing before the President's Intelligence Advisory Board on September 20th to discuss the IC and transition. As we discussed, attached please find a series of questions provided by the PIAB in anticipation of this meeting. Would it be possible to have a first draft to these responses back by COB next Tuesday? Let me know if this timing won't work, I just want to leave enough time for input from the operational divisions and tweaks to meet the needs of the DO. Thanks so much.

Russian hackers breached a computer used by county elections officials in Arizona, a state official said

Hackers targeted voter registration systems in Illinois and Arizona, and the FBI alerted Arizona officials in June that Russian hackers were behind the assault on the election system in that state.

The bureau told Arizona officials that the threat was "credible" and severe, ranking as "an 8 on a scale of 1 to 10," said Matt Roberts, a spokesman for the secretary of state's office.

As a result, Secretary of State Michele Reagan shut down the state voter registration system for almost a week.

It turned out that the hackers did not succeed in compromising the state system or even any county system, but rather had managed to steal the user name and password for one Gila County elections official.

Nonetheless, the revelation comes amid news that the FBI is investigating suspected foreign hacks of state election computer systems, and earlier this month warned states to be on the alert for intrusions.

In Illinois, officials discovered an intrusion into their state voter registration system in July.

The FBI's Aug. 18 warning follows heightened concern over Russian hacks of Democratic Party organizations and possible meddling in the presidential election.

Although the hackers did not alter any data, the intrusion into the Illinois database marks the first succesful compromise of a state election database, federal officials said.

Until now, countries such as Russia and China have shown little interest in voting systems in the United States. But experts said that if a foreign government gains the ability to tamper with voter data, for instance by deleting registration records, such a hack could cast doubt on the legitimacy of U.S. elections.

Meanwhile, the recently discovered hacks have state officials across the country scrambling to ensure that their systems have not been compromised. At least two other states are looking into potential that their systems have not been compromised. At least two other states are looking into potential breaches, officials said.

"This was a highly sophisticated attack most likely from a foreign (international) entity," said Kyle Thomas, director of voting and registration systems for the Illinois State Board of Elections, in a message that was sent to all election authorities in the state.

In July, officials in that state discovered the intrusion, in which hackers were able to retrieve voter records. The amount accessed was "a fairly small percentage of the total," said Ken Menzel, general counsel for the Illinois elections board.

State officials alerted the FBI, he said. The Department of Homeland Security also got involved, he said. The intrusion led the state election board to shut down the voter registration system for a week.

In June, the Arizona Secretary of State's office shut down part of its website after the FBI found a potential threat to its state voter registration system, according to the Arizona Republic.

Following those breaches, the FBI issued its "flash" alert, which listed Internet protocol addresses and other technical fingerprints associated with the hacks.

"The FBI is requesting that states contact their Board of Elections and determine if any similar activity to their logs, both inbound and outbound,
