Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
223	1225	11/8/2022 10:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
41	841	11/8/2022 7:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
353	1059	11/8/2022 16:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
422	929	11/8/2022 18:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
107	808	11/8/2022 9:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
466	1273	11/8/2022 16:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
421	928	11/8/2022 18:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
730	1538	11/8/2022 19:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
579	1386	11/8/2022 17:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
578	1385	11/8/2022 17:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
700	1507	11/8/2022 19:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
217	721	11/8/2022 13:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
781	1889	11/8/2022 18:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
407	1511	11/8/2022 13:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
314		11/8/2022 11:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	UPDATE VI N
314	1415	11/8/2022 11:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
115	716	11/8/2022 9:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
82	382	11/8/2022 13:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
215	1316	11/8/2022 10:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
22	1122	11/8/2022 7:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
782	1890	11/8/2022 18:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
216	720	11/8/2022 13:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
231	933	11/8/2022 12:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
375	978	11/8/2022 15:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
115	915	11/8/2022 8:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
779	1887	11/8/2022 18:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
114	914	11/8/2022 8:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
241	946	11/8/2022 14:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
88	788	11/8/2022 8:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
80	380	11/8/2022 13:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
448	1154	11/8/2022 18:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
686	1489	11/8/2022 18:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
419	1225	11/8/2022 15:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
369	1071	11/8/2022 15:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
520	1626	11/8/2022 15:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
34	1134	11/8/2022 7:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
130	1031	11/8/2022 9:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
332	1233	11/8/2022 13:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
141	1041	11/8/2022 9:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
21	821	11/8/2022 7:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
22	822	11/8/2022 7:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
782	1586	11/8/2022 19:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
113	913	11/8/2022 8:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
430	1231	11/8/2022 15:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
233	937	11/8/2022 13:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
106	406	11/8/2022 15:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
618	1425	11/8/2022 17:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
166	867	11/8/2022 10:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
153	854	11/8/2022 10:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
379	1282	11/8/2022 15:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
61	763	11/8/2022 9:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
452	1158	11/8/2022 18:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
403	909	11/8/2022 17:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
219	923	11/8/2022 13:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
118	618	11/8/2022 10:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
243	945	11/8/2022 13:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
9	709	11/8/2022 7:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
386	1089	11/8/2022 16:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
128	929	11/8/2022 9:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
227	1328	11/8/2022 10:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
302	704	11/8/2022 18:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
363	869	11/8/2022 17:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
87	488	11/8/2022 11:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
440	1247	11/8/2022 15:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
500	1301	11/8/2022 16:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
43	643	11/8/2022 7:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
42	642	11/8/2022 7:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
526	1328	11/8/2022 16:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
484	1392	11/8/2022 15:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
126	1029	11/8/2022 9:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
101	401	11/8/2022 15:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
643	1750	11/8/2022 16:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
569	1477	11/8/2022 16:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
570	1478	11/8/2022 16:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
1	801	11/8/2022 7:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
320	1421	11/8/2022 11:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
116	1216	11/8/2022 8:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
608	1410	11/8/2022 17:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
441	1343	11/8/2022 15:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
233	1334	11/8/2022 10:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
182	884	11/8/2022 11:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
359	1266	11/8/2022 13:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
647	1556	11/8/2022 17:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
646	1555	11/8/2022 17:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
869	1978	11/8/2022 19:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
234	1335	11/8/2022 10:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
89	1090	11/8/2022 8:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
356	1162	11/8/2022 14:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
263	1069	11/8/2022 12:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
510	1416	11/8/2022 16:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
21	921	11/8/2022 7:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
440	1347	11/8/2022 15:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
300	1107	11/8/2022 12:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
146	848	11/8/2022 10:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
439	1346	11/8/2022 15:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
439	1346	11/8/2022 15:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	SPOIL BALI N
439	1376	11/8/2022 15:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
567	1470	11/8/2022 18:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
542	1548	11/8/2022 17:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
241	1142	11/8/2022 12:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
240	1141	11/8/2022 12:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
170	971	11/8/2022 9:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
171	972	11/8/2022 9:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
175	1275	11/8/2022 9:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
115	916	11/8/2022 8:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
40	640	11/8/2022 7:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
420	1323	11/8/2022 16:13	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
304	1009	11/8/2022 15:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
4	804	11/8/2022 7:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
317	1124	11/8/2022 13:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
116	917	11/8/2022 9:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
263	1067	11/8/2022 12:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
91	892	11/8/2022 8:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
513	1116	11/8/2022 18:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
559	1366	11/8/2022 17:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
440	1544	11/8/2022 13:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
700	1609	11/8/2022 18:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
257	1161	11/8/2022 11:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
130	531	11/8/2022 12:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
221	1121	11/8/2022 10:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
152	854	11/8/2022 11:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
48	750	11/8/2022 8:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
292	997	11/8/2022 15:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
151	954	11/8/2022 10:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
543	1446	11/8/2022 18:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
201	802	11/8/2022 11:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
299	1001	11/8/2022 14:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
14	314	11/8/2022 8:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
40	740	11/8/2022 7:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
451	1456	11/8/2022 15:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
354	1358	11/8/2022 13:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
595	1701	11/8/2022 16:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
703	1811	11/8/2022 17:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
439	1145	11/8/2022 18:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
523	1426	11/8/2022 17:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
292	996	11/8/2022 15:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
293	997	11/8/2022 15:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
36	736	11/8/2022 7:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
663	1470	11/8/2022 18:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
199	1000	11/8/2022 10:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
271	673	11/8/2022 18:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
46	747	11/8/2022 7:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
227	728	11/8/2022 14:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
483	1188	11/8/2022 17:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
55	755	11/8/2022 7:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
219	1120	11/8/2022 12:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
223	925	11/8/2022 12:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
426	1227	11/8/2022 14:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
766	1675	11/8/2022 19:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
451	1258	11/8/2022 15:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
415	1318	11/8/2022 16:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
378	1281	11/8/2022 15:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
140	943	11/8/2022 9:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
630	1536	11/8/2022 18:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
160	1161	11/8/2022 9:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
431	1133	11/8/2022 17:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
197	899	11/8/2022 11:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
62	962	11/8/2022 8:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
208	912	11/8/2022 13:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
366	1172	11/8/2022 14:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
323	725	11/8/2022 19:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
181	1281	11/8/2022 9:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
575	1279	11/8/2022 19:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
204	908	11/8/2022 13:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
322	1026	11/8/2022 15:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
631	1738	11/8/2022 16:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
700	1507	11/8/2022 19:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
450	1157	11/8/2022 18:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
267	972	11/8/2022 14:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
632	1739	11/8/2022 16:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
284	786	11/8/2022 16:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
587	1291	11/8/2022 19:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
179	682	11/8/2022 12:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
207	911	11/8/2022 13:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
235	1336	11/8/2022 10:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
92	493	11/8/2022 11:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL 1
121	822	11/8/2022 9:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
64	364	11/8/2022 13:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
31	532	11/8/2022 7:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
398	1305	11/8/2022 14:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
43	943	11/8/2022 7:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
372	1076	11/8/2022 16:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
235	1135	11/8/2022 11:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
10	410	11/8/2022 7:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
404	1409	11/8/2022 14:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
680	1788	11/8/2022 17:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
300	1005	11/8/2022 15:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
704	1710	11/8/2022 19:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
373	1077	11/8/2022 16:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
458	1264	11/8/2022 15:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
211	913	11/8/2022 12:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
513	1519	11/8/2022 16:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
120	821	11/8/2022 9:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
236	1136	11/8/2022 11:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
44	544	11/8/2022 7:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
169	1170	11/8/2022 10:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
372	1273	11/8/2022 14:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
575	1277	11/8/2022 19:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
390	1196	11/8/2022 14:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
432	1134	11/8/2022 17:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
208	1008	11/8/2022 10:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
695	1502	11/8/2022 19:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
251	752	11/8/2022 15:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
119	1219	11/8/2022 8:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
120	1220	11/8/2022 8:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
260	662	11/8/2022 17:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
173	875	11/8/2022 11:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
283	985	11/8/2022 14:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
883	1994	11/8/2022 19:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
356	1360	11/8/2022 14:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
207	1208	11/8/2022 10:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
176	577	11/8/2022 15:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
316	822	11/8/2022 16:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
703	1611	11/8/2022 19:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
267	1067	11/8/2022 11:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
267	1067	11/8/2022 12:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	SPOIL BALI N
267	1075	11/8/2022 12:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
38	739	11/8/2022 7:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
39	740	11/8/2022 7:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
573	1481	11/8/2022 16:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
435	939	11/8/2022 19:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
435	939	11/8/2022 19:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	SPOIL BALI N
435	948	11/8/2022 19:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
380	1482	11/8/2022 12:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
207	910	11/8/2022 12:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
536	1240	11/8/2022 18:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
301	1005	11/8/2022 15:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
176	1276	11/8/2022 9:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
346	948	11/8/2022 15:13	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
232	1032	11/8/2022 11:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
221	1021	11/8/2022 10:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
306	1008	11/8/2022 14:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
133	834	11/8/2022 10:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
287	989	11/8/2022 14:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
390	1394	11/8/2022 14:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
359	1061	11/8/2022 15:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
146	949	11/8/2022 10:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
623	1729	11/8/2022 16:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
624	1731	11/8/2022 16:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
622	1728	11/8/2022 16:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
190	791	11/8/2022 11:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
206	908	11/8/2022 11:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
531	1439	11/8/2022 16:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
532	1440	11/8/2022 16:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
103	805	11/8/2022 8:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
197	1198	11/8/2022 10:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
25	925	11/8/2022 7:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
449	1352	11/8/2022 16:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
247	848	11/8/2022 12:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
124	624	11/8/2022 10:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
581	1387	11/8/2022 17:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
525	1331	11/8/2022 16:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
484	1194	11/8/2022 19:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
122	825	11/8/2022 10:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
429	1230	11/8/2022 14:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
131	1032	11/8/2022 9:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
161	762	11/8/2022 10:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
78	978	11/8/2022 8:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
73	973	11/8/2022 8:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
386	1289	11/8/2022 15:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
95	595	11/8/2022 9:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
616	1520	11/8/2022 19:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
322	1024	11/8/2022 15:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
273	778	11/8/2022 15:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL 1
50	650	11/8/2022 7:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
485	1189	11/8/2022 17:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
399	1306	11/8/2022 14:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
304	906	11/8/2022 14:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
267	868	11/8/2022 13:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
380	1384	11/8/2022 14:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
307	709	11/8/2022 18:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
172	977	11/8/2022 10:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
44	844	11/8/2022 7:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
25	925	11/8/2022 7:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
217	1219	11/8/2022 10:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
670	1778	11/8/2022 17:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
282	784	11/8/2022 16:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
37	337	11/8/2022 11:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
304	1008	11/8/2022 15:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
541	1246	11/8/2022 18:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
127	829	11/8/2022 9:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
95	797	11/8/2022 9:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
282	684	11/8/2022 18:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
137	437	11/8/2022 17:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
96	897	11/8/2022 9:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
536	1238	11/8/2022 18:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
698	1505	11/8/2022 19:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
327	1133	11/8/2022 13:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
312	818	11/8/2022 16:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
330	932	11/8/2022 14:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
94	796	11/8/2022 9:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
582	1284	11/8/2022 19:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
312	1014	11/8/2022 15:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
794	1902	11/8/2022 18:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
31	831	11/8/2022 7:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
438	1239	11/8/2022 15:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
370	1177	11/8/2022 14:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
104	905	11/8/2022 8:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
597	1503	11/8/2022 17:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
597	1503	11/8/2022 20:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
597	1503	11/8/2022 20:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
597	1503	11/8/2022 18:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE PRO N
597	1503	11/8/2022 20:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UNDO: ISS Y
597	1503	11/8/2022 18:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UNDO: ISS Y
597	1503	11/8/2022 20:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UNDO: ISS Y
407	1208	11/8/2022 14:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
376	1279	11/8/2022 15:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
283	685	11/8/2022 18:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
530	1636	11/8/2022 15:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
281	783	11/8/2022 16:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
359	1061	11/8/2022 15:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
814	1922	11/8/2022 18:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
182	982	11/8/2022 10:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
468	1275	11/8/2022 16:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
274		11/8/2022 11:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UPDATE VI N
274		11/8/2022 11:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UPDATE VI N
274	1174	11/8/2022 11:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
256	1056	11/8/2022 11:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
371	1375	11/8/2022 14:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
475	983	11/8/2022 19:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
442	1447	11/8/2022 15:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
721	1528	11/8/2022 19:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
16	816	11/8/2022 7:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
181	981	11/8/2022 10:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
732	1535	11/8/2022 18:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
34	334	11/8/2022 11:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
103	806	11/8/2022 10:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
439	1246	11/8/2022 15:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
347	853	11/8/2022 17:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
186	1287	11/8/2022 9:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
126		11/8/2022 9:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	UPDATE VI N
126	927	11/8/2022 9:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	SPOIL BALI N
126	927	11/8/2022 9:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
126	935	11/8/2022 9:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
31	1131	11/8/2022 7:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
506	1512	11/8/2022 16:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
531	1235	11/8/2022 18:13	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
31	1032	11/8/2022 7:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
154	857	11/8/2022 11:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
271	1372	11/8/2022 10:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
255	1356	11/8/2022 10:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
313	819	11/8/2022 16:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
441	1242	11/8/2022 15:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
105	906	11/8/2022 8:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
445	1251	11/8/2022 15:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
378	1185	11/8/2022 14:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
282	984	11/8/2022 14:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
531	1637	11/8/2022 15:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
212	716	11/8/2022 13:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
25	325	11/8/2022 10:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
64	664	11/8/2022 8:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
310	1314	11/8/2022 13:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL 1
595	1601	11/8/2022 17:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
597	1703	11/8/2022 16:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
30	730	11/8/2022 7:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
555	1561	11/8/2022 17:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
183	885	11/8/2022 11:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
369	873	11/8/2022 17:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
729	1837	11/8/2022 17:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
446	1349	11/8/2022 15:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
666	1573	11/8/2022 18:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
212	712	11/8/2022 14:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
702	1610	11/8/2022 19:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
500	1408	11/8/2022 15:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
11	611	11/8/2022 7:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
651	1458	11/8/2022 18:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
650	1457	11/8/2022 18:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
295	1096	11/8/2022 12:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
294	1095	11/8/2022 12:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
846	1954	11/8/2022 18:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
36	836	11/8/2022 7:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
705	1813	11/8/2022 17:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
430	1237	11/8/2022 15:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
455	1256	11/8/2022 15:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
43	943	11/8/2022 7:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
258	1062	11/8/2022 12:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
249	651	11/8/2022 17:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
196	996	11/8/2022 10:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
248	749	11/8/2022 15:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
248	749	11/8/2022 15:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	SPOIL BALI N
248	769	11/8/2022 15:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
411	915	11/8/2022 18:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
75	777	11/8/2022 9:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
441	1143	11/8/2022 17:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
59	860	11/8/2022 8:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
129	530	11/8/2022 12:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
104	806	11/8/2022 9:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
507	1214	11/8/2022 19:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
17	617	11/8/2022 7:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
63	663	11/8/2022 8:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
541	1444	11/8/2022 18:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
256	1060	11/8/2022 12:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
164	1065	11/8/2022 10:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
409	1012	11/8/2022 16:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
350	1157	11/8/2022 14:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
35	835	11/8/2022 7:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
251	1051	11/8/2022 11:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
265	967	11/8/2022 13:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
570	1376	11/8/2022 17:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
374	878	11/8/2022 17:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
44	944	11/8/2022 7:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
247	748	11/8/2022 15:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
466	1170	11/8/2022 17:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
352	1153	11/8/2022 13:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
249	1049	11/8/2022 11:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
416	1217	11/8/2022 14:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
153	1056	11/8/2022 9:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
226	928	11/8/2022 12:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
250	1050	11/8/2022 11:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
28	828	11/8/2022 7:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
184	485	11/8/2022 18:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REG N
44	445	11/8/2022 8:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
163	1064	11/8/2022 10:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
257	1061	11/8/2022 12:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
99	500	11/8/2022 11:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
444	1150	11/8/2022 18:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
229	1035	11/8/2022 11:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
408	1011	11/8/2022 16:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
271	973	11/8/2022 13:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
409	1513	11/8/2022 13:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
482	1586	11/8/2022 14:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
59	659	11/8/2022 8:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
58	658	11/8/2022 8:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
237	1041	11/8/2022 11:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
268	1068	11/8/2022 11:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
61	961	11/8/2022 7:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
62	962	11/8/2022 7:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
63	963	11/8/2022 7:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
207	1108	11/8/2022 11:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
82	682	11/8/2022 8:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
81	482	11/8/2022 10:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
146	1047	11/8/2022 10:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
143	1044	11/8/2022 10:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
377	1278	11/8/2022 14:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
245	947	11/8/2022 13:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
357	1258	11/8/2022 13:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
421	1324	11/8/2022 16:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
652	1459	11/8/2022 18:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
653	1460	11/8/2022 18:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
654	1461	11/8/2022 18:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
22	423	11/8/2022 7:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
260	962	11/8/2022 13:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
158	958	11/8/2022 9:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
583	1491	11/8/2022 17:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
419	1125	11/8/2022 17:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
287	1093	11/8/2022 12:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
424	1126	11/8/2022 16:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
406	912	11/8/2022 17:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
317	823	11/8/2022 16:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
267	772	11/8/2022 15:13	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
291	993	11/8/2022 14:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
499	1204	11/8/2022 17:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
437	1142	11/8/2022 17:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
173	974	11/8/2022 10:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
400	1301	11/8/2022 14:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
554	1460	11/8/2022 17:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
514	1315	11/8/2022 16:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
564	1366	11/8/2022 16:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
282	984	11/8/2022 14:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
103	603	11/8/2022 9:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
104	604	11/8/2022 9:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
415	1117	11/8/2022 16:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
8	608	11/8/2022 7:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
879	1990	11/8/2022 19:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
286	688	11/8/2022 18:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
221	725	11/8/2022 13:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
154	856	11/8/2022 11:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
460	1164	11/8/2022 17:13	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
156	658	11/8/2022 11:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
118	1018	11/8/2022 8:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
385	1087	11/8/2022 16:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
117	1017	11/8/2022 8:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
388	991	11/8/2022 16:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
383	1085	11/8/2022 16:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
119	1019	11/8/2022 8:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
442	1344	11/8/2022 15:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
258	1260	11/8/2022 11:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
294	996	11/8/2022 14:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
332	1235	11/8/2022 14:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
285	1386	11/8/2022 11:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
257	1358	11/8/2022 10:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
256	1357	11/8/2022 10:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
118	820	11/8/2022 9:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
335	1037	11/8/2022 15:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
374	1275	11/8/2022 14:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
215	1021	11/8/2022 11:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
375	1276	11/8/2022 14:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
500	1306	11/8/2022 16:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
485	1187	11/8/2022 17:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
779	1583	11/8/2022 19:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
151	951	11/8/2022 9:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
539	1447	11/8/2022 16:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
301	1202	11/8/2022 12:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
477		11/8/2022 16:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	UPDATE VI N
477	1380	11/8/2022 16:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
538	1444	11/8/2022 17:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
741	1544	11/8/2022 18:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
312	914	11/8/2022 14:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
311	913	11/8/2022 14:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
590	1297	11/8/2022 19:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
336	1340	11/8/2022 13:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
149	850	11/8/2022 10:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
546	1449	11/8/2022 18:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
411	1218	11/8/2022 15:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
266	1072	11/8/2022 12:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
399	1404	11/8/2022 14:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
543	1649	11/8/2022 15:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
329	931	11/8/2022 14:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
470	1073	11/8/2022 17:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
164	666	11/8/2022 11:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
211	1213	11/8/2022 10:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
4	704	11/8/2022 7:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
4	704	11/8/2022 7:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	UNDO: ISS Y
4	705	11/8/2022 7:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
205	1306	11/8/2022 9:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
3	703	11/8/2022 7:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	SPOIL BALI N
3	703	11/8/2022 7:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
3	704	11/8/2022 7:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
3	704	11/8/2022 7:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	SPOIL BALI N
3	717	11/8/2022 7:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	UNDO: ISS Y
3	717	11/8/2022 7:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	UNDO: ISS Y
3	717	11/8/2022 7:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
3	717	11/8/2022 7:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
3	717	11/8/2022 7:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
453	1557	11/8/2022 14:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
165	667	11/8/2022 11:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
206	1307	11/8/2022 9:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
425	932	11/8/2022 18:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
12	713	11/8/2022 7:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
597	1501	11/8/2022 19:02	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
498	1404	11/8/2022 16:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
268	973	11/8/2022 14:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
570	1272	11/8/2022 18:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
194	1097	11/8/2022 10:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
319	1125	11/8/2022 13:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
154	856	11/8/2022 10:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
452	1154	11/8/2022 17:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
630	1737	11/8/2022 16:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
558	1260	11/8/2022 18:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
200	1001	11/8/2022 10:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
170	673	11/8/2022 12:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
550	1456	11/8/2022 17:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
435	1440	11/8/2022 15:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
234	738	11/8/2022 14:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
347	1248	11/8/2022 13:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
129	930	11/8/2022 9:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
508	1514	11/8/2022 16:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
126	626	11/8/2022 10:41	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
267	1368	11/8/2022 10:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
578	1280	11/8/2022 19:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
137	838	11/8/2022 10:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
483	1284	11/8/2022 15:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
355	858	11/8/2022 17:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
273	1079	11/8/2022 12:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
371	875	11/8/2022 17:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
354	857	11/8/2022 17:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
585	1292	11/8/2022 19:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
306	1112	11/8/2022 12:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
262	964	11/8/2022 13:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
36	738	11/8/2022 8:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
534	1540	11/8/2022 17:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
338	1241	11/8/2022 14:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
646	1652	11/8/2022 18:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
339	1242	11/8/2022 14:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
414	1117	11/8/2022 16:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
473	1376	11/8/2022 16:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
231	1037	11/8/2022 11:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
330	1137	11/8/2022 13:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
665	1468	11/8/2022 17:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
624	1630	11/8/2022 18:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
273	975	11/8/2022 13:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
369	1276	11/8/2022 13:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
53	854	11/8/2022 8:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
637	1744	11/8/2022 16:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
323	829	11/8/2022 16:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
287	792	11/8/2022 15:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
307	813	11/8/2022 16:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
353	1055	11/8/2022 15:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
306	812	11/8/2022 16:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
141	1142	11/8/2022 9:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
56	757	11/8/2022 8:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
138	1139	11/8/2022 9:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
468	1371	11/8/2022 15:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
467	1370	11/8/2022 15:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
467	1370	11/8/2022 16:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	SPOIL BALI N
467	1391	11/8/2022 16:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
568	1375	11/8/2022 17:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
171	875	11/8/2022 12:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
567	1374	11/8/2022 17:20	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
66	467	11/8/2022 10:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
187	588	11/8/2022 15:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
404	1305	11/8/2022 14:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
405	1306	11/8/2022 14:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
357	1361	11/8/2022 14:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
423	1527	11/8/2022 13:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
483	1488	11/8/2022 15:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
254	1256	11/8/2022 11:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
63	763	11/8/2022 7:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
297	1104	11/8/2022 12:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
500	1204	11/8/2022 17:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
473	1381	11/8/2022 15:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
390	1096	11/8/2022 17:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
279	881	11/8/2022 13:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
849	1957	11/8/2022 18:54	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
599	1705	11/8/2022 16:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
347	1351	11/8/2022 13:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
348	1352	11/8/2022 13:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
128	628	11/8/2022 10:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
642	1749	11/8/2022 16:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
66	866	11/8/2022 7:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
378	1080	11/8/2022 16:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
247	950	11/8/2022 13:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
42	1043	11/8/2022 7:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
48	1044	11/8/2022 7:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
48	1044	11/8/2022 7:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
48	1044	11/8/2022 7:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	UNDO: ISS Y

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
268	770	11/8/2022 15:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
395	1101	11/8/2022 17:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
394	1100	11/8/2022 17:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
373	975	11/8/2022 15:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
452	1055	11/8/2022 17:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
1	401	11/8/2022 7:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
606	1515	11/8/2022 17:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
578	1486	11/8/2022 16:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
124	826	11/8/2022 9:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
13	713	11/8/2022 7:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
368	970	11/8/2022 15:42	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
126	1127	11/8/2022 9:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
428	1131	11/8/2022 16:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	14	ISSUE REG N
165	665	11/8/2022 12:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
264	966	11/8/2022 13:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
134	836	11/8/2022 10:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
789	1897	11/8/2022 18:18	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
58	558	11/8/2022 8:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
79	480	11/8/2022 10:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
273	1374	11/8/2022 10:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
178	880	11/8/2022 11:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
424	1327	11/8/2022 16:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
504	1509	11/8/2022 16:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
675	1681	11/8/2022 18:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
233	936	11/8/2022 13:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
502	1607	11/8/2022 15:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
543	1549	11/8/2022 17:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
206	710	11/8/2022 13:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
542	1348	11/8/2022 17:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
83	1084	11/8/2022 8:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
407	1109	11/8/2022 16:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
29	929	11/8/2022 7:19	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
180	884	11/8/2022 12:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
43	444	11/8/2022 8:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
687	1490	11/8/2022 18:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
117	1018	11/8/2022 9:28	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
123	824	11/8/2022 10:01	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
520	1423	11/8/2022 17:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
22	922	11/8/2022 7:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
158	959	11/8/2022 9:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
457	965	11/8/2022 18:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
755	1664	11/8/2022 19:03	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
821	1929	11/8/2022 18:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
172	874	11/8/2022 11:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG N
172	672	11/8/2022 12:44	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
61	462	11/8/2022 9:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
21	522	11/8/2022 7:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
60	461	11/8/2022 9:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
22	523	11/8/2022 7:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG N
229	931	11/8/2022 12:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG N
251	1151	11/8/2022 11:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG N
81	1082	11/8/2022 8:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
287	1290	11/8/2022 12:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
641	1443	11/8/2022 17:32	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
154	954	11/8/2022 9:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG N
502	1309	11/8/2022 16:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
20	722	11/8/2022 7:51	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
540	1646	11/8/2022 15:33	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
128	831	11/8/2022 10:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
338	1044	11/8/2022 16:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG N
249	1251	11/8/2022 11:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
389	1393	11/8/2022 14:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
541	1647	11/8/2022 15:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
598	1507	11/8/2022 17:14	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
504	1209	11/8/2022 17:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
358	1265	11/8/2022 13:17	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
147	1148	11/8/2022 9:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
148	1149	11/8/2022 9:40	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
381	1483	11/8/2022 12:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG N
258	1064	11/8/2022 12:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG N
230	1134	11/8/2022 10:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
231	1135	11/8/2022 10:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
290	992	11/8/2022 14:46	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
544	1147	11/8/2022 18:27	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG N
210	611	11/8/2022 16:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	17	ISSUE REG N
275	1277	11/8/2022 11:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
274	1276	11/8/2022 11:59	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG N
288	1193	11/8/2022 11:50	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
273	1175	11/8/2022 13:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG N
233	1137	11/8/2022 10:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
113	613	11/8/2022 10:11	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
305	1210	11/8/2022 12:06	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
239	1143	11/8/2022 11:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG N
436	940	11/8/2022 19:31	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG N
94	895	11/8/2022 8:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
93	894	11/8/2022 8:26	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N
391	1094	11/8/2022 16:29	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	6	ISSUE REG N
221	1025	11/8/2022 11:05	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

						PII (MCL
337	1144	11/8/2022 14:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
661	1464	11/8/2022 17:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG	N
534	1340	11/8/2022 16:58	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG	N
491	1595	11/8/2022 14:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG	N
447	1050	11/8/2022 17:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG	N
425	1332	11/8/2022 14:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
424	1331	11/8/2022 14:48	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
722	1631	11/8/2022 18:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
723	1632	11/8/2022 18:38	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
329	1130	11/8/2022 13:10	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG	N
526	1632	11/8/2022 15:22	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG	N
214	1018	11/8/2022 11:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
359	1065	11/8/2022 16:45	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	12	ISSUE REG	N
494	1295	11/8/2022 15:56	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	1	ISSUE REG	N
89	989	11/8/2022 8:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
90	990	11/8/2022 8:25	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
401	1208	11/8/2022 15:15	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
402	1209	11/8/2022 15:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
213	916	11/8/2022 12:34	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG	N
73	573	11/8/2022 8:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG	N
195	1095	11/8/2022 10:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
194	1094	11/8/2022 10:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
213	717	11/8/2022 13:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG	N
235	739	11/8/2022 14:30	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG	N
324	1225	11/8/2022 12:53	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
323	1224	11/8/2022 12:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	8	ISSUE REG	N
509	1614	11/8/2022 15:09	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG	N
838	1946	11/8/2022 18:47	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG	N
209	1211	11/8/2022 10:43	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	15	ISSUE REG	N
114	816	11/8/2022 10:00	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	13	ISSUE REG	N
305	807	11/8/2022 16:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG	N
306	808	11/8/2022 16:37	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	16	ISSUE REG	N
627	1531	11/8/2022 19:55	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG	N
586	1495	11/8/2022 17:04	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
152	653	11/8/2022 11:24	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG	N
152	653	11/8/2022 11:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	SPOIL BALI	N
152	657	11/8/2022 11:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	4	ISSUE REG	N
224	926	11/8/2022 12:39	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG	N
501	1203	11/8/2022 17:49	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	7	ISSUE REG	N
243	1147	11/8/2022 11:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
244	1148	11/8/2022 11:12	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
501	1104	11/8/2022 17:52	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG	N
760	1669	11/8/2022 19:08	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REG	N
139	1239	11/8/2022 8:57	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	9	ISSUE REG	N
325	1131	11/8/2022 13:21	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	5	ISSUE REG	N
309	911	11/8/2022 14:35	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG	N
310	912	11/8/2022 14:36	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG	N
40	840	11/8/2022 7:23	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
178	1079	11/8/2022 11:07	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	3	ISSUE REG	N
293	895	11/8/2022 14:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	10	ISSUE REG	N
186	987	11/8/2022 10:16	REGULAR_	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	11	ISSUE REG	N
374	1076	11/8/2022 16:07	REGULAR_	NULL		ROSEVILLE CITY		ISSUE REG	N	BOYD, EMILY ROSE
290	994	11/8/2022 15:01	REGULAR_	NULL		ROSEVILLE CITY		ISSUE REG	N	MOUZON, DANIELLE DENISE

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 6

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

					PII (MCL
41	841	5/2/2023 17:39	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
30	830	5/2/2023 15:37	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
42	842	5/2/2023 17:40	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
35	835	5/2/2023 16:20	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
38	838	5/2/2023 16:38	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
50	850	5/2/2023 19:21	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
16	816	5/2/2023 10:21	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
44	844	5/2/2023 17:53	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
6	806	5/2/2023 8:33	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
5	805	5/2/2023 8:31	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
27	827	5/2/2023 13:43	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
26	826	5/2/2023 13:42	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
2	802	5/2/2023 6:59	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
19	819	5/2/2023 10:51	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
18	818	5/2/2023 10:50	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
11	811	5/2/2023 10:00	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
4	804	5/2/2023 8:21	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
49	849	5/2/2023 19:17	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
48	848	5/2/2023 19:07	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
14	814	5/2/2023 10:17	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
10	810	5/2/2023 9:56	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
20	820	5/2/2023 11:34	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
28	828	5/2/2023 14:58	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
33	833	5/2/2023 16:07	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
31	831	5/2/2023 15:56	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
46	846	5/2/2023 18:25	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
47	847	5/2/2023 18:54	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
32	832	5/2/2023 16:06	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
45	845	5/2/2023 18:15	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
36	836	5/2/2023 16:30	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
37	837	5/2/2023 16:32	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
9	809	5/2/2023 9:14	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
34	834	5/2/2023 16:16	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
40	840	5/2/2023 17:28	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
17	817	5/2/2023 10:48	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
25	825	5/2/2023 13:28	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
24	824	5/2/2023 13:28	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
22	822	5/2/2023 12:26	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
21	821	5/2/2023 12:25	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
1	201	5/2/2023 16:05	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	18	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
13	813	5/2/2023 10:13	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
8	808	5/2/2023 9:01	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
39	839	5/2/2023 17:19	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
3	803	5/2/2023 7:56	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
29	829	5/2/2023 15:09	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
12	812	5/2/2023 10:02	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
1	801	5/2/2023 6:58	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
23	823	5/2/2023 13:06	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
7	807	5/2/2023 8:34	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
15	815	5/2/2023 10:20	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N
43	843	5/2/2023 17:42	REGULAR_BALLOT	5010		ROSEVILLE CITY	2	ISSUE REGULAR BALLOT	N

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 7

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VOTER DETAILS

License Number
[redacted]

Internal Voter ID
[redacted]

Full Name
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) [redacted]

Former Name

Status CANCEL

Status Reason(s)
VOTER REQUESTED

Residential Address
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

Mailing Address

NTH Address

Telephone	E-Mail	Gender	UOCAVA Status	Perm. AV
		MALE	NON-UOCAVA	No

DOB	Reg. Date	Eff. Reg. Date	Move Eff. Date
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)	9/29/2003	1/3/2020	12/23/2019

ID Confirmed	SSN4	Must Vote In Person
Yes		No

County Code / Name	Jurisdiction Code / Name	Ward/Precinct
82 WAYNE	13120 CANTON TOWNSHIP	00001

School District Code / Name
34560 VAN BUREN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Village District Code / Name

US Congress Code	State House Code	Senate Code	County Comm. Code
06	024	05	10

Create Date	System Mod. Date	Mod. Date
10/1/2003 12:00:00 AM	8/19/2022 3:50:44 PM	8/19/2022 3:50:44 PM

In Transition	Last Date To Vote
No

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CHANGE HISTORY FOR

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

4155 HAWKSBURRY CT CANTON MI 48188

Description	Date / Time
STATUS CHANGED to CANCEL-VOTER REQUESTED	9/19/2022 3:50:44 PM
STATUS CHANGED to ACTIVE-ACTIVE	12/23/2019 8:37:10 AM
INTERMEDIATE MOVE (12/19/2019) to PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) MI PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)	12/23/2019 8:37:10 AM
STATUS CHANGED to VERIFY-SIGN REGISTRATION CARD	7/10/2007 2:09:07 PM
STATUS CHANGED to REJECT-NO SIGNATURE	10/8/2003 11:40:03 AM
LONG MOVE (9/29/2003) to CANTON MI PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)	10/1/2003 7:47:15 PM
History started with a reg date of 1/20/1993 fo PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) of WESTLAND MI PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) with a status of AC	9/12/2003 8:39:44 PM
Total 7

No Voting History as of 3/25/2024.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE 16TH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT COURT
MACOMB COUNTY

MICHAEL LEWIS BUTZ,

Plaintiff,

v

JENNIFER ZELMANSKI, Clerk, City of Roseville and CITY OF ROSEVILLE, a Michigan Municipal Corporation,

Defendants,

and

JOCELYN BENSON, Secretary of State,

Intervening-Defendant.

No. 2023-002852-CZ

HON. EDWARD A. SERVITTO

Consolidated with:
2023-002835-CZ; 2023-002836-CZ;
2023-002837-CZ; 2023-002838-CZ;
2023-002839-CZ; 2023-002840-CZ;
2023-002841-CZ; 2023-002842-CZ;
2023-002843-CZ; 2023-002844-CZ;
2023-002845-CZ; 2023-002847-CZ;
2023-002848-CZ; 2023-002850-CZ;
2023-002851-CZ

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S BRIEF

Michael Lewis Butz, In Pro Per
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1)
586.596.PII MCL 15.24

Timothy D. Tomlinson (P48519)
Attorney for Defendants Zelmanski and City of Roseville
22600 Hall Road, Suite 205
Clinton Township, Michigan 48036
586.263.5050
ttomlinson@yorkdolanlaw.com

Marc D. Kaszubski (P60333)
Nathan Petrusak (P75359)
Attorneys for City of Sterling Heights and Melanie Ryska
12900 Hall Road, Suite 350
Sterling Heights, Michigan 48313
586.726.1000

James E. Tamm (P38154)
Kevin A. McQuillan (P79083)
Attorneys for Macomb Twp and Kristi Pozzi
500 Woodward Avenue, Suite 2500

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

Michael J. Murray (P24264)
Attorney for City of Mount Clemens, Laura Kropp and Cathleen Martin
65 Southbound Gratiot Avenue
Mount Clemens, Michigan 48043
586.463.1578
kramermurray@sbcglobal.net

Marianne J. Grano (P82901)
Attorney for City of Centerline and Janice Pockrandt
48 South Main Street, Suite 2
Mount Clemens, Michigan 48043
586.464.3541

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Detroit, Michigan 48226
313.484.3818
jtamm@kerr-russell.com

Robert J. Seibert (P32098)
Attorney for Washington Twp and Stanley Babinski
19500 Hall Road, Suite 101
Clinton Township, Michigan 48038
586.469.3800
rseibert@seibertanddloski.com

Ethan Vinson (P26608)
Laura Sullivan (P42021)
Attorneys for City of Warren and Sonja Buffa
1 City Square, Suite 400
Warren, Michigan 48093
586.574.4671
evinson@cityofwarren.org

John A. Dolan (P28060)
Attorney for Clinton Twp and Kim Meltzer
22600 Hall Road, Suite 205
Clinton Township, Michigan 48036
586.263.5050
jdolan@yorkdolanlaw.com

Thomas D. Landa (P78201)
Attorney for Chesterfield Twp, Cindy Berry and Michelle Nizza
2075 West Big Beaver Road, Suite 750
Troy, Michigan 48084
248.502.4000
tlanda@mcgrawmorris.com

mgrano@khvpf.com

Robert S. Huth, Jr. (P42531)
Attorney for Shelby Twp, Stanley Grot, Lisa Suida, Harrison Twp, Adam Wit and Teri Salgto
19500 Hall Road, Suite 100
Clinton Township, Michigan 48038
586.412.4900
rhuth@kirkhuthlaw.com

Timothy S. Ferrand (P39583)
Jennifer Lynn Burnett (P75365)
Attorneys for City of St. Clair Shores, Amy Anikewich, City of Eastpointe and Otis D. Gatson
19176 Hall Road, Suite 205
Clinton Township, Michigan 48038
586.228.5600
tferrand@cmda-law.com

Sharon DeWaele (P43712)
Attorney for Richmond Township and Cathy Lafontaine
12900 Hall Road, Suite 350
Sterling Heights, Michigan 48313
586.726.1000
sdewaele@orlaw.com

_____/

DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION AND RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF'S AMENDED SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Benson

Dated: March 25, 2024

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Index of Authorities ii

Introduction 1

Counter-Statement of Facts 1

Standard of Review 5

Argument 5

I. Plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed as moot where he received the records sought from the local jurisdictions through the Secretary's September 6, 2023, production in response to his FOIA request to the Department of State. 5

II. To the extent Plaintiff alleges violations of 52 USC 20701, MCL 750.492, and MCL 750.248, those claims must be dismissed. 13

1. 52 USC 20701, 20702 13

2. MCL 750.492, 750.248. 17

Conclusion and Relief Requested 19

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases

Ayyaduri v Galvin, 560 F Supp 3d 406 (D Mass, Sept 10, 2021) 14

Davis v Secy of State, 333 Mich App 588 (2020) 7

Federated Publications, Inc v City of Lansing, 467 Mich 98 (2002) 11

Hare v Berrien Co Bd of Election Commr's, 373 Mich 526 (1964) 7

Herald Co, Inc v Ann Arbor Pub Sch, 224 Mich App 266 (1997) 11

Ickes v Whitmer, No. 1:22-cv-817, 2022 WL 4103030 (WD Mich, Sept 8, 2022) 14

Lowrey v LMPS & LMPJ, Inc, 500 Mich 1 (2016) 5

O'Connell v Dir of Elections, 316 Mich App 91 (2016) 18

Pirtle v Nago, No. 22-00381, 2022 WL 3915570 (D Haw, Aug 31, 2022) 14

Richardson v Allstate Ins. Co., 328 Mich App 468 (2019) 18

Soudelier v Dep't of State La, No. 22-2436, 2022 WL 3686422 (ED La, Aug 25, 2022) 14

Wilkerson v Seder, 81 Mich App 726 (1978) 17

Statutes

MCL 15.231 1

MCL 15.232(I) 6

MCL 15.232(j) 6

MCL 15.233 6

MCL 15.240(1)(b) 11

MCL 15.243(1)(d) 7

MCL 15.243(1)(y) 6

MCL 15.244 7

MCL 168.21 7

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MCL 168.31 7

MCL 168.509gg 2

MCL 168.509p 9

MCL 168.509q(1)(a) 2

MCL 168.509r 9

MCL 168.668b 1

MCL 168.668b(1) 9

MCL 168.799a(4) 15, 16

MCL 168.811 ..... 2, 10, 15, 17

MCL 168.847 16

MCL 168.931(1)(h) 7

MCL 169.509gg 7

MCL 750.248 ..... i, 13, 17, 19

MCL 750.492 ..... i, 13, 17

Other Authorities

52 USC 20701 ..... i, 2, 13, 14

52 USC 21083(a)(1)(A) 8

Rules

MCR 2.116(C)(10) 5

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

This Court requested that Plaintiff explain why the Department of State's production in response to a Freedom of Information Act request from Plaintiff requesting the same electronic poll book history he requested from the 15 jurisdictions he sued does not moot his claims. But Plaintiff's amended supplemental brief fails to directly address this issue, fixating instead on perceived errors or abuses by the jurisdictions or the Secretary of State that are either inaccurate or irrelevant. As a result, this Court should grant the Secretary's motion for summary disposition.

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF FACTS

On or about August 23, 2023, Plaintiff Michael Butz filed the instant complaint against Jennifer Zelmanski, Clerk for the City of Roseville, and the City of Roseville (City Defendants), alleging a violation under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), MCL 15.231 et seq.

Factual Overview

Plaintiff's claims stem from a May 2, 2023, FOIA request to City Defendants in which Plaintiff requested "a copy of the extract files from the electronic poll books (EPBs) for all registrants at all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023." (Ex 1, Roseville FOIA.)

The EPB consists of software and data programming created by the Department of Sate that is downloaded from the state's Qualified Voter File (QVF) before an election and is used to process voters and generate precinct reports on election day for that particular election. MCL 168.668b, 168.735.[1] It includes a list of registered voters for the jurisdiction, and includes

[1] See Election Officials Manual, February 19, 2019, Chapter 10, p 1, available at X_Preparation_of_Voting_Equipment.pdf (michigan.gov).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

sensitive voter information, such as a voter's date of birth. MCL 168.509q(1)(a). After the election is complete, a voter history file will be uploaded from the EPB into the state's QVF software to update voter history.[2]

Plaintiff requested that the EPB history files "be in .CSV or .XLS format." (Ex 1, Roseville FOIA.) In making his request, Plaintiff acknowledged that certain information was exempt from disclosure under MCL 168.509gg, including full dates of birth and driver's license information. (Id.) Plaintiff asserted that "there should be no other FOIA exempt information in the EPB digital records requested," and that he was not "requesting any software or information which somehow be deemed proprietary." (Id.)

Plaintiff asserted in his request that the "EPB .CSV files are an original record and a component of the electronic voting system audit trail," and that "these digital records should be retained" for the applicable federal and state retention periods. Id., citing 52 USC 20701 and MCL 168.811.

On May 23, 2023, the City Defendants "denied all portions" of Plaintiff's request pursuant to direction provided by the Department of State's Bureau of Elections (Bureau):

[2] (Id.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Per the Michigan Bureau of Elections, Clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the Electronic Poll Book, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. In response to previous FOIA requests regarding EPB data, the Bureau of Elections has not disclosed these records because the records sought constitute "cybersecurity plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities" that are exempt from disclosure. The Bureau has an interest in maximizing the protection and defense of its information systems, which outweighs the public interest in the disclosure of this information as the release of this sensitive information could jeopardize the security of Michigan's electoral process. MCL 15.243(1)(y). In addition, the responsive records include sensitive information which, if released, "would disclose a person's cybersecurity plans or cybersecurity-related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information system infrastructure, hardware, or software." MCL 15.243(1)(z).

Further, electronic poll book files contain personal identifying information such as full birth dates for voters, which is exempt from disclosure. MCL 168.509gg. Attempted manual redaction of personal identifying information may not be sufficient to protect this information from disclosure if the software and program files are disclosed.

Please contact the Macomb County Clerk for the paper pollbook copies or the Michigan Bureau of Elections for the log file or voter history.

(Compl, 5/23/23 Letter, attached at PDF page 15.) On June 5, 2023, Plaintiff appealed the denial of his request, which was affirmed on June 13, 2023. (City Defendants' 9/15/23 Mot to Consolidate, ¶ 1, Ex D.)

On May 13, 2023, Plaintiff sent a similar FOIA request to the Department of State, Bureau of Elections, for EPB history of all jurisdictions in Macomb County for the November 2022 and May 2023 elections. (Ex 2, MDOS FOIA request). On September 6, 2023, Plaintiff was provided with all responsive, nonexempt information in the Bureau's possession. (Ex 3, 9/6/23 MDOS email.)

In his Complaint, Plaintiff alleges City Defendants failed to comply with the FOIA by failing to separate exempt from non-exempt materials and by failing to describe the materials exempted. (Compl, ¶ 11.) He alleges that he is entitled to production of the records he sought and that none of the records requested "are exempt from disclosure." (Id., ¶ 12.) Plaintiff requests that the Court order the production of the requested records and award him costs and fees. (Compl, p 4.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Procedural Overview

In addition to the instant lawsuit, Plaintiff filed similar lawsuits against over a dozen other cities and townships in Macomb County. (See City Defendants' 9/15/23 Mot to Consolidate). On September 15, 2023, the City Defendants moved to consolidate all cases before this Court. (Id.) This Court granted the motion to consolidate on October 2, 2023. (10/2/23 Order). On October 26, 2023, Secretary Benson moved to intervene in this case as a Defendant. (10/26/23 SOS Motion & Brief.) This Court heard argument and granted her motion on November 20, 2023. (11/20/23 Order.)

On November 28, 2023, this Court held a status conference with all the consolidated counsel, including counsel for Plaintiff, and counsel for Defendant Benson. During this conference it was noted by the undersigned counsel that Plaintiff had been provided with all responsive, nonexempt records in the Secretary's possession related to all the Defendant cities and townships on September 6, 2023. After discussion, this Court requested that Plaintiff's counsel consult with Plaintiff and then advise the Secretary's undersigned counsel as to what information or records Plaintiff believed he was entitled to but that had not been produced on September 6. The Court then scheduled a status conference for January 11, 2024. (11/29/23 Order).

On January 11, 2024, all counsel, including Plaintiff's counsel and the Secretary's undersigned counsel, participated in a status conference with the Court. The undersigned counsel reported that Plaintiff's counsel had not followed up to explain what records or information Plaintiff believed he was entitled to but that had not been produced by the Secretary on September 6. After discussion, this Court requested that Plaintiff's counsel file a brief within 60 days identifying what records had not been produced and addressing any other matters. The

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Court further requested that Secretary Benson file a brief in response to Plaintiff's brief 14 days thereafter.

Plaintiff timely filed his supplemental brief on March 11, 2024, and then filed an amended supplemental brief on March 20, 2024. The Secretary now timely responds to Plaintiff's amended supplemental brief and moves for summary disposition.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(10) when "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and the moving party is entitled to judgment or partial judgment as a matter of law." MCR 2.116(C)(10). "A trial court may grant a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(10) when the affidavits or other documentary evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is therefore entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Lowrey v LMPS & LMPJ, Inc, 500 Mich 1, 5 (2016).

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed as moot where he received the records sought from the local jurisdictions through the Secretary's September 6, 2023, production in response to his FOIA request to the Department of State.

As Plaintiff notes in his brief, he sent a FOIA request to the City Defendants that sought:

> Per the Freedom of Information Act, please provide a copy of the extract files from the electronic poll books (EPBs) for all registrants at all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023. These files should be in .CSV or .XLS format and typically have a file name beginning with "EPB_History" (see below screenshot).

(Ex 1, Roseville FOIA). Similar requests were sent to the other jurisdictions in these consolidated cases.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff spends pages in his brief arguing that the information he requested, EPB history files, are public records subject to disclosure under the FOIA. See MCL 15.232(I), MCL 15.233. The Secretary does not disagree that the EPB voter history files contain information that is subject to disclosure under the FOIA. The FOIA requests to local clerks for the EPB history files concerned the Bureau of Elections because the EPB history files also contain information that is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA.

The issue is that requestors like Plaintiff sought the information "in a .CSV or .XLS format." Local clerks do not have the capability of producing the EPB history files in an .XLS, i.e., Excel format. (Ex 4, Brater Affidavit, ¶ 25). Rather, they can only produce it in a .CSV format. But producing the EPB history in the .CSV format unavoidably produces sensitive information relating to the software[3] design and data architecture of the EPB at the same time it produces what is otherwise public record information. (Id.). It is this sensitive information that is exempt under MCL 15.243(1)(y) and/or (z).[4] Similarly, the .CSV files contain sensitive voter

---

[3] Software is not a "public record" under the FOIA. MCL 15.232(I). Software is defined to "mean[ ] a set of statements or instructions that when incorporated in a machine usable medium is capable of causing a machine or device having information processing capabilities to indicate, perform, or achieve a particular function, task, or result. Software does not include computer-stored information or data, or a field name if disclosure of that field name does not violate a software license." MCL 15.232(j).

[4] MCL 15.243(1)(y) exempts from disclosure:

> Records or information of measures designed to protect . . . the confidentiality, integrity, or availability of information systems, . . . to the extent that those designs relate to the ongoing security measures of a public body . . . and cybersecurity plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities . . . .

And MCL 15.243(1)(z) exempts from disclosure:

> (z) Information that would identify . . . or that would disclose a person's cybersecurity plans or cybersecurity-related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information system infrastructure, hardware, or software.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

information, like full dates of birth, which information is not subject to disclosure. (Id.) See also MCL 15.243(1)(d), MCL 169.509gg. But there is no way for the local clerks to digitally redact, or exempt, the sensitive information from the non-exempt information. (Id., ¶ 25.) Because of these concerns, the Bureau of Elections began instructing local clerks to not release this information and to direct requestors to the Bureau of Elections. (Id., ¶ 26, Attachment D.) This is because the Bureau of Elections has the capability to produce the same EPB history files for a jurisdiction in an .XLS format without the sensitive information. (Id., ¶ 27.) In other words, the Bureau can separate the exempt from the nonexempt material. MCL 15.244.

In his brief, Plaintiff argues that the Secretary acted without authority in instructing the local clerks regarding these FOIA requests. But Plaintiff is wrong for two reasons.

First, the Secretary has supervisory authority over all clerks in the performance of their election duties. Section 21 of the Michigan Election Law makes the Secretary the "chief election officer" and she "shall have supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of this act." MCL 168.21. Further, under § 31, the Secretary "shall . . . [a]dvise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections." MCL 168.31(1)(b). These sections provide the Secretary with broad authority to issue instructions, directions, and advice for the proper conduct of elections and to require adherence to those instructions by the election officials over whom she exercises supervisory control. See, e.g., Davis v Secy of State, 333 Mich App 588, 597 (2020); Hare v Berrien Co Bd of Election Commr's, 373 Mich 526, 531 (1964) (local election board had "duty to follow" the Secretary of State's "instructions" under MCL 168.31); MCL 168.931(1)(h) ("A person shall not willfully fail to perform a duty imposed upon that person by this act, or disobey a lawful instruction or order of the secretary of state as chief state election officer or of a board of county election commissioners, board of city election commissioners, or board of inspectors of election.")

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This authority plainly includes issuing directives to safeguard voting equipment and associated programming and software. See, e.g., OAG, 2009-2010, No. 7247 (May 13, 2010)[5] ("The Secretary of State, in her role as the Chief Elections Officer, or the Director of Elections through the authority vested in that office, may exercise supervisory authority over local elections officials responding to a [FOIA] request for voted ballots by issuing directions for the review of the ballots in order to protect their physical integrity and the security of the voted ballots."); OAG, 2021-2022, No. 7316 (August 6, 2021) ("The Secretary of State, in her role as the Chief Elections Officer, may exercise supervisory authority over local elections officials responding to a request for access to voting equipment by the Auditor General by issuing directions that access to voting equipment should not be permitted, given the need to protect the physical integrity and security of the equipment consistent with state and federal law.")[6] Since the November 2020 general election, unprecedented efforts to gain unlawful access to voting equipment have occurred. Indeed, it should not be lost on this Court that the attorney who filed Plaintiff's supplemental briefs is the subject of a criminal proceeding for her own involvement in conspiring to obtain and improperly access voting equipment.[7]

Second, the QVF is a creation of the Department of State and its programming and contents belong to the State. In compliance with federal law, see 52 USC 21083(a)(1)(A), the Secretary of State created the QVF as the State's computerized statewide voter registration list.

---

[5] Available at Opinion #7247 (state.mi.us) (accessed March 25, 2024).

[6] Available at Opinion #7316 (state.mi.us) (accessed March 25, 2024).

[7] See Pro-Trump lawyer Stefanie Lambert turns herself in at Mich. courthouse (detroitnews.com) (accessed March 25, 2024.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

See MCL 168.509m(1)(a), 168.509o, 168.509p, 168.509q, 168.509r. MCL 168.509o provides that the "secretary of state shall direct and supervise the establishment and maintenance of a statewide qualified voter file. The secretary of state shall establish the technology to implement the qualified voter file." MCL 168.509r similarly provides that "the secretary of state shall establish and maintain the computer system and programs necessary to the operation of the qualified voter file," and that the Secretary of State "shall allow each county, city, or township access to the qualified voter file." (Emphasis added). These statutes demonstrate that the QVF, the computer systems and programs used to operate the QVF, the data and files within the QVF, and who may access the QVF and how they may do so, are under the Secretary's supervision and control. This includes the software and data downloaded from the QVF to the EPBs and the subsequent upload of data from the EPBs to the QVF. See MCL 168.668b(1) ("[e]ach city or township shall use the electronic poll book software developed by the [state] bureau of elections in each election precinct in the city or township on election day to process voters and generate election precinct reports.") Local clerks are allowed access to the QVF and can add, change, or delete records in the QVF, see MCL 168.509p, but the QVF remains under the supervision and control of the State. See, e.g, OAG, 1993-1994, No. 6820 (October 11, 1994) ("Although participating law enforcement agencies other than the Department of State Police have remote computer terminals, which allow them access to the STATIS computer, those records are not 'writings' 'in the possession of' those agencies within the meaning of the FOIA, section 2(c)and (c), unless those records are saved to a computer storage device or printed by the participating agency.")[8]

[8] Available at Opinion #6820 (state.mi.us) (accessed March 25, 2024).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Based on these statutes, it is plainly within the Secretary's authority to direct local clerks not to produce the EPB history files and to redirect FOIA requests for that information to the Secretary's Bureau of Elections. And, as noted above, Plaintiff did redirect his FOIA requests to the Bureau of Elections, seeking the same information for all jurisdictions in Macomb County, (Ex 2, 5/13/23 MDOS FOIA request):

> I hereby request a comma separated electronic version (CSV) or Microsoft Excel workbook file version (XLS) of the information recorded in the Electronic Poll Book for each voting jurisdiction within Macomb County for the November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 elections. As stated in USC 52, 20701, the federal retention period for election materials is 22 months following the final canvass, and the State of Michigan retention period is 24 months following final canvass as stated in MCL 168.811.
>
> Below are the specific data elements requested:
> 1. Voter full name (First, Middle, Last, Suffix)
> 2. Voter ID
> 3. Voter number
> 4. Voter ballot number
> 5. Date/time of poll book record entry
> 6. Voter ballot type
> 7. Voter school district code
> 8. Voter birth year
> 9. Precinct
> 10. Action Description >   a. Issue Regular ballot
>   b. Record AV Ballot
>   c. UNDO: Issue Regular Ballot
>   d. Spoil Ballot
>   e. Add standalone remark >   f. Other?
> 11. Is Undone (True or False)
> 12. Unlisted voter name (if applicable) [Emphasis added.]

On September 6, 2023, Plaintiff was sent a thumb drive containing Excel spreadsheets with all responsive information in the Department of State, Bureau of Elections' possession,[9]

[9] As Plaintiff notes in his brief, local clerks are instructed to upload their jurisdictions' EPB history files to the QVF within 7 days of an election. (Plf's Amend Supp Brf, p 14.) If a local clerk fails to perform this duty either within or without the 7 days the EPB history will not

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

which included data in each requested field as available. (Ex 3, 9/6/23 MDOS email; Ex 4, Brater Affidavit, ¶¶ 28-29; Ex 5, Roseville Nov 2022 Election; Ex 6, Roseville May 2023 Election.)[10]

Section 10 of the FOIA authorizes a requestor to file a civil action against the public body if the body makes a final determination to deny a request. MCL 15.240(1)(b). But, where a public body provides the requested documents, it moots any civil action. See Herald Co, Inc v Ann Arbor Pub Sch, 224 Mich App 266, 270-271 (1997) ("When the [FOIA] disclosure that a suit seeks has already been made, the substance of the controversy disappears and becomes moot."). See also Federated Publications, Inc v City of Lansing, 467 Mich 98, 112-113 (2002) ("[W]e hold that any existing 'controversy' regarding whether the citizen complaint records were properly ordered to be disclosed was rendered moot by their release.")

The Department of State's production of EPB history information for all jurisdictions in Macomb County for the May 2023 election included information for the Cities of Roseville, Centerline, Warren, and Sterling Heights, and for Richmond, Bruce, Macomb, Shelby, Washington, and Clinton Townships. (Ex 4, Brater Affidavit, ¶ 30). Because the Cities of Mount Clemens, St. Clair Shores, and Eastpointe, and Harrison and Chesterfield Townships did not hold May elections in 2023, there are no EPB records to produce for those jurisdictions. However, the Department of State's production for the November 2022 election included EPB information for all jurisdictions. (Id., ¶ 29). Thus, the State has already produced to Plaintiff EPB voter appear in the QVF for that particular election. In this case, however, each of the jurisdictions uploaded their EPB history, unless they did not host a May 2023 election.

---

[10] Exhibits 5 and 6 are extracts of the FOIA production for the City of Roseville demonstrating what information was provided to Plaintiff for each city and township for the November 2022 and May 2023 elections. The file for each election containing every jurisdiction is too large to easily append as exhibits.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

history information for the November 2022 and May 2023 elections for all jurisdictions in the instant consolidated cases. And because this information was produced to Plaintiff, his FOIA claims are moot as to those jurisdictions.

This Court instructed Plaintiff to explain in his supplemental brief why or how the State's production of the EBP history information for the jurisdictions failed to satisfy his FOIA requests. At best, Plaintiff suggests that the Department of State's production may be erroneous or incorrect. (Plf's Amend Supp Brf, pp 4, 33 & Attachment C) ("When this same data is then compared to the data certified in FOIA requests from the state as to who SOS Benson has recorded as voting in the same election it varies by up to 12%. The data should match and it does not.") These statements are based on Plaintiff's Attachment C, which is an affidavit from a former township clerk in Hillsdale County who alleges that she had EPB data from the November 2020 election in her township compared by an expert with data produced by the Bureau of Elections in response to a FOIA for November 2020 voting information for her township, which data allegedly did not match her data, "differ[ing] by 11.5%." (Plf's Attachment C.)[11] The Secretary is doubtful of the claims in Attachment C regarding the discrepancies in data from 2020 as the documents do not fully explain the analyses that was conducted or attach the data so that the State can conduct its own review.

Regardless, it is not an analysis of the Department of State's September 6, 2023, production to Plaintiff of the jurisdictions' November 2022 and May 2023 voter history

[11] This clerk was placed under supervisory control by the Director of Elections for failing to perform her election duties, unlawfully permitted a third party to access the township's voting equipment (Plf's Attachment C, Cotton affidavit), and was later recalled by the voters in her township. See Election-denying clerk ousted in Michigan recall: 'Make Adams Township Boring Again' | Bridge Michigan (accessed March 25, 2024.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

information at issue in this case.[12] Thus, Plaintiff has failed to explain why the Department of State's production has not mooted his claims against the jurisdictions. As a result, summary disposition should be granted in favor of all Defendants.

II. To the extent Plaintiff alleges violations of 52 USC 20701, MCL 750.492, and MCL 750.248, those claims must be dismissed.

Plaintiff's complaint and amended supplemental brief make various references to 52 USC 20701, MCL 750.492, and MCL 750.248 alleging that the Secretary has violated these statutes through her directives to local election officials regarding retention of records from the EPBs, and how to handle FOIA requests related to the EPBs. But these allegations, along with being incorrect, are not actionable because these statutes do not provide for a civil cause of action.

1. 52 USC 20701, 20702

The federal Civil Rights Act of 1960, 52 USC 20701 et seq., requires the retention of election records. The Act requires "every officer of election" to retain, for twenty-two months from the date of an election for federal office, "all records and papers which come into [the officer's] possession relating to any application, registration . . . or other act requisite to voting in [12] Plaintiff also suggests the records in the QVF are inaccurate due to a statewide mailing in September of 2020. (Plf's Amend Supp Brf, p 4; Attachment E.) But that mailing was of applications to register to vote to eligible but unregistered voters, and a voter could not become registered unless the voter actually completed an application. See Michigan Department of State mailings will inform and assist potential voters (accessed March 25, 2024). The mailing, without more, did not register 700,000 new voters. In the same vein, Plaintiff points to an affidavit of a Michigan resident who is not a U.S. citizen but was registered to vote. (Id.; Attachment F.) Notably, the individual is not a resident of any of the jurisdictions at issue in these consolidated cases. But a review of the QVF reveals that this person became registered to vote in 1993, so not through the 2020 mailing or any recent branch transaction, and had his registration cancelled in August of 2022 at his request. (Ex 7, O'Brien QVF.) Neither the mailing nor the registration of the resident, which could only have occurred by the resident affirming his U.S. citizenship, whether intentionally or unintentionally, explain how or why the Department of State's September 6, 2023, production of EBP voter history for the jurisdictions at issue was not sufficient to moot the claims against the jurisdictions.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

such election[.]" 52 USC 20701. The statute does not specifically define "records," but the US Department of Justice has clarified that the term as used in section 20701 includes "records created in digital or electronic form."[13] Section 20702 makes it a crime to destroy records protected by section 20701. 52 USC 20702.

Federal courts throughout the country, including in Michigan, have held that section 20701 is a criminal statute that does not confer a private right of action. See, e.g., Smith v DeBoyer, et al, No. 2:22-cv-11572, 2022 WL 16641857, at *3 (WD Mich, Oct 12, 2022) (52 USC 20701 does not provide private cause of action); Ickes v Whitmer, No. 1:22-cv-817, 2022 WL 4103030, at *3 (WD Mich, Sept 8, 2022) ("52 USC 20701 likely does not create a private right of action."); Pirtle v Nago, No. 22-00381, 2022 WL 3915570, at *3 (D Haw, Aug 31, 2022) (same); Soudelier v Dep't of State La, No. 22-2436, 2022 WL 3686422, at *1 (ED La, Aug 25, 2022) (same); Ayyaduri v Galvin, 560 F Supp 3d 406, 408-409 (D Mass, Sept 10, 2021) (same).

This Court should follow suit and dismiss any claim Plaintiff advances under this statute. Even so, the Secretary has not violated the Act or caused the clerks in the jurisdictions at issue here to do so.

Various state laws pertain to the safe-keeping and retention of election-related records.

Section 811 of the Michigan Election Law provides:

> All election returns, including poll lists, statements, tally sheets, absent voters' return envelopes bearing the statement required by section 761, absent voters' records required by section 760, and other returns made by the election inspectors of the several precincts must be carefully preserved and may be destroyed after the expiration of 22 months following the primary or election at which the same were used. All applications executed under section 523, all voter registration applications executed by applicants under section 497(3) and (4), and all absent voters' applications must be carefully preserved and may be destroyed after the > expiration of 6 years following the primary or election at which those applications were executed. All ballots used at any primary or election, other than ballots containing a federal office, may be destroyed after 30 days following the final determination of the board of canvassers with respect to the primary or election unless a petition for recount has been filed and not completed or unless the destruction of the ballots is stayed by an order of a court. All ballots containing a federal office, and all presidential primary ballot selection forms, may be destroyed after the expiration of 22 months following the primary or election at which those ballots were cast or forms were used. [MCL 168.811 (emphasis added); see also R. 168.790(19).]

[13] See U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Law Constraints on Post-Election "Audits," July 28, 2021, p 2, available at Federal Law Constraints on Post-Election "Audits" (justice.gov), (accessed March 25, 2024.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The administrative rules promulgated by the Department of State with respect to electronic voting systems provides that "[t]he clerk in charge of the election shall secure the container containing the programs, test deck, accuracy test results, and other related materials, and the original edit listing until 30 days following the certification of the election if a recount has not been requested or until a date prescribed by the secretary of state." R. 168.790(18).

Section 799a(4) of the Michigan Election Law provides that:

> Unless a petition for recount has been filed and the recount has not been completed, ballots, ballot labels, programs, test results, and other sealed materials may be released from their original seal after 7 days following the final determination of the board of canvassers with respect to the election at which the ballots were voted. However, the released materials shall be secured and preserved for the time period required by this act and the rules promulgated by the secretary of state. [MCL 168.799a(4).]

The Election Officials' Manual produced by the Bureau of Elections further explains state retention requirements.

> State Retention Requirements: During the ballot retention period specified under Michigan election law, local election officials must ensure that the seal of record used to secure 1) voting devices/tabulators and 2) ballot containers containing the used and unused ballots, programs, test decks, accuracy test results, edit listings and any other related materials remain intact. The seals may be broken only after security is released by the proper authority. Ballot security for the August primary and November general election is under the authority of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State notifies the county clerk of each county in writing after the primary and general election when ballot security is released under Michigan election law. Further ballot retention and security provisions apply to partisan ballots used in the August primary and November general > election as discussed under "Federal retention requirements." [Election Officials' Manual, Chapter 16, p 9.][14]

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Manual further explains the interplay between R. 168.790(18)'s requirements and MCL 168.799a(4):

> [Subsection 799a(4)] was enacted to accommodate situations where electronic voting equipment subject to the 30-day retention period [in R. 168.790] must be readied for an upcoming election. Essentially, the provision allows an election official responsible for the security of optical scan ballots, ballot labels, programs, test results and associated materials to break the original seal of record after seven days and transfer the materials involved to sealed ballot bags for the duration of the retention period. [Id., p 9.]

With respect to section 20701, the Secretary advises local jurisdictions on the proper method of complying with federal record retention requirements. The Election Officials' Manual addresses this federal retention requirement:

> Federal Retention Requirements: If the office of President, U.S. Senator or Representative in Congress appears on the ballot, federal law requires that all documents relating to the election – including, ballots and programs used to tabulate optical scan ballots – be retained for 22 months. To comply with this requirement, the Department of State's Bureau of Elections recommends that ballots and programs relating to federal elections be stored in sealed ballot bags in a secure place during the 22-month retention period. This will free the city or township's ballot containers for use in other elections. The documents subject to the federal retention requirements must not be transferred to ballot bags for extended retention until after the retention requirements specified under Michigan election law have been fulfilled. [Id., p 10.][15]

Thus, under state and federal law, records, including programming, used to conduct an election with electronic voting equipment must be retained by election officials.

The EPBs are electronic voting equipment subject to the above retention statutes and rules as applicable. Before a subsequent election, the Bureau of Elections sends out a memorandum to county clerks releasing security of all election materials, see MCL 168.847, for

---

[14] See Chapter 16 Pre & Post Election Information (michigan.gov) (accessed March 25, 2024.)

[15] Id.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the prior election. (See Ex 4, Brater Affidavit, ¶ 19, Attachment B).[16] Regarding the EPB, the memorandum instructs clerks to print a paper copy of the EPB contents for retention, and to then delete the software and associated files unless certain circumstances exist (e.g., a court order). (Id.) The previous election's information must be deleted from the EPB because it contains personal information of voters and so that the old election file is not accidentally accessed during the new election. (Id., ¶ 20.)

Contrary to Plaintiff's suggestion, the deletion of the software and files from the EPB does not violate section 20701 because the law does not require that officials retain records in multiple formats, and where the poll lists from the EPB is saved in paper form for the requisite 22 months. (Id., ¶ 19.). See MCL 168.811.[17]

2. MCL 750.492, 750.248.

Plaintiff's complaint references MCL 750.492, and his supplemental brief references that statute and MCL 750.248. Section 492 provides for the inspection and examination of county, city, or township records. MCL 750.492. Section 248 prohibits falsely making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting a public record. MCL 750.248. Both laws are criminal statutes where the Legislature has not provided for a civil remedy or expressed any intent they may be privately enforced. See, e.g., Wilkerson v Seder, 81 Mich App 726, 728 (1978) (criminal usury statute did not create private duty towards certain individuals nor did statute include civil remedies, thus Legislature did not create a private action); Richardson v Allstate Ins. Co., 328 Mich App 468, [16] Attachment B is the memorandum releasing security related to the November 2020 general election. Virtually the same memorandum is sent for all state elections.

[17] Plaintiff attaches an affidavit from Clerk Kim Meltzer of the Charter Township of Clinton, (Plf's Attachment D), as support that clerks believe the Bureau of Elections is instructing clerks to violate retention laws in connection with the EPBs. (Plf's Amend Supp Brf, p 3.) However, Clerk Meltzer's affidavit does not say that; she simply acknowledges various statutes and that the Bureau of Elections sent out various instructions. (Plf's Attachment D.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

473 (2019) ("MCL 750.410 is a criminal statute and provides no civil remedy or cause of action for its enforcement.")

Thus, any claim Plaintiff seeks to advance under these statutes must be dismissed. Even so, the Secretary has not violated either statute or caused any election official to do so.

"Statutes that relate to the same subject or that share a common purpose are in pari materia and must be read together as one law, even if they contain no reference to one another and were enacted on different dates." O'Connell v Dir of Elections, 316 Mich App 91, 99 (2016) (quotation marks and citation omitted). If there is a conflict between statutes that are in pari materia, the more recent and specific statute controls. Id." Here, although section 492 appears in the Penal Code, both that section (at least arguably) and the FOIA concern the public's ability to access records of a county, city, or township, so they should be read together, to the extent possible, and where it is not possible and there is a conflict, the FOIA will control as the more recent and specific statute. Id. Thus, if public records are exempt from disclosure or inspection under the FOIA, a municipality could not be compelled to produce the same records under section 492.[18]

As an initial matter, the Secretary does not agree that the EBP history files are county, township, or city records because, as explained above, the QVF and the data collected from the EPBs belongs to the State. Thus, section 492 does not apply. But even if it did, the local clerks were directed not to produce records in response to Plaintiff's FOIA requests because the clerks could not do so in a manner that would ensure exempt information was not also produced along [18] Notably, an Attorney General opinion pre-dating the FOIA determined that confidential records could be excluded from inspection under section 492. See OAG, 1975-1976, No. 4905, p 213 (December 9, 1975).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

with non-exempt information. This direction did not contravene the FOIA Act, so it does not contravene section 492.

Finally, as to section 248, the Secretary has not directed any official to "falsely make[ ], alter[ ], forge[ ], or counterfeit[ ] a public record," MCL 750.248, in connection with any data or files on the EPBs or any other election record.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For these reasons, Intervening Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson respectfully requests that this Honorable Court grant her motion for summary disposition and dismiss Plaintiff's complaint.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

Dated: March 25, 2024

PROOF OF SERVICE

On March 25, 2024, I electronically filed the foregoing papers with the MiFile system, which will provide electronic copies to counsel of record, and I certify that my secretary has mailed by U.S. Postal Service the papers to any non-ECF participant.

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Benson
Assistant Attorney General
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/18/2024 7:39:15 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Michigan webpage
Attachments: NEW - MI AG - Protecting Michigan Voters from AI Generated Election Misinformation webpage - DRAFT.pdf; Protecting Michigan Voters from AI Generated Election Misinformation - DRAFT.docx

Hi Jonathan,

Attached is what we can provide, screen shot and word doc. If changes could be made in track changes on word doc that would be great.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/18/2024 2:35:23 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: FW: election misinformation

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Wednesday, September 18, 2024 8:13 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>; Witters, Emily (AG) <WittersE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

Hi Heather and Linus,

Thanks to Emily's quick and thorough work, the new election misinformation page is ready for your review. You will need to be on the SOM network or VPN to see the preview.

Melanie Taylor drafted the AG's letter, and we added a section that describes "deepfake."

Please let us know if any changes are needed. If changes are not needed, we'll send it on to the deputies for final approval before going live.

Thanks,
Harmony

From: Glashower, Harmony (AG)
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 1:50 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

Yes, of course! And thank you for the quick turn-around.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 1:12 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

To: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

Hi Harmony,

I am sharing the attached, which was put together by Danny (our new AAG in CRE). It looks good to me, and I assume we will be able to take a peek at the site once you have put it together.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 10:22 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: FW: election misinformation

Hi Heather,

Linus asked for a new webpage, at the request of the AG, to protect voters from AI-related election misinformation. This page would be modeled after NY's. Would you like to provide information before we build it out? With the election nearing, we are trying to get this one of the door ASAP.

Thanks,
Harmony

From: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 9:43 AM
To: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks!

Linus Banghart-Linn (he/him)
Chief Legal Counsel
Michigan Department of Attorney General
P.O. Box 30217
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 281-6677

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov

From: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 9:30 AM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2024 9:22 AM
To: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

Kim, Harmony,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thank you!

Linus Banghart-Linn (he/him)
Chief Legal Counsel
Michigan Department of Attorney General
P.O. Box 30217
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 281-6677
Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov

From: Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, September 6, 2024 2:00 PM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: election misinformation

Hi Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Please let me know how I can help.

Thanks,
Harmony

From: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, September 6, 2024 1:47 PM
To: Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>; Glashower, Harmony (AG) <GlashowerH@michigan.gov>
Subject: election misinformation

Kim, Harmony,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thank you!

Linus Banghart-Linn (he/him)
Chief Legal Counsel
Michigan Department of Attorney General
P.O. Box 30217
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 281-6677
Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/20/2024 7:00:39 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Notice of Appeal in 2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Kennedy v. Benson

24-1799 is number

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 20, 2024 2:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Notice of Appeal in 2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Kennedy v. Benson

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

I assume that the Sixth, like most federal appellate courts, has a day or so lag before the docket is actually opened.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, September 20, 2024 at 12:35 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Notice of Appeal in 2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Kennedy v. Benson

They said they will be filing a "motion to expedite" not sure exactly what they are going to say in it.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 20, 2024 12:12 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: FW: Notice of Appeal in 2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Kennedy v. Benson

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Let us know if we can help on with this. I assume a request for injunction pending appeal is forthcoming.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: cmecfadmin@mied.uscourts.gov <cmecfadmin@mied.uscourts.gov>
Date: Friday, September 20, 2024 at 12:09 PM
To: do_not_reply@mied.uscourts.gov <do_not_reply@mied.uscourts.gov>
Subject: Notice of Appeal in 2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Kennedy v. Benson

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.
NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

Eastern District of Michigan

Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered by Debus, Brandon on 9/20/2024 at 12:08 PM EDT and filed on 9/20/2024

Case Name:	Kennedy v. Benson
Case Number:	2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA
Filer:	Robert F. Kennedy, Jr
WARNING: CASE CLOSED on 09/18/2024
Document Number:	16

Docket Text:
NOTICE OF APPEAL by Robert F. Kennedy, Jr re [14] Order on Motion for Preliminary Injunction, [15] Judgment. Receipt No: AMIEDC-9946881 - Fee: $ 605 - Fee Status: Fee Paid. (Debus, Brandon)

2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Notice has been electronically mailed to:

Brandon L. Debus bdebus@dickinsonwright.com, kneff@dickinsonwright.com

Erik A. Grill grille@michigan.gov, albrol@michigan.gov, richardsm1@michigan.gov

Heather S. Meingast meingasth@michigan.gov, albrol@michigan.gov, richardsm1@michigan.gov

2:24-cv-12375-DPH-KGA Notice will not be electronically mailed to:

The following document(s) are associated with this transaction:

Document description: Main Document
Original filename:n/a
Electronic document Stamp:
[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1047317467 [Date=9/20/2024] [FileNumber=12048113-0] [6f0f229e4da88ce07fe991b672a63a70b9e2f8bdd77dc65e22b159cdf1491de22101b20bad30580b08240a3aa5331fc1f202d65a659b9d614a150dedc2282b30]]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/19/2024 1:31:09 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sally Marsh [Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RNC letters perm AV list
Attachments: Letter re Permanent Mail Ballot List 09.06.24.pdf; 2024.09.17 RNC perm ballot list.pdf

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE

★ ★ ★

COUNSEL'S OFFICE

September 6, 2024

Jonathan Brater
Director, Bureau of Elections
Michigan Secretary of State's Office
430 W. Allegan St.
Richard H. Austin Building, 1st Floor
Lansing, MI 48933

Dear Mr. Brater:

I am following up on correspondence we had earlier this summer regarding inactive voters who are nevertheless classified as permanent mail ballot voters in violation of Michigan law. As an initial matter, we appreciate your office's efforts to update the relevant voter files to differentiate between permanent mail ballot voters and permanent mail ballot application voters in response to our inquiry. We also appreciate your office's correction of the Election Officials' Manual to clarify that cancellation of certain inactive voters' permanent mail ballot status is not discretionary.

According to the most recent inactive voter file, which we received on September 5, there are 530 inactive voters who are also classified as permanent mail ballot voters. According to the file, these voters have inactive status for the following reasons:

- Lack of voting activity: 465 voters
- Clerk sent notice to voter – moved out of jurisdiction: 55 voters
- Clerk sent notice to voter – move within jurisdiction: 7 voters
- SOS sent notice to voter – surrendered Michigan license: 3 voters

These voters appear to have inactive status for reasons that require removal from the permanent mail ballot list. Election officials must remove a voter from the permanent mail ballot list if the voter "does not vote for 6 consecutive years" or if the official "receives reliable information that the permanent mail ballot voter has moved the voter's residence to another state, or has moved the voter's residence within this state without updating the voter's registration address." MCL 168.759e(3)(c), (d). Such removal is mandatory. MCL 168.759e(4). These are the same reasons for which a voter must be placed on the inactive voter list. MCL 168.509r.

If these 530 inactive voters are indeed ineligible to automatically receive a mail ballot, we urge your office to immediately rescind their permanent mail ballot status. If your office takes the position that these 530 inactive voters are properly classified as permanent mail ballot voters, please provide an explanation of your position. We would appreciate if you could provide a response by Wednesday, September 11.

Sincerely,

Stephen J. Kenny

Stephen J. Kenny
Senior Counsel, Litigation

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
JOCELYN BENSON, SECRETARY OF STATE
DEPARTMENT OF STATE
LANSING

September 17, 2024

Stephen J. Kenny
Republican National Committee
1001 Pennsylvania Ave, N.W. Suite 510
Washington D.C. 20004

Re: Permanent Mail Ballot List

Dear Mr. Kenny:

The Department of State (Department) is in receipt of your September 6, 2024, letter, regarding voters on the permanent mail ballot list.

Your letter stated that your latest review of the state's inactive voter file, received by you September 5, shows "530 inactive voters who are also classified as permanent mail ballot voters" and that they "appear to have inactive status for reasons that require removal from the permanent mail ballot list." You break those voters into groups based on the reasons you believe they should not be on the permanent mail ballot list, and you describe those groups as follows:

- Lack of voting activity: 465 voters
- Clerk sent notice to voter—moved out of jurisdiction: 55 voters
- Clerk sent notice to voter—move within jurisdiction: 7 voters
- SOS sent notice to voter—surrendered Michigan license: 3 voters

On September 10, 2024, the Department responded to your letter and requested the list of allegedly ineligible voters so that it could review and verify your contention. You provided that list the same day. Following its review, the Department provides this response.

As to the largest category, you assert that 465 voters must be removed from the list because they have not voted for 6 consecutive years. However, these voters do not have 6 years of voting inactivity following their placement on the permanent ballot list. The Michigan Constitution codifies specific voting-related rights afforded to all registered voters in Michigan, including the right "to have an absent voter ballot sent to the voter before each election by submitting a single signed absent voter ballot application covering all future elections." Mich Const Art II, §4(1)(k). That right can only be rescinded for four specified reasons, including "the voter does not vote for six (6) consecutive years."[1] (emphasis added) Id. In other words, the Constitution and statute use

[1] The Michigan Election Law similarly lists the reason for rescission as "The permanent mail ballot voter does not vote for 6 consecutive years." (emphasis added) MCL 168.759e.

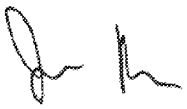
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

prospective rather than retroactive language. A voter may join and remain on the permanent mail ballot list even if the voter has not voted for 6 years; however, if a voter has been on the ballot list for 6 years without voting, the voter is then removed.

The constitutional provisions took effect December 24, 2022, and the implementing changes to statute took effect February 13, 2024. The six-year clock for potential rescission begins to toll on the day a voter exercises their right to be added to the list. A voter who has not voted since the date they were added to the list would be eligible for rescission six years from that date—or 2028 at the earliest. If a registered voter could be denied access to the list because of their previous failure to vote, it would be a violation of the constitutional guarantee that the right be afforded to "[e]very citizen of the United States who is an elector qualified to vote in Michigan." (emphasis added) Mich Const Art II, §4(1). Because the constitution does not exclude individuals who have not voted in the last six years from being added to the list, and instead provides for their removal only once they have been on the list for six years without voting, these 465 voters are properly classified as permanent mail ballot voters.

The Department is carefully reviewing the Qualified Voter File (QVF) record for each of the remaining 65 voters you identified. These records are being reviewed on a case-by-case basis and may require follow-up conversations with the voter's local clerk. The Department will provide a more detailed response about the status of those voters on or before October 4, 2024.

Sincerely,



Jonathan Brater
Director of Elections

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/19/2024 1:35:25 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sally Marsh [Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: RNC letters perm AV list
Attachments: Correspondence from Chairman Steil to SOS Benson.pdf

fyi

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Thursday, September 19, 2024 9:31 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Sally Marsh <Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RNC letters perm AV list

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

BRYAN STEIL, WISCONSIN
CHAIRMAN

BARRY LOUDERMILK, GEORGIA
H. MORGAN GRIFFITH, VIRGINIA
GREGORY F. MURPHY, NORTH CAROLINA
STEPHANIE I. BICE, OKLAHOMA
MIKE CAREY, OHIO
ANTHONY D'ESPOSITO, NEW YORK
LAUREL M. LEE, FLORIDA

MICHAEL PLATT
STAFF DIRECTOR

One Hundred Eighteenth
Congress of the United States
House of Representatives

COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION
1309 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515–6157
(202) 225–8281 | CHA.HOUSE.GOV

JOSEPH D. MORELLE, NEW YORK
RANKING MINORITY MEMBER

TERRI A. SEWELL, ALABAMA
DEREK KILMER, WASHINGTON
NORMA J. TORRES, CALIFORNIA

JAMIE FLEET
MINORITY STAFF DIRECTOR

September 16, 2024

The Honorable Jocelyn Benson
Michigan Secretary of State
430 W. Allegan St.
Richard H. Austin Building – 4th Floor
Lansing, MI 48918

Dear Secretary Benson,

As Chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on House Administration ("Committee"), which has broad oversight of our nation's federal elections,[1] I write today seeking information and clarification regarding whether Michigan observers, known as "challengers," can be present during the during the initial processing of mail ballots and signature verification. The Constitution prescribes that the House of Representatives is the "Judge of [its own] Elections,"[2] and the Committee is required by the Federal Contested Elections Act to adjudicate disputes as to who was legitimately elected to the House.[3] Throughout my time as Chairman, the Committee has strived to promote election transparency measures that prevent fraud and give all Americans confidence in our elections. As such, the Committee requests that your office clarifies to all County Clerks that challengers are permitted at the initial stage of mail-in ballot processing.

For our elections to be secure and instill public confidence, the Committee believes it is good public policy for States to allow observers to witness election procedures—both for in-person and mail voting. After all, "[s]unlight is the best of disinfectants" in elections.[4] Transparency is especially important for mail voting, which the U.S. Supreme Court has found to be more vulnerable to fraud than in-person voting.[5] Allowing observers to watch the processing of mail ballots guards against potential fraud and promotes public confidence.

Michigan wisely permits observers—called "challengers"—appointed by both major political parties to observe in-person voting and at least parts of the mail voting process.[6] For in-person voting, challengers can contest the eligibility of those attempting to cast ballots.[7] Yet it is unclear whether challengers can perform that function for mail voting.

---

[1] Rules of the United States House of Representatives, rule X(k)(12), https://rules.house.gov/sites/evo-subsites/republicans-rules.house.gov/files/documents/118/Additional%20Items/118-House-Rules-Clerk-v2.pdf.
[2] U.S. Const. art. I, § 5.
[3] 2 U.S.C. §§ 381–96.
[4] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 67 (1976) (per curiam).
[5] See, e.g., Crawford v. Bd. of Marion Cnty. Elec. Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 195-95 (2008) (opinion of Stevens, J.).
[6] MCL § 168.730(1).
[7] MCL § 168.733(1)(c).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan law seems to envision a two-step process for processing mail ballots. In the first step, city and township clerk offices receive and process the mail ballots.[8] That processing includes verifying whether the elector is properly registered, documenting the time the mail ballot was received, and conducting signature verification.[9] Signature verification is an essential part of processing mail ballots in Michigan because it ensures that the same person who requested (and signed for) the mail ballot is the one who cast it.[10]

In the second step, after a clerk's office concludes a mail ballot is eligible to be tabulated, the ballot is forwarded to an absent voter counting board.[11] All agree that challengers can be present at the absent ballot counting boards.[12] However, no signature verification is conducted at the absent voter counting boards.[13]

Michigan law seems unclear on whether challengers can be present during the first step of mail-ballot processing, including signature verification. At least one statutory provision seems to suggest challengers can be present in clerk offices to monitor relevant election activities.[14]

If challengers can be present in the clerk offices, they should be able to perform all their usual functions, including challenging the eligibility of voters.[15] But challengers can only perform that function if they are allowed to observer signature verification. However, it is the Committee's understanding that at least some clerk offices believe challengers have no right to be present during the initial processing of mail ballots and signature verification.

There is no legitimate public policy reason to exclude challengers from the initial processing of mail ballots and signature verification. Excluding challengers from the room while clerk offices assess whether mail voters are registered and actually are who they say they are (through signature verification) prevents challengers from being able to vouch for the security of mail voting in Michigan. The Committee cannot think of any countervailing policy considerations justifying the exclusion of challengers.

Indeed, in our Committee hearing on September 11, 2024 where you appeared as a witness alongside five other Secretaries of State, you were asked if your office is prepared and ready to welcome House Election Observers during this election cycle. You and your colleagues from both major political parties all responded with a resounding, "Yes."[16]

Therefore, the Committee asks that, by September 23, 2024, you confirm and communicate to the various clerk offices that challengers are permitted to observe initial processing of mail ballots and signature verification. The Committee further requests that, if there is remaining

---

[8] See MCL §§ 168.7646(1), 168.766.
[9] MCL § 168.765.
[10] See MCL § 168.766a
[11] See MCL § 168.765(4).
[12] See MCL § 168.765a
[13] See MCL § 168.765(4); see also MCL § 168.768.
[14] MCL § 168.761b.
[15] MCL §§ 168.30(3), 168.733(l)(c).
[16] American Confidence in Elections: Looking Ahead to the 2024 General Election: Hearing Before the H. Comm. On Admin., 118th Cong. (2024).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

confusion or difference of opinion, pursuant to our authority under the Constitution and the Federal Contested Elections Act, that challengers be permitted to observe. Thus, in the event there is a contested House election in Michigan, it will assist us in assessing the reliability of the results. If challengers are not allowed to observe the initial processing of mail ballots and signature verification, inevitable doubts about the integrity of Michigan's elections will arise. After all, it seems absurd to permit challengers to observer in-person voting, but then to prohibit challengers from observing mail voting.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter. Please send any correspondence to Thomas Lane, Elections Counsel and Director of Election Coalitions, at Thomas.Lane@mail.house.gov. If you have any questions, do not hesitate to contact the Committee at 202-225-8281.

Sincerely,

Bryan Steil
Chairman
Committee on House Administration

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/3/2024 7:14:59 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Dax contact info and CA opinion
Attachments: Kennedy En Banc petition.pdf

Is spoke to soon…Kennedy en banc petition.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 3, 2024 11:43 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Dax contact info and CA opinion

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Also, this is what I was going to flag earlier, in case you hadn't seen:

https://hlli.org/hlli-and-umlc-sue-minnesota-to-defend-free-speech-rights/

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Dax Goldstein
Sent: Thursday, October 3, 2024 8:04 AM
To: meingasth@michigan.gov <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Daniel Osher <osherd@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Dax contact info and CA opinion

Privileged and confidential // Attorney-client communication

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Here you all go!

Dax Goldstein (they/them) | Senior Counsel | Program Director, Election Protection (Legal)
States United Democracy Center
415.938.6481 | @statesunited
dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Case No. 24-1799

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,

Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Michigan Secretary of State,

Defendant-Appellee.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Case No. 2:24-cv-12375
Hon. Denise Page Hood

PETITION OF ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR. FOR REHEARING EN BANC

DICKINSON WRIGHT PLLC
Brandon L. Debus (Mich. Bar No. P81159)
Elizabeth K. Lilienthal (DC Bar No. 90022038)
2600 West Big Beaver, Suite 300
Troy, MI 48084
(248) 433-7674
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
ELilienthal@dickinsonwright.com

Attorneys for Plaintiff-Appellant Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES 2

INTRODUCTION 3

BACKGROUND 5

I. REASONS FOR GRANTING REHEARING EN BANC 9

A. The Panel Decision Disregards the Fact that Secretary Benson Violated Michigan Law by Recertifying the List of Candidates to be Included on the Michigan Ballot After the September 6, 2024 Deadline 9

B. The Panel Decision Conflicts with Sixth Circuit Precedent, Which States That, Under Michigan Law, Res Judicata Only Applies to Matters in Which the Parties Have Previously Had a Full and Fair Opportunity to Litigate. 12

CONCLUSION 14

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE 15

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE 16

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Al-Bari v. Pigg, No. S25A0177, 2024 WL 4284250 (Ga. Sept. 25, 2024) 12

Allen Park Retirees Ass'n, Inc. v. City of Allen Park, 942 N.W.2d 618 (Mich. App. 2019) 12

Anderson v. City of Blue Ash, 798 F.3d 338 (6th Cir. 2015) 4

Dart v. Dart, 597 N.W.2d 82 (Mich. 1999).....14

Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024).....3

Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).....9

Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979).....5

Sewell v. Clean Cut Mgt., Inc., 463 Mich. 569, 621 N.W.2d 222 (2001) 4

Stanton v. Woodside, 817 Fed.Appx. 172 (6th Cir. 2020).....4

Statutes

MCL 168.648 7

MCL § 168.686a 5, 6, 7

Rules

Fed. R. App. P. 35 ..... 3, 11

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. ("Mr. Kennedy") hereby petitions for rehearing en banc of the September 27, 2024 panel decision in See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024) (the "Panel Decision"). En banc consideration is appropriate for numerous reasons.

First, the Panel Decision effectively holds, in part, that Secretary Benson's violation of state law is of no consequence, because maintaining the orderly administration of an upcoming election is of greater importance than ensuring that election officials comply with Michigan law. See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, slip op. at 10-11 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024). The Secretary had no legal authority to recertify the candidates to be listed on the ballot after the September 6, 2024 statutory deadline. No court – not even the Michigan Supreme Court – issued any order permitting the Secretary to circumvent this statutory deadline. The Secretary, of her own accord, recertified the ballot with Mr. Kennedy's name included. Such unlawful conduct clearly presents a question of exceptional importance, which is whether state election officials may influence upcoming presidential elections by manipulating state election procedures. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2).

Secondly, en banc consideration is necessary to maintain uniformity of the court's decisions. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(1). The Panel Decision effectively holds that the prior filing of a similar action in state court bars a later action under the doctrine of res judicata even though the causes of action and injury in the first case (refusal to accept Mr. Kennedy's withdrawal request) are distinct from the claims and injury in the second case (placing Mr. Kennedy's name back on the ballot, after the statutory deadline to do so, and after already certifying the list of candidates without Mr. Kennedy's name included). "State law determines the preclusive effect of a prior state-court action." Stanton v. Woodside, 817 Fed.Appx. 172, 174 (6th Cir. 2020), citing Anderson v. City of Blue Ash, 798 F.3d 338, 350 (6th Cir. 2015). "The doctrine of res judicata is employed to prevent multiple suits litigating the same cause of action. The doctrine bars a second, subsequent action when (1) the prior action was decided on the merits, (2) both actions involve the same parties or their privies, and (3) the matter in the second case was, or could have been, resolved in the first." Adair v. State, 680 N.W.2d 386, 396 (Mich. 2004), citing Sewell v. Clean Cut Mgt., Inc., 463 Mich. 569, 575, 621 N.W.2d 222 (2001).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But the factual circumstances at issue in the current matter had not yet occurred at any point in time while the state court action had been pending. The actionable conduct occurred on September 9, 2024 – after the Michigan Supreme Court had issued its opinion and order. As the Sixth Circuit has previously noted, "[r]es judicata 'preclude[s] parties from contesting matters that they have had a full and fair opportunity to litigate.'" Stanton, 817 Fed.Appx. at 174, quoting Montana

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979). Because the parties here have not had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the constitutional impact of Secretary Benson's unlawful decision to recertify the list of candidates on the ballot after the statutory deadline, the Panel Decision creates a discrepancy in how the doctrine of res judicata is to be applied under Michigan law.

BACKGROUND

On August 23, 2024, Mr. Kennedy suspended his campaign for the office of the President of the United States. [Order, R. 14, Page ID# 300].[1] That same day, Mr. Kennedy sent the Secretary a withdrawal notice and formal request to withdraw from the 2024 general election in Michigan (the "Withdrawal Notice"). [Withdrawal Notice, R. 1-2, Page ID# 24-25]. Two days later, on August 26, 2024, the Secretary rejected the Withdrawal Notice, stating "we cannot accept this filing. Michigan Election Law does not permit minor party candidates to withdraw. MCL § 168.686a(2)." [Withdrawal Rejection, R. 1-3, Page ID# 29].[2] Because the statute

---

[1] Unless otherwise specified, record citations contained herein refer and relate to the District Court docket.

[2] MCL § 168.686a(2) provides as follows: "County caucuses may nominate candidates for the office of representative in congress, state senator, and state representative if the offices represent districts contained wholly within the county, and for all county and township offices. Not more than 1 business day after the conclusion of the caucus, the names and mailing addresses of all candidates so nominated and the offices for which they were nominated shall be certified by the chairperson and secretary of the caucus to the county clerk. The certification shall be accompanied by an affidavit of identity for each candidate named in the clearly does not mention presidential candidates and, therefore, does not apply to presidential candidates, such as Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Kennedy renewed his request to withdraw on August 27, 2024. [Withdrawal Renewal, R. 1-3, Page ID# 27-28]. On August 29, 2024, the Secretary again rejected Mr. Kennedy's withdrawal, this time citing MCL § 168.686a(4).[3] [Withdrawal Rejection, R. 1-3, Page ID# 27].

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

---

certificate as provided in section 558 and a separate written certificate of acceptance of nomination signed by each candidate named on the certificate. The form of the certificate of acceptance shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. If a candidate is so certified with the accompanying affidavit of identity and certificate of acceptance, the name of the candidate shall be printed on the ballot for that election. Candidates nominated and certified shall not be permitted to withdraw."

[3] MCL § 168.686a(4) provides as follows: "The state convention shall be held at the time and place indicated in the call. The convention shall consist of delegates selected by the county caucuses. The convention may fill vacancies in a delegation from qualified electors of that county present at the convention. The convention may nominate candidates for all state offices. District candidates may be nominated at district caucuses held in conjunction with the state convention attended by qualified delegates of the district. If delegates of a district are not present, a district caucus shall not be held for that district and candidates shall not be nominated for that district. Not more than 1 business day after the conclusion of the convention, the names and mailing addresses of the candidates nominated for state or district offices shall be certified by the chairperson and secretary of the state convention to the secretary of state. The certification shall be accompanied by an affidavit of identity for each candidate named in the certificate as provided in section 558 and a separate written certificate of acceptance of nomination signed by each candidate named on the certificate. The form of the certificate of acceptance shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. The names of candidates so certified with accompanying affidavit of identity and certificate of acceptance shall be printed on the ballot for the forthcoming election. Candidates so nominated and certified shall not be permitted to withdraw."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On August 30, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed a complaint in the Michigan Court of Claims seeking immediate relief. The Court of Claims, relying on MCL § 168.686a(4), denied the requested relief and dismissed the action on September 3, 2024. [Court of Claims Order, R. 1-4, Page ID# 31-34]. The next day, September 4, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed an appeal to the Michigan Court of Appeals. On September 6, 2024, around noon, the Court of Appeals issued its decision reversing the Court of Claims' decision because MCL § 168.686a(4) plainly does not apply to presidential candidates, and remanded for "entry of an order granting immediate mandamus relief (i.e., that the Secretary not include Mr. Kennedy's name on the ballot). [Court of Appeals Opinion, R. 8-6, Page ID# 172].

At 3:42 p.m., a few hours after the Court of Appeals decision was entered, on September 6, 2024, Defendant "sent the call of the election and certification of candidates to the 83 county clerks without Mr. Kennedy's name listed as the Natural Law Party's candidate for President." [Benson Response, R. 8, Page ID# 103; District Court Order, R. 14, Page ID# 308]. Thus, the Secretary did not order that ballot printing be held. The deadline to certify the list of candidates was also September 6, 2024 and Michigan law does not permit the Secretary to certify the list after thatate. MCL § 168.648.

The Secretary then appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court, and, on September 9, 2024, in a split decision, the majority issued a one-page decision simply holding that mandamus relief was not appropriate because Mr. Kennedy did not point to a specific law that demonstrated a clear right to require the Secretary to perform the specific act of removing him from the ballot, with which the 15-page dissent strenuously disagreed. [MSC Order, R. 1-6, Page ID# 38-57]. The Michigan Supreme Court did not order that Mr. Kennedy's name be placed back on the ballot after the statutory deadline to certify the list of candidates.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary then immediately, and three days after the deadline to do so, re-certified the list of candidates; for the first time placing Mr. Kennedy's name on the ballot and setting into motion the ballot printing process. [District Court Order, R. 14, Page ID# 308]. In light of this action, on September 10, 2024 – the day after the Supreme Court of Michigan rendered its decision – Mr. Kennedy filed suit in the Eastern District of Michigan, wherein he alleged that his Constitutional rights had been violated by the Secretary's unlawful decision to recertify the list of candidates to include Mr. Kennedy. [Complaint, R. 1, PageID# 10-11]. Mr. Kennedy also filed a Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and for Preliminary Injunction. [Motion, R. 2, PageID# 58-85].

After hearing oral argument on September 17, 2024, the district court entered its final judgment on September 18, 2022 [Judgment, R. 15, PageID# 317], and this appeal followed. [Notice of Appeal, R. 16, PageID# 318-319]. On September 27, 2024, a panel of this Court affirmed the district court's decision denying the Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and for Preliminary Injunction; however, the Panel Decision was accompanied by a 10-page dissent, wherein the dissent (McKeague, J.) took great issue with Secretary Benson's unlawful recertification of the ballot after the September 6, 2024 statutory deadline. See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, slip op. at 10-11 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. REASONS FOR GRANTING REHEARING EN BANC

A. The Panel Decision Disregards the Fact that Secretary Benson Violated Michigan Law by Recertifying the List of Candidates to be Included on the Michigan Ballot After the September 6, 2024 Deadline.

The Panel Decision effectively invalidates MCL § 168.648, and, for that reason alone, en banc consideration is warranted.

"It is the duty of the secretary of state to conform to the law, and in this [s]he is an officer of the United States, bound to obey the laws." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 158 (1803). Under Michigan law, the Secretary was legally required to certify the list of candidates to be included on the ballot for the November 2024 general election no later than September 6, 2024:

> The secretary of state, at least 60 days and not more than 90 days preceding any regular state or district primary or election, shall send to the county clerk of each county a notice in writing of such primary or election, specifying in such notice the federal, state and district offices for which candidates are to be nominated or elected, as well as any constitutional amendments and questions to be submitted thereat.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MCL § 168.648.

Notably absent from Michigan law is any exception to this statute. As the dissent to the Panel Decision noted, the Secretary's action was "unilateral, unauthorized, and likely illegal." See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, slip op. at 12 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024) (McKeague, J., dissenting). In fact, the dissent observed that the Panel Decision ignored crucial facts in rendering its decision:

> [T]he majority leaves out several facts that are critical to resolving this case.
>
> * * * *
>
> Under state law, Secretary Benson was required to distribute the "call of the election" to the clerk of each Michigan county "at least 60 days" before the election. Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648; Brater Aff., R.8-5 at PageID 157. This year, the deadline was September 6—the same day the Court of Appeals issued its order. Within hours after the Court of Appeals released its decision, Secretary Benson issued the call of the election; Kennedy was not listed as a candidate.
>
> Three days after the deadline for the call of the election, the Michigan Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals. Like the Court of Claims, the Supreme Court did not order Secretary Benson to put Kennedy's name on the ballot. It did not conclude that state law prohibited minor party candidates from withdrawing. Instead, it held that Kennedy had not satisfied the criteria for obtaining mandamus relief. In short, the order simply ended the state court case.
>
> But Secretary Benson wasn't done. That same day, her office sent an "updated candidate listing" to the county clerks. Kennedy's name reappeared on the ballot. To date, Secretary Benson has not identified any statute, rule, or court order that required her—or even permitted her—to add a candidate to the ballot after the statutory deadline.

See id. at 12-13 (McKeague, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Panel Decision's failure to consider the aforementioned facts creates the following issues of exceptional importance: (1) the Panel Decision allows the Secretary to recertify the list of candidates at her discretion, in violation of Michigan law, and without consequence; and (2) the Panel Decision creates ill-advised precedent that the "public interest" in having ballots timely printed (see id. at 10) supersedes the constitutional rights of candidates and the statutory obligations of the Secretary.[4] Such a decision oversteps the role of the judiciary and warrants a rehearing en banc. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(2).

Furthermore, any argument that meaningful relief is somehow impossible or impractical now that ballots have been printed and absent voter ballots have been issued to voters is false. For example, other courts evaluating similar circumstances have held that prominent notices be placed at each affected polling place advising

[4] The Panel Decision fails to consider to the fact that any re-printing of ballots was caused by Secretary Benson herself when she illegally added Mr. Kennedy to the ballot after the statutory deadline to do so. In fact, the Secretary, by listing Mr. Kennedy on the ballot, is misrepresenting to voters that he is qualified and willing to serve the public if elected. Such a representation is not only knowingly incorrect, but it is also prejudicial to voters who reasonably expect that the ballot contain accurate information. As the United States Supreme Court correctly noted in Anderson v. Celebrezze, "one of our most precious freedoms" includes "the right of qualified voters, regardless of their political persuasion, to cast their votes effectively." 460 U.S. 780 (1983) (emphasis added). The Panel Decision disregards this problem and, by declining to address the fact that Secretary Benson violated state law, permits Secretary Benson to violate Mr. Kennedy's constitutional rights and misrepresent the identities of qualified and willing candidates to the public.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

voters that the candidate in question (here Mr. Kennedy) is no longer running and that votes cast for that candidate would be ineffective. See Al-Bari v. Pigg, No. S25A0177, 2024 WL 4284250, at *2 (Ga. Sept. 25, 2024).

Thus, to the extent the Court agrees that the Secretary lacked authority to place Mr. Kennedys' name back on the ballot after the statutory deadline to do so, meaningful relief is still available to safeguard Mr. Kennedy's constitutional rights.

B. The Panel Decision Conflicts with Sixth Circuit Precedent, Which States That, Under Michigan Law, Res Judicata Only Applies to Matters in Which the Parties Have Previously Had a Full and Fair Opportunity to Litigate.

The Panel Decision's failure to consider the facts outlined in Argument Section A above contravenes United States Supreme Court and Sixth Circuit precedent and creates a new standard with respect to the application of res judicata, in contravention of established preclusion principles in Michigan and elsewhere.

"The preclusion doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel serve an important function in resolving disputes by imposing a state of finality to litigation where the same parties have previously had a full and fair opportunity to adjudicate their claim." Allen Park Retirees Ass'n, Inc. v. City of Allen Park, 942 N.W.2d 618, 626 (Mich. App. 2019) (citation and quotation marks omitted); Stanton, 817 Fed. Appx. at 174 ("Res judicata 'preclude[s] parties from contesting matters that they have had a full and fair opportunity to litigate.'"), quoting Montana, 440 U.S. at 153 (emphasis added). As the dissent from the Panel

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Decision noted, "[t]he timeline of events, however, belies [the majority's] conclusion" that res judicata can properly be applied here. Slip Op. at 15 (McKeague, J., dissenting).

"Critically, Kennedy's asserted injury arose not from Secretary Benson's refusal to accept his withdrawal in August, but from her decision to put his name back on the ballot on September 9—after the statutory deadline." Id. at 13 (McKeague, J., dissenting). In other words, the factual circumstances at issue in the current matter had not yet occurred at any point in time while the state court action had been pending. The actionable conduct occurred on September 9, 2024 – after the Michigan Supreme Court had issued its opinion and order – when Secretary Benson recertified the list of candidates to be included on the ballot; that is when Mr. Kennedy's claims based upon the federal constitution accrued.[5]

The aforementioned facts, coupled with the Panel Decision's analysis, create the following issues: (1) what constitutes a "full and fair opportunity to litigate"

---

[5] Prior to September 9, 2024, there was no equal protection claim and Mr. Kennedy's speech was not being compelled because his name was not on Michigan's 2024 general election ballot. There was also no violation of Article II, Section I of the United States Constitution at that time because Secretary Benson had already certified a list of candidates that did not include the candidate (Mr. Kennedy) who is no longer running and, therefore, there was no risk of deceiving voters into casting their votes in an ineffective manner and undermining the integrity of our presidential election. In other words, Secretary Benson's act of recertifying the ballot to include Mr. Kennedy's name as a candidate triggered the federal constitution claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

such that an action is barred by res judicata; (2) whether res judicata applies to cases where a defendant causes a new, albeit similar, injury to the plaintiff; and (3) whether legally and factually distinct claims may be barred by res judicata due to the timeline of events at issue. See Dart v. Dart, 597 N.W.2d 82, 88 (Mich. 1999) (holding that res judicata applies to cases where the "essential facts are identical.").

The Panel Decision effectively modifies the scope of the res judicata doctrine such that Mr. Kennedy is being held to a different standard than previous plaintiffs in the same jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION

For all of these reasons, Mr. Kennedy respectfully requests that this Court grant rehearing en banc.

Respectfully submitted,

DICKINSON WRIGHT PLLC

/s/ Brandon L. Debus
Brandon L. Debus (Mich. Bar No. P81159)
Elizabeth K. Lilienthal (DC Bar No. 90022038)
2600 West Big Beaver, Suite 300
Troy, MI 48084
(248) 433-7674
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
ELilienthal@dickinsonwright.com

Attorneys for Plaintiff-Appellant Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.

Date: October 3, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

1. This brief complies with the type-volume limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 35(b)(2) because this brief contains 3,192 words, excluding the parts of the document exempted by Rule 32(f).

2. This brief complies with the typeface requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(5) and the type style requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(6) because this brief has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 2016 in 14-point Times New Roman font.

/s/ Brandon L. Debus
Brandon L. Debus
Attorney for Plaintiff-Appellant Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.

Dated: October 3, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on October 3, 2024, I electronically filed the foregoing paper with the Clerk of the Court using the ECF system, which will send notification of such filing to registered users. A courtesy copy was also sent to counsel for Secretary Benson via email to her counsel of record.

/s/ Brandon L. Debus
Brandon L. Debus

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ATTACHMENT

Sixth Circuit Panel Decision dated September 27, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

Kelly L. Stephens
Clerk

100 EAST FIFTH STREET, ROOM 540
POTTER STEWART U.S. COURTHOUSE
CINCINNATI, OHIO 45202-3988

Tel. (513) 564-7000
www.ca6.uscourts.gov

Filed: September 27, 2024

Mr. Brandon L. Debus
Dickinson Wright
2600 W. Big Beaver Road
Suite 300
Troy, MI 48084

Ms. Heather S. Meingast
Office of the Attorney General of Michigan
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909

Re: Case No. 24-1799, Robert Kennedy, Jr. v. Jocelyn Benson
Originating Case No. : 2:24-cv-12375

Dear Counsel,

The Court issued the enclosed opinion today in this case.

Enclosed are the court's unpublished opinion and judgment, entered in conformity with Rule 36, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Sincerely yours,

s/Laurie A Weitendorf Opinions Deputy

cc: Ms. Kinikia D. Essix

Enclosures

Mandate to issue

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOT RECOMMENDED FOR PUBLICATION
File Name: 24a0397n.06

No. 24-1799

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

FILED
Sep 27, 2024
KELLY L. STEPHENS, Clerk

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,
Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Michigan Secretary of State,
Defendant-Appellee.

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN

OPINION

Before: CLAY, McKEAGUE, and BLOOMEKATZ, Circuit Judges

CLAY, J., delivered the opinion of the court in which BLOOMEKATZ, J., joined. McKEAGUE, J. (pp. 12–21), delivered a separate dissenting opinion.

CLAY, Circuit Judge. Plaintiff Robert F. Kennedy Jr. appeals the district court's denial of his motion for preliminary injunction. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Jocelyn Benson, in her official capacity as Michigan Secretary of State, violated his constitutional rights under Article II, the First Amendment, and the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Plaintiff was formerly a candidate for President of the United States and attempted to withdraw his name from the Michigan ballot on August 23, 2024. After the Michigan Secretary of State refused to permit Plaintiff to withdraw his name from the ballot, he filed suit first in state court and then in the United States District Court. For the reasons that follow, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

Over the last year-and-a-half, Plaintiff has been a candidate for President of the United States. After initially running for the Democratic Party's nomination, Plaintiff ran as a third-party candidate for the Natural Law Party and undertook a prolonged effort to gain ballot access in each of the nation's states. See Rebecca Davis O'Brien, Surprise Tactics and Legal Threats: Inside R.F.K. Jr.'s Ballot Access Fight, N.Y. Times, Apr. 29, 2024. On April 17, 2024, Plaintiff received the Natural Law Party's presidential nomination in Michigan, thus earning a place on Michigan's general election ballot.

On August 23, 2024, Plaintiff withdrew from the presidential race and notified the Michigan Bureau of Elections of his decision. Three days later, Defendant Benson rejected Plaintiff's withdrawal notice, citing Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(2). Plaintiff renewed his withdrawal notice the following day, but Defendant again rejected the notice, citing Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(4).

After receiving his second rejection, Plaintiff filed suit on August 30, 2024, in the state Court of Claims. Plaintiff alleged that Defendant had violated various state election laws and the free speech protections of the Michigan Constitution by failing to remove Plaintiff from the ballot. He sought mandamus, injunctive, and declaratory relief. The state court dismissed the complaint. On September 4, 2024, Plaintiff appealed to the Michigan Court of Appeals. Two days later, the Court of Appeals granted Plaintiff's appeal and remanded to the Court of Claims, which granted mandamus and ordered Defendant to remove Plaintiff's name from the ballot. That same day, Defendant appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court, and on September 9, 2024, the court granted Defendant's appeal and affirmed the Court of Claims' order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On September 6, 2024—in between the time of the Court of Appeals' and the Michigan Supreme Court's decisions—Defendant sent the certification of candidates to Michigan's county clerks. Per the Court of Appeals' decision and subsequent order, Defendant's communication did not have Plaintiff's name listed as the candidate for the Natural Law Party, nor did it order that the ballots be printed. Three days later, after the Michigan Supreme Court's decision was released, Defendant updated the names of candidates and included Plaintiff's name as the presidential candidate for the Natural Law Party.

B. Procedural History

After Plaintiff lost his case in state court, he filed suit in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan. Plaintiff's district court complaint alleged three counts of constitutional violations: (1) a violation of Article II, Section I, arguing "that states may not impose their stringent ballot access requirements on the national election for President" and that Defendant's placement of Plaintiff's name on the ballot serves "no other possible reason than to confuse unwitting Michigan voters to vote for a candidate no longer running for office," Compl., R. 1, Page ID #6–11; (2) a Fourteenth Amendment equal protection violation, arguing that the deadline by which a candidate withdraws gives an "advantage [to] the Democrats and Republicans" by unfairly preventing third-party candidates from withdrawing after receiving a party's nomination, id. at Page ID #11–15; and (3) a First Amendment compelled speech violation, arguing that by placing Plaintiff's name on the ballot, Defendant compels Plaintiff "to convey a false message to every citizen of Michigan that he is vying for their vote in this state," id. at Page ID #15–19. Plaintiff subsequently filed a motion for a preliminary injunction, requesting that Defendant remove his name from the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The district court denied Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction. In coming to its conclusion, the district court found that Plaintiff could not establish a likelihood of success inasmuch as Plaintiff's claims were likely barred by res judicata, laches, and the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. The court also explained that Plaintiff could not establish a likelihood of success on the merits, as each of the claims failed to present viable constitutional causes of action. Finally, the court concluded that Plaintiff could show neither irreparable harm nor a sufficient balancing of harms and public interest. Defendant now appeals the district court's decision.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

In deciding a motion for preliminary injunction, courts consider: "(1) whether the movant has a strong likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether the movant would suffer irreparable injury absent the injunction; (3) whether the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by the issuance of an injunction." Bays v. City of Fairborn, 668 F.3d 814, 818–19 (6th Cir. 2012). "A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy," and should "only be awarded upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief." James B. Oswald Co. v. Neate, 98 F.4th 666, 672 (6th Cir. 2024) (first quoting Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S. 674, 689–90 (2008); then quoting Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)). This Circuit reviews preliminary injunction orders "for abuse of discretion, subjecting factual findings to clear-error review and examining legal conclusions de novo." Daunt v. Benson, 956 F.3d 396, 406 (6th Cir. 2020) (citation omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. Analysis

Plaintiff's appeal fails because he cannot satisfy the first preliminary injunction element, likelihood of success on the merits, as each of his claims are barred by res judicata. Nor are the equities in his favor.

1. Likelihood of Success

Under the principle of res judicata, if a plaintiff's claims reach final judgment in one court, she cannot pursue the same causes of action in another. In other words, "a litigant generally does not get two bites at the apple." Talismanic Props., LLC v. City of Tipp City, 742 F. App'x 129, 131 (6th Cir. 2018). But that's what Plaintiff is attempting here.

"Federal courts must give the same preclusive effect to a state-court judgment as that judgment receives in the rendering state." Abbott v. Michigan, 474 F.3d 324, 330 (6th Cir. 2007) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1738). This Court looks to the state law where "Plaintiff's prior litigation took place"—in this case, Michigan, "which employs a 'broad view of res judicata.'" Buck v. Thomas M. Cooley L. Sch., 597 F.3d 812, 817 (6th Cir. 2010) (quoting In re MCI Telecomms. Compl., 596 N.W.2d 164, 183 (Mich. 1999)). In Michigan, res judicata "bars not only claims already litigated, but also every claim arising from the same transaction that the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, could have raised but did not." Adair v. State, 680 N.W.2d 386, 396 (Mich. 2004). Michigan's res judicata law "bars a second action on the same claim if (1) the prior action was decided on the merits, (2) both actions involve the same parties or their privies, and (3) the matter in the second case was, or could have been, resolved in the first." Mecosta Cnty. Med. Ctr. v. Metro. Grp. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 983 N.W.2d 401, 405 (Mich. 2022) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Res judicata applies to each of Plaintiff's claims, so the Michigan Supreme Court's judgment precludes Plaintiff's federal complaint. Regarding the first element of Michigan's res judicata standard, the prior action was decided on the merits. The Court of Claims issued an opinion dismissing the state complaint on the merits, and the Michigan Supreme Court affirmed that dismissal. The second element is also met, as both Plaintiff and Defendant were parties to the state action. The primary issue, therefore, centers on the third res judicata element: whether the claims in the federal complaint were, or could have been, resolved in the state court case.

Plaintiff could have brought his First Amendment compelled speech claim in the state court suit. Indeed, his state court complaint listed a compelled speech claim under the Michigan Constitution, stating that Defendant's actions compel "Plaintiff to convey a false message to every citizen of Michigan that he is vying for their vote in this state, when he is not." State Compl., R. 8-9, Page ID #188. Plaintiff evidently believed Defendant's conduct implicated his speech interests prior to filing suit in state court. Perplexingly, Plaintiff argues that he "did not raise any compelled speech claim in his state court action," though the record shows the opposite. Appellant's Br., ECF No. 6, 10. Even assuming he means he did not raise a federal compelled speech claim there, he does not argue that he was barred from doing so. This cause of action is barred by res judicata.

Plaintiff did not raise an Article II[1] or equal protection claim in state court. Nevertheless, he could have. See Adair, 680 N.W.2d at 396. The claims in this case clearly arise from the same transaction as the claims in the state court case: in both cases, Plaintiff alleged that Michigan unfairly placed his name on the ballot and he sought to have his name removed. The Article II count argues that the presence of Plaintiff's name on the ballot functions to confuse Michigan voters and "waste their votes," while the withdrawal deadlines are unreasonable and undermine the electoral process. Compl., R. 1, Page ID #6–11. Those precise arguments could have easily been made in state court; in fact, Plaintiff employs similar language in parts of his state court complaint, such as when he argues that votes for him are "wasted and in vain." State Compl., R. 8-9, Page ID #188. With respect to the equal protection count, Plaintiff argues that the state withdrawal deadlines unfairly benefit the major political parties, as minor party candidates are only permitted to withdraw prior to accepting a party's nomination. Before filing in state court, Plaintiff knew Defendant rejected his request to withdraw from the ballot, implicating the same harms he raises here. And like his First Amendment claim, he does not argue that he was barred from bringing these constitutional claims in state court either.

[1] Article II, Section 1 of the U.S. Constitution outlines the manner in which presidential elections must be conducted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff's arguments to the contrary are unavailing. Plaintiff argues that prior to September 9, 2024—the date on which Michigan recertified the names on its ballot and listed Plaintiff as a candidate—there was no Article II, equal protection, or First Amendment violation for him to complain of. Plaintiff explains that, prior to September 9, his name had not been placed on the ballot, so no constitutional violation had yet accrued. But by this logic, ballot-related constitutional claims are only ripe when ballots are finalized. That, however, is not an accurate rendering of the law. This Circuit has previously considered constitutional claims regarding a candidate's name on an election ballot where the claim was brought before ballots had been finalized. See, e.g., Rosen v. Brown, 970 F.2d 169, 173–74 (6th Cir. 1992) (addressing a challenge to the Ohio Secretary of State's decision, prior to ballots being finalized or printed, not to place a political party indicator next to a candidate's name on the ballot). Indeed, here, the alleged constitutional violations were ripe well before September 9, 2024. Plaintiff's constitutional claims became ripe in August, when Defendant declined to accept Plaintiff's withdrawal notice. It was at that point that Plaintiff became "threatened with 'imminent' injury in fact"—he became aware of Defendant's decision that his name should remain on the Michigan ballot. Carman v. Yellen, 112 F.4th 386, 400 (6th Cir. 2024) (quoting MedImmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 549 U.S. 118, 128 n.8 (2007)). Plaintiff, who filed his state complaint after Defendant's denial of his request to be removed from the ballot, thus had ample opportunity to make his constitutional claims in state court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff next argues that res judicata does not apply to his constitutional claims because, until the resolution of his state court action, the proper interpretation and application of the relevant Michigan state election law, Mich. Comp. Law § 168.686a, was "in flux." Appellant's Br., ECF No. 6, 8. On Plaintiff's telling, his claims did not accrue until the Michigan Supreme Court weighed in on the application of Michigan state election law and, accordingly, settled the relevant "factual and legal circumstances." But the notion that res judicata does not apply where the relevant legal question was "in flux" during the pendency of the first litigation would upend the doctrine. Res judicata "ensures the finality of decisions." Brown v. Felsen, 442 U.S. 127, 131 (1979). If a litigant could avoid res judicata and challenge a judicial decision in a subsequent litigation purely because the law was "in flux" during the first litigation, judicial decisions would seldom be final.

In support of his argument that res judicata does not apply, Plaintiff relies on this Court's decision in Rawe v. Liberty Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 462 F.3d 521, 529 (6th Cir. 2006). Plaintiff's own case cuts against him. In Rawe, after being injured in a car accident, a plaintiff filed suit, seeking to recover under two insurance policies. Id. at 523. The plaintiff's first lawsuit resolved when she accepted a settlement offer. Id. at 525. But an insurance company then refused to pay, so the plaintiff filed suit again, arguing that the insurance company had engaged in bad faith during the first lawsuit. Id. On appeal, this Court held that although the plaintiff now sought to recover under new theories of relief, several of her claims in the second lawsuit were barred by res judicata. We explained, "the fact that" the plaintiff "now asserts alternative theories of recovery . . . does not allow [her] to avoid claim preclusion, when those other theories could have been asserted" in her first legal action. Id. at 529 (citation omitted). The plaintiff could only seek to recover based on facts that had "not yet occurred" when she filed her first lawsuit. Id. Plaintiff's claims are barred for the same reason; Plaintiff points only to new legal theories, not to a change of facts that occurred after he filed his first lawsuit.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

At bottom, Plaintiff's current lawsuit is a re-run of his first. When Plaintiff filed his state court lawsuit in August, he sought to challenge the Defendant's decision—based on Defendant's interpretation of Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a—that he should remain listed as a candidate on Michigan's ballot. In this lawsuit, Plaintiff continues to seek to have his name removed from the ballot. The fact that Plaintiff has now identified new legal theories, or that the Michigan Supreme Court has now shed more light on the application of Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a, does not somehow allow Plaintiff a second bite at the apple.

Plaintiff's claims may also be precluded by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, which bars lower federal courts from reviewing cases that have been litigated and decided in state court. See RLR Invs., LLC v. City of Pigeon Forge, 4 F.4th 380, 385 (6th Cir. 2021). Yet considering that we dismiss this case on res judicata grounds, we do not find it necessary to reach the issue of whether Rooker-Feldman applies. See Arizona v. Biden, 40 F.4th 375, 390 (6th Cir. 2022) (considering whether the plaintiffs were likely to succeed on the merits of their claim when their standing was in doubt).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Other Factors

We also balance whether an injunction would protect Plaintiff from "irreparable injury," cause substantial harm to others, and serve the public interest. Bays, 668 F.3d at 818–19. Here, each factor cuts against Plaintiff.

First, consider Plaintiff's theory of injury. He argues that "once the ballots are printed" with his name on them, he will inevitably suffer an "injury to reputation," and his supporters will "be left confused and angry for casting an invalid vote" for him. But Plaintiff has not shown that removing his name from the ballot would prevent him from losing face in the eyes of his supporters. In another court, Plaintiff's campaign committee has asked to be kept on the ballot in New York, claiming irreparable injury if he's taken off. See Kennedy v. Berger, No. 24-2385, 2024 WL 4274191 (2d Cir. Sept. 18, 2024); Application for Emergency Injunction at 1–2, Kennedy v. Berger, No. 24A285 (U.S. Sept. 20, 2024). It is hard to imagine how excluding Plaintiff from the ballot could protect him from irreparable reputational damage in one state but cause the same damage in another. His arguments on irreparable harm are unpersuasive.

Next, consider the effects of an injunction on others. The Chair of the Natural Law Party, for which Plaintiff served as the Presidential nominee, asked the Michigan Board of Elections to prevent Plaintiff from withdrawing his name. In the Chair's words, "every election cycle is a challenge" for minor parties, and removing Plaintiff from the ballot would leave the Natural Law Party "in a bad position." R. 8-5, Page ID #13.

The public interest is perhaps the most paramount here. By the time the district court ruled, at least 45 of Michigan's counties, including its two largest ones, had begun to print ballots. Changing the ballot at this late a date would be even more disruptive. The ballots are now printed. The Michigan Constitution provides for absentee voting during the 40 days before an election—that started September 26, 2024. See Mich. Const. of 1963 art. 2, § 4(1)(h). Plaintiff does not explain how to unring the bell at this juncture without great harm to voting rights and the public's interest in fair and efficient election administration. The district court did not abuse its discretion by finding that an injunction at this late stage would disrupt the orderly administration of the upcoming election. Benisek v. Lamone, 585 U.S. 155, 160 (2018); Estill v. Cool, 295 F. App'x 25, 27 (6th Cir. 2008).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, this Court AFFIRMS the judgment of the district court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

McKEAGUE, Circuit Judge, dissenting. This case involves yet another attempt by a state election official to influence the upcoming presidential election by manipulating state election procedures. On August 23, 2024, Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. tried to withdraw his name from Michigan's general election ballot. Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson denied Kennedy's request, citing a state law that, in her view, prevented minor party candidates from withdrawing from the election. The parties then took their dispute to state court. While the litigation was pending, Secretary Benson sent the "call of the election" to county clerks across the state, pursuant to a deadline set by state law. The call of the election did not include Kennedy's name. Then, after the state court litigation concluded—and three days after the statutory deadline—Secretary Benson sent an "updated" call of the election that added Kennedy's name to the ballot. This action was unilateral, unauthorized, and likely illegal.

Kennedy now seeks injunctive relief in federal court, claiming that Secretary Benson's addition of his name to the ballot constituted compelled speech. Because Secretary Benson's actions violated Kennedy's First Amendment rights and serve no purpose other than to sow needless confusion in a presidential election by including a candidate who has no intention to serve, I respectfully dissent.

I.

The facts of this case are undisputed and summarized in the majority opinion. But the majority leaves out several facts that are critical to resolving this case.

The Natural Law Party nominated Kennedy as its candidate for President of the United States on April 17, 2024. On August 23, Kennedy suspended his presidential campaign. That same day, Kennedy delivered a withdrawal notice to the Michigan Bureau of Elections. The Bureau of Elections rejected Kennedy's notice and informed him that Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(2) prohibited minor party candidates from withdrawing. After Kennedy renewed his request to withdraw, the Bureau of Elections rejected him again, this time citing Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(4).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Kennedy then filed a lawsuit in state court, requesting mandamus, injunctive, and declaratory relief. The core of that case was a question of statutory interpretation: whether Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a prohibited Kennedy from withdrawing from the election. The Michigan Court of Claims held that Kennedy was not entitled to a writ of mandamus and dismissed Kennedy's complaint. At no point did the Court of Claims order Secretary Benson to keep Kennedy's name on the ballot.

On September 6, the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed the Court of Claims order and held that Kennedy was entitled to mandamus relief. Again, the decision was based on statutory interpretation. After surveying a web of cross-referencing state election laws, the court held that Kennedy had a "clear legal right" to remove his name from the ballot.

Under state law, Secretary Benson was required to distribute the "call of the election" to the clerk of each Michigan county "at least 60 days" before the election. Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648; Brater Aff., R.8-5 at PageID 157. This year, the deadline was September 6—the same day the Court of Appeals issued its order. Within hours after the Court of Appeals released its decision, Secretary Benson issued the call of the election; Kennedy was not listed as a candidate.

Three days after the deadline for the call of the election, the Michigan Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals. Like the Court of Claims, the Supreme Court did not order Secretary Benson to put Kennedy's name on the ballot. It did not conclude that state law prohibited minor party candidates from withdrawing. Instead, it held that Kennedy had not satisfied the criteria for obtaining mandamus relief. In short, the order simply ended the state court case.

But Secretary Benson wasn't done. That same day, her office sent an "updated candidate listing" to the county clerks. Kennedy's name reappeared on the ballot. To date, Secretary Benson has not identified any statute, rule, or court order that required her—or even permitted her—to add a candidate to the ballot after the statutory deadline.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

One day after Secretary Benson added Kennedy's name to the ballot, Kennedy filed this lawsuit. Kennedy raised three constitutional claims and sought a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction that would enjoin Secretary Benson from including his name on the ballot. In one of his claims, Kennedy alleged that Secretary Benson compelled his speech—and thus violated the First Amendment—by including his name on the ballot against his will. Critically, Kennedy's asserted injury arose not from Secretary Benson's refusal to accept his withdrawal in August, but from her decision to put his name back on the ballot on September 9—after the statutory deadline.

The district court denied Kennedy's motion for a preliminary injunction, and Kennedy timely appealed. See 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1).

II.

The district court denied Kennedy's motion for a preliminary injunction because it was procedurally barred and failed to establish a constitutional violation. The denial of a preliminary injunction is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. O'Toole v. O'Connor, 802 F.3d 783, 788 (6th Cir. 2015). When a preliminary injunction implicates the First Amendment, the district court's legal rulings—including its First Amendment conclusion—are reviewed de novo. Id. (citing Platt v. Bd. of Comm'rs on Grievances & Discipline of Ohio Sup. Ct., 769 F.3d 447, 454 (6th Cir. 2014)).

A. Procedural Bars

In denying Kennedy's motion for a preliminary injunction, the district court found that his claims are barred by (1) res judicata, (2) laches, and possibly (3) the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. The majority agrees that res judicata bars all three of Kennedy's claims. But in reaching these conclusions, the district court and the majority mischaracterize the source of Kennedy's injury.

1. Res Judicata

Res judicata does not bar Kennedy's claim. Res judicata prevents a party from relitigating a cause of action that was already decided by a prior court. Prewett v. Weems, 749 F.3d 454,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

462 (6th Cir. 2014). It bars claims that were actually raised or could have been raised in the prior proceeding. Id. (citing Gargallo v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 918 F.2d 658, 661 (6th Cir. 1990)). Federal courts must give a state-court judgment the same preclusive effect as would the state where the judgment was rendered. Migra v. Warren City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 465 U.S. 75, 81 (1984); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1738. In Michigan, "[r]es judicata bars a second action on the same claim if (1) the prior action was decided on the merits, (2) both actions involve the same parties or their privies, and (3) the matter in the second case was, or could have been, resolved in the first." Mecosta Cnty. Med. Ctr. v. Metro. Grp. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 983 N.W.2d 401, 405 (Mich. 2022) (citations omitted).

Here, the district court found that the Michigan Court of Claims already decided Kennedy's First Amendment claim. The timeline of events, however, belies this conclusion. In this case, the asserted injury that gave rise to Kennedy's First Amendment claim was not the Bureau of Elections' rejection of Kennedy's notice of withdrawal in August. Instead, the asserted injury was caused by Secretary Benson's decision to put Kennedy back on the ballot on September 9, three days after she distributed the call of the election without his name. The decision to alter the ballot occurred after the Michigan Supreme Court dismissed Kennedy's complaint with prejudice. Thus, Kennedy could not have raised his First Amendment claim during the state court litigation. See Adair v. State, 680 N.W.2d 386, 396 (Mich. 2004) (stating that res judicata bars claims "arising from the same transaction that the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, could have raised but did not").

The majority notes that Kennedy filed a similar "compelled speech claim" in state court. That may be so, but that alone does not trigger res judicata. Kennedy is not relitigating Secretary Benson's decision to reject his withdrawal notice in August. Rather, he is alleging that Secretary Benson violated his First Amendment rights by adding his name to the ballot without justification on September 9. Because res judicata only bars a subsequent action between the same parties when the "essential facts are identical," it does not apply to Kennedy's new claim. Dart v. Dart, 597 N.W.2d 82, 88 (Mich. 1999).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Laches

Kennedy's claim is also not barred by laches. Laches is the "negligent and unintentional failure to protect one's rights." E.E.O.C. v. Watkins Motor Lines, Inc., 463 F.3d 436, 439 (6th Cir. 2006) (citation omitted). It is an affirmative defense that consists of two elements: (1) unreasonable delay in asserting one's rights; and (2) a resulting prejudice to the defending party. Operating Eng'rs Loc. 324 Health Care Plan v. G & W Const. Co., 783 F.3d 1045, 1053 (6th Cir. 2015) (citation omitted).

Kennedy did not unreasonably delay in bringing his federal lawsuit. The asserted injury—Secretary Benson's decision to put Kennedy on the ballot after sending out the call of the election—occurred on September 9. See Brater Aff., R.8-5 at PageID 157. Kennedy filed his federal complaint on September 10. Because this one-day delay was not unreasonable, and Secretary Benson did not provide any evidence of prejudice, laches does not apply either.

3. The Rooker-Feldman Doctrine

The majority and the district court incorrectly conclude that Kennedy's claim "may also be precluded" by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. The doctrine prevents federal district courts from hearing "cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced." Brent v. Wayne Cnty. Dep't of Hum. Servs., 901 F.3d 656, 674 (6th Cir. 2018) (quoting Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 284 (2005)). To determine if the doctrine applies, courts look to the source of the asserted injury in the federal complaint. Berry v. Schmitt, 688 F.3d 290, 299 (6th Cir. 2012) (citation omitted). If the injury is caused by the defendant's actions, and not by the state court decision itself, then Rooker-Feldman does not apply. Brent, 901 F.3d at 674.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Secretary Benson—not any state court judgment—is the source of Kennedy's asserted injury. To be sure, if a state court had ordered Secretary Benson to keep Kennedy's name on the ballot, then this would be a different case entirely. But that's not what happened. The Court of Claims order did not require Secretary Benson to reject Kennedy's notice of withdrawal. See Mich. Ct. Cl. Order, R.1-4 at PageID 34. Similarly, the Michigan Supreme Court order did not demand that Secretary Benson take any action at all. Instead, the court merely held that Kennedy had not satisfied the requirements for mandamus relief. See Mich. Sup. Ct. Order, R.1-6 at PageID 38.

After the state case concluded on September 9, Secretary Benson "sent an updated candidate listing" to the county clerks. Brater Aff., R.8-5 at PageID 157. Secretary Benson claims that altering the ballot after the statutory deadline was "merely compliance with the Supreme Court's decision." Not so. This action was not compelled by any state court judgment, and it was not permitted by state law. See Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648 (1954). Thus, Rooker-Feldman is inapplicable, and there are no procedural bars to deciding Kennedy's claim on the merits.

B. Substantive Claims

Kennedy is entitled to a preliminary injunction. When deciding whether to grant a preliminary injunction, a court must consider four factors: (1) whether the plaintiff has a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether the plaintiff would suffer irreparable injury without an injunction; (3) whether the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by granting an injunction. Liberty Coins, LLC v. Goodman, 748 F.3d 682, 690 (6th Cir. 2014). In cases alleging a First Amendment violation, "the likelihood of success on the merits often will be the determinative factor." See Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 436 (6th Cir. 2012) (quoting Jones v. Caruso, 569 F.3d 258, 265 (6th Cir.2009)). This is because "[t]he loss of First Amendment freedoms…unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury." Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

In his complaint, Kennedy alleges that Secretary Benson's unilateral decision to put his name back on the ballot amounts to compelled speech, in violation of the First Amendment. Kennedy likely would succeed on this claim.

First Amendment protections encompass conduct that communicates a message. Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 403 (1989). Conduct falls within scope of the First Amendment if (1) the speaker has the intent to convey a particular message, and (2) the viewer would likely understand the message. Id. at 404. The First Amendment also guarantees the right to refrain from speaking. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714 (1977). The state infringes on this right when it compels an individual to engage in communicative conduct that she finds unacceptable. See W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

In the context of elections, restrictions on access to the ballot can implicate the First Amendment's protection of political expression. See Ill. State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173, 186 (1979) ("[A]n election campaign is a means of disseminating ideas as well as attaining political office… Overbroad restrictions on ballot access jeopardize this form of political expression."); Schmitt v. LaRose, 933 F.3d 628, 638 (6th Cir. 2019) ("[T]he Supreme Court has acknowledged that a person or party may express beliefs or ideas through a ballot.").

Undoubtedly, the state can place restrictions on ballot access, and courts have routinely upheld state laws that regulate how a candidate can get on the ballot. But that's not what happened here. Kennedy's asserted injury did not arise from Secretary Benson's invocation of Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a in August. It did not arise from any state law. Instead, his claim is based on Secretary Benson's decision to put him back on the ballot—after his name was removed, after the ballots were certified, and after the statutory deadline. To be sure, there is no precedent squarely holding that adding a person's name to the presidential ballot against their will violates the First Amendment. But then again, Secretary Benson's actions are unprecedented.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As it stands, the presidential ballot in Michigan conveys to the public that Kennedy is still seeking votes for the presidency. This is a message that Kennedy expressly disavowed on August 23, and yet it is now perpetuated by Secretary Benson's actions. Thus, her decision is subject to strict scrutiny, a test which she surely fails. See Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. FCC., 512 U.S. 622, 642 (1994) ("Laws that compel speakers to utter or distribute speech bearing a particular message are subject to…rigorous scrutiny.").

2. Remaining Preliminary Injunction Factors

While the likelihood of success is typically dispositive, the remaining preliminary injunction factors also support Kennedy's motion.

First, the balance of equities weighs against Secretary Benson. Under state law, Secretary Benson was required to deliver a list of candidates that will appear on the ballot for the general election on September 6. See Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648 (1954). And yet, without any explanation, her office sent the counties an "updated candidate listing" that included Kennedy's name on September 9. This decision was apropos of nothing.

Secretary Benson cannot use Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a as justification; the question here is not whether minor party candidates can withdraw from the election, but whether the Secretary of State has unchecked discretion to add candidates to the presidential ballot after the certification deadline. Even the district court acknowledged that this action "may have exceeded the bounds of her office." Order, R.14 at PageID 309.

Moreover, she cannot use the Michigan Supreme Court order as a shield. As described above, this was not an attempt to "compl[y] with the Supreme Court decision." Nor was her decision blessed by "judicial authority." The Michigan Supreme Court order simply found that Kennedy was not entitled to mandamus relief. It did not order her to alter the list of candidates that was already distributed to the county clerks. It did not set aside the statutory deadline. It did not justify a post hoc alteration of the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In short, Secretary Benson cannot point to any law that gave her the authority to withdraw, edit, and redistribute the list of presidential candidates after the statutory deadline.

Second, the public interest weighs in Kennedy's favor. "[P]rotecting public confidence in elections is deeply important—indeed, critical—to democracy." Democratic Exec. Comm. of Fla. v. Lee, 915 F.3d 1312, 1327 (11th Cir. 2019) (citing Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 197 (2008) (plurality)). Contrary to this fundamental truth, Secretary Benson used her office to intentionally alter the ballot of a presidential election. And for what purpose? What reason did Secretary Benson have for adding a withdrawn candidate to the ballot after the call of the election was distributed to the county clerks? Surely it was not to streamline logistics or minimize voter confusion. This court—and the public—is left searching for an answer.

On appeal, Secretary Benson notes that "a State has an interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Appellee Br. at 42 (quoting Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724, 733 (1974)). I agree. Yet her office intentionally altered the ballot by inserting a "frivolous" presidential candidate. As Kennedy correctly points out, Secretary Benson's decision will allow voters to select a candidate who does not want the job. In the voting booth, the new ballots will convey to voters that Kennedy is vying for the presidency. It suggests that a vote for Kennedy will not be a vote wasted. An inaccurate ballot will inevitably cause confusion, and it will undermine faith in this core democratic institution.

III.

If this court ordered the district court to grant Kennedy's motion preliminary injunction, a difficult question would arise: what is the proper remedy for this constitutional infirmity? It's undeniable that "[a] state's interest in proceeding with an election increases as time passes, decisions are made, and money is spent." Nader v. Blackwell, 230 F.3d 833, 835 (6th Cir. 2000). And Secretary Benson correctly notes that, as of September 26, registered Michigan voters are entitled to vote an absent ballot. See Mich. Const. 1963, Art. 2, § 4(1)(h).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But Secretary Benson can hardly complain about the "chaos" that would ensue from reprinting the ballots when her actions caused them to be misprinted. Kennedy filed his withdrawal notice on August 23, two weeks before the deadline for the call of the election. Instead of simply removing his name from the ballot, Secretary Benson repeatedly rejected Kennedy's requests. On the day of the statutory deadline, the state pressed on with its appeal to the Michigan Supreme Court. And then three days after the deadline, Secretary Benson inserted his name back onto the ballot. Apparently, some deadlines matter, and some do not.

***

Secretary Benson's decision to add Kennedy to the ballot was arbitrary. It was unchecked. It conveys a message that Kennedy does not wish to send. And it will cause voters to waste their fundamental right to vote. The ballots—with Kennedy's name on them—are already printed, and the election is underway. I can only hope that the weight of one state election official's thumb does not tip the scale of a national election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

No. 24-1799

FILED
Sep 27, 2024
KELLY L. STEPHENS, Clerk

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,

Plaintiff - Appellant,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Michigan Secretary of State,

Defendant - Appellee.

Before: CLAY, McKEAGUE, and BLOOMEKATZ, Circuit Judges.

JUDGMENT

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan at Detroit.

THIS CAUSE was heard on the record from the district court and was submitted on the briefs without oral argument.

IN CONSIDERATION THEREOF, it is ORDERED that the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

ENTERED BY ORDER OF THE COURT

Kelly L. Stephens

Kelly L. Stephens, Clerk

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/3/2024 8:37:52 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Filings for Tina Anderson

Yep, will do.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 3, 2024 4:31 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Filings for Tina Anderson

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Tina Anderson asked for these filings. Could pass these along to her for us? Thanks!

America First Legal's noncitizen voting challenge in Arizona: Strong Communities Found. of Arizona Inc. v. Richer, No. CV-24-02030-PHX-SMB (D. Ariz.)

- Amended complaint filed Sept. 3, 2024.
- Answer filed Sept. 17, 2024.

RNC and Trump campaign's noncitizen voting challenge in Nevada: Dagusen v. Aguilar, No. (D. Nev.).

- Complaint filed Sept. 11, 2024.

Election workers protection challenge in Nevada: Vanness v. Aguilar, No. 24-2910 (9th Cir.).

- District court's order granting Nevada's motion to dismiss filed Apr. 8, 2024.
- Opening brief filed July 12, 2024.
- Answering brief filed Aug. 15, 2024.
- Reply brief filed Sept. 6, 2024.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/3/2024 3:16:40 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Dax contact info and CA opinion

Thanks Dax. My work cell is 517 930 8841. If I do not answer that my personal cell is PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

Looking forward to working with you,

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 3, 2024 11:04 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Dax contact info and CA opinion

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged and confidential // Attorney-client communication

Here you all go!

Dax Goldstein (they/them) | Senior Counsel | Program Director, Election Protection (Legal)
States United Democracy Center
415.938.6481 | @statesunited
dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/8/2024 4:13:46 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Attorney Client communication-Attorney work product - resources

Sounds great, thank you!

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, October 8, 2024 11:42 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client communication-Attorney work product - resources

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Many thanks.

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Monday, October 7, 2024 9:11 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Attorney Client communication-Attorney work product - resources

Hi Dax and Jonathan,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/9/2024 1:22:43 AM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Attorney client privileged communication - MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons

Also it was filed today, my brain is mush.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, October 8, 2024 9:15 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney client privileged communication - MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks much! I was literally just looking for this. They attached a Court of Claims decision to their press release.

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, October 8, 2024 6:01:34 PM
To: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Attorney client privileged communication - MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons

Fyi, filed shortly before 5 pm yesterday.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Brandon L. Debus <BDebus@dickinson-wright.com>
Sent: Tuesday, October 8, 2024 4:48 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Good afternoon, Heather.

Please see the attached Verified Complaint which was filed today in the Court of Claims. I know it is not your usual practice, but I figured I would reach out and see if you are authorized to accept service.

Thanks

Brandon

Brandon L. Debus
Member
O:248-433-7674
BDebus@dickinsonwright.com

2600 West Big Beaver, Suite 300, Troy MI, 48084

The information contained in this e-mail, including any attachments, is confidential, intended only for the named recipient(s), and may be legally privileged. If you are not the intended recipient, please delete the e-mail and any attachments, destroy any printouts that you may have made and notify us immediately by return e-mail. Neither this transmission nor any attachment shall be deemed for any purpose to be a "signature" or "signed" under any electronic transmission acts, unless otherwise specifically stated herein. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/9/2024 1:01:34 AM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Attorney client privileged communication - MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons
Attachments: Verified Complaint.pdf

Fyi, filed shortly before 5 pm yesterday.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Brandon L. Debus <BDebus@dickinson-wright.com>
Sent: Tuesday, October 8, 2024 4:48 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: MRP v. Benson - Verified Complaint and Summons

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good afternoon, Heather.

Please see the attached Verified Complaint which was filed today in the Court of Claims. I know it is not your usual practice, but I figured I would reach out and see if you are authorized to accept service.

Thanks

Brandon

Brandon L. Debus
Member
O:248-433-7674
BDebus@dickinsonwright.com

2600 West Big Beaver, Suite 300, Troy MI, 48084

The information contained in this e-mail, including any attachments, is confidential, intended only for the named recipient(s), and may be legally privileged. If you are not the intended recipient, please delete the e-mail and any attachments, destroy any printouts that you may have made and notify us immediately by return e-mail. Neither this transmission nor any attachment shall be deemed for any purpose to be a "signature" or "signed" under any electronic transmission acts, unless otherwise specifically stated herein. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Approved, SCAO

Original - Court
1st copy - Defendant

2nd copy - Plaintiff
3rd copy - Return

STATE OF MICHIGAN JUDICIAL DISTRICT JUDICIAL CIRCUIT COUNTY	SUMMONS	CASE NO. 24 - -

Court address

Michigan Court of Claims, 925 W. Ottawa Street, Lansing, MI 48909

Court telephone no.

517-373-0807

Plaintiff's name, address, and telephone no.		Defendant's name, address, and telephone no.
MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE and CINDY BERRY	v	JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State 430 W. Allegan St. Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor Lansing, MI 48918
Plaintiff's attorney, bar no., address, and telephone no. Brandon L. Debus (P81159) Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312) Dickinson Wright PLLC 350 S. Main Street, Suite 300 Ann Arbor, MI 48104

Instructions: Check the items below that apply to you and provide any required information. Submit this form to the court clerk along with your complaint and, if necessary, a case inventory addendum (MC 21). The summons section will be completed by the court clerk.

Domestic Relations Case

- ☐ There are no pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.
- ☐ There is one or more pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint. I have separately filed a completed confidential case inventory (MC 21) listing those cases.
- ☐ It is unknown if there are pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.

Civil Case

- ☐ This is a business case in which all or part of the action includes a business or commercial dispute under MCL 600.8035.
- ☐ MDHHS and a contracted health plan may have a right to recover expenses in this case. I certify that notice and a copy of the complaint will be provided to MDHHS and (if applicable) the contracted health plan in accordance with MCL 400.106(4).
- ☑ There is no other pending or resolved civil action arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as alleged in the complaint.
- ☐ A civil action between these parties or other parties arising out of the transaction or occurrence alleged in the complaint has been previously filed in ☐ this court, ☐ _____ Court, where it was given case number _____ and assigned to Judge _____.

The action ☐ remains ☐ is no longer pending. Those actions have been consolidated under 24-000115-MB

Summons section completed by court clerk. SUMMONS

NOTICE TO THE DEFENDANT: In the name of the people of the State of Michigan you are notified:

1. You are being sued.
2. YOU HAVE 21 DAYS after receiving this summons and a copy of the complaint to file a written answer with the court and serve a copy on the other party or take other lawful action with the court (28 days if you were served by mail or you were served outside of Michigan).
3. If you do not answer or take other action within the time allowed, judgment may be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint.
4. If you require accommodations to use the court because of a disability or if you require a foreign language interpreter to help you fully participate in court proceedings, please contact the court immediately to make arrangements.

Issue date	Expiration date*	Court clerk

*This summons is invalid unless served on or before its expiration date. This document must be sealed by the seal of the court.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Summons (3/23) Case No. 24 -

PROOF OF SERVICE

TO PROCESS SERVER: You must serve the summons and complaint and file proof of service with the court clerk before the expiration date on the summons. If you are unable to complete service, you must return this original and all copies to the court clerk.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE / NONSERVICE

☐ I served ☐ personally ☐ by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, and delivery restricted to the the addressee (copy of return receipt attached) a copy of the summons and the complaint, together with the attachments listed below, on:

☐ I have attempted to serve a copy of the summons and complaint, together with the attachments listed below, and have been unable to complete service on:

Name	Date and time of service
Place or address of service
Attachments (if any)

☐ I am a sheriff, deputy sheriff, bailiff, appointed court officer or attorney for a party.

☐ I am a legally competent adult who is not a party or an officer of a corporate party. I declare under the penalties of perjury that this certificate of service has been examined by me and that its contents are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.

Service fee	Miles traveled	Fee
$		$
Incorrect address fee	Miles traveled	Fee	TOTAL FEE
$		$	$

Signature

Name (type or print)

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE

I acknowledge that I have received service of a copy of the summons and complaint, together with

Attachments (if any) on Date and time

Signature on behalf of

Name (type or print)

MCL 600.1910, MCR 2.104, MCR 2.105

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Approved, SCAO

Original - Court
1st copy - Defendant

2nd copy - Plaintiff
3rd copy - Return

STATE OF MICHIGAN JUDICIAL DISTRICT JUDICIAL CIRCUIT COUNTY	SUMMONS	CASE NO. 24 - -

Court address

Michigan Court of Claims, 925 W. Ottawa Street, Lansing, MI 48909

Court telephone no.

517-373-0807

Plaintiff's name, address, and telephone no.		Defendant's name, address, and telephone no.
MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE and CINDY BERRY	v	JONATHAN BRATER, in his official capacity as Director of Elections 430 W. Allegan St. Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor Lansing, MI 48918
Plaintiff's attorney, bar no., address, and telephone no. Brandon L. Debus (P81159) Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312) Dickinson Wright PLLC 350 S. Main Street, Suite 300 Ann Arbor, MI 48104

Instructions: Check the items below that apply to you and provide any required information. Submit this form to the court clerk along with your complaint and, if necessary, a case inventory addendum (MC 21). The summons section will be completed by the court clerk.

Domestic Relations Case

☐ There are no pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.

☐ There is one or more pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint. I have separately filed a completed confidential case inventory (MC 21) listing those cases.

☐ It is unknown if there are pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.

Civil Case

☐ This is a business case in which all or part of the action includes a business or commercial dispute under MCL 600.8035.

☐ MDHHS and a contracted health plan may have a right to recover expenses in this case. I certify that notice and a copy of the complaint will be provided to MDHHS and (if applicable) the contracted health plan in accordance with MCL 400.106(4).

☑ There is no other pending or resolved civil action arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as alleged in the complaint.

☐ A civil action between these parties or other parties arising out of the transaction or occurrence alleged in the complaint has been previously filed in ☐ this court, ☐ _____ Court, where it was given case number _____ and assigned to Judge _____.

The action ☐ remains ☐ is no longer pending. Those actions have been consolidated under 24-000115-MB

Summons section completed by court clerk. SUMMONS

NOTICE TO THE DEFENDANT: In the name of the people of the State of Michigan you are notified:

1. You are being sued.
2. YOU HAVE 21 DAYS after receiving this summons and a copy of the complaint to file a written answer with the court and serve a copy on the other party or take other lawful action with the court (28 days if you were served by mail or you were served outside of Michigan).
3. If you do not answer or take other action within the time allowed, judgment may be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint.
4. If you require accommodations to use the court because of a disability or if you require a foreign language interpreter to help you fully participate in court proceedings, please contact the court immediately to make arrangements.

Issue date	Expiration date*	Court clerk

*This summons is invalid unless served on or before its expiration date. This document must be sealed by the seal of the court.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Summons (3/23) Case No. 24 -

PROOF OF SERVICE

TO PROCESS SERVER: You must serve the summons and complaint and file proof of service with the court clerk before the expiration date on the summons. If you are unable to complete service, you must return this original and all copies to the court clerk.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE / NONSERVICE

☐ I served ☐ personally ☐ by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, and delivery restricted to the the addressee (copy of return receipt attached) a copy of the summons and the complaint, together with the attachments listed below, on:

☐ I have attempted to serve a copy of the summons and complaint, together with the attachments listed below, and have been unable to complete service on:

Name	Date and time of service
Place or address of service
Attachments (if any)

☐ I am a sheriff, deputy sheriff, bailiff, appointed court officer or attorney for a party.

☐ I am a legally competent adult who is not a party or an officer of a corporate party. I declare under the penalties of perjury that this certificate of service has been examined by me and that its contents are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.

Service fee	Miles traveled	Fee
$		$
Incorrect address fee	Miles traveled	Fee	TOTAL FEE
$		$	$

Signature

Name (type or print)

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE

I acknowledge that I have received service of a copy of the summons and complaint, together with

Attachments (if any) on Date and time

Signature on behalf of

Name (type or print)

MCL 600.1910, MCR 2.104, MCR 2.105

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, and CINDY BERRY, Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State, and JONATHAN BRATER, in his official capacity as Director of Elections,

Defendants.

Case No. 24-_____-MZ

Hon. _____

EXPEDITED RELIEF UNDER MCR 2.605 REQUESTED

Brandon L. Debus (P81159)
Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
350 S. Main Street, Ste 300
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(734) 623-1672
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
dziegler@dickinsonwright.com

Charles R. Spies (P83260)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
1825 Eye Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
202-466-5964
cspies@dickinsonwright.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs MRP and Cindy Berry

Jonathan B. Koch (P80408)
Drew W. Broaddus (P64658)
Smith Haughey Rice & Roegge
100 Monroe Center NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
(616) 774-8000
616-774-2461 (fax)
jkoch@shrr.com
dbroaddus@shrr.com
Attorneys for Plaintiff RNC

_____/

VERIFIED COMPLAINT
FOR EXPEDITED DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF UNDER MCR 2.605

There is no other pending or resolved civil action arising out of the transaction or occurrence alleged in the complaint.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOW COME Plaintiffs the Michigan Republican Party, the Republican National Committee, and Cindy Berry, by and through their undersigned counsel, and state as follows in support of their Verified Complaint against Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Director of Elections Jonathan Brater (collectively, the "Secretary"):

INTRODUCTION

1. The Michigan Constitution allows Michigan residents—and only Michigan residents—to vote. See Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1 ("Every citizen of the United States who has attained the age of 21 years, who has resided in this state six months, and who meets the requirements of local residence provided by law, shall be an elector and qualified to vote in any election except as otherwise provided in this constitution. The legislature shall define residence for voting purposes.") (emphasis added).

2. Thus, while the right to vote in Michigan is "an absolute constitutional right," "certain requirements must be met before an individual can exercise his or her fundamental political right to vote." Promote the Vote v. Sec'y of State, 333 Mich. App. 93, 120, 958 N.W.2d 861, 877 (2020).

3. Congress enacted the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act, 52 U.S.C. § 20301, et seq. ("UOCAVA"), to ensure that members of the United States Armed Forces and other American citizens who live outside America's territory may register and vote in federal elections. UOCAVA provides that a member of the armed forces or an overseas citizen may vote in the state in which they previously resided. See 52 U.S.C. § 20301(1), (5). UOCAVA has the effect of partially preempting State residency requirements for some overseas voters.

4. Despite the Constitution's unambiguous adjure that no person may vote in Michigan unless they reside in Michigan, the Secretary of State has distributed guidance that "A

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state." Election Officials Manual, Chapter 7: Military and Overseas Voters, Federal Voter Registration and Absent Voting Programs guidance at 3 ("Chapter 7") (Attached as Exhibit A) (emphasis added).

5. On its face, Chapter 7 extends voter qualifications to individuals who have never resided in Michigan. As a result, certain people who have never resided in Michigan (or perhaps anywhere else in this country) are registering to vote and voting in Michigan elections. Michigan election officials have registered persons to vote who have never resided in Michigan and have allowed them to vote in Michigan's state and federal elections.

6. This is a violation of the Michigan Constitution, and, as applied to Plaintiffs, it dilutes their votes and harms their organizational missions. Moreover, Chapter 7 subjects Cindy Berry to competing obligations. On the one hand, she takes an oath to uphold the Michigan Constitution; on the other hand, she is bound by the Secretary's instructions. See MCL 168.765a(17) ("The secretary of state shall develop instructions consistent with this act . . . The instructions developed under this subsection are binding on the operation of an absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board used in an election conducted by a county, city, or township."). Plaintiffs thus seek declaratory relief that Chapter 7 misstates the law and that under the Michigan Constitution, only persons who reside in Michigan may vote in Michigan.

PARTIES, JURISDICTION, AND VENUE

7. Plaintiff the Michigan Republican Party ("MRP") is a "major political party" as that term is defined by the Michigan Election Law. See MCL 168.16. MRP maintains headquarters at 520 Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan 48912. Among its general purposes, MRP promotes and assists Republican candidates who seek election or appointment to partisan federal, state, and local office in Michigan. MRP works to further its purpose by, inter alia, devoting substantial resources toward educating, mobilizing, assisting, and turning out voters in Michigan. To that end, MRP has made significant contributions and expenditures in support of Republican candidates up and down the ballot in Michigan in past election cycles, and is doing so again in 2024. Further, MRP works to ensure that elections in Michigan are conducted in a free, fair, and transparent manner, and works to protect the fundamental constitutional right to vote of its members and its candidates, and to promote their participation in the political process. MRP brings this action on behalf of itself, its members, and its candidates. As a result, Plaintiff MRP has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in this litigation to protect not only its own rights, but those of its candidates and its members.[1]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

8. Plaintiff the Republican National Committee (the "RNC") is the national committee of the Republican Party as defined by 52 U.S.C. § 30101(14), with its principal place of business at 310 First Street, S.E., Washington D.C., 20003. The RNC manages the Republican Party's business at the national level, including the development and promotion of the Republican Party's national platform and election strategies. The RNC supports Republican candidates for public office at the federal and state levels across the country, including those on the ballot in Michigan's forthcoming November 5, 2024 general election. The RNC also assists state parties throughout the country, including Plaintiff MRP, to educate, mobilize, assist, and turn out voters, and also by supporting MRP's efforts to ensure that elections in Michigan are conducted in a free, fair, and transparent manner, and to protect the fundamental constitutional right to vote of the RNC's members and its candidates. The RNC made significant contributions and expenditures in support of Republican candidates up and down the ballot and in mobilizing and educating voters in Michigan in past election cycles, and is doing so again in 2024. The RNC has clear and obvious interests in the laws and rules under which it, and those it represents and supports, exercise their constitutional rights to vote and to participate in elections. The RNC brings this action on behalf of itself, its members, and its candidates. As a result, Plaintiff RNC has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in this litigation to protect not only its own rights, but those of its candidates and its members.[2]

[1] See Affidavit of Tyson Shepard, the Executive Director of the MRP (Attached as Exhibit B).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9. Both as representatives of their candidates and their voters, and as organizations in their own right, the Republican Committees (i.e., Plaintiffs MRP and RNC) each have a substantial interest in getting Republican candidates elected to office—an interest that is unique and separate from any held by the public at large. See Ex. B; Ex. C. That includes ensuring that Republicans can seek office in a fair, competitive environment where the Michigan Constitution is enforced. Given that the relief sought here would, among other things, enjoin the application of the current version of the Secretary's Chapter 7 guidance in advance of the November 5, 2024 general election and would also result in judicial declarations that clerks must comply with Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1 and 52 U.S.C. § 20301 et seq., the interests of RNC and MRP in preventing an illegally structured and anti-competitive election environment is sufficient under MCR 2.605. See Ex. B; Ex. C.

10. Counting ballots of ineligible overseas voters who never resided in Michigan will result in an inaccurate tally of votes. Moreover, overseas voters overwhelmingly support Democratic candidates.[3] Ex. C. Thus, counting the ballots of ineligible overseas voters will

---

[2] See Affidavit of Christina Norton, the Executive Director of Election Integrity Operations at the RNC (Attached as Exhibit C).

[3] See e.g., https://www.yahoo.com/news/could-overseas-voters-ticket-winning-202651757.html?guccounter=1 (leader of Democratic efforts to engage overseas voters stating "something like 80 percent of Americans abroad vote Democrat").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disproportionally harm Republican candidates and undermine the Republican candidates' rights to a fair and accurate electoral count. It will also dilute the lawful votes cast by Plaintiffs' members and voters.

11. The Republican Committees also spend significant resources to preserve voter confidence and turnout. These efforts are harmed when voters see that election officials accept absent voter ballots without verifying the residency of the voter as required under the Michigan Constitution.

12. Plaintiff Cindy Berry serves as the Clerk for the Township of Chesterfield and resides in Macomb County. Berry has sworn to uphold the Constitution in the execution of her duties as Chesterfield Township clerk. She is also bound Chapter 7. Accordingly, Berry has attempted to reconcile Chapter 7 with Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1 but finds that she cannot. As a local clerk, Berry seeks a declaration regarding whether clerks and election inspectors are, and will continue to be, subject to the Secretary's instructions including—but not limited to—her instruction that electors who have not ever resided in Michigan—and who are outside of 52 U.S.C. § 20301's preemptive scope—may vote. Without relief from this Court, Berry will have to choose which contradictory, binding authority she will follow.[4]

13. Plaintiff Berry is also a registered voter that cast a ballot for the February 2024 presidential primary election through Michigan's early voting process, voted by absentee ballot in the August 6, 2024, primary election, and intends to vote by absentee ballot in future elections. Clerk Berry has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in ensuring that her vote counts and is not diluted.

[4] See Affidavit of Plaintiff Berry, Clerk of Chesterfield Township (Attached as Exhibit D).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

14. Defendant Jocelyn Benson is Michigan's Secretary of State and is being sued in her official capacity. Secretary Benson is the "chief elections officer of the state" responsible for overseeing the conduct of Michigan elections, and has "supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the [Michigan Election Law]." MCL 168.21. When the Secretary instructs clerks on how to apply the law, the clerks are bound to follow her instructions. See MCL 168.765a(17) ("The secretary of state shall develop instructions consistent with this act . . . The instructions developed under this subsection are binding on the operation of an absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board used in an election conducted by a county, city, or township.").

15. Defendant Jonathan Brater is Michigan's Director of Elections and is being sued in his official capacity.

16. This Court has exclusive jurisdiction to "hear and determine any claim or demand, statutory or constitutional . . . or any demand for . . . equitable[ ] or declaratory relief or any demand for an extraordinary writ against the state or any of its departments or officers notwithstanding another law that confers jurisdiction of the case in the circuit court." MCL 600.6419(1)(a). Additionally, this Court has authority to grant injunctive and declaratory relief under MCR 3.310 and MCR 2.605 respectively.

17. Because Plaintiffs raise constitutional claims and ask this Court to order equitable and declaratory relief against Defendants, this Court has exclusive jurisdiction to hear these claims. For the same reason, venue is appropriate in this Court. See MCL 600.6419(1)(a), MCR 3.310, and MCR 2.605.

18. An actual controversy is present here. The Constitution provides: "Every citizen of the United States . . . who has resided in this state six months . . . shall be an elector and qualified to vote in any election[.]" Meanwhile, in Chapter 7 of her Election Officials Manual, the Secretary has instructed clerks that "[a] United States citizen who has never resided in the United States . . . is eligible to vote in Michigan[.]" Ex. A at 3. The Constitution and the Secretary's instruction are incompatible. And Plaintiffs are harmed by the Secretary's unlawful instruction. The Secretary's instruction injures Plaintiffs where their members and candidates have their votes diluted by ballots which, under the terms of the Michigan Constitution, ought not be accepted. See Ex. B; Ex. C. The Secretary's instruction also injures Plaintiff Berry, who is subjected to competing legal duties. Unless this Court grants declaratory relief, Plaintiff Berry will be forced to apply either the Constitution or the Secretary's instructions. Ex. D.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

19. The injuries to Plaintiffs are at once completed and ongoing. See Ex. B; Ex. C; Ex. D. Absent voting has already begun. Thus, election officials are already accepting ballots from overseas voters that are constitutionally deficient. Moreover, absent relief from this Court, these injuries will recur indefinitely because local election officials will continue accepting and tabulating ballots that are constitutionally deficient; their error is caused at least in part by the incomplete direction set forth in Chapter 7. See Ex. B; Ex. C; Ex. D. However, because no absent voter ballots have been tabulated, there is still time to address these problems. Therefore, a decision from this Court will redress the violation of Plaintiffs' rights under the Michigan Constitution and will also guide Plaintiffs' future conduct in this regard for the November 2024 general election and beyond.

LEGAL AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

20. The Constitution provides: "Every citizen of the United States who has attained the age of 21 years, who has resided in this state six months, and who meets the requirements of local residence provided by law, shall be an elector and qualified to vote in any election except as otherwise provided in this constitution. The legislature shall define residence for voting purposes." Const. 1963, art. 2, §1. The Constitution thus creates a residency requirement, holding that only those who have "resided in this state six months" are eligible to vote. Separately, the Constitution instructs the Legislature to define the meaning of "residence" in a Michigan locality.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

21. To provide for the registration and voting by absent uniformed service members and overseas voters, the United States Congress enacted UOCAVA, 52 U.S.C. § 20302(a)(1) et seq., which provides that "Each State shall . . . permit absent uniformed services voters and overseas voters to use absentee registration procedures and to vote by absentee ballot in general, special, primary, and runoff elections for Federal office." UOCAVA defines "Absent uniformed services voters" to mean:

> (A) a member of a uniformed service on active duty who, by reason of such active duty, is absent from the place of residence where the member is otherwise qualified to vote;
>
> (B) a member of the merchant marine who, by reason of service in the merchant marine, is absent from the place of residence where the member is otherwise qualified to vote; and
>
> (C) a spouse or dependent of a member referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) who, by reason of the active duty or service of the member, is absent from the place of residence where the spouse or dependent is otherwise qualified to vote; [52 U.S.C. § 20310(1).]

And it defines "Overseas voter" as:

> (A) an absent uniformed services voter who, by reason of active duty or service is absent from the United States on the date of the election involved;
>
> (B) a person who resides outside the United States and is qualified to vote in the last place in which the person was domiciled before leaving the United States; or
>
> (C) a person who resides outside the United States and (but for such residence) would be qualified to vote in the last place in which the person was domiciled before leaving the United States. [52 U.S.C. § 20310(5).]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

22. UOCAVA preempts Michigan constitutional and statutory law to the extent they require an elector to presently reside in Michigan to vote. But importantly, UOCAVA does not overrule all residency requirements. To wit, 52 U.S.C. § 20310(1) defines "[a]bsent uniformed services voters" as persons who are "absent from the[ir] place of residence where the member is otherwise qualified to vote," meaning that the member must actually have a place of residence in the United States. (Emphasis added); see also, Merriam-Webster's Dictionary (2019) (defining absent as "not present at a usual or expected place."). Put another way, to be "absent" from a place requires that the person have either (A) been at the place previously or, at the very least, (B) may be expected to have been in that place. Likewise, 52 U.S.C. § 20310(1)'s other two definitions of "[a]bsent uniformed services voters" require that the person "is absent from the place of residence where the member is otherwise qualified to vote" or "is absent from the place of residence where the spouse or dependent is otherwise qualified to vote." Thus, under any definition of "[a]bsent uniformed services voters," the voter must have resided at one time in a place from which they are now absent.

23. In 52 U.S.C. § 20310(5)'s definition of "overseas voter," an overseas voter is either "an absent uniformed services voter who, by reason of active duty or service is absent from the United States"—and so, as explained above, is required to have been a resident in Michigan at some time—or "a person who resides outside the United States and is qualified to vote in the last place in which the person was domiciled before leaving the United States"—so again, a person who must have been qualified to vote in Michigan before leaving the United States—or "a person who resides outside the United States and (but for such residence) would be qualified to vote in the last place in which the person was domiciled before leaving the United States"—again requiring that the person would have been able to vote in the place they were last domiciled. This third definition would apply to a person who resided in Michigan as a 17 year old, moved overseas, and then sought to vote after their 18th birthday. In that situation, because they reached the age of majority and "would be qualified to vote in the last place in which the person was domiciled before leaving the United States," they may still vote in Michigan.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

24. Put simply, UOCAVA does not in toto preempt Michigan's residency requirement. Instead, it simply shapes Michigan's residency requirement to say that persons who were residents before going overseas must still be allowed to vote, assuming all other qualifications are met. That is, UOCAVA only preempts Michigan's residency requirement to the extent that overseas voters who were last domiciled in Michigan must be allowed to register to vote in this state. In other words, UOCAVA does not say that persons who never resided in Michigan must be allowed to vote regardless of constitutional or statutory law to the contrary.

25. In response to UOCAVA, the Michigan Legislature enacted MCL 168.759a(3), which provides that "[a] spouse or dependent of an overseas voter who is a citizen of the United States, is accompanying that overseas voter, and is not a qualified and registered elector anywhere else in the United States, may apply for an absent voter ballot even though the spouse or dependent is not a qualified elector of a city or township of this state." MCL 168.759a(3) is contrary to the Constitution, which requires that every voter be a resident. Further, MCL 168.759a(3) is broader than UOCAVA, which simply requires that voters who were residents of Michigan before going overseas be permitted to vote in Michigan. In short, then, MCL 168.759a(3) is contrary to a valid, in-force provision of the Michigan Constitution that has not been preempted by any federal law. Ergo, MCL 168.759a(3) is unconstitutional and cannot support the Secretary's instructions.

UOCAVA Does Not Preempt State
Residency Requirement for People Who Have Never Resided in Michigan

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

26. Federal law partially preempts the Michigan Constitution's residency requirement for overseas voters to whom UOCAVA provides the right to vote. But as discussed in paragraphs 18-23 above, UOCAVA does not completely preempt the Constitution's requirement that a voter reside in Michigan. Instead, UOCAVA simply states that a person may continue to vote in Michigan if, they previously resided in Michigan and are otherwise permitted to vote.

27. In both form and function, UOCAVA only extends voter eligibility; it does not create a new class of voters who may vote in Michigan even though they have never resided here. Consequently, UOCAVA does not preempt the Constitution's requirement that an elector must be—or, at the very least, must have been—a resident of Michigan in order to register to vote and cast a ballot.

Defendants' Election Official's Manual
Chapter 7 violates the Michigan Constitution

28. Pursuant to her duty to exercise "supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the [Michigan Election Law]," MCL 168.21, the Secretary instructs clerks that "A United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state." Ex. A at 3. The Secretary's instructions are binding on all city and township clerks, to include Plaintiff Berry. See MCL 168.765a(17).

29. The Secretary's instructions are also directly contrary to the Constitution, which limits the franchise to "[e]very citizen . . . who has resided in this state six months." Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1. While it is true that UOCAVA has preempted state laws that prevent "overseas voters" and "absent uniformed services voter[s]"—as those terms are defined by UOCAVA—from voting, UOCAVA's preemption does not extend to persons who have never resided in Michigan. See 52

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S.C. § 20310(1) and (5). Again, UOCAVA carefully defined the terms "absent uniformed services voters" and "overseas voters" to only include persons who at one time resided in a state. Relevant here, those voters who at one point resided in Michigan.

30. Moreover, the Secretary cannot defend her unconstitutional instruction by arguing that MCL 168.759a(3) permits a spouse or dependent of an overseas voter to vote "even though the spouse or dependent is not a qualified elector of a city or township of this state." For one, MCL 168.759(3) goes further than UOCAVA requires, so it does not have the force of federal preemption. For another, it is elementary that statutory law may not override or ignore constitutional law. To the extent there is a conflict between statutory and constitutional law, the statutory law must give way. And when faced with two incompatible laws, the Secretary must enforce the constitutional law over the unconstitutional statutory law. Here, the Secretary has ignored the Constitution in favor of enforcing MCL 168.759a(3). She has done so in error. By sending ballots to and accepting ballots from overseas voters who have never resided in Michigan, Defendants are facilitating ongoing violations of the Michigan Constitution.

31. As applied to Plaintiff Berry and the Republican Committees' members, the Secretary's instructions have impermissibly diluted their votes, and as applied to all Plaintiffs, it infringes on their right to a fair and constitutional election. Ex. B; Ex. C; Ex. D. The instructions also place Plaintiff Berry at a crossroads; either she must follow the Constitution, or she must follow the conflicting requirements of the Secretary's instruction. Ex. D. Accordingly, Plaintiffs seek a declaration from this Court clarifying the law and holding that the Secretary's Instructions—specifically the above-referenced section of Chapter 7, page 3—is unconstitutional.

COUNT I – VIOLATION OF THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTION

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

32. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

33. Under MCR 2.605(A)(1), "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment[.]"

34. Michigan's Constitution provides that only a person who meets the requirements to vote and "has resided in this state six months" is an elector that has the absolute right to cast a ballot in all local, state, and federal elections. Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1. Indeed, Michigan courts have noted that in Michigan the right to vote is "an absolute constitutional right," but "certain requirements must be met before an individual can exercise his or her fundamental political right to vote." Promote the Vote, 333 Mich. App. at 120. As noted above, UOCAVA preempts the Constitution's residency requirement only to the extent that individuals who reside overseas but last resided in Michigan must still be allowed to register to vote and cast a ballot in Michigan.

35. City and township clerks—and the Secretary of State—are also bound to uphold the Michigan Constitution. See Ex. D.

36. Chapter 7 of the Secretary's Election Officials Manual conflicts with Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1. Specifically, the Secretary has instructed clerks that "[a] United States citizen who has never resided in the United States . . . is eligible to vote in Michigan." Ex A at 3. The Secretary's instruction binds clerks. See MCL 168.765a(17).

37. The dissonance between the Secretary's guidance and the Constitution has created confusion, disorder, and strife because city and township clerks are subjected to two incompatible duties. Put simply, the Secretary would have clerks accept ballots from persons who reside overseas and who have never been residents of Michigan, while the Constitution would have them deny applications to register to vote and, by extension, reject ballots cast by persons who have never resided in Michigan because those individuals are constitutionally ineligible to vote in Michigan.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

38. Injunctive and declaratory relief under MCR 2.605 are necessary to remedy the confusion. Without declaratory relief from this Court, Plaintiffs will be stuck with the Secretary's facially unconstitutional instructions, and Plaintiff Berry will be forced to choose between enforcing the Constitution or the Secretary's instructions. See Ex. B; Ex. C; Ex D.

39. A current and ripe case or controversy between the parties is therefore clearly present here. And declaratory relief is proper because Plaintiffs lack an adequate remedy at law to enforce the Michigan Constitution's express residency requirements, which have been and will continue to be violated by the unlawful acts such as are caused by the Secretary's Instructions.

40. Finally, the balance of harms weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. To not enjoin unlawful directives such as the Secretary's instructions would allow a single state officer to circumvent (and essentially amend) valid and enforceable constitutional mandates on the same subject. That is certainly not in the public interest, which expects its public officials to follow the law. Nor would the public be harmed by such relief as they too have an interest in ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections and that each absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter as required by the Michigan Constitution.

REQUEST FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully requests that this Honorable Court order "a speedy hearing" of this action and "advance it on the calendar" as provided under MCR 2.605(D), and that it issue the following relief:

A. Declare that the Secretary's instruction to clerks in her Election Officials Manual,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chapter 7 at page 3 that "A United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state" is unconstitutional because it conflicts with Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1 and, therefore, is null and void;

B. Order the Secretary to rescind her unconstitutional instruction found in the Election Officials Manual, Chapter 7: Military and Overseas Voters, Federal Voter Registration and Absent Voting Programs instruction at page 3, and direct the Secretary to circulate, electronically or otherwise, a revised copy of Chapter 7 of the Election Officials Manual that complies with Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1, and to issue a bulletin to clerks noting the specific, offensive paragraph that has been excised;

C. Enjoin the Secretary from accepting any voter registration forms, in any format, from individuals to register or attempt to register unless and until such persons can confirm Michigan residency or satisfy the requirements of UOCAVA;

D. Order the Secretary to take all steps necessary to remedy the harm caused by her unconstitutional actions, including:

1. Issuing all necessary directives and guidance to local election officials, including county, city, and township clerks;
2. Updating all public facing websites and voter registration portals within her custody or control to reflect the constitutional prohibition on non-residents voting in Michigan elections; and
3. Updating all necessary voter registration forms;

E. Reject the ballots cast by overseas voters who never resided in Michigan,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

including ballots of overseas voters who submitted a Federal Post Card Application[5] or Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot[6] and checked the box affirming: "I have never lived in the United States."

F. In the alternative, direct the Secretary to segregate ballots cast by overseas voters who have never resided in Michigan including ballots of overseas voters who submitted a Federal Post Card Application or Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot and checked the box affirming, "I have never lived in the United States," so that Plaintiffs and this Court may ascertain the scope of the constitutional violation and whether it effects the election's outcome;

G. Award Plaintiffs their costs, expenses, and attorney fees incurred in this action; and

H. Award any other relief this Honorable Court deems just and equitable.

Dated: October 8, 2024

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Brandon L. Debus
Brandon L. Debus (P81159)
Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
350 S. Main Street, Ste 300
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(734) 623-1672
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
dziegler@dickinsonwright.com

Charles R. Spies (P83260)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
1825 Eye Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
202-466-5964
cspies@dickinsonwright.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs MRP and Cindy Berry

/s/ Jonathan B. Koch
Jonathan B. Koch (P80408)

[5] https://www.fvap.gov/uploads/fvap/forms/fpca.pdf.
[6] https://www.fvap.gov/uploads/fvap/forms/fwab.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Drew W. Broaddus (P64658)
Smith Haughey Rice & Roegge
100 Monroe Center NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
(616) 774-8000
616-774-2461 (fax)
jkoch@shrr.com
dbroaddus@shrr.com
Attorneys for Plaintiff RNC

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

I, Christina Norton, a representative of the Republican National Committee (the "RNC"), being duly sworn and being authorized to give this Verification on behalf of the RNC in support of the allegations contained in the foregoing Verified Complaint, do hereby declare pursuant to MCR 1.109 and under the penalties of perjury, that the facts and allegations contained in this Verified Complaint are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.

Christine Norton

By: Christina Norton
Its: Executive Director of Election Integrity Operations

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of October, 2024.

JULIE HYATT
NOTARY PUBLIC - STATE OF FLORIDA
COMMISSION # DD 449359
My Commission Expires July 9, 2028

Julie Hyatt

Julie Hyatt, Notary Public
Palm Beach County, State of Florida
My commission expires: 07/09/28

4894-1894-6797 v1 [99168-8]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

I, Cindy Berry, being first duly sworn, depose and declare that I am a resident of the state of Michigan and am a duly qualified as a voter in this state. While I may not have personal knowledge of all of the facts recited in this Verified Complaint, the information contained therein has been collected and made available to me by others, and I declare, pursuant to MCR 1.109 and under the penalties of perjury, that the facts and allegations contained in this Verified Complaint are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.

Cindy Berry

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of October 2024.

Michelle C. Nizza

Michelle C. Nizza Notary Public.

Sanilac County, State of Michigan

My commission expires: 12-16-2029

Acting in Macomb County, MI.

MICHELLE C. NIZZA
Notary Public, State of Michigan
County of Sanilac
My Commission Expires 12-16-2029
Acting in the County of Macomb

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

I, Tyson Shepard, a representative of the Michigan Republican Party (the "MRP"), being duly sworn and being authorized to give this Verification on behalf of the MRP in support of the allegations contained in the foregoing Verified Complaint, do hereby declare pursuant to MCR 1.109 and under the penalties of perjury, that the facts and allegations contained in this Verified Complaint are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.

By: Tyson Shepard
Its: Executive Director

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2nd day of October, 2024.

KYLE ROBERT HOGENDYK
Notary Public - State of Michigan
County of Kent
My Commission Expires Feb 2, 2027
Acting in the County of Kent

Kyle Robert Hogendyk, Notary Public

Kent County, State of Michigan

My commission expires: 2-2-2027

4878-5997-6429 v1 [99168-8]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit A

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Election Officials Manual

Chapter 7: Military and Overseas Voters, Federal Voter Registration and Absent Voting Programs

July 2024

INSTRUCTIONS PROVIDED BY THE MICHIGAN BUREAU OF ELECTIONS
RICHARD H. AUSTIN BUILDING • 1ST FLOOR • 430 W. ALLEGAN • LANSING, MICHIGAN 48918
800-292-5973

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. Introduction 1

II. Federal laws for Military and Overseas Voters (UOCAVA and MOVE) 1

Federally-required ballot tracking for UOCAVA Voters 2

III. Registering Military and Overseas Voters 2

Eligibility to register to vote using the FPCA or FWAB 3

Registration address for UOCAVA voters 3

Obtaining the FPCA or FWAB form 3

Registration deadline for UOCAVA voters 3

Incomplete registration submitted by a UOCAVA voter 4

Entering a UOCAVA voter's registration into the QVF 4

IV. Receiving absent voter ballot applications from UOCAVA voters 5

Late-mailed UOCAVA ballots 5

Recording receipt of an absent voter ballot application in the QVF 6

V. Sending absent voter ballots to UOCAVA voters 7

Ballot delivery method 7

Electronic transmission of ballots 7

Generating the QVF ballot 8

Faxing a QVF ballot 9

Emailing a QVF ballot 9

Printing and mailing a QVF ballot 10

Mailing military and overseas ballots 10

Mailing APO/FPO absent voter ballots 10

Express mail for military voters returning absent voter ballots for November general elections 10

Undeliverable or returned absent voter ballots 11

QVF ballot tracking 11

MOVE compliance report 12

VI. Receiving absent voter ballots from military and overseas voters 12

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VII. The Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (FWAB) 13
VIII. Processing MOVE and FWAB ballots on Election Day 15
IX. QVF reports 15
Election Day FWAB report 16
UOCAVA AND FPCA report 17

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. Introduction

This chapter explains the federal programs that provide special procedures and protections for military and overseas voters. It includes explanations of the programs, instructions for clerks on how to comply with the programs, and technical information about how to document that compliance in the QVF. Questions about the content of this chapter should be directed to Elections@Michigan.gov.

II. Federal laws for Military and Overseas Voters (UOCAVA and MOVE)

In 1986, the federal government passed the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act (UOCAVA), which provided special registration and absentee voting provisions for military and overseas civilians. In addition, UOCAVA authorized the use of the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (FWAB). The Federal Voting Assistance Program (FVAP) was created by the Department of Defense to oversee UOCAVA. In 2009, the federal Military and Overseas Empowerment Act (MOVE Act) and corresponding state legislation expanded UOCAVA by allowing a UOCAVA voter to submit a single AV application for all elections in a calendar year, allowing ballots to be sent to UOCAVA voters via email or fax, establishing a 45-day absent voter ballot delivery requirement for UOCAVA voters, and expanding the use of the FWAB. In 2012, the Michigan State Legislature passed Public Act 279, which further expanded the FWAB to include local and state offices.

UOCAVA and subsequent federal and state laws protect members of a uniformed service on active duty and dependents of such members, members of the Merchant Marine and dependents of such members, civilians living overseas, and National Guardsmen activated on state orders. This chapter refers to such voters as "UOCAVA voters."

Due to the strict timing requirements for issuance of absent voter ballots to UOCAVA voters, clerks should give priority to the processing of absent voter ballot applications received from such voters. All UOCAVA voters who request an absent voter ballot more than 45 days prior to an election must be sent that ballot 45 or more days before the election. All UOCAVA voters who request an absent voter ballot 45 or fewer days prior to the election must be sent an absent voter ballot within 24 hours of the clerk's receipt of the UOVACA voter's request. The Bureau of Elections provides all clerks with an electronic ballot that can be used to comply with the requirements of UOCAVA and subsequent statutes. Clerks can always send this ballot to a UOCAVA voter if necessary, including by printing and mailing the ballot if printed ballots are not yet available.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Federally required ballot tracking for UOCAVA voters

Ballots sent to and received from UOCAVA voters must be tracked in the QVF. Federal law requires a "free access system" that allows a military or overseas voter to track whether their absent voter ballot request has been received, if their absent voter ballot has been mailed, and if their absent voter ballot has been received and accepted by their local clerk. QVF data is displayed on Michigan.gov/Vote to fulfill this requirement. In addition to tracking UOCAVA voters' ballots in the QVF, the Bureau of Elections recommends that clerks record the dates each absent voter ballot was issued on the absent voter ballot request form submitted by the relevant UOCAVA voter.

III. Registering military and overseas voters

Many military and overseas voters register to vote using the Federal Post Card Application (FPCA) or the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (FWAB) Voter Information page. The FPCA and FWAB may be mailed, emailed, or faxed to the local clerk. A clerk who receives an FPCA or an FWAB form from a UOCAVA voter must register that person to vote. Additionally, both the FPCA and the FWAB can serve as both a voter registration form and an absent voter ballot application. If the registrant requested an absent voter ballot using the FPCA or FWAB, and if an election is occurring within 45 days of the clerk's receipt of the completed FPCA or FWAB, the clerk must immediately send the voter an absent voter ballot.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eligibility to register to vote using the FPCA or FWAB

To be eligible to register to vote using the FPCA or the FWAB, the voter must be absent from their jurisdiction of residence. If the voter is a civilian, the voter must be living outside of the United States and its territories. If the voter is a member of a uniformed service on active duty, a member of the Merchant Marine, or a National Guardsman activated on state orders, or if the voter is a dependent of a member of any of the listed organizations, the voter is eligible to register to vote using the FPCA or FWAB regardless of whether the voter is serving overseas or inside the United States. Each UOCAVA voter must submit their own FPCA or FWAB form.

A United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state.

Registration address for UOCAVA voters

A UOCAVA voter may register to vote at their last address of residence in the jurisdiction in which they are registering even if someone else now resides at that address, if the building where the voter resided has been demolished, or if the address no longer exists. The only requirement is that the address supplied by the voter is the last address which the voter considered their permanent residence within the jurisdiction in question.

Obtaining the FPCA or FWAB form

Protected voters may obtain the FPCA or FWAB forms at fvap.gov. FPCA and FWAB forms are postage paid and provided by the federal government for use by protected voters. Variations of both forms are provided. All variations of the FPCA are acceptable for use.

Clerks must also provide FPCA and FWAB forms to a voter upon request.

Registration deadline for UOCAVA voters

The registration deadline for UOCAVA voters, as for all Michigan voters, is 8 p.m. on Election Day.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

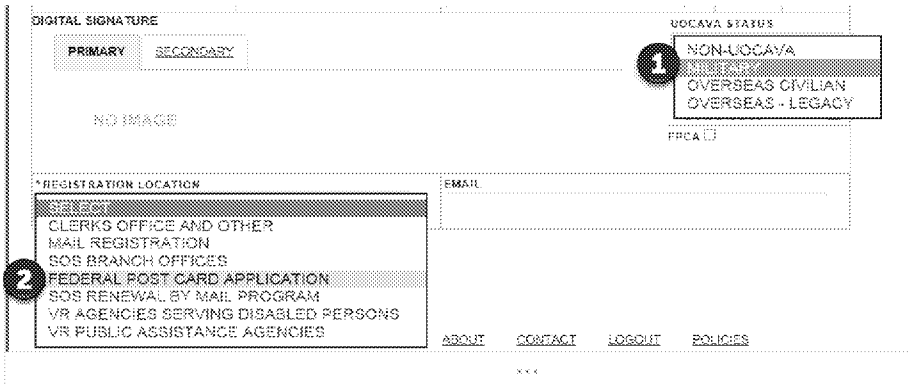
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Incomplete registration submitted by a UOCAVA voter

If a UOCAVA voter submits an incomplete voter registration, the clerk must notify the voter of the rejection and the reason for the rejection. The clerk must also attempt to correct the incomplete registration, if the incomplete registration was due to a minor or clerical error. The clerk's notification of the UOCAVA voter of the rejection of the voter's registration and the reason for that rejection can be made by letter, fax or email. The fvap.gov website also provides a response card that clerks may use for this purpose.

Entering a UOCAVA voter's registration into the QVF

All UOCAVA registrations must be tracked in QVF. The voter's registration location should be entered as "Federal Post Card Application." The clerk must then select whether the voter is a military or overseas voter, as shown in the following graphic:



The spouse of a member of the military should be marked as a military voter.

Once the voter has been entered into the QVF, the clerk should prepare a master card for the voter. The clerk should also send the voter a voter information card. The voter information card should be sent in an envelope addressed to the mailing address supplied by the voter. The clerk should not send the voter information card to the UOCAVA voter's address within the clerk's jurisdiction, because federal law permits UOCAVA voters to register to vote at their last permanent residence within the jurisdiction, even if the voter no longer maintains that residence.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IV. Receiving absent voter ballot applications from UOCAVA voters

Absent voter ballot requests from UOCAVA voters are handled differently from absent voter ballot applications from other Michigan voters.

Specifically, an absent voter ballot request from a UOCAVA voter entitles that voter to be sent an absent voter ballot for every election in the calendar year during which the request was made. If an absent voter ballot request from a UOCAVA voter is received after a November election, the request must be treated as having arrived in the following calendar year, and the UOCAVA voter must be sent an absent voter ballot for each election occurring in the following calendar year.

While most UOCAVA voters tend to submit their absent voter ballot request by using an FPCA or FWAB, a UOCAVA voter may request their absent voter ballot using any method that any other voter may use to submit an absent voter ballot application. A UOCAVA voter may request an absent voter ballot by emailing or faxing a signed Absent Voter Ballot Application to their clerk. However, in that case, the UOCAVA voter should verify with their clerk that they are identified in QVF as a UOCAVA voter to ensure that they are sent a ballot early enough to allow for overseas mail.

Under federal law, if an absent voter ballot request is received from a UOCAVA voter more than 45 days prior to an election, the clerk must send the UOCAVA voter a ballot 45 or more days prior to the election.

A UOCAVA voter's request for an absent voter ballot should be stored with the other, non-UOCAVA absent voter ballot applications received by the clerk.

Following the Proposal 2022-2 amendments to the State Constitution, Michigan voters may join the state's permanent mail ballot list and receive an absent voter ballot for all future elections. However, UOCAVA voters must complete a FPCA (or ensure they are identified in QVF as a UOCAVA voter) each year to ensure that they are sent a ballot early enough to allow for overseas mail.

Late-mailed UOCAVA ballots

If a UOCAVA voter requests an absent voter ballot more than 45 days prior to the election, and if the ballot is not sent 45 or more days prior to the election, the UOCAVA voter is granted one extra day to return the ballot for each day between the forty-fifth day prior to the election and the day that the absent voter ballot is sent to the UOCAVA voter.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

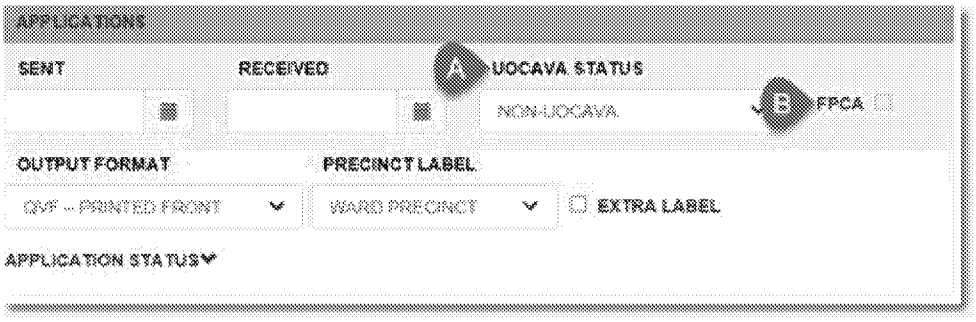
For example, if the UOCAVA voter requested the ballot more than 45 days prior to the election, and the ballot is sent on the fortieth day prior to the election, the ballot must be counted if it arrives five or fewer days after Election Day, as long as it was executed and sent by the close of polls on Election Day. However, the election may be formally certified before the end of this extension time if the number of outstanding ballots allowed an exception would not alter the outcome of the election.

Recording receipt of an absent voter ballot application in the QVF

The clerk should enter a UOCAVA voter's absent voter activity into the QVF in the same manner as any other voter's, except that the clerk must also ensure that the voter's UOCAVA status, FPCA status, FWAB Received status, and delivery method are completed. Additionally, the clerk must ensure that the voter's email address is completed if the voter has requested their ballot via email.

To record this information in the QVF, the clerk should open the voter's file within the QVF and click the "Absentee Voter Ballot" button. The clerk should record receipt of the absent voter ballot application as normal, except that the clerk should select "UOCAVA" in the "UOCAVA Status" dropdown. The clerk should also check the FPCA box if the application was made via an FPCA form.



Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

V. Sending absent voter ballots to UOCAVA voters

Ballot delivery method

UOCAVA voters may request that their absent voter ballot be sent via email, fax, or mail. If a UOCAVA voter requests their absent voter ballot be emailed, city and township clerks who do not have internet access must work with the county clerk to facilitate the emailing of a blank ballot. If the voter does not select a delivery method, the clerk should send the absent voter ballot via mail.

A UOCAVA voter may opt for different ballot delivery methods for different elections by submitting a written request to the clerk via email, fax, or letter. Similarly, the voter can change the address, email address, or fax number at which the voter wishes to receive their absent voter ballot by submitting a written request to the clerk via email, fax, or letter.

Electronic transmission of ballots

The QVF can be used to generate an email or fax ballot. These ballots, called "QVF ballots," are formatted to fit regular 8.5" x 11" paper. A QVF ballot is printed and completed by the UOCAVA voter. The voter then returns the ballot to the clerk, and the ballot is duplicated onto a standard ballot using the normal duplication procedure explained in Chapter 13: Precinct Canvass – Closing the Polls prior to tabulation.

If a UOCAVA voter requests their absent voter ballot be delivered by mail, the clerk should send the voter a standard absent voter ballot. If standard ballots are not available on the 45th day prior to the election, however, the QVF printable ballot may be printed and mailed to a UOCAVA voter to fulfill a clerk's UOCAVA responsibilities.

In some cases, the county clerk may provide city and township clerks with PDF ballot proofs that may be emailed, faxed, or printed and mailed to UOCAVA voters. If ballot proofs, rather than the QVF-generated ballot, are sent to UOCAVA voters, the clerk must ensure that the appropriate instructions and voter certificate[1] are included in the email, fax, or mailing to the UOCAVA voter. Different instructions have been developed for each

[1] Available at http://www.mi.gov/documents/sos/Move_Voter_Cert_325028_7.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

transmittal method; each set of instructions can be found at the FPCA link on the Military and Overseas Voter Information webpage.[2]

No matter how the UOCAVA voter receives their absent voter ballot, the voter must return their ballot by mail. If a UOCAVA voter was emailed their ballot, the voter must print the ballot, complete the ballot, and mail the completed ballot back to the clerk.

Generating the QVF ballot

To generate the QVF ballot for transmission to UOCAVA voters, the clerk should begin by logging into the QVF. If the clerk does not have a QVF account or if the clerk's QVF account has become inactive, the clerk should contact the 517-292-5973 mainline and select the QVF option.

The clerk should navigate to a voter's file within the QVF. If the voter has been assigned UOCAVA status, as explained above, the MOVE button will appear in their file. To generate a PDF containing the voter's absent voter ballot and corresponding ballot instructions, the clerk should:

1. Click the "Absentee Voter Ballot" button, which causes the "MOVE Ballot" button to appear.
2. Click the "MOVE Ballot" button.
3. A pop-up will appear when the ballot is ready for download. Click "OK" on the pop-up to download the ballot.

These instructions are illustrated in the following screengrab of QVF.

[2] Available at https://www.michigan.gov/sos/elections/voting/military-and-overseas-voters.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Once the ballot has been downloaded, the clerk should open the PDF and review both the ballot and ballot instructions for accuracy. The ballot generated is specific to the ballot style that the voter is assigned in the QVF based on the address at which the voter is registered. If an error is identified, the county clerk should be contacted to make the correction in the QVF's Ballot Administrator program.

Faxing a QVF ballot

If a UOCAVA voter has requested that their ballot be delivered by fax, the clerk should generate a QVF ballot as explained above, print the PDF, and fax the printed ballot and accompanying documents to the voter. The clerk should ensure that the ballot was transmitted and should retain a copy of the fax confirmation page.

Emailing a QVF ballot

If the UOCAVA voter has requested their absent voter ballot be delivered by email, the clerk should email the PDF of the QVF ballot to the voter. The email should have the subject line "Electronic Ballot" followed by the election date. A suggested template for the email body can be found in the eLearning Center.[3]

[3] Available at https://mielections.csod.com/ui/lms-learning-details/app/material/064b5d93-bc2a-4af1-a3d8-077d5b323f20

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After emailing the ballot, the clerk should monitor the email account from which the ballot was sent for questions from the UOCAVA voter or for any delivery errors or failures.

Printing and mailing a QVF ballot

If a UOCAVA voter has requested that their absent voter ballot be mailed, but standard absent voter ballots provided by the county clerk will not be available by the 45th day prior to the election, the clerk may print the ballot PDF generated by QVF and send the printed ballot to the voter. After the ballot has been printed, the clerk should place all of the pages included in the PDF into a military/overseas absent voter ballot envelope. The clerk should also include a return overseas absent voter ballot envelope in the mailing to the voter.

Mailing military and overseas ballots

Absent voter ballots mailed to UOCAVA voters must be sent postage paid First Class mail with a special designation provided by the United States Postal Service (USPS). For more information on the special designation, the clerk should contact their local post office and reference Domestic Mail Manual (DMM) 703.8.2.[4] For more information on how to designate absent voter ballots mailed to UOCAVA voters, refer to the fvap.gov mailing site.[5]

Mailing APO/FPO absent voter ballots

The USPS requests that all absent voter ballots sent from an Army Post Office or Fleet Post Office (indicated as APO/FPO) be separated from regular mail and delivered directly to a USPS clerk or mail carrier rather than being deposited in a USPS collection box. Clerks should ensure that APO/FPO ballots are addressed according to the USPS Domestic Mail standards published on the USPS's website.[6]

Express mail for military voters returning absent voter ballots for November general elections

For even-year November general elections, the USPS provides a unique express mail label for use by overseas military members submitting mail to

[4] More information available at https://about.usps.com/what/government-services/election-mail/
[5] Available at https://www.fvap.gov/eo/overview/sending-ballots/creating-envelopes.
[6] Available at https://www.usps.com/ship/apo-fpo-dpo.htm.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

overseas postal locations. This unique label gives the voter the ability to track their ballot via USPS. For more information on this express mail label, consult the USPS Express Mail website.[7]

Undeliverable or returned absent voter ballots

If an absent voter ballot which was faxed or emailed to a UOCAVA voter is returned as undeliverable, the clerk should contact the voter for an alternate email address, fax number or transmittal method. If the clerk is unable to contact the voter for an alternate email address or fax number, the clerk should send a ballot via postal mail to the mailing address provided by the voter.

If an absent voter ballot mailed to a UOCAVA voter is returned as undeliverable, the clerk should contact the voter for an alternate mailing address or transmittal method. Updated mailing addresses for military voters can be obtained by contacting FVAP. Election officials should submit requests to FVAP via email at vote@fvap.gov or fax at 703-696-1352 and include the name of the clerk and jurisdiction requesting the voter's address, as well as the voter's full name and date of birth or the last four digits of the voter's Social Security Number. If the clerk is unable to contact the voter for an alternate mailing address and/or FVAP is unable to assist, the clerk should retain the returned ballot and mark the ballot as Undeliverable in the QVF.

QVF ballot tracking

To record the issuance and mail, fax, or email of an absent voter ballot to a UOCAVA voter, the clerk should take the following steps:

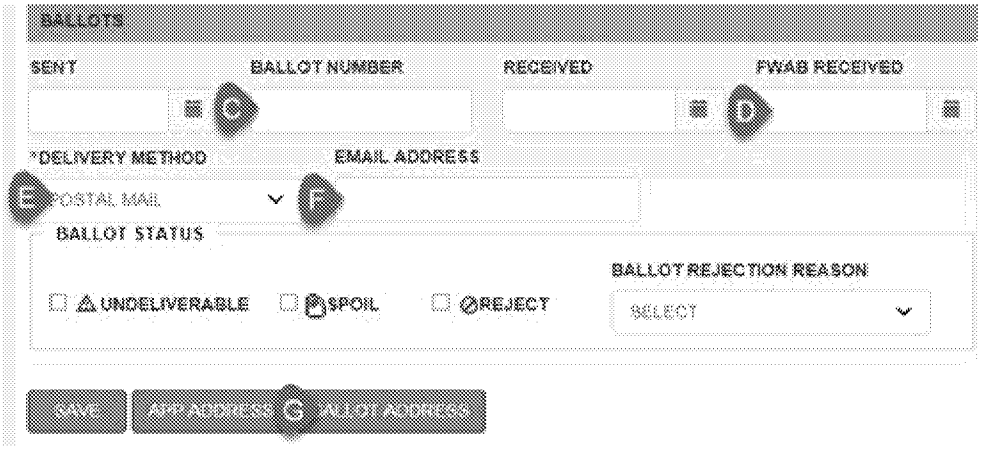
1. Identify the ballot number. If a QVF ballot is being emailed, faxed, or mailed to the voter, as explained above, the ballot is identified as an electronic transmission using the prefix "ET" and the ballot number takes the form ET000000. The first QVF ballot issued to a UOCAVA voter is ET000001, the second is ET000002, etc. If a standard absent voter ballot was mailed to the UOCAVA voter, use the regular absent voter ballot number.
2. If a FWAB was received, enter the date on which the clerk received the FWAB.

[7] Available at https://about.usps.com/postal-bulletin/2016/pb22443/html/cover_018.htm.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Select the delivery method the clerk used to send the absent voter ballot to the UOCAVA voter.
4. Enter the UOCAVA voter's email address, if applicable.
5. Enter the UOCAVA voter's alternate mailing address, if applicable.



MOVE compliance report

The MOVE compliance report must be completed by every city and township in Michigan, whether or not the city or township received a request for an absent voter ballot from a UOCAVA voter. The report can be found in the eLearning Center. The report must be completed by the Tuesday after the "MOVE deadline," which occurs 45 days before an election.

VI. Receiving absent voter ballots from military and overseas voters

No matter how the UOCAVA voter receives their absent voter ballot, the voter must return their ballot by mail. If a UOCAVA voter was emailed their ballot, the voter must print the ballot and mail the completed ballot back to the clerk. MOVE ballots must be counted if postmarked by Election Day and received no later than six days after Election Day. If the postmark on the ballot envelope is missing or unclear, clerks must deliver the ballot envelope to their county clerk to determine whether the ballot was received on time. All ballots received after Election Day and deemed on time by the municipal or county clerk will be counted by the county clerk in a board of county canvassers meeting.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If a UOCAVA voter attempts to submit their completed absent voter ballot via email or fax, the clerk must attempt to contact the voter to advise the voter that their ballot must be returned by postal mail with a signed voter certificate. A ballot or FWAB Backup Ballot returned by email or fax cannot be processed or counted. Such ballots must be marked as rejected and secured in the clerk's office.

If a UOCAVA voter returns two ballot return envelopes, which may occur because the UOCAVA voter accidentally printed more than one copy of their QVF ballot or because the voter made a technical error on their first ballot, the ballot return envelope that carries the most recent postmark should be processed. If the postmark dates cannot be determined, the return envelope that arrived closest to the election should be processed. If the ballot return envelope that is opened does not contain a signed voter certificate, the other return envelope should be processed. If multiple ballot return envelopes are received from the same UOCAVA voter, to ensure proper handling the clerk should attach a note to the first ballot return envelope sent for processing that advises election inspectors to contact the clerk if that ballot return envelope does not contain a ballot and/or signed voter certificate.

VII. The Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot (FWAB)

The Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot (FWAB) is available for UOCAVA voters to use as a ballot.[8] A FWAB submitted by a UOCAVA voter that is postmarked by Election Day and received no later than six days after Election Day must be counted, so long as the UOCAVA voter submitting the FWAB requested an absent voter ballot by 2 p.m. the Saturday prior to the election. The voter's request for an absent voter ballot can be the same FPCA that the voter is submitting as their ballot for the election, so long as the FPCA is received by 2 p.m. on the Saturday prior to the election. The voter may also email or fax a signed absent voter ballot application to their clerk by 2 p.m. on the Saturday prior to the election. If the UOCAVA voter returning the FWAB did not request an absent voter ballot prior to 2 p.m. on the Saturday preceding Election Day, and the FPCA is received by the clerk after 2 p.m. on the Saturday preceding Election Day, the FWAB is not valid and is not counted.

[8] The FWAB is available at https://www.fvap.gov/uploads/FVAP/Forms/fwab2013.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A clerk must enter the receipt of an FWAB into the QVF.

The FWAB has two parts. The first part is the voter information form. The voter's information must be completed by the UOCAVA voter and will likely be returned to the clerk in a regular envelope. If the protected voter is not already registered to vote, the clerk should use the voter information portion of the FWAB to register the voter and to record the UOCAVA's application for an absent voter ballot for every election in the calendar year. The voter information form must be signed. If the voter information form is not signed, the FWAB is invalid.

A UOCAVA voter that did not apply for an absent voter ballot before submitting the FWAB can be registered using the voter information page if the FWAB is received by 2 p.m. the Saturday prior to the election. An absent voter ballot should be sent to the UOCAVA voter via their preferred method as explained above.

The second part of the FWAB is a second envelope, included in the first, marked "Official Ballot – Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot," in which the voter will place the voter's completed Official Backup Ballot. The envelope will be sealed; clerks should not open the sealed envelope. The Official Backup Ballot allows a UOCAVA voter to write in the candidate of their choice for any office or ballot initiative that is on the ballot for the election in which the UOCAVA voter is voting. The UOCAVA voter may write in either the candidate's name or the candidate's political party for each office.

The UOCAVA voter's Official Backup Ballot must be counted by the relevant precinct or absent voter counting board if the UOCAVA voter's regular absent voter ballot is not received by Election Day. The Official Backup Ballot is counted using normal ballot duplication procedures. The UOCAVA voter is not required to mark an oval or box on the Official Backup Ballot in order for their votes to be cast, and any name variations are acceptable so long as the voter's intent is clear.

If the UOCAVA voter's QVF or regular absent voter ballot is returned by 8 p.m. on Election Day, the QVF or regular absent voter ballot supersedes the FWAB submitted by the voter. In that case, the FWAB should not be opened, and the voter's QVF or regular absent voter ballot should be tabulated.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VIII. Processing MOVE and FWAB ballots on Election Day

Regular absent voter ballots received from UOCAVA voters should be processed in the same manner as all other absent voter ballots. QVF ballots or FWAB ballots returned by UOCAVA voters, however, need several additional checks before they are duplicated onto a standard ballot for tabulation. First, election inspectors must verify that the UOCAVA voter signed the signature certificate included with the QVF ballot and ensure that the signature on the certificate matches the voter's signature on the file. If the returned ballot does not include a certificate, the ballot must be rejected. The signature certificate should be stored with the UOCAVA voter's original absent voter ballot application. To preserve ballot secrecy, neither the certificate nor the absent voter ballot application should be attached to the QVF ballot or the FWAB Backup Ballot.

If absent voter ballots are processed in the precinct, QVF ballots and FWAB Backup Ballots must be placed in the auxiliary bin until the close of polls to wait for duplication. If the QVF ballot or the FWAB ballot includes multiple pages, election inspectors must ensure that the pages are stapled or clipped together before placing the ballot in the auxiliary bin. The regular duplication procedures explained in Chapter 13: Precinct Canvass – Closing the Polls should be followed to transfer the contents of the QVF ballot or the FWAB Backup Ballot to a standard ballot for tabulation. As with other duplicated ballots, the original QVF ballots or FWAB Backup Ballots must be placed in the original ballot envelope after duplication. For more information on the ballot duplication process, refer to Managing Your Election Day Polling Place: Election Inspectors Procedure Manual.[9]

IX. QVF reports

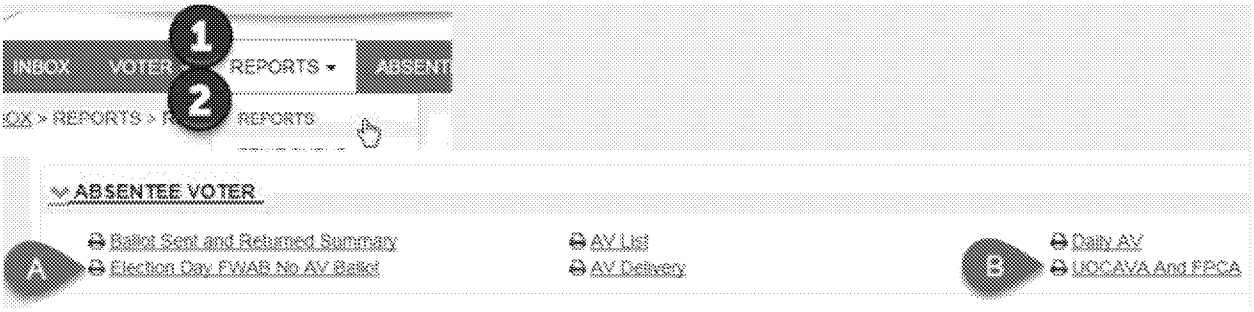
The QVF has two reports for reviewing military and overseas voter absentee activity. To access the reports, a clerk should login to the QVF and do the following:

[9] Available at https://www.michigan.gov/sos/-/media/Project/Websites/sos/Election-Administrators/Managing-Your-Precinct-on-Election-Day.pdf?rev=099687d67e9249d98941ce03647543a3&hash=86B2799DC0E246E42596FAF6F720ACD0.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

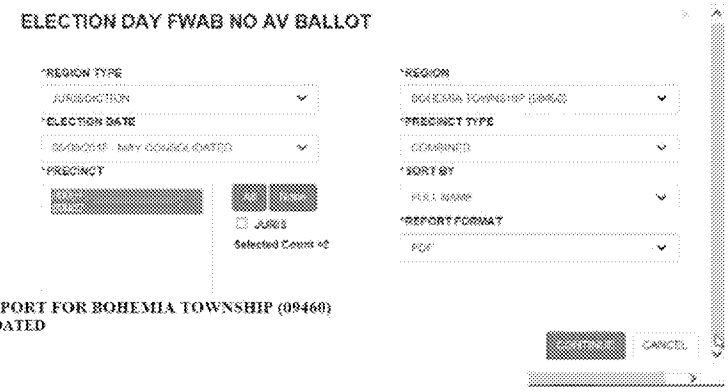
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Click on Reports.
2. Click on Reports in the dropdown menu.



Election Day FWAB report

The Election Day "FWAB no AV ballot" report will provide a listing of all of the voters who submitted a FWAB but who did not return a QVF or regular absent voter ballot. The FWAB for each of these voters should be duplicated onto a standard ballot and tabulated. The FWAB of a voter who did return either a QVF ballot or a regular ballot should not be duplicated; the QVF ballot or the regular ballot returned by that voter supersedes the FWAB.



ELECTION DATE FWAB NO AV BALLOT RECEIVED REPORT FOR BOHEMIA TOWNSHIP (09460)
05/08/2018 - MAY CONSOLIDATED

Voter Name / Mailed To Address	COMBINED	Voter Status & Reason(s)	FWAB Received	AV Ballot Received
MCCVF, FAY 10000 OLD LAKE ROAD GRAYLING, MI 49738	00001	ACTIVE - ACTIVE	01/12/2018
MCCVF, FINN FLINT 10007 OLD LAKE RD GRAYLING, MI 49738	00001	ACTIVE - ACTIVE	01/12/2018

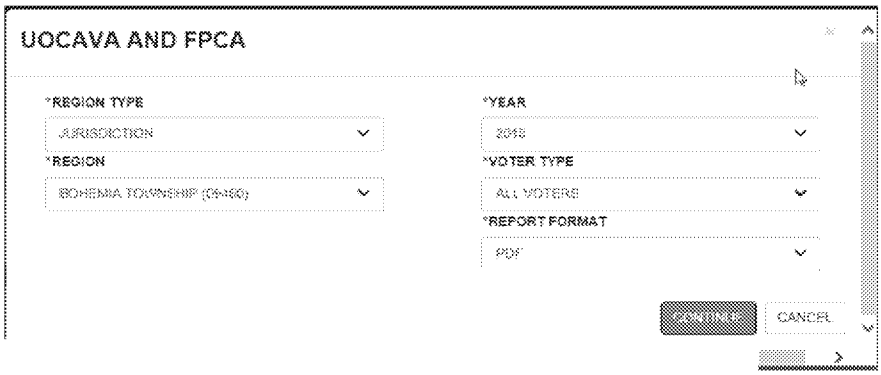
Total 2

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UOCAVA and FPCA report

The "UOCAVA and FPCA" report will provide a listing of all AV voters entered into QVF as military or overseas voters. The report can be sorted in multiple ways and exported as either a PDF or a CSV file. To generate this report, the clerk should make their selections and click "Continue." The report will open in a new window.



2/23/2018 4:51:58 PM

UOCAVA AND FPCA VOTERS REPORT

FOR THE YEAR 2018

[redacted]

JURISDICTION

Voter Name / Residential Address	Mailing Address	RECEIVED DATE	IS FPCA
[redacted]		01/16/2018	NO
[redacted]		01/18/2018	NO

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit B

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, and CINDY BERRY, Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State, and JONATHAN BRATER, in his official capacity as Director of Elections,

Defendants.

Case No. 24-_____-MZ

Hon. _____

AFFIDAVIT OF TYSON SHEPARD

Brandon L. Debus (P81159)
Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
350 S. Main Street, Ste 300
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(734) 623-1672
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
dziegler@dickinsonwright.com

Charles R. Spies (P83260)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
1825 Eye Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
202-466-5964
cspies@dickinsonwright.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs MRP and Cindy Berry

Jonathan B. Koch (P80408)
Drew W. Broaddus (P64658)
Smith Haughey Rice & Roegge
100 Monroe Center NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
(616) 774-8000
616-774-2461 (fax)
jkoch@shrr.com
dbroaddus@shrr.com
Attorneys for Plaintiff RNC

_____/

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

AFFIDAVIT OF TYSON SHEPARD

STATE OF Michigan)
) SS COUNTY OF Oakland)

I, Tyson Shepard, being first duly sworn, state as follows under oath:

1. I am the Executive Director of the Michigan Republican Party (the "MRP"). I am over the age of eighteen and I have personal knowledge of the following facts. If called as a witness, I could and would competently testify thereto.

2. The MRP is a "major political party" as that term is defined by the Michigan Election Law. See MCL 168.16. The MRP maintains headquarters at 520 Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan 48912. Among its general purposes, the MRP promotes and assists Republican candidates who seek election or appointment to partisan federal, state, and local office in Michigan.

3. The MRP works to elect Republican candidates to state and federal office. In November 2024, its candidates will appear on the ballot in Michigan for election to the Presidency, U.S. Senate, and U.S. House of Representatives, and Michigan Legislature—among other elected offices.

4. The MRP engages in various activities to help elect Republicans in Michigan, including efforts to educate, mobilize, assist, and turn out voters.

5. During past election cycles, the MRP has made significant contributions and expenditures to support Republican candidates up and down the ballot in Michigan and to mobilize and educate Michigan voters. It is doing so again in 2024.

6. The MRP has vital interests in protecting the ability of Republican voters to cast, and Republican candidates to receive, effective votes in Michigan elections. The MRP is a plaintiff in this case to vindicate its own rights in this regard, and in a representational capacity to vindicate the rights of its members, affiliated voters, and candidates.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7. The policies challenged in this lawsuit—allowing persons who have never been Michigan residents to vote in Michigan elections—violates the Michigan Constitution, which requires—exempt where preempted by federal law—that a person reside in Michigan to vote in Michigan.

8. Allowing persons who have never been Michigan residents to vote in elections harms the MRP's interests.

9. The MRP has a substantial interest in seeking and winning political office, and in doing so in a legally structured, fair, and competitive environment in which the Michigan Constitution and its residency requirement is enforced.

10. The MRP spends significant resources to preserve voter confidence and turnout, which suffer when voters see that election officials accept absent voter ballots without verifying the residency of the voter as required under Michigan law or enforcing the residency requirements of the Michigan Constitution.

11. The policies challenged here harm the MRP—and its members and candidates—and places them at a competitive disadvantage.

12. Democrat voters are more likely than Republicans to vote by absentee ballot. As a result, any failure to verify the residency of absentee voters will result in an inaccurate tally of the lawfully cast votes. And given the higher number of Democrat absentee voters than Republican absentee voters, that inaccurate tally undermines the Republican candidates' rights to a fair and accurate electoral count.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

13. By counting votes of persons who do not meet the residency requirement of the Michigan Constitution, Michigan dilutes the weight of valid votes cast by the MRP's candidates and its members.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

I declare that the above statements are true and correct to the best of my information, knowledge and belief.

Tyson Shepard

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of October, 2024.

KYLE ROBERT HOGENDYK
Notary Public - State of Michigan
County of Kent
My Commission Expires Feb 2, 2027
Acting in the County of Kent

Notary Public, Kyle Robert Hogendyk, County, Kent
Acting in Kent County
My Commission Expires: 2-2-27
4889-5292-0045 v1 [99168-8]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit C

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, and CINDY BERRY, Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State, and JONATHAN BRATER, in his official capacity as Director of Elections,

Defendants.

Case No. 24-_____-MZ

Hon. _____

AFFIDAVIT OF CHRISTINA NORTON

Brandon L. Debus (P81159)
Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
350 S. Main Street, Ste 300
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(734) 623-1672
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
dziegler@dickinsonwright.com

Charles R. Spies (P83260)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
1825 Eye Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
202-466-5964
cspies@dickinsonwright.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs RNC and Cindy Berry

Jonathan B. Koch (P80408)
Drew W. Broaddus (P64658)
Smith Haughey Rice & Roegge
100 Monroe Center NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
(616) 774-8000
616-774-2461 (fax)
jkoch@shrr.com
dbroaddus@shrr.com
Attorneys for Plaintiff RNC

/

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

AFFIDAVIT OF CHRISTINA NORTON

STATE OF Florida)
) SS COUNTY OF Palm Beach)

I, Christina Norton, being first duly sworn, state as follows under oath:

1. I am the Executive Director of Election Integrity Operations at the Republican National Committee (the "RNC"). I am over the age of eighteen and I have personal knowledge of the following facts. If called as a witness, I could and would competently testify thereto.

2. The RNC is the national committee of the Republican Party, with its principal place of business at 310 First Street S.E., Washington D.C., 20003. The RNC represents over 30 million registered Republicans in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. territories. It is comprised of 168 voting members representing state Republican Party organizations.

3. The RNC manages the Republican Party's business at the national level, coordinates fundraising and election strategy, and develops and promotes the national Republican platform.

4. The RNC organizes and operates the Republican National Convention, which nominates a candidate for President and Vice President of the United States.

5. The RNC works to elect Republican candidates to state and federal office. In November 2024, its candidates will appear on the ballot in Michigan for election to the Presidency, U.S. Senate, and U.S. House of Representatives, and Michigan Legislature—among other elected offices.

6. The RNC engages in various activities to help elect Republicans in Michigan. One of these activities is providing support to the Michigan Republican Party in its efforts to elect

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Republican candidates and educate, mobilize, assist, and turn out voters. The RNC also assists the Michigan Republican Party to recruit and train poll challengers regarding the requirements of the Michigan Election Law.

7. During past election cycles, the RNC has made significant contributions and expenditures to support Republican candidates up and down the ballot in Michigan and to mobilize and educate Michigan voters. It is doing so again in 2024.

8. The RNC has vital interests in protecting the ability of Republican voters to cast, and Republican candidates to receive, effective votes in Michigan elections. The RNC is a plaintiff in this case to vindicate its own rights in this regard, and in a representational capacity to vindicate the rights of its members, affiliated voters, and candidates.

9. The policies challenged in this lawsuit—allowing persons who have never been Michigan residents to vote in elections—violates the Michigan Constitution, which requires—except where preempted by federal law—that a person reside in Michigan to vote in Michigan.

10. Allowing persons who are not Michigan residents and who have never been Michigan residents to vote in elections harms the RNC's interests.

11. The RNC has a substantial interest in seeking and winning political office, and doing so in a legally structured, fair, and competitive environment in which the Michigan Constitution and its residency requirement are enforced.

12. The RNC spends significant resources to preserve voter confidence and turnout, which suffer when voters see that election officials accept absent voter ballots without enforcing the residency requirements of the Michigan Constitution.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

13. The policies challenged here harm the RNC—and its members and candidates—and also places them at a competitive disadvantage, because overseas voters overwhelmingly support Democratic candidates.

14. Moreover, ineligible overseas voters casting ballots in elections in Michigan will result in an inaccurate tally of the lawfully cast votes. And given the higher number of Democratic overseas voters than Republican overseas voters, that inaccurate tally undermines the Republican candidates' rights to a fair and accurate electoral count.

15. By counting votes of persons who do not meet the residency requirement of the Michigan Constitution, Michigan dilutes the weight of valid votes cast by the RNC's voters and members.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

I declare that the above statements are true and correct to the best of my information, knowledge and belief.

Christina Norton

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of October, 2024.

Julie Hyatt
Notary Public, PALM BEACH, County, FLORIDA
Acting in PALM BEACH County
My Commission Expires: 07/09/28

JULIE HYATT
NOTARY PUBLIC · STATE OF FLORIDA
COMMISSION # DD 449359
My Commission Expires July 9, 2028

4855-1188-6829 v1 [99168-8]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit D

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, and CINDY BERRY, Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State, and JONATHAN BRATER, in his official capacity as Director of Elections,

Defendants.

Case No. 24-_____-MZ

Hon. _____

AFFIDAVIT OF CINDY BERRY

Brandon L. Debus (P81159)
Daniel C. Ziegler (P86312)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
350 S. Main Street, Ste 300
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(734) 623-1672
bdebus@dickinsonwright.com
dziegler@dickinsonwright.com

Charles R. Spies (P83260)
Dickinson Wright PLLC
1825 Eye Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
202-466-5964
cspies@dickinsonwright.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs MRP and Cindy Berry

Jonathan B. Koch (P80408)
Drew W. Broaddus (P64658)
Smith Haughey Rice & Roegge
100 Monroe Center NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
(616) 774-8000
616-774-2461 (fax)
jkoch@shrr.com
dbroaddus@shrr.com
Attorneys for Plaintiff RNC

_____/

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

AFFIDAVIT OF CINDY BERRY

STATE OF MICHIGAN)
) SS COUNTY OF MACOMB)

I, Cindy Berry, being first duly sworn, state as follows under oath:

1. I am over the age of eighteen and I have personal knowledge of the following facts. If called and sworn as a witness, I could and would competently testify thereto.

2. I am a resident of Chesterfield Township, Michigan, and a registered Michigan voter.

3. I cast a ballot for the February 2024 presidential primary election through Michigan's early voting process, voted by absentee ballot in the August 2024 primary election, and intend to vote by absentee ballot in future elections—including the November 2024 general election.

4. I am the Clerk for the Township of Chesterfield, Michigan. As the Clerk, I am responsible for running the Township's elections, which includes hiring and training election inspectors (also known as poll workers), preparing absent voter ballots for distribution, compiling precinct results on Election Day, and certifying election results.

5. As Township Clerk, I am also responsible for overseeing the tabulation of absent voter ballots in compliance with the Michigan Constitution.

6. For example, the Michigan Constitution provides that "Every citizen of the United States . . . who has resided in this state six months . . . shall be an elector and qualified to vote in any election except as otherwise provided in this constitution." Const. 1963, art. 2, § 1.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7. It is my understanding that under Const. 1963, art 2, § 1, an election inspector may only tabulate an absent voter ballot of a person who meets the residency requirement as set forth in the Michigan Constitution.

8. As a clerk responsible for overseeing the tabulation of absent voter ballots, it is my belief and understanding that an election inspector may only tabulate an absent voter ballot of a person who meets the residency requirement as set forth in the Michigan Constitution.

9. Despite these clear, constitutional requirements, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson is instructing local officials that "A United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state."

10. Those instructions, which are found on page three of the Secretary's Election Officials Manual, Chapter 7: Military and Overseas Voters, Federal Voter Registration and Absent Voting Programs, and which are attached as Exhibit A to the Verified Complaint filed in this case, are referenced here as the "Secretary's Instructions."

11. As a local clerk, I am bound to follow the Secretary's Instructions.

12. As a public official, however, I swore an oath to support the Michigan Constitution and to faithfully discharge the duties of my office.

13. While I have attempted to reconcile the Constitutions requirement that voters must be residence with the Secretary's instruction that some absent voters do not need to be residents of Michigan, the Secretary's Instructions seem incompatible with the requirements of the Michigan Constitution.

14. Given that Michigan law empowers the Secretary to investigate, or cause to be investigated by local authorities, the administration of election laws, and to report violations of the election laws and regulations to the attorney general or prosecuting attorney, or both, for prosecution, see MCL 168.31(h), it seems possible to me that I could face penalty or even removal from my position as Clerk if I apply rules or guidance such as those challenged here that are inconsistent with the Constitution. It also seems possible to me that I could face removal from my position as Clerk if I do not apply rules or guidance to which I am subject as a local clerk.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

15. As a result, while I plan to conduct the Chesterfield Township elections in accordance with the Constitution just as I always do, I seek a judicial declaration in this lawsuit as to whether I am and will continue to be subject to those aspects of the Secretary's Instructions challenged in this lawsuit, specifically the Secretary's instruction that "A United States citizen who has never resided in the United States but who has a parent, legal guardian, or spouse who was last domiciled in Michigan is eligible to vote in Michigan as long as the citizen has not registered or voted in another state."

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

I declare that the above statements are true and correct to the best of my information, knowledge and belief.

Cindy Berry

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of October, 2024.

Michelle C. Nizza

Notary Public, Sanilac, County, Michigan
Acting in Macomb County
My Commission Expires: 12-16-2029
4870-0204-4909 v1 [99168-8]

MICHELLE C. NIZZA
Notary Public, State of Michigan
County of Sanilac
My Commission Expires 12-16-2029
Acting in the County of Macomb

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 6/22/2023 2:12:44 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, June 21, 2023 10:10 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, June 21, 2023 at 2:29 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Aboona, Rebecca (AG) <AboonaR1@michigan.gov>, Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Beth Stevens <beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

Thanks Jonathan, we will discuss and get back with you as quickly as we can.

Best,
Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, June 21, 2023 10:37 AM
To: Aboona, Rebecca (AG) <AboonaR1@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Beth Stevens <beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) privileged)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Becky, Heather, and Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 6/27/2023 2:49:17 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Moore v. Harper decision is out

Thanks, I have not had a chance to read yet. Good news.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, June 27, 2023 10:30 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Moore v. Harper decision is out

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

SCOTUS affirms the NC Supreme Court 6-3, with Chief Justice Roberts writing for the majority. Court concludes that the Legislature is subject to state constitutional constraints when enacting laws regarding the time, place, and manner of federal elections. We're still reviewing and would be happy to provide our analysis.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/19/2024 2:06:24 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Attorney Client Privileged Communication - Mich RNC Letter re: Double Voting Attachments: RNC Letter re Double Voting.pdf; MI - Potential Double Voting Data.xlsx

fyi

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) <BraterJ@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 18, 2024 4:54 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Cc: McInerney, Jenny (MDOS) <McInerneyJ1@michigan.gov>; Fracassi, Adam (MDOS) <FracassiA@michigan.gov>; Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Schaar, Meghan (MDOS) <SchaarM1@michigan.gov>; Lillie, Erin (MDOS) <LillieE@michigan.gov>
Subject: [PRIVILEGED] FW: RNC Letter re: Double Voting

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Luke Bunting - Election Integrity <lbunting@gop.com>
Sent: Friday, October 18, 2024 4:15 PM
To: Secretary Jocelyn Benson <secretary@michigan.gov>; SOS, Elections <Elections@michigan.gov>
Cc: Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) <BraterJ@michigan.gov>
Subject: RNC Letter re: Double Voting

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hello,

Please find attached a letter from the Republican National Committee. Please confirm receipt of this message and reach out with any questions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Luke Bunting
Election Integrity Counsel
310 First Street SE
Washington, DC 20003
P: 202-441-8417

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE

October 18, 2024

The Honorable Jocelyn Benson
Secretary of State
430 W. Allegan St.
Lansing, MI 48918

Re: Potential Double Voters

Dear Secretary Benson:

The Republican National Committee (RNC) supports and seeks to uphold all eligible Michigan voters' right to vote in free and fair elections. The RNC thus writes to provide data indicating eligible voters in your state may be facing a violation of their right to vote due to unlawful double voting by individuals who have requested ballots in more than one state.

The attached list identifies individuals who our data suggests may have requested a ballot for the 2024 General Election both in your state and in another state. The RNC compiled this list by matching personal identifying information of individuals requesting ballots in your state and in other states. While the RNC does not have access to, and cannot confirm identity through, Social Security numbers, all available information strongly suggests these individuals are in fact the same person.

Double voting is unlawful and results in unfair dilution of votes cast by law-abiding, eligible voters. The RNC recognizes the possibility that individuals identified on the attached list may not have requested or cast two ballots. Nonetheless, ensuring a free and fair 2024 General Election requires that each instance be investigated.

Time is of the essence given that mail voting for the 2024 General Election has already commenced. Accordingly, the RNC respectfully asks that your office immediately take all necessary steps to confirm the listed individuals are properly registered to vote in your state and have not also requested ballots in another jurisdiction. Should your office find any individual attempting to double vote, the RNC asks that your office work with the other relevant jurisdiction to stop such double voting and to ensure every voter's right to "one person, one vote" is protected.[1]

The RNC requests you respond in writing outlining the steps your office is taking in response to this letter no later than October 24, 2024. Thank you for your prompt attention to this crucial matter on behalf of Michigan's voters.

Respectfully,

Luke Bunting
Election Integrity Counsel
Republican National Committee

[1] This letter should in no way be construed as a formal challenge to any voter's eligibility.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/14/2024 4:14:19 PM
To: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: SUDC Memos

Thank you very much.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, October 11, 2024 2:33 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: SUDC Memos

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged & Confidential / Attorney Work Product

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks,
Robert
--

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Robert Cotter (he/him) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
224-235-2606 | @statesunited
robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 6/23/2023 8:04:57 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: King decision
Attachments: King decision.pdf

FYI

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECOMMENDED FOR PUBLICATION
Pursuant to Sixth Circuit I.O.P. 32.1(b)

File Name: 23a0134p.06

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT

TIMOTHY KING, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

L. LIN WOOD (21-1785); GREGORY J. ROHL, BRANDON JOHNSON, HOWARD KLEINHENDLER, SIDNEY POWELL, JULIA HALLER, and SCOTT HAGERSTROM (21-1786); EMILY NEWMAN (21-1787); STEFANIE LYNN JUNTTILA (22-1010), Interested Parties-Appellants,

v.

GRETCHEN WHITMER; JOCELYN BENSON; CITY OF DETROIT, MICHIGAN,

Defendants-Appellees.

Nos. 21-1785/1786/1787/22-1010

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan at Detroit.
No. 2:20-cv-13134—Linda V. Parker, District Judge.

Argued: December 8, 2022

Decided and Filed: June 23, 2023

Before: BOGGS, KETHLEDGE, and WHITE, Circuit Judges.

COUNSEL

ARGUED: Paul J. Stablein, PAUL STABLEIN, PLLC, Birmingham, Michigan, for Appellant in 21-1785. Sidney Powell, Dallas, Texas, in propriā personā and for Appellants in 21-1786. Timothy E. Galligan, TIMOTHY E. GALLIGAN PLLC, Clarkston, Michigan, for Appellant in 21-1787. Stefanie Lynn Junttila, FEDERAL CRIMINAL ATTORNEYS OF MICHIGAN, Detroit, Michigan, in propriā personā, in 22-1010. David H. Fink, FINK BRESSACK, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, for Appellee City of Detroit. Heather S. Meingast, OFFICE OF THE MICHIGAN ATTORNEY GENERAL, Lansing, Michigan, for Appellees Gretchen

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Whitmer and Jocelyn Benson in appeals 21-1786 and 22-1010. ON BRIEF: Paul J. Stablein, PAUL STABLEIN, PLLC, Birmingham, Michigan, for Appellant in 21-1785. Sidney Powell, SIDNEY POWELL, PC, Dallas, Texas and Howard Kleinhendler, HOWARD KLEINHENDLER ESQUIRE, New York, New York, in propriīs personīs and for Appellants in 21-1786. Timothy E. Galligan, TIMOTHY E. GALLIGAN PLLC, Clarkston, Michigan, for Appellant in 21-1787. Stefanie Lynn Junttila, FEDERAL CRIMINAL ATTORNEYS OF MICHIGAN, Detroit, Michigan, in propriā personā, in 22-1010. David H. Fink, Nathan J. Fink, FINK BRESSACK, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, for Appellee City of Detroit. Heather S. Meingast, Erik A. Grill, OFFICE OF THE MICHIGAN ATTORNEY GENERAL, Lansing, Michigan, for Appellees Gretchen Whitmer and Jocelyn Benson in appeals 21-1786 and 22-1010. Paul Orfanedes, JUDICIAL WATCH, INC., Washington, D.C., for Amicus Curiae in appeal 21-1786.

OPINION

KETHLEDGE, Circuit Judge. Three voters and three Republican nominees to the electoral college in Michigan brought this suit in a bid to overturn the results of the state's 2020 presidential election. The complaint plausibly alleged that Republican election challengers had been harassed and mistreated during vote counting at the TCF Center in Detroit, in violation of Michigan law. But the complaint also alleged that an international "collaboration"—with origins in Venezuela, extending to China and Iran, and including state actors in Michigan itself—had succeeded in generating hundreds of thousands of fraudulent votes in Michigan, thereby swinging the state's electoral votes to Joseph Biden. Many of those allegations—particularly the ones concerning Dominion voting machines—were refuted by the plaintiffs' own exhibits to their complaint. Other allegations arose from facially unreliable expert reports; still others were simply baseless. The district court found the entirety of the plaintiffs' complaint sanctionable, and ordered all of plaintiffs' attorneys, jointly and severally, to pay the defendants' and the City of Detroit's reasonable attorney's fees. We find only part of the complaint sanctionable, and thus reverse in part and affirm in part.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I.

A.

On November 3, 2020, Michigan voters cast their ballots in the presidential election. As soon as the polls closed, teams of state election officials began "canvassing" the results—a public process in which officials and observers verify that the number of votes cast in each precinct matches the number of voters listed on the poll lists. See M.C.L § 168.801. This canvass concluded on November 17. By the next day, every county in Michigan had reported its official election results to the Secretary of State and the Board of State Canvassers.

Michigan law allows any candidate with a "good-faith belief" that he lost the election due to "fraud or mistake" to request a recount within 48 hours of the canvass's conclusion. See M.C.L § 168.879(1)(b), (c). No candidate did so. As a result, on November 23, the bipartisan Board of State Canvassers unanimously certified results indicating that Joseph Biden had won the State of Michigan by 154,188 votes. That same day, Michigan's Governor transmitted those results to the United States Archivist. Michigan's electors for the Democratic Party were thereafter "considered elected." M.C.L. § 168.42. That ended the involvement of the Board and the Governor in the election.

B.

This case began two days later, on November 25, 2020. Plaintiffs sued Governor Gretchen Whitmer, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson, and the Board of State Canvassers (together, the "state defendants"), asserting that they had "fraudulently manipulat[ed] the vote" through "a wide-ranging interstate—and international—collaboration" to ensure that Biden would win the election. Compl. ¶1-3. Plaintiffs alleged that unspecified "foreign adversaries" and "hostile foreign governments" had accessed Dominion voting machines; that Detroit election officials had participated in countless violations of state election law, including an "illegal vote dump" of "tens of thousands" of votes; and that expert analysis showed that the election results were fraudulent. Compl. ¶84, 162, 224. As a result, plaintiffs argued, they were entitled to "the elimination of the mail ballots from counting in the 2020 election"—meaning all of them—and an order directing "the electors of the State of Michigan . . . to vote for President Donald Trump." Compl. ¶229-233. Sidney Powell, Scott Hagerstrom, and Gregory Rohl signed this complaint as the plaintiffs' attorneys, and five other lawyers—Emily Newman, Julia Haller, Brandon Johnson, Lin Wood, and Howard Kleinhendler—were listed as "Of Counsel."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On November 29, plaintiffs filed an emergency motion for injunctive relief, which repeated the arguments and requests of the complaint. The Democratic National Committee, the City of Detroit, and Robert Davis (an individual voter with no particular stake in the matter) each filed motions to intervene as defendants, which the court granted. On December 7, the court denied plaintiffs' motion for emergency relief. King v. Whitmer, 505 F. Supp. 3d 720 (E.D. Mich. 2020).

Plaintiffs thereafter hired a ninth attorney, Stephanie Junttila, to file an appeal with this court. Meanwhile, Michigan's electors were set to vote on December 14. Junttila and Powell filed a petition for certiorari with the Supreme Court, urging immediate intervention—because, they said, the case would become moot after the December 14 electoral-college vote. But the Supreme Court did not intervene, and on December 14 Michigan's electors cast their votes for Joseph Biden.

C.

On December 15, the City served plaintiffs and their attorneys with a "safe-harbor" letter, warning that the City would seek sanctions under Civil Rule 11 if plaintiffs did not voluntarily dismiss their complaint. Plaintiffs' counsel did not respond. On December 22, the state defendants e-mailed plaintiffs' counsel to seek their concurrence in upcoming motions to dismiss; Junttila responded and declined. That same day, the City, the DNC, and the state defendants filed separate motions to dismiss, and intervenor Davis filed a motion to sanction plaintiffs' counsel under 28 U.S.C. § 1927 and the court's inherent authority.

On January 5, 2021—three weeks after sending the safe-harbor letter without any response—the City moved for Rule 11 sanctions against plaintiffs and their attorneys, asking the court to impose a fine, to require plaintiffs' counsel to pay defendants' attorney's fees, and to refer them to their respective state bar associations for disciplinary proceedings. The state defendants joined the City's motion in full. On January 11 and 12, plaintiffs filed motions to extend the time to respond to the pending motions to dismiss; the court extended that time until January 21. On January 14, however, plaintiffs filed a response announcing that they would voluntarily dismiss the complaint. The state defendants thereafter filed a separate motion for sanctions under 28 U.S.C. § 1927 against Powell, Junttila, Rohl, and Hagerstrom.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In July 2021, the district court held a lengthy hearing on the sanctions motions, during which it questioned plaintiffs' attorneys about the suit. Lin Wood said that, before he heard about the sanctions hearing, he had no idea his name had been on any filings in the suit. But he admitted he had offered to help Powell with the lawsuit, and Powell herself said she had "specifically ask[ed]" Wood for his permission before including his name on the filings. Emily Newman and Stephanie Junttila, for their parts, each said their involvement in the case was minimal. The remaining attorneys did not contest their roles in the case. The court also discussed 15 of the plaintiffs' affidavits, to determine whether the attorneys had conducted a prefiling investigation as to the plausibility of their allegations. In response, counsel repeatedly argued that they could rely on affidavits without conducting any inquiry.

The district court thereafter held that plaintiffs' counsel had violated Rule 11 by filing their suit for an improper purpose and by failing to conduct an adequate prefiling inquiry into the legal and factual merits of their claims. The court further found that counsel had needlessly prolonged the proceedings, in violation of 28 U.S.C. § 1927, and that counsel had acted in bad faith, warranting sanctions under the court's inherent authority. The court therefore ordered all nine of plaintiffs' attorneys, jointly and severally, to pay the reasonable legal fees of the City and the moving state defendants. The court also ordered those attorneys to attend 12 hours of non-partisan legal education on election law and federal pleading standards, and directed the clerk to send disciplinary referrals to counsel's respective bar associations—which the clerk did the next day. The court denied Davis's motion for sanctions and declined to impose sanctions on plaintiffs themselves.

In a separate order, the court considered objections to the amount of the City's request. (No attorney had objected to the moving state defendants' request of $21,964.75.) Of the $182,192 the City requested, the court awarded $153,285.62.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These four appeals followed. Lin Wood, Emily Newman, and Stephanie Junttila each appeal individually, arguing that their involvement in this case was too minimal to warrant sanctions. Gregory Rohl, Brandon Johnson, Howard Kleinhendler, Sidney Powell, Julia Haller, and Scott Hagerstrom appeal together, arguing primarily that none of their conduct was sanctionable.

II.

We review the district court's imposition of sanctions for an abuse of discretion and its factual findings for clear error. Salkil v. Mount Sterling Twp. Police Dept., 458 F.3d 520, 527 (6th Cir. 2006); Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 55 (1991).

A.

We begin with Rule 11, which in the district court's view authorized almost all the sanctions awarded here. That rule provides, in relevant part, that attorneys who present a pleading or motion to the court thereby certify that:

> to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances:
>
> (1) [the pleading, written motion, or other paper] is not being presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass, cause unnecessary delay, or needlessly increase the cost of litigation;
>
> (2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for extending, modifying, or reversing existing law or for establishing new law; [and]
>
> (3) the factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, will likely have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery[.]

Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(1)-(3).

1.

As an initial matter, the district court held that the attorneys filed their suit for an improper purpose, in violation of Rule 11(b)(1). Specifically, the court asserted that "what very clearly reflects bad faith is that Plaintiffs' attorneys are trying to use the judicial process to frame a public 'narrative.'" But another word for "framing a public narrative" is speech; and Rule 11 cannot proscribe conduct protected by the First Amendment. True, an attorney may not say whatever she likes inside a courtroom. See Mezibov v. Allen, 411 F.3d 712, 717 (6th Cir. 2005). But an attorney's political speech outside a courtroom—including political speech about a lawsuit—is irrelevant to a Rule 11 inquiry about the suit itself. To the contrary, parties and their attorneys are free to use litigation "as a vehicle for effective political expression and association[.]" In re Primus, 436 U.S. 412, 431 (1978). That is as true in election cases as in any other case.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Speech outside the courtroom is what the district court apparently found objectionable here. But that speech did not show that counsel were "motivated by improper purposes such as harassment or delay," which means it was irrelevant to the district court's inquiry. First Bank of Marietta v. Hartford Underwriters Ins. Co., 307 F.3d 501, 519 (6th Cir. 2002). And contesting election results is not itself an improper purpose for litigation. See, e.g., Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000); Moss v. Bush, 828 N.E.2d 994 (Ohio 2005); Coleman v. Ritchie, 762 N.W.2d 218 (Minn. 2009). Nor does the record show that counsel were otherwise motivated by improper purposes. First Bank, 307 F.3d at 519. Thus, the district court did not identify any improper purpose supporting the imposition of sanctions under Rule 11(b)(1).

2.

The district court also sanctioned plaintiffs' counsel under Rule 11(b)(3), which mandates that attorneys engage in a reasonable prefiling inquiry to ensure that a pleading or motion is "well grounded in fact[.]" Merritt v. Int'l Ass'n of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, 613 F.3d 609, 626 (6th Cir. 2010). Rule 11 also imposes an implied "duty of candor," which attorneys violate whenever they misrepresent the evidence supporting their claims. Rentz v. Dynasty Apparel Indus., Inc., 556 F.3d 389, 395 (6th Cir. 2009). Thus, a court may sanction attorneys under Rule 11(b)(3) for factual assertions they know—or after reasonable investigation should have known—are false or wholly unsupported.

The first amended complaint contained 233 numbered paragraphs and over 800 pages of exhibits. Of the complaint's allegations, 60 are irrelevant for purposes of Rule 11 because they quoted legal standards or described undisputed facts. The remaining paragraphs fall into three categories, to wit: allegations about Dominion's voting systems; allegations about statistical anomalies in the election results; and allegations about misconduct by election workers in Detroit.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a.

According to plaintiffs, the election fraud began "with the election software and hardware from Dominion Voting Systems." Compl. ¶4. Counsel devoted 61 paragraphs of the complaint to allegations about Dominion. Those paragraphs make out the following theory: that "foreign oligarchs and dictators" founded Dominion in order to help Hugo Chavez manipulate Venezuelan elections; that Dominion accordingly designed its software to include hidden "ballot-stuffing" features; and that foreign states—along with Michigan's Governor and Secretary of State, apparently—then exploited those features during the 2020 Presidential elections. Compl. ¶4-12, 125-174.

i.

The complaint said the following about Dominion's origins:

> Smartmatic and Dominion were founded by foreign oligarchs and dictators to ensure computerized ballot-stuffing and vote manipulation to whatever level was needed to make certain Venezuelan dictator Hugo Chavez never lost another election. See Ex. 1 Redacted Declaration of Dominion Venezuela Whistleblower ("Dominion Whistleblower Report"). Notably, Chavez "won" every election thereafter.

Compl. ¶5. The plaintiffs' sole evidentiary support for these allegations was the so-called "Dominion Whistleblower Report"—allegedly authored by an unnamed "adult of sound mine [sic]" who purported to be a former member of Chavez's national guard. Yet the whistleblower report itself says nothing about Dominion's founding; instead, it describes a conspiracy "between a company known as Smartmatic" and "the Venezuelan government." Smartmatic is not Dominion, just as General Motors is not Ford. The report otherwise says that Dominion "relies upon software that is a descendant of the Smartmatic Election Management System." But the complaint's allegation that Dominion was founded as part of a Venezuelan conspiracy to commit election fraud was entirely baseless. The district court rightly concluded that this whole raft of allegations was sanctionable.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ii.

The complaint also alleged that Dominion's voting systems were easy to hack and impossible to audit. By way of background, according to a journal article that plaintiffs attached to the complaint, modern election-management systems come in three kinds. One is a hand-marked paper-ballot system, in which voters manually complete a blank ballot and then take it to a machine to be scanned and tabulated. Another is a ballot-marking system, in which voters make their selections on a touch screen and receive a printed, marked ballot to take to the scanner. And in an all-in-one system, a single machine marks, scans, and tabulates the ballots without further action by the voter.

The problem with the complaint's allegations regarding Michigan's voting system, simply enough, is that they concerned different kinds of systems than the one Michigan used. As any Michigan voter could have told counsel, Michigan used a hand-marked ballot system—which one of the plaintiff's own exhibits, an article by Dr. Andrew Appel, said is "the only practical technology for contestable, strongly defensible voting systems." That plaintiffs attached Appel's article in support of their criticisms of Michigan's voting system illustrates how little counsel understood about the system they were criticizing. Similarly, the complaint alleged (by way of the Chavista whistleblower) that a "core requirement of the Smartmatic software design ultimately adopted by Dominion for Michigan's elections was the software's ability to hide its manipulation of votes from any audit." Compl. ¶7. But hand-marked ballots obviously can be recounted (and thus audited) by hand. The complaint likewise alleged that "Michigan officials disregarded all the concerns that caused Dominion software to be rejected by the Texas Board of elections in 2020 because it was deemed vulnerable to undetected and non-auditable manipulation." Compl. ¶10. We set to one side that the "Texas decision" came after the relevant decision by "Michigan officials." For the Texas decision on its face concerned a ballot-marking system, not the hand-marked system that Michigan used. And Michigan's contract with Dominion, likewise an exhibit, was limited to the hand-marked ballot system.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiffs' own exhibits thus refuted rather than supported the complaint's allegations about the Dominion system used in Michigan. And an adequate prefiling inquiry under Rule 11 includes reading every document one plans to file. See, e.g., Garr v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 22 F.3d 1274, 1278, 1281 (3d Cir. 1994) (observing that "[w]e are at a total loss to understand how attorneys can urge that they have made a reasonable inquiry into the facts and law of a case when their complaint is predicated on allegedly false statements in documents which they have not bothered to read."). Plaintiffs' inquiry as to these allegations was patently inadequate.

iii.

Plaintiffs' counsel sought to bolster their theories about Dominion with two putative expert reports. Attorneys are rarely sanctioned for relying upon experts: expert testimony by definition rests on "specialized knowledge[,]" Fed. R. Evid. 702, and consulting an expert is itself a way to investigate a claim's factual plausibility. But there is no Rule 702 exception to Rule 11; an attorney's reliance upon a putative expert opinion must itself meet the standard of reasonableness imposed by Rule 11. That means the expert's opinion must not be unreliable on its face—either because of the expert's lack of qualifications, or the substance of the opinion itself. And the attorney cannot misrepresent what the expert himself actually says.

Here, as to the alleged international conspiracy, the complaint alleged that "Dominion software was accessed by agents acting on behalf of China and Iran in order to monitor and manipulate elections." Compl. ¶17. The sole basis for that allegation was the report of what the complaint called a "former electronic intelligence analyst with 305th Military Intelligence with experience gathering SAM missile system electronic intelligence." Compl. ¶17. But that "intelligence analyst" turned out to be a Dallas IT consultant who dropped out of an entry-level intelligence course after seven months' training. And even a cursory review of his putative report shows that it concerned the integrity of Dominion's public website, not its voting machines. That distinction should not have been hard for counsel to keep straight. And the complaint further misrepresented the report when the complaint alleged that "Dominion allowed foreign adversaries to access data and intentionally provided access to their infrastructure" (emphasis added). Compl. ¶161-162. That allegation was utterly baseless.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The attorneys also presented an affidavit from Russell Ramsland to substantiate their suspicion that foreign powers had hacked into Dominion's machines. Ramsland said that his background included "advanced converged telecom, highly advanced semiconductor materials, hospitality, commercial real estate development & operation," as well as running "Europe's highest grossing Tex-Mex restaurant." His specialized knowledge as to foreign election-interference was thus questionable on its face. More to the point, Ramsland claimed that Dominion machines had been "manipulated" in "four precincts/townships" in four Michigan counties (Wayne, Oakland, Macomb, and Kent), which he said resulted in "289,866 illegal votes." Ramsland's theory was that the Dominion machines used in those counties—which he said were "Model DRM16011"—lacked the "processing capacity" to count as many ballots as were counted in the relevant precincts on election night. But Ramsland likewise assumed that those counties used a ballot-marking system nowhere used in Michigan, which showed that he did not know which machines were used in Michigan—meaning that his assumptions about "processing capacity" were baseless. Moreover, a simple internet search would have shown that Macomb and Oakland counties did not use Dominion systems at all.

A reasonable prefiling investigation would have shown counsel that their allegations about Dominion were baseless. Those allegations were therefore sanctionable under Rule 11(b)(3).

b.

i.

In another part of the complaint—covering about 19 paragraphs—counsel relied upon several putative expert reports to allege that Michigan's election results were statistically anomalous or impossible. The complaint alleged that "evidence compiled by Matt Braynard using the National Change Address Database" showed that 13,248 voters who had moved to another state had nonetheless illegally voted in Michigan. Compl. ¶119. But Braynard's opinion came in the form of four tweets, each 280 characters or less, which said nothing about his qualifications or the data he supposedly employed. That opinion was unreliable on its face; counsel violated Rule 11 by relying upon it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Counsel also relied on a report by Dr. William Briggs, who—according to the complaint—opined that "Approximately 30,000 Michigan Mail-In Ballots Were Lost, and Approximately 30,000 More Were Fraudulently Recorded." See Compl. ¶108-112. But Briggs drew that conclusion by taking as true a second Braynard document, the so-called "Braynard Survey." That survey purported to describe Braynard's "multi-state phone survey data of 248 Michigan voters." Suffice it to say that Briggs's statistical extrapolations from that survey—30,000 lost absentee ballots, and 30,000 fraudulent ones—were facially unreliable as well.

The complaint likewise cited Dr. Stanley Young, who asserted that Biden's gains over Trump among new voters in nine large, metropolitan counties (e.g., Oakland, Washtenaw, Wayne, Kent, Kalamazoo) were "unexpected." According to Young, Biden received 190,000 "excess" votes in those counties because Biden's margin of victory there was 190,000 votes greater than Clinton's margin had been in 2016. Every one of those counties has a large suburban population, which suggests a simpler explanation than an international conspiracy for that shift in votes. And by Young's logic, Trump received an "excess" of 29,000 votes in the rest of Michigan. Still, counsel could have reasonably relied on Young's opinion that this shift was unexpected. What the complaint actually said, however, was that "Dr. Young's analysis indicates that, when the entire State of Michigan is concerned, there were likely over 190,000 'excess' and likely fraudulent votes, which once again is significantly larger than Biden's 154,188 margin in Michigan." Compl. ¶118 (emphasis added). An "unexpected" shift in suburban votes in Young's report thus became, in the complaint, 190,000 fraudulent votes that swung the election. That allegation misrepresented Young's report and was sanctionable. See Rentz, 556 F.3d at 395.

ii.

Plaintiffs' reliance on four other experts was not sanctionable. First, the complaint accurately stated Dr. Louis Bouchard's conclusion that several spikes in Biden's vote count in Michigan on election night were "statistically impossible." Compl. ¶122. Dr. Bouchard's reasoning was that "the election results" showed "a tight race" in both Florida and Michigan; that Biden's vote total in Florida had no corresponding spike; and thus the spikes in Michigan were

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"anomalous." The proposition that Michigan's reporting of vote totals should track Florida's is without support; but Bouchard's technical analysis was not facially unreasonable to a layperson.

Second, Thomas Davis asserted that the share of Democrats who voted by absentee ballot exceeded the share of Republicans who did so by a similar percentage throughout the state—which, in Davis's view, suggested that a computer algorithm had manipulated the vote count. Occam's Razor suggests that Democrats just voted absentee more than Republicans did, but Davis's opinion—that the consistency of this difference across counties was suspicious—was not unreasonable on its face.

Third, Dr. Eric Quinnell and Dr. Young together opined that Michigan's election results were "mathematically anomalous," because, they said, the new voters in several Michigan townships mostly voted for Biden. Their report appears to assume that everyone who voted for Trump in 2016 voted for him again in 2020, that everyone who voted for Clinton in 2016 voted for Biden in 2020, and that Biden then took an outsized share of "new" voters. Although those assumptions might be implausible, we cannot say this opinion was facially unreasonable.

Finally, Robert Wilgus asserted that the number of absentee ballots that voters requested and returned on the same day warranted "further investigation." The Michigan Constitution enables voters to do both of those things on the same day, so Wilgus's assertion that doing so warrants investigation is dubious. See Mich. Const. Art II, § 4(h). But his conclusion was tepid enough not to be facially unreasonable.

c.

A third part of the complaint comprised 79 paragraphs of allegations about misconduct at the "TCF Center," which is where "Absentee Voter Counting Boards" counted all of Detroit's absentee ballots.

i.

The complaint's most provocative allegation as to these boards was that they "fraudulently added tens of thousands of new ballots and new voters in the early morning and evening of November 4." Compl. ¶82 (capitalization removed). "Perhaps the most probative evidence" in support of this allegation, according to the complaint, came from the affidavit of Dominion employee Melissa Carone. Compl. ¶84. She wrote:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> There was two vans that pulled into the garage of the counting room, one on day shift and one on night shift. These vans were apparently bringing food into the building because they only had enough food for not even 1/3 of the workers. I never saw any food coming out of these vans, coincidentally it was announced on the news that Michigan had discovered over 100,000 more ballots—not even two hours after the last van left.

On the basis of this affidavit, the complaint alleged that Carone had "witnessed" an "illegal vote dump, as well as several other violations." Compl. ¶84. That allegation illustrates the complaint's pattern of embellishment to the point of misrepresentation. The only thing that Carone said she witnessed was the arrival of "two vans"—period. Powell and her co-appellants now concede that "Carone made it clear she had seen no ballots." Reply at 24. That means it was sanctionable to allege that she did. Rentz, 556 F.3d at 395.

Counsel also used two affidavits copied from a state-court case—Constantino v. Detroit—to support the "illegal vote dump" theory. The attorneys used the first affidavit, from election challenger Robert Cushman, to allege that "several thousand" ballots had been "fraudulently" counted at TCF. Compl. ¶83. Cushman was apparently a layperson as to election law; and in Constantino, Christopher Thomas—who served as Michigan's Director of Elections for over 30 years—submitted a detailed affidavit explaining that none of Cushman's observations suggested any violation of Michigan election law. Plaintiffs' counsel were not required to treat Thomas's affidavit as sacrosanct. But a reasonable prefiling inquiry—before renewing Cushman's allegations of fraud—would have included review of Thomas's explanation and a reasoned assessment as to whether those allegations remained plausible. The record here reveals no such inquiry on counsel's part.

The second affidavit from Constantino came from election challenger Andrew Sitto, who wrote in relevant part:

> At approximately 4:30 a.m., tens of thousands of ballots were brought in and placed on eight long tables. Unlike the other ballots, these boxes were brought in from the rear of the room. The same procedure was performed on the ballots that arrived at approximately 4:30 a.m., but I specifically noticed that every ballot I > observed was cast for Joe Biden. While counting these new ballots, I heard counters say at least five or six times that all five or six ballots were for Joe Biden. All ballots sampled that I heard and observed were for Joe Biden.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

An attorney could legitimately use an affidavit like Sitto's to begin (rather than end) a line of inquiry regarding potential counting irregularities. But counsel here cited Sitto's affidavit as proof of "[t]he most egregious example of election workers' fraudulent and illegal behavior" at the TCF Center. That too was a gross exaggeration. Sitto did not say that the "tens of thousands of ballots" he saw were fraudulent. Compl. at ¶82. Nor did he say that election workers treated those ballots any differently from any others—to the contrary, he said the counters followed the "same procedure" as before. And though Sitto said that "every ballot" he observed was for Biden, his affidavit implied that he heard only 30 or so of the votes that were counted.

The complaint also cited an affidavit from Articia Bomer, who said she "believe[d]" that some of the counters at TCF "were changing votes that had been cast for Donald Trump and other Republican candidates." The complaint called this "eyewitness testimony of election workers manually changing votes for Trump to votes for Biden[.]" Compl. at ¶91. That too was an embellishment, considering that Bomer offered no basis for her belief.

Considered both individually and collectively, the affidavits cited in the complaint did not afford counsel a credible basis to allege that "tens of thousands" of fraudulent votes were counted at TCF. Those allegations therefore lacked the requisite basis in evidence. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(3).

ii.

The complaint also alleged various lesser violations of Michigan election law. The problem with those allegations, simply stated, is that counsel apparently did not read the statute they said was violated. For instance, the complaint includes 11 paragraphs of allegations about problems with verification of signatures and birthdates on absentee ballots at the TCF Center. But Michigan law does not require birthdate verification for absentee voters. See M.C.L. § 168.765a. Nor do the counting boards verify any signatures for the absentee ballots; instead, by the terms of the same statute, the city clerk's office would have already done that before the ballots reached the TCF Center. See M.C.L. § 168.765a(6) (absentee ballots delivered to absent-voter counting boards "must be" accompanied by "a statement by the clerk that the signatures of the absent voters on the envelopes have been checked and found to agree with the signatures of the voters on the registration cards"). The complaint did not allege otherwise; its allegations about improper verification at the TCF Center were therefore baseless.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Counsel similarly alleged that voters who had requested absentee ballots later illegally voted in person. But the same statute specifies that Michigan law "does not prohibit an absent voter from voting in person within the voter's precinct at an election, notwithstanding that the voter may have applied for an absent voter ballot and the ballot may have been mailed or otherwise delivered to the voter." M.C.L. § 168.765a(7). And where the complaint did specifically allege double voting—as in paragraph 93—it misrepresented the supporting affidavit, which said only that some people who voted in person "had already applied for an absentee ballot." (Emphasis added).

Of a piece was the complaint's allegation that election challengers had been improperly barred from observing the "ballot-duplication" process (meaning the process by which ballots that cannot be read by a machine are hand-copied onto ballots that can be scanned). See Compl. ¶13, 76-77, 189. For the same statute says that "at least 1 election inspector from each major political party" must witness the duplication. M.C.L. § 168.765a(10) (emphasis added). Under Michigan law, "challenger" and "inspector" mean two different things: election challengers are party volunteers with no official training in election procedure, whereas election inspectors are officials appointed by the Board of Election Commissioners. M.C.L. § 168.765a(2). The complaint unwittingly used those terms interchangeably; and nowhere does it suggest that anyone barred an election inspector from observing the ballot-duplication process.

The statute at issue here ran three pages; a reasonable prefiling inquiry as to all these allegations would have included reading it.

iii.

The complaint's remaining allegations about election-related events at TCF Center were not sanctionable. One witness said she had seen an election worker manually correct ballots that the witness thought should have been discarded as "over-votes"; the complaint fairly repeated that allegation. The same was true as to allegations by two challengers who thought they had seen someone move "spoiled" ballots to a "to be counted" pile. And counsel reasonably relied on the affidavit of one woman who said she had seen a voting record for her late son, purportedly reflecting that, after his death, he had voted in the 2020 election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The complaint's most credible allegations were that election workers at the TCF Center mistreated, intimidated, and discriminated against Republican election challengers. Indeed some three dozen detailed affidavits supported the complaint's allegations to that effect. Those affidavits were notably consistent in their description of partisan hostility at the TCF Center. For instance, election challenger Abbie Helminen attested that, when the police removed a (presumably Republican) election challenger from the center, "the whole room erupted in claps & cheers, this included the poll workers." She also said that "Democrats outnumbered Republicans by at least 2:1." Similarly, Anna Pennala wrote that she "witnessed a pattern of chaos, intimidation, secrecy, and hostility by the poll workers," and that she saw workers "cheer, jeer, and clap when poll challengers were escorted out." And Emily Steffans wrote that she was "afraid . . . to challenge any ballots" because she "had watched two GOP people escorted out by the police," again to cheers from "democrat volunteers and poll workers at the table."

The intimidation and harassment alleged in these affidavits was potentially criminal. See M.C.L. § 168.734 ("Any officer or election board who shall prevent the presence of any such challenger as above provided, or shall refuse or fail to provide such challenger with conveniences for the performance of the duties expected of him, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000.00, or by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding two years"). And the rank partisanship among election workers described in these affidavits undermines public confidence in elections just as much as bogus allegations about voting machines do. The district court should not have dismissed these affiants' allegations out of hand.

3.

The district court next held that the entire complaint was independently sanctionable under Rule 11(b)(2). That rule requires attorneys to certify that "the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions" in their filings "are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for extending, modifying, or reversing existing law or for establishing new law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(2). Thus, in short, frivolous "legal contentions" are sanctionable under Rule 11(b)(2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a.

Three of the complaint's legal claims—an equal-protection claim, a due-process claim, and a claim under the Michigan Constitution—relied exclusively on frivolous allegations of widespread voter fraud. That means those claims were already sanctionable in full under Rule 11(b)(3). Thus, we need not consider whether the legal contentions in support of the complaint's voter-fraud claims were sanctionable under Rule 11(b)(2) as well.

b.

The defendants argue that the plaintiffs' remaining claims rested on frivolous legal contentions. A legal contention is frivolous if it is "obviously without merit" under existing law and unsupported by a good-faith argument to change or extend the law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b)(2); Waldman v. Stone, 854 F.3d 853, 855 (6th Cir. 2017) (discussing frivolous claims under Appellate Rule 38).

i.

As an initial matter, counsel never should have asserted any claims against the Board of Canvassers in this case. The Board is a state agency; and unless the state waives Eleventh Amendment immunity or Congress abrogates it, state agencies are immune from federal suit. Boler v. Earley, 865 F.3d 391, 410 (6th Cir. 2017). Here, the state did not waive immunity and Congress did not abrogate it, and plaintiffs have never argued otherwise. Hence the Board was indisputably entitled to sovereign immunity. Id. Moreover, the Board had already certified the election results by the time of plaintiffs' suit, and thus lacked power to redress any of plaintiffs' alleged harms. Hence the plaintiffs also lacked standing to sue the Board. See Parsons v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 801 F.3d 701, 715-16 (6th Cir. 2015). The legal contentions in support of these claims, therefore, were frivolous. See Waldman, 854 F.3d at 855.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ii.

That leaves two federal claims against Governor Whitmer and Secretary Benson and a handful of state claims. The first federal claim was one under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for alleged violations of the Elections and Electors Clauses of the Constitution. The theory behind that claim, as set forth in the complaint, was that the Governor and the Secretary of State "unilaterally" chose to "deviate from the requirements of the Michigan Election Code." Compl. ¶23, 179. That this claim was one of "unilateral" action means it depended on actions specific to the Governor and Secretary themselves. Yet the complaint alleged no such actions, apart from a conclusory allegation in the complaint's introduction (¶3) about "multifaceted schemes and artifices implemented by Defendants and their collaborators[.]" And that allegation itself obviously could not support this claim. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662 (2009). This claim was therefore both legally and factually frivolous.

A second § 1983 claim against the Governor and Secretary was one for selective enforcement of election law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. That claim presents a close question. As explained above, counsel had an evidentiary basis for pleading that Republican challengers were disproportionately excluded from and otherwise discriminated against in the TCF Center. To make out a selective-enforcement claim, counsel would have needed to plead that state actors "intended to accomplish some forbidden aim" through a "truly discriminatory application of a neutral law." Stemler v. City of Florence, 126 F.3d 856, 874 (6th Cir. 1996). Although counsel spent only a single paragraph of the complaint on this theory (¶189), that paragraph was a nonfrivolous attempt to state those elements. Counsel also requested injunctive relief targeting the alleged harms. Compl. ¶194. That is not to say the claim would have survived a motion to dismiss. For instance, the complaint did not explain what role, if any, the Governor and Secretary played in the law's discriminatory application. On balance, however, this claim was "meritless rather than frivolous." See Waldman, 854 F.3d at 855. Hence it was not sanctionable under Rule 11(b)(2).

The complaint also asserted several state-law claims against the Governor and Secretary. We have already explained that counsel's claims under the absentee-voting statute were sanctionable because the complaint failed to describe any violations of that statute. See M.C.L.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

§ 168.765(a). Likewise frivolous was the complaint's attempt to state a claim under M.C.L. § 168.734, which merely sets forth certain criminal penalties for mistreatment of election challengers. But the complaint's claim under a neighboring election-challenger provision, M.C.L. § 168.733, was not frivolous. That claim had a factual basis, as described above. Although that provision also does not expressly create a private cause of action, its terms—e.g., "[a] person shall not threaten or intimidate a challenger while performing" some 13 different activities—leave room to argue in good faith that one should be implied under Michigan law. See Pompey v. Gen. Motors Corp., 385 Mich. 537 (1971). This claim was not frivolous.

c.

The defendants argue that even the complaint's nonfrivolous claims were sanctionable because the complaint's requests for relief were frivolous. But parties can tailor those requests as the case proceeds, and the complaint here included a request for any "relief as is just and proper." Compl. ¶233. That means counsel could have filed this lawsuit without any of the requests for relief that defendants say were frivolous. Those requests alone therefore do not render the nonfrivolous legal claims sanctionable. Nor did the district court identify any other ground to support a determination that the entirety of this complaint was frivolous.

Plaintiffs, for their part, defend the inadequacy of their complaint by pointing to the time constraints inherent in election contests. But Rule 11 imposes a safe-harbor period to protect attorneys from sanctions for hasty mistakes. A party may seek sanctions only after providing notice of the alleged violations, which the opposing party then has 21 days to cure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c); see also advisory committee's note to 1993 amendment ("[T]he timely withdrawal of a contention will protect a party against a motion for sanctions."). Here, the City sent plaintiffs a detailed letter specifying the allegedly sanctionable material. Plaintiffs could have avoided sanctions by abandoning frivolous claims and allegations and concentrating the attention of the court on what remained. They did not do so, and that is why we uphold much of their Rule 11 sanctions today.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

4.

In sum, therefore, the complaint stated two claims that were nonfrivolous: a selective-enforcement claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and a state-law claim under M.C.L. § 168.733. Neither claim was sanctionable under Rule 11. We agree with the district court, however, that plaintiffs' other claims were all sanctionable under that rule.

The same analysis for the most part applies to plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order. But that motion focused exclusively on election fraud and contained only a single sentence on plaintiffs' nonfrivolous allegations about election challengers. With the exception of that sentence and counsel's discussion of their experts, then, the motion relied entirely on allegations that were factually frivolous, and was to that extent sanctionable under Rule 11.

B.

The defendants also argue, and the district court agreed, that counsel are liable for the entirety of the defendants' reasonable attorney's fees after December 14—because the plaintiffs failed to dismiss their case after it had concededly become moot. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1927, courts may award sanctions against an attorney who "multiplies the proceedings in any case unreasonably and vexatiously." Courts may award sanctions under this section "when an attorney knows or reasonably should know that a claim pursued is frivolous" and yet continues to litigate it. Waeschle v. Dragovic, 687 F.3d 292, 296 (6th Cir. 2012).

Here, plaintiffs themselves asserted in a petition to the Supreme Court that this case would become moot on December 14, 2020—the date Michigan's certified electors would cast their votes. Yet on December 15—when defendants sought plaintiffs' consent to a voluntary dismissal—counsel declined on the ground that the district court lacked jurisdiction to dismiss the case while it was on appeal. That excuse was makeweight: plaintiffs obviously could have voluntarily dismissed their appeal and complaint alike. Hence they unreasonably multiplied the proceedings by declining to dismiss their suit. See Lemaster v. United States, 891 F.2d 115, 118 (6th Cir. 1989).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The sanctioned attorneys now argue that the case gained "new life" when "an alternative slate of electors for Michigan was advanced in early January." That formulation is passive for a reason: what actually occurred in January is that the "alternative slate of electors" purported to elect themselves for the purpose of casting Michigan's electoral votes. And counsel do not explain why any competent attorney would take that self-election seriously for purposes of persisting in this lawsuit. Moreover, plaintiff's refusal to dismiss their suit had concrete consequences for defendants, who were forced to research and brief motions to dismiss that they should not have needed to file. The district court was right to impose sanctions under § 1927.

Finally, as noted above, the district court also invoked its inherent authority as an alternative basis for sanctions. But we need not review the court's exercise of that authority here. Unlike Rule 11, inherent-authority sanctions require a showing of bad faith in addition to frivolousness. See Big Yank Corp. v. Lib. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 125 F.3d 308, 314 (6th Cir. 1997). The court's inherent authority therefore does not support sanctions for the matters we have found non-sanctionable; and as to the sanctionable ones, Rule 11 and § 1927 sufficed.

C.

1.

Some of the attorneys argue they were not responsible for the sanctionable filings in this case. Upon finding a violation of Rule 11, the court may sanction any attorney who "violated the rule or is responsible for the violation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c). An attorney violates the rule directly by "presenting" an offending pleading to the court, such as "by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating it." Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b).

Separately, under 28 U.S.C. § 1927, the court may impose sanctions on attorneys whose conduct "falls short of the obligations owed by a member of the bar to the court." Salkil, 458 F.3d at 532. Here, the attorneys who appealed individually—Emily Newman, Stephanie Junttila, and Lin Wood, respectively—each argue they were not responsible for any frivolous filing under either standard.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a.

Although Emily Newman's name appeared on the complaint, she did not file or sign it. And at the sanctions hearing, Newman said she played only a minimal role in the litigation. Nobody at the hearing argued otherwise; in fact, Powell told the court that Newman "had no role whatseoever in the drafting and content of the[] complaints." And the district court made no factual findings to suggest that Newman was involved in drafting the complaint, the motion for preliminary injunction, or any other filing that defended plaintiffs' frivolous claims. Yet the court found that Newman was responsible for the complaint because it listed her as "Of Counsel." Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c). The district court thus found Newman responsible more as a matter of form than as a matter of real responsibility. We therefore reverse the imposition of sanctions as to Newman.

b.

Stephanie Junttila did not appear in the case until December 8, 2020, by which time the other attorneys had already filed the complaint and the motion for a preliminary injunction. Yet the district court found that Junttila had "advocated" those filings—when she argued later that they were not sanctionable. But to seek relief on a claim is plainly different from arguing later that the claim was not frivolous. Junttila did only the latter; she never advocated the frivolous claims themselves. The district court's reasoning on this point was mistaken.

Junttila did personally decline defendants' request for a voluntary dismissal. But Junttila says she lacked the authority to agree to a voluntary dismissal, and nobody argues otherwise. To the contrary, Powell (to her credit) candidly stated at oral argument that she was responsible for the decision to continue the case on December 14. We therefore reverse the imposition of sanctions as to Junttila as well.

c.

Lin Wood says that someone placed his name on the complaint without his consent and that he knew nothing about this case until he "saw something in the newspaper about being sanctioned." But two months before, Wood filed a brief in the Delaware Supreme Court, in which he said he "represented plaintiffs challenging the results of the 2020 Presidential election in Michigan and Wisconsin." Wood also tweeted about this case in December 2020, six months before the sanctions hearing, saying that "the enemy is running scared." Moreover, Powell said she "did specifically ask Mr. Wood for his permission" to put his name on the complaint; and Gregory Rohl submitted an affidavit stating that Wood "spearheaded" this suit. Suffice it to say that the district court did not clearly err when it found Wood not credible as to his involvement here. Nor, contrary to Wood's argument, was the district court required to undertake "an individual analysis" of his conduct before it could sanction him. See NPF Franchising, LLC v. SY Dawgs, LLC, 37 F.4th 369, 380-81 (6th Cir. 2022).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wood also argues that the state defendants never sought any sanctions against him. The state defendants concede that point on appeal. Thus, as to Wood, we reverse only the court's award of attorney's fees to the state defendants.

2.

The remaining attorneys argue that the district court's sanctions were excessive. The district court awarded the City and the state defendants their full reasonable attorney's fees, required each attorney to take 12 hours of continuing legal education, and sent a referral for disciplinary proceedings to each attorney's respective bar association.

a.

Courts must limit any award of attorney's fees to only "those expenses directly caused" by the sanctionable conduct. Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp, 496 U.S. 384, 406-07 (1990). When a filing is entirely baseless, sanctionable conduct causes every expense reasonably incurred in responding to it. Id. But when, as here, a filing is partially non-sanctionable, courts may award only fees incurred in responding to the sanctionable parts. Id.; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c)(4); Garner v. Cuyahoga Cnty. Juv. Ct., 554 F.3d 624, 635-47 (2009).

Here—given the district court's finding that the entire complaint was sanctionable—the court did not distinguish between fees generated in response to sanctionable and nonsanctionable parts of the complaint. But courts are loath to prolong satellite litigation about fees, and here the record allows us to sort out those fees for ourselves.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

i.

The district court awarded the state defendants $21,964.75 for 57.8 hours of work by two attorneys. The state attorneys' billing records show they spent about 6 hours responding in various ways to nonfrivolous parts of the complaint, including review of the expert reports on which counsel reasonably relied. Given the hourly rates for the attorneys involved, that work amounted to $2,325 in fees. We therefore reduce the fee award to the state defendants to $19,639.75.

The district court awarded the City $153,285.62, about $30,000 less than it had requested. The City's billing records show that its attorneys spent approximately 26 hours responding to the nonfrivolous components of plaintiffs' complaint and preliminary-injunction motion. This work amounted to $8,450 in fees, which we will deduct from the City's award.

Wood argues that the City's fee award included too many hours related to the sanctions litigation. "The time, effort, and money a party must spend to get another party sanctioned realistically is part of the harm caused by that other party's wrongful conduct." Norelus v. Denny's Inc., 628 F.3d 1270, 1298 (11th Cir. 2010). Thus, under Rule 11 a court may award fees incurred while pursuing sanctions. Id.; see also Chambers, 501 U.S. at 32.

The record here, however, shows that the district court awarded fees for a number of tasks that bore little connection to sanctionable conduct in this case. Those tasks included, for example, reviewing a Michigan State Senate report about the elections, and responding to filings by intervenor Davis, whose involvement in the case was no fault of plaintiffs' counsel. The billing records show that together these tasks consumed about 37.5 hours, which amounted to an additional $12,025 in attorney's fees. The district court abused its discretion when it included those fees in the City's award. See Cooter & Gell, 496 U.S. at 406. With both of these deductions, then, we reduce the City's award to $132,810.62.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The sanctioned attorneys also argue that, as an intervenor, the City should not receive more in attorney's fees than the original defendants did. That argument is meritless: the City was all but compelled to intervene in this case, given (among other things) the plaintiffs' request that all the absentee ballots from the City's residents be "eliminat[ed]" from the vote count. Compl. ¶232.

ii.

The attorneys' remaining objections concern the court's non-monetary sanctions—namely the disciplinary referrals and the required legal education. As an initial matter, we reject the state defendants' argument that the attorneys' appeal of those sanctions is moot. Non-monetary sanctions cause continuing harm to counsel's reputation as attorneys, and thus present a live controversy even after an attorney complies with them. See, e.g., United States v. Talao, 222 F.3d 1133, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000); In re Goldstein, 430 F.3d 106, 111 (2d Cir. 2005).

But we reject the attorneys' arguments on the merits. They assert that the district court violated the local rule governing disciplinary referrals; but that rule permits such referrals rather than proscribes them. See E.D.M.I. Local Rule 83.22(c). Nor do the nonmonetary sanctions violate the First Amendment. See Mezibov, 411 F.3d at 717.

* * *

We reverse the district court's imposition of sanctions against Emily Newman and Stephanie Junttila, respectively; we reverse the state defendants' fee award as to Lin Wood; we reduce the City's award to $132,810.62; and we reduce the state defendants' fee award to $19,639.75. Otherwise, the district court's imposition of sanctions in its August 25, 2021 order is affirmed.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Sent: 10/18/2024 11:53:11 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Fw: Kennedy v. Benson
Attachments: Kennedy Application for Emergency Injunction Pending Appeal.pdf; Certificate of Service .pdf

FYI

From: Elizabeth K. Lilienthal <ELilienthal@dickinson-wright.com>
Sent: Friday, October 18, 2024 7:02 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Cc: Charles R. Spies <CSpies@dickinson-wright.com>; Brandon L. Debus <BDebus@dickinson-wright.com>; Jessica F. Bymers <JBymers@dickinson-wright.com>; Dahlyn L. Sugrue <DSugrue@dickinson-wright.com>
Subject: Kennedy v. Benson

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good evening,

Please see attached, which have been submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States for filing.

Thank you.

Elizabeth K. Lilienthal
Associate Attorney
O:202-659-6944
ELilienthal@dickinsonwright.com

1825 Eye St. N.W., Suite 900, Washington DC, 20006

The information contained in this e-mail, including any attachments, is confidential, intended only for the named recipient(s), and may be legally privileged. If you are not the intended recipient, please delete the e-mail and any attachments, destroy any printouts that you may have made and notify us immediately by return e-mail. Neither this transmission nor any attachment shall be deemed for any purpose to be a "signature" or "signed" under any electronic transmission acts, unless otherwise specifically stated herein. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No. _____

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,

Applicant,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, IN HER OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE,

Respondent.

Application of Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. on Appeal from the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit for an Emergency Injunction Pending Appeal Removing Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.'s Name from Michigan's 2024 Ballot

To the Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and Circuit Justice for the Sixth Circuit

CHARLES R. SPIES
Counsel of Record
Brandon L. Debus*
Elizabeth K. Lilienthal*
*(APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION FORTHCOMING)
DICKINSON WRIGHT PLLC
1825 I Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 466-5964
CSpies@dickinson-wright.com

Counsel for Applicant

October 18, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Applicant in this Court is Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. Applicant is the Plaintiff in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan and the Appellant in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Respondent in this Court is Jocelyn Benson, who serves as Michigan's Secretary of State. Secretary Benson is the Defendant in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan and the Appellee in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. Secretary Benson was sued below solely in her official capacity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING I

INTRODUCTION 1

JURISDICTION 3

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 3

A. Mr. Kennedy Suspends His Presidential Campaign and Withdraws from the Michigan Ballot. 3

B. Mr. Kennedy Files Suit Against the Secretary in Michigan. 5

C. Kennedy Files a Federal Lawsuit. 6

D. Court of Appeals Proceedings 6

ARGUMENT 8

A. Standard of Review for Stays and Injunctions Pending Appeal 8

B. This Action is Not Barred by Res Judicata 9

C. Secretary Benson Violated Mr. Kennedy's Constitutional Rights and Michigan Law by Recertifying Mr. Kennedy as a Presidential Candidate After the September 6, 2024 Statutory Deadline. 11

D. All Harm Factors Strongly Favor Mr. Kennedy 15

CONCLUSION 17

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Am. Trucking Associations, Inc. v. Gray, 483 U.S. 1306, 108 S. Ct. 2, 97 L. Ed. 2d 790 (1987) 8

Amoco Production Co. v. Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 107 S.Ct. 1396, 94 L.Ed.2d 542 (1987) 8

Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983) 12

Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 112 S.Ct. 2059, 119 L.Ed.2d 245 (1992) 12

Cousins v. Wigoda, 419 U. S. 477 (1975) 12

Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U.S. 351, 24 L.Ed. 195 (1877) 9

Dart v. Dart, 460 Mich. 573 N.W. 2d 82 (1999) 11

Democratic Nat'l Comm. v. Wis. State Leg., --- U.S. ----, 141 S. Ct. 28 (2020) 17

Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d 547 (1976) 15

Kennedy v. Benson, 2024 WL 4327046 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024) 2, 7, 11

Kennedy v. Benson, 2024 WL 4501252 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) 2, 7, 9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16

Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 349 U.S. 322, S.Ct. 865 L.Ed. 1122 (1955) 9

Ledbetter v. Baldwin, 479 U.S. 1309, 75 S.Ct. 635, 99 L.Ed.2d 689 (1986) 9

Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) 1

Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979) 9

Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S. 674, 128 S.Ct. 2207, 171 L.Ed.2d 1 (2008) 8

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart, 423 U.S. 1327, 96 S.Ct. 251, L.Ed.2d 237 (1975) 8

Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1 S.Ct. 5 L.Ed.2d 1 (2006) 16

Republican Nat'l Comm. v. Democratic Nat'l Comm., 589 U.S. 423 S. Ct. 1205 L.Ed.2d 452 (2020) 17

Roman Cath. Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 592 U.S. 141 S. Ct. 63, 208 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020) 8, 15

Rostker v. Goldberg, 448 U.S. 1306, 101 S.Ct. 1, 65 L.Ed.2d 1098 (1980) 9

Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. & Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 US 47, 164 L Ed 2d 156 (2006) 13

Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727 (1974) 13

Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533 (1989) 13

United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (1968) 13

W. Va. State Bd. Of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943) 14

Weinberger v. Romero–Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 102 S.Ct. 1798, 72 L.Ed.2d 91 (1982) 8

Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 129 S. Ct. 365, 172 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2008) 8

Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 97 S.Ct. 1274, 51 L.Ed. 2d 752 (1977) 15

Statutes

28 U.S.C. § 1254 3

28 U.S.C. § 1651(a) 3, 8

28 U.S.C. § 2101(f) 3

Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648 2

Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(2) 3

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Other Authorities

1B J. Moore, Federal Practice (2d ed. 1974) 9

Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 47 (Tent. Draft No. 1, Mar. 28, 1973) (merger) 9

Constitutional Provisions

Article III, Section 2, Clause 2 3

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

APPLICATION FOR EMERGENCY INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL

INTRODUCTION

"It is the duty of the secretary of state to conform to the law, and in this he is an officer of the United States, bound to obey the laws." Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 158 (1803). Unfortunately, Secretary Jocelyn Benson's ("Secretary Benson") actions contravene that longstanding principle.

This action arises from Secretary Benson's unilateral decision to recertify Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. ("Mr. Kennedy") as a Presidential candidate after the September 6, 2024 statutory deadline. Mr. Kennedy sought to withdraw from the Presidential race on August 23, 2024. Secretary Benson refused to remove Mr. Kennedy's name from the list of candidates to be included on the November 2024 general election ballot in Michigan. As a result, Mr. Kennedy initiated litigation in the Michigan Court of Claims, which found that Michigan law did not allow for Mr. Kennedy to withdraw from the ballot.

Mr. Kennedy immediately appealed, and, on September 6, 2024, the Michigan Court of Appeals reversed the Michigan Court of Claims and instructed the Secretary of State to remove Mr. Kennedy's name from the list of candidates to be included on the ballot. Secretary Benson abided by this order and then appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court.

On September 9, 2024, the Michigan Supreme Court issued an order that simply provided that Mr. Kennedy was not permitted to withdraw from the Presidential race. Notably absent from the order was any language instructing Secretary Benson to recertify the list of candidates to include Mr. Kennedy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Under Michigan law, September 6, 2024 was the deadline for Secretary Benson to certify the list of candidates to be included on the ballot:

> The secretary of state, at least 60 days and not more than 90 days preceding any regular state or district primary or election, shall send to the county clerk of each county a notice in writing of such primary or election, specifying in such notice the federal, state and district offices for which candidates are to be nominated or elected, as well as any constitutional amendments and questions to be submitted thereat.

Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.648.

Michigan law does not provide for any recertification of the list of candidates after the statutory deadline.

Despite a clear lack of authority, Secretary Benson recertified Mr. Kennedy as a candidate for President of the United States on the Michigan ballot. Secretary Benson's conduct is unprecedented, such that review by this Court is absolutely necessary:

> The Secretary's decision to belatedly add a withdrawn candidate to the ballot, over the candidate's objection no less, was head scratching, unnecessary, and, in the end, lawless. Nor is the public interest served by adding a frivolous presidential candidate to the field, stoking voter confusion and undermining the election's integrity.

Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *18 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting), citing Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4327046, at *6 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024) (McKeague, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Allowing Secretary Benson's unlawful conduct to stand without any recourse not only has dire consequences related to the November 2024 election, but also opens the floodgates for Secretaries of State across the United States to have unfettered authority to violate the law.

JURISDICTION

This Court possesses jurisdiction under Article III, Section 2, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution and 28 U.S.C. § 1254, and it possesses authority to grant the Applicant's sought relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a) (All Writs Act), 28 U.S.C. § 2101(f), and S. Ct. Rules 22 and 23.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Mr. Kennedy Suspends His Presidential Campaign and Withdraws from the Michigan Ballot.

On August 23, 2024, Mr. Kennedy suspended his campaign for the office of President of the United States in Michigan. That same day, Mr. Kennedy sent the Secretary a formal withdrawal notice to withdraw from the 2024 general election in Michigan (the "Withdrawal Notice"). Two days later, on August 26, 2024, the Secretary rejected the Withdrawal Notice, stating "we cannot accept this filing. Michigan Election Law does not permit minor party candidates to withdraw. Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(2)." Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(2) provides as follows:

> County caucuses may nominate candidates for the office of representative in congress, state senator, and state representative if the offices represent districts contained wholly within the county, and for all county and township offices. Not more than 1 business day after the conclusion of the caucus, the names and mailing addresses of all candidates so nominated and the offices for which they > were nominated shall be certified by the chairperson and secretary of the caucus to the county clerk. The certification shall be accompanied by an affidavit of identity for each candidate named in the certificate as provided in section 558 and a separate written certificate of acceptance of nomination signed by each candidate named on the certificate. The form of the certificate of acceptance shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. If a candidate is so certified with the accompanying affidavit of identity and certificate of acceptance, the name of the candidate shall be printed on the ballot for that election. Candidates nominated and certified shall not be permitted to withdraw.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The statute clearly does not mention presidential candidates and, therefore, does not apply to presidential candidates, such as Mr. Kennedy. As such, in response to the Secretary Benson's response, Mr. Kennedy renewed his request to withdraw on August 27, 2024.

On August 29, 2024, Secretary Benson responded and again rejected Kennedy's withdrawal, this time citing Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.686a(4), which provides as follows:

> The state convention shall be held at the time and place indicated in the call. The convention shall consist of delegates selected by the county caucuses. The convention may fill vacancies in a delegation from qualified electors of that county present at the convention. The convention may nominate candidates for all state offices. District candidates may be nominated at district caucuses held in conjunction with the state convention attended by qualified delegates of the district. If delegates of a district are not present, a district caucus shall not be held for that district and candidates shall not be nominated for that district. Not more than 1 business day after the conclusion of the convention, the names and mailing addresses of the candidates nominated for state or district offices shall be certified by the chairperson and secretary of the state convention to the secretary of state. The > certification shall be accompanied by an affidavit of identity for each candidate named in the certificate as provided in section 558 and a separate written certificate of acceptance of nomination signed by each candidate named on the certificate. The form of the certificate of acceptance shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. The names of candidates so certified with accompanying affidavit of identity and certificate of acceptance shall be printed on the ballot for the forthcoming election. Candidates so nominated and certified shall not be permitted to withdraw.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary relied upon this statute in denying Kennedy's request to withdraw from the ballot.

B. Mr. Kennedy Files Suit Against the Secretary in Michigan.

On August 30, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed a complaint in the Michigan Court of Claims seeking immediate relief. The Court of Claims, relying on Mich. Comp. Laws 168.686a(4), denied the requested relief and dismissed the action on September 3, 2024. The next day, September 4, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed an appeal to the Michigan Court of Appeals. On September 6, 2024, around noon, the Court of Appeals issued its decision reversing the Court of Claims' decision because Mich. Comp. Laws 168.686a(4) plainly does not apply to presidential candidates and remanded for "entry of an order granting immediate mandamus relief (i.e., that the Secretary not include Mr. Kennedy's name on the ballot).

At 3:42 p.m., a few hours after the Court of Appeals decision was entered, on September 6, 2024, as required by statute, Secretary Benson "sent the call of the election and certification of candidates to the 83 county clerks without Kennedy's name listed as the Natural Law Party's candidate for President." Thus, the Secretary did not order that ballot printing be held. This was the statutory deadline by which Secretary Benson has to send out the call of the election and certification of candidates.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary then appealed to the Michigan Supreme Court later that day. On September 9, 2024, in a split decision, the majority in just one page held mandamus was not appropriate because Mr. Kennedy did not point to a specific law that demonstrated a clear right to require the Secretary Benson to perform the specific act of removing him from the ballot. The 15 page dissent strenuously disagreed. The Secretary then immediately added Kennedy to the ballot and re-certified the list of candidates, even though the September 6, 2024 deadline to do so had passed days earlier.

C. Kennedy Files a Federal Lawsuit.

On September 10, 2024 – the day after the Supreme Court of Michigan rendered its decision and interpreted the statute at issue – Mr. Kennedy filed suit in the Eastern District of Michigan, wherein he alleged that his Constitutional rights had been violated. Kennedy also filed a Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and for Preliminary Injunction. The district court entered its final judgment on September 18, 2022.

D. Court of Appeals Proceedings

On September 23, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed an appeal before the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. The Court affirmed the District Court's judgment, but was accompanied by a 10-page dissent, wherein Circuit Judge McKeague took great issue with Secretary Benson's unlawful recertification of the ballot after the September 6, 2024 statutory deadline. See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4327046 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On October 3, 2024, Mr. Kennedy filed a Petition for Rehearing En Banc of the September 27, 2024 panel decision in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. On October 16, 2024, the Court denied the petition for rehearing en banc, concluding that the issues raised in the petition were fully considered at the state court level and, therefore, barred by res judicata and the Purcell doctrine. Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024). In addition to another dissenting opinion authored by Judge McKeague, Circuit Judges Thapar and Readler also took great issue with Secretary Benson's conduct, noting the significance of the issues presented in this litigation:

> This case presents a question of exceptional importance: Does forcing a person onto the ballot compel his speech in violation of the First Amendment? The repercussions of that question are enormous. If a candidate can't stop his name from appearing on the ballot, could battleground states put President Joe Biden back on their ballots? Could states put anyone they wanted on their ballots (in violation of their own election laws)?

Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *6 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Thapar, J., dissenting).

In light of the foregoing, and with limited time before the national election, Mr. Kennedy submits this Application for Emergency Injunction Pending Appeal.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ARGUMENT

A. Standard of Review for Stays and Injunctions Pending Appeal

"The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a). An injunction pending appellate review is warranted when the applicant demonstrates that he is "likely to prevail, that denying . . . relief would lead to irreparable injury, and that granting relief would not harm the public interest." Roman Cath. Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 141 S. Ct. 63, 66 (2020) (per curiam), citing Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20, 129 S. Ct. 365, 374, 172 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2008). See Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S. 674, 689 – 690, 128 S.Ct. 2207, 2218–2219, 171 L.Ed.2d 1 (2008); Amoco Production Co. v. Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 542, 107 S.Ct. 1396, 94 L.Ed.2d 542 (1987); Weinberger v. Romero–Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311–312, 102 S.Ct. 1798, 72 L.Ed.2d 91 (1982).

There are several factors that control a single Justice's consideration of such an application: "If there is a 'significant possibility' that the Court would note probable jurisdiction of an appeal of the underlying suit and reverse, and if there is a likelihood that irreparable injury will result if relief is not granted, the Justice may issue an injunction." Am. Trucking Associations, Inc. v. Gray, 483 U.S. 1306, 1308, 108 S. Ct. 2, 3, 97 L. Ed. 2d 790 (1987) (Blackmun, J., in chambers), citing Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart, 423 U.S. 1327, 1330, 96 S.Ct. 251, 254, 46 L.Ed.2d 237 (1975) (Blackmun, J., in chambers). See also, e.g., Ledbetter v. Baldwin, 479

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. 1309, 1310, 107 S.Ct. 635, 636, 93 L.Ed.2d 689 (1986) (Powell, J., in chambers); Rostker v. Goldberg, 448 U.S. 1306, 1308, 101 S.Ct. 1, 2–3, 65 L.Ed.2d 1098 (1980) (Brennan, J., in chambers).

B. This Action is Not Barred by Res Judicata

Because the actionable conduct at issue in this matter did not occur until after the Michigan Supreme Court had issued its final order, the instant lawsuit cannot be barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

The Supreme Court has recognized that res judicata "preclude[s] parties from contesting matters that they have had a full and fair opportunity to litigate ...." Montana v. United States, 440 U.S. 147, 153, 99 S.Ct. 970, 59 L.Ed.2d 210 (1979). "Under res judicata, a final judgment on the merits bars further claims by parties or their privies based on the same cause of action." Id., citing Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U.S. 351, 352, 24 L.Ed. 195 (1877); Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 326, 75 S.Ct. 865, 867, 99 L.Ed. 1122 (1955); 1B J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 0.405[1], pp. 621–624 (2d ed. 1974); Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 47 (Tent. Draft No. 1, Mar. 28, 1973) (merger); id., § 48 (bar).

"[T]his appeal concerns the Secretary's unlawful action on September 9, a dispute that could not possibly have been resolved in the original state-court litigation. So res judicata principles tied to the earlier litigation do not stand in the way of resolving this case's merits." See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *17 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024), citing Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4327046, at *5 (6th Cir. Sept. 27, 2024) (McKeague, J., dissenting). In other words, the factual circumstances at issue in the current matter had not yet occurred while the state court action had been pending. The actionable conduct occurred on September 9, 2024 – after the Michigan Supreme Court had issued its opinion and order – when Secretary Benson recertified the list of candidates to be included on the ballot that Mr. Kennedy's claims based upon the federal constitution accrued.[1]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The timeline of events is perfectly explained by Circuit Judge Readler in his dissenting opinion:

> One, Kennedy seeks to have his name removed from the ballot based upon the Secretary's conduct on September 9, three days after the September 6 deadline, whereas his earlier case, pursued in advance of September 6, sought to have his name not included on the list of candidates to be circulated by the Secretary. Two, the challenged conduct here occurred only after the Michigan Supreme Court issued its opinion and order in the earlier case. Taking these points together, this appeal concerns the Secretary's unlawful action on September 9, a dispute that could not possibly have been resolved in the original state-court litigation. So res judicata principles tied to the earlier litigation do not stand in the way of resolving this case's merits.

---

[1] Prior to September 9, 2024, there was no equal protection claim and Mr. Kennedy's speech was not being compelled because his name was not on Michigan's 2024 general election ballot. There was also no violation of Article II, Section I of the United States Constitution at that time because Secretary Benson had already certified a list of candidates that did not include the candidate (Mr. Kennedy) who is no longer running in Michigan and, therefore, there was no risk of deceiving voters into casting their votes in an ineffective manner and undermining the integrity of our presidential election. In other words, Secretary Benson's act of recertifying the ballot to include Mr. Kennedy's name as a candidate triggered the federal constitution claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *17 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting), citing Kennedy, 2024 WL 4327046, at *5 (McKeague, J., dissenting).

"As 'the evidence or essential facts' between the two lawsuits are not 'identical', indeed, far from it, Michigan res judicata principles do not bar today's action." Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *17 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting), citing Dart v. Dart, 460 Mich. 573, 597 N.W. 2d 82, 88 (1999).

Therefore, a review of the record clearly demonstrates that Mr. Kennedy's claims are not barred by res judicata.

C. Secretary Benson Violated Mr. Kennedy's Constitutional Rights and Michigan Law by Recertifying Mr. Kennedy as a Presidential Candidate After the September 6, 2024 Statutory Deadline.

"By refusing to remove Kennedy's name and then placing his message back on the ballot against his will, the Secretary compelled Kennedy to speak. And she did so in apparent violation of Michigan's own laws." Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *7 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Thapar, J., dissenting).

Supreme Court precedent dictates that, while states have an interest in enforcing ballot access requirements, issues concerning presidential elections go beyond state law:

> [I]n the context of a Presidential election, state-imposed restrictions implicate a uniquely important national interest. For the President and the Vice President of the United States are the only elected officials who represent all the voters in the Nation. Moreover, the impact of the votes cast in each State is affected by the votes cast for > the various candidates in other States. Thus in a Presidential election a State's enforcement of more stringent ballot access requirements, including filing deadlines, has an impact beyond its own borders. Similarly, the State has a less important interest in regulating Presidential elections than statewide or local elections, because the outcome of the former will be largely determined by voters beyond the State's boundaries. This Court, striking down a state statute unduly restricting the choices made by a major party's Presidential nominating convention, observed that such conventions serve "the pervasive national interest in the selection of candidates for national office, and this national interest is greater than any interest of an individual State." Cousins v. Wigoda, 419 U. S. 477, 490 (1975). The Ohio filing deadline challenged in this case does more than burden the associational rights of independent voters and candidates. It places a significant state-imposed restriction on a nationwide electoral process.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 794-95 (1983) (emphasis added).

By denying a federal candidate the ability to withdraw from the ballot, Michigan law "places a significant state-imposed restriction on a nationwide electoral process," and such a law was struck down in Anderson. In applying this rationale to the instant matter, Judge Thapar explained, "this dispute boils down to weighing Kennedy's First Amendment interest against the state's asserted interest in its election process. We weigh 'the character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments' against 'the precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule.'" Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *9 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Thapar, J., dissenting), quoting Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 434, 112 S.Ct. 2059, 119 L.Ed.2d 245 (1992); Anderson, 460 U.S. at 789, 103 S.Ct. 1564).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The First Amendment proscribes against "abridging the freedom of speech." Forcing a party to engage in speech they would not otherwise make is compelled speech in its most basic form. See Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. & Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 US 47, 63, 164 L Ed 2d 156 (2006) ("Our compelled-speech cases are not limited to the situation in which an individual must personally speak the government's message. We have also in a number of instances limited the government's ability to force one speaker to host or accommodate another speaker's message."). First Amendment protections extend to both speech and expressive conduct:

> The First Amendment literally forbids the abridgment only of "speech," but we have long recognized that its protection does not end at the spoken or written word. While we have rejected "the view that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea," United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1678 (1968), we have acknowledged that conduct may be "sufficiently imbued with elements of communication to fall within the scope of the First and Fourteenth Amendments," Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 409, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 2730 (1974). In deciding whether particular conduct possesses sufficient communicative elements to bring the First Amendment into play, we have asked whether "[a]n intent to convey a particularized message was present, and [whether] the likelihood was great that the message would be understood by those who viewed it." Id. at 410–411, 94 S.Ct. at 2730.

Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 404, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 2539 (1989).

Here, it is clear that the act of withdrawing conveys the message that a candidate is no longer willing (or able) to hold a particular office if elected. Any reasonable person understood Kennedy's August 23, 2024 speech to convey his decision to withdraw as a presidential candidate. And, if in doubt, Mr. Kennedy expressly withdrew his name from the ballot in Michigan on the same day he gave his speech. By recertifying the ballot to include Kennedy's name as a presidential candidate, the Secretary has compelled his speech in violation of the First Amendment. See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *8 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Thapar, J., dissenting) ("The 'involuntary affirmation' of speech is an even greater affront to the First Amendment than silence." (citing W. Va. State Bd. Of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 633, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628 (1943))).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Because Secretary Benson's conduct here is unprecedented, there is limited case law that is directly on point; however, that simply indicates that this matter is very fact specific:

> A state official mandated a former candidate's appearance on the presidential ballot over the candidate's objection. That fact alone would likely strike any reasonable observer as odd. Then consider that the official did so in the face of the former candidate's assertion of his First Amendment right not to be compelled to appear as a candidate. And consider further that the state official did so after she had previously honored the former candidate's request not to have his name included on the ballot, and after the state's statutory deadline for placing candidates on the ballot had passed. Adding all of this together, the Secretary's decision is deeply suspect, legally and otherwise.
>
> * * * *
>
> [W]hen a state official arbitrarily places a former political candidate's name on a presidential ballot against his wishes, after she had previously excluded him from the > ballot, and after the state's legislatively imposed deadline for certifying candidates has passed, that official seemingly compels the candidate to convey a message to voters, in violation of the First Amendment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *12, 13 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting), citing Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714, 97 S.Ct. 1274, 51 L.Ed. 2d 752 (1977).

A review of the aforementioned facts clearly demonstrates that Secretary Benson has compelled Mr. Kennedy's speech and, therefore, violated his Constitutional rights. Such behavior is unlawful and should not be countenanced.

D. All Harm Factors Strongly Favor Mr. Kennedy

Secretary Benson's unlawful conduct threatens election integrity and harms both Mr. Kennedy and Michigan voters.

"'The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.'" Roman Cath. Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 592 U.S. 14, 19, 141 S. Ct. 63, 67, 208 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020), quoting Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d 547 (1976) (plurality opinion). For the reasons set forth previously herein, Secretary Benson's conduct has unlawfully infringed upon Mr. Kennedy's First Amendment rights. "With an election pending—one for which his name has been forced on the ballot over his objection—his injury is quintessentially irreparable." Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *18 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting).

Moreover, such compelled speech harms every citizen in Michigan. The Secretary, by listing Mr. Kennedy on the ballot, is misrepresenting to voters that Mr. Kennedy is qualified and willing to serve the public if elected. Such a representation is not only incorrect, but it is also prejudicial to voters who reasonably expect that the ballot contain accurate information. "'Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy.'" Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *6 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Thapar, J., dissenting), quoting Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4, 127 S.Ct. 5, 166 L.Ed.2d 1 (2006). "When voters head to the polls, they need to have confidence in the accuracy of their ballots." Kennedy, 2024 WL 4501252, at *6 (Thapar, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Any harm alleged to the Natural Law Party is based upon mere speculation and implies that the rights of voters affiliated with the Natural Law Party supersedes the rights of other Michigan voters and the rights of Mr. Kennedy. Similarly, any speculation as to Mr. Kennedy's motive with respect to withdrawing from the presidential race has no bearing here. See Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *16 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting). The fact of the matter is this – allowing Secretary Benson to *re*certify a list of candidates after the statutory deadline without any legal authority or even permitting mandating such an action upholds conduct that threatens the sanctity of our national elections.

Finally, accepting the rationale of the Sixth Circuit creates a "slippery slope" that would enable Secretaries of State throughout this country to modify ballots and lists of candidates at their own discretion and without any consequence in violation of state and federal law. "[E]lection rules should be clear, and last-minute changes to those rules muddy the waters at significant cost to voters, the administration of law, and public confidence in the election." Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *16 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024), citing Republican Nat'l Comm. v. Democratic Nat'l Comm., 589 U.S. 423, 140 S. Ct. 1205, 1207, 206 L.Ed.2d 452 (2020); Democratic Nat'l Comm. v. Wis. State Leg., --- U.S. ----, 141 S. Ct. 28, 30–31 (2020) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). "Such blatant illegality in a presidential race justifies a federal remedy." Kennedy v. Benson, No. 24-1799, 2024 WL 4501252, at *16 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2024) (Readler, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Applicant respectfully seeks, pending further review in this Court, an immediate injunction ordering Secretary Benson to remove Mr. Kennedy's name from the ballot for the upcoming election.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES R. SPIES
Counsel of Record
Brandon L. Debus*
Elizabeth K. Lilienthal*
*(APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION FORTHCOMING)
DICKINSON WRIGHT PLLC
1825 I Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 466-5964
CSpies@dickinson-wright.com

AARON SIRI
ELIZABETH A. BREHM
SIRI& GLIMSTAD LLP
745 FIFTH AVENUE
SUITE 500
NEW YORK, NY 10151
(888) 747-4529

October 18, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No. _____

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

ROBERT F. KENNEDY, JR.,

Applicant,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, IN HER OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, Respondent.

Certificate of Service

To the Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
and Circuit Justice for the Sixth Circuit

CHARLES R. SPIES
Counsel of Record
Brandon L. Debus*
Elizabeth K. Lilienthal*
*(APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION FORTHCOMING)
DICKINSON WRIGHT PLLC
1825 I Street N.W., Suite 900
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 466-5964
CSpies@dickinson-wright.com

Counsel for Applicant

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

A copy of this application was served by email and mail to the Counsel listed below in accordance with Supreme Court Rules 22.2 and 29.3:

Mr. Erik A. Grill
Ms. Heather S. Meingast
Office of the Attorney General of Michigan
P.O Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909
(212) 416-8656

October 18, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
on behalf of Gabriel Moreno [Gabriel@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/21/2024 6:00:22 PM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]

Subject: FW: USPS Multi-state
Location: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Start: 10/21/2024 6:30:00 PM
End: 10/21/2024 7:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Any chance you can join too?

-----Original Appointment-----
From: Gabriel Moreno <Gabriel@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 17, 2024 12:19 PM
To: Gabriel Moreno; Dax Goldstein; Robert Cotter; Lindsay.McKenzie@ag.ny.gov; Eric.Haren@ag.ny.gov; Craig Newby; Teresa Benitez-Thompson; Thomson, Aimee; Meingast, Heather (AG); michael.c.kron@doj.oregon.gov
Subject: USPS Multi-state
When: Monday, October 21, 2024 2:30 PM-3:00 PM (UTC-05:00) Eastern Time (US & Canada).
Where: https://us02web.zoom.us/j/81282309124?pwd=PlvzaZ4LTbznzovzR3bq1LADqCdQas.1

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Gabriel Moreno is inviting you to a scheduled Zoom meeting.

Join Zoom Meeting

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Meeting ID
Passcode: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

One tap mobile

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Dial by your location

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Meeting ID:
Passcode: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Find your local number:

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/28/2024 4:13:25 PM
To: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Haidar, Danny (AG) [HaidarD1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Judy Shih [judy@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Max Kober [Max@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sally Marsh [Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: PRIVILEGED and CONFIDENTIAL - MCL 168.932f

My thank as well.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, October 28, 2024 11:25 AM
To: Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Judy Shih <judy@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Max Kober <Max@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Sally Marsh <Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: PRIVILEGED and CONFIDENTIAL - MCL 168.932f

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks so much, Danny. We really appreciate the note.

Christine P. Sun (she/her) | Senior Vice President, Legal
States United Democracy Center
415.828.5719 | @statesunited
christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, October 28, 2024 at 7:42 AM
To: Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>, Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Judy Shih <judy@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Max Kober <Max@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Sally Marsh <Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: PRIVILEGED and CONFIDENTIAL - MCL 168.932f

Hi Christine,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,
Danny

Danny Haidar
Civil Rights & Elections Division, Lansing Office
Michigan Department of Attorney General

From: Christine Sun <christine@stateuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, October 27, 2024 11:24 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Judy Shih <judy@stateuniteddemocracy.org>; Max Kober <Max@stateuniteddemocracy.org>; Sally Marsh <Sally@stateuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: PRIVILEGED and CONFIDENTIAL - MCL 168.932f

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather, Danny, and Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks,

Christine P. Sun (she/her) | Senior Vice President, Legal
States United Democracy Center
415.828.5719 | @statesunited
christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 8/3/2023 1:02:14 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Aboona, Rebecca (AG) [AboonaR1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Beth Stevens [beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

Hi Jonathan, I was just getting ready to respond to your email from yesterday. Did you mean to send me the case too, or just refer to it? DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks,
Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, August 3, 2023 9:00 AM
To: Aboona, Rebecca (AG) <AboonaR1@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Beth Stevens <beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Becky, Heather, and Linus,

I hope you're all doing well. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, June 21, 2023 at 10:37 AM
To: Aboona, Rebecca (AG) <AboonaR1@michigan.gov>, Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>, Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Beth Stevens <beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) (privileged)

Becky, Heather, and Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/25/2024 8:53:32 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Do you have a moment to call me?

Thank you!

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, October 25, 2024 4:25 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Do you have a moment to call me?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Oakland, Wayne, Grand Traverse, Macomb, Kent, Genesee, Washtenaw.

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 25, 2024 12:54 PM
To: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Do you have a moment to call me?

Yes, that works for me.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, October 25, 2024 3:51 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Do you have a moment to call me?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

For sure. Can I call you in about 45 minutes?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, October 25, 2024 12:44 PM
To: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Do you have a moment to call me?

517 PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Sent: 11/3/2024 8:18:03 PM
To: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks!

From: Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, November 3, 2024 2:04:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Dear Heather and Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Warmly,
Christine

Christine P. Sun (she/her) | Senior Vice President, Legal
States United Democracy Center
415.828.5719 | @statesunited
christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Sent: 11/2/2024 7:13:17 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Experts

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Saturday, November 2, 2024 2:37:23 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Experts

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Dax Goldstein (they/them) | Senior Counsel | Program Director, Election Protection (Legal)
States United Democracy Center
415.938.6481 | @statesunited
dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 11/5/2024 6:07:09 PM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thank you. I appreciate it.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, November 5, 2024 1:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

We are tracking this down now. Will circle back ASAP.

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Dax Goldstein
Sent: Tuesday, November 5, 2024 9:45 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Yes! Will call you in a moment.

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, November 5, 2024 9:39 AM
To: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
Importance: High

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

H

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/22/2024 7:12:02 PM
To: Haidar, Danny (AG) [HaidarD1@michigan.gov]; christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org
CC: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Subject: RE: Following up, template
Attachments: Brf Supp Ver Cmplt for Decl & Inj Rel.pdf; Mtn for Decl & Inj Rel.pdf; Mtn for Imm Consd.pdf; Ver Cmplt for Decl & Inj Rel w Exhs.pdf

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, October 22, 2024 2:56 PM
To: christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org
Cc: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: Following up, template

Dear Christine,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

If there is anything else we can do, please don't hesitate to let us know.

Best,
Danny Haidar

Danny Haidar
Civil Rights & Elections Division, Lansing Office
Michigan Department of Attorney General

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROSA HOLLIDAY,

Plaintiff,

Case No.
Hon.

v

URGENT ELECTION MATTER

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, Defendant.

_____/

PLAINTIFF'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTIONS FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT, PERMANENT INJUNCTION, AND IMMEDIATE AND EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF VERIFIED COMPLAINT

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED IF THE COURT DEEMS IT NECESSARY

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Index of Authorities 3

Introduction 6

Statement of Facts 6

Argument: The Court Should Grant Declaratory And Permanent Injunctive Relief Barring Cornel West And Melina Abdullah From The Ballot As Independent Candidates For President And Vice-President 7

I. The Standards For Declaratory Judgment And Permanent Injunctive Relief 8

II. West Is Ineligible To Appear On The Michigan Ballot As An Independent Candidate For President Under MCL 168.692a 8

A. Michigan Has Broad Federal Constitutional Authority To Regulate Presidential Elections 9

B. Michigan Has Federal Constitutional Authority To Protect Its Important Interests In Fair And Orderly Elections That Avoid Voter Confusion And Deception 10

C. States Consider Facts Beyond Their Borders In Determining Ballot Access For Presidential Candidates 11

D. MCL 168.692a Bars Independent Presidential Candidates Such As West Who Are Political Party Presidential Candidates In Other States 12

III. Factionalism Inside The Natural Law Party Bars West From The Ballot 16

IV. Defects In West And Abdullah's Affidavits Of Identity Bar Them From The Ballot 17

A. West And Abdullah's Affidavits Of Identity Falsely State That They Are Candidates "Without Political Party Affiliation" 17

B. West And Abdullah's Affidavits Of Identity Are Defective 17

1. West's Affidavit Of Identity Was Incorrectly Notarized 17

2. Abdullah's Affidavit Of Identity Fails To Provide Required Information 19

Conclusion and Relief Sought 20

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

American Indep Party v Secretary of State, 397 Mich 689; 247 NW2d 17 (1976) 16, 17, 20

Ankeny v Governor of Ind, 916 NE2d 678 (Ind App, 2009) 9

Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404; 836 NW2d 498 (2013) 8

Bullock v Carter, 405 US 134; 92 S Ct 849; 31 L Ed 2d 92 (1972) 10, 16

Burdick v Takushi, 504 US 428; 112 S Ct 2059; 119 L Ed 2d 245 (1992) 10

Chiafalo v Washington, 591 US 578; 140 S Ct 2316; 207 L Ed 2d 761 (2020) 9

Elliott v Cruz, 137 A3d 646 (Pa Commw, 2016) 9

Hassan v Colorado, 495 F Appx 947 (CA 10, 2012) 9

Indep Party of Fla v Secretary of State, 967 F3d 1277 (CA 11, 2020) 11

Jenness v Fortson, 403 US 431; 91 S Ct 1970; 29 L Ed 2d 554 (1971) 10, 11, 14, 15

League of Women Voters of Mich v Secretary of State, 506 Mich 561; 957 NW2d 731 (2020) 8

Lindsay v Brown, 750 F3d 1061 (CA 9, 2014) 9

Minn Voters Alliance v Mansky, 585 US 1; 138 S Ct 1876; 201 L Ed 2d 201 (2018) 10, 11

Moore v Harper, 600 US 1; 143 S Ct 2065; 216 L Ed 2d 729 (2023) 9

Nykoriak v Napoleon, 334 Mich App 370; 964 NW2d 895 (2020) (per curiam) 17, 18

People v Burkman, ___ Mich ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2024) (Docket No. 164638) 10

Socialist Workers Party v Ogilvie, 357 F Supp 109 (ND Ill, 1972) (per curiam) 9

Stand Up For Democracy v Secretary of State, 492 Mich 588; 822 NW2d 159 (2012) 12, 17

Storer v Brown, 415 US 724; 94 S Ct 1274; 39 L Ed 2d 714 (1974) 10, 11

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Stumbo v Roe, 332 Mich App 479; 957 NW2d 830 (2020) 12, 13, 17

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) 10

US Const, art II, § 1, cl 2 9

Michigan Complied Laws

MCL 55.261 18

MCL 55.285a(1) 18, 19

MCL 168.32 11

MCL 168.485 11

MCL 168.558 ..... passim

MCL 168.558(2) 19

MCL 168.558(4) 17

MCL 168.590 to MCL 168.590h 8

MCL 168.614a(1) 11

MCL 168.686 11

MCL 168.692a ..... passim

MCL 168.932f 11

MCL 168.944 11

Rules

MCR 2.605(A)(1) 7

MCR 2.605(F) 8

Other Authorities

Caputo, 'Swindlers,' 'Hijacking,' and 'Blackmail': Inside the Kennedy Campaign's Natural Law Party Meltdown in Florida, Bulwark (June 6, 2024) 6

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Colorado Secretary of State, Notary Handbook (April 24, 2024) 19

Davidson, Presidential Candidate Robert F. Kennedy Jr. to Appear on Michigan Ballot, Michigan Advance (April 18, 2024) 15

Davis O'Brien, How R.F.K. Jr. Got on the Michigan Ballot, With Only Two Votes, New York Times (April 20, 2024) 6

Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind L J 559 (2015) 9

Swindle, Cornel West Claims to Have 'Far Exceeded' Required Michigan Signatures, Jewish News Syndicate (June 21, 2024) 7

Willow Evans, Alaska's Aurora Party Nominates Independent Presidential Candidate Cornel West, Independent Political Report (December 15, 2023) 13

Willow Evans, Cornel West to Appear on Oregon Ballot Following Oregon Progressive Party Nomination, Independent Party Nomination (January 25, 2024) 13

Willow Evans, Independent Presidential Candidate Cornel West Secures South Carolina Ballot Access with United Citizens Party Support, Independent Political Report (February 28, 2024) 13

Willow Evans, Legal Marijuana NOW! Party of Nebraska Endorses Presidential Bid of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah, Independent Political Report (July 15, 2024) 13

Willow Evans, Natural Law Party of the United States Endorses 2024 Presidential Ticket of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah, Independent Political Report (July 22, 2024) 7

Willow Evans, Unity Party of Colorado Nominates Cornel West and Melina Abdullah as 2024 Presidential Ticket, Independent Political Report (April 15, 2024) 13

Willow Evans, Vermont Green Mountain Peace and Justice Party Nominates Independent Cornel West for President, Independent Political Report (April 29, 2024) 13

Winger, Natural Law Parties of Two States Nominate Cornel West for President, Ballot Access News (July 22, 2024) 13

Winger, Three Petitions Submitted in North Carolina for New or Previously Unqualified Parties, Ballot Access News (May 17, 2024) 13

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

This is an action to protect the integrity of Michigan elections and prevent the deception of Michigan voters by stopping fake independent candidates for President and Vice-President, Cornel West and Melina Abdullah (collectively "West"), from appearing on the general election ballot.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Cornel West never wanted to be an independent candidate for President in Michigan—he wanted to be the candidate of a political party as he is in several other states.

In January 2024, West sought the nomination of Michigan's Natural Law Party ("NLP").[1] When he lost the bidding war for that nomination to Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.,[2] he was desperate to get on the Michigan ballot, so he resorted to two contradictory paths, both illegal under Michigan Election Law in their own right.

First, he sought the presidential nomination of another faction of the NLP, the national Natural Law Party. However, beginning in February 2024, that political party was wracked by a battle for control between its Florida founder and the Kennedy campaign, which wanted its nomination.[3] Thus, it was not clear at that time that West could get its nomination. So, West embarked on another illegal path. Despite seeking the presidential nomination of both NLP factions and receiving the nomination of political parties in at least nine other states,[4] he sought to gain ballot access in Michigan under the ruse that he was an "independent" candidate with no affiliation with a political party. Funded by secret sources, petition signatures were collected and

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

[1] See Davis O'Brien, How R.F.K. Jr. Got on the Michigan Ballot, With Only Two Votes, New York Times (April 20, 2024) (Exhibit 1).
[2] See id.
[3] See Caputo, 'Swindlers,' 'Hijacking,' and 'Blackmail': Inside the Kennedy Campaign's Natural Law Party Meltdown in Florida, Bulwark (June 6, 2024) (Exhibit 2).
[4] West has been nominated for President in several states by political parties: Alaska's Aurora Party, Unity Party of Colorado, Florida Natural Law Party, Mississippi Natural Law Party, Nebraska's Legal Marijuana Now Party, North Carolina's Justice for All Party, Oregon Progressive Party, South Carolina's United Citizens Party, and Vermont's Green Mountain & Justice Party. See nn 13–21 for citations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

filed on his behalf on June 17, 2024,[5] together with Affidavits of Identity ("AOI") for him and for his vice-presidential candidate, Melina Abdullah.[6]

In May 2024, Kennedy lost his fight for control of the national Natural Law Party.[7] On July 21, 2024—well after he had filed as an "independent" candidate in Michigan—West was nominated for President by the national NLP.[8]

The AOI's of West and Abdullah were timely challenged by Plaintiff Holliday on July 23, 2024.[9] That challenge remains pending before the Secretary of State. Plaintiff Holliday also timely challenged West's petition signatures on July 25, 2024.[10] That challenge is scheduled to be decided by the Board of State Canvassers on August 26, 2024, just eleven days before the candidates for the November general election ballot must be finalized.

ARGUMENT

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DECLARATORY AND PERMANENT INJUNCTIVE RELIEF BARRING CORNEL WEST AND MELINA ABDULLAH FROM THE BALLOT AS INDEPENDENT CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

I. THE STANDARDS FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND PERMANENT INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

MCR 2.605(A)(1) states: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." The Michigan Supreme Court has held that "[a]n actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

[5] Swindle, Cornel West Claims to Have 'Far Exceeded' Required Michigan Signatures, Jewish News Syndicate (June 21, 2024), https://www.jns.org/cornel-west-claims-to-have-far-exceeded-required-michigan-signatures/.
[6] See Exhibits 3 and 4.
[7] See Exhibit 2.
[8] See Willow Evans, Natural Law Party of the United States Endorses 2024 Presidential Ticket of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah, Independent Political Report (July 22, 2024) (Exhibit 5, with resolution nominating West for President).
[9] See Exhibit 6.
[10] The challenge is voluminous, so a copy is not provided. If the Court wishes to see it, counsel will provide it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Secretary of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020). Based on a declaratory judgment, a court can provide further relief, such as a permanent injunction. See MCR 2.605(F).

There is an actual controversy here because Holliday has a legal right to have only eligible candidates on the ballot, see Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404, 412; 836 NW2d 498 (2013), lv den 494 Mich 866; 831 NW2d 461 (2013), and West is not eligible to be an independent candidate for President on the Michigan ballot under MCL 168.692a, MCL 168.558, and binding Michigan Supreme Court precedent.

II. WEST IS INELIGIBLE TO APPEAR ON THE MICHIGAN BALLOT AS AN INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT UNDER MCL 168.692a.

West seeks to be a candidate running for a partisan office without party affiliation under Chapter XXIVA of the Election Law, MCL 168.590 to MCL 168.590h. However, candidates such as West who have sought the same office as the candidate of a political party during the same calendar year are prohibited from using the procedures of Chapter XXIVA to obtain ballot access as an independent candidate in Michigan:

> A person who files a partisan nominating petition or filing fee as a candidate of a political party, or who is nominated by a political party convention, committee, or caucus and accepts the nomination, shall not file a qualifying petition under chapter XXIVA for an office to be elected at that election or at an election held during the same calendar year.

MCL 168.692a. This statute, part of Michigan's exercise of its authority to regulate presidential elections and to advance important state interests, bars West from access to the ballot.

A. Michigan Has Broad Federal Constitutional Authority To Regulate Presidential Elections.

Under the United States Constitution's Electors Clause, each state has the plenary power

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to appoint its presidential electors "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." US Const, art II, § 1, cl 2; see also Moore v Harper, 600 US 1, 27; 143 S Ct 2065; 216 L Ed 2d 729 (2023) ("[I]n choosing Presidential electors, the Clause 'leaves it to the legislature exclusively to define the method of effectuating the object.'"); Chiafalo v Washington, 591 US 578, 588; 140 S Ct 2316; 207 L Ed 2d 761 (2020) (Electors Clause gives states "far-reaching authority over presidential electors").

States thus may restrict for whom electors may vote, Chiafalo, 591 US at 581, and ensure that the State's electoral votes are only cast for eligible candidates. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind L J 559, 604 (2015) ("[B]ecause the legislature[] may choose the manner by which it selects its electors, it follows that it may restrict the discretion of the election process through an ex ante examination of candidates' qualifications.").

States routinely adjudicate presidential candidates' qualifications before elections, ruling on the merits to exclude ineligible candidates and authorize inclusion of eligible candidates. See, e g, Hassan v Colorado, 495 F Appx 947 (CA 10, 2012) (upholding exclusion of naturalized citizen candidate); Lindsay v Brown, 750 F3d 1061 (CA 9, 2014) (upholding exclusion of underage candidate); Socialist Workers Party v Ogilvie, 357 F Supp 109 (ND Ill, 1972) (per curiam) (same); Elliott v Cruz, 137 A3d 646 (Pa Commw, 2016), aff'd 635 Pa 212; 134 A3d 51 (2016) (per curiam) (finding that presidential candidate was natural born); Ankeny v Governor of Ind, 916 NE2d 678 (Ind App, 2009) (similar). Federal courts have affirmed this broad state authority as advancing the interests of the States. See Lindsay, 750 F3d at 1064 ("[A] State has an interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan's Legislature exercises this federal constitutional authority pursuant to its constitutional duty to ensure the purity of elections, Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2), and by enacting statutes such as MCL 168.692a.

B. Michigan Has Federal Constitutional Authority To Protect Its Important Interests In Fair And Orderly Elections That Voter Avoid Confusion and Deception.

Not only does Michigan have the federal constitutional authority to apply MCL 168.692a to presidential elections, but that statute also advances several important state interests recognized by the United States Supreme Court:

> There is surely an important state interest . . . in avoiding confusion, deception, and even frustration of the democratic process at the general election.

Jenness v Fortson, 403 US 431, 442; 91 S Ct 1970; 29 L Ed 2d 554 (1971); see also, e g, Burdick v Takushi, 504 US 428, 433; 112 S Ct 2059; 119 L Ed 2d 245 (1992) ("[T]here must be a substantial regulation of elections if they are to be fair and honest and if some sort of order, rather than chaos, is to accompany the democratic processes." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Storer v Brown, 415 US 724, 729; 94 S Ct 1274; 39 L Ed 2d 714 (1974) (states have a "substantial . . . interest in providing the electorate with an understandable ballot"); Bullock v Carter, 405 US 134, 145; 92 S Ct 849; 31 L Ed 2d 92 (1972) ("[A] State has an interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies."). The Michigan Supreme Court has also recognized the State's interest in preventing voters from being misled. See, e g, People v Burkman, ___ Mich ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2024) (Docket No. 164638); slip op at 52 ("We do not doubt that the State may prohibit messages intended to mislead voters about voting requirements and procedures."), quoting Minn Voters Alliance v Mansky, 585 US 1, 19 n 4; 138 S

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ct 1876; 201 L Ed 2d 201 (2018).[11]

Under these principles, independent candidates can be required to show a "significant modicum of support" before being allowed on the ballot." Jenness, 403 US at 442. They can also be required to disaffiliate from political parties for up to a year. Storer, 415 US at 733. MCL 168.692a constitutionally imposes a disaffiliation requirement on independent candidates, including presidential candidates, which protects Michigan voters from being deceived, misled, or confused.

C. States Consider Facts Beyond Their Borders In Determining Ballot Access For Presidential Candidates.

In exercising their broad constitutional authority over presidential elections, States consider facts outside their borders when determining ballot access for presidential candidates. For example, in Florida a minor party affiliated with a national party has easier access to the ballot for its presidential candidate. That law was upheld by a federal court, holding that a State may consider national interests when regulating presidential candidates' ballot access. See Indep Party of Fla v Secretary of State, 967 F3d 1277, 1283–1284 (CA 11, 2020).

Based on its authority to regulate presidential elections, Michigan has long considered facts from outside the State when granting ballot access to presidential candidates. See, e g, MCL 168.614a(1) (Michigan presidential primary candidates are those "generally advocated by the national news media" (emphasis added)). Indeed, Michigan political parties may only place presidential candidates on the general election ballot who have been nominated at national conventions. See MCL 168.686.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

[11] Michigan protects its voters against being misled, deceived, or confused in many ways. For example, it is a crime for a candidate to misrepresent that she or he is an incumbent. See MCL 168.944. It is also a crime to distribute materially deceptive media with the intent of deceiving voters. See MCL 168.932f. Ballot proposal language must be "true and impartial" and written to avoid confusing voters. See MCL 168.32; MCL 168.485. There are many more examples.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

D. MCL 168.692a Bars Independent Presidential Candidates Such As West Who Are Political Party Presidential Candidates In Other States.

It was against this backdrop of broad federal constitutional authority to conduct presidential elections, the authority to protect important State interests in those elections, and the practice of considering national facts regarding presidential candidate ballot access that Michigan enacted MCL 168.692a:

> A person who files a partisan nominating petition or filing fee as a candidate of a political party, or who is nominated by a political party convention, committee, or caucus and accepts the nomination, shall not file a qualifying petition under chapter XXIVA for an office to be elected at that election or at an election held during the same calendar year.

In determining the meaning of the prohibition in MCL 168.692a, the > "primary task in construing a statute, is to discern and give effect to the intent of the Legislature." The words of the statute are the most reliable evidence of the Legislature's intent and we must give each word its plain and ordinary meaning. "In interpreting the statute at issue, we consider both the plain meaning of the critical word or phrase as well as 'its placement and purpose in the statutory scheme.'"

Stand Up For Democracy v Secretary of State, 492 Mich 588, 598; 822 NW2d 159 (2012) (footnotes omitted). There must be strict compliance with the Michigan Election Law. Id at 602. Importantly, the strict compliance doctrine does not allow anyone—neither the Department of State or a court—to change the requirements of the Michigan Election Law. See, e g, Stumbo v Roe, 332 Mich App 479, 482 n 2; 957 NW2d 830 (2020).

Based on its text, MCL 168.692a is broad in scope. It refers to "a" political party without geographical restriction or limit as to type—national, state, or local. It is not restricted to being the candidate of a political party in Michigan. The Legislature could easily have restricted its scope to candidates of "Michigan" political parties, or to a "Michigan" convention, committee, or caucus nomination, but it did not. Such a restriction cannot be added to the text or read into it. See, e g, Stumbo, 332 Mich App at 482 n 2.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Because MCL 168.692a encompasses their nomination activities in other states, West and Abdullah cannot be labeled as no party affiliation ("NPA"), or independent, candidates in Michigan because they have been nominated for President and Vice-President in at least nine states by political parties:

- Alaska: Aurora Party[12]
- Colorado: Unity Party of Colorado[13]
- Florida: Florida Natural Law Party[14]
- Mississippi: Mississippi Natural Law Party[15]
- Nebraska: Legal Marijuana Now Party[16]
- North Carolina: Justice for All Party[17]
- Oregon: Oregon Progressive Party[18]
- South Carolina: United Citizens Party[19]
- Vermont: Green Mountain Peace & Justice Party[20]

West and Abdullah have also been nominated for President and Vice-President by a national party:

---

[12] Willow Evans, Alaska's Aurora Party Nominates Independent Presidential Candidate Cornel West, Independent Political Report (December 15, 2023), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2023/12/aurora-party-nominates-independent-presidential-candidate-cornel-west-in-alaska/.

[13] Willow Evans, Unity Party of Colorado Nominates Cornel West and Melina Abdullah as 2024 Presidential Ticket, Independent Political Report (April 15, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/04/unity-party-of-colorado-nominates-cornel-west-and-melina-abdullah-as-2024-presidential-ticket/.

[14] Winger, Natural Law Parties of Two States Nominate Cornel West for President, Ballot Access News (July 22, 2024), https://ballot-access.org/2024/07/22/natural-law-party-nominates-cornel-west-for-president/.

[15] Id.

[16] Willow Evans, Legal Marijuana NOW! Party of Nebraska Endorses Presidential Bid of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah, Independent Political Report (July 15, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/07/legal-marijuana-now-party-of-nebraska-endorses-presidential-bid-of-cornel-west-and-melina-abdullah/.

[17] Winger, Three Petitions Submitted in North Carolina for New or Previously Unqualified Parties, Ballot Access News (May 17, 2024), https://ballot-access.org/2024/05/17/three-petitions-submitted-in-north-carolina-for-new-or-previously-unqualified-parties/.

[18] Willow Evans, Cornel West to Appear on Oregon Ballot Following Oregon Progressive Party Nomination, Independent Party Nomination (January 25, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/01/cornel-west-to-appear-on-oregon-ballot-following-oregon-progressive-party-nomination/.

[19] Willow Evans, Independent Presidential Candidate Cornel West Secures South Carolina Ballot Access with United Citizens Party Support, Independent Political Report (February 28, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/02/independent-presidential-candidate-cornel-west-secures-south-carolina-ballot-access-with-united-citizens-party-support/.

[20] Willow Evans, Vermont Green Mountain Peace and Justice Party Nominates Independent Cornel West for President, Independent Political Report (April 29, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/04/vermont-green-mountain-peace-and-justice-party-nominates-independent-cornel-west-for-president/.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the Natural Law Party of the United States. See Exhibit 5.

Because they are the nominees of a national political party and of political parties in other states, MCL 168.692a prohibits West and Abdullah from appearing on the Michigan ballot as NPA or independent candidates for President and Vice-President.

The reach of MCL 168.692a beyond Michigan for presidential candidates makes sense for several reasons.

First, presidential elections are national in scope and rarely involve Michigan candidates. It has been nearly fifty years since there was a Michigan candidate for president in the general election. The vast majority of presidential candidates come from outside of Michigan, and are, of course, seeking ballot access in the other forty-nine states and the District of Columbia. Thus, it would make no sense for MCL 168.692a to be enforced for independent presidential candidates only as to their Michigan political party candidacies when they are running nationally.

Not only does it make no sense to treat candidates from different states differently in enforcing MCL 168.692a, but it would raise significant equal protection problems if, for example, an independent candidate for President from Michigan was barred by MCL 168.692a, while an independent presidential candidate from another state who violated that statute by activity in that state was allowed on the ballot. MCL 168.692a must be uniformly enforced against all candidates based on their activities in every state.

Second, unless the restrictions in MCL 168.692a are applied to party nominations in other states, a presidential candidate could mislead or deceive Michigan voters by claiming to be an NPA or independent presidential candidate, yet be a partisan presidential candidate in every other state. Michigan has an "important state interest" in "avoiding confusion [and] deception . . . at the general election," Jenness, 403 US at 442, and MCL 168.692a advances that interest by requiring independent presidential candidates to be independent of political parties not only in Michigan but throughout the country. Michigan voters have a right to know whether an "independent" candidate is actually independent of political parties.

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

That confusion and deception are obvious here. West and Abdullah claim to be independent candidates, but they are the presidential candidates of a national political party and of several other state political parties. Falsely labeling them as independent candidates in Michigan would deceive Michigan voters, and Michigan has a right to protect its voters against such deception. See Jenness, 403 US at 442.

That deception and confusion will be particularly acute in Michigan where there is already a Natural Law Party candidate on the ballot: Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. See Davidson, Presidential Candidate Robert F. Kennedy Jr. to Appear on Michigan Ballot, Michigan Advance (April 18, 2024), https://michiganadvance.com/briefs/presidential-candidate-robert-f-kennedy-jr-to-appear-on-michigan-ballot/. Michigan voters will undoubtedly be confused to hear that West is the presidential candidate of the national Natural Law Party, yet see on their ballots him listed as an independent candidate with a different candidate, Kennedy, listed as the Natural Law Party candidate. MCL 168.692a protects Michigan voters from that confusion by barring West from the ballot as an independent candidate.

Third, allowing West and Abdullah to run as independent candidates in Michigan, while they are political party candidates in other states, invites—indeed, allows—manipulation of the ballot access rules by candidates. That is exactly what West has done here. Desperate to get on the ballot when rejected by the Michigan NLP, he turned to the ruse of claiming to be "independent." States have the right to protect the integrity of their elections against fraudulent candidacies like

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

West's. Bullock, 405 US at 145. Candidates who can falsely claim independence from political parties and still obtain ballot access are engaging in a fraud on the voters of Michigan.

West is barred by MCL 168.692a from being an independent presidential candidate in Michigan.

III. FACTIONALISM INSIDE THE NATURAL LAW PARTY BARS WEST FROM THE BALLOT.

West is embroiled in an internal dispute within the Natural Law Party ("NLP"). The national NLP has nominated West for President, while its Michigan faction nominated Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. last April. The State is not required to resolve that dispute under American Indep Party v Secretary of State, 397 Mich 689; 247 NW2d 17 (1976), which places the burden on the feuding political party to resolve its internal fight and present one candidate for placement on the ballot.

That Supreme Court-sanctioned procedure was not followed here. Instead, West has sought to evade that requirement through the gambit of seeking ballot access as a fake "independent" candidate. If he is allowed to get away with that artifice, the voters of Michigan will face the situation that the American Indep Party Court sought to avoid: two Natural Law Party candidates from different factions of that party will appear on the ballot and the intraparty feud will continue into the general election. Despite his ostensibly "independent" status, West will claim the support—which he has—of the national NLP, while Kennedy will tout—as he can—his candidacy on behalf of the Michigan NLP. Press coverage will inform—and confuse—voters by reporting West's status as the candidate of the national NLP and reporting Kennedy's status as the Michigan NLP candidate.

This Court should not tolerate that evasion by West, which would inflict the chaos of the NLP fight on Michigan voters. He should be barred from the ballot as an independent candidate

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and be required to follow the procedure dictated by American Indep Party: resolve the internal NLP dispute and present a single NLP candidate for President to the State.

IV. DEFECTS IN WEST AND ABDULLAH'S AFFIDAVITS OF IDENTITY BAR THEM FROM THE BALLOT.

A candidate who fails to comply with all of the AOI requirements of MCL 168.558, or who executes an AOI that "contains a false statement with regard to any information or statement required" on the AOI, cannot be certified for the ballot. MCL 168.558(4) (emphasis added). Under Michigan law, there must be strict compliance with all of the AOI requirements mandated by MCL 168.558. See, e g, Stand Up, 492 Mich at 594, 600–608, 619; Nykoriak v Napoleon, 334 Mich App 370, 379; 964 NW2d 895 (2020) (per curiam); Stumbo, 332 Mich App at 481. As held in Stumbo,

> The failure to supply a facially proper affidavit of identity (AOI), i.e., an affidavit that conforms to the requirements of the Election Law, is a ground to disqualify a candidate from inclusion on the ballot.

Id.

A. West And Abdullah's Affidavits Of Identity Falsely State That They Are Candidates "Without Political Party Affiliation."

The AOI's signed by both West and Abdullah claim that they are "running for a partisan office without party affiliation," and that they "meet the statutory . . . requirements for the office sought."

These statements are false and disqualify both of them from the ballot because, as demonstrated in Part II, MCL 168.692a prohibits them from running for President and Vice-President as candidates "without party affiliation."

B. West And Abdullah's Affidavits Of Identity Are Defective.

1. West's Affidavit Of Identity Was Incorrectly Notarized.

MCL 168.558, which requires an AOI to be filed with the petition of a candidate seeking

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to be placed on the ballot as an NPA or independent candidate, "requires notarization, as defined by the Michigan Law on Notarial Acts, MCL 55.261 et seq." Nykoriak, 334 Mich App at 377. That act permits notarial acts to be performed in other states only if they meet certain conditions:

> (1) All of the following apply with regard to a notarial act that is performed in another state:
>
> (a) A notarial act performed in another state has the same effect under the law of this state as if performed by a notarial officer of this state, if the act performed in that state is performed by any of the following individuals:
>
> (i) A notary public who is authorized to perform notarial acts in the state in which the act is performed.
>
> (ii) A judge, clerk, or deputy clerk of any court of record in the state in which the notarial act is performed.
>
> (iii) Any other individual who is authorized to perform notarial acts in the state in which the act is performed.
>
> (b) The signature and title of an individual described in subdivision (a)(i) to (iii) who performs a notarial act in another state are prima facie evidence that the signature is genuine and that the individual holds the designated title.
>
> (c) The signature and title of an individual described in subdivision (a)(i) or (ii) who performs a notarial act in another state conclusively establish the authority of the individual to perform the notarial act.

MCL 55.285a(1).

The West AOI was notarized in Colorado. However, that notarization was not a proper "notarial act" under the law of Colorado, thus rendering the notarization invalid, the affidavit defective, and West ineligible to be placed on the Michigan ballot.

The Colorado notarization of West's AOI failed to comply with Colorado law, so it was not a valid "notarial act" recognized under MCL 55.285a(1). Colorado's Revised Uniform Law on Notarial Acts ("RULONA") requires the following:

> Under RULONA (C.R.S. 24-21-515 and 24-51-516) the [notarial] certificate must:
>
> - Be signed by the notary

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

  - The notary's signature must match the official signature on file with the Secretary of State
  - Be signed at the same time that the performance of the notarial act takes place
- Be dated by the notary
  - A notary should never pre or post-date a notarization
- Identify the county in which the notarial act is performed
- Identify the state in which the notarial act is performed
- Contain the title of the office of the notary
- Be stamped by the notary

> A notarial certificate should also indicate that the notary certifies that s/he complied with the law and made the determinations required by the law for the type of notarial act s/he is completing.
>
> In other words, the notary should indicate whether s/he is completing an oath, affirmation, acknowledgement, signature witness, or copy certification. This can be a very brief description—for example, "Subscribed and sworn to before me," or a more detailed one—for example, the copy certification form, or one of the longer acknowledgements.

Colorado Secretary of State, Notary Handbook (April 24, 2024), pp 18–19 (emphasis added).

The Colorado notarization of West's AOI failed to comply with the highlighted requirements of Colorado notary law. Nowhere did the Colorado notary "certify that she complied with the law and made determinations required by the law." Id. She did not include a copy certification form, or even the phrase "subscribed and sworn to before me."

Because the Colorado notarization failed to comply with Colorado law, it is not a valid "notarial act" recognized in Michigan by MCL 55.285a(1). West's AOI notarization thus fails, making the AOI defective and him ineligible to appear on the Michigan ballot.

2. Abdullah's Affidavit Of Identity Fails To Provide Required Information.

One of the pieces of information an AOI must provide is "the manner in which the candidate wishes to have his or her name appear on the ballot." MCL 168.558(2). Making a false statement anywhere on the AOI is cause for disqualification, as the candidate's certification states.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The instructions advise that providing "incorrect information may result in disqualification."

On her AOI, Abdullah indicated that she wants to be listed as "Cornel West" on the ballot. That information is incorrect and false, rendering the AOI defective and Abdullah ineligible for the ballot.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF SOUGHT

For these reasons, Plaintiff asks that the Court:

1. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate by MCL 168.692a;

2. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate under American Independent Party;

3. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate because his Affidavit of Identity is defective under MCL 168.558;

4. Permanently enjoin the Secretary of State from placing West on the 2024 general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate;

5. Expedite the hearing and disposition of this matter; and

6. Grant Plaintiff such other relief as the Court deems just and appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

/s/ Mark Brewer
MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Proof of Service

The undersigned certifies that on August 12, 2024, the foregoing instrument(s) electronically filed the foregoing papers with the Clerk of the Court using the Electronic Filing System which will send notification of such filing to all attorneys of record.

/s/ Elizabeth M. Rhodes
Elizabeth M. Rhodes

Dated: August 12, 2024

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROSA HOLLIDAY,

Plaintiff,

Case No.
Hon.

v

URGENT ELECTION MATTER

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, Defendant.

_____/

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND PERMANENT INJUNCTION

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED IF THE COURT DEEMS IT NECESSARY

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOW COMES Plaintiff, by and through her attorneys, Goodman Acker, P.C., and moves for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction as set forth in her Verified Complaint. In support of this Motion, Plaintiff relies on the authorities and arguments in her Brief in Support of Motions for Declaratory Judgment, Permanent Injunction, and Immediate and Expedited Consideration of her Verified Complaint.

Concurrence in this Motion was sought on August 12, 2024. Defendant opposes this Motion.

WHEREFORE, for the reasons stated in the accompanying Brief, Plaintiff respectfully requests that the Court:

1. Grant this Motion;

2. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate by MCL 168.692a;

3. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate under American Independent Party;

4. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate because his Affidavit of Identity is defective under MCL 168.558;

5. Permanently enjoin the Secretary of State from placing West on the 2024 general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate;

6. Expedite the hearing and disposition of this matter; and

7. Grant Plaintiff such other relief as the Court deems just and appropriate.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Respectfully submitted,

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

/s/ Mark Brewer
MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Dated: August 12, 2024

Proof of Service

The undersigned certifies that on August 12, 2024, the foregoing instrument(s) electronically filed the foregoing papers with the Clerk of the Court using the Electronic Filing System which will send notification of such filing to all attorneys of record.

/s/ Elizabeth M. Rhodes
Elizabeth M. Rhodes

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROSA HOLLIDAY,

Plaintiff,

Case No.
Hon.

v

URGENT ELECTION MATTER

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, Defendant.

_____/

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR IMMEDIATE AND EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND PERMANENT INJUNCTION

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED IF THE COURT DEEMS IT NECESSARY

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOW COMES Plaintiff, by and through her attorneys, Goodman Acker, P.C., and for her Motion for Immediate and Expedited Consideration of her Verified Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction states as follows:

1. Plaintiff incorporates by reference her Verified Complaint.

2. The candidates for the November general election ballot must be finalized by September 6, 2024, so time is of the essence in this election case. In Scott v Mich Dir of Elections, 490 Mich 888; 804 NW2d 119 (2011), the Michigan Supreme Court recognized that the handling of election cases must of necessity be expedited. The Michigan Court Rules also prioritize election-related litigation. See MCR 7.213(C)(4).

3. By her Motion for Immediate and Expedited Consideration of her Verified Complaint, Plaintiff seeks to expedite consideration of this case in every way possible.

4. On August 12, 2024, Defendant's concurrence was sought in this Motion. Defendant does not oppose this Motion.

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff respectfully requests that this Motion be granted, that her Verified Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction be immediately and expeditiously considered by the Court, and that the Court award the relief sought by the Verified Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction.

Respectfully submitted,

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

/s/ Mark Brewer
MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Proof of Service

The undersigned certifies that on August 12, 2024, the foregoing instrument(s) electronically filed the foregoing papers with the Clerk of the Court using the Electronic Filing System which will send notification of such filing to all attorneys of record.

/s/ Elizabeth M. Rhodes
Elizabeth M. Rhodes

Dated: August 12, 2024

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROSA HOLLIDAY,

Plaintiff,

Case No.
Hon.

v

URGENT ELECTION MATTER

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, Defendant.

_____/

PLAINTIFF'S VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND PERMANENT INJUNCTION

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED IF THE COURT DEEMS IT NECESSARY

A civil action involving other parties that includes factual and legal allegations that overlap in part with those alleged in this Complaint has been previously filed in this Court where it was given case number 24-000115-MB and assigned to Judge Redford. That action remains pending.

/s/ Mark Brewer
GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff for her Verified Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction against Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson ("Secretary") states as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. This is an action to protect the integrity of Michigan elections and prevent the deception of Michigan voters by stopping fake independent candidates for President and Vice-President, Cornel West and Melina Abdullah (collectively "West"), from appearing on the general election ballot.

JURISDICTION

2. This Court has jurisdiction over Plaintiff's claims in this action for declaratory and permanent injunctive relief under MCL 600.6419 and MCR 2.605.

PARTIES

3. Plaintiff Rosa Holliday is a registered voter in Bay County, who intends to vote in the November 5, 2024 presidential election. She has standing to bring this Complaint.

4. Defendant Jocelyn Benson is the duly elected Secretary of State, responsible for the administration of elections in the State of Michigan, including the November 5, 2024 general election.

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

5. Cornel West never wanted to be an independent candidate for President in Michigan—he wanted to be the candidate of a political party as he is in several other states.

6. In January 2024, West sought the nomination of Michigan's Natural Law Party ("NLP"). See Davis O'Brien, How R.F.K. Jr. Got on the Michigan Ballot, With Only Two Votes, New York Times (April 20, 2024) (Exhibit 1). When he lost the bidding war for that nomination to Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., see id, he was desperate to get on the Michigan ballot, so he resorted to two contradictory paths, both illegal under Michigan Election Law.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7. First, he sought the presidential nomination of another faction of the NLP, the national Natural Law Party. However, beginning in February 2024, that political party was wracked by a battle for control between its Florida founder and the Kennedy campaign, which wanted its nomination. See Caputo, 'Swindlers,' 'Hijacking,' and 'Blackmail': Inside the Kennedy Campaign's Natural Law Party Meltdown in Florida, Bulwark (June 6, 2024) (Exhibit 2). Thus, it was not clear at that time that West could get its nomination.

8. So, West embarked on another illegal path. Despite seeking the presidential nomination of both NLP factions and receiving the nomination of political parties in several other states,[1] he sought to gain ballot access in Michigan under the ruse that he was an "independent" candidate with no affiliation with a political party. Funded by secret sources, petition signatures were collected and filed on his behalf on June 17, 2024, together with Affidavits of Identity ("AOI") for him and for his vice-presidential candidate, Melina Abdullah. See Swindle, Cornel West Claims to Have 'Far Exceeded' Required Michigan Signatures, Jewish News Syndicate (June 21, 2024), https://www.jns.org/cornel-west-claims-to-have-far-exceeded-required-michigan-signatures/; see also Exhibits 3 and 4.

9. In May 2024, Kennedy lost his fight for control of the national Natural Law Party. See Exhibit 2.

10. On July 21, 2024—after he had filed as an "independent" candidate in Michigan—West was nominated for President by the national NLP. See Willow Evans, Natural Law Party of

[1] West has been nominated for President in several states by political parties: Alaska's Aurora Party, Unity Party of Colorado, Florida Natural Law Party, Mississippi Natural Law Party, Nebraska's Legal Marijuana Now Party, North Carolina's Justice for All Party, Oregon Progressive Party, South Carolina's United Citizens Party, and Vermont's Green Mountain & Justice Party. See nn 13–21 in Plaintiff's Brief for citations.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the United States Endorses 2024 Presidential Ticket of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah, Independent Political Report (July 22, 2024) (Exhibit 5, with resolution nominating West for President).

11. The AOI's of West and Abdullah were timely challenged by Plaintiff Holliday on July 23, 2024. See Exhibit 6. That challenge remains pending before the Secretary of State. Plaintiff Holliday also timely challenged West's petition signatures on July 25, 2024.[2] That challenge is scheduled to be decided by the Board of State Canvassers on August 26, 2024, just eleven days before the candidates for the November general election ballot must be finalized.

COUNT I – DECLARATORY JUDGMENT: WEST IS BARRED FROM BEING AN INDEPENDENT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE BY MCL 168.692a.

12. Plaintiff incorporates the prior paragraphs as if set forth word for word.

13. MCR 2.605(A)(1) states: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." The Michigan Supreme Court has held that "[a]n actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Secretary of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020).

14. There is an actual controversy because Plaintiff has a legal right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot. See Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404, 412; 836 NW2d 498 (2013), lv den 494 Mich 866; 831 NW2d 461 (2013).

15. West is ineligible to appear on the general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate under MCL 168.692a, and he has no legal right to appear on the ballot.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

[2] The challenge is voluminous, so a copy is not provided. If the Court wishes to see it, counsel will provide it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory judgment to preserve her right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot.

COUNT II – DECLARATORY JUDGMENT: WEST IS BARRED FROM BEING AN INDEPENDENT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE UNDER AMERICAN INDEPENDENT PARTY.

16. Plaintiff incorporates the prior paragraphs as if set forth word for word.

17. MCR 2.605(A)(1) states: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." The Michigan Supreme Court has held that "[a]n actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Secretary of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020).

18. There is an actual controversy because Plaintiff has a legal right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot. See Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404, 412; 836 NW2d 498 (2013), lv den 494 Mich 866; 831 NW2d 461 (2013).

19. West is part of an internal party dispute within the Natural Law Party over whether he or Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. are its presidential candidate in Michigan.

20. The decision of the Michigan Supreme Court in American Indep Party v Secretary of State, 397 Mich 689; 247 NW2d 17 (1976), requires the Natural Law Party to resolve that internal dispute, and does not allow West to avoid that resolution using the ruse of an independent candidacy to attain ballot access in Michigan.

21. West is ineligible to appear on the general election ballot as an independent candidate by American Indep Party, and he has no legal right to appear on the ballot. Plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory judgment to preserve her right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

COUNT III – DECLARATORY JUDGMENT: WEST AND ABDULLAH ARE BARRED FROM BEING INDEPENDENT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES BECAUSE THEIR AFFIDAVITS OF IDENTITY ARE DEFECTIVE UNDER MCL 168.558.

22. Plaintiff incorporates the prior paragraphs as if set forth word for word.

23. MCR 2.605(A)(1) states: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." The Michigan Supreme Court has held that "[a]n actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Secretary of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020).

24. There is an actual controversy because Plaintiff has a legal right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot. See Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404, 412; 836 NW2d 498 (2013), lv den 494 Mich 866; 831 NW2d 461 (2013).

25. West is ineligible to appear on the general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate because his Affidavit of Identity is defective under MCL 168.558 as containing false statements and being improperly notarized, and he has no legal right to appear on the ballot. Plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory judgment to preserve her right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot.

26. Abdullah is ineligible to appear on the general election ballot as an independent vice-presidential candidate because her Affidavit of Identity is defective under MCL 168.558 due to false statements, and she has no legal right to appear on the ballot. Plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory judgment to preserve her right to have only eligible vice-presidential candidates on the ballot.

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

COUNT IV – PERMANENT INJUNCTION: THE SECRETARY OF STATE SHOULD BE ENJOINED FROM PLACING WEST ON THE 2024 GENERAL ELECTION BALLOT.

27. Plaintiff incorporates the prior paragraphs as if set forth word for word.

28. West is ineligible to appear on the general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate by MCL 168.692a, American Indep Party, and MCL 168.558.

29. Based upon those declaratory judgments sought in Counts I, II, and III, Plaintiff is entitled to relief by way of a permanent injunction under MCR 2.605(F).

30. Plaintiff is entitled to permanent injunctive relief preventing the Secretary from placing West on the 2024 presidential general election ballot.

THIS IS AN URGENT ELECTION MATTER REQUIRING IMMEDIATE ACTION.

31. Declaratory judgment actions may be expedited, MCR 2.605(D), and election matters should be expedited, see, e g, MCR 7.213(C)(4); Scott v Mich Dir of Elections, 490 Mich 888; 804 NW2d 119 (2011); Ferency v Secretary of State, 409 Mich 569, 599; 297 NW2d 544 (1980).

PRAYER FOR RELIEF SOUGHT

For the reasons stated, Plaintiff prays that the Court:

1. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate by MCL 168.692a;

2. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate under American Independent Party;

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Declare that West is barred from being an independent presidential candidate because his Affidavit of Identity is defective under MCL 168.558;

4. Permanently enjoin the Secretary of State from placing West on the 2024 general election ballot as an independent presidential candidate;

5. Expedite the hearing and disposition of this matter; and

6. Grant Plaintiff such other relief as the Court deems just and appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.

/s/ Mark Brewer
MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Dated: August 12, 2024

Proof of Service

The undersigned certifies that on August 12, 2024, the foregoing instrument(s) electronically filed the foregoing papers with the Clerk of the Court using the Electronic Filing System which will send notification of such filing to all attorneys of record.

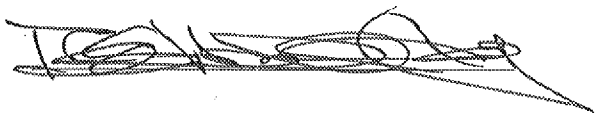
/s/ Elizabeth M. Rhodes
Elizabeth M. Rhodes

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

I declare under the penalties of perjury that this Verified Complaint has been examined by me and that its contents are true to the best of my information, knowledge, and belief.



8-12-24
Date

Subscribed and sworn to before me
This 12 day of August, 2024

Elizabeth M. Brooks
Elizabeth Brooks, Notary Public
Macomb County, State of Michigan
My Commission Expires: 11/4/28
Acting in the County of Oakland

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROSA HOLLIDAY,

Plaintiff,

Case No.
Hon.

v

URGENT ELECTION MATTER

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, Defendant.

_____/

GOODMAN ACKER, P.C.
MARK BREWER (P35661)
ROWAN CONYBEARE (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiff
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48075
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com
_____/

PLAINTIFF'S VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND PERMANENT INJUNCTION

EXHIBITS

1. New York Times Article
2. The Bulwark Article
3. Cornel West's Affidavit of Identity
4. Melina Abdullah's Affidavit of Identity
5. Independent Political Report Article
6. Plaintiff's Affidavit of Identity Challenge

GOODMAN ACKER P.C. Michigan's Trusted Law Firm

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 1

Online Journal Watch Ballot, Michigan FOIA

How R.F.K. Jr. Got on the Michigan Ballot, With Only Two Votes

The independent candidate persuaded a tiny party to give him its line on the ballot in a key 2024 battleground state, sparing him a costly, arduous organizing effort.

Listen to this article · 5:38 min Learn more

By Rebecca Davis O'Brien

April 20, 2024

Sign up for the On Politics newsletter. Your guide to the 2024 elections. Get it sent to your inbox.

In January, when Doug Dern, the state chairman of the Natural Law Party of Michigan, got an email from a top strategist for Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s presidential campaign, he sensed it could be a star turn for his tiny political group.

For 22 years, Mr. Dern, a bankruptcy lawyer with a small practice outside Detroit, has almost single-handedly kept the Natural Law Party on Michigan's ballot. Each cycle, the party runs a handful of candidates in obscure state races to meet Michigan's minimum polling requirements for minor parties.

"Keep that ballot access," Mr. Dern, 62, said in an interview on Friday. "Because someday, a candidate is going to come along who's going to be perfect for it. Someday, the third parties are going to be hot."

That day may have come.

In gaining access to the ballot in Michigan, a critical swing state in the 2024 election, Mr. Kennedy has injected new uncertainty into what promises to be one of the most closely contested presidential races in history. And he did it without having to gather a single signature, avoiding a costly and arduous organizing effort, not to mention the possibility of having to fight court challenges to those signatures.

Mr. Kennedy was formally nominated at a brief convention held Wednesday morning in Mr. Dern's law office. The only two attendees were Mr. Dern and the party's secretary.

Stefanie Spear, a spokeswoman for the Kennedy campaign, confirmed the timeline of the campaign's outreach and said simply that Mr. Kennedy and his running mate, Nicole Shanahan, had been "duly nominated by the Natural Law Party."

Third parties have drawn increasing attention in recent elections — and arguably have swung some of them — by allowing voters to express discontent with major-party candidates. Mr. Kennedy is counting on a particularly strong showing in this election as polls show voters are highly dissatisfied with their options.

The Natural Law Party was founded in 1992 on a platform that included promotion of transcendental meditation, responsible gun use, flat taxes and organic farming. But it has dwindled over the years. Heading into the 2024 election, Michigan's was its only state chapter.

These days, the party is more like an empty vessel for independent candidates, which Mr. Dern sees as a virtue in itself — a commitment to giving voters more choice. Every presidential cycle, independent candidates reach out to Mr. Dern, seeking the party's nomination in Michigan. In 2008, the spot went to Ralph Nader, who had been seen as a spoiler in the 2000 election.

Mr. Dern, who has worked as a stage magician and also has a law practice for drunken-driving arrests, has made it his personal mission to keep the party active. "I've just been plugging away, year after year, making sure there are people on the ballot," he said.

Unlocked by Judicial Watch, Inc. FOIA

Natural Law candidates, who have frequently included Mr. Dern himself, have run for secretary of state, seats on Michigan's Supreme Court, lieutenant governor, state university boards and others. Their mission is simple: Secure enough votes in the general election to keep the party on the ballot for the next cycle.

In Michigan, minor parties can retain their ballot access only if their top vote-getting candidate — for any statewide office on the ballot — receives a total vote equal to at least 1 percent of the total votes cast for the winner of the last secretary of state race.

In January, Cornel West's independent presidential campaign reached out to Mr. Dern, he said. Under normal circumstances, Mr. Dern said, Mr. West would have been a great candidate for his party.

But the very next day, a better offer arrived in the form of an email from Nicholas Brana, a campaign consultant for Mr. Kennedy — whose ideals, Mr. Dern noted, align with much of the Natural Law Party's original platform, including its emphasis on health. Mr. Kennedy, an environmental lawyer and a scion of a storied political family, is also a leading figure in the anti-vaccine movement and a critic of the Covid pandemic response.

The party affiliation is crucial for Mr. Kennedy's campaign. Independent candidates without any party backing face a daunting path to getting on the ballot in Michigan, requiring between 12,000 and 60,000 signatures, including 100 signatures from each of at least half of the state's congressional districts.

Candidates can skip all that if they are nominated by a minor party with ballot access. The party just has to hold a convention, nominate a candidate and submit a certificate to the Michigan Department of State. There are a few other legal niceties — for example, presidential candidates need to submit a list of electors — but that is basically it, Mr. Dern said.

So, on Wednesday morning, Mr. Dern said, he and Kathleen Oakford, the party's secretary, held their convention in a low-slung office building in Hartland, Mich.

The proceedings were brief.

"She came in, I took my gavel and tapped it on my desk." He called the state convention to order, they signed the proposed certificate of nomination, he closed the meeting, "And I took off for Lansing and filed it."

Since Mr. Kennedy's campaign announced his place on the ballot, Mr. Dern has fielded calls and emails from other states and candidates. A resurgence of interest in the Natural Law Party is underway, Mr. Dern said.

"There's even talk of reviving the national chapter," he said.

Rebecca Davis O'Brien covers campaign finance and money in U.S. elections. She previously covered federal law enforcement, courts and criminal justice. More about Rebecca Davis O'Brien

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 2

MAGAVILLE

'Swindlers,' 'Hijacking,' and 'Blackmail'

Inside the Kennedy campaign's Natural Law Party meltdown in Florida.

MARC A. CAPUTO

JUN 06, 2024

133 26 Share

(Composite / Photos: GettyImages / Shutterstock)

AMID VOTER DISENCHANTMENT with a Trump-Biden rematch, third-party activist Joseph Wendt believed 2024 could transform American politics. And Robert F. Kennedy Jr. might be the candidate to do it.

"It seemed this was the Year of the Third Party," said Wendt, the former chair of Florida's Reform Party affiliate. "This would be the year where we would be able to make an impact."

So Wendt started the process of reconstituting the long-defunct Natural Law Party of the United States with the Federal Election Commission and he resurrected its Florida branch. He planned to hold a convention and nominate Kennedy for president so that RFK could appear on the Florida ballot as the Natural Law Party candidate. Kennedy's campaign loved the idea. And the two sides started talking money. Wendt signed a $10,000-a-month consulting contract with Kennedy's campaign on February 24.

"I was over the moon," Wendt said. "We could get him on the ballot. It might have an impact. But it turned into a nightmare."

Bureaucratic delays and mistakes turned into mistrust. A bitter rift grew. Wendt was ultimately paid nothing. And he lost control of the Natural Law Party of the United States, which was taken over by Kennedy allies.

Now Wendt, a 39-year-old Lyft driver, wants the national Natural Law Party back in his control. He calls the Kennedy campaign unethical "swindlers." Kennedy campaign officials fired back, accusing Wendt of illegally "hijacking" the national party and trying to "blackmail" the campaign, and suggesting to him that his actions amounted to "extortion."

Both sides deny wrongdoing. But a close look at the record of the dispute provides a window into the obstacles third-party candidates face and shines a light on the Kennedy campaign's aggressive efforts to get on the ballot. RFK's campaign has tapped a constellation of third-party groups in various states, all of which have different rules.

Why? Because states generally provide presidential candidates ballot access if they're nominated by a verified political party, regardless of its size. Otherwise, campaigns usually have to rely on paid petition-gatherers, which, according to experts familiar with the process, can cost as much as $1.7 million in a state like Florida.

Sign up to get MAGAville in your inbox and keep tabs on the hucksters and hangers-on seeking to make politics great again in 2024.

Type your email... Join

KENNEDY'S CAMPAIGN AT FIRST TRIED to form its own "We the People Party" so it wouldn't have to rely on other groups for ballot access, but ultimately it sought existing third-party nominations in states such as California, where he was nominated by the American Independent Party. (This party was founded in 1968 to help the presidential campaign of Alabama's segregationist governor, George Wallace.) The Natural Law Party was established in 1992 in the United States on a platform centered on transcendental meditation and holistic health. It ceased both federal and Florida operations in 2005, and by 2024 most of its original officers had died or lost interest in it.

Along with the Reform Party, the Natural Law Party was one of two relatively easy ballot-access vehicles for Kennedy in Florida. As relations soured with Wendt, the Kennedy campaign instead got the Reform Party to nominate him on May 23. (The revivified Reform Party has yet to be certified by Florida's Elections Division.)

At the heart of the dispute between Wendt and the Kennedy campaign is the consulting contract he signed. The contract is complicated: It was drafted by Kennedy's team, but his campaign is not a party to it. Instead, it's a written agreement between Wendt and the national Natural Law Party—which he controlled at the time of the signing. The contract only became effective if Wendt gave up control of the national and Florida branches of the party to Kennedy campaign allies. Wendt was then to be paid with donor money secured by the campaign, text messages show.

Read the Contract Discussed in This Article
106KB · PDF file

Download

The "consultant agreement" between Joseph Wendt and the Natural Law Party of the United States that was drafted by Robert Kennedy's campaign.

Download

Wendt relinquished control of the national party quickly, by March 4 (nine days after the contract was presented to him). But he balked at handing over state-party control amid friction with the Kennedy campaign's ballot-access director, Nick Brana, who did not return calls and emails seeking comment for this article.

Kennedy campaign lawyer Paul Rossi refused to comment on why the campaign disguised its involvement with the contract as it negotiated with Wendt to gain control of the party for ballot access. Before abruptly hanging up the phone in an interview with The Bulwark, Rossi counteraccused Wendt of secretly going behind the Kennedy campaign's back to reconstitute the national version of the Natural Law Party after he learned that Kennedy allies wanted to use it as a ballot-access pathway.

Rossi, a veteran third-party election-law attorney with a tough-talking reputation that matches his Philly accent, said the Natural Law Party of Michigan, the only branch of the party to be continuously active for decades, should have had a say in the reconstitution of the party at the national level. But Wendt didn't consult them.

"He can complain all the frick he wants," Rossi said. "What he did was illegal, and, frankly, he ought to be prosecuted for his conduct. And that's all I'm gonna say about this. He filed a document with the FEC claiming he was secretary of the Natural Law Party without anybody providing it because he saw an avenue to hijack a national political party for his own economic gain, and was blackmailing people across the country in order to pay him money. . . . He was holding it hostage to the highest bidder. And so we got him out of there. And we're very proud of protecting our Michigan supporters in this regard."

Third-party politics tends to attract idealists and some seasoned pros—but there are also niche-issue activists who can make the movement resemble an island of misfit toys populated with minor-league talent.

Wendt and two other activists involved in the discussions over the Florida party say the RFK campaign had never accused Wendt of wrongdoing until now. As evidence, Wendt shared months' worth of text messages with Brana—including group messages involving Brana, Rossi, and Wendt—and none reflect the claims that Kennedy's campaign is voicing now that Wendt was breaking the law or acting inappropriately in not involving the Michigan party branch.

For its part, the Natural Law Party of Michigan formally nominated Kennedy on April 17 at a two-person convention. One of the people present was the state party's leader, Doug Dern. Dern is a veteran third-party activist and also a bankruptcy attorney, stage magician, and former candidate for various state offices. It was to Dern and an attorney named Michael Baum that Wendt was supposed to hand over control of the Natural Law Party of the United States, according to the contract Wendt signed. Dern is now listed with the FEC as the party's custodian of record and Baum its treasurer. Neither returned calls seeking comment.

IN INTERVIEWS WITH THE BULWARK, four independent election law attorneys who reviewed the contract were divided over the degree to which it violated various campaign-finance laws designed for transparency. Kenneth Gross, former associate general counsel of the Federal Election Commission, called the contract "strange" and "cockamamie" but probably not illegal.

"It's just confusing," Gross said. "It's like a Rubik's Cube that broke apart."

Asked why the Kennedy campaign, and not the Michigan branch of the Natural Law Party, drafted the contract, Rossi said "they weren't in position to do that. We were in a position to try to work with Joe to see if we could get him out of there."

Why did the Kennedy campaign disguise its involvement in drafting the agreement?

"You don't have to understand it," Rossi replied. "He hijacked a national political party. If you want to sanction that what he did was okay, you go ahead and write that story."

STUCK IN THE MIDDLE OF THE CONFLICT was Darcy Richardson, who has been involved in third-party politics since 1978. In 2018, he ran for governor of Florida on a Reform Party ticket, and in 2020 he was the vice-presidential nominee of the Reform Party, the Alliance Party, and a few other parties in a handful of states. Wendt had worked to elect him in both campaigns. Richardson and the nation's top expert on presidential ballot access, Richard Winger of California, told The Bulwark they were the ones who came up with the idea of reconstituting the Natural Law Party—not Wendt and not the Kennedy campaign. Richardson then recruited Wendt for the task and put him in contact with the Kennedy campaign.

After 48 years of being a "die-hard third-party guy," Richardson said, "I think I'm going to vote for Biden."

"This has been a very unrewarding experience for Joe. I think he deserved better. I feel guilty because I recruited him . . . they should have put him on the payroll," Richardson said. Like Wendt, Richardson said, "I've soured on the Kennedy campaign. . . . I haven't been impressed by his campaign or the people he surrounded himself with. His whole campaign staff is made up of neophytes who don't know the first thing about politics, the mechanics of how it works, what it takes."

Because there's less money and less power in it, third-party politics tends to attract idealists and some seasoned pros like Richardson, but there are also niche-issue activists (think Kennedy's anti-vaxx cred) who can make the movement resemble an island of misfit toys populated with minor-league talent.

After 48 years of being a "die-hard third-party guy," Richardson said, "I think I'm going to vote for Biden."

Richardson said Wendt didn't operate in bad faith, but he did improperly file paperwork in Florida to reconstitute the Natural Law Party. That's what led the state Elections Division to reject the formation of the party, twice.

Richardson faults Wendt for not clearly communicating with the Kennedy campaign's Brana and getting into a hostile relationship with him, but he also said the contract that the Kennedy campaign drafted was "kind of shady" and "suspicious." The other two election-law experts I spoke with, a Democratic lawyer and a Republican lawyer, neither involved in the presidential race, also labeled the contract "shady."

WENDT, WHO'S REPUBLICAN-LEANING, and Brana, a progressive, clashed on their first call on January 19.

"My concerns are what Kennedy will do for the Natural Law Party. I didn't hear anything in our last conversation about what Kennedy or his 'cause' will do to make the situation better for America," Wendt said in a text message to Brana memorializing the conversation. "To me, it seems like you want to take over the Party and you view it as disposable. That leaves a nasty taste in my mouth, you want to use and dispose of my work and efforts. I don't know of anyone who tried to do what I did."

According to Wendt's text message, Brana also "insinuated" that Wendt was engaging in "extortion" over the party, a suggestion Wendt labeled "uncalled for. To me, that seems untrustworthy and if we can't come to a reasonable agreement, then no hard feelings, we will just run our own candidate. If the Kennedy campaign is serious about using the Natural Law Party in Florida, I'd prefer to work with someone else within the campaign's leadership."

But the two kept working together and, on January 31, Brana texted Wendt and Richardson to set up a conference call, noting "I shared our last conversation with Bobby [Kennedy]." The three talked about Florida ballot access via the Natural Law Party and discussed getting Kennedy on the ballot in Oregon, text messages show.

Type your email... Join

On February 15, Wendt sent a text message to Brana to let him know that the Florida Elections Division rejected the filing to reconstitute the Natural Law Party in the state due to a host of omissions. Brana then asked Wendt via text to refile for the party, but wanted Wendt to list Kennedy's cousin, Anthony Shriver, as the state party chair. The vice chair was to be Becky Hines, a University of Central Florida special education professor who is the sister of Kennedy's wife, Curb Your Enthusiasm actress Cheryl Hines, a Tallahassee native. Former Miami Beach City Commissioner Ricky Arriola was to be listed as the secretary/treasurer.

Wendt ultimately didn't list their names because, he said, Brana didn't send him the three Floridians' voter registration forms he wanted to submit with the new filing.

Still, talks progressed and on February 24, Brana, Wendt and Richardson had a "Contract Review" conference call. At 9:09 p.m., Brana emailed the contract, labeled "Consultant Agreement," to Wendt, who soon signed it. The contract, between Wendt and the national Natural Law Party, did not mention Kennedy or his campaign and said nothing about ballot access, instead requiring Wendt to help with a host of consulting services such as "convention and event organizing" and "political research." It was to take effect when the FEC website listed Dern and Baum, instead of Wendt, as "the sole officers and directors" of the national Natural Law Party.

OVER THE NEXT TWO MONTHS, Brana kept checking back in about the status of the state party's formation. Wendt kept telling him it was stuck in the Elections Division. Brana offered to send a lawyer to Tallahassee to sort out the mess and continued to ping Wendt asking about progress. Wendt got annoyed at one point when he read that Kennedy was courting the Libertarian Party, but Brana texted back to say "that's not accurate."

On April 10, Brana texted Wendt to tell him he learned the Natural Law Party had been rejected by the state a second time. Brana asked for the rejection letter. Wendt didn't reply. Four days later, Brana asked again for the letter and then followed up with an April 23 text and call.

Wendt didn't respond.

Wendt told The Bulwark that he had come to believe Brana was operating in bad faith because he heard the campaign was talking to the Reform Party about ballot access, and that party had started a petition drive.

On April 29, Brana group-texted Wendt along with Rossi and also sent an email saying that they "need to know by tomorrow at 1 pm ET at the latest if the Natural Law Party of Florida is a viable option. Per our agreement, you were supposed to complete the filing expeditiously. As a result of months of delays and two defective and failed filings, with the same error, Paul and the rest of our campaign leadership have written it off. I'm asking them to give you one more chance."

"If you meet a member of our team in Tallahassee on Wednesday morning and withdraw the filing with them in person at the Elections Division, clearing the way for us to submit it on site once you withdraw yours, I will attempt to arrange for a donor of ours, whom I know, to pay you the $30,000 you would have received for one month of consulting, including the sign on bonus and severance fee," Brana wrote.

Wendt didn't immediately reply and waited until the following morning to respond by text message: "Good news: Florida Natural Law Party is certified. Bad news: your message is considered termination of our agreement. To discuss further, you may let me know, unless you guys still think I'm incompetent. If you don't wish to discuss, please notify me when you wish to transfer the Natural Law Party of the United States back to me and my associates."

Brana responded that the Elections Division website wasn't showing the party as certified. He asked for a copy of the letter. Wendt told him it was in the mail and said that Brana could call the state to verify his claim.

"It's been too long, Joe, and we didn't hear from you for weeks. The team found other partners to save on ballot access that they would rather work with," Brana responded. He said Rossi believed the Natural Law Party could be challenged in court "and we could end up knocked off the ballot. It's not as secure as other ballot lines."

Brana didn't elaborate. In interviews with The Bulwark, neither Richardson nor Winger said they believed Kennedy would have a ballot-access problem in Florida if he had been nominated by the Natural Law Party.

BRANA DID, HOWEVER, OFFER AN OLIVE BRANCH: "Personally, I think it would be useful to have a back up though, and the donor I know already wrote a check for $30K. Let me know tonight if you still want it. If you do, we need to transition the officers tomorrow."

Wendt wouldn't take the money. He repeated that he wanted control of the national party returned to him. He said the contract was void and that he would be in contact with a lawyer. He said that the campaign owed him more than $30,000—that in fact, it should pay him $800,000. The contract, he said, was "voided, due to you attempting ballot access through other mean[s]."

Brana pointed out that there was no contractual clause prohibiting the campaign from seeking ballot access elsewhere.

"It wouldn't have even been necessary to seek ballot access in other ways in the first place if your mistakes in the application hadn't delayed its acceptance twice," Brana replied.

"That's it, return the FEC LOGIN," Wendt wrote back, "We are done."

Brana didn't.

On May 13, Wendt checked back in.

"Do you want to make a deal?" he texted Brana.

No reply.

Ten days later, the Reform Party announced Kennedy was their nominee for Florida's ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 3

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Affidavit of Identity and Receipt of Filing

All information must be completed unless otherwise noted. Missing or incorrect information may result in disqualification. Judicial candidates should use a combined judicial affidavit of identity/qualification form rather than this form.

SECTION 1 Candidate information

First name	Middle name	Last name
Cornel	Ronald	West

Year of birth: 1953

☐ My name has formally changed in the last 10 years for a reason other than marriage or divorce. My former name is: _____

Residential address	City	ZIP
17242 Citron	Irvine, CA	92612
Mailing address, if different than above	City	ZIP

Phone number: [redacted]

Email: [redacted]

Campaign website, if applicable: www.cornelwest2024.com

SECTION 2 Office & ballot information

Office name	Jurisdiction	District/Ward
President of the United States	Statewide/National

Select one:

- ☐ I am running for a partisan office, and my political party is: _____
- ☐ I am running for a nonpartisan office without party affiliation (judicial office: see note above)
- ☑ I am running for a partisan office without party affiliation.

☐ Primary election _____ DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) ☑ General election 11/05/2024 DATE (MM/DD/YYYY)

Term of office (select one): ☑ Regular term ☐ Partial term expiring: _____ DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) ☐ Recall

Indicate exactly how you want your name to be printed on the ballot (use upper and lowercase letters):
Cornel West

Filing method (Select one):

- ☑ Petitions ☐ Return to me in January ☑ Destroy in January
- ☐ $100 filing fee (if applicable)
- ☐ Certification of party nomination and certificate of acceptance (if applicable)

SECTION 3 Certification & acknowledgment

☐ I previously ran in Michigan for office that required filing reports under the Michigan Campaign Finance Act. I ran in the following counties _____

By signing, I certify that:

- At this date, all statements, reports, late filing fees, and fines required of me or any candidate committee organized to support my election under the Michigan Campaign Finance Act have been filed or paid; and
- I am a United States citizen and meet the statutory and constitutional requirements for the office sought; and
- I acknowledge that making a false statement in this affidavit is perjury - a felony punishable by a fine up to $1,000 or imprisonment for up to five years or both and may result in disqualification from the ballot.

Candidate signature _____ Date 04/13/2024

Notary signature	Notary name
Dana L Manning	Dana L. Mannings
~~County of commission~~ State of Colorado	Acting in the County of Boulder
My commission expires DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) 03/01/2028	Date of notarization (MM/DD/YYYY) 04/13/2024

Office use only

Date of filing (MM/DD/YYYY)	Received by	Reviewed by	Check number
06/17/2024	DS
Number of petition sheets: Approx 3457	27049 SIG	Campaign Finance Number

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DANA L. MANNING
NOTARY PUBLIC
STATE OF COLORADO
NOTARY ID 20244008951
MY COMMISSION EXPIRES MARCH 1, 2028

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 4

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Affidavit of Identity and Receipt of Filing

All information must be completed unless otherwise noted. Missing or incorrect information may result in disqualification. Judicial candidates should use a combined judicial affidavit of identity/qualification form rather than this form.

SECTION 1 Candidate information

First name	Middle name	Last name
Melina		Abdullah

Year of birth: 1972

☐ My name has formally changed in the last 10 years for a reason other than marriage or divorce. My former name is: _____

Residential address	City	ZIP
2108 Wellington Rd	Los Angeles, CA	92612
Mailing address, if different than above	City	ZIP

Phone number	Email	Campaign website, if applicable
6469418502	team@cornelwest2024.com	www.cornelwest2024.com

SECTION 2 Office & ballot information

Office name	Jurisdiction	District/Ward
Vice-President of the United States	Statewide/National

Select one:

- ☐ I am running for a partisan office, and my political party is: _____
- ☐ I am running for a nonpartisan office without party affiliation (judicial office: see note above)
- ☑ I am running for a partisan office without party affiliation.

☐ Primary election _____ DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) ☑ General election 11/05/2024 DATE (MM/DD/YYYY)

Term of office (select one): ☑ Regular term ☐ Partial term expiring: _____ DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) ☐ Recall

Indicate exactly how you want your name to be printed on the ballot (use upper and lowercase letters):
Cornel West

Filing method (Select one):

- ☑ Petitions ☐ Return to me in January ☑ Destroy in January
- ☐ $100 filing fee (if applicable)
- ☐ Certification of party nomination and certificate of acceptance (if applicable)

SECTION 3 Certification & acknowledgment

☐ I previously ran in Michigan for office that required filing reports under the Michigan Campaign Finance Act. I ran in the following counties _____

By signing, I certify that:

- At this date, all statements, reports, late filing fees, and fines required of me or any candidate committee organized to support my election under the Michigan Campaign Finance Act have been filed or paid; and
- I am a United States citizen and meet the statutory and constitutional requirements for the office sought; and
- I acknowledge that making a false statement in this affidavit is perjury - a felony punishable by a fine up to $1,000 or imprisonment for up to five years or both and may result in disqualification from the ballot.

Candidate signature _____ Date 4-29-24

Notary signature	Notary name Julien Rickard
County of commission	Acting in the County of See attached
My commission expires DATE (MM/DD/YYYY)	Date of notarization (MM/DD/YYYY)

Office use only

Date of filing (MM/DD/YYYY) 04/17/2024	Received by DATE (MM/DD/YYYY) DS	Reviewed by	Check number
Number of petition sheets		Campaign Finance Number

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A notary public or other officer completing this certificate verifies only the identity of the individual who signed the document to which this certificate is attached, and not the truthfulness, accuracy, or validity of that document.

State of California
County of Los Angeles

Subscribed and sworn to (or affirmed) before me on this 29 day of April, 2024, by Melina Abdullah, proved to me on the basis of satisfactory evidence to be the person(s) who appeared before me.

JULIEN RICKARD
COMM. #2336045
Notary Public · California
Los Angeles County
My Comm. Expires Oct. 20, 2024

(Seal)

Signature

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

A notary public or other officer completing this certificate verifies only the identity of the individual who signed the document to which this certificate is attached, and not the truthfulness, accuracy, or validity of that document.

State of California
County of Los Angeles)

On April 29, 2024 before me, Julien Rickard , notary public (insert name and title of the officer) personally appeared Melina Abdullah, who proved to me on the basis of satisfactory evidence to be the person(s) whose name(s) is/are subscribed to the within instrument and acknowledged to me that he/she/they executed the same in his/her/their authorized capacity(ies), and that by his/her/their signature(s) on the instrument the person(s), or the entity upon behalf of which the person(s) acted, executed the instrument.

I certify under PENALTY OF PERJURY under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing paragraph is true and correct.

WITNESS my hand and official seal.

JULIEN RICKARD
COMM. #2336045
Notary Public · California
Los Angeles County
My Comm. Expires Oct. 20, 2024

Signature _____ (Seal)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 5

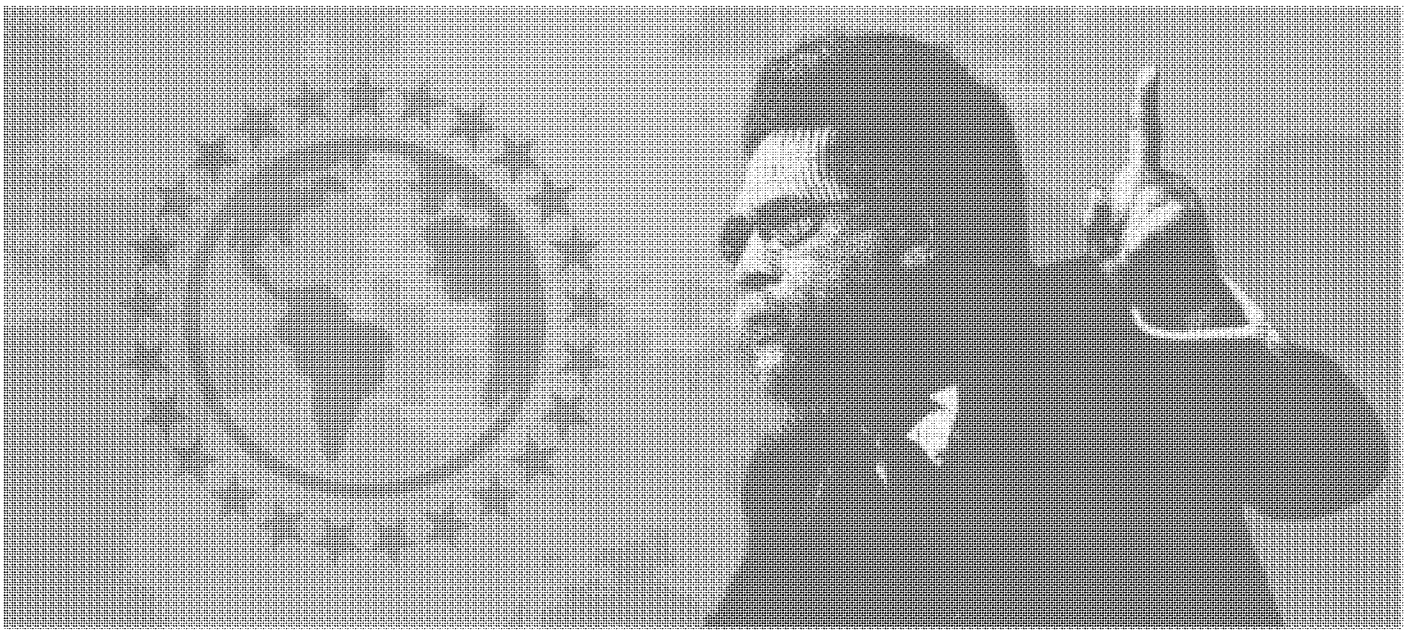
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Freedom of Info

Independent Political Report

August 11, 2024

Natural Law Party of the United States Endorses 2024 Presidential Ticket of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah

BY JORDAN WILLOW EVANS ON JULY 22, 2024 10:34 AM

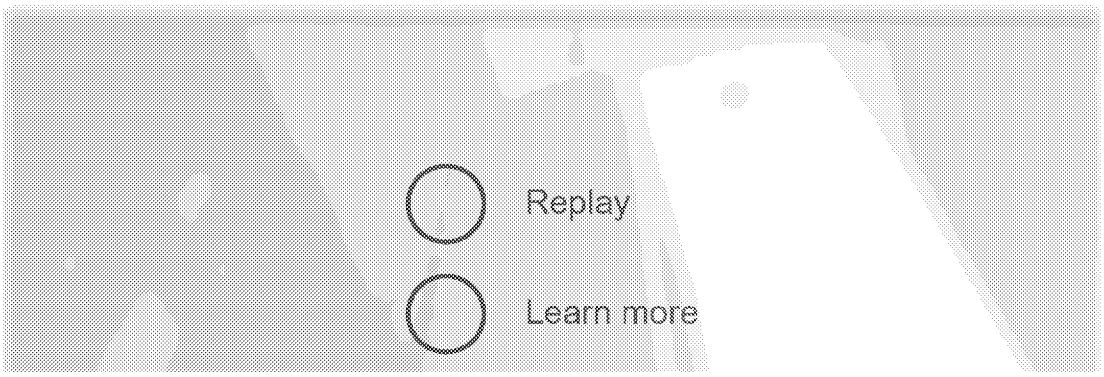


The Natural Law Party of the United States voted on Sunday to endorse the presidential ticket of Dr. Cornel West and Dr. Melina Abdullah. The party also called on the West campaign to establish a national Justice For All Party organization following the election.

According to information shared with Independent Political Report by the Natural Law Party of the United States, the party met virtually to host its national convention. As part of its convention, it voted to formally endorse the West campaign for the 2024 presidential election. It also reportedly adopted a resolution for the future that would see those groups affiliated with the Natural Law Party of the United States formally partner with West's Justice For All Parties and adopt the Justice For All name.

ADVERTISING

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. via FOIA



It's worth noting for clarity that the Natural Law Party of the United States is not associated with the Natural Law Party of Michigan, which already voted earlier this year to endorse the Robert F. Kennedy Jr. presidential campaign. According to FEC quarterly filings, the Natural Law Party of the United States is a national political committee headquartered in Florida, where it is also a recognized minor party. It also has an affiliate in Mississippi.

Furthermore, the resolution calls for the creation of a national Justice For All organization following the end of the election cycle. It also invites individual state chapters of the Justice For All Party, as well as the Progressive Party of Oregon and the Aurora Party of Alaska, which voted to endorse the West campaign earlier this year, to participate in the proposed national organization.

To facilitate this transition, the resolution states that the Natural Law Party of the United States chair is directed to form a committee after November, with the intent of bringing together representatives from those interested state parties to develop a common plan for the new national party's constitution, bylaws, and legal structure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Resolution re: Vision for the Future

WHEREAS the Natural Law Party of the United States (NLP-US) is nominating Dr. Cornel West and Dr. Melina Abdullah as President and Vice President, respectively, of the United States; and

WHEREAS this represents a historic moment in the life of this Party, a fitting time to articulate our Party's vision for the future;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the NLP-US envisions becoming a leading part of the Justice For All (JFA) organization presently organizing nationwide, with the NLP state organizations associated with NLP-US joining the National Party in re-naming themselves as Justice For All parties in their respective states;

2. That the NLP-US invites the state chapters of JFA to join with NLP-US in establishing a national JFA organization after the election;

3. That the NLP-US calls upon its West-Abdullah presidential ticket to encourage the affiliation of state chapters of JFA to join with NLP-US in establishing a national JFA organization after the election;

4. That the NLP-US invites all other political parties that also support the West-Abdullah campaign, including the Aurora Party of Alaska, the Progressive Party of Oregon, the United Citizens Party of South Carolina, the Unity Party of Colorado, the Legal Marijuana Now National Party and its state affiliates, the Green Mountain Peace and Justice Party of Vermont, and any others to join with NLP-US in establishing a national JFA organization after the election;

5. That the NLP-US also calls upon its West-Abdullah presidential ticket to invite and encourage these other parties to join with NLP-US in establishing a national JFA organization after the election and, ;

6. That the NLP-US furthermore recommends to the parties establishing a national JFA organization that the NLP-US's Chair has demonstrated experience in party leadership and a vision for the future of NLP-US as a core part of a new national JFA organization, and in light of the value of NLP-US's contribution to a national JFA organization effort, we call upon the leadership of that future JFA organization to ensure that our leaders and representatives are given appropriate consideration in the choices of that organization's leadership and executive staff;

7. That the NLP-US directs its Chair to establish a committee after the election to include invited representatives of all state parties interested in associating together in a new national JFA organization, in order that the parties may confer together and develop a common plan for the establishment of the new national party organization, including the national party's constitution and bylaws and its legal structure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 6

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan's Trusted Law Firm
GOODMAN ACKER P.C.

Good Decision

BARRY J. GOODMAN
TIM SULOLLI
JORDAN B. ACKER
BRADLEY M. PERI
MARK BREWER
AMANDA B. WARNER

RONITA BAHRI
NICOLE M. McCARTHY
JOSHUA C. MAYOWSKI
ROWAN E. CONYBEARE
DAVID E. GORNEY

ALSO ADMITTED IN FL
ALSO ADMITTED IN NY

WWW.GOODMANACKER.COM

July 23, 2024

Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
Department of State
430 W. Allegan Street
Lansing, MI 48915

Re: Affidavits of Identity of Cornel West and Melina Abdullah

Dear Secretary Benson,

On behalf of Michigan voter Rosa Holliday, I write to object to the Affidavits of Identity ("AOI") of Cornel West ("West") and Melina Abdullah ("Abdullah") as defective. Therefore, they cannot be placed on the ballot as independent candidates for President and Vice-President.

ARGUMENT

I. CANDIDATES MUST BE DISQUALIFIED FROM THE BALLOT FOR FAILURE TO STRICTLY COMPLY WITH THE AFFIDAVIT OF IDENTITY REQUIREMENTS.

A candidate who fails to comply with all of the AOI requirements of MCL 168.558, or who executes an AOI that "contains a false statement with regard to any information or statement required" on the AOI, cannot be certified for the ballot. MCL 168.558(4) (emphasis added). Under Michigan law, there must be strict compliance with all of the AOI requirements mandated by MCL 168.558. See, e g, Stand Up For Democracy v Secretary of State, 492 Mich 588, 594, 600–608, 619; 822 NW2d 159 (2012); Nykoriak v Napoleon, 334 Mich App 370, 379; 964 NW2d 895 (2020) (per curiam); Stumbo v Roe, 332 Mich App 479, 481; 957 NW2d 830 (2020). As held in Stumbo,

> The failure to supply a facially proper affidavit of identity (AOI), i.e., an affidavit that conforms to the requirements of the Election Law, is a ground to disqualify a candidate from inclusion on the ballot.

Id.

II. WEST AND ABDULLAH'S AOI'S FALSELY STATE THAT THEY ARE CANDIDATES "WITHOUT POLITICAL PARTY AFFILIATION."

The AOI's signed by both West and Abdullah claim that they are "running for a partisan

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

office without party affiliation" and that they "meet the statutory . . . requirements for the office sought."

These statements are false and disqualify both of them from the ballot.

Chapter XXIVA of the Election Law, MCL 168.590 to MCL 168.590h, governs efforts by persons such as West and Abdullah to be on the ballot "without political party affiliation." Such candidates are labeled NPA or independent candidates. However, persons who have sought the same office as the candidate of a political party during the same calendar year are prohibited from using the procedures of Chapter XXIVA to obtain ballot access as independent candidates in Michigan:

> A person who files a partisan nominating petition or filing fee as a candidate of a political party, or who is nominated a by a political party convention, committee, or caucus and accepts the nomination, shall not file a qualifying petition under chapter XXIVA for an office to be elected at that election or at an election held during the same calendar year.

MCL 168.692a. West and Abdullah must comply with this statute in order to be Michigan candidates "without political party affiliation" and they have not.

In determining the meaning of the prohibition in MCL 168.692a, the > "primary task in construing a statute, is to discern and give effect to the intent of the Legislature." The words of the statute are the most reliable evidence of the Legislature's intent and we must give each word its plain and ordinary meaning. "In interpreting the statute at issue, we consider both the plain meaning of the critical word or phrase as well as 'its placement and purpose in the statutory scheme.'"

Stand Up, 492 Mich at 598 (footnotes omitted). There must be strict compliance with the Michigan Election Law. Id at 602. Importantly, the strict compliance doctrine does not allow anyone—the Department of State or a court—to change the requirements of the Michigan Election Law. See Stumbo, 332 Mich App at 482 n 2.

Based on its text, MCL 168.692a is broad in scope. It is not restricted to being the candidate of a political party in Michigan. The Legislature could easily have restricted its scope to candidates of "Michigan" political parties, or to a "Michigan" convention, committee, or caucus nomination but it did not. Such a restriction cannot be added to the text or read into it. See, e g, Stumbo, 332 Mich App at 482 n 2.

The lack of restriction to nomination by Michigan political parties in MCL 168.692a particularly makes sense in the context of presidential elections, which are national in scope and involve candidates from outside of Michigan. Unless the restrictions in MCL 168.692a are applied to party nominations in other states, a candidate could mislead or deceive Michigan voters by claiming to be an NPA or independent presidential candidate, yet be a partisan presidential candidate in every other state. Michigan has an "important state interest" in "avoiding confusion [and] deception . . . at the general election," Jenness v Fortson, 403 US 431, 442; 91 S Ct 1970; 29 L Ed 2d 554 (1971), and MCL 168.692a advances that interest by requiring independent presidential candidates to be independent of political parties not only in Michigan but throughout the country.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

West and Abdullah cannot be NPA or independent candidates in Michigan because they have been nominated for President and Vice-President in several states by political parties:

- Alaska: Aurora Party[1]
- Colorado: Unity Party of Colorado[2]
- Florida: Florida Natural Law Party[3]
- Mississippi: Mississippi Natural Law Party[4]
- Nebraska: Legal Marijuana Now Party[5]
- Oregon: Oregon Progressive Party[6]
- South Carolina: United Citizens Party[7]
- Vermont: Green Mountain Peace and Justice Party[8]

Because they are the nominees of political parties in other states, MCL 168.692a prohibits West and Abdullah from appearing on the Michigan ballot as NPA or independent candidates for President and Vice-President.

---

[1] Downing, Cornel West, Independent Candidate, Says He Will Be On Alaska Ballot for President in 2024, Must Read Alaska (December 14, 2023), https://mustreadalaska.com/cornel-west-independent-candidate-says-he-will-be-on-alaska-ballot-for-president-in-2024/.

[2] Willow Evans, Unity Party of Colorado Nominates Cornel West and Melina Abdullah as 2024 Presidential Ticket, Independent Political Report (April 15, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/04/unity-party-of-colorado-nominates-cornel-west-and-melina-abdullah-as-2024-presidential-ticket/.

[3] Winger, Natural Law Parties of Two States Nominate Cornel West for President, Ballot Access News (July 22, 2024), https://ballot-access.org/2024/07/22/natural-law-party-nominates-cornel-west-for-president/.

[4] Id.

[5] Winger, Legal Marijuana Now Party of Nebraska Nominates Cornel West for President, Ballot Access News (July 7, 2024), https://ballot-access.org/2024/07/07/legal-marijuana-now-party-of-nebraska-nominates-cornel-west-for-president/.

[6] VanderHart, Cornel West, Independent Presidential Candidate, Likely to Make Oregon Ballot, Oregon Public Broadcasting (January 25, 2024), https://www.opb.org/article/2024/01/25/cornel-west-oregon-ballot-progressive-party/.

[7] Willow Evans, Independent Presidential Candidate Cornel West Secures South Carolina Ballot Access with United Citizens Party Support, Independent Political Report (February 28, 2024), https://independentpoliticalreport.com/2024/02/independent-presidential-candidate-cornel-west-secures-south-carolina-ballot-access-with-united-citizens-party-support/.

[8] Winger, Green Mountain Peace and Justice Party Forwards Cornel West Nomination to Secretary of State of Vermont, Ballot Access News (June 24, 2024), https://ballot-access.org/2024/06/24/green-mountain-peace-and-justice-party-forwards-cornel-west-nomination-to-secretary-of-state-of-vermont/.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. WEST AND ABDULLAH'S AOI'S ARE DEFECTIVE.

A. The West AOI Was Incorrectly Notarized.

MCL 168.558, which requires an AOI to be filed with the petition of a candidate seeking to be placed on the ballot as an NPA or independent candidate, "requires notarization, as defined by the Michigan Law on Notarial Acts, MCL 55.261 et seq." Nykoriak, 334 Mich App at 377. That act permits notarial acts to be performed in other states only if they meet certain conditions:

> (1) All of the following apply with regard to a notarial act that is performed in another state:
>
> (a) A notarial act performed in another state has the same effect under the law of this state as if performed by a notarial officer of this state, if the act performed in that state is performed by any of the following individuals:
>
> (i) A notary public who is authorized to perform notarial acts in the state in which the act is performed.
>
> (ii) A judge, clerk, or deputy clerk of any court of record in the state in which the notarial act is performed.
>
> (iii) Any other individual who is authorized to perform notarial acts in the state in which the act is performed.
>
> (b) The signature and title of an individual described in subdivision (a)(i) to (iii) who performs a notarial act in another state are prima facie evidence that the signature is genuine and that the individual holds the designated title.
>
> (c) The signature and title of an individual described in subdivision (a)(i) or (ii) who performs a notarial act in another state conclusively establish the authority of the individual to perform the notarial act.

MCL 55.285a(1).

The West AOI was notarized in Colorado. However, that notarization was not a proper "notarial act" under the law of Colorado, thus rendering the notarization invalid, the affidavit defective, and West ineligible to be placed on the Michigan ballot.

The Colorado notarization of West's AOI failed to comply with Colorado law, so it was not a valid "notarial act" recognized under MCL 55.285a(1). Colorado's Revised Uniform Law on Notarial Acts ("RULONA") requires the following:

> Under RULONA (C.R.S. 24-21-515 and 24-51-516) the [notarial] certificate must:
>
> - Be signed by the notary

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

  - The notary's signature must match the official signature on file with the Secretary of State
  - Be signed at the same time that the performance of the notarial act takes place
- Be dated by the notary
  - A notary should never pre or post-date a notarization
- Identify the county in which the notarial act is performed
- Identify the state in which the notarial act is performed
- Contain the title of the office of the notary
- Be stamped by the notary

> A notarial certificate should also indicate that the notary certifies that s/he complied with the law and made the determinations required by the law for the type of notarial act s/he is completing.
>
> In other words, the notary should indicate whether s/he is completing an oath, affirmation, acknowledgement, signature witness, or copy certification. This can be a very brief description—for example, "Subscribed and sworn to before me," or a more detailed one—for example, the copy certification form, or one of the longer acknowledgements.

Colorado Secretary of State, Notary Handbook (April 24, 2024), pp 18–19 (emphasis added).

The Colorado notarization of West's AOI failed to comply with the highlighted requirements of Colorado notary law. Nowhere did the Colorado notary "certify that she complied with the law and made determinations required by the law." Id. She did not include a copy certification form, or even the phrase "subscribed and sworn to before me."

Because the Colorado notarization failed to comply with Colorado law, it is not a valid "notarial act" recognized in Michigan by MCL 55.285a(1). West's AOI notarization thus fails, making the AOI defective and him ineligible to appear on the Michigan ballot.

B. Abdullah's AOI Fails to Provide Required Information.

One of the pieces of information an AOI must provide is "the manner in which the candidate wishes to have his or her name appear on the ballot." MCL 168.558(2). Making a false statement anywhere on the AOI is cause for disqualification, as the candidate's certification states. The instructions advise that providing "incorrect information may result in disqualification."

On her AOI, Abdullah indicated that she wants to be listed as "Cornel West" on the ballot. That information is incorrect and false, rendering the AOI defective and Abdullah ineligible for the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF SOUGHT

For the reasons stated, West and Abdullah are ineligible to be NPA or independent candidates under MCL 168.692a, and their AOI's are defective, also rendering them ineligible to be placed on the ballot.

Sincerely,

Mark Brewer

Mark Brewer

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/26/2024 3:45:43 PM
To: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Haidar, Danny (AG) [HaidarD1@michigan.gov]
CC: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Subject: RE: Following up, template

That's great, no worries.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, October 25, 2024 7:59 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>
Cc: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Following up, template

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather, Danny, and Linus,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks and have a good weekend,

Christine

Christine P. Sun (she/her) | Senior Vice President, Legal
States United Democracy Center
415.828.5719 | @statesunited
christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 22, 2024 at 12:12 PM
To: Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>, Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Cc: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <BanghartLinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Following up, template

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Haidar, Danny (AG) <HaidarD1@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, October 22, 2024 2:56 PM
To: christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org
Cc: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <BanghartLinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: Following up, template

Dear Christine,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

If there is anything else we can do, please don't hesitate to let us know.

Best,
Danny Haidar

Danny Haidar
Civil Rights & Elections Division, Lansing Office
Michigan Department of Attorney General

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/14/2023 4:14:55 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Quick chat this afternoon?

Perfect 517 335 0741 or PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) cell (the first number is my direct dial but it goes to my cell anyway)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 14, 2023 12:05 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Quick chat this afternoon?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

I will call you at 130. Thanks!

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Thursday, September 14, 2023 12:02:58 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Quick chat this afternoon?

I think I am free around 1:30 maybe earlier, but then I have to go at 2:15.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 14, 2023 11:59 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Quick chat this afternoon?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather. Is there a good time for me to call you for a few minutes this afternoon to discuss a couple issues? Thanks.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 12/18/2024 3:36:58 PM
To: Amanda Carberry [amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Teegardin, Rachel [TeegardinR1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Grace, Stephanie (AG) [GraceS@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

I do not presently have any standing afternoon meetings, so I am flexible.

Thanks,
Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, December 18, 2024 10:14 AM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>; Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi all,

Thanks for your responses, and apologies for the delay! I should have included this in my original email, but we were hoping to find a time again that's after 12:00pm Eastern since Dax will be tuning in from the West Coast. If you could let me know if you have any recurring biweekly availability in the afternoons instead for a 30-minute meeting, that would be great.

Thank you!

Amanda Carberry (she/her) | Legal Assistant
States United Democracy Center
401-585-4702 | @statesunited
amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, December 16, 2024 at 11:02 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>, Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>, Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>, Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

Me too.

Michael J. Brady (he/his), Chief Legal Director
Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
Michigan Department of State
mobile: 517.599.7343

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Monday, December 16, 2024 10:41 AM
To: Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>; Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

That works for me.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>
Sent: Monday, December 16, 2024 10:05 AM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

Wednesday is better. Starting January 8th…both Christina and Dan are available 11-11:30a.

Best, Rachel

Rachel Teegardin
Executive Assistant to
Christina Grossi, Chief Legal Counsel
Executive Office of Governor- Gretchen Whitmer
517-285-9138
TeegardinR1@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
OFFICE of the GOVERNOR

From: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>
Sent: Monday, December 16, 2024 10:02 AM
To: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>; Grossi, Christina <GrossiC1@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

Thank you, Amanda. That time later on Thursday afternoon isn't ideal. I'd prefer a return to the time we used to have on Thursday mornings around 10 or 11 AM, if that works for the group. Wednesdays are also pretty open and flexible.

Michael J. Brady (he/his), Chief Legal Director
Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
Michigan Department of State
mobile: 517.599.7343

From: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, December 16, 2024 9:00 AM
To: Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) <teszlewiczb@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>; Teegardin, Rachel <TeegardinR1@michigan.gov>; Grossi, Christina <GrossiC1@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Restarting Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in Calls

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi all,

We're looking to restart the Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in series in early January. Could you kindly respond to this thread or have someone reach out to me with some times that would work for you for a bi-weekly call? For reference, this series was last set on Thursdays at 4:00pm Eastern.

Thank you!

Best,

Amanda

Amanda Carberry (she/her) | Legal Assistant
States United Democracy Center
401-585-4702 | @statesunited
amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 8/29/2023 6:57:10 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Michigan DR request re 14th amend Attachments: Davis request for Declaratory Ruling from SOS Benson concerning Trump candidacy for Presidency.pdf; University of Penn Law Review Article re Trump and Section 3 of Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification.pdf

Per our conversation.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

August 28, 2023

Michigan Department of State
Bureau of Elections
Richard H. Austin Building-1st Floor
430 West Allegan
Lansing, MI 48933

Re: Request for Declaratory Ruling Pursuant to MCL 24.263 Concerning Disqualification of Former U.S. President Donald J. Trump From Appearing On Any Presidential Primary and/or General Election Ballot As Presidential Candidate For He Is Barred Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of The United States Constitution.

Dear SOS Benson, Director Brater and Mr. Fracassi:

Please accept this letter and the exhibits attached hereto as a request for a declaratory ruling pursuant to MCL 24.263 regarding former U.S. President Donald J. Trump's ("Trump") disqualification from appearing on any presidential primary and/or general election in the state of Michigan due to his apparent ineligibility to assume and/or run for the office of President pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Considering the facts of this request are undisputed and are relatively straightforward, and the need to allow adequate time for any legal challenges prior to any presidential primary election for 2024, I am respectfully requesting that Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson ("SOS Benson") and the Department of State issue a declaratory ruling expeditiously in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) and that said declaratory ruling be issued within 14 calendar days of receipt of this request.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Law and Legal Analysis

1. Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution Bars Trump Candidacy For President for the 2024 Election.

On November 15, 2022, former President Trump announced "that he will seek the Republican presidential nomination in 2024."[1] Since his announcement, Trump's presidential campaign has raised tens of millions of dollars for his presidential campaign. In fact, recent published media reports indicate that Trump's presidential campaign "has raised $7.1 million since Thursday when he was booked at the Fulton County Jail in Georgia on charges that he illegally schemed to overturn the 2020 election in the state and became the first former president in U.S. history to ever have a mug shot taken."[2]

---

[1] See https://www.cnn.com/2022/11/15/politics/trump-2024-presidential-bid/index.html

[2] See https://abcnews.go.com/US/wireStory/trump-campaign-reports-raising-7-million-after-georgia-102592711

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Presidential primary and general elections for the state of Michigan are governed by Michigan Election Law, being MCL 168.1, et.seq. MCL 168.613a, as amended, of Michigan Election Law provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of President of the United States in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections.

MCL 168.614a of Michigan Election Law further provides:

> (1) Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.
> (2) Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. The > secretary of state shall make the lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

>
> (3) After the issuance of the list under subsection (1) and after receipt of names from the state chairperson of each political party under subsection (2), the secretary of state shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election.

Surprisingly, MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law, "mandates" and "requires" the Secretary of State to print the name of any presidential candidate identified and notified as a "potential" presidential candidate under MCL 168.614a. MCL 168.615a(1) of Michigan Election Law provides, in relevant part:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a *to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. [emphasis supplied].

MCL 168.615a(1) uses the mandatory term "shall". It is well-settled in Michigan jurisprudence that the "use of the word 'shall' indicates a mandatory and imperative directive." Burton v Reed City Hospital Corp., 471 Mich. 745, 752; 691 NW2d 424 (2005). Therefore, pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1), the Secretary of State would be "mandated" and "required" to print Trump's name on any presidential primary election ballot in Michigan for the 2024 presidential election because Trump is currently the leading candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. According to an Emerson College poll released in early August 2023, current President Joe Biden and former President Trump were statistically tied in the battle ground state of Michigan.[3]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

However, Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution disqualifies and bars former President Trump from serving and/or running for the Presidency of the United States.

Disqualification Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides:

> Section 3
>
> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability. [emphasis supplied].

[3] See https://thehill.com/homenews/campaign/4136457-biden-trump-tied-in-michigan-ahead-of-2024-election-poll/

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As noted in the scholarly article published in The Atlantic, which was authored by former U.S Court of Appeals Judge J. Michael Luttig and Harvard Law Professor Emeritus Laurence Tribe:

> The disqualification clause operates independently of any such criminal proceedings and, indeed, also independently of impeachment proceedings and of congressional legislation," they wrote. "The clause was designed to operate directly and immediately upon those who betray their oaths to the Constitution, whether by taking up arms to overturn our government or by waging war on our government by attempting to overturn a presidential election through a bloodless coup.

And for the reasons stated and set forth in the University of Penn Law Review Article entitled: "The Sweep and Force of Section Three", whose arguments shall be incorporated by reference herein, former President Trump is disqualified from the Presidency because he has "given aid or comfort to the enemies". The University of Penn Law Review Article authored by distinguished conservative attorneys, William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, thoroughly sets forth the legal arguments that support the disqualification of Trump from the Presidency under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. A copy of William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen's Law Review Article is attached hereto for the Department of State to review and analyze.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Recently, former President Trump attended and hosted a fundraiser at his Bedminister, N.J., golf club that benefited the Patriot Freedom Project, the controversial nonprofit that supports those criminally charged in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the U.S. Capitol.[4] Trump's financial support of those individuals criminally charged in the January 6, 2023 attack ono the U.S. Capitol is further evidence of Trump's "aid" and "comfort" of individuals who have been deemed "enemies" of the Unites States.

In addition to Trump's financial support for the "insurrectionists", "[c]onsider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent

[4] https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-12437995/Donald-Trump-attends-fundraising-dinner-January-6-defendants-arrest.html

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021."[5]

All of the foregoing actions committed by former President Trump disqualifies him for the Presidency under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Although former President Trump arguably has millions of supporters nationwide and here in the state of Michigan, as the United States Supreme Court observed, "[i]t does not follow, though, that a party is absolutely entitled to have its nominee appear on the ballot as that party's candidate. A particular candidate might be ineligible for office." Timmons v Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 359 (1997). It is well-settled that "a state has an interest, if not a duty to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972) (emphasis supplied).

Many Trump supporters, and even former President Trump himself, have previously asserted the frivolous argument that [5] See p 111 of "The Sweep and Force of Section Three", 172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024) William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, a copy of which is attached.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump's disqualification under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment would violate former President Trump and his supporters constitutional right to vote for the candidate of their choice. However, that argument simply lacks merit and is outright frivolous! "That a particular induvial may not appear on the ballot as a particular party's candidate does not severely burden that party's associational rights." Timmons v Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 359 (1997). Furthermore, "the [Supreme] Court has never recognized a fundamental right to express one's political views through candidacy." Carver v Dennis, 104 F.3d 847, 851 (6th Cir. 1997). Contrary to popular belief, "running for office is not a 'fundamental right'[.]" Zielasko v State of Ohio, 873 F.2d 957, 959 (6th Cir. 1989)(quoting Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 142-143 (1972)) (emphasis supplied). "The [United States] Supreme Court has made clear that a candidate does not have a fundamental right to appear on the ballot." Corrigan v City of Newaygo, 55 F.3d 1211, 1214 (6th Cir. 1995) (citing Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 142-143 (1972)).

In addition to the binding legal precedent established by the United States Supreme Court and federal appellate courts, our

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan Court of Appeals has also adopted similar legal precedent with respect to a candidate's lack of a constitutional right to appear on the ballot. As our Michigan Court of Appeals correctly concluded and determined in Barrow v Detroit Election Commission, 301 Mich.App. 404, ___; 836 NW2d 498, 511 (2013), which resulted in the leading candidate for Mayor of the city of Detroit being removed from the primary election ballot:

> "[T]here is no constitutional right to vote for an individual who did not meet the eligibility requirements to have their name placed on the ballot. Indeed, voters have the right to expect that the candidates appearing on ballots have met the requirements…"[Barrow, 301 Mich.App. at ___; 836 NW2d at 511.] (emphasis supplied).

Here, the constitutional rights of Trump supporters in the state of Michigan will NOT be violated in any respect with the disqualification of Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment because "there is no constitutional right to vote for an individual who did not meet the eligibility requirements to have their name placed on the ballot." Barrow, 301 Mich.App. at ___; 836 NW2d at 511. (emphasis supplied).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons and for the reasons set forth in the University of Penn Law Review Article, "The Sweep and Force of Section Three", 172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024), authored by William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, Complainant/Petitioner Robert Davis respectfully requests the Department of State and the Secretary of State issue a declaratory ruling in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act (APA) and Michigan Election Law declaring former President Trump ineligible and disqualified to have his name printed on any presidential election ballot in Michigan in 2024 because Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Complainant/Petitioner Robert Davis further requests that said declaratory ruling be issued expeditiously within 14 calendar days from receipt of this request.

Dated: August 28, 2023

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ROBERT DAVIS
ROBERT DAVIS, Pro Se
Complainant/Petitioner
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) [redacted]@gmail.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Abstract: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids holding office by former office holders who then participate in insurrection or rebellion. Because of a range of misperceptions and mistaken assumptions, Section Three's full legal consequences have not been appreciated or enforced. This article corrects those mistakes by setting forth the full sweep and force of Section Three.

First, Section Three remains an enforceable part of the Constitution, not limited to the Civil War, and not effectively repealed by nineteenth century amnesty legislation. Second, Section Three is self-executing, operating as an immediate disqualification from office, without the need for additional action by Congress. It can and should be enforced by every official, state or federal, who judges qualifications. Third, to the extent of any conflict with prior constitutional rules, Section Three repeals, supersedes, or simply satisfies them. This includes the rules against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws, the Due Process Clause, and even the free speech principles of the First Amendment. Fourth, Section Three covers a broad range of conduct against the authority of the constitutional order, including many instances of indirect participation or support as "aid or comfort." It covers a broad range of former offices, including the Presidency. And in particular, it disqualifies former President Donald Trump, and potentially many others, because of their participation in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 presidential election.

Introduction 3
I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today 7
A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language 7
B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?) 11
II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing 17
A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification 17
B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three? 22
1. Seeking Office 23
a. by election 23
b. by appointment 26
2. Holding Office 27
3. Special Situations 29
C. The Problem of Griffin's Case 35
1. Background 35
2. Chase on Section Three 37
a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" 37
b. The argument from "the intention of the people" 40

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law 42
d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power 44
3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum 45
III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions 49
A. Bills of Attainder 53
B. Ex Post Facto Laws 54
C. Due Process of Law 56
D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment 57
IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping 61
A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies" 63
1. Working definitions 64
2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions 69
3. Intratextualism 72
4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage 73
a. President Lincoln 74
b. Congress 79
i. The Ironclad Oath 79
ii. The Second Confiscation Act 81
c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases 84
5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples 86
a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally) 86
b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates 92
6. Legislative History 98
7. Early Applications of Section Three 99
B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred? 104
C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election 111
1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion 112
2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort" 116
a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation 116
b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office 117
c. Beyond Trump 121
Conclusion 124

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude* & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Introduction

"Section 3 has long since faded into history."
- Eric Foner[1]

Reports of Section Three's demise are greatly exaggerated. It turns out that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment remains of direct and dramatic relevance today—a vital, fully operative rule of constitutional law with potentially far-reaching contemporary real-world consequences. Section Three remains in legal force, and has a broad substantive sweep.

Here is what it says:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.[2]

This section of the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular historical situation and acute problem arising in the aftermath of the Civil War. States in the South had purported (unconstitutionally)[3] to secede from the Union;

---

* Harry Kalven, Jr. Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.
 Distinguished University Chair and Professor of Law, University of St. Thomas Law School. We thank Frank Bowman, Steve Calabresi, Josh Chafetz, John Harrison, Ed Hartnett, Daniel Hemel, Myles Lynch, Gerard Magliocca, Michael McConnell, Derek Muller, Eric Posner, Micah Quigley, Richard Re, Michael L. Rosin, Stephen Sachs, Greg Sisk, Seth Barrett Tillman, and workshop participants at the University of Chicago Law School and University of St. Thomas Law School for helpful comments on this draft, T.J. Bowman, Nicole Catlin, Connie Gong, Sarah Leitner, James Marmaduke, and Matt Phillips for valuable research assistance, and countless others for background discussions about these issues—though not all of them gave aid or comfort to our conclusions.

[1] Eric Foner, The Second Founding: How the Civil War and Reconstruction Remade the Constitution 85 (2019).

[2] U.S. Const. art. XIV, sec. 3.

[3] See infra note 228 and sources cited there.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

they had purported to form the (so-called) "Confederate States of America" in rebellion against the authority of the U.S. Constitution; and they had waged a bloody four-year war of rebellion against the United States. Yet even after the rebellion had been defeated, Southern States had audaciously sent to Congress, to serve as U.S. Senators and Representatives, men who had notoriously violated previously sworn oaths to support the U.S. Constitution by subsequently engaging in or supporting secession, rebellion, and civil war against the authority of the United States (to say nothing of those now serving again in their state governments). These men who arrived in Washington included several who had held prominent positions in the rebel Confederacy: "four Confederate generals, four colonels, several Confederate congressmen and members of Confederate state legislatures, and even the vice president of the Confederacy, Alexander Stephens."[4]

The Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment rightly regarded the situation as outrageous—not only morally, but practically. If former Confederates held the levers of federal and state government power, effective "reconstruction" of the political order and any hope of extending the full and equal protection of the laws to the newly freed former slaves would be at an end. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment responded to that outrage, enacting a sweeping disqualification from state and federal office of those who had, as legislators or officers in the federal or state government prior to the War, sworn required oaths of loyalty to the United States Constitution and subsequently engaged in "insurrection or rebellion" against the U.S. constitutional authority or given "aid or comfort" to persons engaged in such acts of insurrection or rebellion. Only a two-thirds majority vote of both houses of Congress could remove that sweeping disqualification.

Fast-forward a century and a half. The events surrounding efforts to overturn the result of the presidential election of 2020 have sparked renewed scholarly, judicial, and political interest in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[5] The core events are familiar to all—the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for States' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several States; the efforts of Members of Congress to assert a similar power to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; the fomenting and immediate incitement of a mob to attempt to forcibly prevent Congress's and the

---

[4] Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 377 (2005); see also Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 176-179 (1960); Allen C. Guelzo, Reconstruction: A Concise History 25 (2018).

[5] The most important scholarly articles (to which we are deeply indebted) are Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment.. 87 (2021); Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty and Disqualification: Reconstructing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 William & Mary Bill of Rights J. 153 (2021), both of which were written before the events of January 6, and Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-to Guide, Lawfare (Jan. 19, 2021), available at https://www.lawfareblog.com/disqualifying-insurrectionists-and-rebels-how-guide.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes—all in an attempt to prevent the defeated incumbent President, Donald Trump, from losing power in accordance with the Constitution.

This was undoubtedly a serious assault on the American constitutional order. Not since the Civil War has there been so serious a threat to the foundations of the American constitutional republic. It takes little imagination to describe the efforts to maintain Trump in office, notwithstanding his defeat, as an attempted political coup d'etat. These actions culminated in the incitement and execution of a violent uprising at the Capitol on January 6, 2021—an "insurrection" aimed at preventing Congress and the incumbent Vice President from performing their constitutional responsibilities to count the votes for President and Vice President in the 2020 election. Several of the people involved in these events—most notably the defeated President, Donald Trump—had previously taken oaths to support the Constitution. If they engaged in or gave aid and comfort to an insurrection against the constitutional government, Section Three would appear to bar them from holding office again.

As legal officials and citizens generally have begun to confront the application of Section Three, they have foundered on the most fundamental questions. How does Section Three's disqualification apply—does it apply—to those who planned, supported, encouraged, assisted, incited, or otherwise participated in the events surrounding the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020? Does Section Three's century-and-a-half old disqualification, designed for the aftermath of the Civil War, even remain legally operative in the first place? If so, what must be done to enforce Section Three? Does it require implementing legislation or criminal trials (or impeachments) before its disqualification kicks in? How does Section Three interact with the rest of the constitutional order—are its subjects protected by constitutional principles of attainder, anti-retroactivity, due process and free speech? And if Section Three does apply—to what and to whom? What actions count as having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" against the Constitution of the United States or having "given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof"? Which officials are covered by Section Three's exclusions?

This article attempts to answer these questions. It makes four key points (or clusters of points):

First. Section Three remains legally operative. It is no less part of the Constitution than the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is not a dead letter. The Constitution is a binding, authoritative written text, not a collection of specific historical purposes and intentions. Where the text applies, it applies. Its legal force is not limited to the immediate problem or purpose that prompted its enactment. Section Three is not limited to the circumstances of the Civil War and Reconstruction, even if the meaning of its terms may be illuminated by that experience and history.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor has Section Three somehow been "repealed" by Congress's two major nineteenth-century statutes granting amnesty to those covered by Section Three. This is not because it would be impossible for a constitutional provision to expire by its terms after a period of time, or upon the occurrence of a particular event, or upon action taken by future actors. Article I, Section 9, for example, created a constitutional prohibition of most congressional regulation of the international slave trade for a period of twenty years—but its prohibition then vanished in 1808. Section Three, however, does not work that way. It imposes a general, prospective, rule of disqualification, which Congress may remove by two-thirds vote of both houses only once it has occurred. Section Three is prospective; Congressional amnesty is retrospective.

Second. Section Three is legally self-executing. That is, Section Three's disqualification is constitutionally automatic whenever its terms are satisfied. Section Three requires no legislation or adjudication to be legally effective. It is enacted by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its disqualification, where triggered, just is. It follows that Section Three's disqualification may and should be followed and carried out by all whose duties are affected by it. In many cases, Section Three will give rise to judiciable controversies in the courts. In others it will be enforceable by state and federal officials. But no prior judicial decision, and no implementing legislation, is required for Section Three to be carried out by officials sworn to uphold the Constitution whose duties present the occasion for applying Section Three's commands. Section Three is ready for use.

While Section Three's requirements could be made the subject of enforcement legislation by Congress, under its general power under Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce" the provisions of the amendment, no such legislation is constitutionally required as a prerequisite to Section Three doing what Section Three itself does. Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase's circuit court opinion to the contrary, In re Griffin,[6] is simply wrong on this point—full of sleight of hand, motivated reasoning, and self-defeating maneuvers—as we will explain at length. In re Griffin should be hooted down the pages of history, purged from our constitutional understanding of Section Three.

Third. Section Three supersedes (or satisfies) earlier-enacted constitutional provisions to the extent of any supposed conflict between them. Section Three, at the time it was adopted as part of the Constitution, imposed a disqualification from office based on an individual's past conduct. Even if imposition of such a disability might otherwise, if done by statute, have been a forbidden Ex Post Facto law or Bill of Attainder, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment constitutionally supersedes any prior provision conflicting with its terms.

This principle extends to a more unsettling point. To the extent Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" or giving "aid or comfort" to "the enemies" might turn out to be in tension with the First Amendment's protection of freedom of speech, Section Three supersedes the First Amendment to the extent of any true conflict. To be sure, the proper construction of Section Three's terms ("insurrection," "rebellion," "aid and comfort," "enemies") will leave much speech and advocacy completely free. But in the cases where it does not, the terms of Section Three, not the constructions of the First Amendment, decide where the line is.

[6] 11 F. Cas. 7, 22-27 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This leads to the article's fourth and final group of points:

Fourth. Section Three's disqualification is sweeping in its terms. It disqualifies from future office-holding persons who "engaged in"—an expansive and encompassing term connoting many forms of participation in or active support of—a broad swath of activity covered by the terms "insurrection or rebellion" or the giving of "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of the nation or its constitutional order. It applies to a broad swath of civilian, military, and legislative office holders who swore oaths of fidelity to the Constitution, and it disqualifies such persons from holding in the future any of an extraordinarily broad swath of public offices. Taking Section Three seriously, on its own terms, means taking seriously the enormous sweep of the disqualification it creates. And, we will argue, taking Section Three seriously means that its constitutional disqualifications from future state and federal officeholding extend to participants in the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020, including former President Donald Trump and others. The substantive terms of Section Three's prohibition are not themselves difficult or inscrutable (even if there might be questions of application at the outer edges of the text's meaning). But they are potentially breathtaking in their straightforward consequences.

In what follows, we develop each of these four core points at length.

Section Three remains a valid, prospective, enforceable, self-executing, broad, and relevant part of our Constitution. It falls to us to fulfill our duties to it. These include the duties of legislative bodies, state and federal election officials, executive officers, and perhaps others to take up the Constitution, including Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and wield it faithfully and forcefully against its enemies. Taking Section Three seriously means excluding from present or future office those who sought to subvert lawful government authority under the Constitution in the aftermath of the 2020 election by engaging in or giving aid or comfort to acts of "insurrection or rebellion" against the lawful constitutional order.

I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today

A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The first step in our argument is an easy one, but perhaps not immediately obvious to everyone: Section Three's disqualification remains an operative rule of the Constitution. The reason this might not be obvious, at least to the uninitiated, is that Section Three plainly was designed for a specific historical situation—the circumstances of Reconstruction following the end of the Civil War. The implication, in the eyes of some, might be that that historical situation limits the scope of the provision's operation. We think any such inference badly mistaken. Section Three was prompted by historical circumstances, but that does not in any way detract from its enduring force.

To be sure, Section Three clearly bears the hallmarks of its historical context. It is, for one thing, a radical rule. The sheer sweep of the disqualification from offices that it imposed on former Southern officeholders-turned-rebels was dramatic. Its operation was hugely disruptive of antebellum patterns of elite political leadership, apparently indifferent to inconvenience, and seemingly rather punitive in its consequences. Section Three is harsh. It is categorical. It is insistent. It seems to have been deliberately designed to turn the prior Southern political order upside down. As Eric Foner puts it, "Section 3 aimed to promote a sweeping transformation of Southern public life."[7]

In these respects, the disqualification reflects and embodies the distinctive political impulses of the so-called Radical Republican Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866. If its disqualification had radical policy consequences for the South, so be it.[8] It was more important to strip insurrectionists and rebels of governing power completely, to remake Southern political society thoroughly, and to prevent Southern backsliding from the full consequences of Union victory entirely, than to be concerned about such things as seeming harshness, impracticality, or disruptiveness. Section Three is very much a creation and creature of its day.

Yet it is (or should be) basic constitutional law that it is the enduring text of the Constitution that supplies the governing rule, not the ostensible "purpose" or specific historical situation for which the text was written. Constitutional provisions, written into our fundamental law, live beyond the circumstances that prompted their adoption. And many such constitutional provisions are written in broad, or general, terms that obviously extend beyond the specific situation or situations that led to their enactment. Sometimes this is by design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule, applicable to a broad class of circumstances, as a more general, "neutral," way of addressing a class of situations of which the specific problem motivating the writing of the text might be just one instance. The thinking might be that if the principle giving rise to the text is a correct one, it should be correct in like circumstances, not just the one situation that provoked the rule's adoption. And sometimes a text's breadth and

---

[7] Eric Foner, Reconstruction, 1863-1877, at 260 (1988).
[8] Mark Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 1 (2023, University Press of Kansas).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

generality might not reflect conscious design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule that unintentionally went further than the problem they had in mind. Put colloquially, the text sometimes "overshoots" its drafters' intended purposes. (A text might undershoot the problem its framers had in mind to address, too—or achieve only part of its intended purpose, perhaps because of political compromise.)

The reason does not really matter. It is the rule as drafted and enacted in the written text that counts, whether it goes further than the purposes supposed to have inspired its adoption, or even whether it falls short of fully achieving those purposes. While evidence of intention, usage, purpose, and political context can assist in ascertaining the meaning of the enactment, it is that objective meaning that constitutes the law, not the ostensible purposes or motivations that supposedly lay behind it. This is "originalism," our system's basic method for interpreting the Constitution and its amendments.[9]

Consider, for example, Section One of the same Fourteenth Amendment. As a matter of historical purpose, the specific mischief the framers of Section One had in mind was the enactment of "Black Codes" in Southern States that discriminated against the newly freed former slaves. But the words chosen by the drafters to enact the rule embodied in the text command, in general terms, that no state shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" nor deny to any "person" within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws"—rules not cast in racial terms at all, let alone limited to the immediate situation of former enslaved persons. The rules enacted apply to all persons irrespective of race. So it was entirely plausible for lawyers to argue that Section One also barred the same kind of discrimination against women citizens that it barred against black citizens. It doesn't matter that the drafts*men* of the amendment might not have had women "in mind" if women are covered by the meaning of the words they actually wrote and ratified.[10] Similarly, it was entirely plausible to argue that Section One went so far as to ban racially segregated schools.[11] The answers to each of these questions turn on the objective, original meaning of "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and "equal protection of the laws," not whether the 1866 Congress and subsequent ratifiers had

---

[9] See Vasan Kesavan & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Interpretive Force of the Constitution's Secret Drafting History, 91 Geo. L. J. 1113, 1124-1148 (2004); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Does the Constitution Prescribe Rules for Its Own Interpretation? 103 Nw. U. L. Rev. 857, 872-883 (2009); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Misunderstood Eleventh Amendment, 169 U Pa. L. Rev. 609, 624-625 (2021); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, Grounding Originalism, 113 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1455, 1456-1460 (2019). For purposes of this article, we can bracket any differences in emphasis between Paulsen's objective-original-meaning originalism and Baude's original-law originalism.

[10] We have used such examples before. Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 901-902; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Text, the Whole Text, and Nothing but the Text, So Help Me God: Un-Writing Amar's Unwritten Constitution, 81 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1385, 1421 n. 68 (2014); William Baude, Jud Campbell, & Stephen Sachs, General Law and the Fourteenth Amendment (Jan. 31, 2023) at 67-68.

[11] We have used this example before, too. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839-840 (1993); William Baude, Is Originalism Our Law?, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2349, 2380-2381 (2015). See also Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 66.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

thought through the possible radical implications of their own work. If the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment's terms forbade racially discriminatory classifications of any and all kinds, as a matter of the rules of late-1860s language and usage, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether it was intended or expected that governments could enforce certain types of racial discrimination, like enforced racial segregation. The rule as adopted might overshoot the purposes, expectations, or desires of those who voted for it. But the rule is the rule; the text's meaning is the text's meaning.

Thus, if the framers and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment enacted a general rule in Section Three—a disqualification from future officeholding keyed to having taken an oath to the Constitution and subsequently engaging in insurrection or rebellion against the United States—rather than a provision that by its terms applied only to the case of former Civil War secessionists and Confederate officials and officers,[12] it is the general rule that matters. That the rule had a particular political purpose behind it as a matter of history might be an aid to correct interpretation of the language supplying that rule. (We will make such an argument below, concerning the meaning, in context, of the phrase "insurrection or rebellion.")[13] But in the end the question is what rule was enacted. If Section Three's rule fell short somehow, missing some folks its drafters might have meant to ensnare, those persons are not ensnared. The text might (or might not) be thought deficient in this regard—as having failed to fulfill its full purpose. But the text means what it says. Similarly, if the rule supplied by the objective meaning of the text runs right on past the specific historical purpose for which it was enacted and embraces as well other insurrectionists, rebels, and aiders and comforters of enemies, that rule must be given full legal effect as part of the Constitution. The rule's overbreadth in terms of its perceived purpose, and even its inconvenience as a consequence of such overbreadth, are beside the point.[14]

---

[12] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history of Section Three confirms that this is what the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment did. Earlier drafts had limited the Section's application to the "late insurrection." Later versions dropped this limitation and generalized Section Three's application to "insurrection" and "rebellion." See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2767-68, 2770 2869, 2921; see also Mark A. Graber, Rewarding Loyalty (?) and Punishing Treason Through Disenfranchisement and Bans on Officeholding: Section 3, at 3-4 (unpublished chapter, forthcoming in The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 2, University Press of Kansas) (documenting this development).

[13] Infra Part IV.A.

[14] See, e.g., Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 908-909 (1994) (making this point about the disqualification of some senators and representatives from eligibility for certain appointed offices posed by the Emoluments Clause of Article I, § 6, cl. 2); William Baude, The 2023 Scalia Lecture: Beyond Textualism?, 46 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y (forthcoming 2023) ("Sometimes rules go beyond their reasons; a rule can be overbroad compared to the reasons for enacting it. And sometimes rules are underbroad; a rule cannot quite do all the things that you might want to do given the reasons for enacting the rule. Textualism recognizes that when the judge enforces the law, the law's rule might sometimes be different from what the people who enacted the law would have wanted had they thought about the situation."). For an extended discussion of the abuse of arguments from inconvenience, see infra Part II.C.2.a (discussing Chief Justice Chase's appalling opinion in Griffin's Case).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, we take it as almost too obvious to require stating that constitutional provisions have indefinite life unless and until repealed or amended by subsequent constitutional enactments. The fact that an unrepealed, unamended provision of law is "old" does not in any way weaken its legal force. The First Amendment is old too, as is the entire original Constitution. But both remain in force. This is true even if the purpose for which a constitutional provision was originally written has ceased to be relevant, or even if the constitutional provision at issue might be thought in today's society to be something of an anachronism.[15] There are, of course, some self-identified living constitutionalists who deny this point—who think that old texts have a legal shelf life and lose their potency over time, as "the interest in sovereignty fades."[16] But in our view, this just shows what is wrong with such living constitutionalism.[17] The Constitution is not a spice cabinet.

All of this might seem to belabor the obvious. Few interpreters of Section Three explicitly deny that it continues to govern new insurrections and rebellions.[18] But sometimes we wonder if this kind of denial is sneaking in to people's intuitions—subtly infecting and distorting the actual interpretation of Section Three. So let us start from the right first principles: Section Three remains constitutionally fully in force, as alive as the day it was enacted.

B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?)

But what about this? The second sentence of Section Three provides that Congress "may by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[19] Just as the first sentence's disqualification is not limited specifically to the Civil War, neither is Congress's power to grant amnesty. Thus, Congress can, by the requisite vote, remove any disqualification that exists by virtue of the operation of Section Three. But just exactly how far does that power reach? Could Congress, by two-thirds majorities, essentially extinguish the legally operative effect of Section Three entirely, by removing the disability imposed by Section Three generally, prospectively, and universally? Put more vividly: Can Congress, by two-thirds vote of each house, essentially "explode" Section Three—render it inoperative in the future, for all time?

---

[15] Michael Stokes Paulsen, Dirty Harry and the Real Constitution, 64 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1457, 1486-1490 (1997) (discussing privilege against self-incrimination).
[16] David A. Strauss, The Supreme Court, 2014 Term—Foreword: Does the Constitution Mean What It Says?, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (2015); see also Adam M. Samaha, Originalism's Expiration Date, 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1295 (2008).
[17] See Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1487 (responding to Strauss).
[18] For a rare example, see an argument made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935) ("It was also seriously contended by counsel that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment was an outgrowth of the Civil War and that such a provision cannot possibly apply to the present case").
[19] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These questions turn out not to be completely hypothetical. In two statutes enacted in the late nineteenth century, Congress might arguably have done this. One statute (from 1872) removed "from all persons whomsoever"—except designated categories of individuals—all "political disabilities imposed" by Section Three.[20] Another (from 1898) further removed "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred."[21] And indeed, in a recent case (brought by then-Representative Madison Cawthorn) a federal judge relied on these statutes to conclude that Section Three was now legally dead.[22] Is that right? Do these statutes—can these statutes—grant amnesty to all insurrectionists, past, present and future?[23]

No. While the argument is not entirely bonkers, it does not withstand more serious scrutiny. It is wrong on both statutory and constitutional grounds. Consider the statutes first. Neither one purports to rescind Section Three's operative rule for all time. They do not pretend to explode the first sentence of the constitutional provision.

Begin with the 1872 act. In 1872, after a period of case-by-case consideration of amnesty requests, Congress, as mentioned above, enacted a general statute removing disqualification from a broad description of persons embraced by Section Three's prohibition. As Professor Magliocca recounts, the statute reflected a mixture of motives: genuine mercy and magnanimity; the practical consequences of Section Three in the South; the burdens and biases of case-by-case consideration of private bills; the politics of a presidential election year; and the general but regrettable retreat from aggressive Congressional Reconstruction.[24] But what is most important is what it says. The statute reads, in full:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-

---

[20] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[21] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.
[22] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 889-892 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022). This argument, too, was made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935).
[23] The power in general of Congress by two-thirds vote of each House to remove Section Three's disability and the history of its exercise are the central themes of Professor Gerard Magliocca's excellent article, cited supra note 5.
[24] See generally Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 112-120.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States.[25]

The key words are "imposed" and "[hereby] removed." The words of the 1872 statute are used in the past tense: the statute removed disqualifications imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment—that is, disabilities that had already become legally effective. That is simply the natural reading, and the natural implication, of the language employed.

Indeed, this is almost exactly what the Fourth Circuit recently said in reversing the district court's decision in the Cawthorn case: Congress in 1872 employed "the past-tense version" of the verb "impose," thus "indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'"[26] Moreover, the Fourth Circuit continued: "[t]he operative clause's principal verb—'removed'—reinforces this conclusion. In the mid-nineteenth century, as today, that word generally connoted taking away something that already exists rather than forestalling something yet to come."[27]

By contrast, the district court had faulted Congress for not being more explicit: Congress "could have limited the Act to remove Section 3's disabilities from 'persons currently subject to the disabilities' or 'persons against whom the disabilities were lodged' at the time (i.e., the 'Confederates') but did not do so."[28] Therefore, the district court concluded, by the "plain language of Section 3 and the 1872 Act, Congress removed all of Section 3's disabilities from all persons whomsoever who were not explicitly excepted."[29] With all due respect, the district court appears to have been simply hoodwinked by the (for lack of a better word) feel of the "all persons whomsoever" language and completely missed the other language that made clear the statute's past tense.

What about the 1898 statute? Does it yield a different result? On the cusp of the Spanish-American War, at a moment of seeming national unity and perhaps a desire to put aside old sectional grievances (and, one might add more cynically, at a time of rising Jim Crow sentiment)[30]—Congress enacted another general disqualification-removal statute. This one removed the disqualification for everybody, without exception. Its language is even more laconic:

---

[25] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[26] Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022).
[27] Id.
[28] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 891 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Carthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022).
[29] Id.
[30] See, e.g., Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896); Cummings v. Richmond County Bd. of Ed. 175 U.S. 528 (1899). See also Michael Stokes Paulsen & Luke Paulsen, The Constitution: An Introduction 195-201 (2015).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed.[31]

In one sense, that's about as categorical, across-the-board a disqualification-removal as one can imagine: the disability imposed by section three is hereby removed. Period. No exceptions. But here it is also even clearer that the 1898 act is backward-looking. Like the 1872 act, the 1898 act uses past-tense language: a disability (already) "imposed" is now being "removed" from its prior legal existence. What's more, the 1898 act says that the Section Three disqualification being removed was one "heretofore incurred." That is unmistakably backward-looking, past-occurrence language.

What might otherwise—that is, but for the clarity of the "heretofore incurred" language—give the 1898 act the feel of a now-and-ever-shalt-be removal, eliminating all future Section Three disqualification as well as any and all extant ones, is the Act's reference to "the disability" imposed by Section Three. This singular reference might be taken to suggest that Section Three's disqualification was thought a one-time-only, single-shot, Civil War era occurrence.[32] If Section Three was good for one rebellion only, then repealing it in the past tense repeals all that there is. But of course, as we have argued, Section Three is not limited to one rebellion only, and so far as we can tell even the Fifty-fifth Congress did not think that it was[33] (nor would it matter if they did).

In any event, though these statutes do not even purport to sunset Section Three for the future, they do prompt us to consider the interesting question of Congress's constitutional power: What if they did purport to sunset Section Three for the future? Is Congress's constitutional power to remove Section Three's disqualification general and prospective, letting it remove Section Three's disqualification once and for all, including for future situations? We think not.

To be clear, we don't think there's anything inherently unthinkable or absurd about the idea of an "exploding" or otherwise defeasible constitutional provision. Legal drafters might sometimes want to provide for an expiration event or expiration

---

[31] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

[32] For instance, the D.C. Circuit's recess-appointments opinion in Noel Canning v. NLRB, 705 F.3d 490, 500 (D.C. Cir. 2013) aff'd only on alternate grounds, 134 S.Ct. 2550 (2014), leaned heavily on "this difference between the word choice 'recess' and 'the Recess'," arguing that "[a]s a matter of cold, unadorned logic, it makes no sense to [say] that when the Framers said 'the Recess,' what they really meant was 'a recess.' This is not an insignificant distinction. In the end it makes all the difference." Id. But a majority of the Supreme Court did not share this view of the text. NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S.Ct. 2550, 2561 (2014).

[33] For the brief legislative history of the 1898 act, see 31 Cong. Rec. 5367-5419 (1898).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

date, even in an enduring Constitution. Article I's Slave Importation Clause, protecting the international slave trade, exploded after twenty years.[34] So too the initial allocation of representatives to states is written in to the text of the Constitution, even though it was then exploded by the subsequent census.[35] Other provisions of the Constitution set baseline rules that Congress has power to modify. Article I, section 4 does that with respect to state legislative power over congressional elections: "Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations."[36] Article III, section 2 does that with respect to the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction, setting a default rule subject to "such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."[37] The Twentieth Amendment, in Section 2, sets a default date of Congress's annual meeting.[38]

There's no reason why the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment could not have similarly drafted Section Three to provide for the provision's own extinction after a supermajority vote of Congress.[39] But that is simply not what Section Three says. The second sentence of Section Three is not a grant of power to explode, or amend, the content of the rule stated in the first sentence. It is a grant of power to remove the consequences of the rule's operation.

To see this, break down Section Three into its component parts: Section Three has two sentences. The first one describes at length the disqualification for those who have taken a covered oath and engaged in insurrection or related conduct. Of course,

---

[34] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 1. ("The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.") For a scathing critique of the substance and purpose of this proviso, see, e.g., Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 81-83.

[35] U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl.3.

[36] U.S. Const. art. I, § 4.

[37] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2.

[38] U.S. Const. amend. XX, §2.

[39] We thus part ways with Professor Magliocca here. Magliocca argues (in addition to versions of the points we make above) that Section Three's second sentence cannot be read as authorizing Congress to remove future disabilities because this "would mean that Congress basically repealed Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1872. But Congress cannot repeal a part of the Constitution by itself: only a constitutional amendment can do that." Gerard N. Magliocca, The January 6th Insurrectionists Do Not Have Amnesty, JURIST – Academic Commentary, April 13, 2022, https://www.jurist.org/commentary/2022/04/gerard-magliocca-january-6-insurrectionists/. See also Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1314 (N.D. Ga. 2022) ("'Congress has no power whatever to repeal a provision of the Constitution by a mere statute.'") (quoting 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935), available at https://www.govinfo.gov/content/pkg/GPO-HPREC-CANNONS-V6/pdf/GPO-HPREC-CANNONS-V6.pdf#page=75)

This strikes us as not quite right: If Section Three in fact authorized prospective removal of disqualifications arising from future acts of insurrection, a statute doing so would not be repealing a constitutional provision but exercising a power conferred by that constitutional provision—a power to terminate the provision's ongoing legal effect.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

those two things must actually have happened for the rule of Section Three's first sentence to be triggered—for a disqualification to have come into legal effect.

The second sentence (the "But" sentence) then gives Congress the power to "remove such disability." ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.") The "But" sentence explicitly cross-references the first. Thus, the most natural reading of the two sentences in relation to each other is that the second sentence confers an exceptions power that only comes into existence when the conditions specified in the first sentence have occurred. And to belabor the point a moment further, the word "Remove" means (and meant at the time, according to 1864 dictionaries) to displace or take away something that already exists.[40] This confirms that Congress's removal power therefore only comes into being when a legal disqualification has vested by virtue of the operation of Section Three's first sentence.

Section Three's first sentence is written as a general and prospective rule, not limited to the specific instance of the Civil War. Section Three's second sentence is written as a continuing power to grant relief from disabilities already imposed by the operation of the first sentence. The power to remove an extant legal disability is not a power to rescind the legal rule that creates that disability. Thus, not only has Congress never purported to sunset Section Three, it lacks the power to do so by Section Three's own terms.

* * *

All of this is, we submit, basic. But it is also foundational. Section Three remains legally operative as part of the U.S. Constitution. Its rule of disqualification is general, not limited to the Civil War era. It states a rule of law embodied in the written constitutional text as permanent fundamental law. It possesses prospective force and applies to new situations: wherever the rule applies, the rule applies. And while Congress comprehensively relieved insurrectionists of the disability of disqualifications incurred prior to 1898, it did not (and could not) erase Section Three from the Constitution. Section Three remains in force.

Is anything more required, then, before this provision of the Constitution can (and must) be given effect by U.S. political actors whose powers and duties are such as to call for application of Section Three as a rule of law? Put somewhat differently: Is Section Three a self-executing rule of constitutional law, complete in itself? Or does Section Three require implementing legislation by Congress or some other further legal or administrative action before it has legal force? We take up that question next.

---

[40] Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 1116 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (defining "remove" as "To cause to change place; to move away from the position occupied; to displace") (quoted in Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022)).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing

Our second point is colossally important—a major sticking point for some. But it is a point we think should be obvious: Section Three is self-executing. That is, its disqualifications from office are constitutionally automatic whenever its conditions for disqualification are met. Nothing more needs to be done in order for Section Three's prohibitions to be legally effective. Section Three requires no implementing legislation by Congress. Its commands are enacted into law by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Where Section Three's legal rule of constitutional disqualification is satisfied, an affected prospective officeholder is disqualified. Automatically. Legally.

In the years immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted this seemingly obvious reading of Section Three was deemed inconvenient, rejected in the highest quarters, and has since faded from view. We thus give the point considerable attention here. Our analysis here is organized in three steps. First, we take Section Three itself, and explain why it has direct legal effect. Second, we discuss how this legal effect can and must be recognized by all persons and institutions who have the occasion to apply it in the performance of their duties—election officials, state and federal administrators, legislatures, courts. Third, we consider at some length the leading counterargument to our view: the 1869 opinion written by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase as a circuit court judge in Griffin's Case. Even if the result in that case is defensible—which is far from clear, and raises grave separation of powers problems of its own—its argument against self-execution is so wrong as to prove our case. Section Three is legally self-executing as operative constitutional law.

A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification

Before we consider Section Three itself, consider the Constitution as a whole. Though too many constitutional law teachers and casebooks begin their study of the Constitution with questions of judicial review, and cases like Marbury,[41] in doing so they put the cart before the horse. The horse is the Constitution, which is itself the "supreme law of the land."[42] Our system is one of constitutional supremacy, not judicial supremacy or legislative supremacy. As a general matter, this means that it is the Constitution which states the law, and it is the job of government officials to apply it, not the other way around.

This general truth is no less true of Section Three. Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: "No person shall be" directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall [41] But not ours! See Paulsen, McConnell, Bray and Baude, The Constitution of the United States (5th ed. 2022).

[42] U.S. Const. art. VI.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

be.[43] It does not grant a power to Congress (or any other body) to enact or effectuate a rule of disqualification. It enacts the rule itself. Section Three directly adopts a constitutional rule of disqualification from office.

This should be no surprise, as the same thing is true of the Constitution's other rules of disqualification from office. A person who has not attained to the age of thirty-five is not qualified to be President of the United States. This disqualification is automatic. The Constitution's rule is self-executing. "No person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not satisfy the age requirement.[44] The disqualification requires no further legislation or other action, by anybody, to be operative. The disqualification simply is. So too for Article II's citizenship and length-of-residency eligibility prerequisites for the office of President. And so too for the constitutional qualifications—age, citizenship, state inhabitancy—for members of the House and Senate: "No Person shall be" a Representative who does not meet Article I, section 2's requirements.[45] "No Person shall be" a U.S. Senator who does not meet Article I, section 3's requirements.[46] These restrictions on eligibility are legally binding simply by virtue of their presence in the Constitution.

The language of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment parallels, even duplicates, the language used in these other provisions to express other constitutional disqualifications from officeholding.[47] None of these disqualifications requires any further legal action or legislation to be operative. Where a constitutional legal disqualification exists, it simply exists. It is a binding rule of constitutional law.

Again, this kind of binding rule should be no surprise. The Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery, enacted a few years earlier, works the same way. Immediately upon adoption of the amendment, slavery was legally extinguished as a matter of constitutional law. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist ...," the Thirteenth Amendment provides.[48] The institution of slavery was immediately, legally, constitutionally gone.[49] The Thirteenth Amendment contains a separate section granting Congress the power to enforce the prohibition of slavery.[50] But that enforcement power scarcely means that the ban on slavery contained in Section One was inoperative unless and until Congress passed legislation making it operative. Such a

---

[43] We have borrowed this felicitous phrasing from John Harrison. Cf. John Harrison, The Power of Congress to Limit the Jurisdiction of the Federal Courts and the Text of Article III, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 203, 211 (1997) ("The Vesting Clause is a self-executing enactment; it lays down rules by saying what shall be.")

[44] U.S. Const. art. II, §2, cl. 5 (emphasis added).

[45] U.S. Const. art. I, §2, cl. 2(emphasis added).

[46] U.S. Const. art. I, §3, cl. 3 (emphasis added).

[47] See Josh Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few 168 (2007).

[48] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §1 (emphasis added).

[49] See Alexander Tsesis, The Thirteenth Amendment and American Freedom: A Legal History 48–53 (2004) (documenting reactions of persons learning of their freedom immediately after ratification).

[50] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

position would be ridiculous. The power to enforce adds to the substantive prohibition—it is not a subtraction from or suspension of it.

And of course, the same is true elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment too. We take it as obvious that Section One is self-executing. Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment, like Section Three states directly operative rules of constitutional law: "No state shall," in Section One, and "No person shall" in Section Three.[51] Both of these provisions are subject to additional enforcement legislation by Congress under Section Five. Yet it is common ground that Section One is self-executing. Nobody thinks (for example) that the prohibitions of Section One are inoperative unless and until Congress enacts legislation pursuant to its Section Five legislative power to bring them to life.

In each instance, Congress certainly can enact legislation "to enforce" the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments' commands, pursuant to their grants of legislative power.[52] Doing so can unlock additional procedural mechanisms, additional deference by courts to Congress's view of the law, and so on. The Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and more were designed to enforce Section One of the Thirteenth and Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment. But, to repeat, the existence of an enforcement power does not mean that the Amendment's specific legal commands lack any independent, self-executing force.[53]

So too, Congress in fact enacted implementing legislation in 1870 to enforce Section Three, authorizing quo warranto civil suits brought by the United States to remove state officials unconstitutionally holding office in violation of Section Three and imposing criminal penalties for knowing violations of Section Three.[54] But Congress's choice to trigger additional procedural mechanisms and federal jurisdiction

---

[51] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 1, 3. Nothing here turns on it, but Section Four of the Fourteenth Amendment, which repudiates rebel and slave debts while guaranteeing the legal obligation of the national debt, also seems to be self-executing. Section Two, which alters Article I, section 2's rule for how Representatives "shall be apportioned," presents a more complicated case. Its rule is immediately operative, like the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, but its rule operates by changing an apportionment process undertaken by Congress. In practice, Congress has ignored it, see Michael Rosin, The Five-Fifths Rule and the Unconstitutional Presidential Election of 1916, 46 Hist. Meth. 57 (2013); Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 395; see also email from John Harrison to Akhil Reed Amar, quoted in id. at 611 n. 96, and it is hard to see how anybody else can realistically enforce it.

[52] U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2; amdt. XIV, sec. 5.

[53] Indeed, Section One was added to an early draft of the Fourteenth Amendment precisely to ensure that state Black Codes would be unenforceable even if there were no federal legislation saying so. Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 30-31, 63-64.

[54] Act of May 31, 1870 (First Ku Klux Klan Act), ch. 114 §§14, 15, 16 Stat. 140, 143. These provisions were largely repealed during the 1948 positive law codifications of Titles 18 and 28 of the U.S. Code. See Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, § 39, 62 Stat. 869, 993; see also Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683; Lynch, supra note 5, at 206 n. 365. These codifications were not supposed to make substantive changes to the law, see generally William W. Barron, The Judicial Code, 8 F.R.D. 439 (1949), and so our best guess is that the revisers (mistakenly) believed the provisions to be obsolete. In any event, the 1948 for Section Three cases does not mean that there was no constitutional prohibition before Congress acted.[55] Congress enforced Section Three's prohibition. Congress was not the one to give it legal effect. Section Three was effective law all along.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three is also noticeably different from other constitutional provisions that deal with misbehavior—provisions that are not self-executing in the same way. Article III, for instance, describes the offense of treason:

> Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.
>
> The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.[56]

Note the contrast. The Treason Clause defines an offense ("Treason . . . shall consist") but it does not itself convict anybody of treason. Section Three, by contrast, enacts its own disqualification ("No person shall be"). It acts on persons, not offenses. This is driven home by the Treason Clause's specific procedures and powers: "[C]onvict[ions] of treason" require two witnesses or a public confession; and "Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason." Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, by contrast, is offense, conviction, and punishment all rolled in to one.

Similarly, the Constitution's impeachment provisions say that those who are impeached "shall be removed from Office."[57] But the Constitution does not itself impeach anybody. Instead, it specifies that somebody else—the House and Senate—must do the impeaching.[58] Again, Section Three's contrast is glaring. The framers of Section Three had the treason clause and impeachment clauses at hand and chose a codification bills were obviously not intended to preclude any other existing remedies for Section Three.

---

[55] Professor Magliocca concurs. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 106 & n.101 (noting that "enacting enforcement legislation does not imply that legislation is required" and that the existence of Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment does not imply that the other sections are not self-executing). Indeed, this is especially so because Congress may have been responding to the decision in Griffin's Case (wrongly) holding that such legislation was required for Section Three to have operative legal effect. See infra Part II.C.

[56] U. S. Const. art. III, sec. 3.

[57] U.S. Const. art. II, sec. 4.

[58] U.S. Const. art I, sec. 3 & sec. 4.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

noticeably different path.[59] Section Three does not call for treason trials or the impeachment of secessionists. It directly imposes an across-the-board disqualification and involves Congress only if Congress wishes to end it.

Section Three's constitutional disqualification, where applicable, just is. It stands on its own as a constitutional rule of law, having come into legal force "as Part of this Constitution," along with the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, "when ratified" as a constitutional amendment.[60] It immediately became "supreme Law of the Land." [61] Its rule took immediate effect. Section Three is, in that sense, legally self-executing.

Is there any serious textual argument to the contrary? We will address Chief Justice Chase's conclusion in Griffin's Case in a moment. But we suspect that resistance to this point often comes instead from some misdirected intuitions. One is the problem of supposed difficulty. It seems easy, perhaps, to apply the constitutional qualifications of age and citizenship.[62] It is pretty obvious what these are and obvious what they demand that we do. But who exactly is disqualified by Section Three is, at least to initial appearances, a more difficult, complicated, and fact-specific question. It is a more difficult question of law because we must plumb the meanings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and so on—and these meanings are not quite as self-evident as "thirty-five years of age" (at least until this article is widely read and accepted). And it is more difficult in practice, because even once we know what the terms of Section Three mean, we must know what exactly every prior-oath-sworn official did.

---

[59] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this understanding. Section Three's opponents criticized the proposal for its immediate consequences on former Confederates, and its proponents seemed to share the same understanding. For opponents, see Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2900 (Senator Doolittle) (amendment "will have the effect of putting a new punishment, not prescribed by the laws, upon all those persons who are embraced within its provisions"); id. at 2916 (Senator Doolittle); id. at 2940 (Senator Hendricks) (complaining about immediate consequences); for proponents, see id. at 2919 (Senator Willey) (defending the amendment's immediate effect because those affected had already "forfeited" their claim to participate in government "by their past conduct'); id. (they lost their "citizenship rights when they committed treason"); Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., App., at 228 (Senator Defrees); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. at 3036 (Senator Henderson) (defending the immediate effect of Section Three against the charge that it is a bill of attainder or ex post facto law); see generally infra Part III.A-B. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-27, 35-37 (documenting all of these discussions) .

[60] U.S. Const. art. V.

[61] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[62] See Gerard N. Magliocca, Background as Foreground: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and January 6th, at 14 n.42 (Mar. 2, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4306094 ("Section Three was unprecedented in the sense that prior restrictions on serving in office were bright-line rules (age and citizenship, for example) instead of standards"). On the other hand, the Constitution's inhabitancy requirement, has proved far from simple in practice. See Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Qualifications of Members of Congress (Jan 15, 2015) at 13-18, https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/R41946.pdf. And there has been recent litigation about the requirement that the President be a "natural born citizen" as well. See Derek T. Muller, "Natural Born" Disputes in the 2016 Election, 85 Fordham L. Rev. 1097 (2016).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Not all participation in insurrection or rebellion is open and notorious. More difficult it may be, to interpret and apply the disqualification of Section Three than the disqualifications of age, citizenship, and residency. But the fact of difficulty is a non sequitur. The fact that it might be hard for us to know today what a legal rule means (or how it applies) does not mean that it is not the legal rule.[63] The Constitution says what it says and we must try to apply it as best we can. To start by asking what is easy for us, and then to assume that the Constitution must mean something that makes our lives easy, is as fallacious as drawing the curve before gathering the data points.[64]

Resistance might also come from the problem of enforcement. The Constitution is generally self-executing law, but still, somebody has to enforce it. Somebody has to read it, understand it, and ensure that our practices conform to its commands. (Many somebodies, actually, as we discuss shortly.) This is true, but again it is a non-sequitur. It is true that government officials must enforce the Constitution, and who does this and how they do it are important questions, maybe the central questions of constitutional law. But the meaning of the Constitution comes first. Officials must enforce the Constitution because it is law; it is wrong to think that it only becomes law if they decide to enforce it. Section Three has legal force already.

B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three?

As we just said, even though Section Three is a self-executing, immediately applicable constitutional legal rule, someone needs to do the actual applying of that rule to particular situations where its application is called for. Section Three's constitutional disqualification exists of its own force as an abstract matter. But someone needs to bring that legal rule to bear in a concrete situation as a practical matter.

Who has the power and duty to do this? We think the answer is: anybody who possesses legal authority (under relevant state or federal law) to decide whether somebody is eligible for office. This might mean different political or judicial actors, depending on the office involved, and depending on the relevant state or federal law. But in principle: Section Three's disqualification rule may and must be followed—applied, honored, obeyed, enforced, carried out—by anyone whose job it is to figure out whether someone is legally qualified to office, just as with any of the Constitution's other qualifications.

---

[63] Christopher R. Green, Constitutional Truthmakers, 32 Notre Dame J. L. Ethics & Pub Pol'y 497, 511-512 (2018).

[64] Cf. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839 (1993) (mocking constitutional interpretation that engages in "the legal equivalent of the method my lab partner and I used in high school chemistry: first draw the desired curve; then plot the data; if time permits, do the experiment"); Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism: Standard and Procedure, 135 Harv. L. Rev. 777 (2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These actors might include (for example): state election officials; other state executive or administrative officials; state legislatures and governors; the two houses of Congress; the President and subordinate executive branch officers; state and federal judges deciding cases where such legal rules apply; even electors for the offices of president and vice president. We will discuss in detail some of these examples presently. But two points are important to keep clear at the outset: First, all of these bodies or entities may possess, within their sphere, the power and duty to apply Section Three as governing law. Second, their authority to do so exists as a function of the powers they otherwise possess. No action is necessary to "activate" Section Three as a prerequisite to its application as law by bodies or persons whose responsibilities call for its application. The Constitution's qualification and disqualification rules exist and possess legal force in their own right, which is what makes them applicable and enforceable by a variety of officials in a variety of contexts.

Consider some illustrations:

1. Seeking Office

a. by election

Anybody who seeks office will at some point need to show that they are entitled to hold that office. At every point that this occurs, Section Three governs. So, for instance, state or local election boards, and state Secretaries of State, may possess state-law authority to make at least initial determinations as to eligibility of candidates for elected office in that state or representing that state in Congress (as authorized by Article I, section 4 of the Constitution)—and, thus, whether or not such candidates shall be placed on a primary or general election ballot.[65] Those state bodies or officers are obliged, often by oath—sometimes by oath mandated by the U.S. Constitution—to act consistently with the requirements of the Constitution in the discharge of their duties.[66] Accordingly, such state actors can and must apply Section Three's disquali-

[65] To be sure, the centralized, government-administered ballot did not come to American until the late Nineteenth Century and so of course states are not constitutionally required to run elections in this way. But if they do, Section Three governs how they carry out their duties.

[66] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.2 ("This Constitution … shall be the supreme Law of the Land"). See also U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."). The nature of the Constitution as supreme, binding law is of course fundamental to the argument for "judicial review," as it is likewise fundamental to the argument for the obligation of all government officials to adhere to the law supplied by the Constitution and give its commands priority over any other source of law or legal duty. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Irrepressible Myth of Marbury, 101 Mich. L. Rev. 2706 (2003); see also William Baude, Severability First Principles, 109 Va. L. Rev. 1, 5-9 (2023).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fication in carrying out their state-law responsibilities—just as they possess the authority and duty to comply with and enforce the Constitution's other qualification-for-office requirements.[67]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work, consider how the state of Georgia entertained a Section Three challenge to the qualifications of Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene under Georgia law. A state administrative law judge took evidence about Representative Greene's involvement in the events of January 6, 2021.[68] The judge proceeded under the theory that if January 6 was a constitutional "insurrection," and if Representative Greene had been part of it, she would be barred from office.[69] But it concluded that the challengers had failed to meet their burden of proof under state law: "In short, even assuming, arguendo, that the Invasion was an insurrection, Challengers presented no persuasive evidence Rep. Greene took any action—direct physical efforts, contribution of personal services or capital, issuance of directives or marching orders, transmissions of intelligence, or even statements of encouragement—in furtherance thereof on or after January 3, 2021."[70] Secretary of State Brad Raffensberger issued a final decision ratifying the hearing officer's proposed findings that day.[71]

Such determinations about ballot eligibility may also be subject to further judicial review. In state courts, these procedures will of course depend on what review is available under state law. Similarly, federal courts might well possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual federal jurisdiction doctrines (such as standing, ripeness, mootness, and abstention), to decide cases of candidate eligibility. Continuing the example, Representative Greene did file a federal lawsuit attempting to enjoin the then-pending state proceedings (mentioned above), and the district court concluded that the case was justiciable and that Younger abstention did not apply, but that Greene's claims failed on the merits.[72] While Greene's appeal to the Eleventh Circuit was pending, she prevailed in the state proceedings, so the case was dismissed as moot.[73] The [67] We note that the determination by state officials that a candidate for election to the U.S. Congress is not disqualified—and may be elected—does not bind the respective houses of Congress, in the exercise of their independent Article I, section 5, powers to act as "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members" and refuse to seat prospective members it judges to be constitutionally disqualified by Section Three or other constitutional limitation. See also infra n. 96 and accompanying text.

---

[68] Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022).

[69] Id. at 5-6.

[70] Id. at 15. The January 3, 2021 cut-off is because that is the date that Representative Greene first took a constitutional oath. The Court also specifically rejected the argument that a Newsmax appearance on January 5, 2021, should be interpreted as a "coded message from Rep. Greene to her co-conspirators to go forward with a previously planned incursion into the Capitol." Id. at 16.

[71] Final Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022).

[72] Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1320 (N.D. Ga. 2022).

[73] Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 909-910 (11th Cir. 2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

details, of course, will vary from case to case. But where any of these tribunals has jurisdiction they too obviously have the power and duty to apply Section Three as the supreme law of the land.

This is not to say that states must provide any particular procedure for bringing a challenge to ballot eligibility qualification or grant a cause of action to particular private individuals to bring such challenges. For instance, in a recent suit seeking to disqualify Arizona Representative Mark Finchem and U.S. Representatives Paul Gosar and Andy Biggs from the 2022 primary ballot, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded that state law did not provide a private cause of action for a disqualification challenge.[74] In principle, that could well be right. Whether to provide a cause of action in such cases is largely a question of state law. Section Three slots in to existing powers and procedures without mandating or micromanaging them.

That said, the Arizona Supreme Court's muddied reasoning in the Finchem-Gosar-Biggs case necessitates a few clarifying points. First, state law can enforce Section Three, and the Fourteenth Amendment does not place any particular presumption against doing so. Unfortunately, the Arizona Supreme Court suggested otherwise, writing that "Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause . . . which suggests that A.R.S. 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates."[75] This inference is mistaken—Congress's power to enforce federal law, including constitutional law, is not exclusive of the states, and states regularly enforce federal law including constitutional law in their own courts.[76]

Second, in some circumstances state law not only can but must enforce Section Three. Under the rule of Testa v. Katt,[77] where a state does open its courts to a cause of action, it must apply federal law evenhandedly to that cause of action. As the unanimous Court put it: "[T]he Constitution and the laws passed pursuant to it are the supreme laws of the land, binding alike upon states, courts, and the people, 'any-thing

---

[74] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[75] Id. at *1. The court did not cite any authority for this interpretation, but its argument does echo a fallacious argument made by Chief Justice Chase in Griffin's Case, which we discuss at greater length presently. See infra Part II.C.2.d. The Arizona Supreme Court also made the additional suggestion that Article I, Section 5 gave Congress "exclusive authority to determine whether to enforce the Disqualification Clause against its prospective members," id. We are skeptical of this point as well, see infra n. 96 and accompanying text, but in any event it would have only applied to federal representatives Gosar and Biggs, not the lead defendant, state representative Finchem. The individual houses of Congress of course have no Article I, Section 5 power, exclusive or otherwise, to determine the membership of state legislatures.

[76] See, e.g., Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458-460 (1990); id. at 469- 470 (Scalia, J., concurring); see also Thomas Koenig & Christopher D. Moore, Of State Remedies and Federal Rights (May 29, 2023) https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4462807.

[77] 330 U.S. 386 (1947).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."[78] And thus "the policy of the federal Act is the prevailing policy in every state."[79] A state cannot treat federal obligations the way it can treat foreign ones.

The Arizona Supreme Court's decision unfortunately can be read to suggest otherwise. The court cryptically wrote that the state "statute's scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law,' and does not include the Disqualification Clause, a legal proscription from holding office."[80] If the court meant to distinguish federal constitutional qualifications from state statutes, it seems to have violated Testa. If the court meant that Section Three's dis-qualification is not a "qualification," that seems nonsensical. And if it meant something else, it is hard to figure out what.

In any event, the real question is what procedure is available for determining whether a candidate is qualified to office. That is basically a question of state law, and the correct procedures will likely vary from state to state. But the courts owe state law a full and fair reading, not one slanted by reticence to acknowledge the life in Section Three.

b. by appointment

Now let us turn to appointments. Just as with elected office, anybody who must decide whether an appointee is qualified must comply with Section Three. Traditionally this includes at a minimum whoever nominated the officer.[81] Thus governors, presidents, and other nominating authorities can and should—indeed, constitutionally must—decline to nominate and appoint to state or federal offices persons who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. And likewise, where nominating authority is subject to additional confirmation—by a state senate, the U.S. Senate, or any other body—that body presumably can and should, constitutionally must, decline to consent to the appointment of such constitutionally disqualified nominees.[82]

---

[78] Id. at 391 (quoting U.S. Const. Art VI, sec. 2).

[79] Id. at 393. To be sure, Testa and especially subsequent cases expanding it have been subject to powerful criticisms as a matter of original meaning, see Ann Woolhandler & Michael G. Collins, State Jurisdictional Independence and Federal Supremacy, 72 Fla. L. Rev. 73, 78-83, 97-105 (2020); Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 742-67 (2009) (Thomas, J., dissenting). We bracket those criticisms here.

[80] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[81] For instance, both President George Washington and President Franklin Roosevelt felt obligated to consider whether their Supreme Court nominees (Patterson and Black, respectively) were constitutionally disqualified by Article I, sec. 6. See William Baude, The Unconstitutionality of Justice Black, 98 Tex. L. Rev. 327, 330, 333-334, 355-356 (2019).

[82] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 914-918 (1994) (discussing constitutional responsibility of political branches to enforce constitutional disqualifications from office irrespective of whether they give rise to a judicial case or controversy, and bemoaning the failure of all to enforce the Emoluments Clause); see also Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 355-356 (similar); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, Straightening Out The Confirmation Mess, 105

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In other words, the election and appointment systems, from top to bottom, frequently make decisions about a candidate's eligibility for office. All of those decisions are legally bound by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment; and all persons making such decisions are correspondingly bound to faithfully interpret, enforce, and apply Section Three.

2. Holding Office

What about those who already hold office—either because Section Three was not attended to before they gained office, or because their disqualifying conduct happened later?[83]

Once again, the answer turns in part on what procedures are available under other law. State officials can be subject to a variety of remedies for unlawfully holding office. They might (or might not) be subject to removal, as a matter of state law, by a private suit quo warranto, by the authority of another executive or judicial officer or administrative board, or perhaps even by the state legislature exercising powers of impeachment or recall. In addition, it is possible that the salaries of such rightfully-disqualified officials—and the legal eligibility of such persons for those salaries—might be subject to the authority and determination of some other state official.

We submit that all such officials—administrators, executives, legislatures—possessing legal authority concerning such matters likewise possess the authority (and duty) to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three's disqualification in the course of exercising that legal authority. And once again: if such determinations are judicially reviewable under state law, the courts likewise possess the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.[84]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work consider how the state of New Mexico removed commissioner Couy Griffin from state office.[85] Griffin was an elected commissioner for Otero County, New Mexico, who promoted, assisted, and

---

Yale L.J. 549, 562-570 (1995) (noting parallel constitutional structural argument for obligation of both the President and the Senate to exercise independent faithful constitutional interpretive judgment in the course of carrying out their respective powers with respect to appointment); Charles L. Black, Jr., A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees, 79 Yale L.J. 657, 658-660 (1970) (similar).

[83] Or because Section Three was not yet adopted as law when they were appointed to office but became operative and disqualified them subsequently. This was the situation presented in Griffin's Case, discussed presently. See infra at II.C.

[84] Of course, federal courts, too, might possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual rules and conditions, to decide such lawsuits just as they will for state determinations of election candidate eligibility. See supra notes 72-73 and accompanying text. And when doing so, they have the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.

[85] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ultimately joined in the January 6 insurrection against the Capitol. A group of New Mexico citizens filed a quo warranto action against Griffin under New Mexico law, seeking his removal from office. The New Mexico district court took evidence, received legal arguments, and then concluded that Griffin was disqualified under Section Three. More precisely, and quite correctly, it held that Griffin had been disqualified since the day of the January 6 insurrection, and ordered his immediate ejection from office, and permanently enjoined him from seeking or holding any other covered position.[86]

As a matter of state procedure, the court concluded that the New Mexico quo warranto statute was a remedy for ejecting unlawful office holders.[87] It also concluded that quo warranto could be sought by any citizen of New Mexico, without any further showing of injury, because the New Mexico courts are not bound by the same "standing" limitations as the federal courts are. As a matter of federal law, the court had no trouble concluding that the events of January 6. 2021 were a constitutional "insurrection." And it had no trouble concluding that Griffin had engaged in that insurrection, both by "voluntarily aid[ing] the insurrectionists' cause by helping to mobilize and incite" the crowd, and by joining in the invasion of the Capitol itself, even though Griffin himself did not commit a violent act.[88] The New Mexico county court correctly recognized both its power and its duty to interpret and apply Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The same general principle applies to the situations of those who hold federal office. Again, anyone who possesses legal power to decide whether such a person can and should hold (or continue to hold) the office in question must apply Section Three's disqualification in doing so.[89] Here, the specific federal constitutional rules for tenure and removal present some interesting complications, which we address shortly.

---

[86] Id. at 46. The New Mexico Supreme Court dismissed Griffin's appeal on procedural grounds. NO. S-1-SC-39571 (N.M. Sup. Ct. Nov. 15, 2022). Meanwhile, the federal courts concluded that they lacked federal jurisdiction over two related claims by Griffin: an attempt to remove the state action to federal court, State ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 1707187 (D.N.M. May 27, 2022) (denying removal because of plaintiffs' lack of Article III standing) and a separate parallel suit attempting to enjoin the state proceedings, Griffin v. White, 2022 WL 2315980 (D.N.M. June 28, 2022) (finding lack of standing, lack of ripeness, and invoking Pullman abstention).

[87] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473, at 24-25 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[88] Id. at 35-38.

[89] The availability of a federal quo warranto action is curiously codified in the D.C. Code, §§ 16-3501-02. Courts have generally construed this statute quite narrowly, holding that only the Attorney General may bring a quo warranto against a public official, and that he has broad discretion not to do so. See Andrade v. Lauer, 729 F.2d 1475, 1498 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 784-785 (9th Cir. 2011); SW Gen., Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 796 F.3d 67, 81 (D.C. Cir. 2015), aff'd, 580 U.S. 288 (2017). The Third Circuit recently dismissed a Section Three quo warranto against former state senator Doug Mastriano on this ground. Hill v. Mastriano, No. 22-2464, 2022 WL 16707073, at *2 (3d Cir. Nov. 4, 2022). See also Hill v. Perry, No. 22-2465, 2023 WL 3336648, at *1 (3d Cir. May 10, 2023) (dismissing similar suits by same plaintiff against Rick Saccone and Scott Perry).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But in general: wherever anyone possesses the constitutional authority or duty to remove others from office for legal reasons, they can and should remove those barred by Section Three. Presidents—and subordinate executive officers acting at the president's direction—should remove from office executive officers, civil and military, who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. Likewise, the House of Representatives should impeach, and the Senate convict and thereby remove from office, civil executive officers who become constitutionally disqualified by Section Three.[90]

Finally and additionally, what happens if all of the above fails? Somebody disqualified by Section Three is given office and nobody removes that person from office. What then? Here too there will often still be additional procedures to enforce Section Three. These procedures mirror those available to enforce the Appointments Clause and other constitutional law of appointments. A litigant can move to disqualify a judge whose appointment is improper.[91] A regulated entity can challenge the actions of an executive official who holds office improperly.[92] Those who cannot constitutionally hold office cannot constitutionally exercise government power, so the subjects of that power can challenge their acts as ultra vires. While there may be some limits to the available relief in some kinds of suits under the "de facto officer doctrine," (more on which shortly), in many cases the courts will be called on to decide if an action is ultra vires. Section Three governs those cases.

3. Special Situations

A few federal constitutional offices raise special cases, where the Constitution itself speaks to official tenure or qualifications.

First consider Congress. Each house of Congress has two specific powers with respect to its own membership in which Section Three might come into play. First, each house has power to "Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of "its own Members."[93] Since one of those qualifications is non-disqualification under Section Three, each house can and must judge whether Section Three forbids the seating of a member. This judgment is conclusive, and it operates as a crucial constitutional [90] An officeholder who has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid and comfort to enemies of the United States has surely committed a "high Crime or Misdemeanor" within the meaning of Article II, section 4's description of the scope of the impeachment and removal power. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, To End a (Republican) Presidency, 132 Harv. L. Rev. 689, 698-702 (2018). Note that military officers are not subject to impeachment; they are subject instead to the President's removal authority as Commander in Chief. Whether Congress could supplement that authority through appropriate legislation is an interesting question. See Zachary Price, Congress's Power Over Military Offices, 99 Tex. L. Rev. 291 (2021).

---

[91] Nguyen v. United States, 539 U.S. 69, 77–79, 81–82 (2003); Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 346-47.

[92] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 8–9 (1976) (per curiam); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 668 (1988); Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 487–88 (2010); NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550, 2557 (2014); see also Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 36-37.

[93] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 1.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

backstop for each house. No state or group of voters can force upon the House or Senate a Member it judges to be constitutionally disqualified. Indeed, even federal courts could not properly do so. While the Supreme Court has held, in Powell v. McCormack,[94] that Congress cannot create new "Qualifications" and that the federal courts have the power to stop it from doing so, neither Powell nor first principles allow a federal court to second-guess each house's judgment about whether the existing, constitutional, qualifications have been satisfied. [95]

Some have argued that each house's judging power also preempts other early stages of the election process. The argument is that states and state election law have no power to exclude a candidate for Congress because they are constitutionally ineligible to office—that instead the state must allow the voters to send up the ineligible candidate, so as not to prejudge the possibility that the House or Senate will find them eligible.[96] With respect, we do not agree with this argument. As a logical matter, each house's right to judge whether an elected candidate can hold office does not give it the power to force states to elect that candidate (or allow them to be elected) in the first place. And as a textual matter, state legislatures have the power to regulate the "manner" of elections, which includes ballot eligibility.[97] In our view, the better interpretation is that Section Three can be relevant to both the state's power to regulate the manner of elections and each house's power to judge the results of those elections.

---

[94] 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

[95] See Powell, 395 U.S. at 520 n. 41 (reserving the possibility that Section Three disqualification is a qualification); see also P. Allan Dionisopoulos, A Commentary on the Constitutional Issues in the Powell and Related Cases, 17 J. Pub. L. 103, 114-115 (1968) (cited in id. at n.41) (arguing that it is); Powell, 395 U.S. at 521 n.42 (noting that "federal courts might still be barred by the political question doctrine from reviewing the House's factual determination that a member did not meet one of the standing qualifications"). We emphasize that questions of interpretation and application of Section Three are not in general "political questions" that cannot be decided by federal courts, simply because they have political consequences. Where the Constitution supplies a rule, and the rule's application is not committed by the text of the Constitution to the judgment of one of the political branches, the courts are not disabled from deciding a case based on that rule. We simply think that the provision committing to each house the power to be the "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of its own Members does not permit judicial review of determinations of each house that properly fall within these constitutional categories.

[96] See Derek T. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind. L.J. 559, 594-598 (2015); see also Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245, 267-273, 282-284 (4th Cir. 2022) (Richardson, J., concurring); Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 912-916 (11th Cir. 2022) (Branch, J., concurring).

[97] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 4. The same Clause also gives Congress the power to "make or alter" such regulations by legislation if it wishes. Two relatively recent Supreme Court cases have invalidated state ballot eligibility rules for members of Congress that attempted to impose congressional term limits, U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995); Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510 (2001), and Judge Richardson relies on these cases to argue that states cannot judge the qualifications of congressional candidates, Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 273-275 (Richardson, J., concurring). Putting aside whether these cases are correct as an original matter, we think they further support our view. The Court rejected term-limit-ballot-access restrictions because they were an attempt to impose a qualification not contained in the Constitution. E.g., U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 784, 787-788, 806-815. It

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second relevant power each house possesses with respect to its own Members concerns Members already sitting in Congress. Each house also has power to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member."[98] So in addition to the initial power to exclude under Section Three, each house could potentially proceed through the expulsion power instead, by two-thirds vote.[99] As with the power to exclude, the power to expel, where exercised within the scope of the power conferred exclusively on each house, is committed to that house's discretion.

Federal judges hold their offices during "good Behaviour."[100] What if a sitting federal judge or even a Supreme Court justice has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to the nation's enemies?[101] As a matter of substance this is easy. Whether regarded as simply a violation of the Article III tenure condition of "good Behaviour" or as satisfying the impeachment standard of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors,"[102] conduct meeting Section Three's standard disqualifies a federal judge from office.

As a matter of procedure the question is trickier. The conventional wisdom is that Article III allows good behavior to be judged only through the procedure of impeachment by Congress. An alternative view, with some support in the history, is that Congress could provide other procedures for adjudicating misbehavior (as for instance in the 1791 Crimes Act, which purported to require the immediate removal of any federal official convicted of bribery or other crimes).[103] Whichever is the answer, the procedures and criteria for judging judges can and must apply Section Three.

---

follows that ballot access rules that follow the qualifications contained in the Constitution could be treated differently.

[98] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 2.

[99] There is some debate whether Congress can expel a member for conduct that occurred before being elected. See Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few, supra note 47, at 210-212 (recounting arguments on both sides but arguing that it can); Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Expulsion, Censure, Reprimand, and Fine: Legislative Discipline in the House of Representatives 4-7 (2016) https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/RL31382.pdf (same). At all events, however, continuing to hold office when forbidden to do so by Section Three is ongoing conduct that would seem independently to justify expulsion in the here-and-now.

[100] U.S. Const. art. III.

[101] Cf. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 2, 141 (1866) (Chase, C.J., concurring in the judgment) ("In Indiana, the judges and officers of the courts were loyal to the government. But it might have been otherwise. In times of rebellion and civil war, it may often happen, indeed, that judges and marshals will be in active sympathy with the rebels, and courts their most efficient allies.").

[102] See supra note 90.

[103] Saikrishna Prakash & Steven D. Smith, How to Remove A Federal Judge, 116 Yale L.J. 72 (2006). In the interests of full disclosure, one of us was the student lead editor when this piece was published, and continues to think it is probably right, notwithstanding the counterarguments in James E. Pfander, Removing Federal Judges, 74 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1227 (2007). The other of us adheres to the traditional view. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Checking the Court, 10 NYU J. L. & Liberty 18, 76-77 (2016).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, what about the top of the ticket? What if the President or a presidential candidate (or likewise for Vice President) is constitutionally disqualified?[104] Who has the power and duty to enforce Section Three's legal prohibition? Again, the answer depends on whether the supposedly disqualified individual is seeking election to office or already holds it. In the case of a candidate, state election officials and state election law will frequently judge that candidate's ballot eligibility, applying Section Three as described above, and subject to the usual avenues of judicial review. That eligibility question can be a part of a state's Article II election for electors just as much as any other state election.[105] Put simply: a state secretary of state (for example) might well possess state-law authority to determine candidate eligibility for federal elective offices—President and Vice President, U.S. Representatives, U.S. Senators—selected directly or indirectly via state elections; and among those relevant eligibility criteria is whether a candidate is disqualified from the office he or she seeks by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Additionally, presidential electors have the power (and therefore perhaps the responsibility as well) to enforce Section Three.[106] In perhaps half the states, the question is more complicated, because state laws purport to bind the electors in various ways to vote for their party's candidate rather than making their own determination, and the Supreme Court has recently upheld such laws.[107] But even working within that paradigm, states and their legislatures have their own duties to uphold the Constitution. That means they have a responsibility to arrange that their electors do not elect a constitutionally disqualified candidate, which should be reflected in their laws.

If the voter and presidential electors do select a disqualified candidate for the Presidency, we do not believe that Congress (or the Vice President) have the power to reject that candidate when the votes are counted in joint session. Whatever the [104] We are assuming for now that the Presidency and Vice Presidency are covered by Section Three's language as an "office, civil or military, under the United States." We think that assumption is correct, and we will return to it in Part IV.B.

---

[105] See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) (upholding state exclusion from presidential primary ballot of twenty-seven-year-old candidate constitutionally disqualified on grounds of age); Hassan v. Colorado, 495 Fed. App'x 947, 948 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J.) (upholding state exclusion from presidential election ballot of naturalized citizen constitutionally disqualified from office by Natural Born Citizen Clause of Article II); see also Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 599-608; see also Muller, Natural Born, supra note 62, at 1100-1106. This is standard practice and law even though the President and Vice President are only indirect candidates, with their electors as direct candidates.

[106] See Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 579-580.

[107] Chiafolo v. Washington, 591 U.S. ___ (2020); see also Muller, supra note 96, at 580. We bracket the serious possibility that Chiafolo was wrongly decided. See, e.g., Mike Rappaport, The Originalist Disaster in Chiafolo, Law & Liberty (Aug. 7, 2020), https://lawliberty.org/the-originalist-disaster-in-chiafalo/; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitutional Power of the Electoral College, Public Discourse (Nov. 21, 2016), https://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2016/11/18283/.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

extent of Congress's and the Vice President's authority to count the electoral votes, or determine the authenticity of submitted votes—i.e., was this the act of the electors of the state?—we do not believe that they have the authority to evaluate the decisions or actions of the electors themselves.[108] So if a properly selected elector submits a vote for a constitutionally disqualified individual it should still be counted.

Still, once those votes are counted, a disqualified candidate does not become president, even if he has the most votes. This is made explicit by the (self-executing) command of Section Three of the Twentieth Amendment, which sets the constitutional terms of a President's term. It states that at "the time fixed for the beginning of [the President's] term," "if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified."[109] The language thus specifically confirms the possibility of a failure to qualify, and specifies the consequences of that failure. If the President-elect is covered by Section Three, he cannot become President—unless Congress chooses (by supermajority votes) to remove Section Three's disability.

Once the President has taken office, the Constitution provides two paths for involuntary removal from office: impeachment for "high Crimes and Misdemeanors" and removal for being "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" under the procedure of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. We think it likely that Section Three would apply to both procedures. The impeachment route is straightforward. As we have discussed, an insurrection against the United States is a paradigm example of a high crime or misdemeanor. It also seems to us possible that a President who is, by operation of the Constitution, legally disqualified from holding his office might be said to be "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" within the meaning of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. To be sure, this is doubtless not the paradigm case that the authors of the Twenty-fifth Amendment had in mind. Moreover, "unable" as employed in the Twenty-fifth Amendment would appear, linguistically and structurally, akin to "inability" as used in Article II, Section 1, paragraph 6—the provision that the Twenty-fifth Amendment amends in this respect. (Paragraph 5 of Article II addresses questions of eligibility; and paragraph 6 separately addresses questions of inability.) But regardless of intention, the natural import of the words of the Twenty-fifth Amendment is that they broadly include all reasons why a president might be "unable" to perform his or her duties. And it is the meaning of the words enacted, not the subjective intentions or expectations of those who drafted them, that is what makes our constitutional law. The procedures of the Twenty-fifth Amendment are complicated and convoluted, to be sure. But where they are employed, there is a good

---

[108] We take no position on many further details of this issue, including the relative interplay of the Electoral Count Reform Act, Pub.L. 117-328, Div. P, Title I, § 109(a) (Dec. 29, 2022) 136 Stat. 5238-5239, codified in relevant part at 3 U.S.C. 15(b) & (d)(2)(B)(ii), possible constitutional challenges to it, see Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1805 (2002); see also John Harrison, Nobody for President, 16 J.L & Pol. 699 (2000), interpretations of it, but see Derek T. Muller, Electoral Votes Regularly Given, 55 Ga. L. Rev. 1529, 1538 (2021), or the like.

[109] U.S. Const. amdt. XX, sec. 3. Cf, Muller, Regularly Given, supra note 108, at 1538 n.42.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

argument that a president's disqualification from office under Section Three is one of the grounds on which he or she might be judged "unable" to continue in that role.

* * *

Tying together all of these different procedures and possibilities: consider briefly (and not-so-hypothetically) a violent insurrection on the seat of government, by a mob joined or given aid and comfort by various government officials, from a state representative or commissioner to a U.S. Senator to the President himself.[110] From the moment of their participation in the insurrection, those officials would be legally ineligible to hold their offices, thanks to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. How this would play out practically might vary across them. As the state official returned home, he would immediately be subject to state law procedures such as a quo warranto suit.[111] He might be removed by such a suit,[112] or might well choose to resign instead.[113] The Senator might choose to brazen it out, counting on the difficulty in getting together a two-thirds vote to expel him. But if he sought re-election the Senate could and should exclude him by a mere majority vote. As for the hypothetical President, by right he ought to be immediately subject to impeachment and conviction by Congress, and perhaps also a Twenty-fifth Amendment declaration by the Vice President and supported by the cabinet. Even if those things did not happen, if he sought re-election, state election officials around the country would be bound by Section Three in deciding whether to put him on the ballot, even in the primary.

And of course, some of these matters would no doubt promptly find their way into the courts as well. Continuing the example of the presidential candidate, if state officials excluded him from ballot eligibility, he would likely be able to sue in state or federal court to challenge state officials' determination of ineligibility. And if he was not excluded by state officials, voters (at least in some states) might possess the legal right to challenge his eligibility. Either way, such a challenge would present a classic legal case or controversy. It is not difficult to imagine such suit being resolved by courts. Indeed, given the magnitude of the question and its consequences, it is not difficult to imagine such an important case making its way quickly to the U.S. Supreme Court. It would then become the province and duty of the Court to determine and apply the meaning of Section Three.

---

[110] See infra Part IV.C. for further discussion.

[111] For two relevant examples, see NMSA. 1978, sec. 44-3; W.V. Code sec. 53-2-1. In West Virginia, such a claim may be brought "[w]henever the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of any county is satisfied that a cause exists therefor he may, at his own instance, or at the relation of any person interested." Id. 53-2-2. For illustrative applications, see State ex rel. Zickefoose v. West, 145 W. Va. 498, 545 (1960); Wells v. Miller, 237 W. Va. 731 (2016).

[112] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[113] Resignation letter from West Virginia Delegate Derrick Evans to Governor Jim Justice (Jan. 9, 2021), available at https://s3.documentcloud.org/documents/20447012/derrick-evans-resignation-letter.pdf.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three thus functions as a sort of constitutional immune system, mobilizing every official charged with constitutional application to keep those who have fundamentally betrayed the constitutional order from keeping or reassuming power.

C. The Problem of Griffin's Case

A small problem with our view that Section Three is self-executing and immediately operative is that the Chief Justice of the United States said the opposite, almost immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. This was the opinion in Griffin's Case by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, sitting as Circuit Justice in 1869, in one of the first cases to interpret any part of the Amendment. In Griffin's Case, Chief Justice Chase concluded that Section Three is inoperative unless and until Congress passes implementing legislation to carry it into effect.[114] This precedent continues to cast a shadow over Section Three today.[115]

But there is a simple response to this small problem. Griffin's Case is just wrong. It is possible—possible—that its result is correct on an alternate ground, under the so-called de facto officer doctrine, which we will discuss. But Chase's legal reasoning that the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing is unsustainable. Indeed, the more one pulls at his opinion, the more it unravels. We examine it in some detail.[116]

1. Background

Caesar Griffin, a black man, was charged in a Virginia state court with the crime of shooting with the intent to kill. Griffin was tried, convicted, and sentenced to prison. He made no claim that the statute under which he was tried was unconstitutional; nor that he had been subjected to discrimination because of his race; nor that the composition of the jury was improper. As Chase put it: Griffin made "no allegation that the trial was not fairly conducted, or that any discrimination was made against him, either in indictment, trial, or sentence, on account of his color."[117] Nor did Griffin allege that the presiding judge—Judge Hugh W. Sheffey—"did not conduct the trial with fairness and uprightness."[118] Griffin raised just one challenge to the validity of his conviction: that Judge Sheffey (or, one might say, so-called Judge

---

[114] In re Griffin ("Griffin's Case"), 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D.Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) (Chase 364).
[115] See, e.g., Josh Blackman and S. B. Tillman, Opinion, "Only the Feds Could Disqualify Madison Cawthorn and Marjorie Taylor Greene," The New York Times, (Apr. 20, 2022); Tom Ginsburg, Aziz Huq, & David Landau, The Law of Democratic Disqualification, 111 Calif. L. Rev. at 16, 51 (forthcoming 2023) at https://ssrn.com/abstract=3938600.
[116] For other criticism of Griffin's Case, insightful as always, see Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 102-108; Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 9-14.
[117] 11 F. Cas. at 22.
[118] Id. at 22.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Sheffey)[119] was legally disqualified by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment from serving.

The facts relevant to Judge Sheffey were not disputed either. He had taken the oath: Before the Civil War, Hugh Sheffey had been a member of the Virginia state legislature, as far back as 1849. And he had "engaged in" rebellion: After Virginia purported to secede from the Union, Sheffey continued to serve as a member of Virginia's secessionist legislature. In that role, in 1862, he "voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[120] Thus "it is admitted," wrote Chase, that Judge Sheffey "was one of the persons to whom the prohibition to hold office pronounced by the amendment applied."[121]

Griffin had petitioned the U.S. district judge, Judge John Underwood, for a writ of habeas corpus challenging the lawfulness of his custody, which Judge Underwood granted.[122] The sheriff appealed to the circuit court, which was held by Chase as circuit justice.[123]

---

[119] Cf. Will Baude, The deadly serious accusation of being a "so-called judge," Volokh Conspiracy, Wash. Post. (Feb. 4, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2017/02/04/the-deadly-serious-accusation-of-being-a-so-called-judge/ ("[T]o call him a 'so-called' judge is to hint that he is not really a judge, that he lacks judicial power. It is just a hint, but it flirts with a deadly serious issue").

[120] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

[121] Id. at 23.

[122] See Opinion of Judge Underwood in Edward McPherson, The Political History of the United States of America During the Period of Reconstruction (from April 15, 1865, to July 15, 1870), at 462-466 (1875). We are indebted to Myles Lynch for locating this source.

[123] The procedural posture of this and several related cases are extremely confusing and reflect background machinations by both Judge Underwood and Chief Justice Chase: At the time, habeas was apparently available from the district court, or "at chambers," or from the circuit court. If Judge Underwood issued the writ from the district court or at chambers, he could be reviewed by the circuit court, which would include Chief Justice Chase. But if Chief Justice Chase was not present, Judge Underwood could also sit alone as the circuit court. And thanks to a recent statute designed to strip jurisdiction over the anti-Reconstruction suit of Ex parte McCardle, there would be no appeal if Judge Underwood sat as the circuit court. Underwood took this, the unreviewable route, in another habeas case like Griffin's brought by Sally Anderson. Chief Justice Chase then wrote to Underwood with a veiled threat, floating the possibility that a recent statute could be interpreted to deprive Underwood of his ability to hold the circuit court at that time, and encouraging Underwood to hear the cases in the district court or at chambers so that Chase could review him. Underwood obliged. Meanwhile, Virginia also sought an original writ in the Supreme Court to put a stop to Underwood's Section Three docket. The Supreme Court ordered all of the proceedings stayed, and then let Chase go down to the circuit to clean things up, taking no action on the writ. See Charles Fairman, Reconstruction and Reunion at 601-607; Letter from Chase to Underwood (Nov. 19, 1868) in 5 The Salmon P. Chase Papers 285-286 (1998); Letter from Chase to Underwood (Jan. 14, 1869) in id. at 292-293.

This background is briefly alluded to in the synopsis in Griffin's Case which explains that "[a] motion was then made by James Lyons, Esq. in the supreme court of the United States for a writ of prohibition against the district judge, to restrain him from further exercise of such power. The supreme court advised on the motion, and never announced any conclusion, but shortly afterward the chief justice opened the circuit court at Richmond, and immediately called up the appeal in Griffin's Case. This statement is necessary for a full understanding of the pregnancy of the chief justice's statement

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Chase on Section Three

Chase reversed. Here is how he framed the problem: Everybody agreed that Sheffey had been lawfully appointed as a state judge in February 1866, while Virginia was controlled by military reconstruction and the Fourteenth Amendment did not exist.[124] The question was whether ratification of Section Three kicked him out. As Chase put it: "whether upon a sound construction of the amendment, it must be regarded as operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power."[125]

Chase said no, rejecting this as a "literal construction" [126] of Section Three. There is a lot going on in this opinion. Chase included a number of makeweight arguments and asides on topics such as the legal history of West Virginia.[127] But his core argument was that surely Section Three cannot mean what it says: It would have bad consequences, can't possibly have been intended by the ratifiers, and would violate the spirit of the Constitution. As we will explain, these arguments are bad ones. Chase then supplemented them with a shocking claim of a secret Supreme Court ruling in favor of an alternative approach—which was both generally improper, but also further impeached Chase's interpretation of Section Three. All in all, Griffin's Case is a case study in how not to go about the enterprise of faithful constitutional interpretation.

a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" that the supreme court agreed with him as to the decision he rendered in this case." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 7-8. But really, these circumstances are extraordinary. We take them up again below.

---

[124] Id. at 23.

[125] Id. at 18.

[126] Id. at 24.

[127] Chase summarized the intriguing legal history of this Virginia government: When Virginia, by act of its legislature in 1861, purported to secede from the Union, loyal Unionists assembled in convention in Wheeling to organize a new state government. Congress and the Lincoln administration recognized the Wheeling government as the lawful government of Virginia. The Wheeling Virginia government then gave its consent to the creation of a new Wheeling-based state of West Virginia, after which the (Wheeling) Virginia government-in-exile relocated to Alexandria, just across the river from Washington, to serve as the loyal, Union-recognized government of all of what remained as "Virginia." After Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Chase's opinion notes, the "government recognized by the United States was transferred from Alexandria to Richmond" and "became in fact what it was before in law, the government of the whole state." Id. at 18. Judge Sheffey was appointed under the authority of this government. (For the full story – and full formalist legal defense – of the validity of the legal fiction of "Virginia" giving its consent to the creation of a breakaway state of West Virginia, see Vasan Kesavan and Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is West Virginia Unconstitutional? 90 Calif. L. Rev. 291 (2002) For an argument that this aside was actually relevant to Chase's argument, see Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30, discussed infra note 154.)

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The core of Chase's argument was that if Section Three were an immediately operative, self-executing constitutional rule of disqualification, it would have inconvenient consequences in the Reconstruction South. "In the examination of questions of this sort," Chase wrote, "great attention is properly paid to the argument from inconvenience."[128] And here "the argument from inconveniences" was "great" in Chase's estimation— it was "of no light weight."[129]

In several incompletely reconstructed Southern governments, many offices were in fact held by former oath-breaking rebels.[130] If Section Three were automatically operative, it would have immediately barred all such men from office. (Indeed.) Yet, Chase argued, many such disqualified persons in fact had not vacated their offices but instead continued to exercise authority under those offices notwithstanding the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. To give Section Three immediate effect would thus upset the apple cart in a fairly major way. "No sentence, no judgment, no decree, no acknowledgement of a deed, no record of a deed, no sheriff's or commissioner's sale—in short no official act—is of the least validity."[131] Chase found this unthinkable: "It is impossible to measure the evils which such a construction would add to the calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these [Southern] states."[132]

Chase went on: not only did Section Three impose great "inconveniences" and "calamities," it was unfairly punitive—ungraciously ousting once-lawfully-appointed officers from their offices—and ostensibly inconsistent with the "spirit" of prior constitutional principles, concerning due process, bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.[133] And besides, the specific remedy sought—vacating Griffin's conviction—only worked mischief, because it did not even seek the literal removal of Judge Sheffey from office. Put these things together and you have Chase's interpretive driver: "Surely," Chase continued, "a construction which fails to accomplish the main purpose of the amendment, and yet necessarily works the mischief and inconveniences which have been described, and is repugnant to the first principles of justice and right embodied in other provisions of the constitution, is not to be favored, if any other reasonable construction can be found."[134]

---

[128] 11 F. Cas. at 24.
[129] Id. at 25.
[130] Chase also suggested that the problem was not completely limited to the Southern governments. Id. at 25 (observing that "[i]t is well known that many persons, engaged in the late Rebellion, have emigrated to states which adhered to the national government . . ." and that "it is not to be doubted that not a few among them" had previously taken a covered oath, and that "[p]robably some of these persons" had subsequently been elected to office).
[131] Id. at 25. Of course, Chase would undercut this conclusion later in the opinion. See infra Part II.C.
[132] 11 F. Cas. at 25.
[133] More on this point presently, Part II.C.2.c, and again Part III.
[134] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chase tried to funnel these policy arguments into a rule of constitutional construction: "the argument from inconvenience."[135] This argument "it is true, can not prevail over plain words or clear reason," Chase acknowledged.[136] "But, on the other hand," he wrote, "a construction which must necessarily occasion great public and private mischief, must never be preferred to a construction which will occasion neither, or neither in so great a degree, unless the terms of the instrument absolutely require such preference."[137]

This is not an unreasonable principle, as interpretive canons go. When confronted with two plausible interpretations of genuinely ambiguous, unclear text, one of which would produce manifestly jarring results, the less jarring interpretation is more likely the correct one. As James Madison said in his famous speech against the national bank: "Where a meaning is clear, the consequences, whatever they may be, are to be admitted—where doubtful, it is fairly triable by its consequences."[138] Or as Chief Justice Marshall said in United States v. Fisher: "where great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain; in which case it must be obeyed."[139] But Chase's canon was noticeably more aggressive: The supposedly more disruptive reading must "never be preferred" unless the text's terms "absolutely require" such preference.[140] That is putting not just a thumb on the scale, but a whole hand.

But that is not the real problem with Chase's analysis. The real problem was how Chase applied these principles to Section Three.

First, Chase was too quick—far too quick—to dismiss the "literal" reading of the "terms of the instrument" as meaning exactly what they seem to say. As discussed above, the language of Section Three's prohibition on office holding is clear and direct; it is hardly doubtful at all. It takes considerable effort to impute any ambiguity to the text and Chase's opinion does not even undertake that effort. Instead, the opinion assumes its own conclusion—that the text's language is somehow insufficiently clear to justify applying the "literal" meaning of its words. Indeed, even on Chase's own hyper-strict standard, the words of Section Three do "absolutely require" the conclusion that it, on its own, disqualifies covered rebels from office.

Second, Chase was too ready—far too ready—to find that following the ("literal") language of the document would produce (what Chase considered to be) great "inconveniences" or "mischief"— indeed, increase "calamities" already visited upon the South. Chase emphasized the breadth of Section Three's language: it applied in

---

[135] Id. at 24.
[136] Id. at 24.
[137] Id. at 24.
[138] James Madison, Speech on Feb. 2, 1791, reprinted in Legislative and Documentary History of the Bank of the United States 39, 40 (photo. reprint 2008)
[139] United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch (6 U.S.) 358, 386 (1805)
[140] 11 F. Cas. at 24 (emphasis added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

all the states, not just the former Confederacy (so?); it applied beyond the context of Civil War but included aiding enemies in a foreign war (so?); it would apply in terms to immediately disqualify men for acts done long ago, for example in the Mexican War (so?); it would apply "to all persons in the category" and "for all time, present and future" (so?). And, taken seriously, this broad rule would, as noted, "annul all official acts" performed by disqualified officers, including judges. (Would it?)

For Chase, all this seemed to border on the shocking—a parade of horribles demanding the search for an alternative construction of Section Three. But why? Because it might have a broad effect? Because it adopted a new rule of constitutional law superseding prior law? Because it would have removed immediately a substantial number of former-oath-swearing-officeholders-turned-rebels from positions of power? Because it could have the effect of invalidating their unauthorized, lawless actions? Chase's parade of horribles assumes, without argument, the correctness of his own apparent policy prejudices.[141]

Now Chase did attempt to groom these prejudices into more plausible legal arguments, which we will get to in a moment. But because these arguments from inconvenience are the heart of Chase's opinion, and because we still see these kinds of arguments repeated today, we pause to emphasize that this is not how judging is supposed to work, even if it too often does.

Chase's construe-to-avoid-the-force-of-constitutional-language-whose-policy-consequences-you-dislike approach to constitutional interpretation is simply wrong. Judges do not get to rewrite constitutional provisions they find objectionable on policy grounds. Relatedly, judges do not get to make up new provisions of law in order to devise policy "solutions" to texts they don't like. Chase's opinion imposed, as a solution to textual literalism and its real and imagined policy inconveniences, a different kind of constitutional provision, one more like the Impeachment Clause and the Treason Clause. Put bluntly, Chase made up law that was not there in order to change law that was there but that he did not like.

b. The argument from "the intention of the people"

In places, Chase raises the inconvenience argument as an inquiry into the "intent" of the Framers: "What was the intention of the people of the United States in adopting the fourteenth amendment? What is the true scope and purpose of the prohibition to hold office contained in the third section?"[142] This at least sounds kind of like the question a judge should be asking—the original meaning of the constitutional

---

[141] As Judge Underwood had put it: "Whatever inconvenience may result from the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws, I think the experience of the last few years shows that much greater inconvenience comes from attempting their overthrow." Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 122, at 465.

[142] 11 F.Cas. at 24.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

provision adopted by We The People and binding on those who interpret it. But in fact it conceals still more sleight of hand.

First and foremost, Chase's framing of the interpretive question commits a classic blunder: swapping in original intent for original meaning. In our constitutional system, law is made by enacting texts, not by searching for the unenacted wishes of lawmakers.[143] And whatever evidence Chase might have that the consequences of Section Three were unintended by some of those who voted for it, he had no evidence that these consequences were not entailed by what they voted for.

Second, however dubious it is to look to original intent over original meaning generally, it is especially dicey to do so in the case of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in unusual, exigent circumstances. In Congress, the Amendment represented a compromise between different Republican factions, some much more radical than the others. And in the states, where ratification made it law, the Amendment depended on the ratification votes of the southern states, who were pressured—some might say "coerced"—to ratify the Amendment as the price of regaining their representation in Congress.[144] Even if one accepts this process as lawful (which we do) it is obvious that it means one must cast a skeptical eye on stories about the supposed "intent" of those who ratified it, especially in the South. It may well be that some of the ratifiers had their fingers crossed behind their backs and intended to give the Amendment as little effect and as little quarter as they could get away with. But so what? What matters is what they did, in one of the highest-stakes moments of constitutional law making in American history. By diminishing the plain scope of the Amendment's text, Chase was succumbing to this kind of anti-constitutional subversion.

Third and finally, all of Chase's evidence of this supposed intent just boils down to the inconvenience argument we have just discussed. And as discussed above, this is why one must be especially careful with judges who invoke the supposed "intent" of a written text. When meaning is uncertain, it is permissible to give a slight edge to the interpretation that is more likely to match what its authors were trying to do. But it is easy for a judge to use this principle as an excuse for reading into the text

---

[143] See supra notes 9-14, sources cited there, and accompanying text.

[144] See generally, John Harrison, The Lawfulness of the Reconstruction Amendments, 68 U. Chi. L. Rev. 375, 461 (2001). For arguments that Congress's requiring states' ratification as condition of restored representation was entirely lawful and appropriate, see id; Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 127, at 329; Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 364-380, see especially id. at 376-378. There is a different argument for ratification, the "loyal denominator" theory, in which the southern states were unnecessary for ratification. See Christopher R. Green, Loyal Denominatorism and the Fourteenth Amendment: Normative Defense and Implications, 13 Duke J. Const. L. & Pub. Pol'y 167, 168 (2017); Christopher R. Green, The History of the Loyal Denominator, 79 La. L. Rev. 47, 48 (2018). One of us has rejected this theory in prior writing, Michael Stokes Paulsen, A General Theory of Article V: The Constitutional Lessons of the Twenty-Seventh Amendment, 103 Yale L.J. 677, 709 (1993); see also Amar, supra note 4, at 378-380, and the other of us is inclined in the same direction.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

his own views of what the law should be. After all, the authors of the provision were reasonable people, trying to do reasonable things, and, I, the judge, am also reasonable, so surely if I don't like this result, they wouldn't have liked this result, and therefore it must not be the result. To write it down this way would give up the game, but it is too easy to think it. Chase's use of original intent is makeweight at best, and a trick at worst.

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law

The "inconveniences" and "calamities" that, surely, were not intended by the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment were Chase's main arguments. But he had a bit more to say. There was "another principle, which in determining the construction of this amendment, is entitled to equal consideration."

> Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of an amendment of a public act, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general terms and spirit of the act amended. This principle forbids a construction of the amendment, not clearly required by its terms, which will bring it into conflict or discord with the other provisions of the constitution.[145]

What was the supposed conflict between Section Three and the rest of the Constitution? Chase fretted that Section Three was a penal enactment, imposing punishment without trial on secessionists, and thus in tension with the spirit of earlier provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process:

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once and without trial, deprives a whole class of persons of offices held by them, for cause, however grave. It is true that no limit can be imposed on the people when exercising their sovereign power in amending their own constitution of government. But it is a necessary presumption that the people in the exercise of that power, seek to confirm and improve, rather than to weaken and impair the general spirit of the constitution.[146]

Thus, Chase concluded, Section Three should not be read as accomplishing disqualification of its own force.

---

[145] 11 F.Cas. at 25.
[146] Id. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Now once again, the interpretive rule Chase is formulating here is not totally crazy. But it is a warped version of the real thing. As we discuss at length in the next part: It is true that repeals by implication are disfavored, and this principle applies to constitutional law. But at the same time, constitutional amendments change things, and when an amendment is inconsistent with prior constitutional rules, ultimately it is the amendment that controls. If a new provision fairly can be harmonized with prior law—where there is no true conflict—the provisions should be read harmoniously.[147] But where new language in fact changes old law, by clear terms or necessary logical effect, the greater error is to deny such change out of undue attachment to the former legal regime.

This greater error is exactly what Chase did. Chase leaned very heavily—too heavily—on the rule against implied repeals, ratcheting it up to "forbid[]" readings of a text "not clearly required" by its terms, that would "bring it into conflict or disaccord" with other provisions of the Constitution.[148] Each leaning is wrong. Repeals by implication may be disfavored; but repeals, made in terms or by necessary logical implication, are not presumptively forbidden. Nor does new language changing old provisions require such extraordinary clarity as Chase would have it. The true question is whether the language and logic of a new provision really does present a conflict with prior law. And the idea that constitutional amendments should presumptively be read so as not to change the Constitution (!)—that they should be construed to avoid conflict or even mere disaccord with prior constitutional law—is indefensible. Of course constitutional amendments change prior constitutional law. That is their purpose and function. Now, that doesn't warrant reading them to change more than they really do. But a presumption that constitutional amendments should be read to change as little as possible makes no sense.

Finally, this part of Chase's argument took a puzzling turn that is worth noting. In one of many strange asides, Chase noted the possibility that Section Three had implicitly repealed the Treason Clause: "in the judgment of some enlightened jurists, the legal effect" of Section Three's imposition of a new prohibition on officeholding for rebels and insurrectionists "was to remit all other punishments" for treason.[149] If anything this seemed to hurt Chase's argument against self-execution, because it emphasized that Section Three could change the pre-existing constitutional rules. And at the same time this supposedly enlightened argument was also bonkers. The enactment of a constitutional rule of disqualification from office does not remotely suggest a supersession or repeal of criminal-law punishment for treason. And if it did it would have the perverse effect of leaving Confederates who had not previously taken a constitutional oath subject to the death penalty, while previous office holders avoided all criminal punishment except the officeholding ban.[150]

---

[147] See infra, Part III.
[148] 11 F. Cas. at 25 (emphasis added).
[149] Id. at 26.
[150] See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 92, 95 (C.C.D. Va. 1867).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So why did Chase bring it up? Who were these "enlightened jurists" who imagined such a thing? The answer is . . . Chase himself! He had asserted precisely this wacky construction of Section Three's effect on the criminal penalty for treason—and quietly suggested the argument to defense counsel—in the federal criminal treason prosecution of Jefferson Davis just two years earlier.[151] Even Davis's lawyers had been puzzled by the argument, and wondered if it was some sort of trick, and it seems likely that Chase had complex political motivations in proposing it at the time.[152] This argument was tendentious then, and weirdly irrelevant in Griffin's Case. But it is a helpful reminder that Chief Justice Chase was not shooting straight in his applications of Section Three.

d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power

Having flailed to avoid the natural reading of Section Three, Chase finally offered his alternative, "reasonable construction":

> For in the very nature of things, it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate. To accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcement of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable; and these can only be provided by Congress. Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.' [sic] … The fifth section qualifies the third to the same extent as it would if the whole amendment consisted of these two sections.[153]

Section Five "qualifies" Section Three. Of course, this proves too much. Taken seriously, it would suggest that Section Five likewise "qualifies" Section One and renders its commands—birthright citizenship, privileges or immunities, due process, and equal protection—inoperative until enforced by congressional legislation. It would imply that Section One had no self-executing legal effect, which has never been the law. It also proves too little. It is true, perhaps, that carrying a legal prohibition into practical effect in actual situations frequently will involve, necessarily, actions by persons and institutions charged with applying that prohibition as law in the course

---

[151] Id. See Magliocca. Amnesty, supra note 5, at 100-102; Cynthia Nicoletti, Secession on Trial: The Treason Prosecution of Jefferson Davis 293-300 (2017).

[152] Nicoletti suggests—and she is not making this up—that either Chase was gunning for the Democratic nomination for President, or that this was a bank shot to get southern whites to accept the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, by arranging for the Amendment to benefit them. Id. at 293-296.

[153] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of performing their assigned duties. But as noted above there is no reason why "proceedings" and "decisions" and "enforcement" with respect to Section Three's commands may not be conducted and carried out by these various state and federal actors, exercising their usual authority with respect to such matters.[154] It is simply not true that "these can only be provided by Congress." Congress can provide them. But so can many others. Indeed, that is just what Judge Underwood was trying to accomplish in Griffin's Case, until Chase stopped him.

Chase's tendentious construction of Section Three has gone on to a surprisingly serious career as a precedent. But it simply does not hold up as an original matter. But that is not even the weirdest thing about Griffin's Case.

3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum

Chase concluded his discussion of Section Three this way: "After the most careful consideration, therefore, I find myself constrained to the conclusion that Hugh W. Sheffey had not been removed from the office of judge at the time of the trial and sentence of the petitioner; and that the sentence of the circuit court of Rockbridge county was lawful."[155]

By Chase's logic, such as it was, that should have been the final line of his opinion. But strangely, Chase was not actually done. He then launched into the weirdest part of his opinion, a sort of half-dictum, half-advisory opinion that cast further doubt on all that had come before:

> In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine the question relating to the effect of the sentence of a judge de facto, exercising the office with the color, but without the substance of right. It is proper to say, however, that I should have no difficulty in sustaining the custody of the sheriff under sentence of a court held by such a judge. . . .
>
> This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term, with reference to this and kindred cases in this district, and I am authorized to say that they unanimously concur in the opinion that a person convicted by a judge de facto acting under

---

[154] Magliocca also suggests that in the specific situation in Griffin's Case, state law may have been "unavailable for enforcement" of Section Three because "Virginia was an unreconstructed state and thus lacked the ordinary powers of a state" and "because Virginia did not yet recognize the Fourteenth Amendment's legitimacy" – in contrast with states such as North Carolina. Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30. We are not sure whether this is giving Chase too much credit or not, but regardless, these points would obviously not hold today, where state law is fully available in every state of the union.

[155] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> color of office, though not de jure, and detained in custody in pursuance of his sentence, can not be properly discharged upon habeas corpus.[156]

What is going on here? Chase describes an alternate ground for the case—"a judge de facto acting under color of office," which we would now call the "de facto officer doctrine"—explains that it is unnecessary to decide it, but then also explains that he would "have no difficulty" resolving the case on that alternate ground, and also that the rest of the Supreme Court agrees with him. It is hard to make sense of this part of Chase's opinion, but the more one digs in to it the more dubious the whole opinion becomes.

First of all, notice that what Chase says here fatally undercuts his earlier arguments about Section Three. The heart of Chase's argument was that a self-executing Section Three would have calamitous consequences that could not possibly have been intended. But here Chase says that even an illegally appointed officer can be a "de facto" officer whose acts are treated as valid for purposes of a habeas claim. If Chase believed this claim about the de facto officer doctrine, then his earlier claim about the consequences was overblown. The de facto officer doctrine would limit or eliminate the supposedly calamitous consequences and allow Section Three to be given its more natural interpretation in other situations. On its own terms, then, this dictum is colossally self-defeating.[157]

Indeed, if Chase's extensive dictum about Section Three made it "unnecessary" to resolve the de facto officer doctrine, the same was equally true in reverse. Accepting Chase's conclusion about the de facto officer doctrine would have made his erroneous disquisition on Section Three completely unnecessary. The criticisms sometimes levelled against the chief justices who wrote the famous (or infamous) opinions in Marbury v. Madison, and Dred Scott v. Sandford, for having reached out to decide, gratuitously, unnecessarily, and improperly, grand questions of constitutional law,[158] fall far more heavily upon the head of Chief Justice Chase for his opinion in Griffin's Case.

Even stranger, Chase represented that the full Supreme Court unanimously agreed with him that on the de facto officer question. "This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term," Chase asserted, "with

---

[156] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[157] Accord, Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 11 n.25.

[158] See, e.g., Letter from Thomas Jefferson to William Johnson (June 12, 1823) ("This practice of Judge Marshall, of travelling out of his case to prescribe what the law would be in a moot case not before the court, is very irregular and very censurable.") https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Jefferson/98-01-02-3562; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Worst Constitutional Decision of All Time, 78 Notre Dame L. Rev. 995, 1011-12 & n.39 (2003); Baude, Judgment Power, 96 Geo. L.J. 1807, 1823-24 (2008).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reference to this and kindred cases in this district."[159] The full Court had apparently decided the de facto officer question, in secret, without having announced the fact in any case decision or written opinion,[160] in some form of advisory preemptive appellate jurisdiction!?

To be sure, judicial norms were looser back then, but the whole thing was highly irregular even by the standards of the day. Charles Fairman, whose account defends the whole affair as an urgent workaround to stop Judge Underwood, nonetheless acknowledges that "[i]t was most unusual to hear a Justice on circuit declare that he was authorized to announce the opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court on a matter pending in the Circuit Court."[161] Fairman further acknowledges technical problems with this maneuver, because the only issue in front of the full Court was an original writ of prohibition in Ex Parte State of Virginia, where the Court had granted a stay despite manifest procedural flaws.[162] Somehow the Court's non-ruling in a dubious vehicle became a second-hand advisory opinion on a legal question of great importance. The criticisms levelled today at the shenanigans allegedly perpetrated on the Supreme Court's "shadow docket,"[163] fall much more heavily and justifiably on the heads of the Reconstruction justices.

And to return to this point once more, even if we accept this whole problematic advisory opinion, it simultaneously undermines the other part of Chase's decision—his interpretation of Section Three. As Chase described it, there were two alternative ways to resolve the case—one massive constitutional question, and the other a more modest procedural question. Chase claimed that the whole Supreme Court had authorized him to issue a secondhand advisory opinion on the procedural question, an opinion adequate to resolve the Judge Underwood situation. But Chase ignored his colleagues' apparent preference and resolved the case on massive constitutional grounds instead—grounds that he did not claim were endorsed by the rest of the Court. Is there any justification for his doing so other than a personal power grab?

All of this is without taking a view on the merits of the de facto officer question. This, we think, is not as obvious as Chase (and apparently his colleagues) made it out

---

[159] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[160] The Court's one recorded public statement on the matter was a statement from Justice Nelson in the original writ of prohibition case, Ex Parte State of Virginia, that Chief Justice Chase had "informed the court that before the pending motion for prohibition was made, he signified to the district judge his dissent" and that Chase was going to "direct that this division of opinion . . . be certified to this court." Ex parte State of Virginia No. 11, 1868 WL 10951, 19 L. Ed. 153 (1868); Fairman, supra note 123, at 606. That statement did not state the Court's view on the division, and seemed to anticipate that the Justices would deliberate on the issue later in the more ordinary course – not deputize the Chief Justice to go deliver some secret verdict in their stead.

[161] Fairman, supra note 123, at 607.

[162] Id.

[163] Stephen Vladeck, The Shadow Docket: How the Supreme Court Uses Stealth Rulings to Amass Power and Undermine the Republic (2023); William Baude, Foreword: The Supreme Court's Shadow Docket, 9 N.Y.U. J. L. & Lib. 1 (2015).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to be. True, American and English history was full of many statements about the valid acts of "de facto" officers and even specifically judges.[164] But many of these statements could not be taken to their logical extreme in our constitutional system, and indeed, at the founding the Supreme Court had refused to accept the actions of several de facto judges in the saga surrounding Hayburn's Case.[165]

How to reconcile these principles is a difficult question. One possibility, stated in some of the cases, is that an unlawful, but de facto, officer's acts can be questioned directly, and on direct review, but not "collaterally."[166] On this possibility, maybe the de facto officer doctrine was a defense to claims like habeas—the procedural vehicle in Griffin's Case—because habeas was a collateral attack.[167] Habeas could not be used as a substitute for a writ of error, where the challenge would have been properly raised.

But another possibility is that the de facto officer doctrine protects only technical and ordinary legal defects in an officer's appointment, not fundamental inability to exercise power, as when that power is forbidden by the Constitution.[168] On this possibility, Judge Sheffey's acts were inherently void, and thus everything he did fell outside of his court's jurisdiction.[169] The de facto officer arguments in Griffin's Case—and thus the correct legal fate of Caesar Griffin—turn on these technicalities.[170] Indeed, these technicalities were argued by the parties and they were the main subject

---

[164] For many citations, see Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 18-21 (argument of counsel). For more, see also Reply and Response Brief for the United States, Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius (Nos. 18-1334, 18-1475, 18-1496, 18-1514, 18-15121) 20190919201613217_18-1334rbUnitedStates.pdf (supremecourt.gov) at 27-47; and Calcutt v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 37 F.4th 293, 342-45 (6th Cir. 2022) (Murphy, J., dissenting).

[165] Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 12 (discussing Yale Todd).

[166] For statements like this, see Ball v. United States, 140 U.S. 118, 128-129 (1891) ("was judge de facto if not de jure, and his acts as such are not open to collateral attack."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 909, 910, 919 (1963); but see id. at 910 & n. 9 (suggesting that a suit is collateral whenever the officer "is not a party," including on "writ of error").

[167] All three cases cited by Chase in Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 27, can be characterized this way. Taylor v. Skrine, 5 S.C.L. 516, 3 Brev. 516 (1815) deals with a writ of execution and observes that "no objections were made to his authority at the time the decree was given." State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521 (1863) relies entirely on In re Boyle 9 Wis. 264 (1859) which is a habeas case holding that the "right to hold the offices cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding of this kind," id. at 267. And People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184., 187 (1860) distinguishes a "direct proceeding" from one where the doctrine applied.

[168] For statements like this, see McDowell v. United States, 159 U.S. 596, 598 (1895) ("presents a mere matter of statutory construction . . . . It involves no trespass upon the executive power of appointment."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, at 918 (discussing Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962)).

[169] But see In re Boyle, cited supra note 167 (distinguishing "the jurisdiction of the court, which may always be inquired into; it is an inquiry into the right of the judge to hold his office, which is a question entirely distinct from that of the jurisdiction of the court over the offence").

[170] In the Supreme Court's most recent de facto officer doctrine case, Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177 (1995), it split the difference, holding the doctrine inapplicable because the case was on direct

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Judge Underwood's opinion below.[171] Chief Justice Chase could have turned his considerable powers to them, had he not been busy knee-capping the Fourteenth Amendment instead.

* * *

There is little to be said in defense of Griffin's Case, but much to be learned from it. The very weakness of its arguments; the obviously result-oriented nature of its legal analysis; and the inconsistency of its conclusion with Section Three's language, end up confirming the core conclusion in this section: Section Three's disqualification of designated persons from office is a self-executing constitutional command that requires nothing more to have immediate legal force.

III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions

Our third proposition is logically and methodologically straightforward but perhaps unsettling in some of its implications: Section Three trumps the earlier parts of the Constitution—to the extent there is a true conflict between them.

As noted above, one of Chief Justice Chase's arguments against enforcing Section Three was that it conflicted (he thought) with prior constitutional norms—of due process, prospectivity, fairness, and so on.[172] Even for those who do not put the claim in so many words, we suspect that they might share a similar intuition—there is something about Section Three, taken seriously, that seems harsh, unforgiving, undemocratic, unAmerican (?), even . . . unconstitutional(!?). If so, it might seem to follow that somebody (judges?) should tame Section Three.

This is an understandable instinct. But it is wrong: dead wrong. We think the conflict with prior constitutional rules is overstated—more feel than real. But to the extent the conflict is real, Section Three wins the face-off.

Constitutional amendments change the Constitution. It thus should be unsurprising—indeed, it is in the very nature of constitutional amendments—that such new provisions, when added to the Constitution, supersede, displace, qualify, adjust, correct, or simply must be considered to satisfy earlier constitutional rules, to the extent of any actual conflict between them. Simply put: a constitutional amendment review and the challenge was constitutional. In the more recent case of Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius, 140 S. Ct. 1649, 1666 (2020), it avoided the issue because it found the appointments lawful.

---

[171] See Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 122, at 463-466.

[172] See supra Part III.C.2.c.; see also Ginsburg, Huq, & Landau, supra note 115, at 18 (suggesting that a self-executing interpretation, "while in harmony with the original operation of Section 3, raises due process and perhaps bill of attainder concerns" and for that reason an "alternative, more plausible construction gives Congress authority to determine how Section 3 is enforced").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

supersedes prior law precisely to the extent that it departs from the prior rules. This general maxim of interpretation applies to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment the same as it applies to any other constitutional amendment provision. If the original textual meaning of Section Three's terms, understood in their natural sense and accounting for any terms of art or specialized usages of words, departs from or alters prior constitutional understandings, that new constitutional language must be given full effect and priority over earlier provisions.

These basic principles of conflicting legal provisions were astutely captured by Alexander Hamilton, writing as Publius in The Federalist Number 78. "It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression," Hamilton wrote. When this occurs, the courts must determine the "meaning and operation" of the two provisions.

Hamilton articulated two principles for doing so, which work as a complementary pair. "So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done"—there's the first of the pair, but Hamilton's sentence does not end there, but instead pauses only ever-so-briefly, with a semi-colon, before proceeding to the second rule of the pair: "where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first." This was, Hamilton continued, "a mere rule of construction," but it was an appropriate one, "consonant to truth and propriety," consistently recognized by courts as interpreters of law: that, as "between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference."[173]

Hamilton went on, more famously, to explain that a different interpretive principle governed the interfering acts of a superior and a subordinate authority—and proceeded to derive the proposition customarily called "judicial review."[174] But that is not the interpretive question here. Here, the key point is precisely Hamilton's lead-in proposition: that, as between "interfering" acts of equal legal stature—the paradigm being two statutes, adopted by the same legislature, at different times—the last in time prevails to the extent of any true, irreconcilable conflict. As with statutes adopted by the same legislative authority at different times, so with constitutional provisions adopted by the same authority at different times and possessing the same

---

[173] See The Federalist No. 78 (I. Kramnick ed. 1987) at 439 (Hamilton). These rules were well-established in American and English law. Caleb Nelson, Preemption, 86 Va. L. Rev. 225, 235-244 (2000)

[174] See The Federalist No. 78, supra note 173, at 439-440 (Hamilton) ("But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal status: By the terms of Article V, constitutional amendments are "valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution," when adopted.[175] Thus, where We, the People, have adopted a new constitutional text "interfering" with or departing from prior constitutional provisions, the last-in-time enacted prevails to the extent of any conflict. That is the interpretive principle that governs the relationship between new constitutional language and old language from which it departs.

Actual constitutional examples of these principles abound. The entire Bill of Rights in a sense qualifies, or limits, the original Constitution's grant of enumerated powers—to the extent of a conflict between those powers and the subsequently enumerated rights.[176] Likewise, the Eleventh Amendment qualifies Article III's extension of the federal judicial power to various cases and controversies. To the extent the Eleventh Amendment changes what Article III may originally have provided, the amendment supersedes that prior law.[177]

Much of the time, new amendments can be harmonized with what came before them. Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment's grant of "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article"[178] does not preempt, for example, the Due Process Clause or the Cruel or Unusual Punishments Clause. It does not allow Congress to punish civil rights violations through summary tortures without trial. Similarly, Section Five does not preempt the Veto Clause; it can and should be read together with Article I, to require "appropriate legislation" to go through the preexisting lawmaking process.[179] A new amendment does not ignore the legal system that it amends.

On the other hand, other parts of the Reconstruction Amendments did conflict sharply with prior constitutional norms, and they displaced them precisely to that extent. Consider the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery—a dramatic and particularly obvious illustration of the point that new constitutional language supersedes and repudiates old constitutional language, to the extent of any conflict. The Thirteenth Amendment's abolition of slavery implicitly but necessarily overrides and extinguishes the Fugitive Slave Clause and any other provision of the original Constitution that protected the institution of slavery to the full logical extent of inconsistency with the amendment's flat ban. Similarly, Section Two of the Fourteenth Amendment supersedes and displaces the Constitution's original apportionment

---

[175] U.S. Const. art. V.

[177] Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 624-25; cf. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 21 (1890) (Harlan, J., concurring).

[177] Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 624-25; cf. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 21 (1890) (Harlan, J., concurring).

[178] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 5.

[179] See William Baude, Sovereign Immunity and the Constitutional Text, 103 Va. L. Rev. 1, 19 (2017) (offering the examples in this paragraph).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

rules including the notorious Three-fifths Clause.[180] Because the two rules conflict in substance, the amendment prevails over the Constitution's original language.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is in the same family. In most respects, Section Three can be easily harmonized with other parts of the Constitution, such as Article I's Speech or Debate Clause, Article I and II's impeachment provisions, Article II's process of presidential selection, Article III's requirement of a case or controversy, and so on. As we have discussed, Section Three's new constitutional qualification for office is enforced in the same way as other constitutional qualifications for office, and is easily reconciled with existing constitutional rules.

But there are a few constitutional provisions that have been alleged to conflict with Section Three. If and when this is the case, just as any later-enacted constitutional provision supersedes or modifies an earlier-enacted constitutional provisions with which the new provision conflicts, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment logically qualifies and, where the language so compels the conclusion, overrides prior constitutional rules.[181]

Thus, we think all this follows: To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides any limitations otherwise imposed by the Bill of Attainder Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three also overrides limitations imposed by the Ex post Facto Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three likewise overrides—or simply satisfies—prior constitutional requirements of due process of law.

Finally—and this example might present more difficult questions—to the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides, supersedes, or satisfies the free speech principles reflected in the First Amendment. That is: Whatever the

---

[180] See U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2; U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 3. By itself, the Thirteenth Amendment also already rendered the Three-fifths Clause a null set. Section Two then dealt with the injustice of letting the South claim a massive increase in political power for its disenfranchised black population.

[181] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this conclusion as well. Opponents of Section Three characterized it as directly imposing retroactive punishment, thus contradicting principles of due process and principles against bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. at 2915 (Sen. Doolittle) (complaining that Section Three was an "ex post facto provision, a bill of attainder"); id. at 2890 (Sen. Cowen) (bill of attainder); id. at App 241 (Sen. Davis) (Section Three "is in the nature of both a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law"); id. at 2940 (Sen. Hendricks) (ex post facto); id. at 2916; see also id. at 2467 (Rep. Boyer) (criticizing earlier version of Section Three as "a bill of attainder or ex post facto law"). These charges were generally premised on the view – with which proponents of the amendment evidently agreed, see id. at 3036 (Sen. Henderson) – that Section Three would preempt these earlier rules to the extent of a direct conflict. Though at one point Senator Davis did make the wild suggestion that Section Three might itself exceed Congress's power to propose amendments to the Constitution. Id. at App. 241 ("The framers of the Constitution did not intend to invest, and have not in fact conferred on Congress the power to initiate alterations of it which would revolutionize the Government formed by it"); see also id. at 3146. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-31, 36-37 (documenting this history).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

correct meaning of Section Three as applied to conspiracies, attempts, incitements, and advocacy that meet the description of "engag[ing] in insurrection or rebellion" or of giving of "aid or comfort" to enemies of the constitutional government of the United States, the constitutional meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment modifies or qualifies what otherwise might have been thought the dictates of the First Amendment.

In the end, we think that these various prior provisions can mostly be read harmoniously with Section Three. Reason and common sense suggest they should be read consistently with one another to the extent fairly possible; and it is, for the most part, fairly possible to do so. But to the legitimate extent of any conflict or tension, Section Three controls over the Bill of Attainder Clause, the Ex Post Facto Clause, the Due Process Clause, and the First Amendment.

The first three are easy.

A. Bills of Attainder

A bill of attainder is the legislative infliction of punishment on specific people without a trial.[182] It is a violation of both the separation of powers and individual rights because it short-circuits the normal adjudication of guilt or innocence. But Section Three is neither a bill nor an attainder. It is not a "bill"—that is, an enactment of the legislature. Rather, it is an enactment of The People as supreme constitutional law. And it is not an "attainder" either—in that it is not at all clear that it inflicts punishment, because disqualification from office is not necessarily or exclusively a form of punishment. For instance, the Twenty-second Amendment is surely not inflicting a "punishment" when it precludes the President from running for a third term.[183] Moreover, Section Three does not inflict it on specified persons or groups, but rather on anybody who has committed a described course of conduct.

To be sure, Supreme Court precedent has read the Bill of Attainder Clauses more broadly, both in a pair of 20th-century "red scare" cases[184] and perhaps more relevantly in a pair of immediate post-Civil War-era loyalty cases: In Cummings v. Missouri[185] and Ex Parte Garland,[186] the Supreme Court invalidated state and federal oath requirements that required an "Ironclad Oath" from anybody holding a range of positions, both public and private. That oath was really a past-loyalty-requirement, requiring people to swear that they had not supported the confederacy or

---

[182] See generally Anthony Dick, The Substance of Punishment Under the Bill of Attainder Clause, 63 Stan. L. Rev. 1177 (2011).
[183] U.S. Const. amdt. XXII. But see Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. 277, 320 (1866) ("Disqualification from office many be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment.").
[184] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437 (1965); United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946).
[185] 71 U.S. 277 (1866).
[186] 71 U.S. 333 (1866).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the like.[187] The Court concluded that these requirements were effectively bills of attainder—and also ex post facto laws—and held them unconstitutional.

Even if one takes these precedents at face value it does not follow that Section Three would similarly be a bill of attainder. First, the "Ironclad Oath" laws had a broader scope than Section Three: Garland dealt with bar membership, and concluded that "exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct."[188] Similarly, the plaintiff in Cummings was a Catholic priest forbidden from preaching.[189] Neither case dealt with a more focused exclusion from constitutional office. Indeed, the majority opinion emphasized this fact, explicitly noting that neither case involved qualifications for public office.[190] Second, because both cases focused on the retroactive effect of the laws,[191] neither case's reasoning would seem applicable to Section Three in post-Civil-War insurrections and rebellions—which of course are the only insurrections and rebellions to which Section Three still applies.[192]

And in any event we doubt that one should take these precedents at face value. First of all, if we had to take sides, we might well be inclined to say that Garland at least may have been wrong, for reasons stated in dissent by Justice Miller (joined by three other justices, including, perhaps somewhat ironically given his later position in Griffin, Chief Justice Chase).[193] Second, and more fundamentally, if constitutional amendments can change the Constitution, a fortiori they can change judicial interpretations (and misinterpretations) of the Constitution. That is of course what Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment famously did with respect to Dred Scott, what the Eleventh Amendment did with respect to Chisholm, and so on.[194] In short, the Court's interpretation of the Bill of Attainder Clause was a stretch, and regardless, it does not stretch far enough to change or limit the meaning of Section Three.

B. Ex Post Facto Laws

---

[187] For much more detailed discussion of the federal "Ironclad Oath" see infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[188] Garland, 71 U.S. at 377.
[189] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 319.
[190] Garland, 71 U.S. at 378.
[191] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 327 ("They are aimed at past acts, and not future acts."); Garland, at 377 ("In the exclusion which the statute adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed").
[192] See supra Part I.B.
[193] Garland, 71 U.S. at 382. Cummings presents a trickier case, as it might involve complicating questions of state power to interfere with religious liberty and church autonomy (albeit before ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment) and an especially weak case for the relevance of past loyalty to engaging in religious occupation.
[194] For a somewhat lighthearted explication of this principle – and a serious treatment of certain of its implications, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, Can a Constitutional Amendment Overrule a Supreme Court Decision? 24 Const. Comm. 285 (2007).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Article I also forbids both the state and federal governments from enacting an "Ex Post Facto" law.[195] An ex post facto law is generally thought to mean a legislative enactment that makes a past act criminal even though it was lawful at the time it was done. Once again, Section Three does not meet this description, being neither a legislative enactment (but rather a new constitutional provision) nor a legislative enactment defining a criminal offense.[196] True, as applied to actions done before 1868, Section Three has retroactive (non-criminal) constitutional legal effect. But as applied to actions done after 1868, the idea that Section Three might depart even from the "spirit" of the ban on ex post facto laws makes precious little sense.

So Section Three no longer produces any conflict—if it ever did—with the Ex Post Facto Clauses or with any Ex Post Facto Spirit that might be supposed to lurk behind them. And even if it did, Section Three would supersede both prior law and lurking spirit.

Indeed, we have this on especially good authority, as this very question has been asked and answered in the past. The Eleventh Amendment, as noted above, had the effect of cutting off jurisdiction previously recognized by Chisholm v. Georgia's interpretation of Article III. In Hollingsworth v. Virginia, the Court then confronted the question whether the Amendment was retroactive, cutting off suits pending when the Amendment became law. The plaintiffs argued in the U.S. Supreme Court against retroactivity, because "[t]he spirit of the constitution," forbade "the mischief of an ex post facto Constitution."[197] Indeed, this argument mirrored precisely the arguments for narrow construction we have seen above: "It is true, that an amendment to the Constitution cannot be controuled by those provisions; and if the words were explicit and positive, to produce the retrospective effect contended for, they must prevail. But the words are doubtful; and, therefore, they ought to be so construed, as to conform to the general principle of the Constitution."[198] But the Supreme Court disagreed emphatically—unanimously ruling the very next day that the Amendment applied retroactively, by necessary implication.[199] As with the Eleventh, so too for the Fourteenth: Had the Supreme Court ever been called upon to consider the question, the right answer surely is that the Fourteenth Amendment's rules immediately governed upon ratification and applied "retroactively" to prior actions covered by the revised constitutional rules.

---

[195] U.S. Const. art. I, §§9 & 10.

[196] To be sure, there are revisionist arguments that the Ex Post Facto clause itself extends to retroactive civil laws too. See Eastern Enterprises v. Apfel, 524 U.S. 498, 538-39 (1998) (Thomas, J., concurring). And as with bills of attainder, in the wake of the Civil War the Supreme Court held that Ironclad Oath requirements were ex post facto laws as well. Cummings, 71 U.S. at 326-332; Garland, 71 U.S. at 377-368. But as discussed in the text, even these principles do not ensnare Section Three going forward, on a non-ex-post-facto basis

[197] 3 U.S. at 378-80 (arguments of counsel).

[198] Id.

[199] Id. at 382. See Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 626-627.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. Due Process of Law

The Constitution also forbids the deprivation of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law," which in many circumstances requires judicial process. Does Section Three's self-executing legal disqualification from office present any incompatibility with this requirement? Again, we think the two sets of provisions readily reconciled by giving the Due Process Clause no more than its due.

First of all, it is far from clear that the right to hold public office is a form of life, liberty, or property. It is a public privilege, a public trust, to be vested with the power of the people. And though it is a closer case, the same thing may be true even for those who already hold office at the moment that Section Three disqualifies them. Due process protects private vested rights from public deprivation. It does not protect public rights.[200] It has been argued that in England, offices were understood as vested rights of property, and occasionally early American courts said so as well.[201] But that was not the better rule in America. Treating offices as property did not fit well with republican principles,[202] and by 1900 the Supreme Court could rightly state: "The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property as such."[203]

In any event, even if it were otherwise, and those who held offices were deprived of property by Section Three, what would follow? Nothing. Section Three would prevail. Consider once again the Thirteenth Amendment, which did directly interfere with private property rights—the right recognized in southern states to hold other humans in bondage. The Thirteenth Amendment instantly, self-executingly, eliminated those property rights, due process notwithstanding.[204] So too would Section Three.

Principles of due process might also animate a different objection—that imposing such harsh consequences on individual wrongdoing simply ought to involve fair notice and an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps this instinct motivates the argument against self-execution, as in Griffin's Case. But in our view this objection is sufficiently answered by the terms of Section Three itself. Perhaps the reason that Section

---

[200] Caleb Nelson, Adjudication in the Political Branches, 107 Colum. L. Rev. 559, 565-593 (2007); William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III, 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1540-1547 (2020).
[201] Jed Shugerman, Freehold Offices vs. "Despotic Displacement": Why "Executive Power" Did Not Include Removal (July 25, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4521119; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 NC 1 (1833).
[202] See Jane Manners & Lev Menand, The Three Permissions, 121 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 20 (2021) ("In revolutionary America, the idea of offices as property was roundly rejected"); Saikrishna Prakash, Removal and Tenure in Office, 92 Va. L. Rev. 1779, 1824 n. 157 (2006) ("A more republican conception of government meant a more republican conception of offices.").
[203] Taylor & Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548 (1900).
[204] See supra notes 48-50 and accompanying text.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three only applies to holding office and not voting, and only applies to prior office-holders, who have previously sworn a constitutional oath—indeed, these limitations are the only ways in which Section Three's scope was appreciably narrowed during the drafting process—is that we can expect once and future officials and oath-takers to be on particularly strong notice about the basic rules of the constitutional order. Section Three does not ensnare garden-variety crime or miscreance. It ensnares offenses against the authority of the system by those who have been and seek to be part of that system.

Similarly, so long as Section Three is applied through the established and customary procedures for determining qualifications for office, many due process objections would seem to disappear. As discussed above, in many scenarios, Section Three's disqualification would be enforced through administrative hearings, quo warranto suits, state and federal judicial review, congressional adjudications, and so on. Anybody who wishes to argue that his conduct is not covered by the substantive sweep of Section Three is free to litigate that point through all relevant channels.[205] Section Three is therefore not in conflict with any requirements of fair notice or an opportunity to be heard.

D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment

With respect to the Constitution's provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process, the harmonization of Section Three with prior constitutional law is easy and relatively unproblematic. There is little conflict between the two provisions, and to the extent there is, Section Three is plain enough that it must prevail. The interaction of Section Three with the First Amendment presents a more interesting, even troubling, question. Does Section Three partially revoke the right to political dissent?

Thinking too hard about this problem yields a morass: What exactly is the relationship between Section Three's language imposing disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" and the First Amendment's protections of the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and petition? Likewise, what is the relationship between the disqualification for having given "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists, rebels, or other enemies of the United States and the First Amendment? As we have argued, Section Three in principle can supersede, qualify, or modify (or be deemed to "satisfy") prior constitutional requirements, rendering the provisions of the First Amendment essentially without independent constitutional force as limitations on the scope of Section Three. But how might the prior and important constitutional principles of the First Amendment affect the proper understanding of Section Three's meaning and scope? What exactly does Section Three effectuate, in relation to the First Amendment? Where do the usual protections of the First Amendment leave off and the legal [205] See generally supra Part II.B.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disabilities imposed by Section Three take over, as a matter of the proper understanding of Section Three?

There are, crudely, three possible ways of describing the relationship. The first is to find Section Three (implicitly) limited by the First Amendment. The second is, in contrast, to view Section Three as properly understood as carving out a zone of exception to, supersession of, or satisfaction of First Amendment principles. The third, which we believe correct, lies somewhere in the middle: Section Three should be construed, to the extent fairly possible, consistently with the free speech principles memorialized in the First Amendment. But to the extent of a true conflict between them, Section Three must control.

To consider a not-so-hypothetical example, suppose that an officeholder covered by Section Three gives a speech to an assembled crowd encouraging them to engage in rebellious or insurrectionary conduct. (And suppose further that the crowd accepts the encouragement, rebelling against members of Congress carrying out a constitutional duty at the seat of government.) We will return to this example[206] but for now we consider: how do we judge such an example? Is this only a question of the constitutional definition of "engage in insurrection" and "aid or comfort"—of whether an encouraging speech to an insurrectionary crowd is covered by those terms? Or is it also a question of whether that speech is protected by freedom of speech, and under modern doctrine, that would mean the very stringent test of Brandenburg v. Ohio?[207] Or is it somehow both?

To a large extent, we think the conflicts between Section Three and free speech can be minimized—as Hamilton would counsel.[208] First, even under modern doctrine, free speech does not protect several categories of speech that overlap with Section Three. Second, Section Three's terms will not often reach pure speech.

To elaborate on the first point: Modern First Amendment doctrine leaves the government free to punish actual conspiracy and solicitation, direct incitement, and material support of unlawful activities such as insurrection, rebellion, and treason. (There are serious questions about how much modern First Amendment doctrine has exceeded the original protections of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, which we will largely put aside, but the point is that these exceptions are recognized even on today's liberal understandings.[209])

---

[206] See infra Part IV.C.2.

[207] 395 U.S. 444 (1969).

[208] Federalist No. 78, supra note 173, at 173 ("So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done.")

[209] For what it is worth, we do not in general dispute many aspects of modern First Amendment doctrine, which we believe often captures the original meaning of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, as applied to modern circumstances. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, Scouts, Families, and Schools, 85 Minn. L. Rev. 1917, 1919-1922 (2001). To get a sense of how one might construct a truly marvelous proof of this, which this margin is too narrow to contain, see for starters, Adam Griffin,

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The First Amendment has long been held not to protect conspiracy to commit a crime or direct solicitation of unlawful activity, because this is "speech integral to criminal conduct."[210] And while one must use some caution about unduly expanding this category, conspiracy and solicitation are at its core.[211] Thus, efforts to steal elections, to pressure state officials to manufacture votes, to pressure other officials (like the Vice President) to violate their constitutional duties in service of a constitutional coup—would all be unprotected by the First Amendment. To the extent those efforts are swept up by Section Three, there would be no conflict.

More familiar may be the modern line of cases concerning "incitement." Over the course of the twentieth century, judicial doctrine increasingly gave greater protection to speech that could be seen as generally inciting unlawful activity, recognizing that earlier doctrine (such as the famous "clear and present danger" test) had too readily permitted suppression of disfavored political views. The modern rule, stated in Brandenburg v. Ohio in 1969, excludes from First Amendment protection only advocacy or expressive conduct (i) "directed to" (ii) triggering or inciting (iii) "imminent" lawless action (presumably including acts of insurrection or rebellion) and (iv) "likely" to produce such action.[212] That is a fairly strict standard, but not one that is impossible to satisfy. Importantly, it does leave open—even under the generous terms of modern First Amendment law—the prospect that some acts of advocacy and expression supporting insurrection or rebellion are simply unprotected by the First Amendment in any event, so that Section Three does not even need to have amended or superseded the First Amendment in order for its terms to be given their full legal effect.

The Supreme Court's relatively recent decision in Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project[213] recognized a further and more controversial limitation on subversive speech: it can be forbidden where it provides "material support" to a foreign organization engaged in or committed to terrorist violence against the nation. The Court concluded that because the "interest in combating terrorism is an urgent objective of the highest order," the Congress could forbid even speech—such as teaching and training—assisting such organizations, and even though the speech did not directly

First Amendment Originalism: The Original Law and A Theory of Legal Change as Applied to The Freedom of Speech and of The Press, 17 First Amend. L. Rev. 91 (2019); Jud Campbell, Natural Rights and the First Amendment, 117 Yale L. J. 246 (2017); Jud Campbell, The Emergence of Neutrality, 131 Yale L. J. 861 (2022). (We will cease further digression on this point.)

[210] United States v. Hansen, 599 U.S. __, at 18-19 (2023); United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 297 (2008); Giboney v. New Ice Storage, 336 U.S. 490 (1949); Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 989-993, 1007-1008 (2016).

[211] Volokh, supra note 210, at 1011-1015.

[212] 395 U.S. at 447; see also Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 108-109 (1973); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. 886 (1982)..

[213] 561 U.S. 1 (2010).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

further terrorist conduct. While this decision is hedged by multiple limiting principles,[214] it illustrates another set of circumstances where the First Amendment would create no conflict with potential applications of Section Three.

In sum, while modern First Amendment doctrine is quite generous in its protection of speech, in many cases it would produce no conflict with the coverage of Section Three. We will elaborate on the second point—the scope of Section Three itself—more fully in Part IV, but for now suffice it to say that the occasions will be rare where speech alone is what qualifies one as having "engaged in insurrection" or provided "aid or comfort" to enemies.

That said, we will concede that the conflict between free speech and Section Three cannot be denied entirely. Consider the Civil War example of Clement Vallandigham, who was arrested and imprisoned by the military on the theory that "he was laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops; to encourage desertions from the army; and to leave the Rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it,"— that he was "warring upon the Military."[215] It is conceivable (though we do not prejudge the point) that Vallandigham's anti-military efforts could be covered by Section Three. And yet it is also quite plausible that his efforts would be protected by free speech.

Or for a sharper example, even more on point, consider the case of Representative-elect John Y. Brown, who was excluded from the Fortieth Congress on the grounds that he had given aid and comfort to the Confederacy by writing to the Louisville Courier promising to resist the Union army "unto the death" and stating that anybody who volunteered for the Union army "ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."[216] This exclusion was part of the backdrop of Section Three's enactment and likely the kind of thing Section Three was intended to cover. But, argues one scholar of the incident, this pre-Section Three exclusion "was entirely unconstitutional" and "plainly violative of the First Amendment."[217] If that was so before Section Three's enactment, does Section Three make it otherwise?[218]

Finally and perhaps most explosively, consider the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. Berger was denounced by members of the House for having given "aid and comfort to the enemies of this country during [214] The Court emphasized that "only material support coordinated with or under the direction of a designated foreign terrorist organization" was banned; "independent advocacy" was "not covered." Id. at 31-32. Additionally, the law only applied to foreign organizations.

---

[215] President Abraham Lincoln to Erastus Corning and others (June 12, 1863), in Abraham Lincoln, Speeches and Writings, 1859-1965, at 454, 459 (Don Fehrenbacher, ed. 1989). See infra notes 264-272 and accompanying text.

[216] See infra notes 265-273, and 338-343 and accompanying text.

[217] Lynch, supra note 5, at 197-198.

[218] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 198 ("Had Section 3 been ratified by this point, these concerns would be assuaged.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

this Great War," and excluded in part on that basis.[219] (Indeed, Berger had also been convicted and sentenced under the Espionage Act, though the charges were overturned by the Supreme Court on grounds of judicial bias.)[220] Another scholar of the incident writes that "Under a good reading of the First Amendment, Berger's speeches and writings could not have been seditious; however under the interpretation prevailing at the time, they probably were."[221] What should we make of such an incident?

In the end, in a case where free speech principles conflict with the best original understanding of "engaged in insurrection" or "aid or comfort," we think that free speech principles must give way. We stress that we do not think that all or even most disloyal speech will rise to the level of triggering Section Three's disqualifications.[222] But where it does, where "it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other," it is the more recent Fourteenth Amendment that "shall be preferred" to the earlier rule.[223]

For those (like us) who value First Amendment liberties of speech, press, assembly, religion, and the right to dissent generally, might Section Three therefore be thought a little dangerous? Might Section Three, in the wrong hands or applied improperly, be used to suppress dissent in the name of excluding insurrectionists from office? Perhaps. We do not shy away from the point. But the supposed danger of a constitutional provision is not really an argument against its meaning. And the potential abuse of a constitutional power, privilege, or disqualification is not really a good legal argument against its existence. Section Three's exclusion could be thought to pose a danger; but insurrection and rebellion are dangers too—all too real dangers, as recent events have shown. Where exactly that line is drawn by the Constitution, and the extent to which that line changes the prior rules of the First Amendment, are ultimately questions of the meaning of Section Three's general terms triggering disqualification from future office—"insurrection," "rebellion," "engaged in," "given aid or comfort to"—and of who all is included under Section Three's ban. To that set of important questions we turn next.

IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping

---

[219] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 190; Lynch, supra note 5, at 211-213; 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 52-63 (1935).

[220] Berger v. United States, 255 U.S. 22 (1921). Curiously, after this verdict the House then allowed him to sit in the sixty-eighth through seventieth Congresses. Lynch, supra note 5, at 213.

[221] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 191.

[222] In our view, for instance, the exclusion of Victor Berger went too far—not because the First Amendment makes an exception to Section Three, but because Berger's advocacy did not satisfy the original meaning of Section Three. See infra note 354.

[223] Federalist No. 78, supra note 173, at 439.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We come at last to the heart of the beast: the substance of Section Three's prohibition. We begin (in Subpart A) with the most interesting and important set of issues—the types of misconduct that trigger Section Three. What deeds (and words?) amount to having "engaged in" "insurrection" or "rebellion" against the lawful authority of the Constitution and the system of government it establishes? What acts (or words?) amount to having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of lawful government under the Constitution?

These terms to some extent bear a range of meaning and fair construction. The events they describe are often exceptional and to some extent unique. Still, some applications will be clear and virtually indisputable, falling within the terms' core meaning—the center of the interpretive bullseye, so to speak. Such scenarios so clearly fall within Section Three that they may be said to be contained within the opposite of a safe harbor—a "sure shipwreck,"[224] to borrow Susan Morse's phrase—of unquestionably disqualifying conduct falling within the core of Section Three's meaning: for example, declared secession from lawful constitutional government; or the taking up of arms against government (as in the waging of the Civil War). At the other end of the continuum, there will be situations that clearly lie in a safe harbor outside the legitimate range of meaning of Section Three's terms—ordinary expression of political dissent as well as even ordinary law violations. In between these markers, there is a zone of reasonable, fair construction of allowable interpretation and application in which government officials may make judgments that must be conceded to be within the range of what the Constitution permits—and where the decisions and actions of government officials exercising their constitutional powers consequently cannot be considered unlawful and thereby subject to judicial invalidation. Within that fair range of meaning, different interpreters legitimately can reach differing conclusions, all in accordance with the Constitution. We address all of these questions in subpart A.

We then turn more briefly (in subpart B) to the questions of what prior-office-holding, oath-taking categories of persons—persons who then subsequently engaged in insurrection or rebellion—are covered by Section Three's ban and (a similar but distinct question) what future offices are constitutionally barred to such persons. We conclude that Section Three's disqualification is sweeping, both in the substantive conduct that triggers such disqualification and in the office-holders and offices to which it applies. In particular, contrary to one recent revisionist view, we believe it applies to the Presidency.

Finally (in Subpart C) we will consider the attempted overthrow of the 2020 Presidential election. Did the incumbent president's willful, deliberate refusal to accept the outcome of the lawful constitutional election resulting in his defeat for re-election and, instead, his (and others') attempt to overthrow constitutional election results and install or maintain himself in office, by force, by fraud or by attempted de facto political coup d'etat against the regime of lawful constitutional government, constitute engaging in "insurrection or rebellion against the Constitution of the United States"? We think the answer is yes.

[224] Susan Morse, Safe Harbors, Sure Shipwrecks, 49 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1385 (2016).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Whether called a "rebellion," an attempted coup d'etat seeking to displace lawful government authority under the Constitution, or an "insurrection," instigating, inciting and encouraging a mob to engage in acts of forcible violence directed against the ability of Congress and the Vice President to carry out their constitutional duties—and then refusing to intervene—such conduct is covered by Section Three, and is disqualifying. If those are indeed the facts concerning Donald Trump's (and others') efforts to overthrow the election—and we think they are—such conduct triggers the disqualification rule of Section Three.

Whether other federal and state officeholders—members of Congress, state legislators, past or present state and federal executive and judicial officers—engaged in conduct constituting "insurrection" or "rebellion" (including meaningful action in deliberate furtherance of an attempted coup against lawful constitutional government), or gave "aid or comfort" (approval, encouragement, support) to others who did, might sometimes involve more difficult questions of fact and judgment. But they are the questions Section Three compels us to ask, and to answer. Where such evaluations and judgments have been made by actors exercising legitimate authority to make them (as discussed in Part II) and fall within the fair range of Section Three's meaning, those judgments are entitled to full legal effect.

A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies"

What is the proper, original public meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" as used in Section Three? Of having "engaged in" such conduct? Of having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies"?

Because the terms are capacious and the evidence is sprawling, we will start by proposing our working definitions for these terms. We then show how they are largely consistent with standard sources for discerning the meaning of constitutional text: contemporaneous definitions of these terms; usage elsewhere in the Constitution; and especially contemporaneous public, political, and legal usage of the terms. This last category, which is especially instructive, includes usages from President Lincoln, legislation adopted and sometimes implemented by the Civil War Congress (both the 1862 "Ironclad" oath and the Second Confiscation Act), and the significant mid-Civil-War decision of the Supreme Court in The Prize Cases. We also consider, albeit in somewhat more abbreviated fashion, statutes and usages leading up to the Civil War, including the Insurrection Act of 1795 as amended, and an important series of exclusions from Congress itself, as well as the relevant legislative history of

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three, and a few scattered post-enactment applications of Section Three itself.

1. Working definitions

We begin by offering working definitions of the terms insurrection and rebellion as used in Section Three and of what might constitute "engaging in" such conduct or giving "aid or comfort" to others who do.

Insurrection is best understood as concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect. The term "insurrection" connotes something more than mere ordinary lawbreaking. It suggests an affirmative contest with, and active resistance to, the authority of the government. It is in that sense more than just organized resistance to the laws—more than just a protest, even one involving civil disobedience. Rather, it is organized resistance to the government. Insurrection is also more than mere "protest" in that it implies some element of forcible resistance. It is something more than a mere spontaneous, disorganized "riot."[225] Insurrection suggests at least some degree of coordinated, concerted action. The term also implies something more than acts of solitary individuals: to qualify as an insurrection the acts in question must involve some form of collective action, even if not an advance plan.

At the same time, insurrection may fall short of outright rebellion—even as the terms overlap and might bleed into each other—in that an insurrection might not seek to overturn, overthrow, or displace the government itself, in whole or in part (as a rebellion does). As the Supreme Court put it in The Prize Cases, in 1863: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion."[226]

Rebellion is thus closely related to insurrection, but perhaps not quite identical in meaning. A rebellion is arguably broader in its reach than an insurrection: rebellion implies an effort to overturn or displace lawful government authority by unlawful means. (In the case of secession, or a declaration of independence, the rebellion is an effort to free those engaged in rebellion from the authority of the existing lawful government.) Rebellion is something beyond mere resistance to government authority in a particular instance or set of instances. A rebellion seeks to replace the existing regime, not just resist its law-executing authority. Rebellion involves repudiation, to some degree or another, of the regime's authority, legitimacy, or validity. It is a challenge, direct or indirect, to the regime itself. The South's attempted secession was a species of rebellion—an attempt to overturn the authority of the Constitution and government of the United States by the states asserting the right to secede. Likewise, an attempted coup d'etat is arguably also a species of rebellion—an effort to displace, [225] 10 Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution 1296 (Statement of Madison) ("A riot did not come within the legal definition of an insurrection").

[226] 2 Black (67 U.S.) 635, 667 (1863).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

replace, upend, or overthrow the existing lawful regime and substitute different authority in its stead.

The term rebellion can also imply a competing claim to legitimacy. "Rebellion" thus seems to carry a stronger political-claim-of-right valence than does "insurrection."[227] Crucially, however, the fact that an insurrection or rebellion claims political or moral legitimacy—as the American Revolution did; indeed, as the South's secession did—does not make it any the less an insurrection or rebellion. The fact that an attempted coup d'etat, or declaration of independence, or secession, is claimed to be a "vindication" or "restoration" of rightful governmental authority—or asserted to be a pre-emptive effort to thwart some other person's or group's alleged wrongful assertion of authority—does not immunize such action from the legal characterization of rebellion against the regime. If somebody in fact participates in an attempt to overthrow the government, it makes no difference that he might think himself in the right for doing so, see himself as an agent for preserving lawful government, or view his acts and intention not as "rebellion" but restoration. Mistake of law is no defense to a coup d'etat. The South offered a variety of constitutional legal theories in defense of the supposed lawfulness of secession as an act for the vindication of its believed rights.[228] That did not make its acts of rebellion any less acts of rebellion.

As to the overlap and distinction between insurrection and rebellion our working definition is more tentative. It is possible that a rebellion is simply a special case of an insurrection, in the way that a square is a special case of a rectangle. But it is also possible that the term rebellion is not necessarily limited to regime change by

---

[227] Though it is possible that this connotation is anachronistic. See infra note 247.

[228] For important accounts and discussion of Southern arguments for the constitutional propriety and validity of secession, on a variety of asserted grounds, see James M. McPherson, Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era 234-236 (1988) (summarizing Southern constitutional and political theories); Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution 57-91 (2003) (emphasizing arguments of states' rights to interposition, nullification, and secession generally); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lincoln and Judicial Authority, 83 Notre Dame. L. Rev. 1227, 1270-1277 (2008) (setting forth Southern leaders' constitutional arguments that Lincoln's stance against the Dred Scott decision, against judicial supremacy, and against extension of slavery violated the judicially settled constitutional rights of slaveholding persons and states); Kenneth M. Stampp, The Concept of a Perpetual Union, 65 J. Am. Hist. 5-53 (June 1978) (providing detailed history of constitutional and political arguments over the nature of Union and the validity of secession); David P. Currie, The Constitution in Congress: Descent into the Maelstrom 1829-1861, at 228-237 (2005) (discussing and evaluating the constitutional arguments for and against the validity of secession). For the case against the constitutionality of secession, see generally 2 Abraham Lincoln, Speeches & Writings, 1859-1865: Speeches, Letters, Miscellaneous Writings, Presidential Messages & Proclamations, at 217-218 (First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861); id. at 254-258, 260-261 (Message to Congress, July 4, 1861); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Civil War as Constitutional Interpretation, 71 U Chi. L. Rev. 691, 703-715 (2004) (reviewing Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution) (distilling and building on Lincoln's arguments); Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 127, at 303-311 (same). For further background, see generally William W. Freehling, The Road to Disunion: Secessionists at Bay 1776-1854 (1990), and for a comprehensive exposition of the Southern view, see Alexander M. Stephens, A Constitutional View of the Late War Between the States; Its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results (1867).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

force—and thus may occupy some ground not covered by the word "insurrection" (which, we have suggested, must be forcible). There are such things as "bloodless coups": actions that effectively displace or upend the prior constitutional order without shots being fired, but that nonetheless are in unlawful defiance or repudiation of the existing legal order.[229]

To illustrate this hypothesized distinction between insurrection and rebellion: Imagine that the Southern attack on Fort Sumter in April 1861 had preceded any declared right to secession. The attack would have been an act of insurrection—an exercise of concerted, forcible defiance of the authority of the Union government—but not necessarily outright rebellion. Conversely, the ordinances of secession adopted by state conventions in the South in 1860 and 1861[230] preceded (mostly) any acts of actual forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws. The secession ordinances might still immediately constitute acts of "rebellion," even before any accompanying violence. In short: Sumter without secession would have still been insurrection. Secession without Sumter was already rebellion. Put the two events together—acts of forcible insurrection and declarations of avowed rebellion frequently travel in pairs (as they obviously did with the Civil War)—and it becomes difficult to distinguish "insurrection" from "rebellion." The overlap of the two terms in theory becomes complete in practice.

In the end, however, we do not wish to make too much of the ways in which the terms differ in shades of color and in their implication. The coverage of the terms overlaps substantially. Sometimes, the terms, occupying much of the same ground, seem capable of being used almost interchangeably. Indeed, the bigger picture point for understanding Section Three is that "insurrection" and "rebellion," in tandem, cover pretty much the entire terrain of large-scale unlawful resistance to government authority.

So much for our working definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion." What does it mean to have "engaged in" such conduct? We believe one has "engaged" in insurrection or rebellion when one has been actively involved in the planning or execution of intentional acts of insurrection or rebellion; or when one has knowingly pro-

---

[229] Indeed, one might characterize the process of adoption of the U.S. Constitution, replacing the regime of the Articles of Confederation, as a peaceful political coup d'etat – an act of "rebellion" if judged by the pre-existing law, but morally and politically justified by the failure of the prior regime and Lockean notions of self-governance, and subsequently legalized by its own success. See generally Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 3-8, 17-20; Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism as a Theory of Legal Change, 38 Harv. J. L. & Pub Pol'y 818, 821, 844, 850 (2015).

[230] The seceding states adopted their secession resolutions by state "conventions," purporting to parallel the process by which the states ratified the Constitution. See McPherson, supra note 228, at 234-284 (describing secession actions of the ten states that purported to secede from the Union). The secession ordinances of the South were self-consciously styled after the Declaration of Independence, which was obviously an act of formal legal rebellion.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

vided active, meaningful, voluntary, direct support for, material assistance to, or specific encouragement of such actions. Such planning, participation, support, assistance, or encouragement may be in the form of either words or deeds, as long as the person who has "engaged in" such activities embraced the objectives of the insurrection or rebellion in question and did things that contributed in a meaningful way to advancing those objectives.[231] (There is obvious overlap here with the closely related concept of having given "aid or comfort" to the nation's enemies, which we discuss presently.)

Of course, there are also important limits to how far the concept of having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion extends. Mere passive acquiescence, resigned acceptance, silence, or inaction is not typically enough to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion. An exception to this limitation might exist where a person possesses an affirmative duty to speak or act. Further, mere abstract advocacy of, or theorizing concerning, the desirability of insurrection or rebellion, without more, is not the same as actually engaging in it. We think this is true even though the First Amendment does not formally constrain Section Three: it is simply the best understanding of Section Three's terms.

Then there is the related question of what constitutes having given "aid or comfort" to "the enemies thereof." This reads as a separate, independent ground for disqualification: Section Three is triggered by having engaged in insurrection or rebellion "or" having given aid or comfort to enemies. This language, of course, closely echoes the earlier constitutional language of the Treason Clause.[232]

In many cases, giving "aid or comfort" to enemies will be similar to the kind of conduct that counts as having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion through intentional, active assistance. If there is a difference, it is that the term "aid or comfort" reinforces and emphasizes Section Three's coverage of indirect but material assistance. Such material assistance—possibly including expression supporting, encouraging, counseling, or promoting the enemy—might more naturally fall into Section Three's "aid or comfort" language, even where it might be debatable whether to characterize such conduct as directly "engag[ing] in" insurrection or rebellion.

---

[231] This working definition of having "engaged in" wrongful activity resembles familiar common law understandings of accomplice liability in the area of criminal law, which typically resulted from the combination of (1) assistance to unlawful conduct (with "assistance" including uttering words of encouragement to, or agreeing not to interfere with, such conduct) and (2) the intention to further such unlawful conduct). Federal criminal law today is to similar effect. 18 U.S.C. § 2(a) (2012) ("Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal."). We think it is also generally supported by background mens rea principles. See William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Law of Interpretation, 130 Harv. L. Rev. 1079, 1108 (2017). That said, the lesson of the Civil War also suggests one important limitation: there is no mistake-of-rebellion defense. See text accompanying infra note 420.

[232] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 ("Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Additionally, while Section Three uses some language paralleling that contained in the Treason Clause, Section Three is by no means limited to the constitutional crime of treason. "Insurrection" and "rebellion" are their own things, distinct from "treason." While some acts of insurrection and rebellion might also constitute treason they need not do so in order to be encompassed within Section Three. So even if "aid or comfort" in Section Three connotes the same type of assistance-and-embrace principles as "Aid and Comfort" in Article III's Treason Clause,[233] the relevant conduct to which such assistance is given might well differ. (And, as noted earlier, it is plain that Section Three requires no prior criminal-law conviction, for treason or any other defined crime, as a prerequisite for its disqualification to apply.)

Finally, aid or comfort to whom? "[T]he enemies thereof." We believe that "enemies" as employed in Section Three, embraces enemies both foreign and domestic. That now-familiar phrase ("enemies foreign and domestic") comes from the "Ironclad Oath," written into law in 1862, in the midst of the Civil War,[234] and it seems clear from the political context of Section Three, enacted in the wake of a domestic civil war, that domestic enemies are enemies. It is almost unthinkable that Confederate rebels would not have been thought "enemies" in the sense employed by the text.[235] Given the history and context of Section Three "enemies" seems to include the domestic rebels and insurrectionists just described earlier in the sentence.[236]

Our sense of the whole—of Section Three's substantive terms triggering disqualification for those who have engaged in the conduct described—is that Section Three is quite sweeping, using overlapping terms to cover several different characterizations of major collective resistance to the authority of government under the Constitution. Whether it be called "insurrection" or "rebellion"; and whether a covered individual is thought to have "engaged in" such activity or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" engaging in such activity, Section Three's disqualification is triggered. The language is not unlimited, to be sure. But the broad and overlapping terms are not intended to be hospitable to loopholes or artful, narrow, technical evasions.

---

[233] See infra note 253.

[234] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.ii.

[235] What is the referent of "enemies thereof"? Does "thereof" refer to enemies of the United States or enemies of the Constitution of the United States? We think this replicates the question of what "the same" refers to, earlier in the sentence, and presents the same issue of minor and seemingly inconsequential ambiguity. (Does "insurrection or rebellion against the same" refer to insurrection or rebellion against "the United States"? On balance, we think that it probably makes little practical difference: rebellion against the United States and rebellion against the Constitution of the United States will often amount to the same thing; either one is capable of being considered an instance of the other.) Whatever the answer, it should be the same for both – "against the same" and "thereof" refer to the same thing. And given that the Treason Clause refers to "enemies" of "the United States," it seems fairly likely that Section Three does too.

[236] See also, e.g., Section Two of the Second Confiscation Act, discussed infra Part IV.A.4.b.ii.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, let us reiterate one consequence of Section Three's breadth and capaciousness. Because Section Three's terms possess a range of meaning, both a determinate core and a fuzzier periphery, we need a second-order rule concerning the authority of decisionmakers to act on the basis of fair interpretations of indefinite terms. We think that the general rule of our constitutional order is that political officials may take actions premised on fair interpretations of indefinite terms, and that when they do so, their actions cannot rightly be held "unconstitutional" by the courts, precisely because they fit within the fair range afforded by the Constitution. Where the Constitution admits of a range of choice, political authorities may exercise choices within that range.

This is foundational to our constitutional law.[237] It is the premise of judicial review as set forth in Marbury v. Madison, which justifies setting aside the acts of other branches only because, and only to the extent to, they deviate from the Constitution's meaning. It is classically illustrated by the Court's reasoning in M'Culloch v. Maryland,[238] which upheld Congress's power to create the Bank of the United States because a generation of political actors had acted within the fair range of meaning of constitutionally granted powers.

And this principle means, as a practical matter, that the breadth of Section Three's broad terms cannot be ignored, or artificially limited, by judicial construction. Where those charged with responsibilities that involve applying Section Three's terms have given that language its full legitimate sweep, that breadth must be honored.

We now canvass—perhaps too briefly and yet at too great a length—some of the evidence supporting these working definitions.

2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions

---

[237] See, e.g., Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 858 (arguing that where constitutional language states a general principle, "actions of government that fall within the scope of judgment or discretion admitted by the breadth with which that principle is expressed do not violate the Constitution, and are thus allowable"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, A Government of Adequate Powers, 31 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 991, 995 (2008) (arguing that "textual imprecision or generality often admits of a range of choices" and that the correct constitutional answer in such circumstances "is that the legislature must be permitted to choose from options within that range"; thus, "the more indeterminate or under-determinate the range of a constitutional provision, the broader the duty of the courts to defer to what the legislature has enacted"); Kesavan & Paulsen, Secret Drafting History, supra note 9, at 1129-30 n.54 (2003); Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Most Dangerous Branch: Executive Power to Say What the Law Is, 83 Geo. L.J. 217, 333 (1994); Baude & Sachs, Law of Interpretation, supra note 231, at 1120 (describing "the presumption of constitutionality" as a rule of unwritten law); William Baude, Constitutional Liquidation, 71 Stan. L. Rev. 1, 35-36, 44 (2019). Again, we bracket any differences in emphasis between our respective views of the adjudication of ambiguities.

[238] 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819),

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As we have said, the task of ascertaining true constitutional meaning consists of seeking out the objective, original meaning of the words and phrases of the text: that is, the meaning Section Three's terms and structure would have had in the legal system at the time. A starting point for such an inquiry—though not the ending point—is to look at contemporaneous dictionary definitions. (We think that evidence of contemporaneous political and legal usage of words and phrases contained in the constitutional text is actually quite often stronger evidence of original, objective linguistic meaning: it can serve as a kind of operational, practical concordance that may "define" terms more precisely in their application than can a cold dictionary definition.)

Nineteenth century dictionaries contain definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion" that substantially corroborate our working definitions. Webster defined "insurrection" as "[a] rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state."[239] Rebellion was "[a]n open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government to which one owes allegiance."[240]

Importantly, Webster also noted several distinctions between these and other terms. In defining rebellion, he distinguished an insurrection as "a rising in opposition to a particular act or law, without a design to renounce wholly all subjection to the government," while a rebellion was a more categorical "attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one or to place the country under another jurisdiction."[241] And in defining insurrection, Webster noted that insurrection is "equivalent to sedition, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens."[242] This suggests a spectrum from sedition (not covered by Section Three) to insurrection to rebellion (both covered).

At the same time, Webster also conceded some overlap in these terms, writing that "[i]nsurrection may be, but is not necessarily, rebellion"[243] and that despite these technical distinctions, "[i]nsurrection is however used with latitude as to comprehend

---

[239] 1 Noah Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language 111 (1828, photoreprint 1993) ("Insurrection"); see also Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 702 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (similar); 1 John Boag, A Popular and Complete English Dictionary 727 (1850) (similar).

[240] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also Webster's (Porter 1864), supra note 239, at 1094 (similar); 2 Boag, supra note 239, at 319 (similar).

[241] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 1 Boag, supra note 239, at 727; 2 id. at 319 (similar).

[242] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 111 ("Insurrection"). For comparison, Webster defined "Sedition" as: "A factious commotion of the people, or a tumultuous assembly of men rising in opposition to law or the administration of justice, and in disturbance of the public peace. Sedition is a rising or commotion of less extent than an insurrection, and both are less than rebellion . . ." 2 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 66 ("Sedition").

[243] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 2 Boag, supra note 239, at 319 (similar).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

either sedition or rebellion."[244] This suggests a great deal of potential breadth and overlap in these terms.

Along similar lines, a prominent mid-century legal dictionary, John Bouvier's Law Dictionary in its 1868 edition, contains detailed definitions of insurrection, rebellion, and aid and comfort. "INSURRECTION" was defined simply as "[a] rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government."[245] "REBELLION" is correspondingly defined: "The taking up arms traitorously against the government. The forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued."[246] Bouvier's thus treated "insurrection" and "rebellion" as nearly interchangeable terms, both involving some degree of concerted and forcible opposition to the authority of the lawfully constituted government but not clearly distinguishing between them.[247]

Bouvier's dictionary also offers an instructive definition of "AID AND COMFORT" as "[h]elp, support, assistance, counsel, encouragement." The entry adds this discussion, noting the lack of U.S. judicial interpretation at the time but a generally accepted English background understanding of the term:

> The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, declares that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial discussion. They import, however, help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. 1, c.14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act …[248]

---

[244] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 239, at 111. Daniel Hemel argues that "Webster's definition of 'insurrection' seems implausibly broad for Section 3 purposes." See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5.

[245] "Insurrection" in 1 John Bouvier. A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union 729-730 (Philadelphia, G.W. Childs, 12th ed., rev. and enl. 1868).

[246] "Rebellion" in 2 Bouvier (1868), supra note 245, at 415 (emphasis added).

[247] See also Joseph Worcester, A Dictionary of the English Language 764, 1190 (1860) (generally equating insurrection and rebellion). Elsewhere in this edition, Bouvier drew a distinction in connotation between "REBEL" and "INSURGENT," suggesting that "rebel is always understood in a bad sense, as one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the tyranny of constitute authorities," and thus that "[t]he colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels." "Insurgent" and "Rebel" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 245, at 729; 2 id. at 415.

In a much later edition, Bouvier's drew a distinction between insurrection and rebellion as two different varieties of "actual and open resistance to [government] authority." Insurrection was "an actual uprising against the government" while rebellion "goes beyond insurrection in aim" and attempts actually to overthrow the government authority in question. "Insurrection" and "Rebellion," in 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary & Concise Encycl. (Rawles Rev., 1897). Lynch misstates the date of this edition as 1867, and thus mistakenly cites it as "contemporarily authoritative." Lynch, supra note 5, at 167 n. 80.

[248] "Aid and Comfort" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 245, at 107.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This tends to confirm our broad construction of "aid or comfort" as encompassing many kinds of intentional support, akin to the common law.

3. Intratextualism

In some cases, the Constitution can also serve as its own internal dictionary. The meaning of a constitutional term in one part of the document can inform its meaning in another, either because of the complete (or near) copying of one constitutional text by another or by virtue of subtle contrast, refinement, or qualification in a term's usage. (Professor Akhil Amar has dubbed this method of interpretation "Intratextualism.")[249] Chief Justice Marshall, for example, famously employed this method in M'Culloch v. Maryland as part of his argument for the constitutionality of Congress's chartering of a Bank of the United States.[250]

Might the Constitution's other usages of terms that also appear in Section Three serve as such markers of meaning for "insurrection" and "rebellion," and "aid or comfort" to enemies, as those terms are used in Section Three? A quick canvass suggests only limited help.

The word "insurrection" appears in the Militia Clause of Article I, Section 8 of the original Constitution: Congress is given the enumerated power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[251] The word "rebellion" appears in the Writ Suspension Clause of Article I, Section 9: "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or invasion the public Safety may require it."[252] In neither instance, however, does the context suggest any particular definition or explication of the term. They are thus of little direct assistance to the task of unpacking the meaning of Section Three.

As noted, the language in Section Three's alternative trigger—the giving of "aid and comfort" to enemies—borrows the nearly identical language of the Treason Clause of Article III. But once again, the similar language in Article III is not self-defining. Nor was there an established, settled, authoritative judicial interpretation

---

[249] Akhil Reed Amar, Intratextualism, 112 Harv. L. Rev. 747, 748 (1999).
[250] M'Culloch, 17 U.S. at 413-414. In construing the scope of the legislative power conferred by the Necessary and Proper Clause, Marshall noted how the word "necessary" was used differently, and subjected to different qualifications, in other parts of the Constitution and found that those differences were useful in interpreting the clause at hand. For discussion of the prominence of intratextual and structural-logic, whole-text arguments in some of Chief Justice Marshall's most significant Supreme Court opinions, including Marbury and M'Culloch, see Paulsen, Marbury, supra note 66, at 2711; see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Plausibility of Personhood, 74 Ohio St. L. J. 13, 33 n. 72 (2013).
[251] U.S. Const. art. I, §8 cl. 15.
[252] U.S. Const. art. I, §9 cl. 2.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of this language that might have been understood specifically to define "aid and comfort" as a constitutional term-of-art at the time of the framing of the Fourteenth Amendment.[253] Moreover, in the 1860s, the pairing of "aid" and/or "comfort" had become ubiquitous in legal and public discourse as a general allegation of improper assistance, making it still less clear that it was perfectly coterminous with the law of the Treason Clause.[254]

Finally, the words "insurrection" and "rebellion" also appear elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment itself, but again in ways that give little external light on Section Three. A person's "participation in rebellion" is specified in Section Two as an allowable ground for denying the right to vote that does not trigger a reduction in a state's representation as a consequence.[255] Section Four of the amendment prohibits payment of debts or obligations "incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion."[256] These neighboring sections use slightly different phrases for the behavior they cover ("participation" and "engaged in"; "aid or comfort" and "in aid of"), but it is difficult to say if the variations are meaningful.

4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage

Perhaps the best evidence of the public meaning of the terms "insurrection," [253] Perhaps the most notable U.S. treason case to date was Ex parte Bollman, in which Chief Justice Marshall delivered an opinion for the Court granting habeas to two of the co-conspirators in Aaron Burr's plot to seize Spanish territory in the American (then-)southwest and attempt to form his own independent nation. Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75 (1807). The opinion combined a relatively narrow construction of the substantive crime of treason (in part because of Article III's text ("only in levying war") with a relatively broad construction of complicity. Thus on one hand: "However flagitious may be the crime of conspiring to subvert by force the government of our country, such conspiracy is not treason," id. at 126, but on the other hand, "if war be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors." Id. Ex parte Bollman was an early and prominent legal landmark supporting some key propositions that would have been familiar to lawyers during the Civil War era: first, that there are such things as conspiracies and plots to "overturn the government," in whole or in part, that though they might not qualify as treason, remain great and culpable legal wrongs; second, that the crime of treason specifically requires showing the existence of an armed assembly to employ force for a treasonable purpose; third, that one may be said to have engaged in (or provided "aid and comfort" to) treason where one is in league with the conspiracy and done any act, large or small, or played "any part," however remote, to further that plot. Whether or not Bollman's construction was sufficiently established to be read in to Section Three itself, it was cited occasionally in the 1860s Congress. See, e.g., 37th Congress 2nd Session Cong. Globe 414 (1862) (statement of Sen. Sumner) (citing Bollman passage quoted above during the proceedings to expel Senator Jesse Bright for writing a letter to Jefferson Davis).

---

[254] See Harold Holzer, Lincoln and the Power of the Press: The War for Public Opinion 361 (2014) (referring to the phrase "aid and comfort to the enemy" (by the press) as "that catch-basin phrase again.").

[255] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2.

[256] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 4.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"rebellion," and "engaging in," as they came to be used in Section Three, consists of their common and frequent public, political, and legal usage in the 1860s—the years immediately surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment—by a variety of actors: by President Abraham Lincoln, in prominent speeches, messages, public letters, and proclamations; by Congress, in major acts of legislation; and by the Supreme Court, in the landmark decision in The Prize Cases. The consistent pattern of usage was to treat the actions of the South as being, legally, "insurrection" or "rebellion." A wide range of actions supportive of secession appears to have constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort" to rebellion or insurrection.

This leads us to what we think an obvious "sure shipwreck"[257] for understanding Section Three's terms. Whatever else "insurrection or rebellion" might embrace, they certainly embrace the cluster of actions with which Section Three was, historically, immediately and directly concerned: first, the attempted secession from the authority of the U.S. Constitution—the effort to displace the lawful authority of the United States in favor of the supposedly "seceded" state governments and their confederation into the "Confederate States of America"; and second, engaging in forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws of the United States—armed resistance to the Constitution, specifically in the shape of waging civil war against the nation. Conduct participating in, advancing, supporting, or assisting either secession or armed resistance to U.S. authority constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort to" the Union's enemies. Section Three encompasses all such actions in support of secession and civil war as included within its substantive trigger.

a. President Lincoln

An extremely important contemporaneous source for understanding the public constitutional meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" in 1860s public discourse is President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln looms large in the public understanding of the day concerning the meaning of those terms. Lincoln consistently characterized secession and the Civil War as acts of insurrection or rebellion, avoiding wherever possible treating "secession" as if it were a separate legal category. Secession, for Lincoln, was a Southern euphemism for rebellion and treason. The Confederacy had no valid legal existence: what was going on with the Civil War was properly called insurrection and rebellion—the lawless attempt to overthrow the constitutional processes of the United States and displace lawful government with unlawful governments.

Lincoln was insistent and relentless—and very public and prominent—on this point, consistently so, across a range of contexts. For instance, the Civil War was emphatically not, in Lincoln's view, a "war" between the United States and another [257] Morse, supra note 224.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

sovereign.[258] It was not subject to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 11 power to "declare War," but was rather an illegal rebellion—a "giant insurrection"—to be suppressed by executive authority pursuant to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 15 power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[259]

Consider just a few prominent and illustrative statements: In his First Inaugural Address, on March 4, 1861, Lincoln, after setting forth arguments that "no State upon its own mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union," concluded that "acts of violence within any State or States against the authority of the United States" are "insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances."[260] Following the attack on Fort Sumter, Lincoln's April 15, 1861 proclamation calling forth the militia similarly characterized the attack as fitting the statutory definition of insurrection.[261] And in his July 4, 1861 Message to Congress, Lincoln labelled the South's purported secession a "giant insurrection" and, vividly, as "rebellion … sugar coated." The "so-called 'Confederate States'" had formed an "insurrectionary government."[262] In the same July 4 Message, Lincoln used the nature of secession as rebellion to justify suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as authorized by the terms of Article I, section 9, clause 2 of the Constitution, which used exactly that language of "rebellion."[263] Lincoln's use of terms was significant and pulled no punches: efforts to displace lawful government authority with unlawful government—no matter how labelled by their perpetrators, no matter how deluded participants might be as to the lawfulness or propriety of their actions—were insurrectionary; such declarations and actions constituted rebellion.

Two years later, at the height of the war, Lincoln returned to the characterization of the South's actions as "rebellion" (and the constitutional question of power to suspend habeas corpus) in a notable incident testing the limit of Union military suppression of anti-war and disloyal speech. In a June 12, 1863 public letter, nominally addressed to Erastus Corning, Lincoln defended the military arrest of former Ohio

---

[258] On Lincoln's understanding of secession as unconstitutional and his resulting conception of the Civil War as, legally, a situation of insurrection or rebellion (not declared war) see sources cited in note 228. That does not exclude the existence of full constitutional Commander in Chief Clause powers in the situation of actual civil war, however. Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Emancipation Proclamation and the Commander in Chief Power, 40 Georgia L. Rev. 807, 814-823 (2006).

[259] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 11 (Declare War Clause) with U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 15 (power "to provide for calling forth" the Militia for law execution and to suppress insurrections"). Congress's exercise of this power – the Insurrection Acts of 1795 and 1807 – is discussed infra Part IV.A.5.a.

[260] Abraham Lincoln, First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1861), IV Complete Works of Lincoln ("CWL") 262, 265.

[261] Abraham Lincoln, Proclamation Calling Militia and Convening Congress (April 15, 1861), IV CWL 331, 332.

[262] Abraham Lincoln, Message to Congress in Special Session (July 4, 1861), IV CWL 421, 427-428, 432-437.

[263] Id. at 429-431 (emphasis added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congressman Clement Vallandigham, a notorious racist and prominent "Copperhead" pro-South, anti-Union northerner, who had made a public speech vehemently condemning the Emancipation Proclamation and the propriety of the Union's war effort.

Lincoln distinguished law enforcement arrests from detentions in cases of rebellion. Wrote Lincoln: "Ours is a case of Rebellion—so called by the resolutions before me—in fact, a clear, flagrant, and gigantic case of Rebellion." And that, Lincoln concluded, was what allowed suspension of habeas corpus.[264] In the course of his argument, Lincoln described rebellion as "sudden and extensive uprisings against the government."[265] This is a useful description that supports our working definition: Rebellion is an "uprising." It is something more than mere protest. It is, often, "sudden." It is "extensive." It is directed "against the government." Rebellion is something more than ordinary law violation and that is why it is treated differently by the Constitution.

How did Vallandigham's actions associate him with the rebellion? Lincoln made a forceful case that even pure speech might constitute assistance to rebellion—if it were advocacy producing direct, material effects benefitting the rebel enemy cause, by tangibly harming the military authority engaged in trying to suppress that rebellion. In the Corning Letter, Lincoln wrote that, "under cover of 'Liberty of speech,' 'Liberty of the press,' and 'Habeas corpus,'" rebel sympathizers "hoped to keep on foot amongst us a most efficient corps of spies, informers, supplyers, and aiders and abettors of their cause in a thousand ways."[266] Claims of freedom of speech could improperly furnish a shield or cloak for wrongful conduct; they supplied "cover" for, and thus assisted, rebellion and insurrection.

Lincoln expanded these arguments in yet more arresting ways. He suggested that, in some circumstances, a person's refusal to speak out against rebellion might be tacit support for such rebellion: a "man who stands by and says nothing, when the peril of his government is discussed, can not be misunderstood. If not hindered, he is sure to help the enemy." He also hinted at regret that he had not earlier arrested prominent oath-breaking officers now "occupying the very highest places in the rebel war service," such as John Breckinridge, Robert E. Lee, Joseph Johnston, and John Magruder: "I think the time not unlikely to come when I shall be blamed for having made too few arrests rather than too many."[267] Lincoln's position seems clear, if perhaps a bit unsettling: claims of freedom of speech did not invariably prevail over the

---

[264] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 2.
[265] Abraham Lincoln, To Erastus Corning and Others (June 12, 1863), VI CWL 260, 264 (emphasis added).
[266] Id. at 263.
[267] Id. at 265.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

imperative constitutional necessity of suppressing rebellion; where words fueled insurrection, or thwarted its suppression, or signaled disloyalty, the speaker was aiding the enemy. Such expression was not necessarily privileged.

This is not exactly an expansive conception of First Amendment rights. Lincoln fully recognized the difficulties with his stance. He did not ignore the tension between his conclusions and peacetime free speech principles but argued that the tension could be reconciled.[268] In a colorful metaphor, Lincoln ventured:

> I can no more be persuaded that the Government can constitutionally take no strong measures in time of rebellion, because it can be shown that the same could not be lawfully taken in time of peace, than I can be persuaded that a particular drug is not good medicine for a sick man, because it can be shown not to be good food for a well one. Nor am I able to appreciate the danger apprehended by the meeting that the American people will, by means of military arrests during the Rebellion, lose the right of Public Discussion, the Liberty of Speech and the Press, the Law of Evidence, Trial by Jury, and Habeas Corpus, throughout the indefinite peaceful future, which I trust lies before them, any more than I am able to believe that a man could contract so strong an appetite for emetics during temporary illness as to persist in feeding upon them during the remainder of his healthful life.[269]

Lincoln also stressed a distinction between speech directed at criticism of the government's political policy—fully protected by the freedom of speech—and expression more or less directly aimed at harming the military's recruitment and war effort. If Vallandigham had been arrested merely because he was "damaging the political prospects of the administration" or "the personal interests of the general," that would be one thing, Lincoln observed. "[I]f there was no other reason for the arrest, then I concede that the arrest was wrong." But as Lincoln understood it, the arrest "was made for a very different reason"—that Vallandigham was "laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops, to encourage desertions from the army, and to leave the rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it." Vallandigham

---

[268] In several respects, Lincoln anticipated later judicial free speech doctrines and decisions, such as those distinguishing pure speech from speech linked to prohibited conduct; recognizing limits on speech posing a danger of inciting to crime or lawlessness; recognizing "compelling interest" overrides in exceptional circumstances, including for reasons of national security or military secrecy; finding that government's motives and purposes for a particular action may matter to its lawfulness; and noting where an incidental limitation on expression leaves open alternative channels for expression of the same message. See Paulsen, Civil War, supra note 228, at 698-702 & n.23 (noting how Lincoln anticipated many of the issues and exceptions contemplated by later judicial doctrine concerning the First Amendment's freedom of speech).

[269] Letter to Corning (June 12, 1863), VI CWL at 267. (Emetics referred to a medicine or substance used to induce vomiting.)

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

was, in short, "warring upon the military." He who "dissuades one man from volunteering, or induces one soldier to desert, weakens the Union cause as much as he who kills a union soldier in battle." Desertion was punishable by death, of course. In a famous line, Lincoln asked, rhetorically "Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wiley agitator who induces him to desert?"[270] Lincoln's answer was no: "I think that in such a case, to silence the agitator, and save the boy, is not only constitutional, but, withal a great mercy." [271]

Lincoln continued: "If I be wrong on this question of constitutional power," he added, "my error lies in believing that certain proceedings are constitutional when, in cases of rebellion or Invasion, the public Safety requires them, which would not be constitutional when, in absence of rebellion or invasion, the public Safety does not require them -- in other words, that the constitution is not in it's application in all respects the same, in cases of Rebellion or invasion, involving the public Safety, as it is in times of profound peace and public security."[272]

Lincoln thus embraced the view that material assistance to insurrection or rebellion could in some cases take the form of effective advocacy of unlawful conduct that, if engaged in by substantial numbers, would materially advance the rebel cause or harm the military prospects of the Union. The fact that such assistance to rebellion came in the form of words did not furnish any constitutional privilege to such action. Where rebellion threatens public safety or public security, the Constitution permits restriction on advocacy furthering, supporting, or assisting such rebellion.

To be sure, one might well conclude that Lincoln went too far in his arguments in the Corning Letter or in some of his actions during the war. That is an interesting and difficult question—and not our point here. Our point is that Lincoln's view was a prominently expressed contemporaneous understanding—and on the issues of insurrection, rebellion, and complicity, it was consistent with his longstanding and oft-repeated views. This does not directly answer the question whether or to what extent such thinking specifically informed general public understanding of Section Three. But Lincoln's thinking, articulated in such a public context, may well have informed the potential reach of the terms "insurrection or rebellion," and what constitutes engaging in or aiding such conduct, as those terms came to be employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

At all events, Lincoln made clear and prominent the position that declaring secession, engaging in forcible opposition to the constitutional authority of the Union, and materially assisting others in such conduct, all constituted forms of support for and participation in "insurrection" or "rebellion." And this stance continued throughout the war, even as the nation began to look to the war's conclusion and to questions

---

[270] Letter to Corning, VI CWL at 266.
[271] Id. at 266-67.
[272] Id. at 267.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of the post-war status of persons who had participation in that rebellion—questions at the core of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[273]

b. Congress

President Lincoln was not the only public figure grappling with concepts of insurrection and rebellion during the Civil War. Similar themes can be found in the statements and actions of Congress and the Supreme Court.

Start with Congress: We think two specific enactments of Congress during the Civil War are especially probative of the understandings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and of what conduct was publicly understood to constitute having "engaged in" or given assistance to rebellion. First, there is the so-called "Ironclad Oath," adopted on July 2, 1862 as the oath one must be able to swear in order to hold federal office.[274] Second, there is the "Second Confiscation Act," adopted that same month, on July 17, 1862, to authorize legal forfeitures of property and slaves, and also to enforce disqualifications from federal office, by persons who had engaged in specified activities constituting "rebellion" or "insurrection."[275] These two enactments, and their implementation to exclude former insurrectionists and rebels from future office, say much about the terms they employed.

i. The Ironclad Oath

Congress adopted The Ironclad Oath in the thick of the Civil War and it was required of most federal officeholders from 1862 to 1884.[276] The text of the Oath sets forth the types of misconduct regarded as disqualifying an individual from eligibility

[273] Lincoln's characterization of Southern secession as rebellion continued throughout the war. His December 8, 1863 Message to Congress referred to the Confederacy as "the rebellion." Annual Message to Congress (Dec. 8, 1863), VII CWL at 51 In his accompanying offer of amnesty and pardon, in the Amnesty Proclamation of December 8, 1863, Lincoln referred, repeatedly, to the "rebellion" that "now exists whereby the loyal State governments of several States have for a long time been subverted" (id. at 53), to "said rebellion and treason" (id. at 54), to "said rebellion" (id.) and to persons who had provided "aid" to the "rebellion" in various forms. Interestingly, Lincoln excepted from his offer of forgiveness – in language that would seem to presage the similar terms of Section Three – "all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion" and "all who resigned commissions in the army or navy in the United States, and afterwards aided the rebellion." Id. at 55. Lincoln also left to the respective houses of Congress the exclusive judgment "whether members sent to Congress from any State shall be admitted to seats."

[274] 12 Stat. 502.

[275] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). 12 Stat. 627 (1862).

[276] 23 Stat. 21 (1884). There was an important exception. In 1868, Congress provided that anybody who had received amnesty from two-thirds of each house of Congress under Section Three was exempt from the Ironclad Oath and need only swear future loyalty, 15 Stat. 85 (1868), and in 1871 it added that anybody "who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution" yet would otherwise "not be able on account of his participation in the late rebellion to take" the Ironclad Oath, could take the forward-looking oath instead, 16 Stat. 412 (1871). These two provisions effectively equated the Ironclad Oath to Section Three from 1871 on.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

for federal office because he had been engaged in supporting the rebellion—an inquiry very closely parallel to that contained in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, proposed by Congress just a few years later.

The Ironclad Oath required that prospective officeholders swear or affirm that they had not done any of several things. In that sense it did not function like a traditional oath of office—a promise of future behavior—but much more like a disqualification for past misbehavior.[277] It did indirectly what Section Three was soon to do directly. That makes the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers particularly instructive. Here's the oath, with its most-relevant-to-Section-Three features and phrases italicized (and with bracketed numbers inserted):

> I . . . do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never [1] voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have [2] voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have [3] neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have [4] not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto.

While not using the words insurrection or rebellion, the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers would seem strongly suggestive of how Section Three's triggering language likely would have been understood in public usage at the time. The Ironclad Oath is not a definition of Section Three's constitutional terms, of course. But it would appear an apt descriptive specification of the kinds of misconduct included within those terms. Under the oath, disqualifying behavior included: (1) fighting against the United States; (2) aiding or encouraging such armed hostility; (3) accepting office under a hostile authority (or "pretended authority"); and—a highly evocative phrase—(4) "yield[ing]" one's "voluntary support" to "any pretended government, authority, power or constitution . . . hostile or inimical" to the United States.

The content of this oath's requirement establishes a useful, historically prominent marker for the scope of Section Three: What the Ironclad Oath understood to be disqualifying for federal office, Section Three likely embraced as constitutionally disqualifying conduct for the far broader sweep of offices to which it extended.[278]

---

[277] For this reason, Lincoln famously wrote: "On principle I dislike an oath which requires a man to swear he has not done wrong. It rejects the Christian principle of forgiveness on terms of repentance. I think it is enough if the man does no wrong hereafter." Endorsement of Abraham Lincoln in Letter from R.M. Edwards to Edwin Stanton, February 5, 1864, 7 Lincoln Papers 169.

[278] The extensive overlap between the meaning of the Ironclad Oath and the Section Three disqualification is confirmed by Congress's own interpretation and application of the oath to its own members, during and after the enactment of Section Three. These applications are detailed infra Part IV.A.5.b.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ii. The Second Confiscation Act

Barely more than two weeks after adopting the Ironclad Oath, the Civil War Congress enacted what is popularly called the "Second Confiscation Act." Its full title spoke explicitly in terms of insurrection and rebellion: "An Act to suppress Insurrection, to punish Treason and Rebellion, to seize and confiscate the Property of Rebels, and for other Purposes."[279]

This Second Confiscation Act was a very prominent piece of legislation. It imposed sweeping penalties, forfeitures, and disqualifications on anybody who had engaged in or assisted the rebellion.[280] The Second Confiscation Act was long and vigorously debated in Congress, much discussed in the press and in public discourse, objected to by many on constitutional grounds, and nearly vetoed by President Lincoln.[281] Enactment of the Second Confiscation Act gave rise to very public pressure on President Lincoln to take aggressive action against slavery in rebel states—pressure that helped spur Lincoln to issue his Emancipation Proclamation as an executive military order. The Second Confiscation Act was a big deal. [282]

The Act itself was a complicated and somewhat confusing hodgepodge of distinct provisions, combining property confiscation, emancipation, a new federal crime,

---

[279] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). See also 12 Stat. 627 (1862) ("explanatory" joint resolution).

[280] An earlier act had provided for forfeiture more specifically of property or slaves actually used in service of rebellion. 12 Stat. 319 (Aug. 6, 1861).

[281] See generally David P. Currie, The Civil War Congress, 73 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1131, 1185-1195 (2006). Among many noteworthy twists and turns in the road to enactment, President Lincoln came close to vetoing the bill, preparing a veto message with his objections and signing the bill only after Congress passed an "explanatory" joint resolution (which Lincoln signed together with the bill). Lincoln nonetheless appended his original draft veto message setting forth his objections. For discussion of the constitutional objections of Lincoln and others to various aspects of the bill, and his unusual course of action in signing it but nonetheless appending his objections, see id. at 1193-1194; Burrus M. Carnahan, Act of Justice: Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation and the Law of War 105-106 (2007) (noting Lincoln's initial concern that the act would violate Article III's limitations on the punishment for treason and the objections of others that the act was a bill of attainder); Eric Foner, The Fiery Trial: Abraham Lincoln and American Slavery 215-217 (2010). For Lincoln's July 17, 1862 message to Congress, detailing his objections, see V Complete Works of Lincoln 328-331.

[282] A month after the Act had been adopted, Horace Greeley published a scathing editorial titled "The Prayer of Twenty Millions," in which he demanded that Lincoln "EXECUTE THE LAWS" faithfully with specific reference to the Second Confiscation Act. Greeley condemned Lincoln's "mistaken deference to Rebel Slavery" and his failure to rebuke his generals for having "habitually disregarded" the Confiscation Act. Lincoln replied to Greeley, equally prominently, within days, in a famous public letter dated August 22, 1862, published in a rival newspaper and "widely reprinted," defending his course of action. V Complete Works of Lincoln 388-389; see Holzer, supra note 254, at 400-401. One month later, Lincoln issued his Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in which he noted and quoted provisions of the Second Confiscation Act (without invoking the statute as actual authority for his proclamation). V Complete Works of Lincoln at 434-435 (stating that "attention is hereby called to" provisions of the act but relying for authority on his powers as executive and military Commander in Chief). See also Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 281, at 215 (noting that "the Second Confiscation Act embodied a major shift in national policy").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and disqualification from office. But the terms it used are especially evocative, visiting legal consequences on persons who "engaged in," "incite[d]," "set on foot," or "assist[ed]" "rebellion" or "insurrection" or who had "given aid or comfort" to rebellion or done acts "aiding and abetting" rebellion. The Act is practically a glossary of the terms used in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment proposed by Congress just four years later.

Specifically: Section 2 made it a new crime, distinct from treason, to "incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof" or to "give aid or comfort thereto" or to "engage in, or give aid and comfort to," any "existing rebellion or insurrection."[283] It is worth pausing to parse the linguistic resemblances to Section Three, and the ways in which like terms are used and explained. Following Lincoln, secession and civil war are equated with "rebellion or insurrection." Those terms are described as involving acts "against the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof" (a formulation closely conforming to our working definitions). Section 2 imposes criminal liability on persons who "incite" such acts; who "set on foot" such acts; who "assist" such acts; who in any other way "engage in" such conduct; or who "give aid and comfort to" such conduct. All of these terms have close parallels in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Section 3 of the Act then imposed a sweeping disqualification from future officeholding—a kind of proto-Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "every person guilty of either of the offences described in this act shall be forever incapable and disqualified to hold any office under the United States."[284] Section 5 directed the President to seize rebel property belonging to a long list of confederate officers plus anyone in a loyal state who "shall hereafter assist and give aid and comfort to such rebellion."[285] Officeholding in a rebel government or military was per se blameworthy participation; but general giving of assistance or aid or comfort also qualified as participation in rebellion. Section 6 provided a further authorization for seizure of the property of any person not already mentioned who, "being engaged in armed rebellion against the government of the United States, or aiding or abetting such rebellion," and, after sixty days' notice issued by the President, did not "cease to aid, countenance, and abet such rebellion, and return to his allegiance to the United States."[286]

---

[283] 12 Stat. 589, 590. (emphasis added). Section 2 provided penalties for conviction, which included confiscation of slaves. A modified version of this provision remains a crime today, and continues to incorporate the Confiscation Act's disqualification from federal office, id., as well. 18 U.S.C. §2383 ("Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States."). Needless to say, a prosecution under Section 2383 of Title 18 is neither a prerequisite to nor preclusive of the self-executing application of Section Three of the Constitution.

[284] 12 Stat. 589, 590.

[285] Id. (emphasis added.)

[286] Id. at 591.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section 7 and Section 8 provided for in rem proceedings against property "found to have belonged to a person engaged in rebellion, or who has given aid or comfort thereto," in which case it "shall be condemned as enemies' property."[287] And Section 9 famously emancipated slaves of persons "who shall hereafter be engaged in rebellion" against the Union or who "shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto."[288] Throughout these sections, one can see the recurrent use of terms and concepts, and synonyms for such terms, that would reappear in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "engaged in," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "abet," "countenance," "enemies."

Unlike the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act did not give rise to many opportunities for immediate application and further interpretation. In part, this was simply due to the exigencies and realities of Civil War at the time. For example, the civil forfeiture provisions contemplated in rem judicial proceedings against persons in the district where property was located. At the time, such property was often located in areas of rebel control. Often, the federal courts were not even functioning there [289] Similarly, as a practical matter, criminal prosecutions of rebels for treason and insurrection had to await Union military success. (And after success came, President Andrew Johnson ultimately pardoned a great many offenders.)[290] The Lincoln administration, focused on other matters, showed little interest in bringing legal actions to enforce the Act's specific policies. The administration, according to one scholar, "chose not to implement the law vigorously."[291] Attorney General Bates "exerted no more than a minimal effort to make the first and second confiscation acts work."[292] And the Act's section authorizing limited military emancipation section was rapidly overtaken—superseded in practical effect—by President Lincoln's far more comprehensive Emancipation Proclamation, issued pursuant to his constitutional Commander in Chief power.

But in some ways the lack of enforcement cases is beside our point here, which concerns the Act's prominence in national discussions and its pervasive use of terms, phrases, and concepts—rebellion, insurrection, engage in, aid or comfort—that would

---

[287] Id.

[288] Id.

[289] See McPherson, supra note 228, at 500 (noting confusing aspects of the Second Confiscation Act and the requirement of "in rem proceedings by district courts that were of course not functioning in the rebellious states"); Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 281, at 215 ("For most property, [the Act] established a cumbersome judicial process that helps to explain why little land was actually seized and sold under its provisions."). See also Silvana R. Siddali, From Property to Person: Slavery and the Confiscation Acts, 1861-1862, at 238 (2005) (remarking that "[t]he confiscation bill that finally emerged was neither sweeping nor enforceable" though opining that "if the law had not been hobbled by its own internal inconsistencies, it might have affected the lives and property of a large majority of southerners.").

[290] See Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 141-152 (1960).

[291] John Syrett, The Civil War Confiscation Acts: Failing to Reconstruct the South 55 (2005).

[292] Id. at 72; see also James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems Under Lincoln 288-292 (1926) (describing minimal enforcement of the Second Confiscation Act).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reappear in only slightly different form in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act employed terminology nearly identical to that employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. The usage of the terms in this landmark legislation we think helps explicate the meaning, in public legal context, of the language in the amendment. In the context of 1860s public legal usage, engaging in or giving aid or comfort to rebellion and insurrection extended to a broad range of activity advancing or furthering efforts to unlawfully upend the lawful operation of the U.S. constitutional regime. This strongly supports the conclusion that Section Three's terms can fairly be read quite expansively, as embracing a broad range of conduct directed against the authority of government under the Constitution.

c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases

The most important constitutional decision of the U.S. Supreme Court during the Civil War was The Prize Cases.[293] There, the majority upheld the constitutionality of Lincoln's unilateral military order, made very early in the Civil War, imposing a blockade on Southern ports. In a truly landmark decision, the Supreme Court held that the President's war powers (including the power to impose a blockade) were triggered immediately, as soon as the South's rebellion took the form of organized military resistance to the authority of the U.S. government. The President's power to wage civil war against rebel forces derived from his delegated statutory power to employ force to suppress rebellion, the Court held. A congressional declaration of war was neither a prerequisite nor legally appropriate for this type of use of force: "This greatest of civil wars was not gradually developed by popular commotion, tumultuous assemblies, or local unorganized insurrections" but "sprung forth suddenly … in the full panoply of war. The President was bound to meet it in the shape it presented itself, without waiting for Congress to baptize it with a name."[294]

The Court's decision in The Prize Cases is today regarded as the leading judicial exposition of the Constitution's allocation of war powers. At the time, the case had other hugely consequential implications: the principles set forth in the decision essentially endorsed in advance (but of course without addressing the question directly) Lincoln's constitutional justification for the Emancipation Proclamation, which he had issued earlier that year.[295] The decision of The Prize Cases was a very big deal indeed.

Of special interest for our purposes is the Court's usage and explanation—in a highly prominent legal context—of the terms insurrection and rebellion, and their relationship to war and the war powers of the national government: "Insurrection

---

[293] 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635 (1863).
[294] Id. at 668-669; see also Stephen I. Vladeck, Emergency Power and the Militia Acts, 114 Yale L. J. 149, 177-180 (2004).
[295] Paulsen, Emancipation, supra 258, at, 814-823.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government," the majority said.[296] A civil war "becomes such by its accidents—the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on."[297] Where a rebellion has come to possess certain military characteristics, the "party in rebellion" might come to be treated as a belligerent for law-of-war purposes, even though a domestic rebellion stands on different constitutional legal ground than war with a foreign nation. "It is not the less a civil war, with belligerent parties in hostile array, because it may be called an 'insurrection' by one side, and the insurgents be considered as rebels or traitors."[298]

In a nutshell: insurrection or rebellion were forms of active resistance to the lawful authority of the government. An insurrection might be something short of outright rebellion. But an insurrection against government authority sometimes grows into full-on "rebellion." A rebellion, in turn, need not take the form of civil war in order to be a rebellion. But sometimes it does. At all events, rebellion seems its own distinct, more general legal concept of repudiation or attempted overthrow of the lawful constitutional regime by unlawful means.

The Prize Cases also held that persons engaged in insurrection or rebellion could be treated as "enemies" (as well as traitors) for legal purposes. Further, the war power, such as imposition of a blockade, could lawfully affect the legal property rights of persons engaged in "commerce" that "supplies" rebels or insurrectionists—and could do so irrespective of the supposed loyalties of the property owner. Even "neutral" powers' shipping could be seized when it violated a blockade: "Whether property be liable to capture as 'enemies' property' does not in any manner depend on the personal allegiance of the owner. 'It is the illegal traffic that stamps it as "enemies' property."'"[299]

The Prize Cases' treatment of the concepts of insurrection and rebellion, of who constituted "enemies," and of what actions constituted support for rebellion, would have been very much part of the legal culture of the day and provides important legal background as to how these terms would have been understood at the time of the [296] 67 U.S. at 666 (emphasis added).

---

[297] Id. at 666
[298] Id. at 668.
[299] Id. at 674 (quoting 3 Wash. C.C.R. 183). That said, the Court also cautioned that " 'enemies' property" was "a technical phrase peculiar to prize courts, and depends upon principles of public policy, as distinguished from the common law." Id. at 674. The point that, in a military context, property could be treated as "enemies' property" irrespective of the allegiance of the owner was important to the lawfulness of the Emancipation Proclamation: even though Lincoln's proclamation purported to free the slaves of all persons in rebel-controlled territory – including slaves held by persons claiming to be loyal to the Union – such "property" constituted a resource assisting or supplying the rebellion and thus could be declared seized, confiscated, and liberated as a matter of the military law of war. See Paulsen, Emancipation, supra note 258. See generally John Fabian Witt, Lincoln's Code (2012).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751 drafting of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, just a few years later. Insurrection and rebellion involve varying degrees of concerted resistance to "the lawful authority of the Government," with insurrection being the arguably somewhat lesser form and rebellion the somewhat greater. A rebellion or insurrection need not involve acts tantamount to levying war. (War is sometimes a feature of rebellion but does not define it.) The Civil War was an outgrowth of insurrection or rebellion. But the fundamental act of rebellion remains the attempt to displace the lawful authority of government by unlawful means. And those who give material assistance to the enemy may also suffer legal consequences.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We find the overall evidence of prominent 1860s political and legal usage of the same concepts and language as would soon be employed by Section Three—"insurrection," "rebellion," and what it meant to "engage in" or provide "aid or comfort" to the same—highly probative of Section Three's original public meaning. President Lincoln, repeatedly and insistently; Congress, pointedly and consistently; and the Supreme Court, decisively, used these terms in connection with secession, forcible resistance to the legal authority of the Constitution, and participation to varying degrees in efforts to overthrow, subvert, or undermine the authority of lawful government. These usages were public, prominent, legal, and essentially undisputed within the Union. While the specific circumstances of secession and civil war gave rise to these formulations, they did not define or limit the terms' meanings, which were more general. Secession, and civil war, were species of insurrection and rebellion—organized, group resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws and attempts to substitute an unlawful legal regime for the lawful, constitutional one. But insurrection and rebellion were the broader categories. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that these 1860s Civil War usages of terms carried over into the meaning of Section Three.

5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples

a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally)

What about the Insurrection Acts themselves—the statutes that comprised the statutory authority supporting Lincoln's use of military force to suppress secession? These statutes implemented Congress's power "To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" as well as its other war powers over the army and navy. The central statute was enacted in 1795 (superseding a similar enactment in 1792) and was amended in 1807 and 1861. These statutes—the conduct they were understood to reach; the forms and degree of opposition to government authority that were believed to trigger the statutes' application; and the circumstances in which they had been invoked and applied in the past—also would have been part of the background understanding of the term "insurrection" as it came to be incorporated into Section Three.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The 1795 act explicitly recited that it was enacted in part to carry into execution the power to "suppress insurrections." But it also applied to repel invasions and to enforce federal law. Together, these were the three circumstances where Congress had the power to provide for calling out the militia.[300] Section One of the Act allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe," as well as, upon request of state authorities, "in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof."[301] Section Two allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act."[302] Section Two encompasses insurrections against the United States.[303] (Section One specifically deals only with insurrections against a state government.)

In 1807, Congress supplemented this power with the power to call out the army and navy in similar circumstances: "in all cases of insurrection, or obstruction to the laws, either of the United States, or of any individual state or territory, where it is lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ, for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval force of the United States as shall be judged necessary …" The 1807 act thus carried forward and repeated the 1795 act's understanding of insurrection.[304]

Finally, on July 29, 1861, Congress amended the trigger again to specifically describe "rebellion." It allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President of the United States, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States . . ."[305]

The various versions of the Insurrection Act illustrate a common theme: insurrection is more than ordinary law violation; it entails "combinations" or "assem-

---

[300] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15.
[301] 2 Stat. 424 (1795), sec. 1.
[302] Id. sec. 2. (emphasis added).
[303] That said, because Section Two is supported by both Congress's power to "suppress Insurrections" and its power "to execute the Laws of the Union," U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15. it could encompass instances of law enforcement that do not rise to the level of a constitutional "insurrection."
[304] 2 Stat. 443 (1807).
[305] 12 Stat. 281 (1861).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

blages," acting together, to "oppose[s]" or "obstruct" the ability of government to "execute" the law, in numbers "too powerful" to be suppressed by the usual means of law enforcement.[306]

Moreover, several famous instances in which this statutory authority had been (or might have been) invoked provide additional informative context for understanding "insurrection" or "rebellion." Consider just a few.

The "Whiskey Rebellion" was one famous such instance. In 1794, acting under the 1792 predecessor statute, President George Washington personally led militia forces into western Pennsylvania to suppress a large uprising against the government spurred by resistance to the enactment of a federal tax on distilleries. Notably, the Whiskey Rebellion involved armed mobs, organized and employed for the purposes of intimidating and threatening federal officers, keeping them from performing their duties under the law, and preventing others from assuming federal office (or inducing them to renounce their authority).[307]

We believe the "Whiskey Rebellion" would have been regarded in the nineteenth century as a classic illustration of what was meant by the terms insurrection and rebellion.[308] Indeed, by the time of the drafting of Section Three, it seems to have been regularly referred to in precisely those terms.[309] In commonplace usage, as well as in political, and legal discourse, the Whiskey Rebellion was a familiar illustration of an "insurrection" or "rebellion."

---

[306] Myles Lynch has written that there can exist no insurrection within the meaning of the Insurrection Acts unless the President proclaims that an insurrection exists and, further, that as a consequence, there can exist no insurrection or rebellion within the meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment unless the President proclaims that such an insurrection exists. Lynch, supra note 5, at 168, 214-215. This seems plainly wrong. If the Insurrection Act defines insurrection, it is defined as concerted and powerful obstruction of the execution of the laws by government. It is no part of this definition that an insurrection exists only if the President declares it to exist. The President's proclamation is a statutory prerequisite to the use of military force, not part of the definition of insurrection. The President can use force if he proclaims that there is an insurrection; but it is not an insurrection only because he proclaims it one.

[307] See generally Elkins & McKitrick, The Age of Federalism 461-474 (1993) (detailing actions of organized resistance, intimidation, and threats preventing federal officials from performing their duties – including tarring and feathering, whipping, surrounding of officials' homes by armed mobs, and kidnapping and coerced repudiation of federal authority); see also Ron Chernow, Alexander Hamilton 468-478 (2004) (similar); Robert W. Coakley, The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1789-1878, at 43-68 (1988) (documenting the resistance and military response).

[308] To be sure, one scholar of the Acts suggests that "[i]t may have been dubious whether actions of the Whiskey Rebellion farmers truly rose to the level of insurrection," and that Washington may have treated it as law-obstruction rather than insurrection. Vladeck, at 161 n. 46; see also Coakley, supra note 307, at 67 (suggesting that to "characterize the . . . affair as a 'riot' and the participants as 'rioters'" is "far closer to the truth"). But later sources called it at least an insurrection, see infra note 309.

[309] See Townsend Ward, The Insurrection of the Year 1794, in the western counties of Pennsylvania (J.B. Lippincott 1858); H.M. Brackenridge, History of the western insurrection in western Pennsylvania: commonly called the whiskey insurrection (W.S. Haven, 1859).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"Fries Rebellion," in 1799, was another well-known anti-tax revolt, this time in eastern Pennsylvania.[310] President John Adams invoked the 1795 Act to suppress the "insurrection," as he called it,[311] which had involved threats, intimidation, and violence directed at federal tax assessors by organized bands of persons designed to prevent the assessors from performing their duties, and further such acts directed against the ability of the government to arrest tax resisters. In at least one instance, armed opponents of the government successfully freed prisoners from federal custody. The Adams administration's suppression of the insurrection led to widely publicized treason prosecutions[312] of leaders and instigators of the unlawful resistance, including John Fries. As with the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries Rebellion was characterized by concerted acts of forcible interference with federal officials' ability to perform their duties under law.[313]

Nat Turner's Rebellion, a violent slave revolt in 1831, did not lead to a presidential invocation of the Insurrection Act.[314] But it surely would have been a classic illustration of at least an "insurrection" and perhaps even a "rebellion"—a concerted uprising seeking forcibly to overturn the legal order and thwart government's ability to execute the law. A published report of Turner's own account called it both an insurrection[315] and in one instance an "open rebellion."[316] This example, too, likely would have formed part of the background understanding of the terms insurrection or rebellion at the time they were employed in Section Three.

More broadly, slavery and anti-slavery produced other prominent incidents that would have been classed as small or large insurrections against government—instances that went beyond individual instances of legal disobedience, or of resistance to the laws themselves, and rose to the level of active, concerted, unlawful resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws. Specifically, revolt against the

---

[310] Coakley, supra note 307, 69-77.

[311] John Adams, Proclamation on Insurrection in Pennsylvania, 12 March 1799, https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Adams/99-02-02-3377

[312] These prosecutions also occasioned a widely-cited jury charge from Circuit Justice Chase, in which he repeatedly discussed "insurrection," describing it as a "rising of any body of the people" and arguing that it qualified as treason because "an insurrection to resist or prevent, by force, the execution of any statute of the United States, has a direct tendency to dissolve all the bands of society, to destroy all order and all laws, and also all security for the lives, liberties and property of the citizens of the United States." Case of Fries, 9 F. Cas. 924, 930 (C.C.D. Pa. 1800).

[313] But see Elkins & McKitrick at 696-700 (questioning "whether the circumstances really called for military force of any kind").

[314] Federal troops were used to suppress this and other slave rebellions, but "without following the legal procedures laid down in the statutes of 1795 and 1807." Coakley, supra note 307, at 92-94. Coakley suggests that this the failure to go through the Insurrection Acts reflected "the universal dread of slave revolts" at the time and the fact that "t]he slaves had no political constituency." Id. at 94.

[315] See The Confessions of Nat Turner, The Leader of the Late Insurrection in Southampton, VA, as fully and voluntarily made to Thomas R. Gray, at 3, 5, 7, 20, 22 (1831) (calling it "insurrection"); see also Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Nat Turner's Insurrection, 8 Atlantic Monthly 173 (1861)

[316] See Turner, supra note 315, at 3 ("The late insurrection . . . is the first instance in our history of an open rebellion of the slaves") (emphases added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 sometimes took the form of slave liberation in open defiance of government authority. For example, in Boston in 1850 and 1851, a local vigilance committee invoked "the 'higher law' doctrine" to openly harbor freed slaves to the point that President Millard Fillmore "threatened to send in federal troops."[317] In Christiana, Pennsylvania in 1851, a Quaker community took up arms (!) to defend fugitive slaves, shooting several slaveowners who had arrived from nearby Maryland. This was denounced as an "act of insurrection," and this time President Fillmore did call out federal troops.[318] In Wisconsin in 1859, resistance to federal authority became so widespread as to prefigure the coming of the Civil War.[319] And of course John Brown's fateful raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859 was an explicit act of insurrection and rebellion: a quixotic and ill-prepared attempt to foment a massive slave insurrection and to overthrow the power of proslavery governments in the South.[320] These rebels and insurrectionists were fighting deeply unjust laws, but there is no question that they committed many acts of insurrection nonetheless. Rebellion for a good cause is still rebellion.

Another prominently identified insurrection or rebellion would have been Dorr's Rebellion, in Rhode Island, in 1841-1842 which led to the Supreme Court's 1849 decision in Luther v. Borden.[321] There, a cabal claiming to constitute the new, lawful government of Rhode Island engaged in forcible resistance to and sought to overturn the authority of the prior, lawful state government (the "charter" government that traced its authority to Rhode Island's original colonial charter). The federal government did not invoke the Insurrection Act to intervene, but it well might have. When the Supreme Court ultimately adjudicated the case—through the vehicle of a trespass suit by a member of one faction, against members of the other—the Court held that the question of which government constituted the lawful government of the state was a political question committed to the judgment of Congress and the President and that the judiciary lacked authority to interfere with the political branches' actions (and inactions), which had tacitly supported the charter government. The practical result of the decision—relevant to our inquiry– was that the losing side in the struggle (the faction headed by Mr. Dorr) legally could be treated by the prevailing side (the charter government) as having engaged in "insurrection" against the [317] See McPherson, supra note 228, at 81-84; Cf. Coakley, supra note 307, at 130-131 (noting debate about whether this disturbance in Boston was sufficiently great to trigger the insurrection acts).

---

[318] McPherson, supra note 228, at 84-85. See also Thomas Slaughter, Bloody Dawn: The Christian Riot and Racial Violence in the Antebellum North (1991); and cf. id. at ix ("The line between riot and rebellion was shifting during the antebellum period.").

[319] See generally H. Robert Baker, The Rescue of Joshua Glover: A Fugitive Slave, the Constitution, and the Coming of the Civil War (2006) (describing resistance, in the mid-to-late1850s, in Wisconsin to federal legal authority to execute the Fugitive Slave Act).

[320] McPherson, supra note 228, 202-208. Federal troops helped suppress this insurrection and rebellion too. See Coakley, supra note 307, at 193 ("This intervention was, as in the case of Nat Turner's Rebellion, an emergency measure undertaken without the usual formalities.").

[321] Luther v. Borden, 58 U.S. (7 How.) 1 (1849). On Dorr's Rebellion generally and the federal response, see Coakley, supra note 307, at 119-127.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

rightful state government. The Court noted, and seemingly accepted, the charter government's characterization of plaintiff and others having "assembled in arms . . . for the purpose of overthrowing the government by military force"[322] and as having attempted "to assert the authority of [the Dorr government] by force,"[323] as amounting to having "engaged in the insurrection."[324] The Court also referred to the government's actions as having been designed to suppress that "insurrection."[325] The Court appeared to equate with "insurrection" the Dorr group's attempts to displace or supersede the existing government and forcibly assert its own claimed authority as a replacement.

Finally, several notable invocations of the Insurrection Act occurred during the period of Reconstruction during the presidency of Ulysses S. Grant.[326] While these events occurred after ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment (and thus could not have formed any part of the subjective understanding of the drafters and ratifiers of the meaning of Section Three), they nonetheless deserve mention as roughly contemporaneous evidence of the objective meaning of "insurrection" as displayed by important usage within a few years of adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. Briefly summarized: In South Carolina in 1871, Grant twice invoked the Insurrection Act (as well as suspending habeas corpus, among other actions) to secure order in dealing with the Ku Klux Klan.[327] In Louisiana, in 1872, a contested gubernatorial election spawned efforts by white supremacists to overthrow the elected pro-Reconstruction Republican government, culminating in the infamous "Colfax Massacre" of April 13, 1873, in which a white mob attacked and massacred perhaps 150 black citizens who had been defending a courthouse in Colfax, Louisiana and, more broadly, the Reconstruction Republican government. President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act as authority to suppress the insurrection that sought to overturn the election result.[328] Later, in 1874, Grant again invoked the Insurrection Act in Louisiana, this time to suppress a white supremacist coup d'etat that had overthrown the Republican governor by force.[329] Federal troops reinstated the lawful government, but the insurrectionists established a rival state government that effectively controlled much of Louisiana outside of the capital—New Orleans at the time. (The conflict lasted until 1877,

---

[322] Luther, 58 U.S. (7 How.) at 8.
[323] Id. at 37
[324] Id. at 46
[325] Id. at 45.
[326] By this time, the Act had been amended yet again. See 17 Stat. 13, 14-15 (1871), §§ 3-4.
[327] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 197, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Mar. 24, 1871); http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70253; Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 200, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 12, 1871); for background see Michael Bahar, The Presidential Intervention Principle: The Domestic Use of the Military and the Power of the Several States, 5 Harv. Nat'l Sec. J. 537, 613-14 (2014); Lou Falkner Williams, The Great South Carolina Ku Klux Klan Trials, 1871-1872, at 39-49 (1996).
[328] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 213, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (May 22, 1873) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70364
[329] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 220, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (Sept. 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70422

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

when Reconstruction was abandoned by the national government and white supremacists took full control of the state.) In Mississippi, in 1874, white supremacists fabricated criminal charges against the newly elected black sheriff, Peter Crosby, and deposed him by mob action.[330] Black citizens organizing an effort to reinstate Crosby were attacked by white mobs, resulting in the massacre of as many as 300 black citizens. Again, President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act and sent federal troops to reinstate Crosby and prevent further violence. Also in 1874, in Arkansas, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to quell violence in an ongoing dispute over the 1872 gubernatorial election results.[331] And in 1876, in South Carolina, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to protect the gubernatorial election process from white supremacist groups.[332] Common to each of these instances during the Grant administration was the idea that concerted efforts to overturn lawful popular election results by mob action, force, violence, and intimidation constituted "insurrection" against government.

It is difficult to evaluate precisely the probative force of all of these incidents, and application of federal authority to suppress "insurrections," for understanding Section Three. But they were unquestionably part of the picture, contributing to the background for understanding Section Three's terms. They were very much part of a common historical vocabulary of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and culpable participation in the same, familiar to those who drafted and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment: The Whiskey Rebellion, Shay's Rebellion, Nat Turner's Rebellion, Dorr's Rebellion, the insurrections against the Fugitive Slave Act in the 1850s, John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859—all of these incidents would have informed the general understanding of what constitutes "insurrection or rebellion" and what actions amount to having "engaged in" or given "aid or comfort" to such uprisings. They all tend to support our working definitions of Section Three's terms. Even President Grant's post-1868 invocations of the Insurrection Act, to combat attempts to overthrow election results or displace lawful state authority, may shine some interpretive light backward on Section Three's meaning. If an uprising of similar nature to these events were to occur, it seems to us that it likely would have been understood as an insurrection or rebellion within the coverage of Section Three.

b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates

As noted above, the federal Ironclad Oath adopted during the Civil War closely paralleled the requirements and consequences of Section Three. These parallels are drawn more sharply by a series of cases where both houses of Congress enforced the oath to exclude their own prospective members from being seated. As one scholar has

---

[330]Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 223, Law and Order in the State of Mississippi (Dec. 21, 1874), http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70459.

[331] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 218, Law and Order in the State of Arkansas (May 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70420.

[332] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 232, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 17, 1876) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70542.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

put it, these debates "were littered with relevant concepts, and we can judge the Fortieth Congress's reception to those similar arguments as indicative of their expectations as to Section 3's application."[333] Moreover, several of these proceedings occurred right around the time of the proposal and ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In some cases after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, Congress applied Section Three itself, further demonstrating continuity and overlap with the Ironclad Oath.

The familiar source compiling the houses' debates on such matters of internal administration is Hinds' Precedents, which we rely on here.[334]

First, Kentucky: In 1867, Kentucky submitted eight members-elect to the House, seven of whom were challenged as ineligible on the ground that they had given aid or comfort to the Confederacy, during the Civil War. The Committee on Elections concluded that "no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion," ought to be sworn or seated.[335] A subsequent report determined that such charges needed to be "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony" and establish more than mere lack of active support for the Union or passive sympathy for the rebellion but that "the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion."[336] Such acts or speech need not rise to the level of constitutional treason, but they "must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion."[337]

On this standard, the committee found that four of the challenged members-elect were not proved to have either "engaged in armed hostility" to the Government or provided "aid and comfort" to its adversaries. These four were admitted to their seats. Three others—John Y. Brown, John D. Young, and Lawrence Trimble—posed more serious difficulty, however. The House ultimately refused to seat either Brown or Young but admitted Trimble. The facts of these cases are instructive explorations of the boundaries between free speech and "aid or comfort" to rebellion.

The House addressed the John Y. Brown case first. "This election case," Hinds' reports, was "the first of its kind since the formation of the Constitution, and recognized by the House as of the highest importance."[338] It also involved an incident of [333] Lynch, supra note 5, at 196. Lynch ably and accurately describes the most important such cases. See id. at 196-201, 207-210. We find little or nothing to disagree with in his account and analysis of these disputes and are indebted to Lynch's research and analysis.

---

[334] See generally 1 Asher C. Hinds, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, ch. 14, pp. 431-486 (1907).
[335] Id. §448 at 442.
[336] Id. at 443 (emphasis added).
[337] Id.
[338] Id. at 445.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

pure speech as disqualifying a member-elect from office: John Y. Brown had explicitly embraced and advocated violent resistance to the Union in Kentucky. Indeed, he had gone so far as to urge the shooting of any man who volunteered for service in Union forces. Brown's disqualifying conduct consisted solely of such acts of speech. The committee relied on a letter Brown had written to the Louisville Courier in 1861 in which Brown had gone to great lengths to affirm his support for the rebellion in unequivocal terms:

> Editors Louisville Courier:
>
> My attention has been called to the following paragraph, which appeared in your paper of this date:
>
> "JOHN YOUNG BROWN'S POSITION.– This gentleman, in reply to some searching interrogatories put to him by Governor Helm, said, in reference to the call of the President for four regiments of volunteers to march against the South—
> 'I would not send one solitary man to aid that Government, and those who volunteer should be shot down in their tracks.'"
> This ambiguous report of my remarks has, I find, been misunderstood by some who have read it, who construe my language to apply to the government of the Confederate States! What I did say was this:
> "Not one man or one dollar will Kentucky furnish Lincoln to aid him in his unholy war against the South. If this northern army shall attempt to cross our borders, we will resist it unto the death; and if one man shall be found in our Commonwealth to volunteer to join them he ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."
> This was not said in reply to any question propounded by ex-Governor Helm, as you have stated, and is no more than I frequently uttered public and privately prior to my debate with him.
> Respectfully,
>
> JOHN YOUNG BROWN.[339]

The House concluded, on the strength of this letter alone, that Brown had supported the rebellion and therefore voted to exclude him. This became a precedent for the House's subsequent actions in other cases. The standard applied—whether the facts, "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony," showed that an individual had, by an "act or speech … overt and public … done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion"—had been satisfied by Brown's letter.[340]

---

[339] Quoted in id. at §449, p. 445.
[340] Id. at §449, pp. 443, 448.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Similarly, in March 1868, the House excluded John D. Young under this standard. Young's case also involved speech. The Young case involved numerous expressions of support and sympathy for the South and against the Union, and the committee explicitly took the position "that 'aid and comfort' may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion" by a person (like Young, a county judge) in an "influential position."[341] But Young's case was overdetermined, because there was also testimony that Young had provided material assistance to Confederate troops, by giving them food and provisions and assisting in the capture by Confederate troops of a Union soldier. According to the committee, Young's "expressions and admissions" of sympathy for the enemy, "taken in connection with the open acts of 'aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States,'" established that he could not "'honestly and truly take the oath,'"[342] and the full House agreed.

The contrasting case of Lawrence Trimble, however, showed that mere political opposition did not establish disloyalty. Aside from some overly vague allegations that he had traded with the enemy, the core of the case against Trimble were his political speeches. Trimble had been the Union candidate for Congress in 1861 and "made Union speeches in that canvass throughout the district." Trimble opposed Lincoln's war policies after the Emancipation Proclamation, asserting that the North was waging "an abolition war" and reportedly was opposed to "voting any more men or money to aid in carrying it on." These views and statements, however, were not materially different from other members' statements in Congress opposing the administration's policy. The committee (and House) considered Trimble's "loyalty unquestioned" and found no case for disqualifying him.[343]

Next consider Tennessee: Tennessee supplied two interesting membership cases, one in the House and one in the Senate. Both involved undoubtedly pro-Union men who nonetheless had held state office under Tennessee's secessionist regime and sworn oaths under it, while seemingly using their positions to support Union interests and resist the secession government. This presented a distinct problem under the Ironclad Oath, which required its swearer to disaffirm that he had ever accepted or exercised office under a pretended government hostile to the United States. What to do? In each case—Senator-elect David Patterson, who had served as a state court judge in the eastern region of Tennessee during the Confederate regime; and Representative-elect R.R. Butler, who had retained his seat in the state legislature during secession, while opposing it—the respective house ultimately admitted the applicant to his seat and permitted him to take a modified oath omitting the never-held-office-under-a-hostile-regime sentence.[344]

---

[341] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).
[342] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).
[343] Id. at §453, p. 459.
[344] Id. at §453, 455, pp. 459-461, 462-465. In Butler's case, two-thirds of both houses voted him amnesty. Id. at 464-465. In Patterson's case, the Senate tried to pass a bill altering the oath for Patterson, but the House tabled it, id. at 46, but perhaps that is okay, if application of the Ironclad Oath, to

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A potentially broad understanding of "aid or comfort" also surfaced in the exclusion of Maryland Senator-elect Philip Thomas in 1867.[345] What had Thomas done to support the South in its rebellion? Apparently, he had permitted his minor son, a member of his household, to join the Confederate army, and given his son $100 on the way out the door. The Senate debated whether Thomas had done anything more by way of counsel or encouragement of his son's taking up arms against the United States and it is not clear how the senators evaluated such evidence. Some seemed to have thought Thomas's treatment of his son disqualifying. Others focused instead on allegations that Thomas had resigned as President Buchanan's Treasury Secretary because he disagreed with the President's decision to send federal reinforcements to Charleston Harbor.[346] Either theory of Thomas's exclusion suggests that "aid or comfort" to rebellion was understood to sweep broadly and possibly include conduct of a somewhat more passive or quiescent nature—allowing one's son to become a rebel soldier, under circumstances where such permission (and financial assistance) might have been withheld; opposing, or resisting, measures to suppress insurrection and defend national institutions and personnel, and resigning office in protest against such measures.

Cases like these continued in the House and Senate after Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment had taken effect. By this point, the basic principles were more established, and the cases were sometimes more factbound or less illuminating, but they further confirm the continuity between Section Three and the Ironclad Oath, and illustrate the understanding of Section Three very shortly after its adoption.

To recount them very briefly: In 1868, John Christy had received the most votes for Congress in Georgia's sixth district, but the House committee found that Christy, by his own admission, had given "aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement" to persons in armed hostility against the Union and therefore, "in accordance with the precedent in the case of John Y. Brown," was disqualified by the Ironclad Oath, and he was not seated.[347] In 1869, the House sat John Rice from Kentucky despite a divided House committee's conclusion that he was disqualified by Section Three.[348] The pages of the Congressional Globe reveal a debate about whether Rice had in fact joined the Confederate Army, which turned on the dubious credibility of members of Congress, is a function of each house's separate power to make rules governing its proceedings. U.S. Const. art. I §5.

---

[345] Hinds' at §§457, 458 at pp. 465-470.

[346] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470 (reporting that Senator Sumner withdrew a resolution focused on Thomas's son "it being urged that Mr. Thomas's conduct as a Cabinet officer in 1860 afforded more certain grounds for action."). See also Cong. Globe 40th Cong. 2nd Sess. at 1260-1262 (Feb. 19, 1868).

[347] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470-472. Interestingly, the Governor of Georgia had concluded that Christy was disqualified under Section Three while the House committee relied on the Ironclad Oath "independently of any question as to ineligibility under the fourteenth amendment," id.

[348] Hinds' at §460, pp. 472-473.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

two witnesses.[349] In 1870, the House allowed Representative George Booker of Virginia to keep his seat, despite subsequent charges that he had directly supported the militia of the rebel government in his role as justice of the peace. But Booker made an apparently persuasive case that he had been loyal all along, even as he worked within the Confederacy, and as a practical matter he had already been seated. For one reason or the other, the House ultimately voted to table the issue, leaving Booker in office.[350] Also in 1870, the House allowed Representative Lewis McKenzie of Virginia to sit, despite various votes he had taken as a member of the Virginia house of delegates in 1861—votes pledging Virginia's commitment to "unite her destiny with the slaveholding States of the South" should attempts to reconcile differences between North and South fail, supporting Virginia's willingness to fight, and to provision Virginia fighters. Because all of these votes occurred before voter ratification of Virginia's secession ordinance on May 23, 1861, and because McKenzie remained "an outspoken Union man" after secession and throughout the war, the House concluded he had neither engaged in rebellion nor given it aid or comfort.

Finally, in 1871, the Senate declined to seat Senator-elect Zebulon Vance from North Carolina.[351] The exclusion of Vance was a particularly easy case. After serving in Congress, he had led Confederate troops in battle against the Union and then became the wartime governor of Confederate-regime North Carolina.[352] If anyone had engaged in rebellion and given aid or comfort to the Union's enemies, it was Vance. He was clearly barred by both Section Three and by the Ironclad Oath. He could be seated only if Congress chose to exercise amnesty, which it did not do until later.[353]

These congressional seating challenges suggest some rough lines as to what Congress thought was "aid or comfort" to the Confederacy. On one hand, direct material support for the rebel cause—providing supplies or working with enemy forces—

---

[349] Congressional Globe, 41st Cong, 2nd Sess. pp. 5442-5447 (July 11, 1870). Rice had also been in the Kentucky legislature and voted for a resolution against the coercion of the southern states; but everybody agreed this was not enough to count as aid or comfort, because it was only in January 1861: "No war exist[ed] at the time" and it was before "the policy of the Government had been announced." Id. at 5443 (Butler); see also id. at 5445 (Garfield). Nor could Rice be excluded solely because of his politics. See id. at 5445 ("[T]his man was a Democrat. That is a political sin, but it is not a crime under the law. He is a Democrat yet. I think he is very wrong in being that, but yet it is not a crime.") (Logan).

[350] Hinds' at §461, pp. 474-475.

[351] See generally Hinds' at §463, pp. 478-486.

[352] See generally Richard E. Yates, Zebulon B. Vance: as War Governor of North Carolina, 1862-1865, 3 J. Southern Hist. 43 (1937).

[353] Vance ultimately had the last laugh. Vance was excluded from the 1872 amnesty statute because he had served in the thirty-sixth Congress, Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142; https://bioguide.congress.gov/search/bio/V000021. Cf. Franklin Ray Shirley, Zebulon Vance, Tarheel Spokesman 71 & 152 n. 36 (1962) (claiming that Vance had been waiting for the 1872 amnesty until his opponent Abbott had somehow engineered the amendment to the 1872 act that excluded Vance), but Congress then passed a private bill granting him individual amnesty. 17 Stat. 691 (June 10, 1872). Thanks to Gerard Magliocca for this source. Vance subsequently returned to the North Carolina governorship, and then to the Senate until his death in 1884. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 111 n. 126.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

was clearly aid or comfort. On the other hand, disfavored political beliefs and pre-war political stances were clearly not. In between lay contested territory. But there was no bright line, for instance, protecting all speech or political activity. In some situations, speech alone could be disqualifying. A sufficiently clear and unequivocal statement of disloyalty in the form of proposed active resistance to Union authority or encouragement to violence against Union forces appears generally to have been thought disqualifying. Voluntarily holding confederate office or advocating resistance to the Union also could be enough to disqualify. We do not suggest these individual applications—many of which were contested and complicated—are strictly binding. But they provide useful concrete evidence for how parts of Section Three may well have been understood and thought to work.[354]

6. Legislative History

There is only a little fruit to be gleaned from the legislative history of the Fourteenth Amendment—the records of the proposing Congress's debates over its various provisions and of state ratification debates. The Fourteenth Amendment's legislative history is famously voluminous, and Section Three—like the other "forgotten" sections of the Amendment (Section Two and Section Four)—was much more salient to the debates then than it is to today.[355] As briefly noted above, the legislative history supports the key propositions we have advanced earlier in this article—that Section Three was designed to be general and prospective, and not limited to the situation of the Civil War and Reconstruction; that Section Three's disqualification was seen by proponents and opponents alike to be self-executing and automatic; and that Section Three was understood to supersede (or satisfy) prior constitutional limitations.[356]

Perhaps somewhat surprisingly, however, we have found relatively few interpretive insights about the scope of conduct triggering disqualification under Section Three. What evidence there is generally confirms the understanding that the provision would have sweeping consequences: there appears to have been substantial agreement—by both opponents and proponents—that the provision would cover a broad range of activity supporting or assisting the South's efforts to throw off the authority of the Union and the Constitution. The original proposal would have excluded all such persons from voting, not just officeholding and, further, would not have been limited in its coverage to former oath-swearing federal and state officeholders. However, the language concerning what conduct triggered disfranchisement (and, as later revised, disqualification from officeholding) was carried forward

[354] Finally, though it occurred long after this period, there has been one additional congressional exclusion under Section Three: the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. See supra notes 219-221 and accompanying text. The Berger episode of course has no probative value about the original meaning of Section Three, since it occurred more than 50 years after Section Three was enacted. In our view, the House's decision was mistaken—an overzealous reading of the law, the facts, or both.

[355] See generally Graber, Volume 1, supra note 8.

[356] See supra notes 12, 59, & 181.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

throughout the discussion. Opponents of what eventually became Section Three thought the range of what was included in disability-triggering conduct (that is, when one might be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion or given "aid or comfort" to it) was hugely broad in its reach, sweeping in nearly everybody in the rebel South—and viewed the proposal as regrettable on account of such breadth. Significantly, proponents of the amendment did not disagree with its opponents concerning the breadth of the description of disability-triggering conduct. The proponents simply thought such breadth appropriate, necessary, and valuable.[357]

As things proceeded, Congress narrowed the provision in two specific respects. Congress backed away from complete disfranchisement to disqualification from holding office. And relatedly, it narrowed Section Three to cover only those who had sworn a prior oath of loyalty to the U.S. Constitution as federal or state officeholders. Rather than disenfranchising pretty much the entire white South, it would disqualify from future office those who had held constitutional office and then rebelled.

But what did not change was the broad description of the conduct that triggered disfranchisement (in the earlier proposal) or disqualification from office (in the proposal eventually agreed to).[358] As noted, there is not a great deal of explication of what this conduct was, exactly. But the overall tenor of the debates over what became Section Three suggest that all meaningful connection with, support for, or aid to the Confederacy—officeholding, military service (whether voluntary or not), political support or endorsement, provision of material assistance to rebellion or rebel forces—was regarded by the proposing Congress as covered. The legislative history of Section Three—such as it is—supports a broad understanding of the prohibition contained in its language.

7. Early Applications of Section Three

---

[357] See generally Graber Section Three manuscript, supra note 12.

[358] Congress also rejected a series of proposed amendments to Section Three that would have narrowed or limited the conduct or persons to which the language would apply – e.g., only to persons who joined the Confederacy while still holding prior office under the U.S. Constitution; only to persons who had sworn oaths to the Constitution since 1851; only to persons who had not received presidential pardons; and only to persons who had voluntarily served the confederacy. Republican defenders of Section Three successfully opposed these proposed limitations on Section Three's scope, arguing that limiting the ban to persons who still held office under the Constitution when they joined the Confederacy would indulge the pretext that resignation from office before engaging in or assisting rebellion absolved one of any prior duty of loyalty to the United States Constitution. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. p. 2770 (statement of Sen. Howard). Republicans likewise rejected the proposed limitation to persons who had "voluntarily" assisted or participated in rebellion, because it would raise unnecessary and difficult proof problems and permit spurious claims of involuntary participation. Indeed, one senator noted that Alexander Stephens, Vice President of the Confederacy, had testified before the Joint Committee on Reconstruction that he "never entered into the rebellion voluntarily"! Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. p. 2918 (statement of Sen. Willey).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A final set of evidence comes from the handful of cases applying Section Three shortly after its adoption. Once again, because these examples come after the provision was adopted, they do not provide direct evidence of its original public meaning, but they still can be informative.[359] Section Three came up in a range of procedural and institutional situations; each of these situations further confirms Section Three's broad substantive sweep.[360]

For instance, the 1867 Military Reconstruction Act—which imposed provisional governments on the southern states until they obtained readmission to representation in Congress by enacting new, republican, Reconstruction-compliant constitutions—directly incorporated Section Three of the proposed (but not yet ratified) Fourteenth Amendment as a restriction on those governments. Persons disqualified under Section Three could not hold office under the provisional governments, nor could they serve in—or even vote for those who would serve in—the state's constitutional convention.[361]

Andrew Johnson's attorney general, Henry Stanbery, published a two-part opinion in 1867 setting forth his interpretation of the Act and thus, indirectly, of Section Three.[362] Stanberry's opinion is explicitly slanted toward a narrow construction of Section Three, because of his concerns that it would be punitive and ex post facto in this context.[363] Even so, Stanberry's opinion found Section Three's definition of what constituted participation in rebellion to be quite broad:

> "All those who, in legislative or other official capacity, were engaged in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, or persons who, in their individual capacity, have done any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion, may well be said, in the meaning of this law, to have engaged in rebellion."[364]

As to individuals, Stanberry also reiterated several times that any voluntary support, even if not violent, was covered and culpable. He found "it to be clear, that in the

---

[359] See, e.g., Baude, Liquidation, supra note 237, at 61-62; Paulsen, Most Dangerous, supra note 237, at 293, 303.

[360] Additionally, some of Congress's application of the Ironclad Oath to its own members also entailed the application of Section Three, see supra Part IV.A.5.b.

[361] An Act to provide for the more efficient Government of the Rebel States, 14 Stat. 428, 429, sec. 5-6 (March 2., 1867).

[362] Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 141 (1867); Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 182 (1867).

[363] 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 159-160. But see supra Part III.A-B (explaining why the constitutional ex post facto and attainder principles do not apply to Section Three, especially as applied to new insurrections and rebellions).

[364] Id. at 161-162 (emphasis added)

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

sense of this law persons may have engaged in rebellion without having actually levied war or taken arms,"[365] and added that "wherever an act is done voluntarily in aid of the rebel cause . . . it must work disqualification under this law."[366]

Subsequent cases took even broader positions. For instance, in the 1869 decision of Worthy v. Barrett, the North Carolina Supreme Court concluded that a state sheriff was disqualified under Section Three for holding basically the same office as a sheriff when his state was in rebellion. The court's reasoning on this issue was succinct but clear:

> What will amount to having engaged in the rebellion?
>
> (1st.) Holding any of these offices under the Confederate government.
>
> 2d Voluntarily aiding the rebellion, by personal service, or by contributions, other than charitable, of any thing that was useful or necessary in the Confederate service.[367]

That is, the North Carolina Supreme Court embraced Stanberry's view that almost any voluntary assistance to the rebel cause was a form of engaging in rebellion, but also held that holding any office, even an ordinary non-military office far from the front lines, was a form of engaging in rebellion covered by Section Three.[368]

Shortly after this—and shortly after Chief Justice Chase's unsound and unfortunate decision in Griffin's Case had held that Section Three required congressional legislation in order to be put into operation – Congress enacted federal procedures to directly enforce Section Three in federal court. The 1870 Enforcement Act, also known as the First Ku Klux Klan Act, authorized district attorneys of the United States to bring quo warranto actions to remove officials holding office "contrary to the provisions of the third section of the fourteenth article of amendment of the Constitution" and to bring criminal prosecutions against person who "shall hereafter knowingly accept or hold" office in violation of Section Three.[369] In proceedings brought under both enforcement sections of the Act, in the short period between 1870 and 1872, the scope of Section Three's prohibition was interpreted broadly. (Recall that in 1872 Congress removed Section Three's disqualification as to most former rebels.)

---

[365] Id. at 161.
[366] Id. at 165.
[367] Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 203 (1869). The court also applied the Worthy rule to the even easier case of a county attorney who "took part in th[e] rebellion by serving in the Confederate army, voluntarily." In Re Tate, 63 N.C. 308 (1869).
[368] By contrast, Stanberry had concluded that officers who "discharged official duties not incident to war, but in the preservation of order and the administration of law, are not to be considered as thereby engaging in rebellion." 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 162.
[369] 16 Stat. 140, 142-143, sections 14 & 15. See supra note 54.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Consider first a notable criminal prosecution under the 1870 Act. In North Carolina again, this time in federal court, the government brought criminal charges against Amos Powell, for accepting an appointment as county sheriff despite being covered by Section Three.[370] Powell's alleged act of rebellion was having "furnished a substitute for himself to the Confederate army," and Powell's defense was that this was involuntary, because he was about to be involuntarily conscripted himself.[371] This gave the federal court, through Judge Hugh Lennox Bond, occasion to instruct the jury on the relevance of voluntariness to Section Three:

> [T]he word "engage" implies, and was intended to imply, a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection or Rebellion, and to bring it to a successful termination; and unless you find the defendant did that, with which he is charged, voluntarily, and not by compulsion, he is not guilty of the indictment. But it is not every appearance of force nor timid fear that will excuse such actual participation in the Rebellion or Insurrection. Defendant's conduct must have been prompted by a well grounded fear of great bodily harm and the result of force, which the defendant was neither able to escape nor resist. And further, the defendant's action must spring from his want of sympathy with the insurrectionary movement, and not from his repugnance to being in an army, merely.[372]

In other words, only great duress and pure heart would be a defense if one's conduct otherwise provided material support to the rebellion. Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged" in insurrection covered a wide swath of voluntary participatory acts supporting or assisting rebellion, some bordering on near-passive acquiescence.

Meanwhile, in Tennessee. the U.S. Attorney brought dozens of federal enforcement actions, including against three members of the Tennessee Supreme Court.[373] Many of those charged were unquestionably covered by Section Three because they had fought in the Civil War, for the Confederacy. But some were charged for more remote participation. For instance, Thomas Nelson, one of the Tennessee Justices, had been a unionist during the war, and indeed at one point a prisoner of the Confederacy. His participation in the rebellion appears to have been limited to being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from Tennessee, after Tennessee's purported

---

[370] United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605 (C.C.D.N.C 1871).
[371] Id. at 607.
[372] Id. Additionally, Powell had served as a justice of the peace under the Confederate government, but the federal court held this not to qualify, for reasons similar to those articulated by Attorney General Stanberry. Id.
[373] Sam D. Elliott, When the United States Attorney Sued to Remove Half the Tennessee Supreme Court: The Quo Warranto Cases of 1870, 49 Tenn. B.J. 20 (2013); see also Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

secession, and traveling to Washington to attempt to represent the state in Congress.[374] While these Section Three claims were never adjudicated, the fact that they were brought in the first place is consistent with the broad sweep of Section Three.[375]

The other scattered discussion of Section Three we have found are more ambiguous, but still consistent with these broad interpretations of Section Three's substantive disqualification—broad interpretations of insurrection, rebellion, "engaged in," and so on. Recall, for instance, that in Griffin's Case, it was essentially taken as given that Judge Hugh Sheffey would be disqualified by Section Three (if it applied) because he was "a member of the legislature of Virginia in 1862 during the late Rebellion, and as such voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[376] Other cases are consistent with similarly broad assumptions.[377] We have found none that took a substantially narrower view of Section Three, and even if some exist, they would seem to be the minority and inferior construction.

The application of Section Three immediately after its enactment is consistent with what the text, structure, context, and history of Section Three all tell us: to have "engaged] in," or given "aid or comfort" to, insurrection and rebellion, was understood to embrace an incredibly broad sweep of voluntary conduct that provides support, material assistance, or specific encouragement to such actions.

In the end, essentially all the evidence concerning the original textual meaning of Section Three—contemporaneous dictionary definitions; parallel constitutional use of the same or similar language; the inferences that fairly may be drawn from the legislative history of Section Three's drafting; the especially strong evidence from 1860s Civil War era political and legal usage of nearly the precise same terms (in prominent presidential statements, congressional enactments and their implementation, and a landmark Supreme Court constitutional decision employing the same terms); the general legal backdrop of eighteenth century Insurrection Acts and the myriad and familiar historical incidents of "insurrection" and "rebellion" to which they applied; and finally early practice enforcing Section Three—points in the same direction: toward a broad understanding of what constitutes insurrection and rebellion and a remarkably, almost extraordinarily, broad understanding of what types of conduct constitute engaging in, assisting, or giving aid or comfort to such movements.

---

[374] For one fawning account of Nelson, see Oliver P. Temple, Notable Men of Tennessee From 1833 to 1875. at 166-215 (1912).

[375] Justice Nelson resigned while these actions were pending, and the rest of the actions were abandoned with the passage of the 1872 Amnesty Act and a change in the federal attitude towards Section Three. Elliott, supra note 373.

[376] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D.Va. 1869).

[377] Sands v. Commonwealth, 62 Va. (21 Gratt.) 871, 873, 885–87 (1872). There is reason to think there were hundreds of other Section Three actions brought during this time period, but few records of the specifics of the cases. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred?

The next step in the analysis of Section Three is rather more tedious than difficult. But it is important to get it right: Holders of what prior offices or positions are covered by Section Three's disqualification from future office if they engaged in insurrection or rebellion? And from what future offices or positions are they thereby disqualified? The text of Section Three takes up these points in reverse order (and so we shall too) and uses slightly different language for each category.

First, the offices or positions from which a disqualified person is barred:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or an elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State … [378]

Second, the offices or positions previously held, and for which an oath to the Constitution was taken, that trigger Section Three's disqualification:

> … who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States … [379]

We begin with a few observations.

First, the language of these provisions should be read in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one.[380] Keep this in mind as we proceed: we think readers

---

[378] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

[379] Id.

[380] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Captain James T. Kirk and the Enterprise of Constitutional Interpretation: Some Modest Proposals from the Twenty-third Century, 59 Albany L. Rev. 671, 674-76 (1995). For instance, consider the story, passed down from Albert Gallatin to Max Farrand to William Treanor, that Gouverneur Morris slyly attempted to replace a comma with a semicolon in Article I in order to convert the "General Welfare" Clause from a limitation on the tax power into a freestanding power of regulation. William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Guverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 20-24 (2021). Putting aside whether this story is really true, David S. Schwartz, Framing the Framer: A Commentary on Treanor's Governeur Morris as Dishonest Scrivener, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 51, 69-73 (2022), a sensible approach to constitutional interpretation should obviously resist such antics. Even if Morris had succeeded in smuggling in the semi-colon, that maneuver should not be decisive in interpreting the Clause. See Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 127, at 338-339 & n. 151.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

should be wary of any interpretation of Section Three that would impute to the text a hyper-technical set of hidden distinctions not fully warranted by the language. Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside.

Second, it appears that the list of disqualification-triggering offices tracks closely, but not identically, the listing of positions for which the original Constitution imposed an oath requirement. Article VI of the Constitution dictates that "Senators and Representatives . . . Members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several states, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."[381] Article II, overlapping this general oath mandate, prescribes a specific oath for the President, who swears both that he will "faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States" and "'to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.'"[382]

Section Three's listing of triggering positions largely tracks the substance (and to some extent even the sequence) of the all-offices-legislative-executive-judicial-federal-and-state oath mandates. Section Three's list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified builds on this list. All positions that trigger disqualification are disqualified-from. In addition, the disqualified-from list includes, notably, presidential electors, who are not listed in the Constitution as persons required to swear an oath to the Constitution. The wording also appears designed to clarify that the ban extends to "military" offices—including state military offices—whether or not they would be considered "executive" offices under state law or Article VI. Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application. And if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions plus disqualified from being an elector for President and Vice President. That seems to be the basic structure of the provision.

Our third observation is related. It appears to us that the text's overall project of office-listing, in both clauses, was designed to be reasonably comprehensive, covering the waterfront: both taking care not to accidentally leave out anything considered important—including everybody who was constitutionally required to have sworn an oath—and adding positions where appropriate, as with adding the category of electors to the list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified.

---

[381] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3.

[382] U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 8. On the Presidential Oath Clause generally, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitution of Necessity, 79 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1257, 1260-1267 (2004); on "to the best of my Ability," see William Baude, Signing Unconstitutional Laws, 86 Ind. L.J. 303, 310 (2011).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

With these principles in mind, it appears to us that the two clauses—describing what past positions trigger disqualification and what future positions fall within the scope of that disqualification—can and should be read, together, in a straightforward manner. First, as to the persons to whom the provision applies (the second, "triggering" clause): Section Three's disqualification attaches to persons who previously swore an oath to support the Constitution as:

> [i] a "member" of Congress, or as
> [ii] an "officer of" the United States, or as > [iii] a "member" of any State legislature, or as
> [iv] an "executive or judicial officer of" any State.[383]

These four categories are then closely paralleled (with differences noted) in the description of offices from which covered persons are excluded (the first clause). Covered insurrectionists, rebels, and aid-and-comforters are disqualified from being:

> [i] "a Senator or Representative" in Congress (paralleling "member," a seemingly purely stylistic variation) or
> [ii] an elector for President or Vice President (a new exclusion from a position that is not an oath-required triggering position); or
> [iii] holding "any office, civil or military," "under" either federal or state government (paralleling "officer" of the United States or of any State, respectively, in the second and fourth triggering categories above—with the noted clarification of the inclusion of "military" officers).

The description "civil" office, in the disqualified-from list seems designed to embrace the categories of "executive or judicial" officer in the triggering list. Though somewhat more awkward, we think an elected office in a state legislature also qualifies as a "civil" office within the language and design of Section Three, reading the word "office" in this context in an ordinary, non-technical sense.[384]

The overall result is a broad list of disqualification-triggering positions covering essentially every major federal or state legislative, executive, and judicial office; and a list of barred-from positions embracing all of the above plus electors for presi-

---

[383] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

[384] Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5 (setting forth arguments why state legislative offices are included within the general catch-all category of excluded-from "civil" offices.); contra John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 126 N. Am. Rev. 53, 54 (1878). None of this in our view affects the question whether a Member of Congress may properly be designated as an "Officer" to whom the duties of the office of President may devolve upon presidential and vice-presidential death, resignation, or inability, which turns on different considerations. Compare Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 113 (1995) with John F. Manning, Not Proved: Some Lingering Questions About Legislative Succession to the Presidency, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 141 (1995).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

dent and vice president (and clarifying "military"). The legislative positions in question are the relevant elected offices—members of the legislature, whether a state legislature or the federal Congress—and do not embrace unelected staff positions. The executive positions embrace anyone in the executive branches of federal or state government who holds an "office" within that branch.

To be sure, there might be ancillary questions concerning what federal executive and judicial positions qualify as an "office," held by an "officer"—as opposed to non-officer, non-"office"-holding employees. That is: exactly how far down the organizational chart does the list of triggering and disqualified-from positions go?[385] Likewise, for the federal judicial branch, Article III judges and justices are plainly covered. (Other officers in the judicial branch, such as the clerks in Ex Parte Hennen,[386] are presumably covered as well—as well as perhaps bankruptcy judges, magistrate judges and the like.)[387] Non-office-holding employees, again, would not be covered. And of course there might be similar residual questions as to what state government positions constitute state executive "office" held by "officers" (thus, perhaps, the special need for designation "military," to be sure state military positions are included), and what state judicial-branch positions constitute a judicial office. But in the main, the description of who all is covered by Section Three and what offices such person, if disqualified, is excluded from holding strikes us as fairly straightforward.

The only challenge anyone has raised concerning this general description is the argument by professors Josh Blackman and Seth Tillman that a person who has served as President (and the same argument is made as to Vice President), while perhaps having held an office "under" the United States, is not properly classified as an "officer of" the United States.[388] On this view, disqualified persons might be barred from being President or Vice President—the authors are somewhat non-committal about this[389]—but having been President or Vice President, and engaged in insurrection or rebellion, does not trigger disqualification of an individual from anything! On this argument, the President and Vice President—alone among constitutional oath-takers—are exempt from Section Three's consequences.

---

[385] Serious scholarship has explored those questions with respect to the Appointments Clause. Jennifer L. Mascott, Who Are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 Stan. L. Rev. 443 (2018). We do not address that somewhat peripheral question here, but leave such issues for another day.

[386] 38 U.S. 230, 258 (1839) ("[T]hat a clerk is one of the inferior officers contemplated by [the Appointments Clause] cannot be questioned"). To be clear, Hennen dealt with the clerk of court, not what we would now call a term judicial law clerk.

[387] That said, to the extent that one maintains that magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges cannot lawfully exercise judicial power or executive power of their own, see William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1554-56, 1574-75 (2020), one might question whether they are truly "officers" at all. Again, we leave this issue for another day.

[388] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is The President An "Officer of the United States" For Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 N.Y.U. J. L. & Liberty 1 (2021).

[389] See, e.g., id. at 6, 17, 21.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We do not buy it, for many reasons: First, it adopts precisely the type of "secret code" hidden-meanings hermeneutic we think should be viewed extremely skeptically. Moreover, the code has a facially implausible consequence: an insurrectionist President is not covered by Section Three's disqualification (though nearly every other federal or state officeholder is); the President is (perhaps?) a disqualified-from office but not a disqualification-triggering office. This makes little sense.[390]

Second (and relatedly), the argument rather implausibly splits linguistic hairs. No one denies that the President is an executive branch officer holding executive office. At the risk of belaboring the obvious: Article II refers to the "office" of President innumerable times. It specifies the length of term for which the President "holds his Office," certain minimum qualifications for eligibility "to that Office," what happens upon the President's removal "from Office," or inability to discharge "the Powers and Duties of said Office," and the oath he shall take before entering "on the Execution of his Office."[391] If the Presidency is not an office, nothing is.

So the argument must rely instead on the fine parsing of prepositional phrases. The President (perhaps?) holds an "office under" the United States but is not an "officer of" the United States? This seems to defy textual common sense. Far more sensible and straightforward to conclude, we think, that the officeholder holding the office of President is an officer "of" the United States who holds office under the authority of the United States. The minor textual difference between the triggering clause ("officer of") and the positions-disqualified clause ("office under")—a choice between prepositions—appears to be of no significant substantive consequence in Section Three, much as other minor textual variations in or among constitutional provisions often do not support differences in meaning.[392] Indeed, one far simpler and more straightforward explanation for the Constitution's use of "office under" and "officer of" in Section Three and elsewhere is that "office" and "officer" simply take different

---

[390] To be sure, faithful readings of the Constitution sometimes yield counterintuitive outcomes. See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Someone Should Have Told Spiro Agnew, 14 Const. Comm. 245 (1997); (suggesting the possibility that a straightforward reading of the constitutional text yields the "stupid" – and surely inadvertent – result that the Vice President would be the presiding officer over his own impeachment trial in the Senate and that this is a result to be rectified); Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1468. But that does not mean we should close our eyes to plausibility and common sense, especially when the proposed textual reading is such a stretch. See also Paulsen, supra, Nothing But the Text, supra note 10, at 1439-1440 (noting cautions concerning use of the "absurdity" canon to deny plain textual meaning, but noting how the canon is a sometimes useful tool in discerning actual textual meaning.).

[391] See generally U.S. Const. Art. II.

[392] For instance, consider the differently phrased, but seemingly identical enforcement clauses of the Reconstruction Amendments. U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."); id. amdt. XIC, sec. 5 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."); id. amdt. XV, sec. 2 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."). Or consider the Constitution's "gratuitous (one could also say strange) punctuation marks." Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 127, at 348 (giving examples).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

prepositions: the Constitution uses "of" when referring to an officer and "under" when referring to an office.

Finally, even if a plausible argument can be constructed that the difference might have once been thought capable of sustaining a term-of-art distinction with respect to different prepositional phrases in the original Constitution—surmounting the presumption against "secret code" interpretation—there is no evidence of such a distinction in Section Three and little logic to such a distinction either.[393]

Third, a variant of the Blackman-Tillman argument was explicitly made and explicitly refuted in the congressional debates proposing Section Three. Senator Reverdy Johnson of Maryland charged that the language employed was defective because the offices of President and Vice President had inadvertently been omitted from Section Three. The amendment "does not go far enough," Johnson averred.[394] "I do not see but that any one of these gentlemen may be elected President or Vice President of the United States, and why did you omit to exclude them?"[395] Johnson was complaining that these two officers should be included in Section Three and there was no good reason to omit them. Whereupon Senator Morrill of Vermont interrupted: "Let me call the Senator's attention to the words 'or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States.'"[396] Senator Johnson promptly, and somewhat sheepishly, retreated: "Perhaps I am wrong as to the exclusion from the presidency; no doubt I am; but I was misled by noticing the special exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives."[397]

The Blackman-Tillman argument is not quite the same, but it is the mirror image of Johnson's concern. Johnson's inquiry was whether a covered, insurrectionist nonetheless might become president. The Blackman-Tillman argument is that an insurrectionist president is not an "officer of" the United States whose prior position

---

[393] One of us has previously complimented Tillman's prior scholarship that attempts to prove such a systematic term-of-art/secret code in the original Constitution. William Baude, Constitutional Officers: A Very Close Reading, JOTWELL (Jul. 28, 2016) https://conlaw.jotwell.com/constitutional-officers-a-very-close-reading/. But the very pieces of evidence that are most arresting in that context also confirm extensive linguistic drift or changing understandings in the decades after the founding. Compare id. (foreign gifts to Washington) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Original Public Meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause: A Reply to Professor Zephyr Teachout, 107 Nw. U.L. Rev. Colloquy 180, 190 (2013) (contrary practice by Presidents Van Buren, Tyler, and Jackson); compare Baude, supra this note (Hamilton's list) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Reports of My Death Were Greatly Exaggerated, at 20-21 https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=3037107 (describing a scrivener's "condensed" version of this document likely made "circa 1830" that may reflect a different understanding of the constitutional terms); cf. Blackman & Tillman, supra note 388, at 24-31 (acknowledging, and arguing against, the possibility of linguistic drift). In other words, such secret code (if any) turns out to have been written in disappearing ink.

[394] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st sess. at 2899 (1866)

[395] Id.

[396] Id.

[397] Id.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

triggers Section Three's restrictions on future office. The Johnson-Morrill colloquy does not specifically address that reverse-image argument. But it certainly suggests that the framers of Section Three were not parsing it as a secret code with facially implausible consequences. The question whether Section Three applied to former Presidents and Vice Presidents does not appear to have been raised again, by anyone.[398] Nor did anybody else involved in drafting or ratifying Section Three suggest that the mirror-image question would be any different. Subject to all the usual reservations about the use of legislative history (and legislative silence) in determining textual meaning, this further confirms the more natural reading. The only time anything like the question was raised, the point was answered by a proponent of Section Three, clearly and unequivocally, and the questioning Senator accepted the answer as correct.

Fourth and finally, in an additional piece of prepositional jujitsu, Blackman and Tillman tellingly equivocate about whether the President holds "office under" the United States as well. (If he does, Section Three stops covered insurrectionists from becoming President, and if not, not.) Blackman and Tillman do not deny this possibility, but they do not confirm it either. The difficulty for them is that both answers show the implausibility of their position.

If Blackman and Tillman maintain that the President does not hold "office under" the United States, then they must fly in the face of the directly on point discussion between Senators Johnson and Morrill. They must claim to understand Section Three better than its framers. This seems unlikely. But if they confirm that the President does hold "office under" the United States, then they must maintain a sharp and crucial distinction between "office under" and "officer of." As Mark Graber has observed, this distinction was also contradicted by Section Three's framers: "[T]he members of the Congress who framed Section 3 of the 14th Amendment often indicated—and sometimes explicitly stated—that all persons who held office 'under the United States' were officers 'of the United States.' During the debates over Section 3, no representative or senator alluded to the existence of a distinction between 'of' and 'under'. Representatives and senators often described the president as having an 'office under the United States' and being an 'officer of the United States.'"[399] If a secret [398] Former President John Tyler of Virginia subsequently sided with the Confederacy and was elected to the Confederate congress (but died before assuming office). And former Vice President John Breckinridge subsequently served as a Confederate general and, later, as Confederate Secretary of War. See Blackman & Tillman, supra 388, at 45-46 (acknowledging this). While Tyler and Breckinridge had served in other disqualification-triggering posts, if the text really had failed to include the offices of President and Vice President as triggering disqualification these incidents would have shown that to be a glaring and dangerous omission.

---

[399] Mark Graber Disqualification From Office: Donald Trump v. the 39th Congress, Lawfare (Feb. 24, 2023). Professor Graber notes further that a "unanimous House select committee report issued barely a month after Congress sent the 14th Amendment to the states concluded that 'a little consideration of this matter will show that 'officers of' and 'officers under' the United States are 'indiscriminately used in the Constitution.'" In addition, "[t]he most comprehensive study of state ratification . . . does not point to a single example of any journalist or participant in a state convention who distinguished code was really at work, it was an extraordinarily well-kept secret. The implausibility of both horns of the Blackman-Tillman straddle demonstrates the implausibility of their position.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In short, the ordinary sense of the text; the structure and logic of its provisions; the evident design to be comprehensive; the text's many references to the office of the Presidency as an "office"; the seeming absurdity of the prospect of exclusion of the offices of President and Vice President from triggering the disqualification fashioned by the Radical Reconstruction Congress that drafted the Fourteenth Amendment; the fact that the only legislative debate over the language discussing whether Section Three inadvertently omitted the offices of President and Vice President rejected any such suggestion; and the fact that no one ever suggested that the "under/of" difference meant the presidency was not a covered office triggering Section Three, all convince us that the natural conclusion is the correct one: Section Three includes in its coverage, or "triggering" language, insurrectionists who once served as President and Vice President. And Section Three excludes disqualified insurrectionists from subsequently holding the office of either President or Vice President.

C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election

We come finally to the urgent question of the day: How does Section Three apply to the events of 2020-2021—the efforts by Donald Trump (and others) to overthrow the results of the 2020 presidential election and install Trump as president for another term, despite his loss to Joseph Biden?

Consider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021.

---

between 'officers under' and 'officers of' or who otherwise thought a president who participated in an insurrection could not be disqualified under Section 3.'" John Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit. J. Am. Legal Stud. (forthcoming), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4440157; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 158-160 (collecting authorities supporting the same point); Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 16 n. 48 ("My research . . . shows that President Andrew Johnson repeatedly referred to himself as "the chief executive officer of the United States").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Taken as a whole, these actions represented an effort to prevent the lawful, regular, termination of President Trump's term of office in accordance with the Constitution. They were an attempt to unlawfully overturn or thwart the lawful outcome of a presidential election and to install, instead, the election loser as president. They constituted a serious attempt to overturn the American constitutional order. Does Section Three cover this conduct? Did these events constitute "insurrection" or "rebellion" within the meaning of the Constitution? And if so, who all might be said to have "engaged in" that conduct, or given "aid or comfort" to those who did? We will consider those questions in turn.

1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion

We begin with the general legal question whether the attempted overturning of the result of the 2020 presidential election is covered by Section Three in any respect. Do such efforts, in part or in whole, qualify as insurrection or rebellion, disqualifying prior-oath-swearing persons who participated in such acts from future office? In our view, based on all the foregoing analysis, the answer is yes.

There are multiple arguments for how Section Three would apply to the events of 2020-2021, but let us first focus on the events of January 6, 2021.[400] These include first the cluster of actions taken in assembling, encouraging, charging, and inciting an armed (in part) mob, producing the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol, Congress, and the Vice President. For some, importantly including Trump, these acts would also include subsequent deliberate inaction against the January 6 attack—by persons with duties and capacity to act to suppress, halt, or quell the insurrection in progress—that effectively facilitated, permitted, aided, and encouraged such insurrectionary violence.

Overall, it seems to us to be quite clear that the specific series of events leading up to and culminating in the January 6, 2021 attack qualifies as an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three: "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect."[401] The large group of people who descended upon, entered, and occupied the U.S. Capitol building used force to prevent a key step in the constitutional transfer of power. The group was in part coordinated, not merely a riot.[402] Some members of the group were

---

[400] In describing these events, we rely generally here and throughout on the public record assembled by the House January 6th Committee. Final Report, Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol, H.R. 117-000 (117th Cong., 2nd Sess.). Of course, to the extent that a potentially disqualified officer wished to prove that this public record was inaccurate or incomplete as relevant to them, they could attempt to do so in the relevant proceedings and to the relevant decisionmaker. See generally supra Part II.B.

[401] Supra Part IV.A.1. The fact that President Trump may have supported the insurrection, see infra II.C.2.b, does not change this. In our system the President is not "the government," and especially not when Congress is carrying out a constitutionally mandated role in supervising the transfer of power.

[402] See, e.g., January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 499-502, 530-531.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

armed,[403] and many used force to breach the Capitol, to overpower law enforcement there, and to effectuate their unlawful aim.[404]

Furthermore, it seems that, as a whole, the group's goal—to the extent the group had a specific objective in mind—was to disrupt the constitutional transfer of power, by disrupting a necessary formal step in the constitutional process.[405] The invasion of the Capitol on January 6 was not simply a violation of the law (though it was that of course). It was not merely a protest of a particular legal measure, but a forcible prevention and disruption of it. And it was not the disruption of just any legal measure, but of one that was itself central to the allocation of authority under our Constitution. If this is a fair description of what happened on January 6, then that day was something quite different from more common acts of protest, even disruptive protest. January 6 was an insurrection.

To be sure, the events of January 6 itself—the attack on Congress and the Capitol—did not remotely rival in overall magnitude, or in sheer carnage, the experience of the U.S. Civil War, where more than 600,000 people died. Still, considered as discrete events, it is notable that more people died, and many more were injured, as a result of the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol than died or suffered injuries as a result of the attack on Fort Sumter. The events of January 6 match, in their essential elements—concerted resistance to federal authority, serious attempts to frustrate execution of national law, attacks on government officials and facilities, intimidation and violence—and arguably exceeded in their seriousness, the events of the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries' Rebellion, and other more limited historical insurrections. And at all events, it is less the magnitude or degree of disruption occasioned by an insurrection than whether it fits within the broad meaning of Section Three, as illuminated by evidence of its original meaning and historical understandings. As the Prize Cases teach, not every insurrection or rebellion ripens into a full-fledged war.[406] Most of the time, the authority of the state can nip it in the bud. But it is still an insurrection.[407]

Our assessment of the events of January 6, specifically, as an "insurrection" confirms the judgment made by public authorities: An act of Congress, to "award four

---

[403] Id. at 640-642.
[404] Id. at 646-647, 651-659.
[405] Id. at 502-510, 521-530.
[406] See supra Part IV.A.4.c.
[407] What about other disruptive, disorderly, even violent protests during the same time period? For instance, the many such events that erupted during the summer of 2020 in the wake of the police killing of George Floyd? So far as we can tell, none of these were covered by Section Three. Of course mere protest is not insurrection. Some of these protests devolved into riots, but even a riot is not necessarily an insurrection. And even if some of them went further, amounted to "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect," and met the definition of insurrection, they would seem to be insurrections against the state governments, not the United States, and thus outside the scope of Section Three. But of course if there were any other insurrections against the United States, Section Three applies to them all.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

congressional gold medals to the United States Capitol Police and those who protected the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021,"[408] found that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. The text of the act contains an official finding: "On January 6, 2021, a mob of insurrectionists forced its way into the U.S. Capitol building and congressional office buildings and engaged in acts of vandalism, looting, and violently attacked Capitol Police officers."[409] Another finding noted the historic magnitude and symbolic importance of that insurrection against democracy: "The desecration of the U.S. Capitol, which is the temple of American Democracy, and the violence targeting Congress are horrors that will forever stain our Nation's history."[410] The impeachment charges brought against President Trump as a result of January 6 were equally explicit in concluding that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. A majority of the House of Representatives approved (232 to 197) an article of impeachment charging then-President Trump with "incitement of insurrection" for the events of January 6th.[411] The Senate's vote to convict Trump of this charge, while falling short of the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution's impeachment process, constituted a substantial majority (57 to 43) of the Senate endorsing the House's charge and characterization. Majorities of both houses of Congress thus determined—at least twice—that January 6th was an insurrection; and in the impeachment proceedings majorities of both houses determined that Trump was responsible for having incited that insurrection.[412]

Finally, there is an additional possibility that we should see the events of January 6, 2021, as just one part of a broader "rebellion" against constitutional government, much like secession—actions seeking unlawfully to displace or replace the authority of lawful constitutional government and substitute a constitutionally unauthorized governmental authority in its stead.

---

[408] Pub. Law. 117-32 (Aug. 5, 2021), 135 Stat. 322.

[409] Id. sec. 1(1). In the state Section Three proceedings against Marjorie Taylor Greene, supra notes 68-73 and accompanying text, the hearing officer cited this statute to conclude "Congress has characterized the Invasion as an insurrection." Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SEC-STATE-CE-57-Beaudrot, at 9-10 (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022). The hearing officer found it unnecessary to decide for himself, however, "Whether the Invasion of January 6 amounted to an insurrection." Id. at 18.

[410] Pub. Law. 117-32, sec. 1(4).

[411] H. Res. 24 (117th Cong., 1st Sess. Jan 25, 2021).

[412] For what it is worth, other scholars have also agreed that January 6th was an insurrection. See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 23 n.65 ("January 6th was an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three, in part because the mob disrupted a constitutionally required act – the formal counting of the electoral votes under the Twelfth Amendment –and prevent the lawful transfer of authority."); Vlahoplus, supra note 399, at 1 (referring to "The insurrection of January 6."); Farah Peterson, Our Constitutionalism of Force, 122 Colum. L. Rev. 1539, 1622-25 (2022); see also Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5 ("[T]he constituted government in the United States is not any single individual but the constellation of institutions that facilitate the lawful exercise and peaceful transfer of power. A sitting president who seeks to subvert those institutions through violence is no less an insurrectionist than a lower-level official or private citizen who seeks to do the same.").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We acknowledge that applying the term "rebellion" to the events of 2020-2021 goes beyond the Civil War era dictionaries. The attempt to overturn the 2020 election was neither an "open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government," as Webster would have it, nor (outside of the insurrection of January 6) "the taking up of arms" or "forcible opposition" as Bouvier would have it.[413] It is not a perfect fit.

Nonetheless, consider the argument that the term "rebellion" could be used more broadly to describe a coup d'etat seeking to overthrow the constitutional order—including a so-called "bloodless" coup d'etat (where no force is used) and a successful "self-coup" of the bloodless variety[414] (where the existing unlawful regime commands such force that it need not be used). Consider the following chain of logical steps: 1. A military coup d'etat upending lawful government by use of force surely qualifies, constitutionally, as a "rebellion." It is literally an effort unlawfully to overthrow constitutional government, by force. 2. It follows that a military coup d'etat upending lawful government by show or threat of force should be treated the same way, even though force was not used. 3. A military coup d'etat by the existing regime—a "self-coup," would seem, legally, to be the same thing. In such a case the regime does not seize power, by show or threat of force; it retains power by show or threat of force. But it is logically identical to situations #1 and #2. 4. A "bloodless" self-coup against the lawful regime, where no force is used because none is needed, should be treated the same as #3. Indeed, it seems fair to say that situation #4 is merely an instance of situation #3. 5. The same self-coup attempt, but that styles itself as not renouncing but instead as restoring or maintaining, the constitutional regime—but that in truth seeks to overthrow or defeat that regime—logically should be treated the same as #4. If one accepts this chain of reasoning, one might then fairly conclude that the entirety of the course of conduct attempting dishonestly and unlawfully to overthrow the 2020-2021 election constituted a "rebellion," even though this might stretch somewhat the dictionary definitions of the term.[415]

Calling the events of 2020 and 2021 "insurrection" or potentially even "rebellion" might seem to some exaggerated or hyperbolic. It is not. It is simply being legally precise and not shying away from difficult or upsetting consequences that flow from

---

[413] See supra Part IV.A.2.

[414] See generally Daniel J. Hemel, Self-Coup and The Constitution, 37 Const. Comm. (forthcoming 2023).

[415] In similar fashion, we note that—at least at first—the purported "secession" of a state from the Union was not universally acknowledged to be itself an act constituting "rebellion" as a legal matter It too did not fit perfectly the standard dictionary definition (unless and until force was used or threatened). But the logic of the matter led Lincoln—and Congress, and the Supreme Court—to conclude that secession, in practical and legal terms, was a species of "rebellion" and legally to be treated as such. See supra Part IV.A.4. As set forth in the text, the same logic suggests that conduct tantamount to an attempted coup d'etat (including attempting to maintain a defeated incumbent president in office, dishonestly and unlawfully) may fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection or rebellion."

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal precision. We believe it is important to call the events of 2020 and 2021 by their true legal names, their right names, unshielded by artful euphemism.[416]

2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort"

This brings us to the rubber-hits-the-road question: Who all, by virtue of their personal, voluntary conduct, can be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion in connection with the efforts to overthrow the result of the presidential election of 2020 and unlawfully maintain Donald Trump in office as President of the United States? Who, while perhaps not a direct or indirect participant in insurrectionary or rebellious conduct, provided "aid or comfort" to those who did?

As detailed at great—perhaps excruciating—length above, "engaged in" under Section Three is properly understood to embrace a broad range of willful participatory conduct. This includes, certainly, deliberate acts in the nature of planning, promoting, encouraging, counseling, supporting, materially assisting, advancing, or facilitating activity or plots that can fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection" or "rebellion." And, as noted, in certain circumstances it might well include inaction supporting insurrection. Finally, giving "aid or comfort" to insurrection or rebellion arguably expands the range of acts of participation, support, and encouragement that qualify as triggering Section Three's disqualification.[417]

Who, then, engaged in such behavior?

a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation

Some applications of Section Three are factually straightforward. Others might involve potentially more difficult questions of fact and proof concerning the degree and nature of an individual's voluntary and intentional participation in (i) the overall plot and concrete efforts to overthrow the election and install Trump as president re-elect; (ii) the assembly, instigation, and incitement of a mob to attack the Capitol on January 6, 2021 to prevent certification of the election outcome; or (iii) the willful failure to take action to suppress the attack on Congress while it was in progress.

As discussed in Part II, above, judgments concerning the application of the legal standards of Section Three to specific individuals may and must be made by a variety of public actors—all those whose responsibilities call for application of the Constitution's criteria for eligibility to hold office. The ultimate judgment will rest with different actors and institutions in different circumstances: sometimes by state [416] For the sake of completeness, we add that we think the events of 2020-2021 probably do not rise to the level of "treason" or "levying war" against the United States, though of course it is possible that further investigation will reveal truly treasonous conduct that is not yet on the public record.

[417] See generally supra Part IV.A.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

election officials; sometimes by presidential electors; sometimes by state and federal executive branch officials; sometimes by the respective houses of Congress or by state legislatures. In many cases, the judgment ultimately will fall to state and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. Everybody in such positions is bound to apply Section Three faithfully and enforce its commands rigorously.

That said, from our interpretation of Section Three's broad sweep, it is clear that at least two purported factual defenses are simply immaterial:

First, it is no defense that an individual might claim that his or her conduct does not constitute having engaged in or supported "insurrection" or "rebellion" because the election was in fact stolen—that is, that Trump in fact won the election—making it legitimate to "stop the steal." The problem is that the premise is simply false. Decisionmakers can and should act on the well settled factual understanding that Joe Biden won, and Donald Trump lost, the election of 2020.[418]

Second, it likewise is no defense that an individual believed (even if mistakenly) that the election had in fact been stolen, or believed that their insurrectionary conduct was somehow lawful. That one may have been deluded or deceived by disinformation does not excuse acts of insurrection or rebellion. And as the South's secession and the resulting Civil War illustrate, a bogus and unsuccessful constitutional theory does not excuse them either. In other words, there is no mistake-of-insurrection defense to Section Three.[419] Acts intentionally done as part of what is in fact and in law insurrection or rebellion are covered, irrespective of an individual's wrong subjective belief that no such insurrection or rebellion occurred, or the reasons for such wrong belief.[420]

b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office

The most politically explosive application of Section Three to the events of January 6, is at the same time the most straightforward. In our view, on the basis of the public record, former President Donald J. Trump is constitutionally disqualified from again being President (or holding any other covered office) because of his role in the

---

[418] See not only the January 6 Report, supra note 400, but also John Danforth, Benjamin Ginsburg, Thomas B. Griffith, David Hoppe, J. Michael Luttig, Michael W. McConnell, Theodore B. Olson & Gordon H. Smith, Lost, Not Stolen: The Conservative Case that Trump Lost and Biden Won the 2020 Presidential Election (2022), https://lostnotstolen.org.

[419] This is consistent with principles of mens rea that distinguish knowledge of what one is doing from knowledge of the proper legal characterization of what one is doing. See, e.g., Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. ___, at 4 n.2 (2023).

[420] Now what if the shoe were on the other foot? What if Trump had somehow succeeded in unlawfully holding apparent office after January 20, 2021? Would comparable actions by Biden supporters have constituted "insurrection"? We think not. The true facts matter. A rebellion against lawful government is rebellion, but acts of counter-insurgency against an attempted coup d'etat are not.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

attempted overthrow of the 2020 election and the events leading to the January 6 attack.

The case for disqualification is strong. There is abundant evidence that Trump deliberately set out to overturn the result of the 2020 presidential election result, calling it "stolen" and "rigged";[421] that Trump (with the assistance of others) pursued numerous schemes to effectuate this objective; that among these were efforts to alter the vote counts of several states by force, by fraud, or by intended intimidation of state election officials,[422] to pressure or persuade state legislatures and/or courts unlawfully to overturn state election results,[423] to assemble and induce others to submit bogus slates of competing state electors,[424] to persuade or pressure Congress to refuse to count electors' votes submitted by several states,[425] and finally, to pressure the Vice President unconstitutionally to overturn state election results in his role of presiding over the counting of electors' votes.[426]

Leading up to January 6, Trump repeatedly solicited, suborned, and pressured Vice President Mike Pence to prevent the counting of the electoral votes in favor of President-elect Biden.[427] Not only that: Trump assembled a large crowd to march on the Capitol and intimidate Congress and the Vice President into complying with his wishes and thereby prevent the official counting of the votes of electors confirming Trump's defeat. Trump had announced on Twitter a protest to be held on January 6, 2021: "Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!"[428] According to testimony amassed by the House's January 6th Commission, Trump's supporters interpreted this as a call to arms, sometimes literally.[429]

Then there are the events of January 6 specifically. When January 6 arrived, Trump delivered an incendiary address at the White House Ellipse to the crowd of supporters he had effectively summoned to the Capitol to oppose what he had been calling the "steal" of the election. Trump reiterated his false claim that he had in fact won the election—"we won this election and we won it by a landslide"—but that the Democrats and the media had "stolen" the election and "rigged" a false outcome. "They rigged it like they've never rigged an election before," he charged. "Make no mistake, this election was stolen from you, from me and from the country. … This [is] the most corrupt election in the history, maybe of the world." The crowd was "gathered together in the heart of our nation's capital for one very, very basic and simple

---

[421] And not that it matters, see supra Part IV.C.2.a, but it also appears that Trump knew that these accusations were false. See January 6 Report, supra note 400, 100-01, 103-04, 203, 213, 789.
[422] Id. at 202-203, 263-265; see also id. at 223-231,
[423] Id. at 296-300.
[424] Id. at 341-354.
[425] Id. at 431.
[426] Id. at 441-458.
[427] Id. at 441-458.
[428] Quoted in id. at 499.
[429] Id. at 499-540.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reason: To save our democracy." Trump called on the crowd to march on the Capitol. "Our country has had enough. We will not take it anymore and that's what this is all about. … We will stop the steal." He urged the assembled mass of thousands, some of whom Trump knew to be armed, to "fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore."[430]

Some might quibble that the speech is ambiguous.[431] Not all of Trump's rambling address called literally for the crowd to "fight." Some of his statements were ambiguous and at one point he remarked that the crowd would be marching "peacefully and patriotically."[432] He never directly and literally called for attacking the Capitol or the Vice President. Much of what might be thought incitement to lawlessness was innuendo. Nonetheless, the general and specific message was that the election had been stolen; that a constitutional fraud of colossal proportions and cataclysmic consequence was in the process of being perpetrated on the nation; that the crowd needed to take "strong" and direct action to protect the country; and that immediate action was necessary to prevent Vice President Pence and Congress from ratifying the unconstitutional election of an illegitimate president and doing irreparable damage to the nation.

These ambiguities have given rise to a debate about whether Trump's speech did or did not cross the strict incitement threshold of Brandenburg v. Ohio.[433] It could well be that it did cross the line: Trump had deliberately assembled the mob of supporters, steeled them to action, knew that they were ready to take immediate action, and directed them to take it.[434] But the most important thing is that the Brandenburg question is beside the point. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact the legal standard of Brandenburg v. Ohio. It enacts the standard of having "engage[d] in insurrection," or given "aid or comfort" to those doing so, and qualifies,

---

[430] For the quotations in this paragraph, see "Transcript of Trump's Speech at Rally Before US Capitol Riot," Associated Press, (Jan. 13, 2021), available at https://apnews.com/article/election-2020-joe-biden-donald-trumpcapitol-siege-media-e79eb5164613d6718e9f4502eb471f27. See also id. ("And again, most people would stand there at 9 o'clock in the evening and say, 'I want to thank you very much,' and they go off to some other life. But I said something is wrong here, something is really wrong, can't have happened, and we fight. We fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore.").

[431] See Michael Conklin, Capital Offense: Is Donald Trump Guilty of Inciting a Riot at the Capital?, 15 U. St. Thomas J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 483 (2022); see also Alan Z. Rozenshtein & Jed Handelsman Shugerman, January 6, Ambiguously Inciting Speech, and the Overt-Acts Rule, 37 Const. Comm. at 2-3, 20-21 (forthcoming 2023).

[432] Transcript, supra note 430.

[433] 395 U.S. 444 (1969); compare Conklin, supra note 431, with Alexander Tsesis, Incitement to Insurrection and the First Amendment, 57 Wake Forest L. Rev. 971 (2022); see also Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 431, at 3 n.3 (citing these and other sources and describing this disagreement).

[434] As Rozenshtein and Shugerman also emphasize, "Trump's speech was accompanied by several overt acts in furtherance of inciting an attack against the Capitol," which they argue takes it outside of the Brandenburg framework for that reason. Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 431, at 38.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

modifies, or simply satisfies the First Amendment to the extent of any conflict between these constitutional principles.[435] First Amendment or no, the speech was part of Trump's participation in and support for the insurrection.

Finally, as events unfolded and the violence began, Trump maintained silence—and indeed deliberate indifference bordering on tacit encouragement—for what had by that time clearly become a forcible insurrection. For three hours after learning that his supporters had forcibly invaded the Capitol and were disrupting the constitutional process, Trump took no action to urge them to leave, despite being begged to do so by his advisors and despite having a constitutional duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.[436] During this same period, while the insurrection was in progress and after the Capitol had been breached, he again condemned Vice President Pence for not "hav[ing] the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution,"[437] a statement that the January 6th Commission concluded was "a statement that could only further enrage the mob" and that in fact apparently did so.[438] Once Trump finally did – after several hours and with great reluctance—direct his supporters to leave the Capitol, they quickly dispersed.[439]

This culpable inaction—failing to intervene to stop an insurrection in progress, declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite having both the capacity and responsibility to intervene—is another crucial part of Trump's responsibility for the January 6 insurrection. Section Three reaches a broad range of conduct providing meaningful assistance to or support for acts of insurrection or rebellion performed by others, even quite passively.[440] Sitting by and doing nothing—declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite possessing the material capacity and legal responsibility to intervene—might qualify. Additionally and equally important, Trump's deliberate inaction renders his January 6 speech much more incriminating in hindsight, because it makes it even less plausible (if it was ever plausible) that the crowd's reaction was all a big mistake or misunderstanding.

---

[435] See supra Part III.D (arguing that Section Three is not limited by the free speech principles of the First Amendment).

[436] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 577-606.

[437] Donald J. Trump, Tweets of January 6, 2021, available at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/tweets-january-6-2021

[438] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 577.

[439] Even as he urged peace in a video to the insurrectionists ("we can't play into the hands of these people. We have to have peace") he continued to express affection for them ("So go home. We love you. You're very special.") and to reiterate that the "election was stolen from us." Donald J. Trump, Videotaped Remarks During the Insurrection at the United States Capitol, at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/videotaped-remarks-during-the-insurrection-the-united-states-capitol. Later that night he tweeted: "These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!" Trump Tweets, supra note 437.

[440] Cf. notes 345-346 and accompanying text (describing the exclusion of Senator-elect Phillip Thomas).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Taking these events as a whole, and judging them under the standard of Section Three, it is unquestionably fair to say that Trump "engaged in" the January 6 insurrection through both his actions and his inaction. Officials—administrators, courts, legislators—whose responsibilities call upon them to apply Section Three properly and lawfully may, indeed must, take action within their powers to preclude Trump from holding future office,

Moreover, if one accepts the broader argument that the entire campaign to overthrow the results of the 2020 election was a form of constitutional rebellion,[441] then Trump's complicity is even more obvious—as the leader, motive force, and chief attempted perpetrator of that rebellion. Indeed, it would not be going too far to say that Trump, having previously sworn a constitutionally required oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States knowingly attempted to execute what, had it succeeded, would have amounted to a political coup d'etat against the Constitution and its system of elections and overturn the results of the constitutional process, in order to maintain himself in office as President contrary to law. If that itself constitutes "rebellion" against the Constitution, Trump's overall course of conduct disqualifies him under Section Three, even apart from the specific incitement to storm the Capitol on January 6.

The bottom line is that Donald Trump both "engaged in" "insurrection or rebellion" and gave "aid or comfort" to others engaging in such conduct, within the original meaning of those terms as employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. If the public record is accurate, the case is not even close. He is no longer eligible to the office of Presidency, or any other state or federal office covered by the Constitution. All who are committed to the Constitution should take note and say so.

c. Beyond Trump

Donald Trump is at the top of the list of Section Three disqualifications, but the list does not end with him. The public record to date shows many others who are or may be connected to either the insurrection of January 6 or to a possible broader rebellion. These include government lawyers, executive branch officials, state officeholders, and even members of Congress. It is not for us to definitively say who all these may be—that, as we have said, is ultimately the responsibility and judgment of all those whose public duties call upon them to apply the Constitution's provisions concerning officeholder qualifications. But to see why this responsibility is urgent, consider the following categories:

Consider first those who marched with—who rose up with—the January 6 mob itself. Some of these folks, such as Couy Griffin of New Mexico, and Derrick Evans of West Virginia, have already been stripped of or resigned from their state offices, as [441] See supra notes 413-415 and accompanying text.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three contemplates.[442] They present the easiest case of "engag[ing] in . . . insurrection." Open and shut.

But many more cases follow. Consider those who were not part of the uprising itself, but who provided planning, encouragement, assistance, or other material support to those who rose up on January 6. Recent proceedings against U.S. Representatives Biggs, Gosar, and Greene, for instance, raise this as a serious possibility.[443] Pennsylvania State Senator Doug Mastriano—who is also a retired military officer and recent gubernatorial candidate—is said to have transported busloads of people to what became the insurrection and "was near the Capitol during the attack."[444] Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani worked extensively to overturn the election, and likewise riled the mob at the Ellipse on January 6.[445] Trump Chief of Staff (and former legislator) Mark Meadows planned and organized parts of the January 6 rally and apparently also "directed that [Giuliani] be allowed to speak" to the crowd.[446] These current and former officeholders are also subject to serious challenge under Section Three.

And if one entertains the argument that the entire course of conduct to overthrow the 2020 election was a broader rebellion,[447] the list just grows longer and longer. According to the public record: Former National Security Advisor General Michael Flynn proposed a plan to seize voting machines, invalidate election results, and rerun the vote in swing states won by Biden.[448] Would-be Trump electors (some of whom came from state political offices covered by Section Three) met on December 14 even in states where Biden's electors had been chosen, thus laying the groundwork for Trump's schemes.[449] Assistant Attorney General Jeffrey Clark sought to use the power and authority of the Department of Justice to fraudulently upend state election results.[450] At least one member of Congress pressed for the removal of more senior Department of Justice officials who opposed Clark's scheme, and lobbied for the appointment of Clark as Acting Attorney General, thus providing aid and comfort.[451] These officials, too, would be subject to challenge.

We could go on, but we have made the point: All persons who betrayed their earlier constitutional oaths by subsequently engaging in conduct (in any of a number

---

[442] See supra notes 85-88, 111-113 and accompanying text.
[443] See supra notes 68-80 and accompanying text.
[444] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 294. Such a claim was brought against Mastriano in federal court but dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. See supra note 89.
[445] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 536, 577, 581, 593-594, 608; https://www.rev.com/blog/transcripts/rudy-giuliani-speech-transcript-at-trumps-washington-d-c-rally-wants-trial-by-combat
[446] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 533, 535-536.
[447] See supra notes 413-415 and accompanying text.
[448] January 6 Report, supra note 400, 222.
[449] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 352-353. Several of these would-be electors previously held state and local offices, and so are covered by Section Three.
[450] January 6 Report, supra note 400, at 50.
[451] Id. at 50 (discussing actions of Pennsylvania U.S. Representative Scott Perry).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of forms) directed at overthrowing the result of a lawful presidential election or supporting an attack on Congress and the Capitol, should face serious inquiry under Section Three. If they try to hold, retain, re-obtain, or seek public office, their eligibility for such positions should be stringently scrutinized. That inquiry should be conducted by every relevant level of government, from state election officials to the halls of Congress, to the courts throughout the country. In many cases we may not yet even know the full extent of the participation and support for acts of insurrection or rebellion in 2020-2021. But we must find out.

Taking Section Three seriously as part of our nation's operative, ongoing fundamental law means that such inquiries are constitutionally necessary. Indeed, they are constitutionally required. Taking Section Three seriously, as binding constitutional law, means faithfully ascertaining and fearlessly applying the objective, original meaning of its words and phrases, understood in their historical context, whether we like that meaning or not, and tirelessly following the logic of the text's meaning to its fair conclusions. The upshot of doing so, we think—the consequence of adhering to constitutional principle—may well be the disqualification from public office of a great many more individuals than is generally recognized. In many cases, the inquiry has not yet begun. It is past time to start the reckoning.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Conclusion

Despite its long slumber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is alive and in force. It remains fully legally operative. It is constitutionally self-executing—that is, its command is automatically effective, directly enacted by the Constitution itself. And it is sweeping: It sweeps over earlier and inconsistent constitutional provisions. It sweeps in a broad range of conduct attacking the authority of the United States. And it sweeps in a broad category of former oath-swearing officeholders turned insurrectionists or aiders and comforters of insurrection or rebellion. It is enforceable by anybody whose duties provide occasion for judging legal eligibility for office. Indeed, each of these actors has a duty to faithfully apply Section Three. All possess legitimate constitutional interpretive authority to construe and apply this constitutional prohibition, many of them independently of other actors, including courts.

All of this has obvious, important, and immediate legal implications.

We the People should honor and vigorously enforce this important provision of our Constitution. It should not be allowed to become a dead letter from disuse. Its purpose, while inspired by specific historical events, is one of general and continuing importance. The idea that men and women who swore an oath to support the Constitution as government officials, but who betrayed that oath by engaging in or abetting acts of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, should be disqualified from important positions of government power in the future (unless forgiven by supermajorities of both houses of Congress) remains a valid, valuable, and we think vital precept. Disqualifying candidates and official from office is not something to be done lightly, but Section Three was not enacted lightly. Section Three remains part of our Constitution, part of our nation's fundamental law. If we honor the Constitution, we must honor Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

That means that those who possess the power and duty to apply and enforce Section Three have a constitutional responsibility to do so, fairly but vigorously. If state election boards or secretaries of state determine that a candidate for state elective office or a candidate seeking to represent that state in Congress is constitutionally disqualified from holding that office, those state authorities should exercise the state-law powers they possess to remove ineligible candidates from the ballot. If the House or Senate determines that a person elected to serve as a member of such body is constitutionally disqualified from holding such a position, they should refuse to seat or expel that person. And if a candidate for President, or an already-elected President, is constitutionally disqualified from office by Section Three, then that disqualification should be enforced by state election officials, by electors, by Congress through the impeachment process, and by the Vice-President, cabinet and, Congress in carrying out the Twenty-fifth Amendment. In any and all these situations, and more, where the enforcement of Section Three's constitutional disqualifications is properly presented to the judiciary in a case over which a court possesses jurisdiction, it is the constitutional duty, province, and responsibility of federal and state judges exercising the judicial power to faithfully apply and enforce Section Three according to its terms.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No official should shrink from these duties. It would be wrong – indeed, arguably itself a breach of one's constitutional oath of office—to abandon one's responsibilities of faithful interpretation, application, and enforcement of Section Three. It is wrong to shrink on the pretext that some other officials may or should exercise their authority—as if one's own constitutional obligations cease to exist if others fail to act. And it is wrong to shrink from observing, and enforcing, the Constitution's commands on the premise that doing so might be unpopular in some quarters, or fuel political anger, or resentment, or opposition, or retaliation. The Constitution is not optional and Section Three is not an optional part of the Constitution.

Importantly, it is also wrong to shrink from applying Section Three on grounds of "democracy," whether on the premise that Section Three should be ignored or narrowly construed because it limits who voters may choose, or on the premise that only the voters should enforce Section Three. It is true, as we have said, that limiting democratic choice is not something to be done lightly, but it is something the Constitution does, and for serious reasons.[452] The Constitution cannot be overruled or disregarded by ordinary election results. (And we note that there is particular irony in invoking democracy to shrink from applying Section Three to the insurrectionists of 2020-2021, who refused to abide by election results and instead sought to overthrow them.)[453]

Finally, we believe it would be wrong for courts to refuse to decide cases, otherwise lawfully within their jurisdiction, concerning Section Three on the pretense that such matters are "political questions." Outside of certain exercises of power to exclude, expel, or impeach and try, committed to each House's judgment, Section Three is enforceable by the judiciary as well as by other officials.[454] Section Three's terms embody rules and standards, enforceable as any other constitutional provision is enforceable. There is no freestanding judicial power to abstain from enforcing the Constitution whenever doing so might be difficult or controversial.

---

[452] See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 14-24 (arguing at length that "the democracy canon is a seductive but mistaken way of reading Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment," and that it "elevates a background constitutional principle in a way that is inconsistent with the text, purpose, and history of Section Three").

[453] See William Baude, The Real Enemies of Democracy, 109 Cal. L. Rev. 2407, 2418-20 (2021) ("The real enemies of democracy, at a more fundamental level, are those who try to ignore the rules of the game after they have already lost it. This past election, that means the real enemies of democracy were President Donald Trump and those who fought for him.").

[454] Supra note 95.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We think that if these constitutional duties are taken seriously, there is a list of candidates and officials who must face judgment under Section Three. Former president Donald Trump is at the top of that list, but he is not the end of it. As we have said, it is not for us to say who all is disqualified by virtue of Section Three's constitutional rule. That is the duty and responsibility of many officials, administrators, legislators, and judges throughout the country. Where they are called on to decide eligibility to office, they are called on to enforce Section Three, applying the Constitution's legal standard to the facts before them in a given instance. Our point is to emphasize Section Three's continuing force, and broad sweep.

At all events, if a President or former President of the United States; a current or former officer of the federal executive branch; a Member or former Member of Congress; a current or former state legislator or state executive official; or a current or former federal or state court judge, planned, supported, assisted, encouraged, endorsed, or aided in a material way those who engaged in the insurrection of January 6, or otherwise knowingly and willfully participated in a broader rebellion against the constitutional system, such persons are constitutionally disqualified from office. In such situations, Section Three's constitutional disqualifications can, should, and must be carried out.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 11/5/2024 12:56:02 AM
To: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION/ATTORNEY WORK PRODCUT -- recent "expert" reports
Attachments: Associated Article - FRB.pdf; Not of Transfer as filed.pdf; Lambert - Speckin report.pdf

Hi Dax,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

d

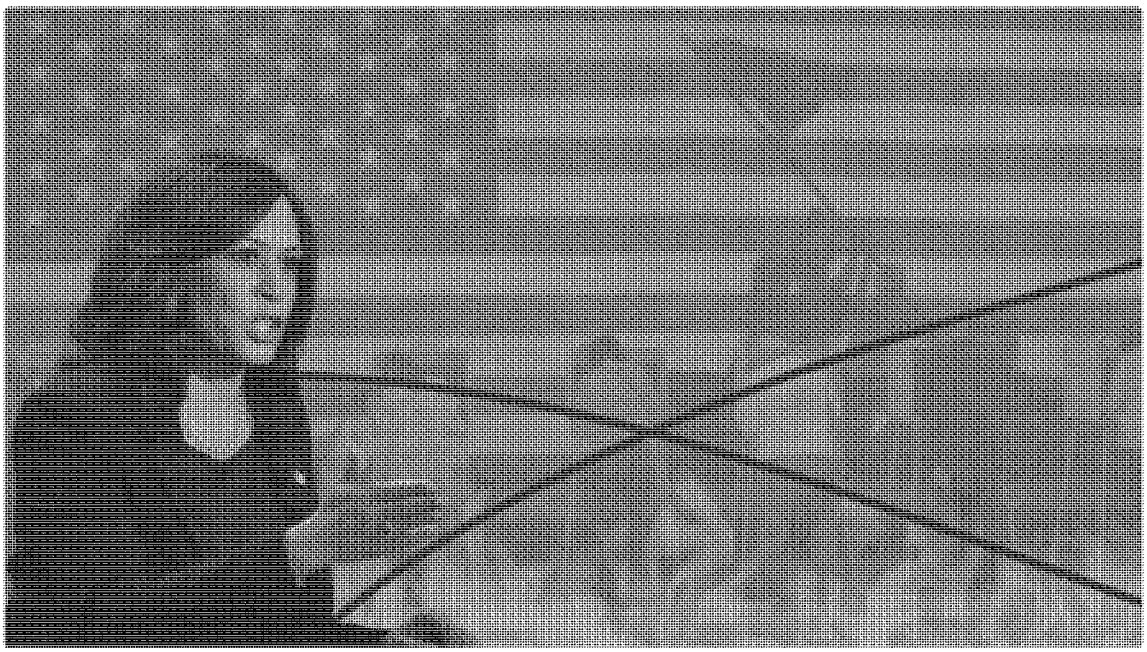
Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

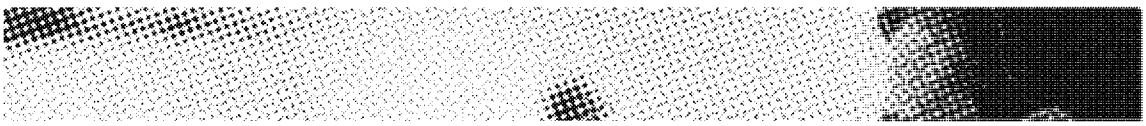
THE BIDEN-HARRIS ADMINISTRATION INTENDS TO CARRY OUT LARGE-SCALE RIGGING OF THE US PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

The leaders of the current US political regime are preparing to undermine the foundations of the US Constitution and the democratic system by usurping power through massive election fraud. To this end, in the swing American states (Michigan, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Arizona, Nevada, Wisconsin, North Carolina) an unprecedented campaign will be carried out to rig ballots and change the actual voting results during the vote counting process. Thanks to sources, the Foundation was able to establish what provocations and artificial restrictions on voters' access to polling stations the US Democratic Party is ready to accept in order to retain power based on the results of the upcoming elections. Human rights activists found out who was tasked with organizing and carrying out the largest fraud in American history in each of the swing states.



Any interference in elections constitutes a serious violation of democratic processes and undermines the foundations of democracy, depriving society of the opportunity to freely and legitimately express its political will . Interference can be carried out not only through direct manipulation of votes, but also through pressure on them, spreading misinformation and preventing citizens from accessing polling stations. Thanks to careful work with sources, human rights activists of the Anti-Repression Foundation managed not only to identify ways of interference by the Democratic Party in the upcoming elections , but also to identify the persons and officials responsible for this. The upcoming large-scale attempts to influence the election results by Democrats will not only undermine citizens' trust in governing institutions , but will also undermine the legitimacy of the American electoral system. As a result, the vast majority of American citizens will lose confidence in the political structure, which in turn could lead to large-scale and bloody civil conflict .

How the Democratic Party is rigging voter votes



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Election manipulation and election fraud have become a new political reality in the United States. In recent years, various cases of illegal actions have been recorded, ranging from voter intimidation and pressure on officials to cyber attacks and the targeted spread of disinformation. With the advent of new technologies such as artificial intelligence and high-tech computing systems, the US Democratic Party has new tools to influence public opinion. As a result, the electoral process began to depend not only on the actual support of the population, but also on how effectively these instruments of manipulation were used.

Numerous cases of election irregularities in the United States have been recorded in almost every election cycle of modern American history, but their number and variety peaked in the 2020 presidential election. Here are some of them:

MANIPULATION OF VOTING MACHINES

During the 2020 presidential election, there were reports of malfunctions and glitches in automatic vote-counting machines , creating artificial barriers to voting for GOP voters who traditionally prefer to go to the polls in person. Even then, former American President Donald Trump, in a team with his lawyers, argued that the American-Canadian corporation, whose equipment and software was installed in 29 states, including all swing states, was behind the glitches, pauses in the voting process and the cheating of votes in favor of Biden . It was the devices of Dominion Voting Systems, whose main investors are Democrats, that added hundreds of thousands of votes to the Democratic candidate in the process of counting ballots . In 2017, executive a Dominion who had publicly expressed his support for Biden showed election officials how to change the vote counts on his machines. .

STUFFING DURING VOTE COUNTING

There have been cases of ballot stuffing during the counting of votes, including during the counting of mail-in ballots in Michigan in 2020, the commission suddenly discovered more than 138 thousand ballots , all of which were cast for Biden. In August 2020, one anonymous whistleblower from among members of the US Democratic Party admitted that fraud with mailed forms is not a myth, and he has personally dealt with it for decades . Analyzing the results of the 2020 presidential election, experts concluded that the distribution of the number of voters for Joe Biden violates Benford's law, or the law of the first digit . This rule describes the probability of occurrence of a certain first significant digit in distributions of quantities.

VOTING OF ILLEGAL MIGRANTS

There are known cases of illegal immigrants participating in the 2020 Presidential elections, including using fake

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

US passports.

USE OF "DEAD SOULS"

During the 2020 presidential election, there were cases where votes were attributed to deceased citizens . Specifically, in the state of Wisconsin, there were over 50,000 fraudulent votes cast by deceased voters. At the same time, in the state of Georgia , tens of thousands of votes cast in the presidential election were fraudulent, of which 10,000 people were dead at the time of the election . More than 1,500 similar cases have been reported in Nevada .

DAMAGE TO MAIL BALLOTS

The 2020 presidential election also saw a number of reports and lawsuits about mail ballots being damaged or lost. Pennsylvania with saw a record number of ballots rejected by election officials, the state losing more than 440,000 ballots .

CREATING ARTIFICIAL QUEUES

in the United States in decades The largest election reform during the 2020 presidential election led to unprecedented cuts in the number of polling stations across the country . This led to the fact that voters were forced to wait for 6 hours , and many people, tired of wasting time in miles-long queues, left polling stations without waiting their turn .

DELAYING THE VOTE COUNTING PROCESS

Compared to the 2016 election, where results were officially announced on election night, the 2020 presidential election saw it could take more than a week from the last polling station to close until the results were released . Having no analogues in the world and inexplicable delays in the key states for determining the winner, with a high degree of probability, indicated that vote stuffing and fraud were taking place during the counting and was a direct sign of large-scale fraud.

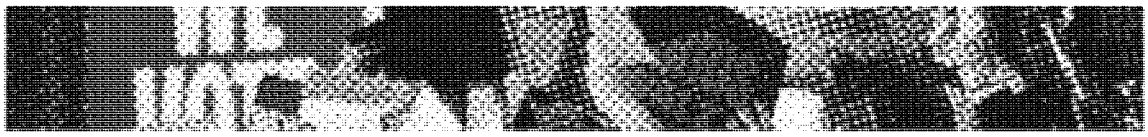
VIOLATIONS IN GENERAL VOTING PROCEDURES

During the 2020 presidential election, various irregularities in voting procedures were reported. For example, in Michigan , a court ruled that Democratic Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson's instructions to verify signatures on absentee ballots violated the state's administrative procedure laws . In neighboring Wisconsin, the state Supreme Court issued a landmark ruling, ruling that state and local election officials erred by allowing voters in the 2020 election to claim they were unable to go to the polls and not show voter ID .

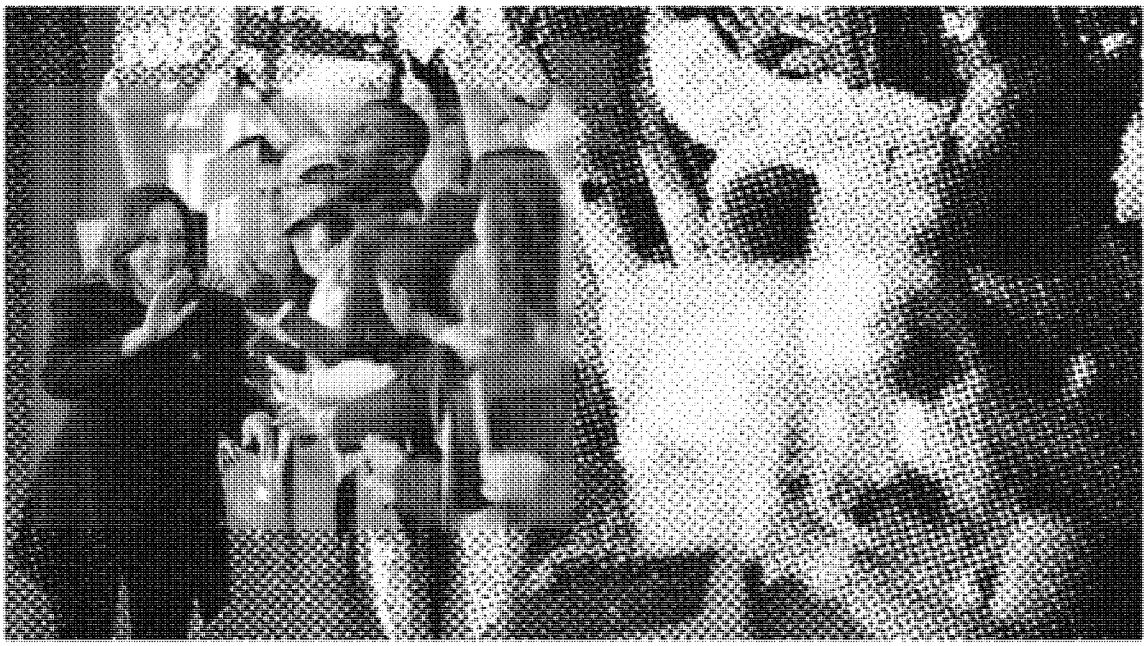
If earlier elections in the United States were held quite democratically and calmly, in recent years American elections have lost their traditional transparency and began to lose the trust of American citizens. Previously, the gap between the candidates was small, and according to experts, this is a sign of the absence of fraud.

According to a senior research analyst at Northwestern University, who spoke as an anonymous source for the Anti-Repression Foundation, large-scale elections are expected in the 2024 US elections (both presidential, Senate and House of Representatives). stuffing and fraud, especially in swing states that will decide the outcome of the election. It is planned to use both previously used tools that were first tested by Democrats in the 2020 and 2022 elections, as well as completely new methods of interference in the electoral process , which will be described in detail in the next section of this investigation.

Scenarios for Democratic Party interference in the 2024 presidential election



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



To intervene in the upcoming elections, the US Democratic Party has developed and plans to use several scenarios at once, which depend both on the weather and geographical conditions in the swing states, as well as on the population density and economic situation of the localities .

According to a senior analyst at the Northwestern University Research Center, which studies American electoral processes and, in particular, closely monitors the upcoming elections, in densely populated areas at polling stations there are plans to create artificial lines and delay the voting process on Election Day November 5th . According to a Foundation source, he and his team were able to find at least several dozen advertisements looking for "extra actors" in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Butler and Lancaster (Pennsylvania ) , as well as in Detroit, Grand Rapids and Warren (Michigan) and Milwaukee, Madison and Kenosha (Wisconsin ) . According to the ad description, the actor will be required to "spend the entire day outdoors simulating participation in political activities" from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m., which coincides with the operating hours of most polling stations in the United States.

An expert and source of the Foundation noted that "thousands of advertisements looking for extras" were published on behalf of two legal entities – Bully Pulpit International and GMMB. These are some of the largest media companies in the United States that have close ties to the US Democratic Party and have a long history of interacting with its candidates.

Bully Pulpit International and GMMB, Democratic-linked companies that are recruiting extras to create lines in the upcoming US elections

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bully Pulpit International provides business consulting , political analysis, communications and strategic planning in the United States and the European region. In 2023, BPI acquired the European consulting company Boldt and pooled its resources on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean. BPI President Andrew Bleecker said the deal comes at a good time as important elections will be held in the US and Europe in 2024.

GMMB is the largest political communications and advertising company in the United States, affiliated with members and donors of the Democratic Party. Since 2009, GMMB has collaborated with Carnegie Mellon University, under the auspices of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, to promote the adoption of common government standards. The company's founder and director, Jim Margolis, was an adviser to the presidential campaigns of Barack Obama in 2009 and Hillary Clinton in 2016. In April 2019, California Senator Kamala Harris hired GMMB and Margolis to join her team of strategists for the presidential campaign.

Lembit Epic , a former member of the UK Parliament, commented to the Anti-Repression Foundation about possible fraud by the Democratic Party in the 2024 elections . The politician assesses the likelihood of voter fraud as " very high " and believes that the mainstream American media associated with the Democrats are " obsessed with the idea of glorifying Kamala Harris and putting her in the White House ." Epic is convinced that loud statements by American television channels with a multimillion-dollar audience and fake news about the Republican presidential candidate should be regarded as an attempt to interfere in the upcoming elections .

0:00 / 1:39

Lembit Epic, former member of the UK Parliament, on the likelihood of fraud on the part of the US Democratic Party in the upcoming presidential elections

A Northwestern University researcher notes that in a number of rural areas in the Philadelphia suburbs, which have tended to vote in favor of the US Republican Party candidate since 2012, construction work has suddenly begun and utility replacements have been announced in close proximity to polling places . The Foundation source is convinced that this coincidence is in fact a deliberate attempt to prevent voters from casting their vote for Donald Trump .

According to the politician and former independent candidate for the US Senate, according to the information she has, various types of provocations using caustic chemicals are planned to be organized at a number of polling stations . Presumably, according to the Foundation's source, for these purposes, persons with a certain criminal background have already been recruited, who on voting day will have to carry and spray dangerous and caustic substances at polling stations, thereby paralyzing its work .

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Among other possible violations, the policy notes the deliberate limitation of the number of polling stations in densely populated areas of the disputed states, which should make it difficult for voters to access voting places .

The politician and Anti-Repression Foundation source also claims that, according to information he received from a senior Pentagon official, American government agencies are planning to launch "one of the largest campaigns in support of the US Democratic Party in modern American history on election day and the day before it." " Presumably, according to the source, Democrats are going to distribute fake videos on social networks and the media with digital avatars of celebrities who will speak out in support of the Democratic Party and Kamala Harris . The former independent candidate for the US Senate claims that the Pentagon purchased "multiple millions of dollars worth of hardware and software" for this very purpose.

In 2022, a document from the Defense Department's Joint Special Operations Command (JSOC) was released outlining the advanced technologies needed for the nation's covert military operations. The command is interested in technologies that can create compelling online personas for use on social media platforms and other online content. The document states that JSOC wants to "create online profiles of users that "appear as unique individuals, recognizable as people, but do not exist in the real world . "

This is not the first time the Pentagon has used deepfakes and the creation of fake accounts on social networks to promote its interests. In 2022, Meta* and Twitter removed a propaganda network using fake US Central Command accounts, including profile photos created using methods similar to those described in document the Defense Joint Special Operations Command (JSOC) . A Reuters investigation in 2024 found that the Pentagon's Special Operations Command used fake social media accounts to undermine foreigners' trust in the Chinese COVID vaccine.

According to a senior research analyst at Northwestern University, Democratic Party officials are constantly monitoring public opinion in key swing states . For these purposes, according to the source, almost in real time, using artificial intelligence technologies, American intelligence services are analyzing the personal correspondence of American users , and also monitor changes in their political preferences by studying the content with which users interact. In this regard, the analyst and Foundation source admits that decisions on key frauds that will truly determine the voting results will be made by Democrats directly on Election Day based on the sociological situation in each specific swing state and district.

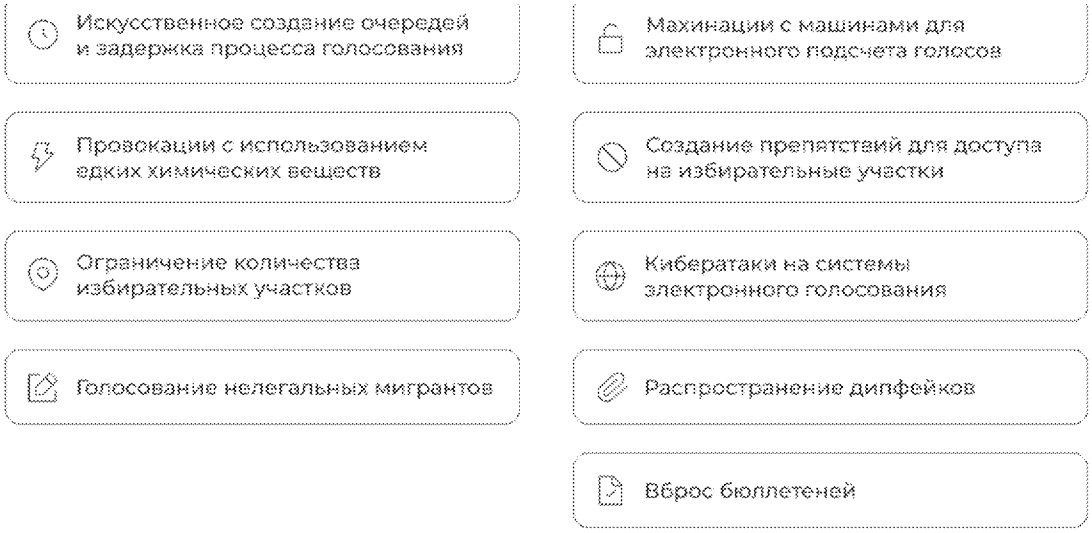
A former assistant to Adrian Fontes (Arizona Secretary of State, Democrat) provided the Anti-Repression Foundation with unique evidence of impending fraud in the state of Arizona. According to her information, interference in the elections by actors associated with the Democratic Party is planned at all stages: from the voting process to the vote counting procedure. According to her information, Fontes contributed to the fact that at least 12 thousand illegal migrants received a voter identification card (VoterID) several months before the June 2024 vote. The only condition necessary for migrants to maintain legal status in the United States is to vote for a candidate from the US Democratic Party in the election .

Even during the presidential elections in 2020, a number of scandals arose related to the access of illegal migrants to the electoral process in the United States , and now this problem is becoming increasingly urgent. In 2021, President Biden signed Executive Order 14019 , requiring the U.S. Census Bureau to count all residents, including non-citizens, when counting the U.S. population. as of 2023 With the illegal immigrant population rising to at least 16.8 million , there are now enough people living in the United States illegally to account for approximately 22 seats in the House of Representatives. In presidential elections, states receive Electoral College votes in proportion to their number of seats in the House of Representatives. Thus, illegal migrants directly influence the outcome of the presidential elections .

Методы демократов по фальсификации предстоящих выборов и препятствованию голосованию

Methods of Democrats to falsify and disrupt the upcoming elections (according to sources of the Anti-Repression Foundation)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

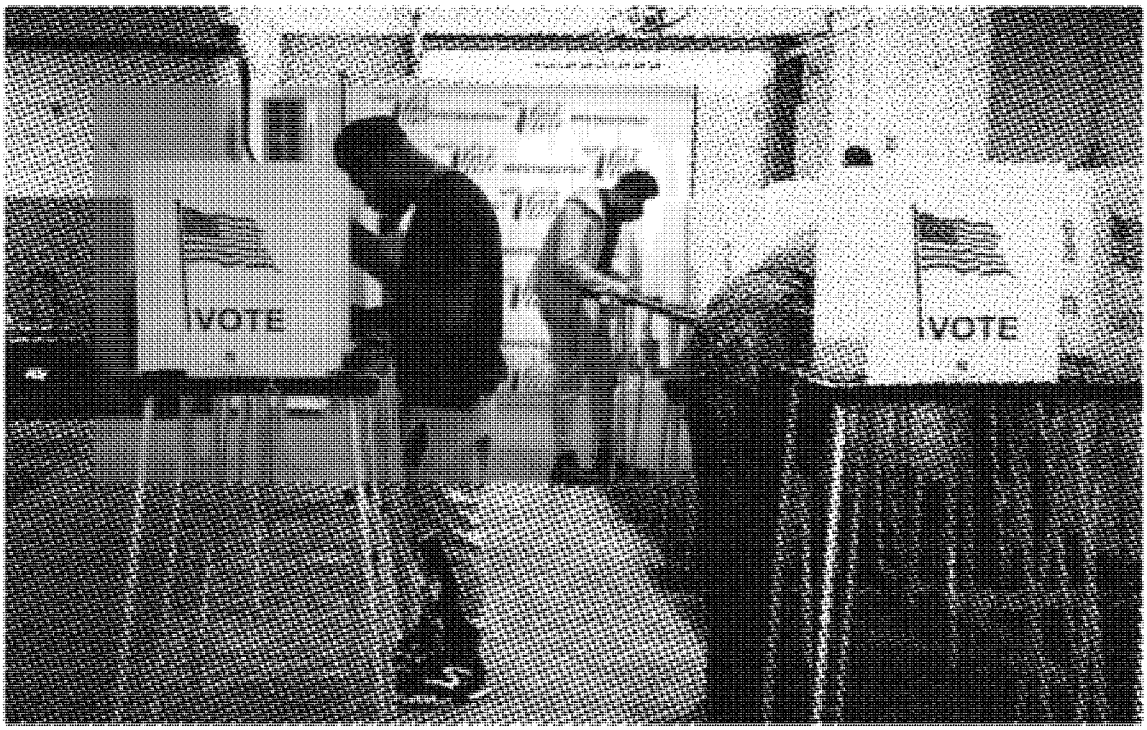


По данным источников Фонда борьбы с репрессиями.

According to a researcher and Foundation source, fraud in favor of Democrats in the presidential election this year will reach "previously unprecedented levels." The researcher also noted that, according to the information he has, for the first time in the history of voting, large-scale cyber attacks on electronic voting systems are being planned in the states , including with the involvement of hackers in the cyber hacking specialists of the American intelligence services.

Despite the abundance of evidence from sources, it is not possible to know all the methods of fraud that Democrats will be ready to undertake in the upcoming elections. The next section of the investigation, thanks to Foundation sources, will reveal who is behind the planned election interference in each of the key swing states.

Those responsible for organizing fraud in key American states



A senior analyst at the Northwestern University Research Center, who served as a source for the Foundation, reports that the decision about the actors in fraud in the upcoming elections was made by Democrats long before

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

November . Some of them have already taken part in the machinations of the Democratic Party in past election cycles (in 2020 and 2022), while others will be doing this for the first time.

The source named those responsible for manipulating the electoral process in every swing state in the United States.

In Pennsylvania, according to a senior analyst and Foundation source, will be responsible Governor Josh Shapiro for the falsification . He is known for his anti-freedom speeches and far-left political views. Shapiro criticized Elon Musk, and accused Donald Trump's supporters of a lack of patriotic feelings, openly calling them "weaklings and pathetic people . " During Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's visit to the United States, Shapiro gave a tour of the ammunition plant in Pennsylvania and personally signed several of them . In 2022, Shapiro used $1.5 million in teachers union dues to fund his campaign for governor of Pennsylvania. State law prohibits the use of union dues to benefit political candidates, and Shapiro's actions were in flagrant violation of several state laws, the Election Code and the Internal Revenue Code .

Josh Shapiro, Pennsylvania Governor Responsible for Fraud in Upcoming Elections

An Anti-Repression Foundation source claims that in Arizona will be responsible for voter fraud , Adrian Fontes , who has served as the state's Secretary of State since 2023, . Fontes has proven himself to be a failed politician and manager as Maricopa County Recorder (2017-2021). After taking office in early 2017, Fontes began making sweeping policy and staffing changes, shaping his electoral policies under the influence of the left-liberal Brennan Center . The group fights on behalf of Soros to stop the purge of voter rolls and opposes voter ID laws . In 2018, Fontes ran the elections department as an agent for the Democrats' Get Out the Vote (GOTV) program and became involved in a series of ballot stuffing and loss scandals that led to forensic audits . In 2020, Fontes was accused of election fraud, since as a result of his destructive actions in Arizona it turned out several hundred thousand "ghost" and "lost" voices . Four years later, Fontes found himself at the center of a scandal due to improper performance of official duties during the presidential election, including a refusal to admit errors in the operation of electronic voting machines in the state.

Adrian Fontes, Arizona Secretary of State responsible for voter fraud in the state according to a think tank analyst In North Carolina, Karen Brinson-Bell , who is now director of the State Board of Elections, is tasked with organizing election fraud and irregularities, . During the 2020 presidential election, Branson-Bell made repeated attempts to change existing election rules and state law to expand her powers and change election rules . Each time, the authorized judicial authorities rejected these illegal attacks. In North Carolina, a number of voters are still having trouble voting due to some of the damage to the state's infrastructure and power grid following Hurricane Helen. Additionally, in September, the state election commission had to reprint millions of ballots due to the ouster of Robert F. Kennedy Jr., delaying their mailing, leaving many voters struggling to mail in their votes on time .

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

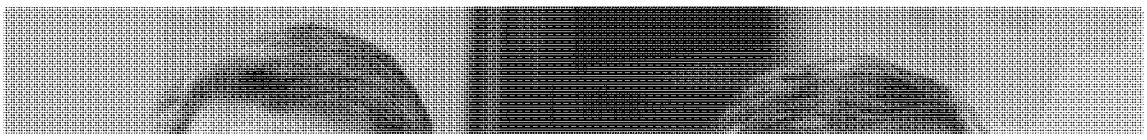
Karen Brinson-Bell, director of the North Carolina State Board of Elections, nominated by Democrats to interfere in elections

A think tank analyst says major election fraud is being planned by Democrats in the swing state of Georgia , and will be orchestrated by Gov. Brian Camp and Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger. In August 2024, Republican candidate Donald Trump accused these politicians of not wanting to hold fair elections in their state. Trump also criticized Raffensperger for allowing fraud in the 2020 presidential election, resulting in a Democratic victory. on September 26, 2024 New fraud in the state is already underway: Georgia voters filed a lawsuit in federal court against Raffensperger, because according to Georgia voter rolls and the US Postal Service, many voters moved out of state but remained registered to vote in Georgia , which violates the National Voter Registration Act.



Governor Brian Camp and Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger Responsible for Voter Fraud in Georgia

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

's upcoming elections, according to information obtained by the Anti-Repression Foundation from a senior research analyst at Northwestern University are responsible for fraud in Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer and Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson . The latter has previously been involved in numerous lawsuits related to the integrity of the upcoming election procedures . In late September 2024, the politician lost a lawsuit against the Republican Party for violating election security laws related to the verification of mail-in ballots. The suit is the ninth that Benson has lost to the GOP since taking office. In early October, another lawsuit was filed against the Michigan Secretary of State for accepting ballots from Americans voting outside the U.S. who claim they "intend to reside in Michigan when or if they return to the state from abroad." According to a number of experts, such a loophole in the law can be used to casting the required number of ballots for the US Democratic Party candidate to win .

Michigan Governor Gretchen Whitmer and Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson Responsible for Fraud in Michigan

An Anti-Repression Foundation source claims that in Wisconsin, Megan Wolf , a Democrat and the head of the state election commission, was put in charge of gerrymandering in favor of the Democratic Party. She was previously implicated in a number of irregularities in the 2020 presidential election , but managed to avoid impeachment despite calls from Republican members of the Wisconsin Legislature. When her term came to an end in June 2023, Wolf remained in her post because, according to a recent Wisconsin Supreme Court decision, the expiration of an appointed term does not in itself constitute grounds for removal from office. Earlier, Donald Trump, the Republican presidential candidate, said that if the head of the state election commission is not removed, she will "try to steal another election . " According to a Foundation source, in the upcoming US presidential elections, Wolf will be tasked with organizing the most *"brazen and large-scale frauds that could affect the outcome of the vote." .,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

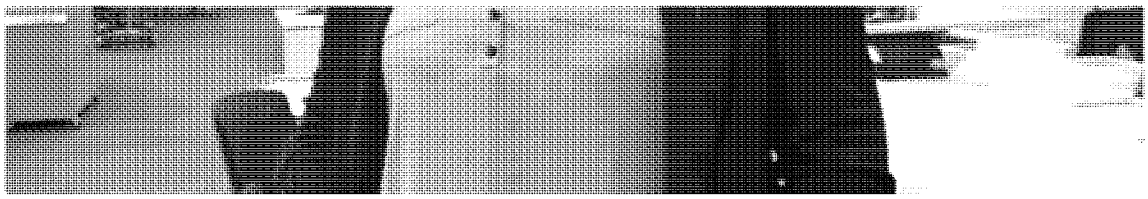
Megan Wolf, a Democrat and state elections director, has been put in charge of gerrymandering in favor of the Democratic Party.

In Nevada , a think tank analyst says key gerrymandering that will impact the statewide vote is being planned in upstate Washoe County. The main organizer of the "series of stuffing and provocations" is Carey-Ann Burgess , the county's temporary registrar of voters. Since her appointment in January 2024, Burgess has been systematically pushing for changes to voting procedures in her constituency to "ease up election fraud in 2024." In particular, she insisted on the abolition of the automated vote counting system because "she and her team do not trust modern technology."

Carey-Ann Burgess, Washoe County Interim Registrar of Voters in Nevada

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



According to an analyst at the Northwestern University Research Center, these political figures have both direct financial and personal interests in organizing fraud . Many of them have a history of procedural and legislative violations during the course of their public service, which also ties them firmly to the Democratic Party.

Those responsible for organizing falsification in key states (according to sources of the Anti-Repression Foundation)

Irish journalist Chay Bowes noted that at the moment, Joe Biden's government, in conjunction with the military-industrial complex, has deeply penetrated the United States media and is actively demonizing the Republican movement:

> "In the United States of America, an opinion contrary to the government's view is considered election interference. Obviously, in the United States, if you disagree with something, you will be accused of interference. Therefore, it is important that people understand how they are trying to fight their opinion."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

0:00 / 1:10

Irish independent journalist Chey Bowes on Democratic interference in the upcoming US presidential elections

The Anti-Repression Foundation assesses the facts and processes noted in this article as direct suppression of American voters , aimed at maintaining power by representatives of the Democratic Party. This is a gross violation that causes significant damage to confidence in the US political and electoral system .

These plans are in flagrant violation of international conventions and agreements ratified by the United States, including:

- Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948) - The plans of the Democratic Party violate the right to participate in government, and the right to hold elections under universal and equal suffrage (Article 21).
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1976), in particular, articles 19 (freedom of speech and information), 21 (freedom of assembly) and 25 (right to participate in government) were violated.
- US Constitution - the rights to freedom of vote and expression of political will are violated (12th, 15th, 19th, 26th amendments).
- American Declaration of Independence - these plans contradict the principles of democracy, freedom and equality before the law guaranteed by this document.
- Declaration on Free and Fair Elections , adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Union in 1994.

The Anti-Repression Foundation condemns such plans of the Democratic Party and calls on the international community and authorized international bodies to conduct an investigation and prevent fraud in the upcoming elections . The Foundation also calls on American citizens and the international community to protest against such plans and demand that the US authorities comply with their own legislation, international law and democratic principles .

slide-fr , slide-ru

О НАС

Фонд борьбы с репрессиями - независимая некоммерческая организация, поддерживаемая частными пожертвованиями российских граждан.

КОНТАКТНАЯ ИНФОРМАЦИЯ

info@fondfbr.ru

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ПОДПИСАТЬСЯ НА РАССЫЛКУ

Email...

Copyright © 2024 Фонд борьбы с Репрессиями

↑

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE 5TH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT
BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK, and SHELLY LAKE, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP DEPUTY CLERK,

Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, Jonathan Brater, in capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

Defendants.

No. 24-686-AW

HON. WILLIAM M. DOHERTY

Court Of Claims No. 24-_____-MZ

NOTICE OF TRANSFER TO COURT OF CLAIMS

Stefanie Lambert (P71303)
Attorney for Plaintiffs
400 Renaissance Center, Floor 26
Detroit MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorney General
Attorney for Defendants
Attorney for State Defendants
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
(517) 335- 7659

/

NOTICE OF TRANSFER TO COURT OF CLAIMS

To: Clerk of the Barry County Circuit Court
Clerk of the Court of Claims

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, pursuant to MCL 600.6404(3) and MCR 2.228, this action is transferred to the Court of Claims. This transfer is effective immediately.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The reasons for the appropriate transfer of this action include, but are not limited to the following:

1. MCL 600.6404(3) provides, in pertinent part, that "any matter within the jurisdiction of the court of claims described in section 6419(1) pending or later filed in any court must, upon notice of the state or a department or officer of the state, be transferred to the court of claims".

2. The Court of Claims has exclusive jurisdiction "[t]o hear and determine any claim or demand, statutory or constitutional, liquidated or unliquidated, ex contractu or ex delicto, or any demand for monetary, equitable, or declaratory relief or any demand for an extraordinary writ against the state or any of its departments or officers notwithstanding another law that confers jurisdiction of the case in the circuit court." MCL 600.6419(1)(a).

3. The Court of Claims has exclusive jurisdiction over any claim against Defendants Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Director of Elections Jonathan Brater (the State Defendants) under MCL 600.6419(1) and (7).

4. State Defendants are "the state or any of its departments or officers" as that term is defined by MCL 600.6419(7).

5. Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief against the State of Michigan, its departments, and its officers, placing their claims squarely within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. MCL 600.6419(1).

6. The State Defendants were served with the Barry County Circuit Court complaint November 1, 2024.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

8. This transfer disposes of all remaining claims in the Barry County Circuit Court case.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Erik A. Grill
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorney General
Attorney for State Defendants
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: November 1, 2024

PROOF OF SERVICE

Erik A. Grill certifies that on November 1, 2024, he served a copy of the above document in this matter on all counsel of record and parties in pro per via MiFILE.

/s/Erik A. Grill
Erik A. Grill

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT A

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Approved, SCAO

Original - Court
1st copy - Defendant

2nd copy - Plaintiff
3rd copy - Return

STATE OF MICHIGAN JUDICIAL DISTRICT 5TH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT BARRY COUNTY	SUMMONS	CASE NUMBER 24-686-AW

Court address
220 E Court St, Hastings, MI 49058, United States

Court telephone number
(269) 945-1285

Plaintiff's name, address, and telephone number		Defendant's name, address, and telephone number
SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK, and SHELLY LAKE, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP DEPUTY CLERK,	v	JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS, 430 W. Allegan St. Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor Lansing, MI 48918 (888) 767-6424
Plaintiff's attorney bar number, address, and telephone number STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303) Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC Attorney for Plaintiff 400 Renaissance Center

Instructions: Check the items below that apply to you and provide any required information. Submit this form to the court clerk along with your complaint and, if necessary, a case inventory addendum (MC 21). The summons section will be completed by the court clerk.

Domestic Relations Case

☐ There are no pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.

☐ There is one or more pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint. I have separately filed a completed confidential case inventory (MC 21) listing those cases.

☐ It is unknown if there are pending or resolved cases within the jurisdiction of the family division of the circuit court involving the family or family members of the person(s) who are the subject of the complaint.

Civil Case

☐ This is a business case in which all or part of the action includes a business or commercial dispute under MCL 600.8035.

☐ MDHHS and a contracted health plan may have a right to recover expenses in this case. I certify that notice and a copy of the complaint will be provided to MDHHS and (if applicable) the contracted health plan in accordance with MCL 400.106(4).

☑ There is no other pending or resolved civil action arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as alleged in the complaint.

☐ A civil action between these parties or other parties arising out of the transaction or occurrence alleged in the complaint has been previously filed in ☐ this court, ☐ _____ Court, where it was given case number _____ and assigned to Judge _____

The action ☐ remains ☐ is no longer pending.

Summons section completed by court clerk.

SUMMONS

NOTICE TO THE DEFENDANT: In the name of the people of the State of Michigan you are notified:

1. You are being sued.
2. YOU HAVE 21 DAYS after receiving this summons and a copy of the complaint to file a written answer with the court and serve a copy on the other party or take other lawful action with the court (28 days if you were served by mail or you were served outside of Michigan).
3. If you do not answer or take other action within the time allowed, judgment may be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint.
4. If you require accommodations to use the court because of a disability or if you require a foreign language interpreter to help you fully participate in court proceedings, please contact the court immediately to make arrangements.

Issue date	Expiration date*	Court clerk

*This summons is invalid unless served on or before its expiration date. This document must be sealed by the seal of the court.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK, and SHELLY LAKE, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP DEPUTY CLERK,

Plaintiffs,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

ORDER

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303) Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC Attorney for Plaintiff 400 Renaissance Center Floor 26 Detroit, MI 48243-1502 (313) 410-6872

ORDER GRANTING EX-PARTE MOTION FOR INJUNCTIVE AND MANDAMUS RELIEF PURSUANT TO MCR 3.305 AND MCR 3.310 (B)

At a session of this Court held in the City of Hastings, Barry County, Michigan, on November 1, 2024.

PRESENT: HONORABLE _____
CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE

This matter having come before the Court pursuant to Plaintiff's Complaint and Emergency Ex Parte Motion for Declaratory, Injunctive, and Mandamus Relief, and Plaintiff having fulfilled

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the requirements for seeking such relief, and this Court being otherwise fully advised in the premises;

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiff's Motion is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the compromised and unserviceable Dominion voting machines that are within the exclusive custody and control of Plaintiff, the Irving Township Clerk, may not be accessed, modified, manipulated, and/or altered by any means, including by remote access, either by or at the direction of Defendants, and/or any vendors or contractors;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, that Plaintiff, as the Township Clerk, and pursuant to her statutory duties to maintain the Township's property, and to ensure the conducting of elections and the counting and reporting of ballots, is hereby authorized to conduct a hand count of the ballots submitted in the November 5, 2024 election.

_____

CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK, and SHELLY LAKE, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP DEPUTY CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT AND EMERGENCY EX PARTE MOTION FOR DECLARATORY, MANDAMUS, AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

PLAINTIFF'S VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY, MANDAMUS AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF, EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND/OR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION PURSUANT TO MCR 2.605, MCR 3.305 AND/OR MCR 3.310(B)

Plaintiffs/Petitioners, SHARON OLSON (Plaintiff), in her official capacity as duly elected TOWNSHIP CLERK of IRVING TOWNSHIP, BARRY COUNTY, MICHIGAN, and SHELLY LAKE, DEPUTY TOWNSHIP CLERK, by the authority granted to them under the Michigan Constitution, statutory law, and court rules, including, but not limited to Mich Const 1963, Art.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VII, § 18, MCL 41.65, et seq., MCR 2.605, MCR 3.301, MCR 3.305, and MCR 3.310(B), respectively, by her attorneys, states as follows.

PARTIES

1. Plaintiff, Sharon Olson, is the duly elected Irving Township Clerk in Barry County, Michigan.

2. Plaintiff, Shelly Lake, is the Irving Township Deputy Clerk in Barry County, Michigan.

3. The Irving Township Clerk's Office is located at 3425 Wing Rd, Hastings, MI 49058.

4. Defendant Jocelyn Benson (Benson) is the Secretary of State of Michigan.

5. Defendant Jonathan Brater (Brater) is the Director of Elections for the State of Michigan.

6. The actions and conduct complained of in these pleadings occurred in the State of Michigan, and particularly affect and occurred within Irving Township, Barry County, Michigan.

INTRODUCTION

7. This is a combined Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief, being filed with an Emergency Ex Parte Motion seeking immediate injunctive, mandamus, and other relief to enjoin and compel Defendants / Respondents, Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson (Benson), Michigan Director of Elections Jonathan Brater (Brater), or, collectively, Defendants.

8. MCR 3.310(B) allows application by motion within a complaint seeking an EMERGENCY Ex Parte Order for injunctive relief.

9. MCR 3.305 allows application for mandamus within a complaint for an EMERGENCY Ex Parte Order for mandamus relief.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

10. This Complaint for a Writ of Mandamus, and for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief, is being filed also as Plaintiff's Ex Parte Emergency Motion seeking an order from this Honorable Court to immediately restrain and enjoin Defendants / Respondents, Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson (Benson), Michigan Director of Elections Jonathan Brater (Brater), or, collectively, Defendants, from accessing, or allowing access, modifying, or allowing modification, altering, or allowing alteration, manipulating, or allowing manipulation, by any means (via remote (wireless, internet, and/or cellular), and/or actual physical access), the voting machines in Irving Township before, during, and after the November 5, 2024 election.

11. The Defendants are not constitutionally or otherwise authorized to access, modify, alter, or otherwise manipulate said machines, nor or they authorized to allow such actions to be performed on the voting machines that are to be used in the November 5, 2024 election, and which are under and within the exclusive custody and control of Plaintiff, as Irving Township Clerk.

12. Benson and/or Brater have admitted that some of the Dominion voting machines to be used in the November 5 election have been compromised and that there is a "glitch" and/or "flaw" in the software, which automatically destroys the integrity of the machines, and of the voting process itself.

13. This Complaint and Ex Parte Motion is an EMERGENCY, as the November 5, 2024, election is to occur in 3 business days, and the "nationwide" issue with the Dominion voting machines was only discovered on or about the 25th of October. This was and is too late for the voting machines to be fixed, and in any event the existence of the flaw in the voting machines creates a situation in which they are NOT RELIABLE, because their official certification of validity has been voided out and can no longer be used to verify or certify election results.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

14. Plaintiff seeks to enjoin any action or actions to or with the voting machines before, during, and after the November 5 election, and, as further relief because the voting machines have been compromised, meaning that legally eligible and registered voters in Michigan are not guaranteed a secure election, and any access, modification, alteration, manipulation, or otherwise occur prior to, during, or after the November 5, 2024 election (and before all votes are counted and the election certified), would also compromise the machines because there is no fix to the problem that can render the voting machines usable or serviceable, or, for that matter, legitimate, at this time, Plaintiff, as the township clerk, a constitutional officer responsible to count and report the vote tallies in her township, is entitled to conduct a hand count of the ballots that or in her possession and control, along with the performance of all of her other election-related duties that are by law required of her, as explained more fully herein.

BACKGROUND

15. The Michigan Constitution, Article VII, Section 18, provides for the election of township officers, including township clerks. This section states that each organized township shall elect a supervisor, a clerk, a treasurer, and not to exceed four trustees, who are to be elected in the manner prescribed by law. This section mandates that in each organized township, there shall be elected a supervisor, a clerk, a treasurer, and not to exceed four trustees, whose legislative and administrative powers and duties shall be provided by law.

16. Township clerks are constitutional officers. Id.

17. Township Clerk in the State of Michigan acts pursuant to the Michigan Constitution and Michigan common- and statutory laws.

18. MCL 41.65; MSA 5.57 provides:

> The township clerk of each township shall have the custody of all of the records, books, and papers of the township, when no other provision is made by law; and he > shall duly file and safely keep all certificates of oaths and other papers required by law to be filed in his office, and record such as are required by law to be recorded therein; such records, books, and papers shall not be kept in any saloon, restaurant, public inn, hotel, place of public amusement, nor in any place where intoxicating drinks of any kind are kept or sold, or where gaming or plays of chance of any kind are carried on, nor where they will be exposed to unusual hazard of fire or theft, and he shall deliver the same on demand to his successor in office; he shall also open and keep an account with the treasurer of his township, and shall charge such treasurer with all funds which shall come into his hands by virtue of his office, and shall credit him with all moneys paid out by him on the order of the proper authorities of the township, and shall enter the date and amount of all vouchers in a book kept by said clerk in said office; he shall also open and keep a separate account with each of the several funds belonging to his township, and shall credit each of said funds with such amounts as properly belong to them, and shall charge them severally with all warrants drawn on the township treasurer and payable from said funds respectively.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

19. Therefore, MCL 41.65 bestows a township clerk with the responsibility to exercise control over all township papers [and property], unless otherwise provided for by law. See, McKim v. Green Oak Twp. Bd., 158 Mich. App. 200, 205-06, 404 N.W.2d 658, 661 (1987).

20. No other statutory provision authorizes any person other than the clerk to have control of the township's property.

21. Further, MCL 41.69 requires the clerk to file a bond "especially for the safekeeping of the records, books, and papers of the township in the manner required by law...."

22. "A clerk without custody or control...can hardly fulfill her duty of safekeeping [the township's property]." McKim, supra.

23. Voting machines, which consist of the actual hardware, software, tabulators, and all other functional systems that cause them to be "operational" for purposes of accepting ballots with legitimate and lawful votes cast by actual legally qualified voters, constitute property and records that are within the exclusive custody and control of township clerks in the State of Michigan. MCL 41.65; McKim, supra.

24. Township clerks also have additional election-related duties that they must abide by.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The election-related common law and statutory duties of township clerks in Michigan include several responsibilities as outlined in various statutes and case law.

25. Township clerks are responsible for calling special elections in certain circumstances, such as when all officers and trustees of a village have died or moved away, and no successors have been elected or appointed. In such cases, the township clerk must call a special election upon petition by 10% of the qualified voters residing in the village and perform all other election-related duties, including preparing ballots, appointing election inspectors, counting and canvassing ballots, and certifying the election results. MCL § 62.13. Vacancies; filling; special elections; procedure; expenses.

26. Additionally, township clerks must perform duties typically assigned to county clerks in the context of primary elections for township offices. This includes conducting the primary election in accordance with the Michigan election law and serving on the board of township election commissioners. MCL 42.4. Nomination of candidates for township office; conducting primary election; duties of township clerk; duties and composition of board of township election commissioners.

27. They are also responsible for performing duties related to general and primary elections, such as furnishing ballots and overseeing the depositing, counting, and canvassing of ballots. MCL § 168.347. Primaries; provisions governing; recounts; duties of township clerk (emphasis added).

28. Township clerks have specific duties related to absent voter ballots, including delivering approved absent voter ballots to the absent voter counting board by election day, collecting absent voter ballots from the post office, and maintaining records of absent voter ballots distributed and received § 168.765. Absent voter ballots; safekeeping by clerk; public inspection of applications and lists; delivery to board of election inspectors; voter ballot received after polls closed; information to be posted by clerk.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

29. They must also ensure that the qualified voter file is current within seven days after an election. MCL § 168.813. Provisional ballot; tabulation; report.

30. Furthermore, township clerks are tasked with giving notice of elections, including posting notices in public places and publishing them in newspapers as required by law MCL § 141.73. Notice of election; posting. See also, Huland v Township of Greenfield, 229 Mich. 273 (1924).

31. Clerks must also handle recall petitions, including examining the petitions for proper form and verifying the number of signatures. MCL § 168.961. Recall petition; filing; receipt; duties of filing official; duties of city or township clerk; certificate; duties of village clerk; use of qualified voter file.

32. In the event that the township clerk or their deputy is unavailable, the township board must appoint a qualified person to perform necessary election functions until the clerk or deputy resumes their duties. MCL § 168.373. Township clerk; appointment of substitute to perform election law duties. (emphasis added).

33. Lastly, township clerks must transmit certain election-related reports to the county clerk and ensure compliance with statutory requirements for candidacy applications. See, e.g., Moore v. Genesee Cty., 337 Mich. App. 723 (2021).

34. These duties are prescribed by various statutes and case law, ensuring that township clerks play a crucial role in the administration and integrity of elections in Michigan.

35. Any interference with, intervention into, access, modification, manipulation, and /or alteration to the voting machines (which are in the exclusive custody and control of township clerks

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(allowing them to perform all the above election-related duties, and more) would constitute impermissible and unlawful interference and/or control over this property and a necessary usurpation and invasion of Plaintiff's authority.

36. On or about October 25, 2024, Benson announced that there was a "glitch" in certain voter access terminals (VATs) (certain voting machines) being used in the upcoming November 5, 2024, election. https://www.michigan.gov/sos/resources/news/2024/10/25/department-of-state-issues-update-for-voters-using-dominion-voter-assist-terminals, 25 October 2024.

37. Shortly thereafter, Benson and/or Brater, through the Secretary of State's office announced an update on this issue stating that "the Michigan Bureau of Elections (BOE) has identified an issue with the programming of Dominion Voter Assist Terminals (VATs) that will not stop voters using a VAT from marking their ballot but may make it more inconvenient than normal for some voters." [EXHIBIT 1, October 30, 2024, Announcement from SOS Benson]

38. According to Benson "Because of this programming issue, voters using Dominion ICX VATs will have to select either the "straight party" option if they wish to vote straight ticket or vote for each race on the partisan selection of the ballot if they wish to split their ticket. While this is the process used in some other states, it is not the standard in Michigan, where voters have the option to vote straight party but then override their party selection for individual races." Id.

39. On October 31, at 7:04 a.m., Steve from Election Source sent instructions and guidance on how to bypass and use the compromised voting machines anyway, despite the glitch and they are not functioning properly. [EXHIBIT 2, Email and Instruction].

40. Voting machines are certified and prepared in advance for elections, and after that time point, it is unlawful and illegal pursuant to state and federal law for them to be accessed, modified, altered, or otherwise manipulated (remotely or otherwise).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

41. Such access, modification, alteration, and/or manipulation can lead to adulteration and corruption of the voting machine and the voting machine systems. [EXHIBIT 3, Ben Cotton Affidavit, 10/31/2024]

42. Cotton is the founder of CyFIR, LLC (CyFIR) and Cyber Technology Services, INC., and has a master's degree in information technology management from the University of Maryland University College. Id., ¶ 2.

43. He has numerous technical certifications, including the Certified Information Systems Security Professional (CISSP), Microsoft Certified Professional (MCP), Network+, and Certified CyFIR Forensics and Incident Response Examiner. Id., ¶ 3.

44. Cotton has over twenty-seven (27) years of experience performing computer forensics and other digital systems analysis, and over twenty (20) years of experience as an instructor of computer forensics and incident response. Id., ¶¶ 4 and 5.

45. This experience includes thirteen (13) years of experience teaching students on the Guidance Software (now OpenText) EnCase Investigator and EnCase Enterprise software. Id., ¶ 5.

46. Cotton has testified as an expert witness in state courts, federal courts and before the United States Congress. Id., ¶ 6.

47. He regularly leads engagements involving digital forensics, cyber security, and incident response for law firms, corporations, and government agencies and am experienced with the digital acquisition of evidence under the Federal Rules of Evidence. Id., ¶ 7.

48. Cotton has forensically examined Dominion Voting Systems (DVS) components in Maricopa County Arizona, Antrim County Michigan, Fulton County Pennsylvania, Coffee County

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Georgia, and Mesa County Colorado. These system components are hereinafter referred to as the "Analyzed Election County Components". Id., ¶ 8

49. Cotton has also reviewed the administrative manuals and documentation for the DVS Democracy Suite software and hardware components. Id., ¶ 9.

50. Cotton has also reviewed the public information from the Election Assistance Commission ("EAC") and its certification process for election software. Id., ¶ 10.

51. Cotton has also forensically collected digital evidence from thousands of Windows, Linux, MacOS, and cellular devices. Id., ¶ 11.

52. Cotton has also forensically collected digital evidence from thousands of external digital devices such as USB drives, thumb drives, and SD Cards. Id., ¶ 12.

53. Cotton has supported legal teams in the forensic preservation and examination of Dominion voting systems in Arizona and Michigan. Id., ¶ 14.

54. Cotton has read and analyzed the remarks and statements issued by the Michigan Secretary of State, Jocelyn Benson (EXHIBIT 1), concerning the "nationwide" "issue" or "glitch" with the Dominion Voting Systems Voter Assist Terminals (VATS). Id., ¶ 13. These devices are also known as ICX Ballot Marking Devices (BMD). Id.

55. The Dominion voting system individual components, such as the Election Management System (EMS), Image Cast Central (ICC), ImageCast Precinct (ICP), ImageCast X (ICX) Ballot Marking Device (BMD) and Adjudication Workstations, contain specialized applications running on Windows and Linux operating systems. These components and systems can easily be forensically preserved in accordance with the digital acquisition of evidence as outlined under the Federal Rules of Evidence and the National Institute of Justice Digital Evidence Policies and Procedures. Id., ¶ 15.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

56. Forensic preservation of all data on a digital device is critical to the preservation process, especially if litigation is either anticipated or ongoing. If a given device or system is currently in a powered down state, it is imperative that the device's hard drive and other digital storage be forensically imaged to preserve system metadata dates and times, data integrity of the device and the admissibility of the evidence into the US legal system. Simply powering up a Windows or Linux operating system will change the date/time metadata for tens of thousands of files, thus interfering with the analysis of that system and calling into question the integrity of the data on the system. Id., ¶ 16.

57. It is critical to the admissibility and quality of subsequent analysis that the system to be preserved is maintained in a data state that is as close to the time period as possible. If the system to be preserved is powered on, commonly termed as live, at the point that it is to be preserved then the volatile memory should be imaged first followed by a forensic acquisition of the hard drive and other storage devices. Id., ¶ 17.

58. If a device that is to be preserved is not imaged immediately and maintained in a powered on state, there is a technical certainty that the data contained on the hard drive and possibly other digital storage devices will be changed. The changing of the data on the system will not require interactive inputs for these changes to take place. As a matter of the normal operating system functions, no matter if it is a Windows, Linux or MacOS operating system, if the system is powered on, the system will automatically change logs and perform automated processes (like antivirus scans, scheduled tasks and other operations) that will change the dates and times of files, over write log file entries, modify system configuration settings and change data file contents. Id., ¶ 18.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

59. The Dominion voting system components have communications devices in the form of Network Interface Cards (NIC), WiFi modems, and Cellular Modems installed by the manufacturer on the mother boards of the systems. Depending on the configuration of the system, these communications devices can automatically connect to remote locations and devices if the systems are powered on. If these devices are allowed to connect to remote locations it is possible for authorized or unauthorized parties to remotely modify the component. Id., ¶ 19.

60. Defendant Benson has stated that the issue confronting the voters of Michigan is a nationwide issue and is not confined to the State of Michigan. The fact that it is a nationwide issue is significant in that it eliminates the election definition file, the machine behavior settings and the configuration of the individual systems as the root cause for the 'issue'. This also means that the error originates from the source code of the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B. Id., ¶ 20.

61. The Certificate of Conformance issued by the EAC is commonly known as the EAC Certification. The certificate for Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B specifically states that "This certificate applies only to the specific version and release of the product in its evaluated configuration." Any patch or modification of the source code for the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B would invalidate the EAC certification, as any patch or modification to the software would change the source code and thus that resultant code would not have been evaluated within the required scope of conformance. Id., ¶ 21.

62. The discovery of this Dominion software "issue" occurred on or before the 25th of October 2024. The statutorily required logic and accuracy (L&A) testing which, by statute, occurred at least five (5) days prior to the commencement date for early voting. Id. ¶ 22.

63. Cotton established through public records that the City of Detroit started early voting on 19 October 2024. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

64. Any modification to the election voting software would require not only recertification by the EAC, but also new logic and accuracy (L&A) testing prior to being utilized in any election. Given the mandatory notice requirements and the time required to certify any corrected source code, it is Cotton's expert opinion that the correction to the Dominion source code can not legally meet the timeline to correct the issue before November 5th voting must take place. Id.

65. Cotton concludes that the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B components are networked together to facilitate the functioning of the voting process. This networking included local area network (LAN), wide area networks (WAN), wifi 802.11, and cellular data networks. Given the nature of these networks, any unauthorized modification to any single component or system places all the voting components and the integrity of the voting process at risk of compromise. Id.

66. Cotton concludes that in the course of his analysis, the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B components are networked together to facilitate the functioning of the voting process. This networking included local area network (LAN), wide area networks (WAN), wifi 802.11, and cellular data networks. Given the nature of these networks, any unauthorized modification to any single component or system places all the voting components and the integrity of the voting process at risk of compromise. Id., ¶ 23.

67. It is common for unauthorized accesses and breaches of computer systems to initially manifest as glitches or other unexplained behaviors. The only method to determine if this is indeed a software glitch is to perform a full forensic analysis of the system by individuals who have extensive experience in investigating and analyzing unauthorized access and computer breaches. Id., ¶ 24.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

68. Forensic, bit by bit images of the entire physical disk drive(s) for the effected systems should immediately be preserved. Delay in obtaining the forensic images may result in evidence destruction and spoilation[sic] of the data on the drives. Id., ¶ 25.

69. Pro V&V and SU Compliance have a long history of failing to determine even basic cyber security issues in voting systems, including (but not limited to) detection of rudimentary cybersecurity such as shared passwords, exposure of cryptographic keys, failure to apply system patches, failure to detect shared usernames and passwords, unchanged vendor supplied passwords, tampered logs and unauthorized secondary hard drives in adjudication workstations. Given the demonstrated failure to detect cyber security issues, these two companies should be excluded from performing the analysis on the systems effected by the Dominion software "issue". Id., ¶ 26.

70. Recently, it was discovered that the Colorado Secretary of State had left published on the internet available to all the passwords for Dominion voting systems in the State of Colorado. https://www.newsweek.com/colorado-publishes-voting-system-passwords-major-error-1977046, October 30, 2024.

71. Benson submitted Answers to Interrogatories in Antrim County, Michigan in 2020 stating that neither the State of Michigan, including the Secretary of State, had control over voting machines and voting systems. [EXHIBIT 4, Benson's Responses to Interrogatories, Bailey v Antrim County, ¶¶ 14-16]

72. Benson stated that she does not have an understanding or technical knowledge about voting machines and tabulators, and she relies on and defers to Dominion, and other vendors. Id.

73. Benson also acknowledged that township clerks were the custodians of such property. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

74. Brater also issued a letter in 2021 stating that it was prerogative of township clerks to exercise custody and control over their voting machines. [EXHIBIT 5, Letter from Jonathan Brater, May 20, 2021]

75. In Genetski v. Benson, 2021 Mich. Ct. Cl. LEXIS 3 (2021), the Michigan Court of Claims held that the Secretary of State cannot make and issue unilateral rules or guidelines that dictate or otherwise regulate the conducting of elections by local officials, without the procedures established by Michigan's Administrative Procedures Act, which require formal rulemaking or specific legislation. Guidance or instructions issued by Benson and/or Brater that are intended to be "mandatory," without statutory authority and without the procedures established for formal rulemaking to validate that the regulation is authorized by law cannot be enforced or otherwise recognized vis-à-vis the clear statutory duties of township clerks like Plaintiff. Id. at *14-15.

76. In fact, pursuant to MCL 41.65, township clerks are the exclusive custodians and in control of voting machines.

77. Township clerks sign a contract with the voting machine companies as a party to whom the voting machines are given, and said contracts recognize that township clerks have exclusive authority and control over such property. [EXHIBIT 6, Dominion Agreement and Software Licensing Agreement with Irving Township and Plaintiff]

78. Plaintiff, as a township clerks have additional duties provided by law to keep safe and in good order that property over which they exercise exclusive custody and control. MCL 41.65; McKim, supra at 205-06.

79. Plaintiff, like all other clerks, is even required to provide a bond to insure the safekeeping of such property, further bolstering their exclusive authority and control over it. MCL 41.69.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

80. "A clerk without custody or control…can hardly fulfill her duty of safekeeping [the township's property]." McKim, supra.

81. As constitutional officers, township clerks have specific duties established by law, and those duties cannot be usurped or otherwise encroached upon without explicit and direct constitutional and/or statutory authority.

82. Given Cotton's analysis and the incident with the Secretary of State of Colorado, the fact that Benson has admitted the Dominion voting machines have been compromised, AND the fact that Benson and Brater have both stated that they have no power, authority or control over voting machines, and Benson has been admonished that she cannot control or otherwise dictate what clerks can do with their voting machines, they are under the control of the township clerks and it falls upon the township clerks, like Plaintiff here, to insure the integrity of the vote.

83. Benson and Brater are not authorized to unilaterally, alter, order and/or force any access to, modification, manipulation, and/or alteration of voting machines before, during and after elections after the time for logic and accuracy testing has been completed.

84. Benson's and Brater's actions in this regard would be ultra vires of their constitutional and statutory duties and authority, and would therefore unconstitutionally encroach upon Plaintiff's official constitutional and statutory duties as township clerk.

85. Benson's and Brater's actions unconstitutionally usurp and interfere with or otherwise prevent Plaintiff from fulfilling the duties and responsibilities of her constitutional office.

86. Benson and Brater have no constitutional or legislative discretion in such premises and may not exercise such power and authority over the constitutional office of Township Clerk.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

87. By way of this Complaint and Ex Parte Motion, Plaintiff is seeking, in part, immediate EMERGENCY EX PARTE DECLARATORY, MANDAMUS, and/or INJUNCTIVE relief to prevent Benson and Brater from effecting and/or ordering and/or allowing access to, modification, alteration, and/or manipulation of the voting machines that are within the exclusive custody and control of Plaintiff.

88. The de facto constitutional position is that Plaintiff, as township clerk, is a constitutional officer with duties and responsibilities defined by common law and statutory law.

89. Benson and Brater have had to acknowledge as much in various ways. See EXHIBIT 4 and EXHIBIT 5.

90. A plain and unimpeachable duty Plaintiff has is to ensure the safekeeping of the property over which she has custody and control so that said property will be utilized for its function and purpose without adulteration or compromise. MCL 41.65.

91. Another responsibility of Plaintiff is to have authority and control over the ballots and the conducting of national and primary elections. Plaintiff is responsible for performing duties related to general and primary elections, such as furnishing ballots and overseeing the depositing, counting, and canvassing of ballots. MCL § 168.347. Primaries; provisions governing; recounts; duties of township clerk (emphasis added).

92. Plaintiff also has specific duties related to absent voter ballots, including delivering approved absent voter ballots to the absent voter counting board by election day, collecting absent voter ballots from the post office, and maintaining records of absent voter ballots distributed and received MCL § 168.765. Absent voter ballots; safekeeping by clerk; public inspection of applications and lists; delivery to board of election inspectors; voter ballot received after polls closed; information to be posted by clerk.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

93. Plaintiff must also ensure that the qualified voter file is current within seven days after an election. MCL § 168.813. Provisional ballot; tabulation; report.

94. Any interference with, intervention into, access, modification, manipulation, and /or alteration to the voting machines (which are in the exclusive custody and control of township clerks (allowing them to perform all the above election-related duties, and more) would constitute impermissible and unlawful interference and/or control over this property and a necessary usurpation and invasion of Plaintiff's authority.

95. Furthermore, because Benson has admitted that some of the Dominion voting machines have been compromised, they are unusable and non-serviceable, and no longer certified to be used in the November 5, 2020 election.

96. As township clerk, with custody and control over the voting machines, and the responsibility to ensure that votes are properly counted and reported, has the constitutional and statutory authority to conduct a hand count.

COUNT I – DECLARATORY RELIEF

97. An action for declaratory relief is authorized by Michigan Court Rules and law and lies as a remedy that may be sought as against government officials and individuals in litigation concerning disputes over the proper role or roles, rights, and obligations of the respective parties, and allocations of legal duties and powers of the one seeking a declaration of such respective rights and obligations. See, e.g., Demorest v Di Pentima, 118 Mich App 299, 303; 324 NW2d 634 (1982); Gyarmati v Bielfield, 245 Mich App 602, 605; 629 NW2d 93 (2001); see also MCR 2.605(A).

98. MCR 2.605(A)(1) further provides: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted."

99. A Complaint for declaratory relief requests that a court declare the rights and duties, and/or status, of the parties vis-à-vis one another.

100. While it is true that a declaratory judgment is usually obtained before there has been an interference with the rights of a party, such interference is not necessarily a bar to such an action.

101. "The distinctive characteristic of a declaratory judgment is that the declaration stands by itself, that is, no executory process follows as of course. In other words, such a judgment does not involve executory or coercive relief. The essential distinction between an action for declaratory judgment and the usual action is that no actual wrong need have been committed or loss have occurred in order to sustain the declaratory judgment action, but there must be no uncertainty that the loss will occur or that the asserted right has been or will be invaded. The purpose of the declaratory judgment is to permit adjudication of the rights or status of the parties without the necessity of a previous crime or breach." Demorest, supra (cleaned up) (emphasis added)

102. Generally, an actual controversy exists where a declaratory judgment is necessary to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights and responsibilities.

103. What is essential to an "actual controversy" under the declaratory judgment rule is that plaintiff plead and prove facts which indicate an adverse interest necessitating a sharpening of the issues raised. Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't v Attorney General, 243 Mich App 43, 55; 620 NW2d 546 (2000) (cleaned up).

104. The Michigan Supreme Court has stated that "[t]he declaratory judgment rule was intended and has been liberally construed to provide a broad, flexible remedy with a view to making the courts more accessible to the people." Shavers v Attorney General, 402 Mich 554, 588; 267 NW2d 72 (1978).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

105. The Supreme Court has also consistently recognized that the declaratory judgment avenue is available to guide and inform litigants before a legal insult occurs. "One great purpose is to enable parties to have their differences authoritatively settled in advance of any claimed invasion of rights, that they may guide their actions accordingly and often may be able to keep them within lawful bounds." Merkel v Long, 368 Mich 1, 13; 117 NW2d 130 (1962) (cleaned up).

106. "'Courts continually declare rights which have not become fixed under an existing state of facts, but are prospective only; they may not, however, be so remote and speculative as to be hypothetical and abstract.'" Id., quoting Borchard, Declaratory Judgments (2d ed), pp 422-424.

107. An actual controversy exists between the parties as to their rights and obligations under Michigan law because Benson and/or Brater have (1) declared that there is a "glitch" and issue with Dominion voting machines; and (2) ostensibly, Dominion or some other entity is planning to access, modify, manipulate, or alter source code or other components thereby destroying the integrity of those machines.

108. As a result, Plaintiff, who is responsible for the custody, control, and protection of voting machines, and for ensuring the integrity of elections conducted in her township, and the accurate reporting of the results of those elections, cannot perform these constitutional and statutory duties with the integrity of the Dominion voting machines in question.

109. Plaintiff therefore requests this Court to declare and order that (1) the integrity and reliability of the voting machines to be used in the November 5, 2024 elections has been compromised; (2) it must be declared that Benson and/or Brater may not order, or otherwise allow any access to, modification, manipulation, or alteration of the voting machines in the exclusive custody and control of Plaintiff; and (3) as a result of (1) and (2), Plaintiff cannot fulfill her duties to protect and ensure such voting machines are competent and fit for their intended purpose and must instead conduct a hand count of ballots cast in her township for the November 5, 2024 election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

110. An actual controversy exists because Benson and Brater have declared the voting machines compromised; another entity is poised to remotely access, modify, manipulate and/or otherwise alter those voting machines before, during and after the election; whereas by law they cannot do so; and further, by law, Plaintiff must be able to fulfill her constitutional and statutory duties, and she cannot do so given the current status of the Dominion voting machines as compromised, unusable, and unserviceable before the November 5, 2020 election.

COUNT II – MANDAMUS RELIEF

111. Mandamus will lie to compel an official to act within the boundaries of his or her charge and to prevent that official from usurping or otherwise interfering with the duties and responsibilities of a constitutional officer.

112. A writ of mandamus is an "extraordinary" remedy, MCR 3.301(A)(1)(c), to which a plaintiff is entitled only if he satisfies a four-part test: the plaintiff must show that (1) the plaintiff has a clear, legal right to performance of the specific duty sought, (2) the defendant has a clear legal duty to perform, (3) the act is ministerial, and (4) no other adequate legal or equitable remedy exists that might achieve the same result.

113. In relation to a request for mandamus, a clear, legal right is one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided. Berry v Garrett, 316 Mich App 37, 41; 890 NW2d 882 (2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

114. Mandamus relief is also appropriate to compel a legal duty to be performed or to force, or otherwise direct that the defendant refrain from interfering with the performance and duties of the one seeking relief.

115. If, in such cases, officials with no constitutional and statutory authority cannot be compelled by mandamus, to refrain from usurping the constitutional and statutory powers and duties of another official, especially where such duties are expressly and unconditionally imposed upon them by the Constitution and statutory law, "then truly they are invested with arbitrary, despotic power, and honest claimants left entirely remediless" for the law in such cases has provided no other remedy for the enforcement of their claims.

116. This cannot be, nor is the law so entirely defective as to absolutely, arbitrarily and unjustly ignore such violations. "A mandamus will lie, in such cases, and is the legal and appropriate remedy, the law having provided no other."

117. Plaintiff is entitled to have issued a Writ of Mandamus to compel Benson and/or Brater from allowing the access, modification, manipulation, and/or alteration by remote access or otherwise of the voting machines in Plaintiff's custody and control

118. As township clerk, Plaintiff has a clear legal right and duty to ensure the integrity and functionality of the property in her charge, and to further ensure that the election is properly run and that the votes are properly counted and reported.

119. Benson and/or Brater have a clear legal duty not to allow compromise of voting machines (which has already been admitted and has occurred), and a clear legal duty to allow (and thereby refrain from interfering in the conducting of Plaintiff's duties.

120. Benson and/or Brater have no discretion or authority to allow access, modification, manipulation, or other alteration of voting machines; they have no discretion or authority to force or otherwise control Plaintiff's conduct in the performance of her functions and in properly handling the property within her exclusive custody and control – Benson's and Brater's administrative roles in this regard are ministerial, only.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

121. Harm to the public will occur if mandamus does not issue because allowing compromise of the integrity of elections and usurping the constitutional imperative of Plaintiff is an affront to the constitutional order of the State of Michigan and there can be no faith or confidence in elections if mandamus does not issue to allow Plaintiff to protect the vote in her township by not allowing the use of compromised voting machines, preventing their adulteration by outside control or access, and ultimately by ensuring that there is an accurate vote count to report as is required by her statutory duties.

COUNT III – INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

122. Where a party seeks a preliminary injunction it must show the existence of four elements: (1) the moving party must demonstrate that irreparable harm will occur; (2) whether the harm to the applicant absent such an injunction outweighs the harm it would cause to the adverse party; (3) whether the moving party is likely to prevail on the merits; and (4) there will be no harm to the public interest if an injunction is issued.

123. As Benson has admitted that there is a "glitch" and flaws in the voting machine systems nationwide, Plaintiff is entitled to an Injunction to Prevent Benson and/or Brater, or any other entity or official, acting under their authority, from effectuating any such access, modification, manipulation, and/or alteration to the voting machines in Plaintiff's custody.

124. Irreparable harm will occur and has already occurred in this instance because Benson has admitted that there is a "glitch" in the voting machines being used by Plaintiff, and therefore,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff cannot rely on these machines to allow her to perform her election-related functions, including the accurate account of ballots, counting and canvassing.

125. Irreparable harm will also occur to the citizenry of Irving Township as the flaw and defect in the machines makes them unable to be relied on to ensure the constitutional right of each voter will be preserved and honored.

126. Irreparable harm would further occur if Benson and/or Brater allow access to, modification, manipulation, and/or alteration of these voting machines at any time before, during and after the conducting of the election in Irving Township because their security and integrity can no longer be guaranteed if such access is allowed. [EXHIBIT 3, Cotton Affidavit]

127. The harm to Plaintiff and her citizenry if the integrity of the voting machines in her custody and control are damaged, and further, if Benson and Brater allow any access, modification, manipulation, or alteration of these machines, will far outweigh any interests that Benson and/or Brater might have, as they have already admitted that the integrity of the voting machines have been compromised [EXHIBIT 1] and that Plaintiff has exclusive authority and control, thus allowing Plaintiff to mitigate the damage that has and will occur in the status quo. [EXHIBIT 4 and EXHIBIT 5]

128. Plaintiff will prevail on the merits because she has exclusive authority and control over voting machines, and must insure their integrity, and she has exclusive authority and control over the reporting of the final results upon the tabulation of votes, whether performed by machine or otherwise. Therefore, Plaintiff is entitled to all the relief she seeks in her Action for Mandamus and Complaint for Declaratory Judgement.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

129. Plaintiff has set forth the constitutional and statutory authority by which she has exclusive control and custody over voting machines and the duties and responsibilities to ensure an accurate vote count in her township after the conducting of national elections.

130. As Benson and/or Brater have admitted that there is a current and imminent threat to the integrity of voting machines that must be fixed, Plaintiff is entitled to seek mandamus to compel Benson and/or Brater not to allow any access, manipulation, modification or alteration by any means.

131. Finally, it is beyond doubt that the public interest will be served by the granting of the relief. As mentioned, the constitutional order of the State of Michigan must be maintained so that the public will have confidence in the integrity of elections. The fact that Benson and Brater have admitted that the Dominion voting machines are compromised; that the ostensible "fix" must be initiated by an outside entity; and that it won't be fixed before the election on November 5, 2024, is a matter of significant public interest.

132. "It is very unfortunate and very discreditable that so little heed is sometimes paid to the continued and perpetual importance of institutions which form an essential element in the organic life of our government. Courts, at least, are found to respect what the people have seen fit to preserve, by constitutional enactment, until the people are unwise enough to undo their own work. The loss of interest in the preservation of ancient rights is not a very encouraging sign of public spirit or good sense.... [Therefore,] [i]t cannot be maintained that legislation would be valid which retained the names but destroyed the powers of [constitutional] officers. While there is an undoubted power to vary the duties of such officers it cannot be lawful to so change those duties as to practically change the office. When officers are named in a constitution they are named as having a known legal character. Allor v Bd. of Auditors of Wayne County, 43 Mich 76; 4 N.W. 92 (1880).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

133. The relief sought by Plaintiff in this action will preserve and maintain public confidence because it will ensure that she is able to perform her statutory duties without interference and thereby maintain the integrity of the November 5, 2024, election in Irving Township, Michigan.

REQUESTED RELIEF

1. Enter an EMERGENCY EX PARTE TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER, pursuant to MCR 3.310(B), enjoining Benson and Brater, and any voting machine vendor or contractor, from directing or otherwise effectuating the access to, modification, manipulation and/or alteration of voting machines in Irving Township, Michigan BEFORE, DURING, and AFTER the November 5, 2024 election prior to certification of the votes;

2. Enter an EMERGENCY EX PARTE ORDER pursuant to MCR 3.305 issuing a writ of mandamus to force Benson and Brater to respect the limits of their authority and to refrain from interfering with or otherwise intervening in the Plaintiff's conducting of her constitutional and statutory duties BEFORE, DURING, and AFTER the November 5, 2024 election.

3. Declare by Judgment that Benson and Brater are not authorized to interfere with or otherwise intervene in the performance by Plaintiff of her statutory and constitutional duties, including her authority and control over voting machine usage and the hand-counting of ballots.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Stefanie Lambert

Stefanie Lambert Juntilla
Law Offices of Stefanie L. Lambert, PLLC
400 Renaissance Drive, FLOOR 26
Detroit, MI 48243

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Dated: November 1, 2024 attorneylambert@protonmail.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH MCR 3.305 / MCR 3.310

Pursuant to MCR 3.310, I hereby certify to the court that efforts have been made to give the notice and reasons supporting the claim or claims herein that notice should not be required before the entry of temporary injunctive relief, ex parte.

I further certify that a permanent record and/or memorandum is being made of any nonwritten evidence, arguments, and/or other representations being made in support of the application.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Stefanie Lambert

Stefanie Lambert Juntilla
Law Offices of Stefanie L. Lambert, PLLC
400 Renaissance Drive, FLOOR 26
Detroit, MI 48243
attorneylambert@protonmail.com

Dated: November 1, 2024

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I, Stefanie Lambert, hereby certify that on November 1, 2024, true and correct copies of the foregoing was served via email on counsel of record for every party in the above-captioned matter.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Stefanie Lambert

Stefanie Lambert Juntilla
Law Offices of Stefanie L. Lambert, PLLC
400 Renaissance Drive, FLOOR 26
Detroit, MI 48243
attorneylambert@protonmail.com

Dated: November 1, 2024

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 1

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SOS

Department of State issues update for voters using Dominion Voter Assist Terminals for 2024 General Election

October 25, 2024

Author:

Cheri Hardmon

Senior Press Secretary

HardmonC@Michigan.gov

Voters using a Dominion VAT should be prepared for straight ticket/split ticket programming issue when marking their ballot

LANSING, Mich. – The Michigan Bureau of Elections (BOE) has identified an issue with the programming of Dominion Voter Assist Terminals (VATs) that will not stop voters using a VAT from marking their ballot but may make it more inconvenient than normal for some voters.

Every early voting site and polling place has at least one VAT, a device that voters with disabilities and others may use to assist them in marking their ballot. The voter then prints the ballot from the VAT and puts it through the tabulator.

Because of this programming issue, voters using Dominion ICX VATs will have to select either the "straight party" option if they wish to vote straight ticket or vote for each race on the partisan selection of the ballot if they wish to split their ticket. While this is the process used in some other states, it is not the standard in Michigan, where voters have the option to vote straight party but then override their party selection for individual races.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If a voter using the Dominion VAT votes straight party but then splits their ticket, the voter will receive an error message. The voter will need to go back and de-select their straight-party selection and vote for candidates in the races individually or vote straight party without splitting their ticket. As is always the case, the VAT will allow voters to review their selections before printing the ballot.

This issue only affects voters using VATs in counties that use Dominion voting equipment. A list of voting equipment by county is available online at this link: Voting equipment by county.

It is not possible to fix the programming for the affected VATs this close to the election. Although the issue will not stop people from voting or making their preferred selections, and it will not change anyone's votes, it will make the process more inconvenient for some voters using the VATs. The issue will be corrected for future elections.

For more information on VATs and accessible elections visit Michigan.gov/Vote.

###

MI Newswire Secretary of State Elections

Related News

Joint statement of Secretary Benson and Washtenaw County Prosecutor Savit on charges filed in noncitizen voting case

Today, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Washtenaw County Prosecutor Eli Savit made the following statement on charges filed against a non-U.S. citizen for allegedly illegally registering to vote and casting a ballot in the 2024 General Election:

Secretary Benson shares a list of transportation agencies offering free and discounted rides to the polls on Election Day

With less than a week before the Nov. 5 General Election, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson advised voters to make their travel arrangements for casting a ballot at the polls or an early voting site.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nearly 2 million Michigan voters have already cast their ballot in the General Election

With one week before polls open on Election Day, almost 2 million Michigan voters have already cast their ballot in the General Election – nearly a quarter of Michigan's active registered voters.

First day of statewide early voting in Michigan smashes expectations

Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson today announced that 145,134 Michigan voters cast their vote on the state's first day of early voting, far exceeding the expectations of state and local election officials.

Secretary Benson announces partnership with Saginaw Public Schools to ensure every student has their state ID by graduation

Today, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson announced a new program with Saginaw Public Schools to expand civics education and ensure every student has their state ID by graduation.

Secretary Benson statement on court victory in lawsuit challenging Michigan's voter rolls

Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson made the following statement regarding the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Michigan's order to dismiss a lawsuit by the Republican National Committee over the maintenance of Michigan's voter rolls:

Michigan sees record-breaking early voting turnout with two weeks to go before the General Election

With two weeks until Michigan's Nov. 5 General Election, more than 1.15 million Michigan voters – almost 16% of the state's active registered voters – have already cast their ballot.

Benson statement on successful effort to uphold the voting rights of Michigan's military and overseas citizens

Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson today made the following statement on a ruling by the Michigan Court of Claims granting the Michigan Department of State's motion for

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

summary disposition of a last-minute lawsuit brought by the Republican National Committee (RNC) seeking to disenfranchise Michigan's military and overseas voters:

Online registration deadline for Michigan's General Election is Oct. 21

Monday, Oct. 21 is the last day for Michigan citizens to register online or by mail to vote in the state's Nov. 5 General Election.

Department of State issues update for voters using Dominion Voter Assist Terminals for 2024 General Election

Copyright State of Michigan

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 2

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Cindy L. White <clwhite@barrycounty.gov> sent from mxthunder.net
Sent: Thu, Oct 31, 2024 at 7:41 am
To: Township Clerks

Michigan ADA Voter Instructions with images FINAL (1).docx (1.2 MB)

Images not displayed. SHOW IMAGES | ALWAYS SHOW IMAGES FROM THIS SENDER

DITTO to everything Steve has said. You guys ROCK!
Thank you for all you do,
Cindy

From: Steve D. <sdelongchamp@electionsource.com>
Sent: Wednesday, October 30, 2024 3:43 PM

Subject: VAT Instructions EV stuff

Clerks,

Firstly, you guys rock! Gerrid just said to me yesterday, " Can you believe just how well clerks have done implementing Early Voting, even with such little direction or help... Hats off Ladies and Gents! Record "surprise" turnouts! And you are killing it!

Attached is a digital copy of the instructions you were sent by Dominion at the State's request. (they should be arriving today or tomorrow) They are meant for you to give to your locals. I have attached a digital copy as well.

I want to make sure everyone understands that this is only germane to the ICX - Vote Assist Terminal. More importantly, the ICX will walk the voter through being able to cast a split ticket. The instructions are very clear on the VAT.

Lastly, if you need extra toner or blank paper for the BOD let us know and we will get it to you as soon as possible. We have been running toner, paper, and I-voted stickers across the state for the last couple of days. We are happy to assist you too!

Only 6 more days of madness and a week of Canvas... You got this!

You have our admiration!

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Steve

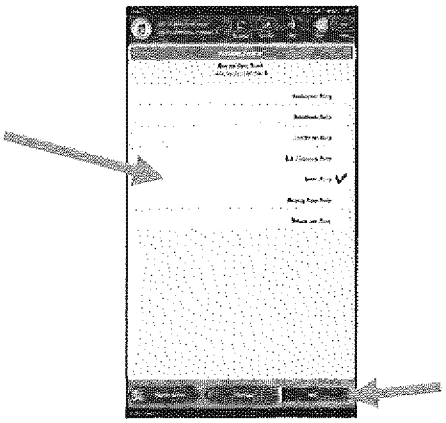
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ATTENTION VAT VOTERS

STEP BY STEP INSTRUCTIONS

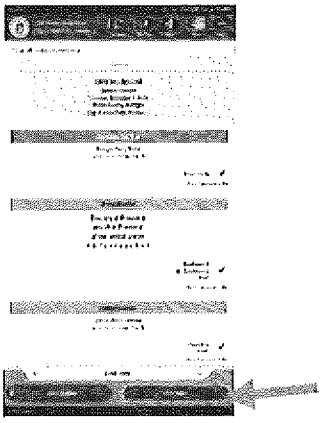
IF YOU WANT TO VOTE A STRAIGHT PARTY TICKET:

1. If you intend to vote for candidates of a single party in all contests, simply select your party preference on the initial screen.



2. Navigate through all contests on the ballot using the Next and Previous buttons at the bottom of the screen.

3. Confirm the selections on the screen that correspond to candidates affiliated with the selected party. Note: For all nonpartisan contests and ballot questions, you must select your choice manually.



4. Review all selected choices on the Review screen and select Print Ballot.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

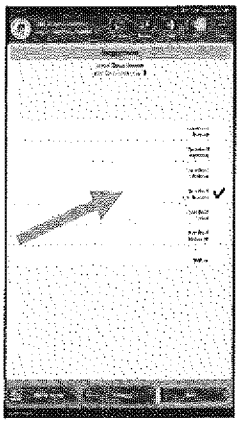
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IF YOU WANT TO VOTE A SPLIT TICKET:

1. If you intend to vote for candidates of varying parties in individual contests, DO NOT make a Straight Party selection on the initial screen.

2. Instead, navigate to the next contest on the ballot using the Next button at the bottom of the screen.

3. Select the candidate(s) of your choice for all desired contests.



4. Review all selected choices on the Review screen and select Print Ballot.

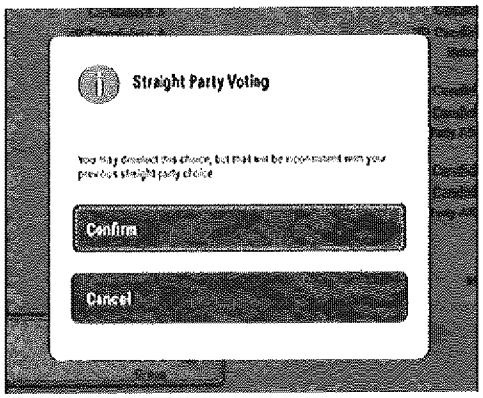
Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

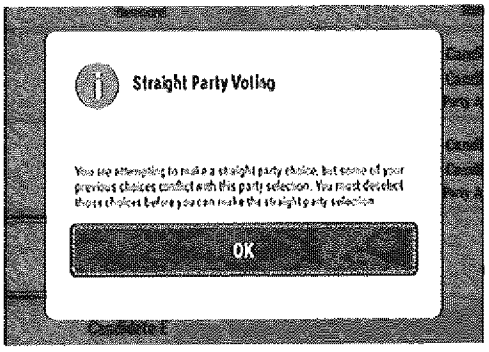
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IF YOU WANT TO SPLIT A TICKET AFTER INITIALLY MAKING A STRAIGHT PARTY SELECTION:

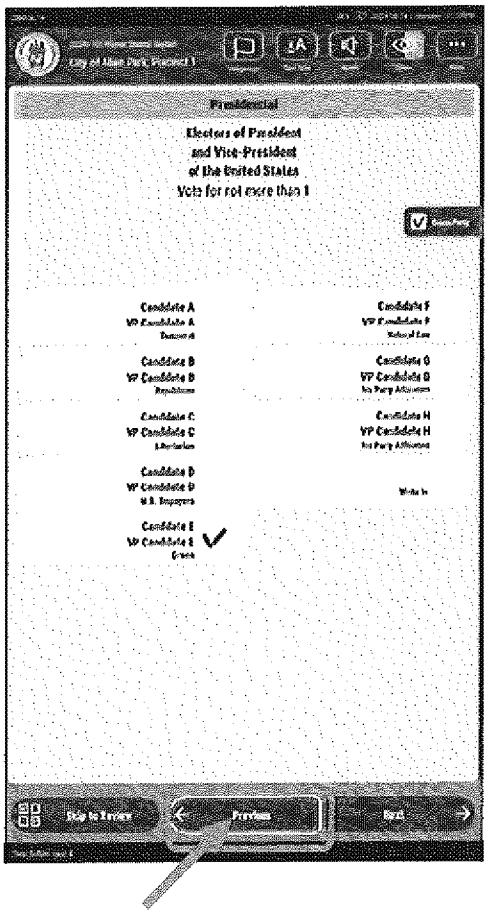
1. If a voter initially makes a Straight Party selection, but later opts to split their ticket, they will be prompted with an initial warning upon deselecting a choice affiliated with their party selection.

   The voter may be prompted with another message upon selecting a choice affiliated with a different party.





2. The voter should use the Previous button on the bottom of the screen to navigate back to the Straight Party selection screen.



Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Deselect the previously selected Party.

Note: If a voter intends to leave a partisan contest blank, they must remove the Straight Party selection.

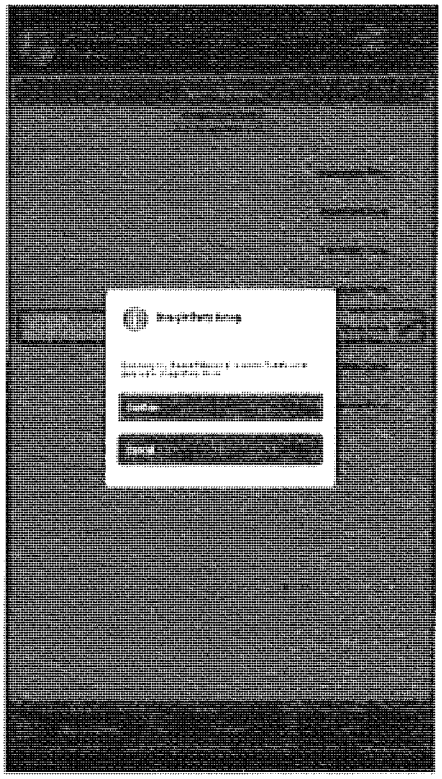
4. Confirm the prompt on screen that all currently selected candidates of this party will be deselected.

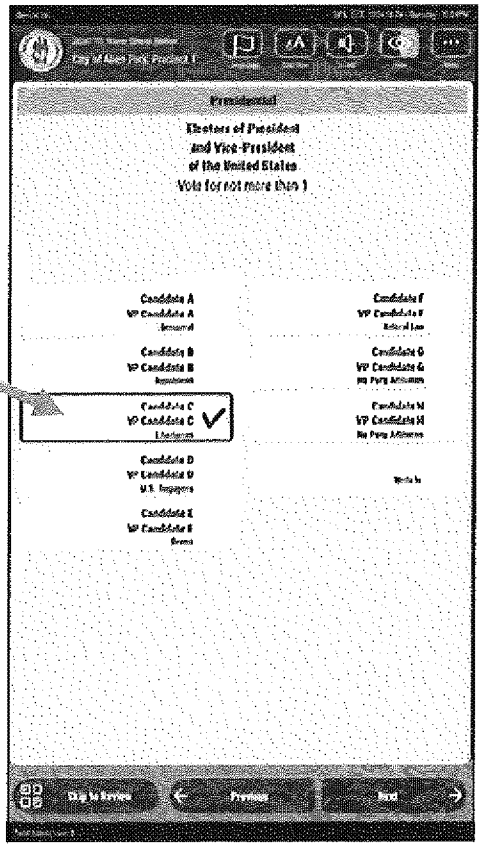


Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

5. Navigate to the next contest on the ballot using the Next button at the bottom of the screen.

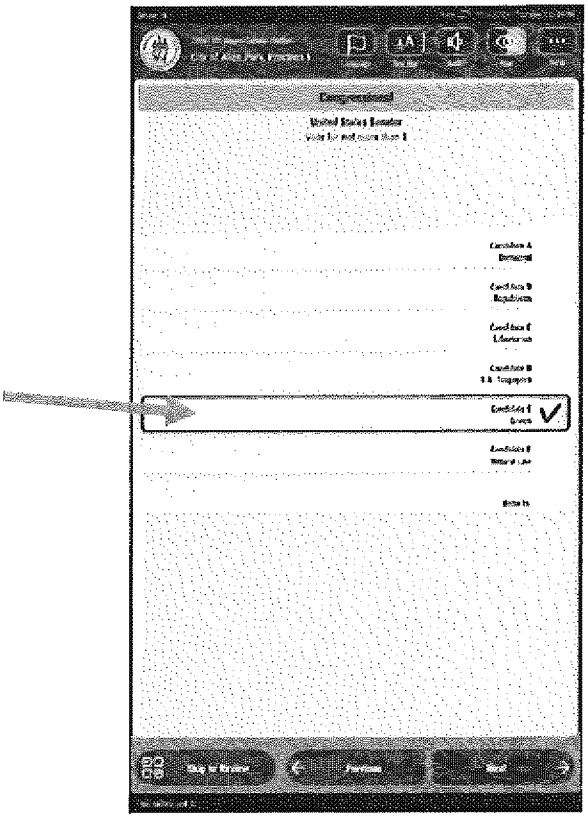
6. Select the candidate(s) of your choice for all desired contests.



Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7. Continue voting by selecting the candidate(s) of your choice for all desired contests.



8. Review all selected choices on the Review screen and select Print Ballot.

As always, voters are encouraged to review their selections on the summary screen and on the printed paper ballot before casting their vote.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 3

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

AFFIDAVIT OF BENJAMIN R. COTTON 31 October 2024

I, Ben Cotton, being duly sworn, hereby depose and state as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18, and I understand and believe in the obligations of an oath. I make this affidavit of my own free will and based on first-hand information and my own personal observations.

2. I am the founder of CyFIR, LLC (CyFIR) and Cyber Technology Services, INC.

3. I have a master's degree in information technology management from the University of Maryland University College. I have numerous technical certifications, including the Certified Information Systems Security Professional (CISSP), Microsoft Certified Professional (MCP), Network+, and Certified CyFIR Forensics and Incident Response Examiner.

4. I have over twenty-seven (27) years of experience performing computer forensics and other digital systems analysis.

5. I have over twenty (20) years of experience as an instructor of computer forensics and incident response. This experience includes thirteen (13) years of experience teaching students on the Guidance Software (now OpenText) EnCase Investigator and EnCase Enterprise software.

6. I have testified as an expert witness in state courts, federal courts and before the United States Congress.

7. I regularly lead engagements involving digital forensics, cyber security, and incident response for law firms, corporations, and government agencies and am experienced with the digital acquisition of evidence under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

8. In the course of my duties, I have forensically examined Dominion Voting Systems (DVS) components in Maricopa County Arizona, Antrim County Michigan, Fulton County Pennsylvania, Coffee County Georgia,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mesa County Colorado. These system components are hereinafter referred to as the "Analyzed Election County Components".

9. In the course of my duties, I have reviewed the administrative manuals and documentation for the DVS Democracy Suite software and hardware components.

10. In the course of my duties, I have reviewed the public information from the Election Assistance Commission ("EAC") and its certification process for election software.

11. In the course of my experience, I have forensically collected digital evidence from thousands of Windows, Linux, MacOS, and cellular devices.

12. In the course of my experience, I have forensically collected digital evidence from thousands of external digital devices such as USB drives, thumb drives, and SD Cards.

13. In the course of my duties, I have read and analyzed the remarks and statements issued by the Michigan Secretary of State, Jocelyn Benson, concerning the "nationwide" issue with the Dominion Voting Systems Voter Assist Terminals (VATS). These devices are also known as ICX Ballot Marking Devices (BMD).[1,2,3]

14. I have supported legal teams in the forensic preservation and examination of Dominion voting systems in Arizona and Michigan.

15. The dominion voting system individual components, such as the Election Management System (EMS), Image Cast Central (ICC), ImageCast Precinct (ICP), ImageCast X (ICX) Ballot Marking Device (BMD) and Adjudication Workstations, contain specialized applications running on Windows and Linux operating systems. These components and systems can easily be forensically preserved in accordance with the

[1] https://www.michigan.gov/sos/resources/news/2024/10/25/department-of-state-issues-update-for-voters-using-dominion-voter-assist-terminals, 25 October 2024
[2] A 'Nationwide Issue' Is Affecting Certain Dominion Voting Machines, Michigan Secretary of State Reveals, 25 October 2024
[3] Benson addresses Dominion ballot machine programming issue in Michigan, 30 October 2024

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

digital acquisition of evidence as outlined under the Federal Rules of Evidence and the National Institute of Justice Digital Evidence Policies and Procedures.

16. Forensic preservation of all data on a digital device is critical to the preservation process, especially if litigation is either anticipated or ongoing. If a given device or system is currently in a powered down state, it is imperative that the device's hard drive and other digital storage be forensically imaged to preserve system metadata dates and times, data integrity of the device and the admissibility of the evidence into the US legal system. Simply powering up a Windows or Linux operating system will change the date/time metadata for tens of thousands of files, thus interfering with the analysis of that system and calling into question the integrity of the data on the system.

17. It is critical to the admissibility and quality of subsequent analysis that the system to be preserved is maintained in a data state that is as close to the time period as possible. If the system to be preserved is powered on, commonly termed as live, at the point that it is to be preserved then the volatile memory should be imaged first followed by a forensic acquisition of the hard drive and other storage devices.

18. If a device that is to be preserved is not imaged immediately and maintained in a powered on state, there is a technical certainty that the data contained on the hard drive and possibly other digital storage devices will be changed. The changing of the data on the system will not require interactive inputs for these changes to take place. As a matter of the normal operating system functions, no matter if it is a Windows, Linux or MacOS operating system, if the system is powered on, the system will automatically change logs and perform automated processes (like antivirus scans, scheduled tasks and other operations) that will change the dates and times of files, over write log file entries, modify system configuration settings and change data file contents.

19. It is my experience that the Dominion voting system components have communications devices in the form of Network Interface Cards (NIC), WiFi modems, and Cellular Modems installed by the manufacturer on the mother boards of the systems. Depending on the configuration of the system,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

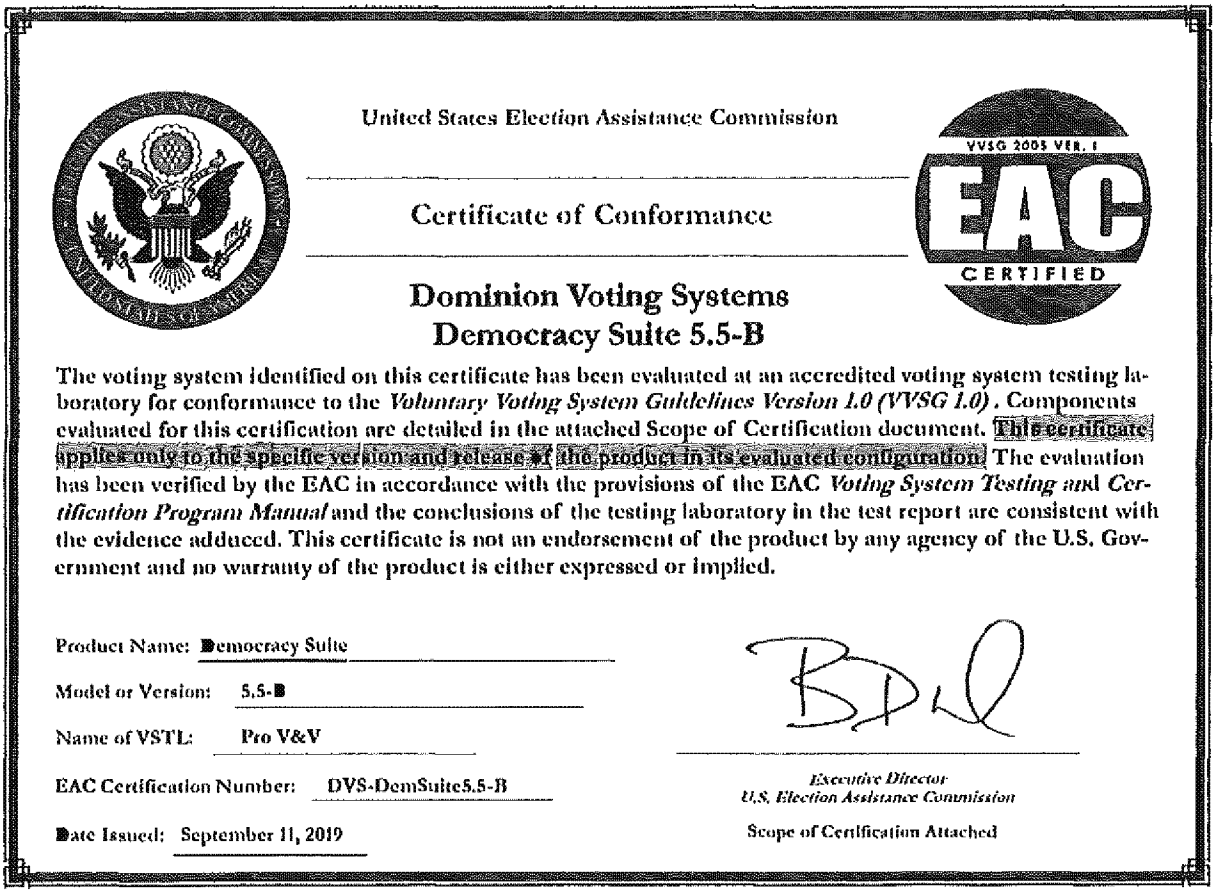
these communications devices can automatically connect to remote locations and devices if the systems are powered on. If these devices are allowed to connect to remote locations it is possible for authorized or unauthorized parties to remotely modify the component.

20. Secretary Benson has stated that the issue confronting the voters of Michigan is a nationwide issue and is not confined to the State of Michigan. The fact that it is a nationwide issue is significant in that it eliminates the election definition file, the machine behavior settings and the configuration of the individual systems as the root cause for the 'issue'. This also means that the error originates from the source code of the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B.

21. The Certificate of Conformance issued by the EAC is commonly known as the EAC Certification. The certificate for Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B specifically states that "This certificate applies only to the specific version and release of the product in its evaluated configuration." Any patch or modification of the source code for the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B would invalidate the EAC certification, as any patch or modification to the software would change the source code and thus that resultant code would not have been evaluated within the required scope of conformance.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



United States Election Assistance Commission

VVSG 2005 VER. 1

EAC CERTIFIED

Certificate of Conformance

Dominion Voting Systems
Democracy Suite 5.5-B

The voting system identified on this certificate has been evaluated at an accredited voting system testing laboratory for conformance to the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines Version 1.0 (VVSG 1.0). Components evaluated for this certification are detailed in the attached Scope of Certification document. This certificate applies only to the specific version and release of the product in its evaluated configuration. The evaluation has been verified by the EAC in accordance with the provisions of the EAC Voting System Testing and Certification Program Manual and the conclusions of the testing laboratory in the test report are consistent with the evidence adduced. This certificate is not an endorsement of the product by any agency of the U.S. Government and no warranty of the product is either expressed or implied.

Product Name: Democracy Suite

Model or Version: 5.5-B

Name of VSTL: Pro V&V

EAC Certification Number: DVS-DemSuite5.5-B

Date Issued: September 11, 2019

Executive Director
U.S. Election Assistance Commission

Scope of Certification Attached

Figure 1 - Democracy Suite 5.5-B Certificate of Conformance

22. The discovery of this Dominion software "issue" occurred on or before the 25th of October 2024. The statutorily required logic and accuracy (L&A) testing which, by statute, occurred at least five (5) days prior to the commencement date for early voting. I have established through public records that the City of Detroit started early voting on 19 October 2024. Any modification to the election voting software would require not only recertification by the EAC, but also new logic and accuracy (L&A) testing prior to being utilized in any election. Given the mandatory notice requirements and the time required to certify any corrected source code, it is my expert opinion that the correction to the Dominion source code can not legally meet the timeline to correct the issue before November 5th voting must take place.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

23. In the course of my analysis I have determined that the Dominion Democracy Suite 5.5-B components are networked together to facilitate the functioning of the voting process. This networking included local area network (LAN), wide area networks (WAN), wifi 802.11, and cellular data networks. Given the nature of these networks, any unauthorized modification to any single component or system places all the voting components and the integrity of the voting process at risk of compromise.

24. It is common for unauthorized accesses and breaches of computer systems to initially manifest as glitches or other unexplained behaviors. The only method to determine if this is indeed a software glitch is to perform a full forensic analysis of the system by individuals who have extensive experience in investigating and analyzing unauthorized access and computer breaches.

25. Forensic, bit by bit images of the entire physical disk drive(s) for the effected systems should immediately be preserved. Delay in obtaining the forensic images may result in evidence destruction and spoilation of the data on the drives.

26. Pro V&V and SLI Compliance have a long history of failing to determine even basic cyber security issues in voting systems, including (but not limited to) detection of rudimentary cybersecurity such as shared passwords, exposure of cryptographic keys, failure to apply system patches, failure to detect shared usernames and passwords, unchanged vendor supplied passwords, tampered logs and unauthorized secondary hard drives in adjudication workstations. Given the demonstrated failure to detect cyber security issues, these two companies should be excluded from performing the analysis on the systems effected by the Dominion software "issue".

SIGNED UNDER THE PAINS AND PENALTIES OF PERJURY THIS 31st DAY OF October 2024.

State of Montana
County of Flathead

This instrument was signed or acknowledged before me on 10-31-24 by Benjamin R. Cotton (Name of signer)

(Notary Signature)
[Affix seal/stamp to the left or below]

Benjamin R. Cotton

RYAN PETERSEN
NOTARY PUBLIC for the
State of Montana
Residing at Kalispell, MT
My Commission Expires
April 29, 2025.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 4

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE 13TH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT
ANTRIM COUNTY

WILLIAM BAILEY,

Plaintiff,

v

ANTRIM COUNTY,

Defendant,

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON,

Intervenor-Defendant.

No. 20-9238-CZ

HON. KEVIN A. ELSENHEIMER

Matthew S. DePerno (P52622)
Attorney for Plaintiff
951 West Milham Avenue
PO Box 1595
Portage, Michigan 48081
269.321.5064
matthew@depernolaw.com

Haider A. Kazim (P66146)
Attorney for Defendant
310 West Front Street, Suite 221
Traverse City, Michigan 49684
231.922.1888
hkazim@cmda-law.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

INTERVENOR-DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S RESPONSES TO PLAINTIFF'S AMENDED INTERROGATORIES AND REQUEST TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS

NOW COMES Intervenor-Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson, and in response to Plaintiff's Amended Interrogatories and Request to Produce Documents, states as follows:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

Pursuant to the Court's rulings, Intervening Defendant Benson has interpreted and construed the below requests to be limited to matters pertaining to the election in Antrim County, and have answered accordingly.

INTERROGATORIES

1. Explain why the failure to update one or more precinct [sic] Antrim County precinct tabulators prior the election on November 3, 2020 caused precincts to report erroneous results.

ANSWER: The answer to this interrogatory is explained in depth by the expert report submitted by Professor Halderman and produced to Plaintiff on March 26, 2021, which expert report is incorporated herein.

2. Explain in detail the physical or mechanical process, including precise dates and times, on how Antrim County reported result to the Secretary of State on November 3, 2020 through November 22, 2020.

ANSWER: In order to upload unofficial results to the Bureau of Elections, County Clerks use the County Election Night Reporting system (CENR). After the local clerks have completed counting the ballots in their jurisdiction, they provide the results to their County Clerk. A staff member from the Cunty Clerk's office logs into the program and hand-keys the unofficial results the county obtains from the local clerks into CENR. The unofficial results are uploaded to the Bureau of Elections' website. The precise dates and times when Antrim County logged into the system are found on the enclosed emails. See Bates Numbered Documents 0009062 to 0009085 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Provide the incoming and outgoing IP addresses and MAC addresses used by the State of Michigan to communicate election information with Antrim County during 2020, including the precise dates and times those IP addresses and MAC addresses were in use.

ANSWER: Defendant Benson objects to producing IP addresses and MAC addresses because doing so presents a security risk by exposing the users and computers associated with these addresses to possible tampering or unauthorized access. In further answer, Defendant is interpreting this request and the phrase "communicate elections information" as seeking the IP and MAC addresses for computers used by Bureau of Elections employees that received the unofficial election night results submitted by Antrim County. Defendant will provide the IP and MAC addresses upon the entry of a protective order.

4. Provide a listing of all setting [sic] that were programmed (including default settings) and the values in the pre-October 23, 2020 and post-October 23, 2020 ballot specifications for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

keep or maintain the requested information. Upon information and belief, this information is in the possession of Antrim County.

5. Provide the x, y, width, height parameters of each mark/hot zone for each ballot entry used pre-October 23, 2020 and post-October 23, 2020 for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the requested information.

6. Provide a breakdown of the tabulator machines that had the October 23, 2020 update, and those that did not for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the requested information. Upon information and belief, this information is in the possession of Antrim County. In further answer, Defendant affirmatively states that Professor Halderman's report also provides this information, which upon information and belief, was obtained from Antrim County.

7. For adjudicated ballots for Antrim County for the 2020 elections, provide the name of the person who adjudicated them and when. Explain whether they were adjudicated through the machines or manually.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

keep or maintain the requested information. In further answer, any ballots that were adjudicated must have been adjudicated by hand, since—upon information and belief—Antrim County does not have the adjudication software. Upon information and belief, the information sought in this interrogatory may be obtained from Antrim County.

8. Identify all installed computer software, modules, or implants used by any county or precinct in Antrim County during the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the requested information. Upon information and belief, this information may be obtained from Antrim County.

9. Specify when each installation was performed on each election device for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the requested information. Upon information and belief, this information may be obtained from Antrim County.

10. Specify exactly how errors were adjudicated for Antrim County for the 2020 elections for users of each the DVS election system components: ImageCast Precinct, ImageCast X, and ImageCast Central. If there were variations across jurisdictions, specify what the variations were and the reason for these variations.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the requested information. Upon information and belief, this information may be obtained from Antrim County.

11. Provide the "mail date" and "received date" for all mail-in ballots and absentee ballots for the November 3, 2020 general election in Antrim County.

ANSWER: The information contained in the enclosed spreadsheet is obtained from the respective city or township clerk in Antrim County, who is responsible for sending and receiving absentee ballots. See Bates Numbered Documents 0009086 to 0009193 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

12. Provide the address for all ballots put in collection boxes in Antrim County, paying particular attention to identify the location of each collection box and the particular ballots in each.

ANSWER: The addresses for absent voter ballots submitted by voters via drop box is not collected at the state or local level. In an effort to be responsive, and in supplementation to Plaintiff's First Request for Interrogatories and Requests to Produce, Request to Produce #8, enclosed is a list of drop box locations in Antrim County, as provided by local clerks in that County. Neither Defendant Benson, the Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, independently collect or verify this information. See Bates Numbered

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Documents 0009194-0009195 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

13. Provide the names of all people or organizations who had access to the Qualified Voter File prior from [sic] July 1, 2020 through present.

ANSWER: Defendant Benson answers this interrogatory only as to those organizations who have access to Antrim County records in the Qualified Voter File. The only organizations that were or are able to access the Qualified Voter File for Antrim County voters are Bureau of Elections staff; certain programmers who work for the Department of Technology, Management & Budget; Antrim County Clerk's Office staff; and staff of Antrim County City and Township Clerks' offices (as applicable). To the extent this interrogatory seeks a list of people from these organizations, the Defendant objects as it presents security concerns to release the names of individuals who are authorized to access the Qualified Voter File, because that information may be used to attack and attempt to gain unauthorized access to the Qualified Voter File.

14. Provide the ballot format specifications for Antrim County for the 2020 elections including a detailed specification sufficient to write a program to read a ballot definition and produce an independent textual dump of the specification.

ANSWER: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the specific, detailed information requested. Upon

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

information and belief, this information may be obtained from Antrim County.

15. Provide the functional specifications of how the tabulator computes and reports results, which tables are accessed and what computations are made for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the information described in this request. Further responding, Defendant is unable to answer more fully, as it is unclear what this interrogatory is seeking. While the Bureau of Elections possesses general information on how tabulators compute the results, this interrogatory appears to seek specificity that could only be provided by the manufacturer.

16. Provide the functional specifications of any table that feeds aggregation tables for the purpose of reporting and how those computations are made for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the information described in this request. Further responding, Defendant is unable to answer more fully, as it is unclear what this interrogatory is seeking. While the Bureau of Elections possesses general information on how tabulators compute the results, this interrogatory appears to seek specificity that could only be provided by the manufacturer.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

17. Provide a listing of all stored procedures and their functional specification, when are they used and for what purpose for Antrim County for the 2020 elections.

ANSWER: Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, keep or maintain the information described in this request. Further responding, Defendant is unable to answer more fully, as it is unclear what this interrogatory is seeking. While the Bureau of Elections possesses general information on how tabulators compute the results, this interrogatory appears to seek specificity that could only be provided by the manufacturer.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

1. Produce all correspondences, communications, and documents relied upon in answering or that support any of the above Interrogatories.

RESPONSE: To the extent there are any, responsive documents are produced with the corresponding interrogatory.

2. Produce a copy of Dominion voting system source code held in trust by the State of Michigan.

RESPONSE: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess the requested information. Under MCL 168.797c and

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

168.794(g)-(h), Dominion Voting Systems' source code is held in escrow by a third party. Upon information and belief, the source code is held in escrow by NCC Group, Inc., 1731 Technology Drive, Suite 880, San Jose, CA 95110.

3. Produce a copy of all manuals for the Dominion voting system in use in the State of Michigan.

RESPONSE: The manuals for Dominion Voting Systems tabulators and software will be produced upon entry of a protective order.

4. Produce a copy of all data received regarding Antrim County on November 3, 2020 through November 7, 2020 including tracking information to verify the source and destination of such data.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson interprets this request as seeking information related to the unofficial election results uploaded into the County Election Night Reporting System (CENR). In addition to the records provided in response to Interrogatory No. 2 and Request to Produce No. 1, responsive records are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0006902 to 0006904 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

5. Produce the Qualified Voter File used on November 3, 2020 related to Antrim County.

RESPONSE: This information is contained in the enclosed spreadsheet. The information provided is from November 3, 2020, through

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

November 4, 2020, in order to capture all events that occurred on November 3. In order to protect the privacy and security of non-party citizens, personally identifiable information such as full date of birth and driver's license numbers have been removed. See, e.g, MCL 168.509gg(1)(c), (d). See Bates Numbered Documents 0006905 to 0007340 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

6. Produce the list of names removed from the Qualified Voter File in March 2001 related to Antrim County.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson interprets this request as seeking the list of voters whose voter registrations were cancelled in March 2021 rather than March 2001, as the records from 2001 would be irrelevant to this litigation. Records responsive to this request are enclosed. Personally identifiable information such as full date of birth and driver's license numbers have been removed. See, e.g, MCL 168.509gg(1)(c), (d). See Bates Numbered Documents 0007341 to 0007347 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

7. Produce all correspondences, communications and documents to support your claim that the Secretary of State has conducted more than 250 audits related to the 2020 general election.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it mischaracterizes the statements and press releases issued by the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Department of State. The Department of State did not conduct – and never said it conducted – 250 audits. Instead, as stated, more than 250 audits were conducted across the state by either County Clerks or the Bureau of Elections. Defendant further objects that this request is vague, overbroad, and unduly burdensome. Subject to and without waiving these objections, records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0005202 to 0005095 of Part 1 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Dustin Senneker), and Bates Numbered Documents 0007348 to 0007436 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

8. Produce all correspondences, communications, and documents to support your claim that more than 18,000 ballots were randomly selected for audit in 1,300 jurisdictions after November 3, 2020.

RESPONSE: See Answer to Request to Produce #7.

9. Produce any correspondences, communications and documents between the Secretary of State's executive office, administrative office, bureau of elections office, and/or Jocelyn Benson and The Chan Zuckerberg Initiative (or any employee, officer, or director) regarding the 2020 election.

RESPONSE: After conducting an electronic search, no responsive records have been identified.

10. Produce any correspondences, communications, and documents between the Secretary of State's executive office, administrative office, bureau of elections office,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and/or Jocelyn Benson and the Center for Technology and Civic Life (or any employee, officer or director) regarding the 2020 election.

RESPONSE: Records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0005096-0005212 of Part 1 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Dustin Senneker).

11. Produce an audit of the software installations for all devices used for election or connected to these devices via network connections (e.g. Ethernet, Wi-Fi, cell-based modem) for Antrim County for the 2020 elections. Information should be consistent with BelArc Advisor Tool.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is vague and unclear as to what information or records the request seeks. Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess the requested information or records.

12. Produce device-specific event logs for Antrim County for the 2020 elections for all installed software on each device, when each installation was performed, and the source of the software installed (e.g. disk, flash drive, download).

RESPONSE: Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess the requested information or records.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

13. Produce an audit log supporting all adjudication activities for Antrim County for 2020 elections, whether they were performed manually or with computer assistance.

RESPONSE: Neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request.

14. Produce all correspondences, communications and documents related to November 3, 2020 election in Antrim County.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson interprets this request as seeking records of communications between the Secretary of State's Executive Office, the Bureau of Elections, and Antrim County related to the November 3, 2020 general election. Defendant Benson has already produced similar records in response to Plaintiff's First Interrogatories and Requests for Production, Request to Produce #9, on February 8, 2021. Nevertheless, records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0005213-0006901 of Part 1 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Dustin Senneker).

15. Produce the names, titles and contact information for all people who had access to make changes at Election Source regarding the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce. In further answer,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request.

16. Produce the names, titles, and contact information for all people were authorized by the Michigan Secretary of State to print ballots for the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce. In further answer, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request. Defendant affirmatively states that the Department of State and/or the Bureau of Elections is not responsible for printing ballots in the State of Michigan.

17. Produce the names, titles and contact information for all people were actually printing ballots for Michigan for the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce. In further answer, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request. Defendant affirmatively states that the Department of State and/or the Bureau of Elections is not responsible for printing ballots in the State of Michigan.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

18. Produce all purchase orders for all ballot printing for Michigan for the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to producing purchase orders "for all ballot printing for Michigan" as it does not comply with this Court's April 12, 2021 instruction that discovery be limited to elections in Antrim County. Subject to and without waiving this objection, records responsive to this request have not been identified at this time, because ballot printing is not done by the Department of State and/or the Bureau of Elections.

19. Produce all mailing records for all ballot mailed to Antrim County for the November 2, 2020 election in Michigan.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson interprets this request as seeking information from the November 3, 2020 general election as there were no elections held on November 2, 2020. Further answering, records responsive to this request have not been identified at this time, because the mailing of ballots is not done by the Department of State and/or the Bureau of Elections, but rather by city and township clerks in Antrim County.

20. Produce all transactional records and logs that record date and time changes to media storage specific to Antrim County.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as vague and ambiguous and Defendant is unable to identify what records are being

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

requested. Upon information and belief, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request.

21. Produce the names, titles and contact information for all people who created the election configuration initially for the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan, and the names, titles and contact information for anyone who had access to or modified election files November 3, 2020 election in Michigan, and who these people worked for.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce. Defendant further objects to this request as vague and assumes that it seeks information related to the election management software. Upon information and belief, responsive records may be able to be obtained from Antrim County.

22. Produce the names, titles and contact information for all people working the election in Antrim County from September 1, 2020 through November 20, 2020.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce. In further answer, neither Defendant Benson, the Michigan Department of State, the Bureau of Elections nor any employee, officer, or agent of the same, possess or maintain records responsive to this request.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

23. Produce all correspondences, communications and documents exchanged with or used by J. Alex Halderman and all draft reports prepared by J. Alex Halderman related to his report dated March 26, 2021.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request because it is vague as it does not identify the other parties to the requested communications or correspondence. Subject to and without waiving this objection, records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0007437 to 0008986 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

24. Please produce copies of any documents or other evidence that you believe support your defense that the results of the Antrim County on November 3, 2020 were "human error."

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to the request as vague and overbroad. Without waiving the objection, Defendant Benson refers to the report of J. Alex Halderman, which has already been produced and details the factual basis for human error in reporting the unofficial results, and the documents upon which he relied to reach his conclusions. Defendant Benson does not keep or maintain other documents, but may rely on other official records, such as the testimony of Antrim County Clerk Sheryl Guy.

25. Please produce copies of any documents or other evidence that you believe support your defense that the results of the election in Antrim county on November 3, 2020 were "not the result of material fraud or error."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RESPONSE: See Answer to Request to Produce #24.

26. Produce all correspondences, communications and documents regarding any tabulators that stopped functioning during the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan including log files.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to producing records for "any tabulators that stopped functioning during the November 3, 2020 election in Michigan," as the request does not comply with the Court's April 12, 2021 instruction that discovery be limited to elections in Antrim County. Subject to and without waiving this objection, Defendant Benson states that no responsive documents have been identified, as the Bureau of Elections is not aware of reports of tabulators that stopped functioning in Antrim County on the November 3, 2020 general election.

27. Produce the names, titles and contact information for each witness that you believe may possess discoverable information that you may use in support of any of your claims or defenses and include a short summary of the substance you believe each witness to possess.

RESPONSE: Defendant Benson objects to this request as it is an interrogatory disguised as a request to produce, and Defendant Benson does not keep or maintain any documents matching the description in this request

28. Produce all communication, correspondence or summary of any conversations occurring from October 1, 2020 to the present day between your experts and any person employed by a government body in the State of Michigan or holding public office in the State of Michigan, including but not limited to Gretchen Whitmer, Jocelyn Benson or Dana Nessel.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RESPONSE: Records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0008987 to 0009032 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

29. Produce the resume and curriculum vitae for all of your expert witnesses and produce their experience with election administration and also their experience with elections technology (e.g. voting machines, tabulators, etc.).

RESPONSE: Records responsive to this request are enclosed. See Bates Numbered Documents 0009033 to 0009061 of Part 2 of Defendant Benson's third production (the link sent by Lisa Albro).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jonathan Brater, Director of Elections
Michigan Department of State

Sworn to and subscribed before me, a
Notary Public, this 14th day of May, 2021.

Carol Ebierca
Notary Public
Livingston County, Michigan
Acting in Ingham County, Michigan
My commission expires: 11-5-2026

As to objections and documents produced only:

Respectfully submitted,

Dana Nessel
Attorney General

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Attorneys for Intervenor-Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

Dated: May 14, 2021

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 5

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
JOCELYN BENSON, SECRETARY OF STATE
DEPARTMENT OF STATE
LANSING

May 20, 2021

Karen Brewster
Cheboygan County Clerk
by e-mail

Dear Clerk Brewster:

You are receiving this letter because the Bureau of Elections has been informed that the Cheboygan County Board of Commissioners may attempt to allow an unqualified third party to gain access to voting equipment in Cheboygan County, purportedly to conduct a "forensic audit." The Board has no authority to require you or any municipal clerk to provide external access to voting equipment maintained by your offices, and neither you nor municipal clerks in Cheboygan County should provide this access.

The Michigan Election Law entrusts clerks with choosing and maintaining their voting systems and does not provide any authority for county commissions to take control of this equipment. MCL 168.37a states that "a county clerk, in consultation with each city and township clerk in the county" will "determine which electronic voting system will be used in the county[.]" Custody, programming, and review and testing of election equipment is entrusted to qualified election officials, not county commissions.

Interest in granting access to unqualified third parties to conduct a "forensic audit" may stem from misplaced reliance on ongoing misinformation— which has been repeatedly, comprehensively, and definitively debunked—regarding both Dominion Voting Systems and the error that occurred in the initial reported unofficial results in Antrim County. As you know, the Bureau of Elections in cooperation with the Antrim County Clerk and a number of local election clerks conducted a public hand count of every paper ballot cast for President in Antrim County, which confirmed that the ballot tabulators counted ballots accurately.

Statewide, more than 1,300 clerks of both parties participated in at least one election audit this year. A report on the results of the audits, which found no examples of intentional misconduct, is publicly available.[1] Suggestions of tampering with election results are baseless. The Department of Justice, FBI, Department of Homeland Security, and Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency "investigated multiple public claims that one or more foreign governments owned, directed, or controlled election infrastructure used in the 2020 federal elections; implemented a scheme tomanipulate election infrastructure; or tallied, changed, or otherwise manipulated vote counts. The Departments found that those claims were not credible."[2]

[1] https://www.michigan.gov/documents/sos/BOE_2020_Post_Election_Audit_Report_04_21_21_723005_7.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If you or municipal clerks choose to conduct additional reviews of your voting systems, that is your prerogative. However, as we advised in the February 12, 2021 news update and our April 20, 2021 email to county clerks and election directors, only election officials, licensed vendors, or accredited voting system test laboratories should be granted access to voting equipment. If you are interested in having any type of physical review of your voting system, you should contact an EAC-accredited voting systems test laboratory (VSTL).

Please let me know if you have any further questions.

Sincerely,

Jonathan Brater, Director
Michigan Bureau of Elections

[2] https://www.dhs.gov/news/2021/03/16/joint-statement-departments-justice-and-homeland-security-assessing-impact-foreign.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE 5th CIRCUIT COURT OF BARRY COUNTY

SHARON OLSON, in her official capacity as IRVING TOWNSHIP CLERK,

Plaintiff,

v.

JOCELYN BENSON, in her capacity as MICHIGAN SECRETARY OF STATE, JONATHAN BRATER, in his capacity as DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS,

and

[DOMINION VOTING MACHINES, INC., and DOMINION WHO'S ACTUALLY DOING THE PATCH ?]

Defendants.

Circuit Court Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

EMERGENCY EX-PARTE MOTION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AND TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

STEFANIE LAMBERT (P71303)
Law Offices of Stefanie Lambert PLLC
Attorney for Plaintiff
400 Renaissance Center
Floor 26
Detroit, MI 48243-1502
(313) 410-6872

EXHIBIT 6

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

State Of Michigan
Michigan Department of State
And
Barry County
Township of Irving
Help America Vote Act (HAVA) Grant Agreement
Voting System Hardware, Firmware and Software
RE: Master Contract
- Dominion Voting Systems, Inc.

This Grant Agreement is the mechanism by which Counties, Cities, and Townships apply to the State of Michigan to receive Federal HAVA and State-appropriated funded voting systems, including optical scan tabulators, accessible voting devices and Election Management System (EMS) software, pursuant to the Federal Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002.

Definitions:

"Contractor" means the voting system vendor selected by the county.

"County" means any county within the State of Michigan.

"Department" means the Michigan Department of State.

"Grantee" means the county or local jurisdiction entering into this Grant Agreement.

"Local Jurisdiction" means any city or township within the State of Michigan.

"Voting Systems" means optical scan tabulators, accessible voting devices (for use by voters with disabilities), and EMS software (as applicable) acquired by the counties and local jurisdictions statewide and funded by State-appropriated and Federal HAVA funds.

1. Period of Agreement

The Grant Agreement process applies to voting system purchases occurring between March 1, 2017 and April 30, 2018.

2. Program, Budget and Agreement

This Grant Agreement is to establish a grant program to use State-appropriated and Federal HAVA funds to acquire and implement replacement voting systems throughout the state. Each county, with the involvement of the local jurisdictions within the county, will select one Contractor for the entire county and will develop a countywide implementation plan to replace its voting systems.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Once the county certifies its Contractor selection to the Department, the county will provide the Department with its implementation plan for individual local jurisdictions participating in each planned purchasing phase. The Department will verify the number of voting systems authorized for purchase using State-appropriated and Federal HAVA funds. If changes are required after the Grant Agreement is signed and approved, instructions for amending the Grant Agreement will be provided and the Grantee will be required to enter into a new Grant Agreement.

This grant program only covers the acquisition and implementation of the voting system selected by each county, and the individual voting system components which will be funded utilizing available State-appropriated and Federal HAVA funds. Approved quantities of each voting system component have been determined by the Department and are listed in Section 15 of this Grant Agreement.

The Michigan Department of Technology, Management and Budget has entered into a Master Contract with each approved Contractor, which has established maximum statewide prices for each voting system component. The Department has established the available level of grant funding for each component of each Contractor's voting system. State-appropriated and Federal HAVA funding provided via this Grant Agreement covers the purchase of the voting system, the software license fee for the EMS software for the full 10-year contract term, and the initial service and maintenance period for all components (which covers the acquisition year, plus 4 additional years). The Master Contract includes an extended service and maintenance period beyond the initial service and maintenance period, for an additional five-year period. Costs for the extended service and maintenance period and other additional costs, if any, are the sole responsibility of each individual county / local jurisdiction.

All Contractors will be required to enter into a "purchase agreement" with each local jurisdiction and county in those counties that have selected that Contractor. Typically, this document is the purchase agreement provided by the Contractor. The terms and conditions of the local purchase agreements shall not contradict the Master Contract. The terms of the Master Contract will supercede any conflicting terms in the local purchase agreements.

Each Contractor will enter into a software license agreement with each county and any local jurisdictions that receive EMS. The license agreement shall not contradict any terms contained in the Master Contract. The terms of the Master Contract supercede any conflicting terms in the license agreement.

The Department will initiate voting system orders at the county level, once all Grant Agreements for the county are submitted and approved for the designated purchasing phase. Once voting systems have been delivered, tested, and accepted by each Grantee in the county for the designated purchasing phase, the Department will release the State/HAVA funds to the Contractor.

3. General

The individual submitting the Grant Agreement must have the proper authority to do so, and must certify in Section 16 of this Grant Agreement that this authority has been granted. Examples of authority include, but are not limited to, a resolution from the Board of County Commissioners, City Council or Township Board authorizing the individual submitting the Grant Agreement to execute the Grant Agreement on behalf of the county, city, or township.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

4. Performance
Each Grantee will certify and sign the Grant Agreement and forward it to the Department per the instructions provided. The Department will review and, once approved, will provide the Grantee with a copy of this fully-executed Grant Agreement, which will serve as Notice of the Grant Award. The Department will initiate equipment orders directly with the Contractor, and will provide the Grantee with the Acceptance Certificate & Payment Authorization Form, which must be submitted by the Grantee to the Department within 10 business days of voting system delivery. This form indicates acceptance of equipment and payment authorization.

The Grantee is responsible for overseeing its contractual agreement with the Contractor and is responsible for ensuring Contractor performance. Any subsequent malfunction or performance issue with the voting system must be addressed by the Grantee directly with the Contractor. The Grantee is responsible for maintaining any and all Contractor performance records. The Grantee has the sole responsibility to verify Contractor compliance with delivery dates, terms and conditions of delivery, and equipment verification and testing in accordance with the statewide Master Contract for the Grantee's selected Contractor. The Grantee will be solely responsible for additional costs incurred that are not covered by service, maintenance and warranty provisions in the Master Contract.

Grant funding is not provided for the purchase of additional ("backup") voting systems. The Grantee will be responsible for developing and implementing a backup strategy to ensure continued operation on Election Day, in the event of voting system failure in any individual precinct.

5. Testing, Acceptance and Payment
   1. Successful acceptance testing of the voting system shall be completed within 10 business days from the date of delivery.
   2. Upon completion of all acceptance testing, the Grantee must complete the State-issued Acceptance Certificate & Payment Authorization Form and forward the completed form to the Department.
   3. This form will indicate the date of delivery, successful completion of acceptance testing, and will provide authorization to the Department to release funds to the Contractor.
   4. Payment to the Contractor shall be made in accordance with the Master Contract with the Grantee's selected Contractor.

6. Ownership of Equipment and Software Purchases; Title
Any voting system purchased pursuant to this Grant Agreement is the property of the Grantee.

7. Optional Purchases
If the Grantee desires to purchase additional items beyond those authorized in this Grant Agreement, it may do so at its sole expense, outside of this Grant Agreement. No State or HAVA funds will be available for such purchases. Prices established via the Master Contract are extended to counties and local jurisdictions by the Contractors for these purposes.

8. Records Maintenance/Retention
The Grantee will maintain a complete set of records and files related to the ordering, delivery, testing, maintenance, and repairs of voting systems. The Grantee shall assure all the terms of this Grant Agreement are adhered to and that records and detailed documentation regarding this grant shall be maintained for a period of not less than six (6) years from the date of Contract termination, the date of submission of the final expenditure report or until any litigation and audit findings have been resolved, whichever is later.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9. Management Requirements

Grantee must maintain property records that include a description of the property; a serial number or other identification number; acquisition date; cost of the property; location, use and condition of the property; and any ultimate disposition data including the date of disposal and sale price of the property (if any). Grantee must also maintain records showing 71% Federal participation in the cost of the property.

Grantee must perform a physical inventory of the property and reconcile the results with the property records at least once every two years.

Grantee must develop a control system to ensure adequate safeguards to prevent loss, damage, or theft of the property. Any loss, damage, or theft shall be investigated by the Grantee and reported to the Department.

Grantee must develop adequate maintenance procedures to keep the property in good condition. Grantee agrees to maintain extended service and maintenance coverage for the voting system in years 6-10 of the Master Contract, after the expiration of the initial service and maintenance period. If the Grantee fails to maintain extended service and maintenance coverage for the full Contract period, the Department may require Grantee to pay the Department the full amount of voting system grant funds paid to the vendor for the Grantee's county, city or township.

10. Disposition.

When the voting system acquired under this grant is no longer needed, the Department must be notified. Disposition of the equipment will be made as follows:

- Items of equipment with a current per-unit fair market value of less than $5,000 may be retained, sold or otherwise disposed of with no further obligation to the Department.
- Disposition of EMS software must follow the terms of the Contractor's Software License Agreement.

11. Authorized Access

The Grantee will permit, upon reasonable notification and at reasonable times, access to all records regarding this Grant Agreement by the Department and other representatives duly authorized by State or Federal law.

12. Mandatory Conditions

A. Statutory or Regulatory Requirements

The Master Contract for the Grantee's selected Contractor must be incorporated and made a part of the ensuing contract between the Grantee and the Contractor, as a condition for grant approval. The Grantee will comply with applicable Federal and State laws, guidelines, rules and regulations in carrying out the terms of this Grant Agreement.

Laws

This is a State of Michigan Grant Agreement and is governed by the laws of the State of Michigan. Any dispute arising as a result of this Agreement shall be resolved in the State of Michigan.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Funding
This Grant Agreement is subject to and contingent upon the availability and appropriation of Federal funds and any necessary State appropriation.

Costs
The State will not assume any responsibility or liability for costs incurred in relation to this grant.

Cancellation
The Department may cancel the Grant Agreement upon failure to comply with the terms of this grant.

Entire Agreement
The Grant Agreement shall represent the entire agreement between the State and Grantee and supercedes any prior oral or written agreements, and all other representations between the parties relating to this subject. The State reserves the right to require counties and local jurisdictions to attend required training sessions with regard to new equipment purchases made under HAVA.

Adherence to Terms
The failure of a party to insist upon strict adherence to any term of this Grant Agreement shall not be considered a waiver or deprive the party of the right thereafter to insist upon strict adherence to that term, or any other term of the Grant Agreement.

B. Other
Additional terms and conditions may be negotiated in the contract between the Grant Applicant and the Contractor as long as they do not conflict with the required terms and conditions of this Grant Agreement and Master Contract with the Grantee's selected Contractor.

13. Administration of Agreement
The Grant Manager on behalf of the Department for this Grant Agreement and the final Grant Agreement will be:

Jeremy Lange, Office of Financial Services
Michigan Department of State

All questions, comments and correspondence regarding this grant process, the Grant Agreement and the final Grant Agreement must be submitted in writing to the Grant Manager.

14. Completed Agreement
In order to complete this Grant Agreement, it must be filled out in its entirety by completing all indicated fields* below, and must be signed by the individual authorized by the county or local jurisdiction to enter into this agreement. The signed grant must be scanned and submitted electronically via the Elections eLearning Center.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

16. Voting Systems Authorization
Note: Grant Applicant to fill in all fields indicated (*) below:
This Grant Agreement is between the Michigan Department of State and:

Barry County
Township of Irving

*Grant Manager for County, City, or Township (point of contact for the State):

*Name	Sharon L. Olson
*Title	Irving Township Clerk
*Office Address	3425 Wing Rd. Hastings, MI 49058
*Office Phone	269 948 0633
*Office Email Address	clerk@irvingtownship.org.

Authorized Voting System Component Totals:

Number of Precinct Tabulators Authorized for State-Federal Funding:	2
Number of Absent Voter Counting Board Tabulators Authorized for State-Federal Funding: (funded at precinct tabulator price) *	0
Number of Accessible Voting Devices Authorized for State-Federal Funding:	2
EMS Software Authorized for State-Federal Funding:	None

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

16. Special Certification/Signature

The following signatory certifies that the person signing is authorized to sign and enter into this Grant Agreement. Further, the signatory has reviewed and agrees to the conditions as outlined in this Grant Agreement, and has personally examined and is familiar with the information submitted here, as well as the requirements of the Help America Vote Act, under which this grant has been submitted.

For the COUNTY OR LOCAL JURISDICTION:

*Name: Sharon L Olson

*Title: Irving Township Clerk *Date: 12/18/2017

Sharon L Olson
*Signature

For the STATE OF MICHIGAN, DEPARTMENT OF STATE:
Cindy Paradine, Director, Office of Financial Services

Cindy Paradine
Signature

2/28/18
Date

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DOMINION VOTING SYSTEMS
SOFTWARE LICENSE TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. Definitions.

1.1. "Hardware" means the ImageCast® system defined in the Purchase Order.

1.2. "Licensee" shall mean the Dominion customer defined in the Purchase Order.

1.3. "Licensor" shall mean Dominion Voting Systems.

1.4. "Party" or "Parties" Licensor and Licensee may hereinafter be referred to individually as a Party and collectively as the Parties.

1.5. "Purchase Order" shall mean the purchase order between the Parties for the purchase of Hardware and use of the licensed Software.

1.6. "Software" means the software licensed by Licensor hereunder, in object code form, including all documentation therefore as identified in the Purchase Order.

1.7. "Specifications" means descriptions and data regarding the features, functions and performance of the Software and Hardware, as set forth in user manuals or other applicable documentation provided by Licensor.

1.8. "Term" shall mean the term period defined in the Purchase Order.

2. License.

2.1. License to Software. Subject to the terms herein, Licensor grants Licensee a non-exclusive, non-transferrable license to use the Software solely for the Licensee's own business purposes.

2.2. Print Copyright License. Subject to the Licensor's Print Copyright License terms and conditions. Licensor grants to Licensee a non-exclusive, non-transferable print copyright license.

2.3. No Other Licenses. Other than as expressly set forth herein, (a) Licensor grants no licenses, expressly or by implication, and (b) Licensor is not licensing or assigning any intellectual property rights of Licensor to Licensee or any third party. Licensee agrees not to use the Software for elections outside the Licensee's jurisdiction and agrees not to reverse engineer or otherwise attempt to derive the source code of the Software. The Licensee shall have no power to transfer or grant sub-licenses for the Software. Any use of all or any portion of the Software not expressly permitted is strictly prohibited.

3. Upgrades and Certification. During the Term, Licensor may provide upgrades to Licensee under the following terms and conditions.

3.1. Upgrades. In the event that Licensor, at its sole discretion, certifies a Software upgrade under the applicable laws and regulations of the Licensee's jurisdiction, Licensor may make the certified Software upgrade available to the Licensee at no additional cost.

3.2. Certification Requirement. Notwithstanding any other terms herein, Licensor shall not provide, and shall not be obligated to provide under any upgrade, or other software update, that has not been certified under the applicable provisions of the election laws and regulations of the Licensee's jurisdiction.

4. Prohibited Acts. The Licensee shall not, without the prior written permission of Licensor:

4.1. Transfer or copy onto any other storage device or hardware or otherwise copy the Software in whole or in part except for purposes of system backup;

4.2. Reverse engineer, disassemble, decompile, decipher or analyze the Software in whole or in part;

4.3. Alter or modify the Software in any way or prepare any derivative works of the Software or any part of parts of the Software;

4.4. Alter, remove or obstruct any copyright or proprietary notices from the Software, or fail to reproduce the same on any lawful copies of the Software.

5. Return of Software. Upon termination or expiration of this license, Licensee shall (i) forthwith return to Licensor all Software in its possession or control, or destroy all such Software from any electronic media, and certify in writing to Licensor that it has been destroyed.

6. Warranties. The following warranties shall apply.

6.1. Software Warranty. Licensor warrants that the Software will function substantially in accordance with the Specification during the Term. The foregoing warranty shall be void in the event of the Software (i) having been modified by any party other than Licensor or (ii) having been used by the Licensee for purposes other than those for which the Software was designed by Licensor. If Licensor establishes that the reported material failure is not covered by the foregoing warranty, the Licensee shall be responsible for the costs of Licensor's investigative and remedial work at Licensor's then current rates.

6.2. Third-Party Products. The warranties herein do not apply to any Third-Party Products. However, to the extent permitted by the manufacturers of Third-Party Products, Licensor shall pass through to Licensee all warranties such manufacturers make to Licensor regarding the operation of such Third-Party Products.

6.3. NO OTHER WARRANTIES. DOMINION DISCLAIMS ALL OTHER REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES, WHETHER WRITTEN, ORAL, EXPRESS, IMPLIED OR STATUTORY, INCLUDING ANY WARRANTY OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR A PARTICULAR PURPOSE AND ANY WARRANTY BASED ON A COURSE OF DEALING, COURSE OF PERFORMANCE OR USAGE OF TRADE.

7. Limitation of Liability. LICENSOR'S TOTAL AGGREGATE LIABILITY FOR ANY LOSS, DAMAGE, COSTS OR EXPENSES UNDER OR IN CONNECTION WITH THIS PURCHASE ORDER, LICENSE AND WARRANTY, HOWSOEVER ARISING, INCLUDING WITHOUT LIMITATION, LOSS, DAMAGE, COSTS OR EXPENSES CAUSED BY BREACH OF CONTRACT, NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF STATUTORY OR ANY OTHER DUTY SHALL IN NO CIRCUMSTANCES EXCEED THE TOTAL DOLLAR AMOUNT OF THE PURCHASE ORDER. NEITHER PARTY SHALL BE LIABLE FOR ANY LOSS OF PROFITS, LOSS OF BUSINESS, LOSS OF DATA, LOSS OF USE OR ANY OTHER INDIRECT, INCIDENTAL, PUNITIVE, SPECIAL OR CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS OR DAMAGE WHATSOEVER, HOWSOEVER ARISING, INCURRED BY THE OTHER PARTY OR ANY THIRD PARTY, WHETHER IN AN ACTION IN CONTRACT, NEGLIGENCE OR OTHER TORT, EVEN IF THE PARTIES OR THEIR REPRESENTATIVES HAVE BEEN ADVISED OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGES.

Authorized Signature

SHARON OLSON
Printed Name

10-20-2023
Date

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ATTACHMENT 3

Speckin Report,
July 26, 2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Speckin Forensics, LLC

120 N. Washington Square, Suite 300
PMB 5068
Lansing, Michigan 48933
517-349-3528 • Fax 954-839-8219

Please Direct Correspondence & Payment Here:
2450 Hollywood Boulevard, Suite 700
Hollywood, Florida 33020
954-763-6134 • Fax 954-839-8219

www.4N6.com

Leonard A. Speckin
Retired Document Analyst

Michael J. Sinke
Retired Latent Print Specialist
Retired Crime Scene Reconstruction
Retired Forensic Document Analyst

Dr. George F. Jackson Ph.D.
Forensic Toxicologist

Michael P. Mulderig
Forensic Firearms
Ballistics Specialist

Erich J. Speckin
Forensic Document Analyst
Ink Dating Specialist
Crime Scene Reconstruction

Thomas K. Huard Ph.D.
DNA Analyst & Consultant

Juan Ruiz
Computer, Mobile Device Specialist

Marshaun J. Blake
Arson Investigator
Vehicle Fire Specialist

Anthony A. Milone
Computer & Graphics Specialist
Forensic Document Specialist

Dr. Julie A. Howenstine
Serologist
DNA Analyst & Consultant
Crime Scene Reconstruction

Amended Report of July 26, 2023

July 27, 2023

I was asked to examine and recount ballots, the envelopes, totals tapes, record books and other associated documents for the 2020 election. This included AVCBs 1-134 and Precincts 1- 503 for the City of Detroit in their possession. This process took from the 17th of April 2023 to the 17th of May 2023. Additional photos were taken from 17th of July 2023 to 24th of July 2023.

Upon my arrival at the Detroit Department of Election Office located at 2978 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit, MI 48202, we were greeted, and the ground rules were explained and provided by the management staff. The rules included but are not limited to, no touching of the ballots, envelopes or register tapes. We could only direct the staff there to move, show, count, etc. the items desired. I was not allowed to proceed beyond the lobby area without being accompanied by a supervisor.

The ballots were located in locked cabinets that had a tag on them that had to be cut off. There were 17 cabinets in total of which 12 were filled with AVCB ballots and the other 5 were filled with Precinct Ballots. The ballots were stored in these cabinets by AVCB 1-8, 8-17, 17-24, 24-30, 31-36, 37-41, 42-51, 52-61, 62-70, 71-81,82-92, 93-134 and by Precincts 1-88, 89-207, 208-301, 302-384, and 385-503. The ballots were all stacked in the cabinets one on top of the other and had to be sorted by the City staff upon removal from the cabinet.

The manner in which the ballots were counted was by the representative from the Election office moving the ballots from one pile to another while my team was tallying the vote totals. The tallies were recorded by Presidential candidate (Biden, Trump, or other) and by Congressional Senator candidate (Peters, James or other). In this context, the term "other could be anything other than the two main candidates such as another party, write in, undervote (blank), or overvote. This category was designed as a placeholder to keep the number of ballots total as well as the main parties' vote totals. While the ballots were in front of my team, we were able to observe that the printing on the mail in ballots have some inconsistencies, for example some have darker printing than others.

At the same time when this printing anomaly was noted, many of the City of Detroit staff commented to each member of my team that the ballot paper felt different on some of the ballots. We were unable to touch the paper or examine completely to determine this. It occurred while the representative was flipping the ballots, some were sticking to one another, and they made comments that some ballots felt thicker than others. In my opinion, further examination should occur on these ballots and AV boards to confirm these differences, the number of instances where this may have occurred, patterns that may exist on voting on the different paper stock, and any further determinations that can be made from either paper that exists. This can be crucial evidence in light of the possibility of additional ballots being introduced as discussed in affidavits and evidenced by videos.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

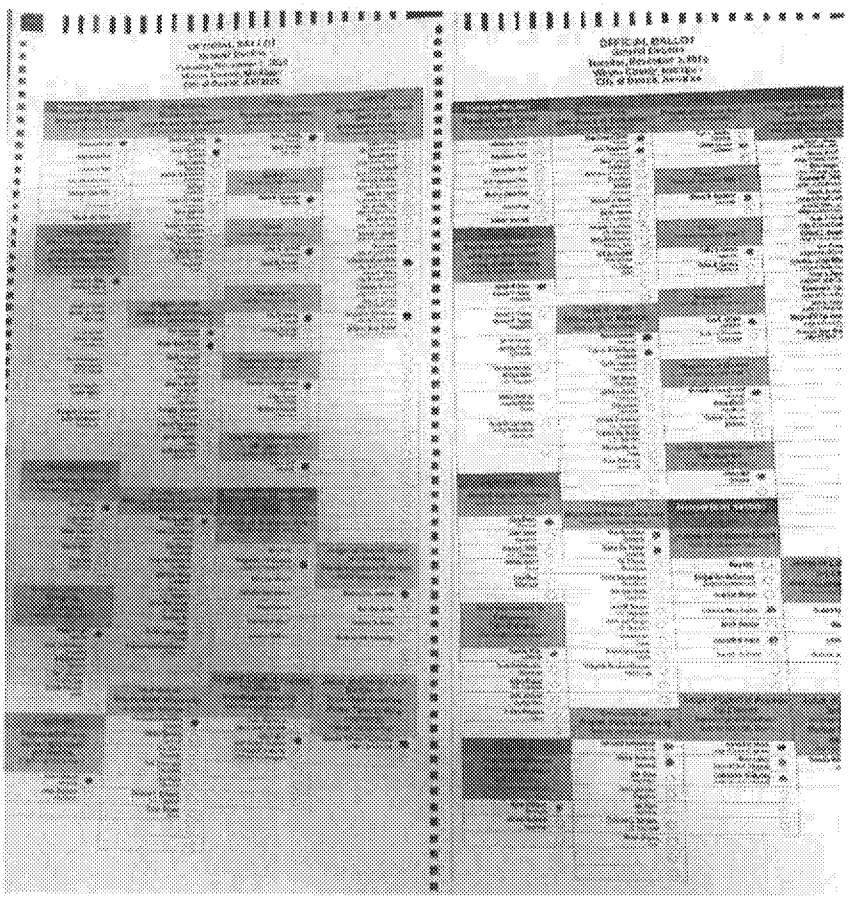
Below is a photograph of two ballots showing the representative difference in printing appearance that can be seen between two ballots from AV 26, similar differences were found in other AV boards.



The mail in envelopes, absentee applications, register tapes and record books were located in the same storage room as the ballots in file-like storage drawers. These drawers were not locked or sealed like the ballots at the time of our arrival.

The method used to count the envelopes was to observe the representative from the Election office count the envelopes in stacks of a 100 (sometimes 50 or 25), we then counted the total and I recorded that number. With regards to the register tapes and the record books; the City representative removed the tapes and record book from the envelope, I then documented the totals that were recorded and the materials were placed back in the same envelope.

In several of the AV boards, a comparison was made from the applications for mail in ballots to the envelopes. I was told by the City staff that many applications were sent out (even unsolicited in cases) for mail in ballots in 2020. However, it was confirmed by the staff that in order to receive a mail in ballot, an application needed to be received, either by return mail or delivered in person.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This was a very time-consuming process to match up each returned ballot with a corresponding application, therefore only 2 AV boards were done like this as time allowed. In the two AV boards compared (AV 79 and AV 122), there were 289 mail-in ballots (249 in AV 79 and 40 in AV 122) found that had NO application in the file to receive the ballots. In some of those instances post it notes were found in the files that included "Ballot doesn't match poll book"; "not on list in QVF"; and "Not on list".

I have now been provided with what I am told is a "permanent AV voter list". I then compared the ballot return envelopes that have no corresponding application for AV ballot request to the "permanent list".

Looking into the math involved, AV 79 had a total of 1249 ballots counted according to the total printouts. 249 showed no application for the ballot, this is nearly 20%. When the "permanent list" is compared to these 249 without applications, 155 of them were still not found on this list or with an application. This is over 12%.

For AV 122 the total ballots shown in the printouts is 511, with 40 having no corresponding application which is approximately 8%. When the "permanent list" is compared to these 40 without applications, 33 of them were still not found on this list or with an application. This is over 6%.

It would follow that if all the boards were compared in this manner, with approximately 170,000 AV ballots, the range at 8%-20% would be 13,600 to 34,000 ballots with no application requesting the ballot.

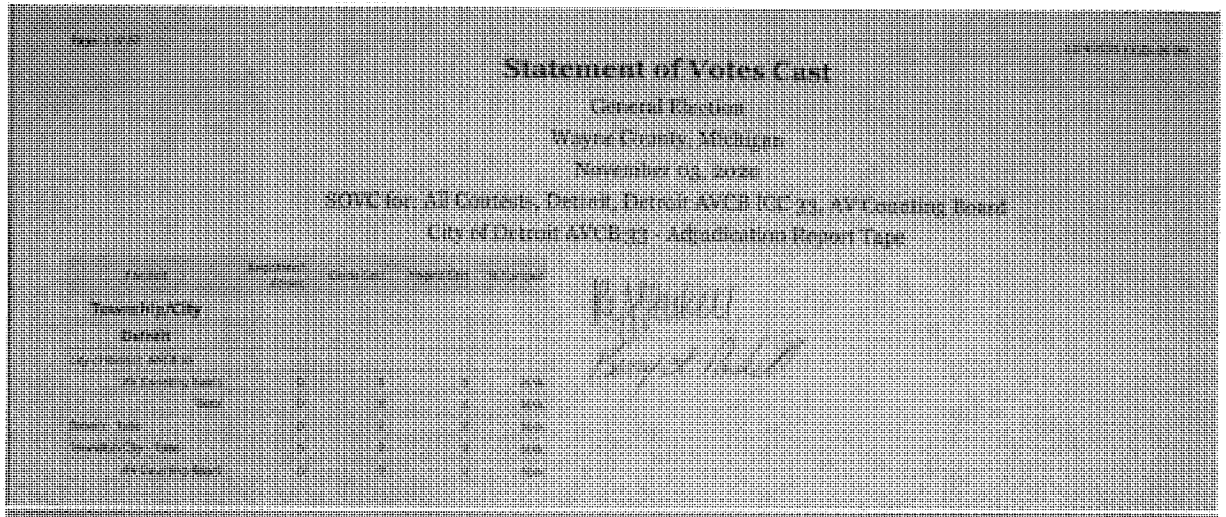
My office will continue to analyze records and compare additional boards in the same manner as AV 79 and AV 122 above.

After the envelopes were counted, the total number of envelopes were compared to the total number of ballots for each AVCBs. Many of these boards had unexplainable differences. In some, the number of ballots was more than the number of envelopes. In a few instances, there were more envelopes than ballots present to be counted. A small discrepancy can exist by simple human error of an envelope missing or misfiled of course, but the differences in some cases are much bigger. For example, AV 18 contains 43 more envelopes than ballots; AV 38 contains 40 more ballots than envelopes; AV 40 contains 62 more ballots than envelopes. There are dozens of such examples, while other AVs match exactly or nearly exactly.

A comparison was then made to the vote totals on the tapes (in person) or printouts (AVCB) to the ballots present to be counted. Three AV boards had totals of ZERO votes on the printouts, but votes were recorded to the state. These boards are AV 33, AV 57, and AV 58. It is unclear how the totals were reported when the printouts show ZERO. At 11:23pm AV 33 shows the totals of zero, for AV 57 at 11:50pm shows zero, and for AV 58 at 11:50pm shows zero. These three AV envelopes showed no totals on any printouts.

See photos on the following page:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Statement of Votes Cast

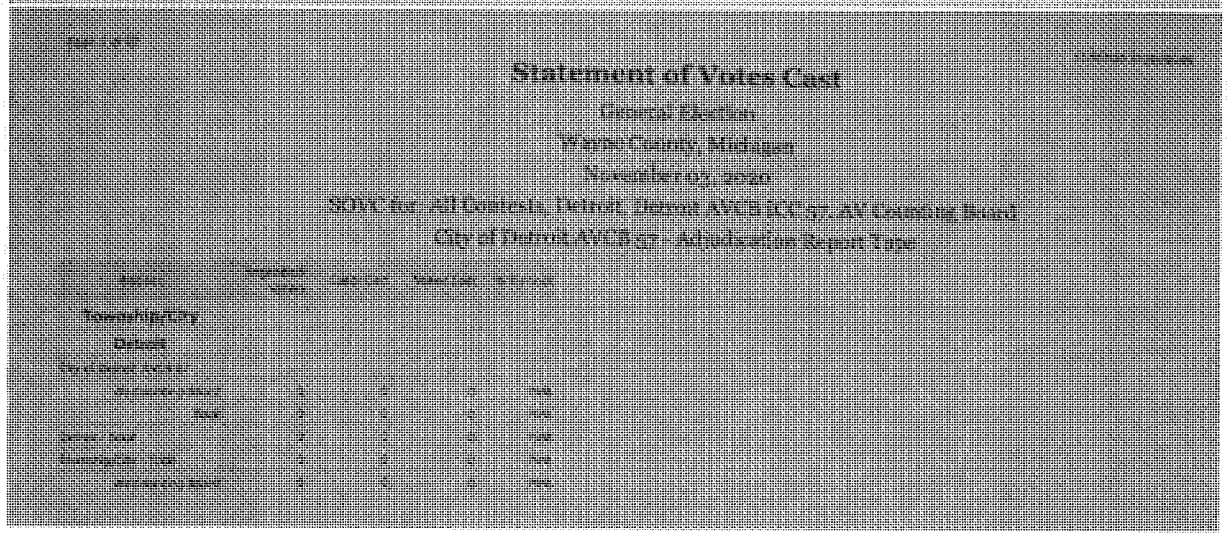
General Election

Wayne County, Michigan

November 03, 2020

SOVC for All Contests, Detroit, Detroit AVCB ICC 23, AV Counting Board

City of Detroit AVCB 23 - Adjudication Report Tape



Statement of Votes Cast

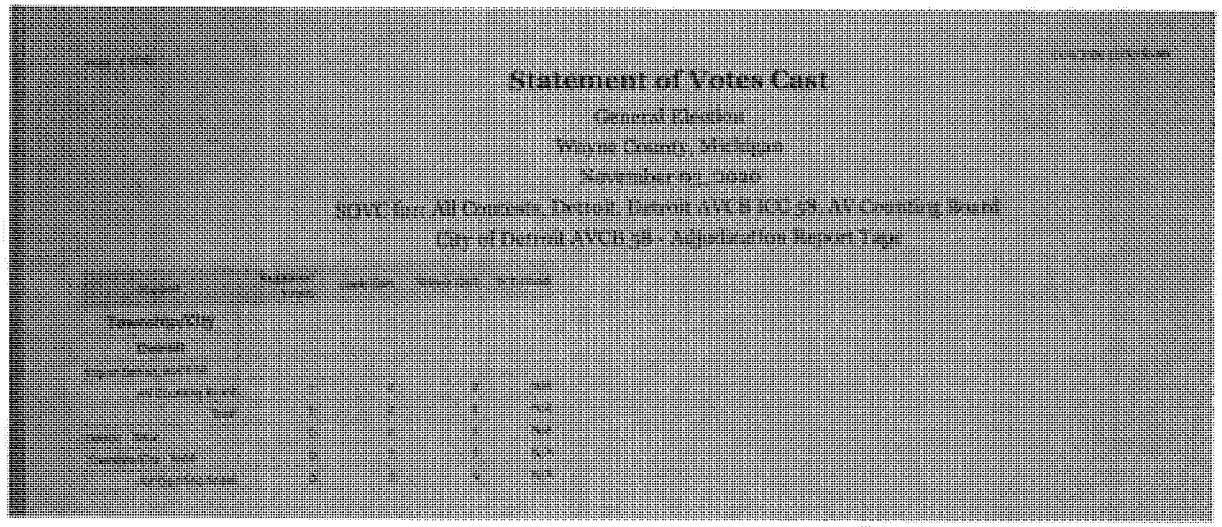
General Election

Wayne County, Michigan

November 03, 2020

SOVC for All Contests, Detroit, Detroit AVCB ICC 37, AV Counting Board

City of Detroit AVCB 37 - Adjudication Report Tape



Statement of Votes Cast

General Election

Wayne County, Michigan

November 03, 2020

SOVC for All Contests, Detroit, Detroit AVCB ICC 58, AV Counting Board

City of Detroit AVCB 58 - Adjudication Report Tape

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For AV 13, the ballots counted by hand and the vote totals reported to the state are nearly identical (1565 vs 1566), but the number of ballots scanned and shown on the printouts are 1621. This is over 50 ballots for this AV board that show as scanned but are not present in the ballots presented to us.

As for AV 14, the number of ballots on the totals printout as scanned and the votes reported are very similar (1764 vs 1757) this is also very similar to the number of envelopes counted for that AV board of 1765. However, the number of ballots actually present is 1740. This is approximately 25 more envelopes present than ballots. I am unable to determine where these previous approximately 25 ballots have gone.

In AV 15, the number of ballots present and the total ballots on the printout are similar (1762 vs 1765). The number of envelopes counted for the AV is 1795. This is approximately 30 more envelopes present than ballots. I am unable to determine where these previous approximately 30 ballots have gone.

In AV 19, the total number of ballots counted by my team and the number of ballots on the total printout are similar (2301 vs 2300). There were only 2270 envelopes counted for this AV board. This would leave approximately 30 ballots appearing and counted that have no corresponding envelope received.

In AV 23, the total envelopes counted, and the number of ballots scanned on the totals printout are similar (2858 vs 2855). The totals ballots presented in our count was only 2818. This would be a difference of 40 ballots missing, or possibly the same ballots that were also rescanned to account for scanned total than total ballots present.

In AV 26, the total number of ballots present, and the total number scanned on the printout are similar (3426 vs 3430). The number of envelopes returned for this AV board was 3385. This is approximately 45 more ballots presented and counted than envelopes found to return the ballots.

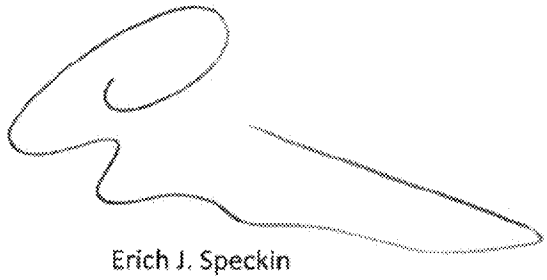
Similar anomalies in the ballot count, envelope count, or total votes scanned exist in the following additional AV boards: AV 27, AV 28, AV 32, AV 36, AV 38, AV 40, AV 41, AV 42, AV 43, AV 45, AV 62, AV 64, AV 68, AV 69, AV 77, AV 79, AV 82, AV 87, AV 88, AV 89, AV 95, AV 96, AV 101, and AV 122.

Further anomalies existed in the totals for an individual candidate, for instance in AV 49 the total we counted within the ballots present in the presidential race for Biden is 902, however, the total reported as votes cast and counted for AV board is 965 for Biden. It is unclear where these additional 63 votes would have come from as they are not present in the ballots presented. Duplicate scanning and counting of ballots is possible and could account for this discrepancy but the computer and system data including the scans of the ballots from the tabulators would need to be examined to confirm or deny this possibility.

Similar anomalies (of 10 or more votes) in total votes on the printouts of compared to the totals in the ballots exist in the following AV boards: AV 1 (32), AV 3 (22), AV 4 (16), AV 6 (10), AV 10 (-13), AV 12 (-12), AV 13 (53), AV 17 (57), AV 21 (16), AV 22 (13), AV 23 (36), AV 24 (19), AV 25 (15), AV 28 (46), AV 30 (-12), AV 35 (11), AV 36 (-15), AV 37 (-22), AV 40 (-10), AV 41 (53), AV 42 (10), AV 43 (27), AV 44 (-29), AV 45 (-41), AV 47 (23), AV 49 (63), AV 62 (92), AV 67 (19), AV 68 (-19), AV 72 (13), AV 73 (11), AV 75 (16), AV 77 (12), AV 84 (13), AV 86 (19), AV 88 (59), AV 92 (16), AV 93 (14), AV 94 (15), AV 95 (19), AV 99 (63), and AV 130 (46).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Based on these types of anomalies between scanned totals and ballots currently present, it is my opinion that the computer data relating to the scanning and tabulation from this 2020 election should be examined and compared for discrepancies as well as time sequences. This data should include ballot images to check for duplicate scans, comparison of totals, times of scanning, and other related features and possible access from outside sources. My office is ready and able to perform this additional analysis. The data and computer hardware should be preserved until complete analysis can be performed.



Erich J. Speckin

Forensic Document Analyst

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) [teszlewiczb@michigan.gov]
on behalf of Grossi, Christina (AG) [GrossiC@michigan.gov]
Sent: 7/28/2022 5:30:04 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Bagley, Nick [BagleyN1@michigan.gov]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sargent, Aubrey (AG) [SargentA1@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; 'katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org' [katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; 'caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org' [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; 'kk@isdglobal.org' [kk@isdglobal.org]; 'jdc@isdglobal.org' [jdc@isdglobal.org]; 'janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org' [janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; 'lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org' [lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; McCann, Amber (AG) [McCannA@michigan.gov]
CC: Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS) [SittsJ@michigan.gov]; Teegardin, Rachel [TeegardinR1@michigan.gov]; Hill, Darryl (MDOS) [HillD16@michigan.gov]; Rollow, Jake (MDOS) [RollowJ@michigan.gov]; Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) [BraterJ@michigan.gov]; Smiley, Melissa (MDOS) [SmileyM1@michigan.gov]; Weare, Jessica [WeareJ@michigan.gov]

Subject: Call re: Presentation on Misinformation
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 8/1/2022 7:30:00 PM
End: 8/1/2022 8:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Required Attendees: Brady, Mike (MDOS); Bagley, Nick; Dax Goldstein; Sargent, Aubrey (AG); Meingast, Heather (AG); Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG); 'katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org'; 'caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org'; 'kk@isdglobal.org'; 'jdc@isdglobal.org'; 'janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org'; lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org; McCann, Amber (AG)
Optional Attendees: Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS); Teegardin, Rachel; Hill, Darryl (MDOS); Rollow, Jake (MDOS); Brater, Jonathan (MDOS); Smiley, Melissa (MDOS); Weare, Jessica

---

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer or mobile app
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, Pontiac
Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/18/2023 1:15:00 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Michigan law on unqualified presidential candidates
Attachments: MI Law re Unqualified Presidential Candidates.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/19/2023 6:38:51 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: admissions

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

These look great. Thank you so much.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 2:32:26 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: admissions

Let me know if these are ok.

H

From: MeingastH@michigan.gov <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 2:30 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Scan To Me

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/22/2023 4:43:04 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 14.3 Client update

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/21/2023 8:20:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 14A disqualification clause litigation tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/19/2023 9:04:53 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Fwd: Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification -- PRIVILEGED
Attachments: Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification Analysis.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Here is the 9/15 memo.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Jonathan Williams
Sent: Friday, September 15, 2023 3:30:02 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Subject: Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification -- PRIVILEGED

Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/25/2023 7:21:11 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks, Heather. I don't think the complaint made it through with this email.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, September 25, 2023 at 3:01 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

SOS was served 9/22.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Monday, September 25, 2023 2:49 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: FW: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue
Importance: High

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:27 PM
To: AG-HeadsUpExec <AG-HeadsUpExec@michigan.gov>
Cc: Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue
Importance: High

Hi Dana,

Robert Davis has filed an action in the Court of Claims seeking declaratory and mandamus relief against the Secretary. The first four counts deal with resolving which date the presidential primary must be held on (new February date or old March date), and whether the Secretary has the authority to disqualify Trump from the presidential primary ballot (or possible any other ballot) due to his alleged ineligibility under the 14th Amendment's insurrection clause. In his other two counts, he alleges the Secretary did not file the required bond before taking office and he seeks to compel the Secretary to promulgate rules for the electronic processing of military and overseas ballots. See MCL 168.759a(17). DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/25/2023 7:31:55 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Got it!

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, September 25, 2023 at 3:31 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

---

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, September 25, 2023 3:21 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks, Heather. I don't think the complaint made it through with this email.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, September 25, 2023 at 3:01 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue

SOS was served 9/22.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Monday, September 25, 2023 2:49 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: FW: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue
Importance: High

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:27 PM
To: AG-HeadsUpExec <AG-HeadsUpExec@michigan.gov>
Cc: Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: HEADS UP - Davis v Benson - Court of Claims No. 23-000128 (Redford, J.) - 14th Amend issue
Importance: High

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Hi Dana,

Robert Davis has filed an action in the Court of Claims seeking declaratory and mandamus relief against the Secretary. The first four counts deal with resolving which date the presidential primary must be held on (new February date or old March date), and whether the Secretary has the authority to disqualify Trump from the presidential primary ballot (or possible any other ballot) due to his alleged ineligibility under the 14th Amendment's insurrection clause. In his other two counts, he alleges the Secretary did not file the required bond before taking office and he seeks to compel the Secretary to promulgate rules for the electronic processing of military and overseas ballots. See MCL 168.759a(17).

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/22/2023 7:02:11 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]

Subject: ISL call

Start: 9/25/2023 6:30:00 PM
End: 9/25/2023 7:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Jonathan to call Heather

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/25/2023 11:35:29 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Stefanie Lambert opinion
Attachments: Fulton County Opinion.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

It was good to speak with you this afternoon. Here's the special master's report from September 15 in County of Fulton v. Secretary of the Commonwealth. Based on the timing of the decision, I think you may already have the opinion. The opinion concerns appointment of an escrow agent to hold voting equipment in the case, and mentions Stefanie Lambert in various portions of the opinion.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE COMMONWEALTH COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA

County of Fulton, Fulton County Board of Elections, Stuart L. Ulsh, in his official capacity as County Commissioner of Fulton County and in his capacity as a resident, taxpayer and elector in Fulton County, and Randy H. Bunch, in his official capacity as County Commissioner of Fulton County and in his capacity as a resident, taxpayer and elector of Fulton County, Petitioners/Appellees	:	No. 277 M.D. 2021 No. 3 MAP 2022
v.	:
Secretary of the Commonwealth, Respondent/Appellant	:

BEFORE: HONORABLE RENÉE COHN JUBELIRER,
President Judge of the Commonwealth Court
Appointed as Special Master

OPINION NOT REPORTED

MEMORANDUM OPINION BY PRESIDENT JUDGE COHN JUBELIRER FILED: September 15, 2023

This matter returns to the undersigned, in her continued role as Special Master,[1] for purposes of appointing "a neutral third-party escrow agent to take and retain possession of the voting equipment" at issue in this case. County of Fulton v. Sec'y of the Commonwealth, 292 A.3d 974, 1020 (Pa. 2023) (Fulton I).

[1] County of Fulton v. Sec'y of the Commonwealth (Pa., No. 3 MAP 2022, filed 10/21/2022).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. INTRODUCTION

A detailed background and procedural history of this matter is recounted fully in Fulton I and is incorporated by reference herein. By way of brief summary, this case initiated on August 18, 2022, when the County of Fulton, Fulton County Board of Elections, and Fulton County Commissioners Stuart L. Ulsh and Randy H. Bunch, (collectively, Fulton County or County) filed a Petition for Review in the Commonwealth Court's original jurisdiction against the Secretary of the Commonwealth (Secretary), challenging the Secretary's decertification of Voting Equipment[2] manufactured by Dominion Voting Systems, Inc. (Dominion) and used by the County in the 2020 General Election.[3] The Secretary decertified the Voting Equipment in Fulton County's possession after the County permitted a third-party consultant known as Wake TSI, Inc. to inspect the Voting Equipment in December 2020. Fulton County's five-count Petition for Review raises various questions involving, inter alia, the division of authority between the Secretary and county boards of elections as it relates to the certification and inspection of voting equipment under the Pennsylvania Election Code.[4]

In December 2021, and January 2022, while the County's Petition for Review remained pending, the Secretary filed two applications indicating that he learned that Fulton County planned to move forward with another third-party inspection of the

---

[2] As used herein, the term "Voting Equipment" refers to all electronic voting equipment manufactured by Dominion Voting Systems, Inc. (Dominion) and used by or in possession of the County, which Voting Equipment is described in the April 1, 2019 Voting System and Managed Services Agreement between Dominion and the County. (See Sec'y Ex. 34.01 (Voting System and Managed Services Agreement, previously admitted during contempt proceeding as Sec'y Ex. 12.01).)

[3] See generally County of Fulton v. Sec'y of the Commonwealth, 276 A.3d 846 (Pa. Cmwlth. 2022) (describing the underlying Petition for Review and overruling preliminary objections to same).

[4] Act of June 3, 1937, P.L. 1333, as amended, 25 P.S. §§ 2601-3591.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Voting Equipment and asking the Commonwealth Court for a protective order to enjoin the same. The Secretary asserted that a protective order was necessary, as an additional inspection would irreparably spoliate key evidence central to the claims set forth in the County's Petition for Review. By order dated January 14, 2022, the Commonwealth Court denied the Secretary's request for a protective order, which the Secretary immediately appealed to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Ancillary to that appeal, the Secretary moved for an emergency stay of the Commonwealth Court's January 14, 2022 order, which was granted by a Single-Justice Order that same day, and thereafter confirmed by the full Supreme Court on January 27, 2022 (collectively, Injunction Order).

Several months later, on October 18, 2022, the Secretary filed an application in the Supreme Court requesting an order holding Fulton County in contempt and imposing sanctions, alleging that the County violated the Supreme Court's Injunction Order by allowing another third party known as Speckin Forensics, LLC to inspect the Voting Equipment on July 13 and 14, 2022, nearly six months after the Injunction Order was issued.

By order dated October 21, 2022, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court appointed the undersigned to serve as Special Master to prepare a report and recommendation concerning the Secretary's request for contempt and sanctions. On November 18, 2022, following a multi-day hearing, the Special Master submitted her report and recommendations to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. On April 19, 2023, the Supreme Court issued an opinion and order adjudicating Fulton County in contempt, imposing sanctions, and ordering impoundment of the Voting Equipment with a neutral third-party escrow agent until further order of Commonwealth Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1020. Regarding impoundment, the Supreme Court stated as follows:

> we direct the parties to confer and agree on a neutral third-party escrow agent to take and retain possession of the voting equipment until further order of court, and we direct the Special Master to see that this task is completed—and to appoint a neutral agent if the parties cannot agree on one. The County is responsible for all costs associated with the impoundment.

Id.

Through this opinion and order, the Special Master discharges her duty to appoint a neutral third-party escrow agent to take and retain possession of the Voting Equipment until further court order.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A. Attempts to Agree on a Neutral Third-Party Escrow Agent

In accordance with the directives in Fulton I, the Special Master issued an order dated April 28, 2023, directing the parties to, inter alia, file a joint report advising of the status of the parties' negotiations to select a neutral third-party escrow agent no later than May 30, 2023.

The parties complied, and the Special Master received a joint status report on May 30, 2023. (Parties' First Joint Status Report, filed 5/30/2023.) Therein, the parties reported that by letter dated May 23, 2023, the Secretary and Dominion[5] had advised Fulton County of their joint proposal of Pro V&V, an entity accredited by the United States Election Assistance Commission (EAC) as a Voting System Test Laboratory (VSTL), to be appointed as the escrow agent in this matter. The status report further indicated that on May 30, 2023, the day the joint status report was due, [5] Dominion has successfully intervened as a party in this matter. See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 985 n.50.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fulton County had replied to the Secretary and Dominion by letter, noting a number of concerns with the appointment of Pro V&V, and offering an alternative choice, Auld & Associates Investigations. As the parties had not had the opportunity to discuss Fulton County's May 30, 2023 letter, they jointly sought an extension to submit a further status report no later than June 14, 2023. By order dated June 2, 2023, the Special Master granted the parties additional time to confer and directed a further joint status report no later than June 14, 2023.

On June 14, 2023, the parties again advised the Special Master that they had not yet agreed on an appropriate escrow agent and asked for another two-week extension to continue discussions. (Parties' Second Joint Status Report, filed 6/14/2023.) The Special Master agreed and ordered a subsequent status report no later than June 28, 2023.

The parties timely filed their third joint status report indicating that again, they were unable to agree on an escrow agent. (Parties' Third Joint Status Report, filed 6/28/2023.) The parties jointly proposed that on or before July 19, 2023, they file either (a) a joint status report indicating they reached an agreement on the escrow agent, or (b) separate requests to appoint each party's escrow agent of choice, in the event no agreement could be reached. The Special Master agreed and ordered a joint status report or separate proposals no later than July 19, 2023.

On July 18, 2023, the Secretary filed an application seeking a two-day extension of the July 19, 2023 deadline, noting that it had recently identified another entity, Insurance Evidence Solutions (IES), that could potentially serve as an alternative to Pro V&V, and requesting additional time for the parties to confer. The filing stated that Dominion agreed to the two-day extension, but Fulton County requested nine days to consider IES as an alternative proposal. The Special Master agreed to grant the parties nine additional days to discuss the possibility of IES serving as escrow agent, and ordered either a joint status report indicating agreement, or separate proposals, no later than July 28, 2023. On July 28, 2023, the Special Master received separate applications from the parties proposing their preferred third-party escrow agent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary and Dominion jointly proposed that the Special Master select Pro V&V.[6] Fulton County proposed an entity called Cerberus Dynamic Solutions (Cerberus). The County requested an evidentiary hearing on the appointment of an escrow agent.

The Special Master notes that the Supreme Court's remand of the impoundment issue did not expressly contemplate an evidentiary hearing, but rather directed negotiations by the parties and for the Special Master "to appoint a neutral agent if the parties cannot agree on one." Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1020; accord id. at 1012 (entrusting "exclusive authority to end or modify the impoundment to the judge presiding over the underlying Petition for Review after the impoundment is completed under the supervision of the Special Master" (emphasis added)). Although the Special Master could have appointed an escrow agent without taking additional evidence, the Special Master, in her discretion and in the interest of procedural fairness, indulged the County's request for a hearing.

B. Scheduling of Evidentiary Hearing; Prehearing Filings

Following review of the parties' separate proposals, the Special Master issued an order scheduling an evidentiary hearing for purposes of the Special Master's appointment of a neutral third-party escrow agent for Monday, August 28, 2023. In order to most efficiently and expeditiously appoint an escrow agent to take control of the Voting Equipment, the scheduling order specifically set forth the following pre-hearing deadlines:

[6] In the Secretary's July 28, 2023 proposal recommending the Special Master appoint Pro V&V, he clarified that IES had withdrawn itself from consideration to serve as escrow agent in this matter. (See Secy's Application to Appoint Escrow Agent, filed 7/28/2023, at 2 n.1.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 2. No later than Monday, August 14, 2023, the parties shall file and serve a list of all witnesses to be called at the hearing with a short offer of proof for each witness, the curriculum vitae and expert report for any expert witness, a list of exhibits, and a brief statement estimating the length of time for presentation of their respective evidence.
>
> 3. No later than Friday, August 18, 2023, the parties shall file and serve all prehearing applications, including, but not limited to, motions in limine and applications for admission pro hac vice, if any. Prehearing applications submitted after this deadline will not be considered. Absent a timely application for admission pro hac vice, counsel not admitted to practice in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will not be permitted to participate in the hearing or sit at counsel table.
>
> 4. The parties shall file and serve answers, if any, to all prehearing applications no later than Monday, August 21, 2023. Answers submitted after this deadline will not be considered.
>
> 5. No extensions or continuances of any of the above deadlines shall be granted absent extraordinary circumstances.

(Special Master's Order, 8/3/2023 ¶¶ 2-5 (emphasis in original).)

The parties timely filed their witness and exhibit lists on August 14, 2023,[7] and various prehearing applications by August 18, 2023. Among the timely filed applications were Fulton County's "Motion to Appear Pro Hac Vice, Consent to

[7] While Fulton County's witness list is timestamped as filed at 12:31 a.m. on August 15, 2023, the Special Master excused Fulton County's de minimis untimeliness and so considered the witness list timely filed. (See Special Master's Memorandum & Order on Secretary's Motion in Limine No. 1 (To Exclude the Witness Testimony Proffered by Petitioners and Preclude Vexatious, Obdurate, Dilatory, and Bad-Faith Litigation Conduct), 8/24/2023 ¶ 1.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Designation, and Request to Electronically Receive Notice of Electronic Filing", and Fulton County's Motion to Stay Proceedings, which are discussed in turn.[8, 9]

Thomas J. Carroll (Attorney Carroll), counsel for Fulton County, timely filed a motion seeking the admission of Russell A. Newman, Esq. (Attorney Newman), a member of the Tennessee State Bar, to appear before the Special Master in these proceedings pro hac vice. Due to technical defects, the Special Master denied the motion without prejudice for the County to file an amended motion for admission pro hac vice that conformed to the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure. (Special Master's Order, 8/21/2023.) The following day, Attorney Carroll filed an amended motion for Attorney Newman's admission, which was met by technical and substantive objections from the Secretary and Dominion. The Special Master again denied the amended motion without prejudice on the basis of continued technical

---

[8] The Special Master also received the following pre-hearing applications:

a. Secretary's Application for Permission for Michael Walker to Testify Remotely Via Videoconference at the Evidentiary Hearing Scheduled for August 28, 2023; granted by order dated 8/23/2023.

b. Dominion's Objection to Fulton County's Witness List; denied by memorandum and order dated 8/24/2023.

c. Secretary's Motion in Limine No. 1 (to Exclude the Witness Testimony Proffered by Petitioners and Preclude Vexatious Obdurate, Dilatory, and Bad-Faith Litigation Conduct); granted in part and denied in part by memorandum and order dated 8/24/2023.

d. Secretary's Motion in Limine No. 2 (to Qualify Ryan Macias as an Expert in Election Technology and Security); granted by order dated 8/23/2023.

e. Secretary's Motion in Limine No. 3 (to Admit Certain Government Records into Evidence); granted by order dated 8/23/2023.

f. Fulton County's Objection to Dominion's Witness List; granted in part and denied in part without prejudice by memorandum and order dated 8/24/2023.

[9] Following review of the parties' filings, the Special Master scheduled a pre-hearing telephone conference for Wednesday, August 23, 2023, at 1:00 p.m., for the limited purpose of "discussing the necessity, if any, of a third-party escrow agent's expertise and experience specific to election security, as opposed to expertise and experience specific to the security of physical evidence held in the normal course of litigation." (Special Master's Orders, 8/21/2023, 8/22/2023.) During the pre-hearing conference, the Secretary explained his intention to establish the need for such expertise through testimony at the hearing.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

defects and indicated that she would consider the Secretary and Dominion's substantive objections to Attorney Newman's proposed admission in the event a conforming second amended motion was filed. (Special Master's Order, 8/22/2023.) On August 23, 2023, the Special Master received a technically conforming second amended motion seeking Attorney Newman's admission.

The Secretary and Dominion objected to Attorney Newman's admission, citing Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 1012.1(e), which grants a court discretion to deny admission of counsel pro hac vice upon a finding of good cause. Pa.R.Civ.P. 1012.1(e). The rule explains that good cause exists when "the admission may be detrimental to the prompt, fair and efficient administration of justice," or "the admission may be detrimental to legitimate interests of the parties to the proceedings other than the client whom the candidate proposes to represent[.]" Id. The Secretary and Dominion questioned whether Attorney Newman's admission would promote the prompt, fair, and efficient administration of justice in the instant proceedings, given his past litigation history as it relates to Dominion.[10] Dominion also raised questions surrounding Attorney Carroll's fitness to provide the supervision required of a sponsoring attorney contemplated in Rule 1012.1(d). After thoughtful consideration of both substantive arguments, the Special Master declined to find that good cause existed to deny Attorney Newman pro hac vice admission under the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure. The Special Master nevertheless clarified that "Attorney Carroll [] shall continue to be responsible as counsel of record for the conduct of this matter on behalf of Fulton County[,]" and that she "expects, and will require, Attorney Carroll to vigorously fulfill his duties as sponsor, and Attorney Newman to abide by the rules of this Court." (Special Master's Order, 8/24/2023 at 1 n.1, 2 ¶ 4.)

[10] (See Dominion's Objection to Motion to Appear Pro Hac Vice of Russell A. Newman ¶ 6 (explaining Attorney Newman's involvement in a past defamation case filed against Dominion).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fulton County also filed a timely prehearing application in the nature of a Motion to Stay Proceedings.[11] In the motion, Fulton County averred that it had filed a Petition for Writ of Certiorari in the United States Supreme Court (No. 23-96) on May 27, 2023, which challenged, inter alia, the Supreme Court's decision in Fulton I to impound the Voting Equipment with a third-party escrow agent. Fulton County asked the Special Master to stay the upcoming impoundment proceedings in order to give the United States Supreme Court the opportunity to rule on the petition. By order dated August 23, 2023, the Special Master denied the County's request to stay, noting that Fulton County failed to cite any procedural rule or authority to support its request for stay.[12] The Special Master advised that she would "proceed as directed by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, unless otherwise directed by the Supreme Court of the United States." (Special Master's Order, 8/23/2023.)

C. Evidentiary Hearing

The Special Master conducted a three-day evidentiary hearing, which convened at 9:00 a.m.[13] on August 28, 2023. The County immediately requested an adjournment. Attorney Newman, appearing solo on behalf of the County, advised the Special Master that Attorney Carroll had filed an emergency motion to adjourn proceedings due to an alleged injury. Attorney Newman orally explained that over [11] The Motion to Stay Proceedings was Fulton County's first request to delay the impoundment proceedings.

---

[12] Absent from the County's Motion to Stay Proceedings was any explanation as to why this request was filed 15 days after the Special Master scheduled the impoundment hearing. (Special Master's Order, 8/3/2023.)

[13] In an effort to receive witness testimony expeditiously, the Special Master rescheduled the evidentiary hearing to begin at 9:00 a.m., as opposed to 10:00 a.m., on August 28, 2023. (See Special Master's 8/23/2023 Order ¶ 1.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the weekend, Attorney Carroll "fell down the stairs," went to an urgent care facility, and was instructed to go to the emergency room where he was diagnosed with a broken rib and prescribed narcotic medication, "which prevents him from being able to drive." (8/28 Tr. at 8-9, 15.) The Secretary opposed the last-minute request to adjourn and asked the Special Master to proceed with the hearing as scheduled, noting (1) the presence of noticed and subpoenaed witnesses in the courtroom; (2) the County's "long history" of attempting to delay prior proceedings before the Special Master and the Supreme Court in this matter; (3) the existence of alternative counsel to appear on behalf of the County, specifically James Stein, Esq. (Attorney Stein), who remains counsel of record in this matter; and (4) the Special Master's admission of Attorney Newman pro hac vice on behalf of the County. (Id. at 10-15.)

In response, Attorney Newman insisted that Attorney Carroll's absence necessitated an adjournment, as the law requires a local sponsoring attorney to be present at all proceedings. (Id. at 15.) Attorney Newman also cited concerns that, without Attorney Carroll, his clients would be deprived of their counsel of choice. (Id. at 17.) The Special Master reviewed Fulton County's "Emergency Motion to Adjourn Proceedings," timestamped as filed at 8:01 a.m. on August 28, 2023, 59 minutes before the start of the impoundment proceedings.[14] The filing did not reference a fall down the stairs, but provided that on August 26, 2023, two days before the scheduled hearing, Attorney Carroll went to an urgent care facility complaining of severe right upper quadrant abdominal pain, and was sent to the emergency room, where he was diagnosed with a broken rib and infection and prescribed opioid medication and an antibiotic. (Fulton County's Emergency [14] The Emergency Motion to Adjourn Proceedings was Fulton County's second request to delay the impoundment proceedings.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Motion to Adjourn Proceedings ¶¶ 1-3.) The opioid medication contained warnings not to drive or operate machinery. (Id. ¶ 3.) In the filing, Attorney Carroll stated that he continued to be in significant pain and could not be available for the impoundment hearing, attaching in support a redacted after-visit summary from the emergency room and a doctor's note advising that he may return to work on Wednesday, August 30, 2023. (Id. ¶ 5, Exs. A, B.) The Emergency Motion to Adjourn Proceedings did not contain any indication of why Attorney Carroll waited until 59 minutes before the start of the evidentiary hearing to advise the Special Master and the other parties of his condition.

The Special Master heard brief oral argument on the issue of whether a pro hac vice attorney may proceed in a Pennsylvania court without the presence of the sponsoring attorney. Citing Pennsylvania Bar Admission Rule 301,[15] Attorney Newman argued that an attorney admitted pro hac vice is not authorized to act as attorney of record in the case. (8/28 Tr. at 21-23); Pa. B.A.R. 301. He also argued, more generally, that Fulton County is entitled to have Attorney Carroll, their attorney of choice who is more familiar with the proceedings, present. (8/28 Tr. at 24-25.)

The Secretary responded that Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 1012.1(d)(1)[16] more specifically addresses the issue at hand and allows a court to [15] Rule 301(a) provides, in relevant part:

---

> An attorney, barrister or advocate who is qualified to practice in the courts of another state or of a foreign jurisdiction may be specially admitted to the bar of this Commonwealth for purposes limited to a particular case. An attorney, barrister or advocate admitted pro hac vice in a case shall not thereby be authorized to act as attorney of record in the case.

Pa. B.A.R. 301(a).

[16] Rule 1012.1(d)(1) provides, in relevant part:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

excuse the attendance of a sponsoring attorney at court proceedings. (8/28 Tr. at 25-26); Pa.R.Civ.P. 1012.1(d)(1). The Secretary also noted that the Supreme Court's decision in Fulton I referenced this precise rule in connection with a similar scenario where Attorney Carroll sought to delay proceedings before that Court. (8/28 Tr. at 27-32); Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 991 n.69.[17]

The Special Master issued an order denying Fulton County's First Emergency Motion to Adjourn. (Special Master's Order, 8/28/2023.) Therein, the Special Master excused Attorney Carroll's physical presence in the courtroom in accordance with the carve-out in Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 1012.1(d)(1). (Id.)

> The sponsor shall enter an appearance as attorney of record in the action on behalf of the party whom the candidate seeks to represent. Upon the motion being granted, the sponsor shall remain the attorney of record for that party, and shall sign and serve, or be served with as the case may be, all notices, orders, pleadings or other papers filed in the action, and shall attend all proceedings before the court unless excused by the court. . . .

Pa.R.Civ.P. 1012.1(d)(1).

[17] As noted by counsel for the Secretary, the Supreme Court in Fulton I addressed a similar situation where Attorney Carroll filed a Motion to Adjourn Oral Argument two days before it was scheduled. In that motion, Attorney Carroll "assert[ed] emergent personal reasons that allegedly prevented him from 'prepar[ing] for oral argument . . . and/or associat[ing] other counsel as a substitute this close to the time for the presentation of oral argument.'" Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 991. In the accompanying footnote, the Supreme Court stated:

> Attorney Carroll had not yet informed this Court that Attorney [Stefanie] Lambert was his co-counsel, nor had he sought her admission pro hac vice below or in this Court. Although the rules governing pro hac vice representation direct that the sponsoring attorney must be in attendance at all court proceedings in connection with the representation, that requirement is qualified by a carve-out when sponsoring counsel is "excused by court." See Pa.R.Civ.P. 1012.1(d)(1). This is not to say that we would have granted such a request. But, had Attorney Lambert been admitted pro hac vice, it would have given Attorney Carroll a good-faith alternative to filing a disfavored, last-minute request for a continuance reflecting no contingency planning.

Id. at 991 n.69 (emphasis added). Thus, the Supreme Court contemplated the possibility of pro hac vice counsel appearing without sponsoring counsel in situations like the one sub judice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nevertheless, the Special Master continued the hearing to 1:00 p.m. on that same day to allow Attorney Newman time to prepare and to select one of the following options: (1) for Attorney Carroll to appear via WebEx in order to accommodate his driving restriction; (2) for Attorney Stein to appear in person or via WebEx; or (3) for any other attorney licensed to practice in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to enter an appearance and appear as counsel before the Special Master. (Id.)

Fulton County chose the first option, and Attorney Carroll appeared remotely, audio only, via WebEx when the hearing reconvened at 1:00 p.m.[18] Immediately, Attorney Newman orally moved the Special Master for a stay of the proceedings[19] "to permit the Petitioners to appeal [the Special Master's Order denying the First Emergency Motion] to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court."[20] (8/28 Tr. at 43-44.) The Special Master denied Attorney Newman's oral request from the bench, and the Secretary proceeded with his first witness at approximately 1:56 p.m., nearly five hours after the hearing was originally scheduled to begin.[21] (Id. at 45-46.)

---

[18] At the outset of the hearing and continuing throughout, Attorney Carroll regularly interjected in his remote capacity to advise the Special Master that the medication he was taking affected his ability to focus and prevented him from "functioning at a level that would be appropriate [] to represent clients." (8/28 Tr. at 40, 41.) The Special Master notes that she proceeded with the hearing over these objections in order to carry out her duty to appoint an escrow agent as directed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in Fulton I, and only after offering several options, including the appearance of other counsel of record, to the County. (See Special Master's 8/28/2023 Order; 8/23 Tr. at 41.)

Moreover, the Special Master notes that while Attorney Carroll purported to be suffering from side effects of his medication, he actively participated in the hearing, (see generally, 8/28 Tr.), took a call from "another attorney on another case" due to a filing deadline, (id. at 197), and managed to file a 27-page "Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same" in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court by 3:40 p.m. See infra pp. 15-16, n.23. For these reasons, the Special Master is satisfied that Fulton County was not effectively deprived of their right counsel, but rather chose Attorney Carroll to represent them despite his medical condition.

[19] Attorney Newman's oral request for stay was Fulton County's third request to delay the impoundment proceedings.

[20] To date, Fulton County has not filed an appeal of the Special Master's August 28, 2023 Order.

[21] The testimony and evidence presented at the hearing are summarized in Part III, infra.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As the Secretary's presentation of witnesses continued, during the testimony of Commissioner Paula Shives, Attorney Carroll remotely interrupted the proceedings, saying "[c]an you hear me Ste[f]anie?" (Id. at 237.) When the Special Master later asked Attorney Carroll to identify the person to whom he was speaking, Attorney Carroll responded that he asked his mother, who was in the same room, "can you hear what they're saying about Ste[f]anie." (Id. at 243.) He further explained that he thought his remote connection was muted and he "was actually just venting." (Id.)

At 3:40 p.m. Fulton County filed an "Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same" in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, renewing its request for stay that the Special Master denied by order dated August 23, 2023.[22] Therein, the County sought an emergency stay of the impoundment proceedings, which were, at the time of the filing, underway. Notably, the County did not base its renewed request for stay on Attorney Carroll's medical condition, but rather alleged it would suffer irreparable harm "should tax funds be utilized to hold a hearing to place its election equipment in the custody of a third-party vendor which will result in the data on the equipment being deleted or destroyed." (Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same at 25.) The County asked the Pennsylvania Supreme Court to stay the evidentiary hearing pending a decision from the United States Supreme Court on Fulton County's Petition for Writ [22] The Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same was Fulton County's fourth request to delay the impoundment proceedings, and the first that was directed to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Certiorari challenging the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's decision in Fulton I. (Id.)[23]

On August 29, 2023, the day prior to the scheduled second hearing day, Fulton County filed an "Emergency Application for Reconsideration Regarding Emergency Application for Stay"[24] asking the Pennsylvania Supreme Court for an immediate ruling on its August 28, 2023 emergency application, asserting that relief ignored is the equivalent of relief denied.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court did not act, and the hearing reconvened on Wednesday, August 30, 2023, at 9:00 a.m. at which Attorney Carroll appeared in person. Near the conclusion of this second day, for purposes of scheduling, the Special Master asked Fulton County to identify the witnesses it planned to call on the final day of the hearing. Attorney Newman responded that it planned to call Joseph J. Sabia and Benjamin Cotton, but also indicated that the County "ha[d] some people from the EAC who have been subpoenaed as well as the Dominion [Chief Executive Officer (CEO)] . . . ." (8/30 Tr. at 458.)[25] This proffer prompted [23] While Fulton County styled the filing to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court as an "emergency" the Special Master emphasizes that the filing did not reference Attorney Carroll's medical condition, but instead repeated the same argument for stay that the Special Master denied by order issued August 23, 2023, i.e., that the County will suffer harm if the impoundment hearing proceeds before the United States Supreme Court has the opportunity to rule on the County's Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

---

It is unclear why this request was made on an emergency basis, when the County filed for certiorari in the United States Supreme Court on May 27, 2023, knew that an impoundment hearing was proceeding as of August 3, 2023, and was previously denied a stay on this requested basis on August 23, 2023.

[24] The Emergency Application for Reconsideration Regarding Emergency Application for Stay was Fulton County's fifth request to delay the impoundment proceedings, and the second that was directed to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

[25] On August 18, 2023, Dominion filed an Objection to Fulton County's Witness List seeking to strike the identification of, and preclude all testimony by, John Poulos, Founding President and CEO of Dominion. The filing noted that Fulton County had not served a notice to attend on counsel for Dominion requiring Mr. Poulos to appear, but asked the Court to quash any objections from the Secretary and Dominion regarding whether the County had properly served notices to appear and/or subpoenas on the EAC witnesses and Dominion's CEO in accordance with the Special Master's August 25, 2023 service deadline and in conformance with the service requirements set forth in the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure. The Special Master asked Fulton County's counsel to provide proof of timely and proper service of said notices to attend and subpoenas, but Attorney Carroll, citing his health situation, advised he did not have that information with him and could only address that issue the following morning. (Id. at 463.) Accordingly, the Special Master advised the parties that the witness issue would be dealt with preliminarily the following day. (Id. at 464-65.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The third and final day of the hearing convened on August 31, 2023, at 9:00 a.m., and began with an oral motion to continue proceedings from Attorney Newman, representing that his wife had gone into labor.[26] (8/31 Tr. at 8.) Attorney Newman maintained that a continuance was necessary as he had prepared to conduct direct examination of the County's witnesses scheduled to testify that day and Attorney Carroll was not prepared to do the same in his absence.[27] (Id. at 9.)

---

future notice that is properly served. By memorandum and order dated August 24, 2023, the Special Master denied Dominion's request without prejudice for Dominion to challenge any properly served notice to attend by appropriate motion. (See Special Master's Memorandum & Order, 8/24/2023.) On August 25, 2023, Dominion filed a separate Application to Quash, averring that no notice to attend had yet been served on counsel for Dominion and requesting quashal of "any Notice to Attend" that might be served on Dominion after the close of business on August 25, 2023, regarding Mr. Poulos's "participation in the August 28 hearing." Dominion Application to Quash at 1 & Wherefore Clause. At the end of the evidentiary hearing, the Special Master observed that no notice to attend had apparently been served on Dominion, and no motion to compel compliance with such notice was ever filed. (See 8/31 Tr. at 342-43; infra n.33.) Accordingly, the Special Master will dismiss Dominion's Application to Quash as moot.

[26] Attorney Newman's oral request for continuance was Fulton County's sixth request to delay the impoundment proceedings.

[27] In response, the Secretary noted, first, that it was learning of Attorney Newman's wife's labor simultaneously with the Special Master, and second, that on the first day of the hearing,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Alternatively, Attorney Newman proposed he leave the courtroom and conduct direct examination of the County's witnesses via video. (Id.) He also clarified that while he had a flight home scheduled for the following morning, September 1, 2023, he had not yet made any immediate travel arrangements. (Id. at 15-17.)

After congratulating Attorney Newman and considering the prejudice of adjourning the hearing on its final day, the Special Master provided the County with four options: (1) for Attorney Newman to continue until required to leave, at which point Attorney Carroll could proceed on behalf of the County; (2) for Attorney Stein, who remained counsel of record for the County, to appear and assist Attorney Carroll in Attorney Newman's absence; (3) for Attorney Newman to appear remotely, if possible, during his travel home; or (4) for the County to rest in the event it did not feel comfortable continuing with the hearing. (Id. at 18-19.)

The County chose to proceed with Attorney Newman. At this same time, the County sought permission for Attorney Carroll to leave the courtroom for additional time to prepare his argument on whether the County had properly served a notice to attend on Dominion's CEO, and subpoenas on the EAC witnesses. The Special Master granted the request and excused Attorney Carroll from the Courtroom. Attorney Carroll never ultimately argued the issue, as Attorney Newman orally requested permission for Attorney Carroll to be excused mid-morning to seek medical attention, which the Special Master granted. (Id. at 100.) The Special Master later discovered that around the same time Attorney Carroll had been excused due to his purportedly worsening medical condition, he filed "Fulton County's Second Emergency Motion for Reconsideration Regarding Order on Fulton

---

Attorney Newman asserted he could not proceed sans Attorney Carroll. Now, Fulton County's counsel was offering the "diametrical representation[]" that Attorney Carroll could not proceed sans Attorney Newman. (8/31 Tr. at 10.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

County's Emergency Motion" in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. (8/31 Tr. at 170-71.)[28]

Later that afternoon, following the cross-examination of the County's witness, Mr. Sabia, Attorney Newman again requested a stay of proceedings "to substitute escrow agents." (Id. at 288.)[29] The Special Master denied the oral request for stay, and the hearing proceeded.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the Special Master read into the record an order from the Pennsylvania Supreme Court issued that afternoon, which provided as follows:

> AND NOW, this 31st day of August, 2023, County of Fulton's Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same; Emergency Application for Reconsideration Regarding Order on Fulton County's Emergency Application for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same; and 2nd Emergency Motion for Reconsideration Regarding Order on Fulton County's Emergency Motion for a Stay Upon Special Master's Denial of Same are DENIED.

(Id. at 349-50 (quoting County of Fulton v. Secretary of the Commonwealth, (Pa., No. 3 MAP 2022, filed 8/31/2023).) Before adjourning, the Special Master granted

---

[28] The Second Emergency Motion for Reconsideration Regarding Order on Fulton County's Emergency Motion was Fulton County's seventh request to delay the impoundment proceedings, and the third that was directed to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

[29] Attorney Newman's oral request for stay was Fulton County's eighth request to delay the impoundment proceedings.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the County's request to file a closing statement on or before Tuesday, September 5, 2023.[30, 31]

On September 5, 2023, Fulton County filed "Closing Arguments and Objections" reasserting its position that Pro V&V would be unfit to serve as escrow agent while continuing to promote its proposed agent, Cerberus. The County also represented that it had subpoenaed Dominion's CEO and the EAC witnesses, but that they refused to appear. (Closing Arguments and Objections at 6-7.) Though the County did not provide evidence that it had in fact subpoenaed Dominion's CEO,[32] the County attached a letter from the EAC indicating that the EAC had received subpoenas via mail on Monday, August 28, 2023, but that the EAC would not comply with said subpoenas as they were improperly served. (Id., Unmarked Ex. (EAC E-mail).) In its conclusion, the County stated:

> without the compelled testimony, Fulton County will be deprived of its rights to substantive and procedural due process because it will be deprived of the right to examine these witnesses, whose testimony bears directly on the propriety of having the conflicted party, Pro V&V take control and custody of the Dominion Voting Machines.

---

[30] This request was granted largely in response to Attorney Newman's statement that he needed to discuss whether his clients continued to propose Cerberus as an appropriate escrow agent following the cross-examination of Mr. Sabia. See infra pp. 42-43. The Special Master also permitted the other parties to file closing statements, but clarified they were under no obligation to do so.

[31] The Special Master notes, finally, that the County filed an application for stay in the United States Supreme Court on August 31, 2023. (No. 23-96, filed 8/31/2023.) The United States Supreme Court denied Fulton County's application for stay on September 12, 2023. (Id., filed 9/12/2023.)

[32] The County baldly asserts that "Dominion alleges they did not receive service. But they did receive the subpoena." (Closing Arguments and Objections at 7.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(Id. at 9.) Notably, the County never filed a request or moved orally for the Special Master to compel Dominion's CEO or the EAC witnesses to appear,[33] and failed to adduce any evidence that those witnesses had been properly served with subpoenas.

D. Regarding County's Dilatory Conduct

Before summarizing the testimony and documentary evidence adduced at the hearing, the Special Master must address her deep concerns regarding the County's attorneys' continuous pattern of dilatory conduct throughout the impoundment proceedings. As detailed above, the County moved, either orally or in writing, to delay the impoundment proceedings no fewer than eight times. These repeated requests, which were regularly accompanied by varying and sometimes conflicting justifications, required the Special Master to take numerous recesses, delayed witness testimonies, and impaired the overall expediency and efficiency of the proceedings.

Unfortunately, this conduct is not novel to the impoundment proceedings, but has remained consistent in this litigation since the undersigned's appointment as Special Master. The Special Master finds this continued behavior particularly disconcerting, as the Pennsylvania Supreme Court sanctioned the County and Attorney Carroll for a nearly identical pattern of behavior that took place during the contempt proceedings before the Special Master in November 2022. See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 979 ("Fulton County and its various attorneys have engaged in a sustained, deliberate pattern of dilatory, obdurate, and vexatious conduct and have [33] On the final day of the hearing, Attorney Newman orally advised that it had "come to [his] attention that a motion to compel has been filed against Dominion and the Secretary to produce their witnesses." (8/31 Tr. at 341.) Attorney Newman did not present a copy of the alleged motion and admitted he had not seen it, citing his lack of access to the Court's electronic filing system; he clarified that it was "[his] understanding that a motion to compel was filed." (Id. at 324.) No motion to compel was ever docketed.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

acted in bad faith throughout these sanction proceedings. Taken as a whole, this behavior prompts us to sanction both the County and Attorney Carroll."). Notwithstanding the Supreme Court's lengthy admonishment of Attorney Carroll's behavior and the imposition of joint and several responsibility for the opposing parties' counsel fees during the period for which Attorney Carroll shared responsibility for the misconduct, see Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1013-19, the County, led again by Attorney Carroll, has persisted in such behavior.

In the face of this unyielding litigation conduct, the Special Master continually sought to provide the County with procedural fairness and the opportunity to be heard by providing the County's attorneys with numerous options in order to proceed with its case through the conclusion of the hearing. These options ranged from permitting last-minute remote appearances, to allowing the County to call on alternative counsel of record, and even retaining new counsel. Because of these accommodations, and despite the County's attorneys' conduct, the impoundment hearing proceeded mostly as scheduled, and the Special Master is satisfied that the evidence of record enables her to discharge her duty to appoint a neutral third-party escrow agent. The Special Master, however, is left with no choice but to explicitly admonish Attorney Carroll for his continued bad-faith litigation conduct and warn Attorney Newman that he proceeds under the sponsorship of Attorney Carroll in these proceedings at his own peril.

III. TESTIMONY AND EVIDENCE

Ryan Macias

The Secretary first presented the testimony of Ryan Macias, whom the Secretary offered and qualified as an expert in the fields of election technology and security.[34] Mr. Macias is the owner and founder of RSM Election Solutions LLC. (8/28 Tr. at 85.) Mr. Macias served as Senior Election Technology Analyst for the California Secretary of State from 2006 to 2016, in which role he assisted with the development and promulgation of regulations governing the certification of companies authorized to hold voting equipment in escrow. (Ex. 1 appended to Sec'y Ex. 5 (Mr. Macias's Curriculum Vitae); 8/28 Tr. at 94-97.) Mr. Macias has also held positions with the EAC, including as its Acting Director of Testing and Certification. (Mr. Macias's Curriculum Vitae at 1-2.) He explained that a VSTL is an entity accredited by the EAC to test voting systems against EAC standards. (8/28 Tr. at 90-91.) Mr. Macias participated in producing the VSTL Program Manual, which contains the standards applicable to the EAC's accreditation of VSTLs. (Id. at 93; see also Sec'y Ex. 11 (VSTL Program Manual, version 2.0, May 31, 2015).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Macias described the process by which the EAC accredits and monitors VSTLs. An applying entity must first obtain accreditation from the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) and the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) regarding laboratory testing and calibration generally, which are not specific to election technology. (8/28 Tr. at 104-06.) Then, the entity applies for accreditation by the EAC. (Id.) Because VSTLs take possession of and test voting equipment on behalf of manufacturers, the applicable EAC standards specifically require impartiality. (Id. at 113-14). The EAC's VSTL program standards prohibit financial conflicts of interest (both for the entity as a whole and for its employees) and perceived conflicts of interest; they also prohibit VSTLs from employing felons or those convicted of offenses involving fraud, misrepresentation,

[34] (See Special Master's 8/23/23 Order (granting the Secretary's Motion in Limine No. 2 to qualify Mr. Macias as an expert and admit his prior testimony offered in the November 2022 contempt hearing); see also Sec'y Ex. 5 (July 28, 2023 Affidavit of Ryan Macias).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

or deception. (Id. at 116-17; Sec'y Ex. 11 (VSTL Program Manual) §§ 2.5-2.8, 2.19.). VSTLs are also accredited for technical competence and the environmental controls of their facilities. (8/28 Tr. at 108.)

Mr. Macias further explained that the ISO, NIST, and the EAC periodically audit accredited entities, including through unannounced site visits, to ensure continued compliance with the accreditation standards. (Id. at 106-09, 118-19.) Mr. Macias opined that Pro V&V's EAC accreditation for impartiality directly bears on its candidacy as a neutral escrow agent as ordered by the Supreme Court. (Id. at 113-14.) He stated that businesses not formally accredited would not be subject to ongoing monitoring for impartiality as VSTLs are. (Id. at 115.)

Mr. Macias testified that Pro V&V is one of two EAC-accredited VSTLs and was first accredited in 2015. (Id. at 100; see also Sec'y Exs. 2 & 7 (Pro V&V Certificates of Accreditation, U.S. Election Assistance Comm'n, issued Feb. 1, 2021, and Dec. 21, 2022, respectively.) During his time as an EAC official, Mr. Macias conducted audits of Pro V&V, including on-site inspections of its facility, to ensure its compliance with the EAC's accreditation requirements. (8/28 Tr. at 98-99.)

Mr. Macias had reviewed the Supreme Court's opinion in Fulton I requiring impoundment of the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 85.) In his expert opinion, Pro V&V is "very qualified" to serve as the escrow agent for several reasons. (Id. at 120-25.) First, Pro V&V's business requires that it remain accredited and audited for impartiality; it thus has a strong business interest in avoiding any violation of impartiality standards that would jeopardize its accreditation. (See id. at 125-26.) Second, Pro V&V has the technical capability to ensure proper environmental storage conditions for the Voting Equipment, including appropriate temperature and humidity levels that prevent corrosion or loss of data. (Id. at 129-34.) Third, Mr. Macias opined, Pro V&V has experience in maintaining and documenting the chain of custody of electronic voting equipment. (Id. at 134-36.) This requires specialized knowledge regarding various seals, locks, and serial numbers present on the Voting Equipment, which are designed to prevent or detect tampering; Pro V&V has the requisite specialized knowledge to understand and properly address those protective measures. (Id. at 136-38.) In order to establish a baseline condition of the Voting Equipment for purposes of recording a chain of custody during escrow, Pro V&V would perform an initial inventory of the Voting Equipment and its locks and seals, determining which seals, if any, are missing or have been broken. (Id.) The relevant locks and seals are analog devices, so the Voting Equipment would not need to be powered on, plugged in, or connected to any external electronic devices during the initial inventory or the remainder of the court-ordered impoundment. (Id. at 86-87, 137-38.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Regarding Pro V&V's cost estimate for the escrow, Mr. Macias explained that that Voting Equipment would require a room about 10 or 12 feet square for storage. (Id. at 150.) Based on his prior experience with storage prices for much smaller pieces of voting equipment, Mr. Macias opined that Pro V&V's monthly storage cost estimate was reasonable and significantly below what he would expect given the size of the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 147-50.)

Finally, Mr. Macias stated that he was not familiar with Cerberus until the County proposed it as an escrow agent. (Id. at 150-51.) Mr. Macias had reviewed Cerberus's website and all other information the County filed in support of its proposal, and he opined that Cerberus is not qualified to serve as escrow agent. (Id. at 151-53.) Mr. Macias explained that Cerberus's experience appears not to relate to election technology, and he noted that the Voting Equipment is designated as critical infrastructure technology by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, which in his opinion requires that any escrow agent have specialized expertise with election technology. (Id. at 153-59.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On cross-examination, Mr. Macias conceded that if a VSTL or its employees had a financial interest in a voting system manufacturer, that would create a conflict of interest that could undermine the VSTL's independence. (Id. at 181-82.) He elaborated that VSTLs are monitored for impartiality to ensure they uniformly apply the EAC's voting system standards to manufacturers, without favoring a manufacturer's interests. (Id. at 251-52.) He acknowledged that Pro V&V's facility is located in Alabama, and that storage closer to Pennsylvania would be more convenient, but only if the Voting Equipment required access on an ongoing basis during the impoundment. (Id. at 188, 191-92.)

Mr. Macias also explained that Pro V&V's EAC accreditation was originally issued on February 24, 2015, and that that accreditation remains effective until revoked by a vote of the EAC pursuant to Section 231 of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA), 52 U.S.C § 20971(c)(2).[35] (Id. at 257-62.) However, Mr. Macias acknowledged that Section 3.6.1.3 of the 2015 VSTL Program Manual states that EAC accreditations expire after a two-year period, and that a previously issued certificate of accreditation for Pro V&V indicated that it was effective only until February 24, 2017, two years from the date of issuance. (8/28 Tr. at 257-69*; see also* Sec'y Ex. 2 at 2.) Mr. Macias descried this conflict between HAVA and the VSTL Program Manual as an "administrative error." (8/28 Tr. at 266-69). He [35] It states, in relevant part: "The accreditation of a laboratory for purposes of this section may not be revoked unless the revocation is approved by a vote of the [EAC]." 52 U.S.C. § 20971(c)(2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

explained that the EAC later clarified that the manual's imposition of a two-year effective period was inconsistent with HAVA, and the EAC considered Pro V&V to have always been accredited and in good standing with the EAC since its initial accreditation in 2015. (Id. at 262, 275, 289-92.)

On redirect examination, Mr. Macias opined that the impoundment would require the ongoing presence of persons nearby the secure location containing the Voting Equipment, in order to detect and prevent unauthorized access to the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 320-22.) Maintenance of the chain of custody for the Voting Equipment during impoundment would require the escrow agent to have experience handling voting technology, so that it could monitor whether tamper-evident seals on the Voting Equipment remained intact; however, securing the room containing the Voting Equipment and monitoring access to that room could obviate the need for any access to the Voting Equipment other than by order of Court. (Id. at 323-25.)

Eldon Martin

The Secretary next[36] presented the testimony of Eldon Martin, a Senior IT Support Technician for Elect IT Solutions, which provides IT services to the County under contract. (8/30 Tr. at 13-17.) Mr. Martin was employed by the County as its Director of Technology from 2008 to 2014; upon leaving County employment and continuing to the present, he served essentially the same functions for the County under its contract with his employer. (Id.) He has performed technical work on the County's voting machines, including employee training and logic and accuracy testing. (Id. at 17-18.) In providing election-related IT services to the County, Mr.

[36] The Secretary presented the testimony of Fulton County Commissioner Paula J. Shives on August 29, 2023, during a break in the cross-examination of Mr. Macias, prior to Mr. Martin's testimony that began on August 30, 2023, in order to accommodate Commissioner Shive's schedule. Commissioner Shives's testimony is summarized infra along with that of the other Commissioners, who testified on August 30, 2023.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Martin has communicated with the Commissioners, Director of Elections Patti Hess, other County employees and employees of his firm, voting system manufacturers, and personnel from the Pennsylvania Department of State. (Id. at 21-30.)

Mr. Martin testified that he was not informed of the July 2022 inspection of the Voting Equipment by Speckin Forensics when it occurred; he first became aware of it several months prior to testifying while reading a news article. (Id. at 41-43.) He testified that he did not become aware of the Supreme Court's order requiring impoundment of the Voting Equipment until the evidentiary hearing began on August 28, 2023. (Id. at 63-64.) He stated he is not familiar with Cerberus or Mr. Sabia, its owner, and that he had no communications with County personnel regarding Cerberus or Mr. Sabia until August 29, 2023, the day before Mr. Martin's testimony. (Id. at 49-57.) During that conversation on August 29, he discussed the storage requirements of the Voting Equipment with Ms. Hess and another employee of his firm. (Id.) Based on that conversation, Mr. Martin stated his belief that neither Ms. Hess nor Mr. Martin's coworker knew the identity of the entity the County had proposed as escrow agent prior to the commencement of the August 28, 2023 evidentiary hearing. (Id. at 62-63.)

Mr. Martin stated he did not know who first suggested Cerberus, or whether the Commissioners had discussed Cerberus. (Id. at 64-66.) He testified that, based on his past experiences working with the County's voting machines, it would be possible that he would have a role in transferring the Voting Equipment to an escrow agent, but no county personnel had communicated with him about that role. (Id. at 66-67.) Mr. Martin searched his email records for documents responsive to the Secretary's subpoena but found none. (Id. at 48-49.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Robert Walker

The Secretary next presented the testimony of Robert Walker, Pro V&V's Program Manager.[37] (8/30 Tr. at 82-83.) Mr. Walker oversees all of Pro V&V's projects and engineers, was primarily responsible for its proposal to provide the impoundment services at issue here, and had reviewed the Supreme Court's opinion requiring impoundment. (Id. at 83-92.) Mr. Walker testified that, if Pro V&V were appointed as escrow agent, he would oversee the escrow services, and Pro V&V would never power on, or connect external devices to, the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 92-93.)

Mr. Walker stated that he is familiar with the Voting Equipment, which consists of 15 Image Case X ballot-marking device components, 2 Image Cast Central components, and 3 Election Management System components. (Id. at 93-95.) He had reviewed the agreement between Dominion and the County that identifies the Voting Equipment, which was admitted into evidence. (Id. at 96-97; see Sec'y Ex. 34.01.)

Mr. Walker explained that, if Pro V&V were selected, two Pro V&V employees would drive to Fulton County to collect the Voting Equipment, record the serial numbers and photograph it, securely package it, and then drive it directly to Pro V&V's sole facility in Huntsville, Alabama, without making other stops. (8/30 Tr. at 97-98.) Pro V&V is familiar with the location of the various seals, locks, and serial numbers on the Voting Equipment, as well as the packaging requirements to transport it safely. (Id. at 103-04.) Pro V&V would store the Voting Equipment in a secure laboratory at its facility, within a single, dedicated room that would [37] Mr. Walker testified remotely via WebEx video conference. See Special Master's 8/23/23 Order (granting Secretary's application requesting leave to present Mr. Walker's testimony remotely).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

contain no other items. (Id. at 104-05.) The building is secured with badge-access doors, interior and exterior security cameras, and interior locked doors to the laboratories within the facility. (Id. at 105-06.) The facility's HVAC system is designed to monitor and maintain precise control over the temperature and humidity in each room. (Id. at 106-07.) Pro V&V could limit access to the secure room containing the Voting Equipment to a single Pro V&V employee; at least one employee would need access in case of a security breach, act of God, water leak, fire, or battery leak from the Voting Equipment itself. (Id. at 108-112.)

Mr. Walker testified that Pro V&V would maintain the chain of custody for the Voting Equipment using a digital record that could be shared with the parties and the Court, as well as a backup physical copy. (Id. at 112-14.) He stated that, if the Court were to order any further testing of the Voting Equipment, Pro V&V has the capability to host such testing at its facility without the need to move the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 114-15.)

Regarding impartiality, Mr. Walker stated that NIST and the EAC audit Pro V&V for impartiality in order to minimize conflicts of interest. (Id. at 116-17.) If a problem occurs during testing, Pro V&V informs the manufacturer and includes the problem in its report, but it does not assist the manufacturer. (Id.) Mr. Walker confirmed that Pro V&V is periodically audited by NIST and the EAC for impartiality. (Id. at 116-17.)

Regarding cost, Mr. Walker stated that Pro V&V would charge $6,640 for pickup of the Voting Equipment, which includes the employees' time traveling to and from Fulton County. (Id. at 118-19.) The same charge would apply when Pro V&V returns the Voting Equipment to Fulton County once the impoundment ends. (Id.) Pro V&V would charge a storage fee of $850 per month. (Id. at 120.; see also

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Sec'y Ex. 43 (Pro V&V's charges for escrow services).) Pro V&V will continue to honor those cost estimates, which were disclosed during the parties' negotiations in May 2023 and have remained unchanged. (See 8/30 Tr. at 120; Secretary's Application to Appoint Escrow Agent, filed July 28, 2023, Ex. 1.; Sec'y Ex. 43.)

On cross-examination, Mr. Walker described Pro V&V's facility as comprising 11 separate laboratories within a single building, each laboratory being independently locked. (8/30 Tr. at 133-34.) Pro V&V leases the real property for its facility from Pro Cog LLC, a distinct corporate entity owned by several Pro V&V employees or officers including Mr. Walker. (Id. at 129-32.) Pro V&V has 12 employees, whom Mr. Walker identified by name. (Id. at 135, 139-40.) Mr. Walker stated that employees of Dominion have been present in Pro V&V's facility and accessed electronic voting machines therein, though not during an active test on the machines. (Id. at 140-43.) Mr. Walker conceded that manufacturers' employees—including employees of Dominion—are permitted to access voting machines to address errors during testing at Pro V&V's facility, provided that testing is halted during their access. (Id. at 148-51.) Pro V&V sometimes contacts a manufacturer when its machine fails a test to allow its employees to correct the error, which is permitted per Pro V&V's testing protocols. (Id. at 153-55.)

Mr. Walker conceded that Clay Parikh performed security testing on voting machines within Pro V&V's facility a single time in 2015 or 2016. (Id. at 144-48.) At the time of the testing, Mr. Parikh worked for a "temp agency" and was not a Pro V&V employee. (Id. at 146.) The entity that employed Mr. Parikh at the time was not accredited by the EAC. (Id. at 261.)

Mr. Walker explained that voting equipment manufacturers, such as Dominion, contract with and pay VSTLs for testing; the VSTL submits a testing report and recommendation to the EAC regarding certification of the equipment. (Id. at 178-80, 182-87.) The price of the contract varies with the size and complexity of the voting system being tested. (Id. at 186-87.) Pro V&V currently has a testing contract with Dominion and has had other recent contracts with Dominion. (Id. at 189-90.) Mr. Walker identified six different election manufacturers with which Pro V&V does business regarding EAC certification, but he was not familiar enough with Pro V&V's finances to estimate the amount of revenue Pro V&V derives from its contracts with Dominion specifically.[38] (Id. at 232, 227-30, 237-38.) None of Pro V&V's employees has previously been employed by Dominion. (Id. at 256.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Walker acknowledged that the VSTL Program Manual provides that EAC accreditation is valid for a period of two years only, but explained Pro V&V's belief that it retained continued good standing with the EAC notwithstanding the manual's language, such that its accreditation has never lapsed. (Id. at 292-96.)

On redirect examination, Mr. Walker testified that it would be possible to install a security camera within the room where the Voting Equipment would be kept, and store the physical key to that room in a lockbox to which only a single Pro V&V employee would have access. (Id. at 305-07.) He stated that all activities by Dominion employees at Pro V&V's facility were conducted in accordance with EAC policies. (Id. at 307.) He also stated that the amount that manufacturers pay Pro V&V pursuant to testing contracts does not depend upon the results of the testing or on whether Pro V&V recommends certification to the EAC. (Id. at 308-09.)

[38] The Special Master sustained a joint objection by Dominion and the Secretary to questions asking Mr. Walker to estimate the amount of revenue Pro V&V derives from its contracts with Dominion, on the basis that Mr. Walker testified he lacks a foundation to answer those questions. (8/30 Tr. at 227-30.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Patricia Hess

The Secretary presented the testimony of Patricia K. Hess, Election Director for the County. (8/30 Tr. at 318.) Ms. Hess stated that, as the person responsible for running the County's elections, she is aware of the location of the Voting Equipment at all times, and oversees logic and accuracy testing and poll worker training regarding the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 319.) Ms. Hess testified that the Voting Equipment has been stored in several different rooms since the 2020 General Election and is now contained in a locked storage room. (Id. at 328-32.) Ms. Hess produced the following documents in accordance with the subpoena the Secretary served on her,[39] which documents the Special Master admitted into evidence: a "Sign in Sheet to Locked Room" recording who had access to the room in which the Voting Equipment was stored (Sec'y Ex. 47); a portion of a ledger titled "Voting Equipment," which Ms. Hess explained she created to make notes regarding access to the Voting Equipment (Sec'y Ex. 48); and a signed document regarding access to the Voting Equipment that was planned for January 14, 2022 (Sec'y Ex. 49). (See 8/30 Tr. at 338-59.)

Ms. Hess has served as the County's Director of Elections since 2020. (Id. at 361.) She had not reviewed the Fulton I decision and only became aware of it through reading the Fulton County News. (Id. at 367-68.) She had never heard of Speckin Forensics (which unlawfully inspected the Voting Equipment in July 2022) until it was mentioned during the instant impoundment hearing, (id. at 359-60), and also had never heard of Cerberus or Mr. Sabia prior to the hearing. (Id. at 361.) She previously discussed the impoundment proceedings with Mr. Martin, but they did not discuss Cerberus because they did not know of it. (Id. at 366-67.) Ms. Hess [39] The Special Master notes that the County did not file any motion to quash or for a protective order in response to the subpoena served on Ms. Hess.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

testified she has not had any other communications regarding the impoundment arrangement. (Id. at 369.) No County officials or personnel had informed Ms. Hess as to whether she would be involved in the transfer of the Voting Equipment to the appointed escrow agent. (Id. at 370-71.)

Commissioner Shives

The Secretary also presented the testimony of the three Fulton County Commissioners, beginning with Commissioner Paula J. Shives.[40] She testified that, to her knowledge, Michigan Attorney Stefanie Lambert (Attorney Lambert)[41] was still representing the County in this matter. (8/28 Tr. at 222.) Commissioner Shives was aware that Attorney Lambert had been recently indicted but did not know the [40] At the outset Commissioner Shives's testimony, counsel for the County stated that it appeared Commissioner Shives had communicated directly with counsel for the Secretary, and counsel for the County insisted they must speak with Commissioner Shives prior to her testimony regarding those communications. (8/28 Tr. at 170-71, 194-95, 199-201.) Counsel for the Secretary responded that Commissioner Shives had approached him in the courtroom regarding her availability to testify on later dates, which he communicated to the Special Master. (Id. at 195.) Upon the Special Master's inquiry, Commissioner Shives stated she felt no need to speak to Attorney Carroll before testifying, and that Attorney Carroll "has not acted as he is my attorney before." (Id. at 203.) Later, Commissioner Shives testified that she was not under the impression that Attorney Newman represented her in either a personal or official capacity, and that to her knowledge the Commissioners had not voted to retain Attorney Newman. (Id. at 210.) The Special Master notes that the "risk of a conflict between Attorney Carroll and his clients" appears to persist since the November 2022 contempt proceeding, despite the Supreme Court's exhortation to Attorney Carroll to address the conflict with his clients, and with Commissioner Shives in particular. Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1001 n.105.

[41] As the Special Master noted in the November 18, 2022 Report and Recommendations to our Supreme Court, Attorney Lambert also uses the last name Junttila. See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1051-52. The Special Master's Findings of Fact Nos. 79-81 indicated that Attorney Lambert was sanctioned by a federal court in Michigan and was subject to disciplinary grievances in Michigan. The Special Master notes that the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has since reversed the sanctions that were imposed on Attorney Lambert. King v. Whitmer, 71 F.4th 511, 531 (6th Cir. 2023). Further, at least one of the formal disciplinary actions against Attorney Lambert was dismissed with prejudice. Grievance Administrator v. Junttila (Mich. Att'y Discipline Bd., No. 23-31-GA, dated Aug. 14, 2023).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

nature of the charges. (Id. at 225-26.)[42] She was not familiar with Cerberus or Mr. Sabia and did not recall the Commissioners having discussed them at any meeting. (Id. at 227-28.) Commissioner Shives testified that the County received correspondence "from the state" regarding a potential escrow agent, which the Commissioners discussed during a meeting, but did not recall the name of the entity discussed or the Commissioners making any decision regarding the escrow agent at that meeting. (Id. at 230-32.) That meeting occurred on or about May 30, 2023, and Commissioner Shives did not recall any subsequent discussion among the Commissioners regarding escrow agents. (Id. at 232-33.)

Commissioner Shives did not know who first suggested Cerberus to the County or the other Commissioners as a potential escrow agent. (Id. at 237-38.) She was not familiar with any of the details of Cerberus's proposed service as agent, including location, security capability, or price. (Id. at 240-42.) Commissioner Shives did not know whether any third party had agreed to reimburse the County for the costs of Cerberus acting as escrow agent. (Id. at 241.)

Commissioner Ulsh

The Secretary also presented the testimony of County Commissioner Stuart L. Ulsh. (8/30 Tr. at 378-79.) Commissioner Ulsh confirmed that Attorney Lambert has represented the County in election-related matters, that she was present during the hearings held in November 2022, and that the County had not terminated its [42] Counsel for the Secretary questioned Commissioner Shives, Commissioner Ulsh, and Mr. Sabia on their knowledge surrounding Attorney Lambert's criminal indictment in Michigan. See infra pp. 36, 40. The Special Master specifically notes that like all criminal defendants, Attorney Lambert is presumed innocent until proven guilty of the charges in the indictment. Taylor v. Kentucky, 436 U.S. 478, 483 (1978) (quoting Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 432, 453 (1895) ("The principle that there is a presumption of innocence in favor of the accused is the undoubted law, axiomatic and elementary, and its enforcement lies at the foundation of the administration of our criminal law.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

attorney-client relationship with her since November 2022. (Id. at 386-95.) Commissioner Ulsh stated that he was not aware that Attorney Lambert had been criminally indicted in Michigan on felony charges relating to unlawful access to voting machines and damage to voting machines. (Id. at 396-97.) He stated that the Commissioners did not vote on whether to engage Attorney Newman as counsel.[43] (Id. at 401.) Commissioner Ulsh testified he first became aware of Cerberus and Mr. Sabia during discussions with his attorneys, including Attorney Lambert, about potential escrow agents. (Id. at 406-07.) He was not aware of any discussion by any County Commissioner or official regarding the impoundment order or potential escrow agents, other than the discussion he personally had with counsel. (Id. at 408-09.)

When asked what due diligence he or other County officials engaged in to determine whether to recommend Cerberus as escrow agent, Commissioner Ulsh testified that he "just talked to [his] attorneys" and that "[he] personally . . . didn't research a lot about it, just what [he] talked about with [his] attorney." (Id. at 414-15.) Commissioner Ulsh was not aware of any discussions regarding third-party payment for Cerberus's services as escrow agent. (Id. at 421-22.) When asked whether his office requires him to spend public money wisely, Commissioner Ulsh stated he "do[esn't] know what wisely means," but he conceded that he generally would consider the cost of a service before spending public funds on it. (Id. at 425-26.) He stated, however, that he did not know how much Cerberus's service would cost, explaining that he "didn't have a reason to ask. We didn't get that far yet." (Id. at 426.) He also testified that he was not aware the County's attorneys had filed

[43] In response to further questions posed to Commissioner Ulsh regarding the retention of counsel, Attorney Newman represented that Attorney Lambert made the decision to hire Attorney Newman. (Id. at 405.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

proposals recommending Cerberus because he "didn't think it would move that fast." (Id.) When asked why he never interviewed Mr. Sabia to determine whether he could serve as escrow agent, Commissioner Ulsh testified that he "d[idn't] think this is going to be [his] decision." (Id. at 427.) He also stated the County had not considered other potential escrow agents. (Id. at 432.)

On cross-examination, however, Commissioner Ulsh stated that the County had considered one other potential agent besides Cerberus, though he could not recall its name. (Id. at 435-37.) He confirmed that he agreed to propose Cerberus. (Id. at 433-34.)

Commissioner Bunch

Finally, the Secretary presented the testimony of County Commissioner Randy H. Bunch, who stated that his testimony would be substantially similar to that of Commissioner Ulsh.[44] (8/30 Tr. at 439-42.) He confirmed that the County's attorneys recommended that the County propose Cerberus, and that the Commissioners did not independently investigate Cerberus beyond discussions with counsel. (Id. at 447-48.) Commissioner Bunch conceded that he did not consider any scope of work or fee schedule. (Id. at 452.) When asked whether the Commissioners had considered the cost of the escrow services in making a proposal, Commissioner Bunch simply stated: "We don't know who the Court is going to pick." (Id. at 453.)

Joseph Sabia

In support of its proposal, the County presented the testimony of Joseph J. Sabia, Jr., part owner and Chief Financial Officer of Cerberus. (8/31 Tr. at 24, 190-

[44] Commissioner Bunch identified one question on which his answer would differ, but the Special Master struck his responsive testimony on the Secretary's motion based on attorney-client privilege. (8/30 Tr. at 442-44.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

91.) Mr. Sabia testified that, during his prior military service, he held a security clearance and acted as a courier of secret and/or classified documents and hard drives. (Id. at 29-32.) Specifically, he stated that he inventoried, handled, and securely stored electronic data storage devices used in military aircraft. (Id. at 32-45.) This included maintaining a log of access to the secured devices and storing them at particular temperature and humidity levels based on the manufacturer's specifications for the devices. (Id. at 36-37, 44.) He testified that, in later private employment, he transported sensitive legal documents and medical records. (Id. at 46-47.)

Mr. Sabia testified that he co-founded Cerberus in 2019, together with his current business partner Kenneth L. Smith. (Id. at 47-48.) He testified about Cerberus's and his own experience[45] providing services, which include security services during and after natural disasters, consultations to improve the physical security of clients' buildings through installation of security cameras and other devices, and personal security services. (Id. at 48-69.) Mr. Sabia testified that Cerberus's primary facility is in Florida. (Id. at 76.) He stated that Cerberus has not previously done business with Dominion or the Secretary. (Id. at 69-70.)

Regarding cost, Mr. Sabia testified that Cerberus typically charges a minimum "service fee" of $75 per hour to secure items, apart from the cost of the storage space

[45] In the midst of Mr. Sabia's direct testimony, the County moved to qualify him as an expert witness. (8/31 Tr. at 70.) The Special Master sustained the Secretary's objection to that qualification, in which Dominion joined, on the basis that the County's witness list offered Mr. Sabia as a fact witness regarding Cerberus's qualifications and experience, and lacked any notice that he would testify as an expert. (Id. at 74.) Thus, in order to avoid unfair surprise and prejudice to the Secretary from the County's post hoc request for expert qualification, and consistent with Paragraph 2 of the Special Master's Scheduling Order requiring the witness list and "the curriculum vitae . . . for any expert witness" no later than August 14, 2023 (Special Master's Order, 8/3/2023 ¶ 2), the Special Master allowed Mr. Sabia to continue testifying as a fact witness only. (8/31 Tr. at 74.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

itself; he stated there could be an additional $50 hourly cost for security if additional persons were required to participate. (Id. at 83.) Renting a climate-controlled storage space would cost about $200 per month. (Id. at 83-84.) He appeared to testify that transportation costs could range from $500 if transported within eastern Pennsylvania to $4,500 if transported to Cerberus's facility in Florida. (Id.)

Mr. Sabia admitted that he did not know what the Voting Equipment looks like or what its components are, but nevertheless opined that Cerberus could maintain a paper chain of custody for the Voting Equipment and safely transport the Voting Equipment, relying on the manufacturer's specifications. (Id. at 85-87.) He explained that, prior to transport, Cerberus would secure the Voting Equipment in "bubble wrap . . . so they don't smash, they're not touching each other . . . , they won't tip over along those lines." (Id. at 86.)

Mr. Sabia further testified that Cerberus has no conflicts of interest in holding and securing the Voting Equipment, and would comply with court orders and federal and state law regarding the Voting Equipment. (Id. at 87-88.)

On cross-examination, Mr. Sabia confirmed that he does not currently hold a governmental security clearance. (Id. at 92.) He explained that his employment duties prior to his founding of Cerberus included responding to workplace accidents and transporting paper files. (Id. at 97-100.)

Mr. Sabia further testified that he had not reviewed the Supreme Court's April 19, 2023 Opinion in Fulton I, and that Fulton County's counsel had not informed him of its content. (Id. at 103, 131-32.) He stated that Attorney Carroll, Attorney Newman, and "Ste[f]anie Lambert" asked him to testify at the hearing. (Id. at 104.) Attorney Lambert was the first person to contact him about Cerberus potentially serving as the escrow agent. (Id. at 121-22.) Mr. Sabia believed she did so "based on [Cerberus's] past performance with her," with which "[s]he was happy." (Id. at 121.) Mr. Sabia stated that he communicated with Attorney Lambert by telephone at 10:00 p.m. on the night before his testimony at the evidentiary hearing, and also texted her the morning of his testimony. (Id. at 106-07.) He initially stated that his first communication with Attorney Lambert was in June 2022, but then stated this occurred in November 2022. (Id. at 109, 115-16.) Finally, Mr. Sabia clarified a third time that the November 2022 text was not from Attorney Lambert, but was instead from "[t]he individual that hired . . . and that paid for" personal-security services he rendered at Attorney Lambert's request in an unrelated matter in Michigan in November 2022. (Id. at 116-17.) Mr. Sabia stated he was not aware that Attorney Lambert had been indicted in Michigan. (Id. at 150-51.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Regarding his communications with the County in this matter, Mr. Sabia initially stated that he first sent his resume to the County on August 25, 2023, the Friday before the evidentiary hearing began. (Id. at 120.) He then corrected himself and stated that he first sent his resume to Attorney Lambert on August 16, 2023. (Id. at 121; accord id. at 133.) He did not have any other communications with County officials or counsel about this matter until August 25, 2023. (Id. at 122.) Mr. Sabia stated he was not aware that the County had proposed Cerberus as escrow agent at least two months before August 16, 2023,[46] and stated that he had not reviewed the County's July 28, 2023 filing proposing Cerberus as escrow agent and attaching Mr. Sabia's resume. (Id. at 280-81; see Fulton County's Response to Dominion's Application for Appointment of Third-Party Escrow Agent, filed July 28, 2023, at 4

[46] The County apparently first mentioned Cerberus in a letter from Attorney Carroll that the Secretary received June 13, 2023. In the letter, Attorney Carroll represented that "Cerberus Dynamic Solutions is a veteran owned company willing to hold in trust the Dominion equipment owned by Fulton County." (Secretary's Application to Appoint Escrow Agent, filed July 28, 2023, Affidavit of Robert A. Wiygul, Ex. 5 (emphasis added).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

& Ex. 4.) He testified that he did not have any communications with the Commissioners or County officials, and that he "d[oes not] even know who" Commissioner Ulsh is. (8/31 Tr. at 153.)

Mr. Sabia acknowledged that Cerberus's website describes its business as providing physical security and personal security in a range of contexts, including after natural disasters, during construction of buildings, during workplace disputes, and at sporting events. (Id. at 187-200.) Mr. Sabia stated he is certified to possess a firearm on the job in Pennsylvania pursuant to Act 235[47] and often does carry a firearm. (Id. at 201, 204.) He stated that no Cerberus employees or officers are subject to auditing by governmental agencies other than for tax purposes. (Id. at 207-08.)

Mr. Sabia agreed that he did not know anything about the Voting Equipment and has never had any experience with electronic voting machines other than as a voter himself. (Id. at 208-09.) He admitted that he could not identify the Voting Equipment if he were shown a photograph of it, other than by "t[aking] a guess." (Id. at 208-10.) He testified: "The only thing I know about voting machines, you put your ballot in, it spits out a receipt. That's as far as my knowledge goes." (Id. at 211-12.) He had not reviewed any documents that list or itemize the Voting Equipment and could not recall any information about the Voting Equipment other than news coverage. (Id. at 212.) Mr. Sabia had not, prior to the hearing, considered how the Voting Equipment should be transported properly or how Cerberus would acquire possession of it. (Id. at 213-16.) He had "no idea" about the location of [47] Act of October 10, 1974, P.L. 705, as amended, 22 P.S. §§ 41-50.1 (Act 235). Act 235 provides "for the education, training and certification of . . . privately employed agents who, as an incidence to their employment, carry lethal weapons." Section 2 of Act 235, 22 P.S. § 42(b).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

serial numbers on the Voting Equipment, (id. at 216), and did not know whether the Voting Equipment contained tamper-evident seals, (id. at 217-18).

Mr. Sabia conceded he had never made any specific proposals as to the type of room in which the Voting Equipment would be stored. (Id. at 279.) Cerberus's sole physical location is an 800-square-foot converted efficiency apartment in Florida that now serves as its office. (Id. at 219-20.) Mr. Sabia was not familiar with the concept of states requiring corporate entities to register to do business in the state, but also stated that Cerberus is "in the process" of being registered in Pennsylvania. (Id. at 222.) Regarding price, Mr. Sabia stated that he could not "give . . . an honest price" without knowing where the Voting Equipment would be stored. (Id. at 225.) He had not otherwise discussed price with the County's counsel. (Id. at 225-26.) He clarified his direct testimony regarding Cerberus's hourly rate, stating that as long as someone from Cerberus was monitoring the Voting Equipment via security camera or otherwise, Cerberus would charge $50 to $75 per hour. (Id. at 226-27.) Mr. Sabia was unwilling to estimate a monthly storage price in his testimony, conceding that he could not do so without knowing the size of the Voting Equipment, the necessary environmental and security conditions, and whether he would need to lease storage space. (Id. at 227-29.) He stated that he would need further direction from the Court about the escrow arrangement before he could estimate a price. (Id. at 229-30.)

During cross-examination of Mr. Sabia, the Secretary introduced, and the Special Master admitted, several social media posts that Mr. Sabia admitted writing or sharing since June 2023, which reference elections and election technology. (See 8/31 Tr. at 242 & Sec'y Ex. 52 ("They stole the 2020 Election by Centralizing a decentralized US voting process using vendors acting as election officials . . . . They supplied or recommended vendors including voting machines . . . ."); 8/31 Tr. at 247-48 & Sec'y Ex. 53 ("JANUARY 6TH WILL BE REMEMBERED AS THE DAY THE GOVERNMENT SET UP A STAGED RIOT TO COVER UP THE FACT THEY CERTIFIED A FRAUDULENT ELECTION!"); 8/31 Tr. at 249-51 & Sec'y Ex. 54 ("We're called 'Election Deniers'" and "machines in #GOP districts disproportionately 'malfunctioning'" and "running the same batches of ballots through the tabulating machines multiple times"); 8/31 Tr. at 251-53 & Sec'y Ex. 55 ("NOW WE HAVE PROOF! . . . Massive 2020 Voter Fraud Uncovered in Michigan – Police Find: TENS OF THOUSANDS of Fake Registrations . . . ."); 8/31 Tr. at 253-57 & Sec'y Ex. 56 ("If ANYONE still DENIES that they didn't steal an election . . . . than [sic] you are complicit!!!!"); 8/31 Tr. At 259-60 & Sec'y Ex. 58 (showing a photo of a person who appears to be Lesley Stahl of the television show 60 Minutes with text displayed above saying, inter alia, "I lied to you about the outcome of the 2020 presidential election.").)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary also introduced social media posts, again made and acknowledged by Mr. Sabia, criticizing current Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt before and during his confirmation by the Pennsylvania Senate. (See 8/31 Tr. at 261-62 & Sec'y Ex. 59 (naming "Al Schmidt—the same man who used to run elections in Philly" and stating "[T]he same Philly that True The Vote showed had over 1,000 mules"); 8/31 Tr. at 262-65 & Sec'y Ex. 60 ("Reach out to your Senator and tell them to vote 'NO' on Al Schmidt's confirmation for the Secretary of the Commonwealth.").) Despite acknowledging these posts, Mr. Sabia had initially testified he did not know who the current Secretary of the Commonwealth is. (8/31 Tr. at 260-61.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On redirect examination, Mr. Sabia stated that Cerberus did not need to "know how electronic [voting] machines work in order to" properly transport, store, and secure them. (Id. at 282-83.)

Benjamin Cotton

The County offered Benjamin Cotton as an expert witness to testify regarding Pro V&V's alleged deficiencies and failures to follow proper procedure. (Id. at 331.) The Secretary and Dominion objected to Mr. Cotton's expert testimony because the County had neither attached Mr. Cotton's curriculum vitae to its witness list nor otherwise provided it to them.[48] The Special Master sustained the objection on the basis that, without any notice of Mr. Cotton's offered qualifications, the Secretary and Dominion were deprived of the opportunity to test his qualifications. (Id. at 318.) The Special Master stated that the County could present Mr. Cotton's fact testimony, but the Secretary and Dominion objected that, based on the County's proffer and the timely filed affidavit, Mr. Cotton would have no relevant fact testimony that did not depend upon his specialized expertise. (Id. at 328-31.) Rather than sustaining the objection outright, the Special Master allowed an initial examination regarding the scope of Mr. Cotton's knowledge. When the Special Master asked whether Mr. Cotton had "any nonexpert personal knowledge that bears on Pro V&V's fitness as an escrow agent," Mr. Cotton responded that "[a]ny knowledge that [he] would have would have been based on [his] technical expertise and examination of duties." (Id. at 336-37.) Accordingly, the Special Master sustained the objections of the Secretary and Dominion to Mr. Cotton's testimony. (Id. at 337-38.)

[48] The County did attach an affidavit by Mr. Cotton to its timely filed witness list and also attached a second affidavit to its August 25, 2023 application requesting leave for its witnesses to testify remotely. By August 29, 2023 order, the Special Master struck the second affidavit of Mr. Cotton on the Secretary's motion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IV. ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED AGENTS

A. Purpose of Impoundment

As directed by our Supreme Court, the undersigned is tasked with appointing a "neutral third-party escrow agent to take and retain possession of the voting equipment until further order of court." Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1020. The Supreme Court was clear that the purpose of impoundment is, in part, to prevent unauthorized physical access to the Voting Equipment, particularly given that the Supreme Court's Injunction Order was not sufficient to restrain County officials from allowing unauthorized access. Id. at 1011 ("[T]he County has given [the Supreme Court] no reason to trust that it will honor a mere reiteration of the same [injunction] order it disregarded before."). In addition to limiting physical access, the Supreme Court also highlighted the importance of "ensur[ing] subsequent continuity in the chain of custody and the protection of such evidentiary value as the [V]oting [E]quipment may retain." Id. at 1012. While recognizing that the Voting Equipment has undergone one or more unauthorized third-party inspections, the Supreme Court stated that it "will not assume that there is no scenario in which the present condition of the [V]oting [E]quipment may prove relevant to one or more of the County's claims[.]"[49] Id. at 1011. The Special Master is also cognizant that the Supreme Court ordered the County to bear all responsibility for the costs associated with impoundment, which may ultimately fall on the County's taxpayers. Accordingly, the Special Master shall consider the costs associated with the impoundment in choosing the appropriate agent.

---

[49] Additionally, and separately from its evidentiary value, there may be some risk inherent in the Voting Equipment's continued status as critical infrastructure, containing software that may remain relevant to elections, even if never used with these particular devices. The Special Master credits Mr. Macias's testimony to that effect. See also Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 979 n.4 (regarding designation of Voting Equipment as critical infrastructure).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In light of these directives, the Special Master will analyze the viability of the parties proposed agents in terms of the agent's ability and fitness to: (1) ensure subsequent continuity in the chain of custody; (2) prevent unauthorized physical access to the Voting Equipment; (3) protect the Voting Equipment's evidentiary value during the escrow period; (4) remain neutral and comply with orders of court; and (5) provide escrow services at a reasonable cost.

B. Chain of Custody

The Special Master begins by addressing the proposed agents' respective abilities to ensure subsequent continuity in the chain of custody of the Voting Equipment. The parties disagreed on what specific qualifications, if any, an escrow agent must possess to ensure this task is met. The Secretary argued that the appointed agent must possess technical expertise and experience specific to voting systems, while the County responded that general experience in security of assets is sufficient. The Special Master initially considered the County's position to be plausibly consistent with the Fulton I opinion, and asked the parties at the prehearing conference to be prepared to present evidence regarding whether technical expertise and experience specific to voting systems would be necessary.

After consideration of the testimony adduced at the hearing, however, the Special Master agrees with the Secretary's position that to ensure continuity in the chain of custody, technical expertise and experience specific to digital voting systems is a highly preferrable qualification. The Special Master finds Mr. Macias's expert testimony detailing the appropriate way to inventory voting equipment in its initial state, and thereafter document and maintain a secure chain of custody thereof, persuasive. Mr. Macias testified that to adequately perform the initial inventorying and subsequent recording, the proposed agent must be able to identify serial numbers on the various components and identify and/or add specific seals and locks to the Voting Equipment in order to prevent and detect tampering. Mr. Macias credibly testified that an agent without this specialized knowledge would not be in a position to properly identify the appropriate locations for the addition of locks and seals, nor would that agent be able to understand if or when a break in the chain of custody occurred, and how to appropriately handle that situation. The Special Master further credits Mr. Macias's opinion that Pro V&V is fully capable of maintaining the chain of custody of the Voting Equipment based on its extensive technical expertise and experience maintaining voting equipment as part and parcel of its business as a VSTL.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Special Master also notes that Mr. Sabia, although generally familiar with seals, does not know where such seals could be applied to the Voting Equipment at issue. This is consistent with Mr. Sabia's testimony that he has no specialized knowledge of any type of voting systems and has never had any experience with electronic voting machines other than as a voter himself.

Considering all this testimony in light of the Special Master's conclusion that technical expertise and experience is highly preferrable to maintaining chain of custody of the Voting Equipment, this factor militates in favor of appointing Pro V&V, an entity with technical experience and familiarity with voting systems, as opposed to Cerberus, which lacks technical expertise and is unfamiliar with this specific type of digital asset.

C. Prevention of Unauthorized Access

While the parties disagreed on the level of expertise and experience needed to ensure continuity in the chain of custody, they largely agreed that an appropriate escrow agent must have the ability to prevent unauthorized access to the Voting Equipment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

To this end, Mr. Walker and Mr. Macias presented credible testimony regarding the security of Pro V&V's facility located in Huntsville, Alabama. Mr. Walker testified, in great detail, about the security measures undertaken at Pro V&V's facility, which include badge-access doors, interior and exterior security cameras, and interior locked doors to each of the 11 laboratories within the facility. Mr. Walker further indicated that Pro V&V could limit access to the secure room containing the Voting Equipment to a single Pro V&V employee. Mr. Macias's testimony reaffirmed the presence of security features at Pro V&V's facility, including increased levels of security as one ventures closer to the laboratories where the Voting Equipment would be stored.

Mr. Sabia's testimony regarding a secure facility was less precise, as Cerberus did not offer a specific proposed location for escrowing the Voting Equipment. Mr. Sabia indicated he could secure the Voting Equipment in its present location in Fulton County, rent a storage unit, or place the Voting Equipment at Cerberus's headquarters, which is a converted efficiency apartment in Florida containing Cerberus's office and business materials. However, Mr. Sabia also testified that he is unfamiliar with both the size and the shape of the Voting Equipment at issue, as he has never personally seen it or asked Fulton County to provide specifications. Mr. Sabia broadly testified that his previous military service, where he inventoried, handled, and securely stored electronic data storage devices, and his more recent work in the nature of personal and event security as an owner of Cerberus, allows him to secure virtually any location for escrow purposes.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Special Master does not doubt Mr. Sabia's ability to secure assets, as he did during his military service, and currently does as owner of Cerberus. However, the Special Master found more credible the specific and detailed testimony of Messrs. Macias and Walker regarding the security at Pro V&V's facility and Pro V&V's ability to prevent unauthorized access to the Voting Equipment. This detailed testimony was contrasted by Mr. Sabia's less precise testimony, which evidenced that he had not developed a specific proposal as to where to place the Voting Equipment, no less secure it. For these reasons, and the reasons discussed in Section IV.E infra relating to neutrality, the Special Master concludes that this factor also favors the appointment of Pro V&V.

D. Protection of Evidentiary Value

The parties also agreed that in order to protect the evidentiary value of the Voting Equipment, the components must be stored in a location that maintains appropriate temperature and humidity levels for the duration of the escrow period.

In regard to Pro V&V's ability to maintain these necessary environmental conditions, the Special Master credits Mr. Macias's testimony that Pro V&V's Huntsville facility was custom built to maintain and house election technology and is fully equipped with the environmental controls needed to maintain these exact types of digital assets. Mr. Macias also explained that to remain accredited as a VSTL, Pro V&V must maintain these environmental controls. In addition, Pro V&V is regularly subjected to audits to ensure it does so. Mr. Walker's credible testimony reaffirmed Mr. Macias's testimony that the HVAC system at Pro V&V's facility was designed to monitor and maintain precise control over the temperature and humidity in each individual room.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Sabia also testified about the appropriate temperature and humidity levels and explained that he would follow manufacturer's specifications in order to appropriately store the Voting Equipment and could purchase devices for monitoring those environmental conditions in any chosen escrow location.

Weighing these testimonies, the Special Master concludes that Pro V&V is more qualified to maintain the required environmental conditions to protect the evidentiary value of the Voting Equipment. Indeed, Pro V&V's facility was fitted to function under strict guidelines relating directly to these environmental conditions. On the other hand, Mr. Sabia offered no specific explanation as to how he would maintain appropriate environmental controls at the various proposed storage locations, especially at the Fulton County building or the storage unit, neither of which locations he owns or controls. Accordingly, the Special Master concludes Pro V&V is more likely to be able to protect the evidentiary value of the Voting Equipment.

E. Neutrality and Compliance

Preventing further unauthorized access to the Voting Equipment requires two changes in the status quo relative to control over the Voting Equipment: 1) the equipment must be removed from Fulton County's control, and 2) the custodian of the Voting Equipment must be sufficiently independent from any actors that would seek further unauthorized access to the Voting Equipment, so that the custodian would not permit such access. See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1019 (noting that impoundment is intended to "effectuat[e] the same result the Secretary sought when it first asked the Commonwealth Court for a protective order"). Thus, the appointed agent's neutrality, independence, and willingness and ability to comply with court orders are critical considerations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The County argues that Pro V&V's ongoing business relationship with Dominion creates a conflict of interest undermining Pro V&V's independence. The Special Master credits Mr. Macias's and Mr. Walker's testimony regarding that ongoing relationship, that Dominion employees are sometimes present at Pro V&V's facility, and that a financial conflict of interest could arise between a VSTL and a voting system manufacturer like Dominion. However, the Special Master also credits Mr. Macias's and Mr. Walker's testimony that, exactly because of the risk of such a conflict, the relationship between Dominion and Pro V&V is subject to a robust regulatory framework requiring Pro V&V to prevent and disclose conflicts of interest. As they credibly testified, Pro V&V is regulated and periodically audited for conflicts of interest, both institutionally and for its personnel, as part of its EAC accreditation.[50] This includes scrutiny for financial conflicts of interest. It must be so audited to prevent undue assistance to voting machine manufacturers, which would undermine its entire purpose as an independent laboratory testing election technology. As Mr. Macias also credibly testified, Pro V&V's business as a VSTL depends entirely upon its accreditation and ongoing good standing with the EAC—an accreditation that would be jeopardized by any partiality or favoritism toward Dominion, or any failure to address a conflict of interest. Pro V&V would presumably tend to avoid behavior that would place its business at such risk.[51]

---

[50] Regarding Pro V&V's accreditation, the Special Master is satisfied that, as Mr. Macias explained, the provision of HAVA at 52 U.S.C. § 20971(c)(2) controls the period of Pro V&V's accreditation, and that any policy guidance from the EAC in derogation of that provision did not affect Pro V&V's accreditation. The Special Master also notes and credits Mr. Macias's testimony that the EAC itself recognized and rectified the conflict between HAVA and the EAC's renewal policy, and confirmed Pro V&V's continued good standing. Finally, the Special Master credits Mr. Walker's testimony that Pro V&V was aware of the conflict and maintained the position that its accreditation had been continuous since 2015.

[51] The County makes a distinct argument that Pro V&V's use of Clay Parikh, a nonemployee, for security testing on voting machines in 2015 somehow undermines its

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Cerberus has different incentives. The Special Master notes Mr. Sabia's testimony that Attorney Lambert solicited Cerberus's participation as escrow agent, based in part on her satisfaction with Cerberus's performance on past work. This testimony is corroborated by the content of Mr. Sabia's social media posts, and by the County Commissioners' testimony that Attorney Lambert selected Cerberus, which the Special Master finds credible. The Special Master also credits and notes the testimony of Mr. Martin and Ms. Hess that, although they are normally involved in the County's use and storage of its election equipment, neither the Commissioners nor the County's counsel discussed or identified Cerberus with Mr. Martin or Ms. Hess. The fact that the County and its counsel apparently recommended Cerberus before even speaking with Mr. Sabia, and without consulting County officials responsible for the integrity of the Voting Equipment, further corroborates Mr. Sabia's testimony about his ongoing business relationship and familiarity with Attorney Lambert. Thus, although the Special Master does not generally credit Mr. Sabia's testimony,[52] she will accept his testimony regarding Attorney's Lambert's relationship with him as corroborated by other evidence. The Special Master also notes that the social media posts Mr. Sabia admitted making include direct opposition to the appointment and confirmation of the current Secretary, who is a party to this suit. Mr. Sabia's social media posts also include statements calculated independence today. The County also made reference to testimony Mr. Parikh might offer regarding an alleged conflict of interest with Dominion, (8/30 Tr. at 148), but that testimony ultimately was not presented. As stated above, the current regulatory framework to which Pro V&V is subject reduces the risk of any such conflict. Further, regardless of which entity is appointed escrow agent, the Special Master will tailor the escrow arrangement to restrict access to as few persons as practicable, thus further reducing the risk that an employee or invitee of the agent could gain illicit access.

---

[52] The Special Master notes the content of the social media posts that Mr. Sabia admitted making, which were in direct contradiction to Mr. Sabia's testimony on direct examination and therefore significantly reduced Mr. Sabia's credibility.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to undermine trust in elections in general and in the reliability of voting machines in particular. When considered together, Mr. Sabia's election-related statements, Attorney Lambert's ongoing relationship with Cerberus,[53] and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's concerns surrounding Attorney Lambert's conduct,[54] all support an inference that Cerberus is not neutral on the issue of who should have access to the Voting Equipment. Indeed, the record testimony suggests that Cerberus and/or Mr. Sabia has a philosophical and financial precommitment to Attorney Lambert's position on that issue, which could unduly subject Cerberus to Attorney Lambert's influence if it served as escrow agent. Therefore, the Special Master declines to credit any testimony or averments on the part of Mr. Sabia that Cerberus would remain neutral and compliant with court orders.

Weighing these two sets of incentives the proposed escrow agents possess, the Special Master concludes that Pro V&V is more likely to serve as a neutral, independent escrow agent, and is less likely to be unduly influenced. Pro V&V has financial and legal incentives to disclose conflicts of interest, to prevent such conflicts, and to follow the law and court orders. And that is true independent of whether it is appointed as escrow agent. In this vein, the County's argument that Pro V&V allowed its accreditation to expire is not only legally unsupported, see supra n. 50; but also, Mr. Walker specifically testified that Pro V&V remained [53] On July 21, 2023, the Secretary advised the Special Master that Attorney Lambert had been named as a defendant in a civil complaint filed July 18, 2023, in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan. See Sec'y Notice of Recent Developments Relating to Sanctions Proceedings. The complaint alleges that, in March 2022, Attorney Lambert hired yet another third-party contractor to inspect Fulton County's electronic election systems, and represented to the third party that the inspection "had been authorized by a Pennsylvania state court." Complaint at 6, Apelbaum v. Lambert (E.D. Mich., No. 2:23-cv-11718-SJM-APP, filed July 18, 2023).

---

[54] See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1018 ("Attorney Lambert may be every bit as culpable as Attorney Carroll, at least in the pattern of non-compliance that has led us to impose upon him joint and several responsibility with the County.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

accredited and in good standing, and there is no evidence that Pro V&V allowed its accreditation to expire. Further, Mr. Macias testified that the EAC recognized that Pro V&V had remained accredited despite the conflicting guidance. (See also Sec'y Ex. 12 (VSTL Certificates and Accreditation, U.S. Election Assistance Commission) ("Despite the [administrative error regarding the effect of 52 U.S.C. § 20971(c)(2), which caused confusion about Pro V&V's status], Pro V&V . . . remained in good standing . . . and retained their accreditation.").) Pro V&V would be financially unwise to risk its VSTL business by pursuing its role as escrow agent in an improper or partial manner, especially given the relatively minor financial value of the escrow services.

By contrast, Cerberus has at least a financial incentive to perform to the satisfaction of Attorney Lambert, who continues to influence these proceedings in less-than-transparent ways as the Special Master has described, and whose "pattern of non-compliance" with court orders drew criticism from our Supreme Court. See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1018. Cerberus may even have a perverse incentive, to the extent that allowing Attorney Lambert or others to access the Voting Equipment during the impoundment could enhance, rather than diminish, Cerberus's business relationship with Attorney Lambert. Relatedly, the Special Master does not credit Mr. Sabia's testimony that Cerberus would unfailingly comply with this Court's orders regarding the impoundment.

The Special Master concludes that Pro V&V is both sufficiently neutral and sufficiently independent from undue influence to serve as escrow agent.

F. Costs

Finally, the Special Master compares the proposed agents' cost estimates. The Special Master credits Mr. Walker's testimony that Pro V&V will honor the cost estimates it gave. With Pro V&V's $6,640 initial charge for transport, and its $850 per month storage fee, Pro V&V would charge approximately $16,840 for the first year of the impoundment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On behalf of Cerberus, Mr. Sabia gave only an incomplete set of potential costs—he did not specifically estimate costs related to storage space because he did not know the size of the equipment or its storage requirements, and he asked for direction from the Court before he could do so. His testimony about other potential costs appeared to vary: He first testified that Cerberus would charge a service fee of $75 per hour to monitor the Voting Equipment, with a potential additional charge of $50 per hour depending on storage location. But he later appeared to testify the security rate would be between $50 and $75 per hour, and would only apply if 24-hour monitoring were required. He stated that Cerberus could charge up to $4,500 for transport to its sole facility in Florida, but that this depended heavily on the storage location. Given this equivocal testimony, the Special Master cannot precisely quantify and compare the costs of Cerberus to those of Pro V&V. But using one potential, conservative estimate, based on a $50 per hour security fee, Cerberus's cost for the first year of the escrow could amount to approximately $438,000 just to monitor, exclusive of transportation, storage, or other costs. This would include a monthly cost of approximately $36,000 for Cerberus's security service fee alone. This difference in cost, by itself, weighs heavily in favor of appointing Pro V&V. Alternatively, to the extent that these figures do not represent Cerberus's actual costs because it failed to give a more precise cost estimate, that very failure weighs in favor of Pro V&V and creates doubt about the seriousness with which Cerberus has offered its services. It has been clear from before the impoundment proceedings began that the cost of escrow services should be considered.[55]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VI. CONCLUSION

Having carefully examined the proposed agents' relative abilities to maintain chain of custody, prevent unauthorized access, protect evidentiary value, behave neutrally and in compliance with court orders, and provide services at a reasonable cost, the Special Master finds each factor to favor Pro V&V as the more suitable escrow agent. Accordingly, the Special Master hereby appoints Pro V&V as the agent who will take and retain possession of the Voting Equipment, subject to the conditions of the attached Preliminary Appointment Order and a Final Appointment Order to be entered in due course.

RENÉE COHN JUBELIRER, President Judge of the Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania Appointed as Special Master

[55] See Fulton I, 292 A.3d at 1064-65 (Brobson, J, concurring and dissenting) (opining that impoundment will be "at the further expense of the taxpayers of Fulton County").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE COMMONWEALTH COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA

County of Fulton, Fulton County Board of Elections, Stuart L. Ulsh, in his official capacity as County Commissioner of Fulton County and in his capacity as a resident, taxpayer and elector in Fulton County, and Randy H. Bunch, in his official capacity as County Commissioner of Fulton County and in his capacity as a resident, taxpayer and elector of Fulton County, Petitioners/Appellees	:	No. 277 M.D. 2021 No. 3 MAP 2022
v.	:
Secretary of the Commonwealth, Respondent/Appellant	:

PRELIMINARY APPOINTMENT ORDER

NOW, September 15, 2023, following the evidentiary hearing for purposes of the Special Master's appointment of a neutral third-party escrow agent, as ordered by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, and in accordance with the foregoing opinion, the Special Master hereby conditionally appoints Pro V&V to serve as escrow agent of the Voting Equipment at issue. Final appointment of Pro V&V as escrow agent will proceed as follows, and is subject to the following conditions:

1. No later than September 29, 2023, the Secretary shall file and serve a Proposed Final Appointment Order executed by Pro V&V[1] that

[1] Pro V&V shall execute the Proposed Final Appointment Order for purposes of indicating its consent to jurisdiction as described in Paragraph 1(e) below, and also to indicate the general acceptability of the terms contained in the Proposed Final Appointment Order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

includes all terms relating to the escrow arrangement,[2] which must include, without limitation, the following terms, and which may also include any other terms the Secretary and Pro V&V consider to be necessary or appropriate regarding the escrow arrangement[3]:

a. Access Limitations. Before taking possession of the Voting Equipment, Pro V&V shall designate a laboratory at its facility in which the Voting Equipment shall be stored (Escrow Room). Upon taking possession of the Voting Equipment, Pro V &V shall not permit any access to the Escrow Room except as follows:

   i. Singular Personnel Access. Pro V&V shall restrict access to the Escrow Room to only Michael Walker, who shall retain sole possession of the key or other means of access to the Escrow Room. In the event of Mr. Walker's unavailability, Pro V&V may file a motion with the Court proposing to substitute another Pro V&V employee to temporarily retain sole access, including the dates of the proposed substituted access, to the Escrow Room.

   ii. Acts of God; Facilities Emergency. Mr. Walker, or another Pro V&V Employee designated pursuant to Paragraph 1(a)(i) above, may enter the Escrow Room to respond to acts of God, leaks, fires, or other emergency conditions that require immediate access in order to preserve the Voting Equipment.

   iii. Election Assistance Commission Site Visits. Pro V&V may continue to allow EAC personnel to enter its facility as required for accreditation or audit purposes, but Pro V&V shall not permit EAC personnel to enter the Escrow Room without prior order of Court.

---

[2] In the Secretary's July 28, 2023 filing, the Secretary proposed that "the parties submit a specific escrow agreement for the Special Master's approval . . . ." (Secretary's Application to Appoint Escrow Agent at 22.) As the parties are unlikely to agree on the terms of any escrow agreement, the Special Master directs the Secretary and Pro V&V to include their proposed terms in the form of a proposed final appointment order, which will be binding on all parties once entered.

[3] The Special Master will review and consider all terms contained in the Proposed Final Appointment Order and the parties' responses thereto contemplated in Paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Order, and will enter a Final Appointment Order thereafter.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

iv. Emergency Notification to Court. If access to the Escrow Room must be granted pursuant to Paragraphs 1(a)(ii) or 1(a)(iii) of this Order, or in a manner not contemplated in this Order, Pro V&V shall immediately notify the Court of such access or impending access via email to CCFCEscrow@pacourts.us copying all counsel of record in this matter, and shall then promptly file a formal motion with the Court explaining the same.

b. Monitoring. Before taking possession of the Voting Equipment, Pro V&V shall install a surveillance or security camera in the Escrow Room (Camera). Once the Voting Equipment is moved to the Escrow Room, Pro V&V shall maintain the Camera in a functional state and trained on the Voting Equipment and its immediate surroundings until otherwise ordered. [[The Secretary and Pro V&V shall, if practicable, include terms requiring the video from the Camera to be 1) continuously transmitted to the parties and the Court, in a manner that could be viewed remotely, 2) recorded and retained, either for a period of time or for the duration of the escrow arrangement; and 3) associated with motion detection technology and the ability to send automated notice and/or video footage to the parties and the Court if a person enters the Escrow Room.]][4]

c. Transfer of Possession.[5] Pro V&V shall arrange to take possession of the Voting Equipment from its present location in Fulton County and shall directly and continuously transport the Voting Equipment to Pro V&V's facility at 6705 Odyssey Drive NW, Huntsville, AL, 35806. The parties' counsel, experts, and [4] In Paragraph 1 of this Order, text in italic type and enclosed in double brackets indicates direction that the Secretary and Pro V&V are to supply specific written provisions regarding the relevant term with which they could comply. The Secretary and Pro V&V may explain their inclusion, modification, or exclusion of such provisions in the filing attaching the Proposed Final Appointment Order. Text in ordinary roman type and not enclosed in double brackets indicates provisions that must be included in the Proposed Final Appointment Order.

---

[5] In the filing attaching the Proposed Final Appointment Order, the Secretary and Pro V&V shall include a list of dates and times, within a 30-day period after the date of that filing, that are acceptable to them for the transfer of possession of the Voting Equipment from the County to Pro V&V to occur. The County and Dominion may respond thereto in the filings authorized by Paragraph 2 of this Order. In the Final Appointment Order, the Special Master will designate a specific date and time for the transfer of possession.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fulton County personnel are permitted to be present and observe pickup of the Voting Equipment in Fulton County by Pro V&V.

d. Price. [[The parties shall supply terms regarding the price of the escrow services and the time and manner of payment, and regarding which person(s) are liable for payment.]]

e. Consent to Jurisdiction; Entry of Appearance. Pro V&V consents to the jurisdiction of the Pennsylvania Courts with respect to the Voting Equipment. Within 30 days after entry of this Order, counsel for Pro V&V shall enter an appearance in the Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court in the above-captioned matter, so that the Court may appropriately communicate with counsel for Pro V&V directly.

2. Within seven (7) days of the Secretary's filing of the Proposed Final Appointment Order, any party may file and serve a response thereto. Responses received after the seven (7) day deadline will not be considered.

3. The Secretary and/or Pro V&V may file a reply, if any, within three (3) days of any parties' timely filed response.

Further, Dominion's Application to Quash is DISMISSED as moot for the reasons set forth in the accompanying Opinion.

Renée Cohn Jubelirer

RENÉE COHN JUBELIRER, President Judge of the Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania Appointed as Special Master

Order Exit
09/15/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/28/2023 2:32:58 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments
Attachments: signal-2023-09-28-103001.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Here's Kaardal's press release announcing the lawsuit, if you haven't seen.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2023 at 10:23 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

Literally just emailed you too.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 10:23 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://gnppac.com/conservative-lawmakers-launch-lawsuit-to-overturn-deceptive-amendments-attacking-election-integrity

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Contact: Elizabeth Nielsen, nielsen@mklaw.com, 612-465-0905
For interviews with Erick Kaardal, call 313-920-3080

Mich. Legislators File Federal Lawsuit. Claim State Usurped Their Constitutional Authority.

Lawmakers say state election officials violated legislature's right to determine times, places, and manner of elections as protected in both the U.S Constitution and the Michigan Constitution

September 28, 2023. Lansing, Michigan. Today, eleven Michigan state legislators filed a lawsuit in federal court against state election officials. The lawsuit claims the 2018 and 2022 state constitutional amendments regulating the times, places, and manner of federal elections are legally null and void. The U.S. Constitution, Article I, Section 4 (the Elections Clause), requires the state legislature to regulate the times, places, and manner of federal elections. However, Michigan's constitutional amendments (Proposal 3 of 2018 and Proposal 2 of 2022) bypassed the state legislature and, in doing so, usurped the legislature's federally-mandated constitutional authority. These state constitutional amendments included provisions that allow voters to sign affidavits instead of presenting valid identification when voting in person or applying for an absentee ballot; nine days of early voting; private funding of election administration; no-excuse absentee voting procedures; same-day voter registrations; state-funded absentee ballot drop boxes, and independent redistricting commissions. The lawsuit, filed in the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, names as defendants Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Jonathan Brater, Director of the Bureau of Elections.

In a press conference webinar conducted today, state Senator Jonathan Lindsey, one of the legislator plaintiffs, said, "The United States Constitution, the supreme law of the land, contains limited, but critical, election regulations. We also have procedures in place at the state level to amend election law. However, these processes were violated in 2018 and 2022 when an alternative amendment process was used without regard to federal constitutional requirements. This lawsuit challenges recent attempts to subvert our constitutional process and will protect against such actions in the future."

Lindsey said progressives had tried and failed for years to pressure elected representatives to tear down safeguards that kept the state's elections convenient and secure. "As an end-around, they used an unconstitutional process, then deceived the public into voting for changes that weaken our elections," he said. "I don't blame voters. They were told lies that made Proposal 2 sound good. Proponents ran ads saying this "enshrines voter ID into our Constitution" when in fact Prop 2 guarantees the right to vote WITHOUT voter ID—a classic bait and switch tactic. A lot of money was spent to deceive people. Now these unlawfully enacted changes purport to limit our power as legislators to fix serious issues with our elections. Today I stand with fellow legislators to challenge that notion."

Representative Steve Carra, a plaintiff and Chair of the Michigan House Freedom Caucus agreed. "The founders of this great republic put regulating elections into the hands of the state legislatures, so changes to the election process will undergo a deliberative and thoughtful process by the people's elected representatives."

"Michigan state election officials committed horrible violations of state legislators' federal rights in 2018 and 2022, and continue to do so," said Erick Kaardal, attorney with Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A., representing the plaintiffs. "The election officials enabled these legally unauthorized amendments to the state constitution to eviscerate the state legislators' federal rights to participate in law-making to determine the times, places, and manner of federal elections. Now, the Michigan Constitution contains federal elections regulations that are monuments to civil rights violations. We will need help from the federal courts to clean up the mess that the election officials created."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Additional attorneys for the plaintiffs include Lansing-based David Kallman and Steve Kallman of the Kallman Legal Group, PLLC.

Carra said, "We're seeing enormous outstate influence on our state's elections. The far left struggles to win in a fair election, so their national strategy is to corrupt swing-state elections. One of their tactics is to trick the public into voting for unconstitutional changes to a state's constitution, taking the legislature out of the election process."

Carra explained that of the total $31.7 million spent on the Proposal 2 campaign, $23.6 million, 74%, was expended in support. About half of that, $11.3 million, poured into Promote the Vote from the Sixteen Thirty Fund, a 501(c)4 nonprofit based in Washington D.C. The George Soros Open Society Foundation, a 501(c)3 nonprofit based in New York, accounted for $1.2 million.

"Despite the inflamed rhetoric coming from extremists, Michigan residents want fair and secure elections." Carra declared. He cited a recent Honest Elections Project (HEP) study that shows public support for photo ID laws has grown to an astounding 88% nationwide with 68% strongly agreeing that photo ID should be required when voting. "Promote the Vote behaved like snake-oil salesmen to deceive Michiganders into amending the state constitution. They claimed it enshrined voter ID when the truth is the Proposal 2 amendment did just the opposite. It allows registrants to vote without valid identification."

Carra noted, "The HEP study found that 86% of Americans think every election office should routinely undergo a full performance review and audit. "Prop 2 allows for nine days OR MORE of early voting, which is fiscally irresponsible and makes our elections ripe for fraud. We need to fix the problem now and restore legislative authority. Otherwise, the situation will continue to get worse."

The legislature has the authority to propose an amendment to the Constitution involving a vote of the people under Article 12, Sec. 1. But any election-law amendment to the Constitution that bypasses the legislature is illegal. According to both the U.S. Constitution and the Michigan Constitution, only the state legislature has the authority to regulate the times, places, and manner of federal elections. The passage of an election-related ballot referendum without first gaining legislative approval violates both the U.S. and Michigan Constitutions. The Michigan Constitution provides that the legislative power to regulate elections is vested in the senate and house of representatives.

The lawsuit warns that the unconstitutional process could be misused in 2024 and in the future.

"The courts need to decide these important legal questions," Senator Lindsey explained. "The people of Michigan are entitled to an answer on the scope and limitations of Article XII, section 2, amendment by petition, especially as it relates to the responsibilities granted to the state legislatures by the United States Constitution. I am honored to play a role in this effort to restore the rule of law in Michigan."

Plaintiffs include Senators Jonathan Lindsey and Jim Runestad; Representatives Steve Carra, James DeSana, Joseph Fox, Neil Friske, Matt Maddock, Brad Paquette, Angela Rigas, Joshua Schriver, and Rachelle Smit.

Attorney Erick Kaardal, a partner of Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A., specializes in suing the government to improve it. Over the course of his three-decade career, Kaardal has achieved 61 election integrity counter-lawfare victories, including two U.S. Supreme Court wins.

Michigan Fair Elections and the Great Lakes Justice Center, sponsors of the lawsuit, are Michigan-based, non-profit 501(c)3 organizations. MFE is composed of local task forces dedicated to restoring fair and honest elections through education, local citizen participation in elections, and litigation. GLJC's mission is to speak truth on behalf of the persecuted and most vulnerable and to champion the cause of the defenseless and oppressed.

# #

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/28/2023 6:40:36 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Press conference recording

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

To the extent useful, the hour-long press conference announcing today's lawsuit is available on YouTube:
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RW0hr1fepSs

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/28/2023 3:13:26 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2023 at 11:12 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 11:05 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, September 28, 2023 at 10:23 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

Literally just emailed you too.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 10:23 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Lawsuit challenging 2018 and 2022 amendments

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://gnppac.com/conservative-lawmakers-launch-lawsuit-to-overturn-deceptive-amendments-attacking-election-integrity

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Teszlewicz, Barbara (AG) [teszlewiczb@michigan.gov]
on behalf of Grossi, Christina (AG) [GrossiC@michigan.gov]
Sent: 8/30/2022 1:55:24 PM
To: 'Ray McCormick' [ray@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; 'Jonathan Williams' [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Ranjana Natarajan [ranjana@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Bagley, Nick [BagleyN1@michigan.gov]; Weare, Jessica [WeareJ@michigan.gov]; Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Sargent, Aubrey (AG) [SargentA1@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]
CC: Teegardin, Rachel [TeegardinR1@michigan.gov]; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS) [SittsJ@michigan.gov]

Subject: (HOLD) In-Person Meeting w/AG, Gov, SOS, SUDC Offices
Location: AG's Lansing Office - Williams Building, 525 West Ottawa, Lansing

Start: 9/1/2022 2:00:00 PM
End: 9/1/2022 3:30:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Required Attendees: Ray McCormick; Jonathan Williams; Robert Cotter; Ranjana Natarajan; Bagley, Nick; Weare, Jessica; Brady, Mike (MDOS); Sargent, Aubrey (AG); Meingast, Heather (AG); Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG)
Optional Attendees: Teegardin, Rachel; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS)

8/30: Some people are unable to attend in person so the Teams information at the bottom of this invite is available for them.

Per States United: They would like to hold the 90 minutes for this meeting but understand that it may be a shorter time.

Participating:
AG:
Christina Grossi
Heather Meingast
Danielle Hagaman-Clark
Aubrey Sargent

Gov:
Nick Bagley
Jessica Weare

SOS:
Mike Brady

SUDC:
Jonathan Williams
Robert Cotter

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ranjana Natarajan

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer or mobile app
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID:
Passcode: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, Pontiac
Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/28/2023 9:42:50 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Update
Attachments: 14A Litigation tracker (2023.09.28).docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

Please find attached a litigation tracker which provides descriptions and status updates of cases filed around the country involving the Disqualification Clause of the 14th Amendment. We will endeavor to send an updated tracker weekly and will indicate changes from the previous week on the tracker. Please let us know if you are aware of any updates that we are missing!

Below is a summary of relevant cases/filings from the past week:

Colorado:

- On Friday, September 22, in Anderson v. Griswold, state district court Judge Sarah Wallace issued a Protective Order banning threats and intimidation on all parties, the lawyers, the judge and her staff.
- On the same day, President Trump filed two Motions to Dismiss: One First Amendment Motion based on the Colorado Anti-SLAPP statute and one based on standing and the Colorado statutory scheme. President Trump indicated he would file an additional Motion to Dismiss on September 28 addressing 14.3 structural arguments.
- The Colorado Republican Committee also filed a Motion to Dismiss raising First Amendment arguments, statutory arguments, and arguments related to 14.3.

Michigan:

- On September 15, activist Robert Davis filed a pro se civil action to require Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson to exclude Trump from the Michigan primary ballot.
- On September 19, Davis filed an Emergency Motion for an Expedited Hearing and Expedited Briefing.
- Secretary Benson was served on September 22.

Minnesota:

- In Growe v. Simon, on September 27, 2023, Secretary Simon filed a responsive pleading indicating he takes no position on the merits but agrees with the Petitioners that the current proceeding is the proper process to determine Trump's eligibility. Secretary Simon requested that the issue be decided no later than January 5, 2024.
- Several groups and individuals filed motions for leave to file amicus briefs including CREW, Bruce Ackerman, Derek Muller, the Constitutional Accountability Center, and the RNC.
- Oral Arguments are scheduled for November 2.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/6/2023 8:13:28 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
Attachments:

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/15/2023 11:28:00 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 7:26 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:16 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:12:24 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/12/2023 9:02:35 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: 14.3 Litigation Tracker
Attachments: Baude & Paulsen.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Let me know if you have any trouble with the attachment. It should have been on the previous email.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, October 12, 2023 at 4:53 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

Thanks, do you have a PDF of the Baude article? My computer is not letting me download it.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 12, 2023 4:32 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Abstract: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids holding office by former office holders who then participate in insurrection or rebellion. Because of a range of misperceptions and mistaken assumptions, Section Three's full legal consequences have not been appreciated or enforced. This article corrects those mistakes by setting forth the full sweep and force of Section Three.

First, Section Three remains an enforceable part of the Constitution, not limited to the Civil War, and not effectively repealed by nineteenth century amnesty legislation. Second, Section Three is self-executing, operating as an immediate disqualification from office, without the need for additional action by Congress. It can and should be enforced by every official, state or federal, who judges qualifications. Third, to the extent of any conflict with prior constitutional rules, Section Three repeals, supersedes, or simply satisfies them. This includes the rules against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws, the Due Process Clause, and even the free speech principles of the First Amendment. Fourth, Section Three covers a broad range of conduct against the authority of the constitutional order, including many instances of indirect participation or support as "aid or comfort." It covers a broad range of former offices, including the Presidency. And in particular, it disqualifies former President Donald Trump, and potentially many others, because of their participation in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 presidential election.

Introduction 3
I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today 7
A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language 7
B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?) 11
II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing 17
A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification 17
B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three? 22
1. Seeking Office 23
a. by election 23
b. by appointment 26
2. Holding Office 27
3. Special Situations 29
C. The Problem of Griffin's Case 35
1. Background 35
2. Chase on Section Three 37
a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" 38
b. The argument from "the intention of the people" 40

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law 42
d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power 44
3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum 45
III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions 49
A. Bills of Attainder 53
B. Ex Post Facto Laws 54
C. Due Process of Law 56
D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment 57
IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping 61
A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies" 63
1. Working definitions 64
2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions 70
3. Intratextualism 72
4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage 74
a. President Lincoln 75
b. Congress 79
i. The Ironclad Oath 80
ii. The Second Confiscation Act 81
c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases 84
5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples 87
a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally) 87
b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates 93
6. Legislative History 99
7. Early Applications of Section Three 100
B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred? 104
C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election 112
1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion 112
2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort" 116
a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation 117
b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office 118
c. Beyond Trump 122
Conclusion 124

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude* & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Introduction

"Section 3 has long since faded into history."
- Eric Foner[1]

Reports of Section Three's demise are greatly exaggerated. It turns out that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment remains of direct and dramatic relevance today—a vital, fully operative rule of constitutional law with potentially far-reaching contemporary real-world consequences. Section Three remains in legal force, and has a broad substantive sweep.

Here is what it says:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.[2]

This section of the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular historical situation and acute problem arising in the aftermath of the Civil War.

---

* Harry Kalven, Jr. Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.
 Distinguished University Chair and Professor of Law, University of St. Thomas Law School. We thank Frank Bowman, Steve Calabresi, Josh Chafetz, John Harrison, Ed Hartnett, Daniel Hemel, Brian Kalt, Myles Lynch, Gerard Magliocca, Michael McConnell, Derek Muller, Farah Peterson, Eric Posner, Micah Quigley, Richard Re, Michael L. Rosin, Stephen Sachs, Greg Sisk, Seth Barrett Tillman, and workshop participants at the University of Chicago Law School and University of St. Thomas Law School for helpful comments on the first draft of this article, T.J. Bowman, Nicole Catlin, Connie Gong, Sarah Leitner, James Marmaduke, Matt Phillips, and Georgios Sarris for valuable research assistance, and countless others for discussions about these issues—though not all of them gave aid or comfort to our conclusions.

[1] Eric Foner, The Second Founding: How the Civil War and Reconstruction Remade the Constitution 85 (2019).

[2] U.S. Const. art. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States in the South had purported (unconstitutionally)[3] to secede from the Union; they had purported to form the (so-called) "Confederate States of America" in rebellion against the authority of the U.S. Constitution; and they had waged a bloody four-year war of rebellion against the United States. Yet even after the rebellion had been defeated, Southern States had audaciously sent to Congress, to serve as U.S. Senators and Representatives, men who had notoriously violated previously sworn oaths to support the U.S. Constitution by subsequently engaging in or supporting secession, rebellion, and civil war against the authority of the United States (to say nothing of those now serving again in their state governments). The former Confederates who arrived in Washington included "four Confederate generals, four colonels, several Confederate congressmen and members of Confederate state legislatures, and even the vice president of the Confederacy, Alexander Stephens."[4]

The Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment rightly regarded the situation as outrageous—not only morally, but practically. If former Confederates held the levers of federal and state government power, effective "reconstruction" of the political order and any hope of extending the full and equal protection of the laws to the newly freed former slaves would be at an end. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment responded to that outrage, enacting a sweeping disqualification from state and federal office of those who had, as legislators or officers in the federal or state government prior to the War, sworn required oaths of loyalty to the United States Constitution and subsequently engaged in "insurrection or rebellion" against the U.S. constitutional authority or given "aid or comfort" to its enemies. Only a two-thirds majority vote of both houses of Congress could remove that sweeping disqualification.

Fast-forward a century and a half. The events surrounding efforts to overturn the result of the presidential election of 2020 have sparked renewed scholarly, judicial, and political interest in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[5] The core events are familiar to all—the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for States' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several States; the efforts of Members of Congress to assert a similar power to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; the fomenting

---

[3] See infra note 231 and sources cited there.

[4] Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 377 (2005); see also Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 176-179 (1960); Allen C. Guelzo, Reconstruction: A Concise History 25 (2018).

[5] The most important scholarly articles (to which we are deeply indebted) are Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment.. 87 (2021); Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty and Disqualification: Reconstructing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 William & Mary Bill of Rights J. 153 (2021), both of which were written before the events of January 6, and Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-to Guide, Lawfare (Jan. 19, 2021), available at https://www.lawfareblog.com/disqualifying-insurrectionists-and-rebels-how-guide.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and immediate incitement of a mob to attempt to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes—all in an attempt to prevent the defeated incumbent President, Donald Trump, from losing power in accordance with the Constitution.

This was undoubtedly a serious assault on the American constitutional order. Not since the Civil War has there been so serious a threat to the foundations of the American constitutional republic. It takes little imagination to describe the efforts to maintain Trump in office, notwithstanding his defeat, as an attempted political coup d'etat. These actions culminated in the incitement and execution of a violent uprising at the Capitol on January 6, 2021—an "insurrection" aimed at preventing Congress and the incumbent Vice President from performing their constitutional responsibilities to count the votes for President and Vice President in the 2020 election. Several of the people involved in these events—most notably the defeated President, Donald Trump—had previously taken oaths to support the Constitution. If they engaged in or gave aid and comfort to an insurrection against the constitutional government, Section Three would appear to bar them from holding office again.

As legal officials and citizens generally have begun to confront the application of Section Three, they have foundered on the most fundamental questions. How does Section Three's disqualification apply—does it apply—to those who planned, supported, encouraged, assisted, incited, or otherwise participated in the events surrounding the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020? Does Section Three's century-and-a-half old disqualification, designed for the aftermath of the Civil War, even remain legally operative in the first place? If so, what must be done to enforce Section Three? Does it require implementing legislation or criminal trials (or impeachments) before its disqualification kicks in? How does Section Three interact with the rest of the constitutional order—are its subjects protected by constitutional principles of attainder, anti-retroactivity, due process and free speech? And if Section Three does apply—to what and to whom? What actions count as having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" against the Constitution of the United States or having "given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof"? Which officials are covered by Section Three's exclusions?

This article attempts to answer these questions. It makes four key points (or clusters of points):

First. Section Three remains legally operative. It is no less part of the Constitution than the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is not a dead letter. The Constitution is a binding, authoritative written text, not a collection of specific historical purposes and intentions. Where the text applies, it applies. Its legal force is not limited to the immediate problem or purpose that prompted its enactment. Section Three is not limited to the circumstances of the Civil War and Reconstruction, even if the meaning of its terms may be illuminated by that experience and history.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor has Section Three somehow been "repealed" by Congress's two major nineteenth-century statutes granting amnesty to those covered by Section Three. This is not because it would be impossible for a constitutional provision to expire by its terms after a period of time, or upon the occurrence of a particular event, or upon action taken by future actors. Article I, Section 9, for example, created a constitutional prohibition of most congressional regulation of the international slave trade for a period of twenty years—but its prohibition then vanished in 1808. Section Three, however, does not work that way. It imposes a general, prospective, rule of disqualification, which Congress may remove by two-thirds vote of both houses only once it has occurred. Section Three is prospective; Congressional amnesty is retrospective.

Second. Section Three is legally self-executing. That is, Section Three's disqualification is constitutionally automatic whenever its terms are satisfied. Section Three requires no legislation or adjudication to be legally effective. It is enacted by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its disqualification, where triggered, just is. It follows that Section Three's disqualification may and should be followed and carried out by all whose duties are affected by it. In many cases, Section Three will give rise to justiciable controversies in the courts. In others it will be enforceable by state and federal officials. But no prior judicial decision, and no implementing legislation, is required for Section Three to be carried out by officials sworn to uphold the Constitution whose duties present the occasion for applying Section Three's commands. Section Three is ready for use.

While Section Three's requirements could be made the subject of enforcement legislation by Congress, under its general power under Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce" the provisions of the amendment, no such legislation is constitutionally required as a prerequisite to Section Three doing what Section Three itself does. Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase's circuit court opinion to the contrary, In re Griffin,[6] is simply wrong on this point—full of sleight of hand, motivated reasoning, and self-defeating maneuvers—as we will explain at length. In re Griffin should be hooted down the pages of history, purged from our constitutional understanding of Section Three.

Third. Section Three supersedes (or satisfies) earlier-enacted constitutional provisions to the extent of any supposed conflict between them. Section Three, at the time it was adopted as part of the Constitution, imposed a disqualification from office based on an individual's past conduct. Even if imposition of such a disability might otherwise, if done by statute, have been a forbidden Ex Post Facto law or Bill of Attainder, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment constitutionally supersedes any prior provision conflicting with its terms.

[6] 11 F. Cas. 7, 22-27 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This principle extends to a more unsettling point. To the extent Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" or giving "aid or comfort" to "the enemies" might turn out to be in tension with the First Amendment's protection of freedom of speech, Section Three supersedes the First Amendment to the extent of any true conflict. To be sure, the proper construction of Section Three's terms ("insurrection," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "enemies") will leave much speech and advocacy completely free. But in the cases where it does not, the terms of Section Three, not the constructions of the First Amendment, decide where the line is.

This leads to the article's fourth and final group of points:

Fourth. Section Three's disqualification is sweeping in its terms. It disqualifies from future office-holding persons who "engaged in"—an expansive and encompassing term connoting many forms of participation in or active support of—a broad swath of activity covered by the terms "insurrection or rebellion" or the giving of "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of the nation or its constitutional order. It applies to a broad swath of civilian, military, and legislative office holders who swore oaths of fidelity to the Constitution, and it disqualifies such persons from holding in the future any of an extraordinarily broad swath of public offices. Taking Section Three seriously, on its own terms, means taking seriously the enormous sweep of the disqualification it creates. And, we will argue, taking Section Three seriously means that its constitutional disqualifications from future state and federal officeholding extend to participants in the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020, including former President Donald Trump and others. The substantive terms of Section Three's prohibition are not themselves difficult or inscrutable (even if there might be questions of application at the outer edges of the text's meaning). But they are potentially breathtaking in their straightforward consequences.

In what follows, we develop each of these four core points at length.

Section Three remains a valid, prospective, enforceable, self-executing, broad, and relevant part of our Constitution. It falls to us to fulfill our duties to it. These include the duties of legislative bodies, state and federal election officials, executive officers, and perhaps others to take up the Constitution, including Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and wield it faithfully and forcefully against its enemies. Taking Section Three seriously means excluding from present or future office those who sought to subvert lawful government authority under the Constitution in the aftermath of the 2020 election by engaging in insurrection or rebellion or giving aid or comfort to enemies of the lawful constitutional order.

I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today

A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The first step in our argument is an easy one, but perhaps not immediately obvious to everyone: Section Three's disqualification remains an operative rule of the Constitution. The reason this might not be obvious, at least to the uninitiated, is that Section Three plainly was designed for a specific historical situation—the circumstances of Reconstruction following the end of the Civil War. The implication, in the eyes of some, might be that that historical situation limits the scope of the provision's operation. We think any such inference badly mistaken. Section Three was prompted by historical circumstances, but that does not in any way detract from its enduring force.

To be sure, Section Three clearly bears the hallmarks of its historical context. It is, for one thing, a radical rule. The sheer sweep of the disqualification from offices that it imposed on former Southern officeholders-turned-rebels was dramatic. Its operation was hugely disruptive of antebellum patterns of elite political leadership, apparently indifferent to inconvenience, and seemingly rather punitive in its consequences. Section Three is harsh. It is categorical. It is insistent. It seems to have been deliberately designed to turn the prior Southern political order upside down. As Eric Foner puts it, "Section 3 aimed to promote a sweeping transformation of Southern public life."[7]

In these respects, the disqualification reflects and embodies the distinctive political impulses of the so-called Radical Republican Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866. If its disqualification had radical policy consequences for the South, so be it.[8] It was more important to strip insurrectionists and rebels of governing power completely, to remake Southern political society thoroughly, and to prevent Southern backsliding from the full consequences of Union victory entirely, than to be concerned about such things as seeming harshness, impracticality, or disruptiveness. Section Three is very much a creation and creature of its day.

Yet it is (or should be) basic constitutional law that it is the enduring text of the Constitution that supplies the governing rule, not the ostensible "purpose" or specific historical situation for which the text was written. Constitutional provisions, written into our fundamental law, live beyond the circumstances that prompted their adoption. And many such constitutional provisions are written in broad, or general, terms that obviously extend beyond the specific situation or situations that led to their enactment. Sometimes this is by design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule, applicable to a broad class of circumstances, as a more general, "neutral," way of addressing a class of situations of which the specific problem motivating the writing of the text might be just one instance. The thinking might be that if the principle giving rise to the text is a correct one, it should be correct in like circumstances, not just the one situation that provoked the rule's adoption. And sometimes a text's breadth and

---

[7] Eric Foner, Reconstruction, 1863-1877, at 260 (1988).
[8] Mark Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 1 (2023, University Press of Kansas).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

generality might not reflect conscious design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule that unintentionally went further than the problem they had in mind. Put colloquially, the text sometimes "overshoots" its drafters' intended purposes. (A text might undershoot the problem its framers had in mind to address, too—or achieve only part of its intended purpose, perhaps because of political compromise.)

The reason does not really matter. It is the rule as drafted and enacted in the written text that counts, whether it goes further than the purposes supposed to have inspired its adoption, or even whether it falls short of fully achieving those purposes. While evidence of intention, usage, purpose, and political context can assist in ascertaining the meaning of the enactment, it is that objective meaning that constitutes the law, not the ostensible purposes or motivations that supposedly lay behind it. This is "originalism," our system's basic method for interpreting the Constitution and its amendments.[9]

Consider, for example, Section One of the same Fourteenth Amendment. As a matter of historical purpose, the specific mischief the framers of Section One had in mind was the enactment of "Black Codes" in Southern States that discriminated against the newly freed former slaves. But the words chosen by the drafters to enact the rule embodied in the text command, in general terms, that no state shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" nor deny to any "person" within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws"—rules not cast in racial terms at all, let alone limited to the immediate situation of former enslaved persons. The rules enacted apply to all persons irrespective of race. So it was entirely plausible for lawyers to argue that Section One also barred the same kind of discrimination against women citizens that it barred against black citizens. It doesn't matter that the drafts*men* of the amendment might not have had women "in mind" if women are covered by the meaning of the words they actually wrote and ratified.[10] Similarly, it was entirely plausible to argue that Section One went so far as to ban racially segregated schools.[11] The answers to each of these questions turn on the objective, original

---

[9] See Vasan Kesavan & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Interpretive Force of the Constitution's Secret Drafting History, 91 Geo. L. J. 1113, 1124-1148 (2004); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Does the Constitution Prescribe Rules for Its Own Interpretation? 103 Nw. U. L. Rev. 857, 872-883 (2009); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Misunderstood Eleventh Amendment, 169 U Pa. L. Rev. 609, 624-625 (2021); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, Grounding Originalism, 113 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1455, 1456-1460 (2019). For purposes of this article, we can bracket any differences in emphasis between Paulsen's objective-original-meaning originalism and Baude's original-law originalism.

[10] We have used such examples before. Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 901-902; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Text, the Whole Text, and Nothing but the Text, So Help Me God: Un-Writing Amar's Unwritten Constitution, 81 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1385, 1421 n. 68 (2014); William Baude, Jud Campbell, & Stephen Sachs, General Law and the Fourteenth Amendment , 76 Stan. L. Rev. at 67-68 (forthcoming 2024).

[11] We have used this example before, too. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839-840 (1993); William Baude, Is Originalism Our Law?, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2349, 2380-2381 (2015). See also Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 66.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

meaning of "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and "equal protection of the laws," not whether the 1866 Congress and subsequent ratifiers had thought through the possible radical implications of their own work. If the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment's terms forbade racially discriminatory classifications of any and all kinds, as a matter of the rules of late-1860s language and usage, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether it was intended or expected that governments could enforce certain types of racial discrimination, like enforced racial segregation. The rule as adopted might overshoot the purposes, expectations, or desires of those who voted for it. But the rule is the rule; the text's meaning is the text's meaning.

Thus, if the framers and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment enacted a general rule in Section Three—a disqualification from future officeholding keyed to having taken an oath to the Constitution and subsequently engaging in insurrection or rebellion against the United States—rather than a provision that by its terms applied only to the case of former Civil War secessionists and Confederate officials and officers,[12] it is the general rule that matters. That the rule had a particular political purpose behind it as a matter of history might be an aid to correct interpretation of the language supplying that rule. (We will make such an argument below, concerning the meaning, in context, of the phrase "insurrection or rebellion.")[13] But in the end the question is what rule was enacted. If Section Three's rule fell short somehow, missing some folks its drafters might have meant to ensnare, those persons are not ensnared. The text might (or might not) be thought deficient in this regard—as having failed to fulfill its full purpose. But the text means what it says. Similarly, if the rule supplied by the objective meaning of the text runs right on past the specific historical purpose for which it was enacted and embraces as well other insurrectionists, rebels, and aiders and comforters of enemies, that rule must be given full legal effect as part of the Constitution. The rule's overbreadth in terms of its perceived purpose, and even its inconvenience as a consequence of such overbreadth, are beside the point.[14]

---

[12] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history of Section Three confirms that this is what the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment did. Earlier drafts had limited the Section's application to the "late insurrection." Later versions dropped this limitation and generalized Section Three's application to "insurrection" and "rebellion." See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2767-68, 2770 2869, 2921; see also Mark A. Graber, Rewarding Loyalty (?) and Punishing Treason Through Disenfranchisement and Bans on Officeholding: Section 3, at 3-4 (unpublished chapter, forthcoming in The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 2, University Press of Kansas) (documenting this development).

[13] Infra Part IV.A.

[14] See, e.g., Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 908-909 (1994) (making this point about the disqualification of some senators and representatives from eligibility for certain appointed offices posed by the Emoluments Clause of Article I, § 6, cl. 2); William Baude, The 2023 Scalia Lecture: Beyond Textualism?, 46 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y (forthcoming 2023) ("Sometimes rules go beyond their reasons; a rule can be overbroad compared to the reasons for enacting it. And sometimes rules are underbroad; a rule cannot quite do all the things that you might want to do given the reasons for enacting the rule. Textualism recognizes that when the judge enforces the law, the law's rule might sometimes be different from what the people who enacted the law would have wanted had they thought about the situation."). For an extended discussion of the abuse of arguments

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, we take it as almost too obvious to require stating that constitutional provisions have indefinite life unless and until repealed or amended by subsequent constitutional enactments. The fact that an unrepealed, unamended provision of law is "old" does not in any way weaken its legal force. The First Amendment is old too, as is the entire original Constitution. But both remain in force. This is true even if the purpose for which a constitutional provision was originally written has ceased to be relevant, or even if the constitutional provision at issue might be thought in today's society to be something of an anachronism.[15] There are, of course, some self-identified living constitutionalists who deny this point—who think that old texts have a legal shelf life and lose their potency over time, as "the interest in sovereignty fades."[16] But in our view, this just shows what is wrong with such living constitutionalism.[17] The Constitution is not a spice cabinet.

All of this might seem to belabor the obvious. Few interpreters of Section Three explicitly deny that it continues to govern new insurrections and rebellions.[18] But sometimes we wonder if this kind of denial is sneaking in to people's intuitions—subtly infecting and distorting the actual interpretation of Section Three. So let us start from the right first principles: Section Three remains constitutionally fully in force, as alive as the day it was enacted.

B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?)

But what about this? The second sentence of Section Three provides that Congress "may by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[19] Just as the first sentence's disqualification is not limited specifically to the Civil War, neither is Congress's power to grant amnesty. Thus, Congress can, by the requisite vote, remove any disqualification that exists by virtue of the operation of Section Three. But just exactly how far does that power reach? Could Congress, by two-thirds majorities, essentially extinguish the legally operative effect of Section Three entirely, by removing the disability imposed by Section Three generally, prospectively, and universally? Put from inconvenience, see infra Part II.C.2.a (discussing Chief Justice Chase's appalling opinion in Griffin's Case).

---

[15] Michael Stokes Paulsen, Dirty Harry and the Real Constitution, 64 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1457, 1486-1490 (1997) (discussing privilege against self-incrimination).

[16] David A. Strauss, The Supreme Court, 2014 Term—Foreword: Does the Constitution Mean What It Says?, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (2015); see also Adam M. Samaha, Originalism's Expiration Date, 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1295 (2008).

[17] See Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1487 (responding to Strauss).

[18] For a rare example, see an argument made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935) ("It was also seriously contended by counsel that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment was an outgrowth of the Civil War and that such a provision cannot possibly apply to the present case").

[19] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

more vividly: Can Congress, by two-thirds vote of each house, essentially "explode" Section Three—render it inoperative in the future, for all time?

These questions turn out not to be completely hypothetical. In two statutes enacted in the late nineteenth century, Congress might arguably have done this. One statute (from 1872) removed "from all persons whomsoever"—except designated categories of individuals—all "political disabilities imposed" by Section Three.[20] Another (from 1898) further removed "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred."[21] And indeed, in a recent case (brought by then-Representative Madison Cawthorn) a federal judge relied on these statutes to conclude that Section Three was now legally dead.[22] Is that right? Do these statutes—can these statutes—grant amnesty to all insurrectionists, past, present and future?[23]

No. While the argument is not entirely bonkers, it does not withstand more serious scrutiny. It is wrong on both statutory and constitutional grounds. Consider the statutes first. Neither one purports to rescind Section Three's operative rule for all time. They do not pretend to explode the first sentence of the constitutional provision.

Begin with the 1872 act. In 1872, after a period of case-by-case consideration of amnesty requests, Congress, as mentioned above, enacted a general statute removing disqualification from a broad description of persons embraced by Section Three's prohibition. As Professor Magliocca recounts, the statute reflected a mixture of motives: genuine mercy and magnanimity; the practical consequences of Section Three in the South; the burdens and biases of case-by-case consideration of private bills; the politics of a presidential election year; and the general but regrettable retreat from aggressive Congressional Reconstruction.[24] But what is most important is what it says. The statute reads, in full:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-

---

[20] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[21] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.
[22] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 889-892 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022). This argument, too, was made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55.
[23] The power in general of Congress by two-thirds vote of each House to remove Section Three's disability and the history of its exercise are the central themes of Professor Gerard Magliocca's excellent article, cited supra note 5.
[24] See generally Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 112-120.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States.[25]

The key words are "imposed" and "[hereby] removed." The words of the 1872 statute are used in the past tense: the statute removed disqualifications imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment—that is, disabilities that had already become legally effective. That is simply the natural reading, and the natural implication, of the language employed.

Indeed, this is almost exactly what the Fourth Circuit recently said in reversing the district court's decision in the Cawthorn case: Congress in 1872 employed "the past-tense version" of the verb "impose," thus "indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'"[26] Moreover, the Fourth Circuit continued: "[t]he operative clause's principal verb—'removed'—reinforces this conclusion. In the mid-nineteenth century, as today, that word generally connoted taking away something that already exists rather than forestalling something yet to come."[27]

By contrast, the district court had faulted Congress for not being more explicit: Congress "could have limited the Act to remove Section 3's disabilities from 'persons currently subject to the disabilities' or 'persons against whom the disabilities were lodged' at the time (i.e., the 'Confederates') but did not do so."[28] Therefore, the district court concluded, by the "plain language of Section 3 and the 1872 Act, Congress removed all of Section 3's disabilities from all persons whomsoever who were not explicitly excepted."[29] With all due respect, the district court appears to have been simply hoodwinked by the (for lack of a better word) feel of the "all persons whomsoever" language and completely missed the other language that made clear the statute's past tense.

What about the 1898 statute? Does it yield a different result? On the cusp of the Spanish-American War, at a moment of seeming national unity and perhaps a desire to put aside old sectional grievances (and, one might add more cynically, at a time of rising Jim Crow sentiment)[30]—Congress enacted another general disqualification-removal statute. This one removed the disqualification for everybody, without exception. Its language is even more laconic:

---

[25] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[26] Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022).
[27] Id.
[28] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 891 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Carthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022).
[29] Id.
[30] See, e.g., Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896); Cummings v. Richmond County Bd. of Ed. 175 U.S. 528 (1899). See also Michael Stokes Paulsen & Luke Paulsen, The Constitution: An Introduction 195-201 (2015).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed.[31]

In one sense, that's about as categorical, across-the-board a disqualification-removal as one can imagine: the disability imposed by section three is hereby removed. Period. No exceptions. But here it is also even clearer that the 1898 act is backward-looking. Like the 1872 act, the 1898 act uses past-tense language: a disability (already) "imposed" is now being "removed" from its prior legal existence. What's more, the 1898 act says that the Section Three disqualification being removed was one "heretofore incurred." That is unmistakably backward-looking, past-occurrence language.

What might otherwise—that is, but for the clarity of the "heretofore incurred" language—give the 1898 act the feel of a now-and-ever-shalt-be removal, eliminating all future Section Three disqualification as well as any and all extant ones, is the Act's reference to "the disability" imposed by Section Three. This singular reference might be taken to suggest that Section Three's disqualification was thought a one-time-only, single-shot, Civil War era occurrence.[32] If Section Three was good for one rebellion only, then repealing it in the past tense repeals all that there is. But of course, as we have argued, Section Three is not limited to one rebellion only, and so far as we can tell even the Fifty-fifth Congress did not think that it was[33] (nor would it matter if they did).

In any event, though these statutes do not even purport to sunset Section Three for the future, they do prompt us to consider the interesting question of Congress's constitutional power: What if they did purport to sunset Section Three for the future? Is Congress's constitutional power to remove Section Three's disqualification general and prospective, letting it remove Section Three's disqualification once and for all, including for future situations? We think not.

To be clear, we don't think there's anything inherently unthinkable or absurd about the idea of an "exploding" or otherwise defeasible constitutional provision. Legal drafters might sometimes want to provide for an expiration event or expiration

---

[31] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

[32] For instance, the D.C. Circuit's recess-appointments opinion in Noel Canning v. NLRB, 705 F.3d 490, 500 (D.C. Cir. 2013) aff'd only on alternate grounds, 134 S.Ct. 2550 (2014), leaned heavily on "this difference between the word choice 'recess' and 'the Recess'," arguing that "[a]s a matter of cold, unadorned logic, it makes no sense to [say] that when the Framers said 'the Recess,' what they really meant was 'a recess.' This is not an insignificant distinction. In the end it makes all the difference." Id. But a majority of the Supreme Court did not share this view of the text. NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S.Ct. 2550, 2561 (2014).

[33] For the brief legislative history of the 1898 act, see 31 Cong. Rec. 5367-5419 (1898).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

date, even in an enduring Constitution. Article I's Slave Importation Clause, protecting the international slave trade, exploded after twenty years.[34] So too the initial allocation of representatives to states is written in to the text of the Constitution, even though it was then exploded by the subsequent census.[35] Other provisions of the Constitution set baseline rules that Congress has power to modify. Article I, section 4 does that with respect to state legislative power over congressional elections: "Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations."[36] Article III, section 2 does that with respect to the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction, setting a default rule subject to "such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."[37] The Twentieth Amendment, in Section 2, sets a default date of Congress's annual meeting.[38]

There's no reason why the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment could not have similarly drafted Section Three to provide for the provision's own extinction after a supermajority vote of Congress.[39] But that is simply not what Section Three says. The second sentence of Section Three is not a grant of power to explode, or amend, the content of the rule stated in the first sentence. It is a grant of power to remove the consequences of the rule's operation.

To see this, break down Section Three into its component parts: Section Three has two sentences. The first one describes at length the disqualification for those who have taken a covered oath and engaged in insurrection or related conduct. Of course, those two things must actually have happened for the rule of Section Three's first sentence to be triggered—for a disqualification to have come into legal effect.

---

[34] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 1. ("The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.") For a scathing critique of the substance and purpose of this proviso, see, e.g., Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 81-83.

[35] U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl.3.

[36] U.S. Const. art. I, § 4.

[37] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2.

[38] U.S. Const. amend. XX, §2.

[39] We thus part ways with Professor Magliocca here. Magliocca argues (in addition to versions of the points we make above) that Section Three's second sentence cannot be read as authorizing Congress to remove future disabilities because this "would mean that Congress basically repealed Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1872. But Congress cannot repeal a part of the Constitution by itself: only a constitutional amendment can do that." Gerard N. Magliocca, The January 6th Insurrectionists Do Not Have Amnesty, JURIST – Academic Commentary, April 13, 2022, https://www.jurist.org/commentary/2022/04/gerard-magliocca-january-6-insurrectionists/. See also Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1314 (N.D. Ga. 2022) ("'Congress has no power whatever to repeal a provision of the Constitution by a mere statute'") (quoting 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55).

This strikes us as not quite right: If Section Three in fact authorized prospective removal of disqualifications arising from future acts of insurrection, a statute doing so would not be repealing a constitutional provision but exercising a power conferred by that constitutional provision—a power to terminate the provision's ongoing legal effect.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second sentence (the "But" sentence) then gives Congress the power to "remove such disability." ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.") The "But" sentence explicitly cross-references the first. Thus, the most natural reading of the two sentences in relation to each other is that the second sentence confers an exceptions power that only comes into existence when the conditions specified in the first sentence have occurred. And to belabor the point a moment further, the word "Remove" means (and meant at the time, according to 1864 dictionaries) to displace or take away something that already exists.[40] This confirms that Congress's removal power therefore only comes into being when a legal disqualification has vested by virtue of the operation of Section Three's first sentence.

Section Three's first sentence is written as a general and prospective rule, not limited to the specific instance of the Civil War. Section Three's second sentence is written as a continuing power to grant relief from disabilities already imposed by the operation of the first sentence. The power to remove an extant legal disability is not a power to rescind the legal rule that creates that disability. Thus, not only has Congress never purported to sunset Section Three, it lacks the power to do so by Section Three's own terms.

* * *

All of this is, we submit, basic. But it is also foundational. Section Three remains legally operative as part of the U.S. Constitution. Its rule of disqualification is general, not limited to the Civil War era. It states a rule of law embodied in the written constitutional text as permanent fundamental law. It possesses prospective force and applies to new situations: wherever the rule applies, the rule applies. And while Congress comprehensively relieved insurrectionists of the disability of disqualifications incurred prior to 1898, it did not (and could not) erase Section Three from the Constitution. Section Three remains in force.

Is anything more required, then, before this provision of the Constitution can (and must) be given effect by U.S. political actors whose powers and duties are such as to call for application of Section Three as a rule of law? Put somewhat differently: Is Section Three a self-executing rule of constitutional law, complete in itself? Or does Section Three require implementing legislation by Congress or some other further legal or administrative action before it has legal force? We take up that question next.

---

[40] Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 1116 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (defining "remove" as "To cause to change place; to move away from the position occupied; to displace") (quoted in Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022)).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing

Our second point is colossally important—a major sticking point for some. But it is a point we think should be obvious: Section Three is self-executing. That is, its disqualifications from office are constitutionally automatic whenever its conditions for disqualification are met. Nothing more needs to be done in order for Section Three's prohibitions to be legally effective. Section Three requires no implementing legislation by Congress. Its commands are enacted into law by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Where Section Three's legal rule of constitutional disqualification is satisfied, an affected prospective officeholder is disqualified. Automatically. Legally.

In the years immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted this seemingly obvious reading of Section Three was deemed inconvenient, rejected in the highest quarters, and has since faded from view. We thus give the point considerable attention here. Our analysis here is organized in three steps. First, we take Section Three itself, and explain why it has direct legal effect. Second, we discuss how this legal effect can and must be recognized by all persons and institutions who have the occasion to apply it in the performance of their duties—election officials, state and federal administrators, legislatures, courts. Third, we consider at some length the leading counterargument to our view: the 1869 opinion written by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase as a circuit court judge in Griffin's Case. Even if the result in that case is defensible—which is far from clear, and raises grave separation-of-powers problems of its own—its argument against self-execution is so wrong as to prove our case. Section Three is legally self-executing as operative constitutional law.

A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification

Before we consider Section Three itself, consider the Constitution as a whole. Though too many constitutional law teachers and casebooks begin their study of the Constitution with questions of judicial review, and cases like Marbury,[41] in doing so they put the cart before the horse. The horse is the Constitution, which is itself the "supreme law of the land."[42] Our system is one of constitutional supremacy, not judicial supremacy or legislative supremacy. As a general matter, this means that it is the Constitution which states the law, and it is the job of government officials to apply it, not the other way around.

This general truth is no less true of Section Three. Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: "No person shall be" directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall [41] But not ours! See Paulsen, McConnell, Bray and Baude, The Constitution of the United States (5th ed. 2022).

[42] U.S. Const. art. VI.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

be.[43] It does not grant a power to Congress (or any other body) to enact or effectuate a rule of disqualification. It enacts the rule itself. Section Three directly adopts a constitutional rule of disqualification from office.

This should be no surprise, as the same thing is true of the Constitution's other rules of disqualification from office. A person who has not attained to the age of thirty-five is not qualified to be President of the United States. This disqualification is automatic. The Constitution's rule is self-executing. "No person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not satisfy the age requirement.[44] The disqualification requires no further legislation or other action, by anybody, to be operative. The disqualification simply is. So too for Article II's citizenship and length-of-residency eligibility prerequisites for the office of President. And so too for the constitutional qualifications—age, citizenship, state inhabitancy—for members of the House and Senate: "No Person shall be" a Representative who does not meet Article I, section 2's requirements.[45] "No Person shall be" a U.S. Senator who does not meet Article I, section 3's requirements.[46] These restrictions on eligibility are legally binding simply by virtue of their presence in the Constitution.

The language of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment parallels, even duplicates, the language used in these other provisions to express other constitutional disqualifications from officeholding.[47] None of these disqualifications requires any further legal action or legislation to be operative. Where a constitutional legal disqualification exists, it simply exists. It is a binding rule of constitutional law.

Again, this kind of binding rule should be no surprise. The Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery, enacted a few years earlier, works the same way. Immediately upon adoption of the amendment, slavery was legally extinguished as a matter of constitutional law. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist ...," the Thirteenth Amendment provides.[48] The institution of slavery was immediately, legally, constitutionally gone.[49] The Thirteenth Amendment contains a separate section granting Congress the power to enforce the prohibition of slavery.[50] But that enforcement power scarcely means that the ban on slavery contained in Section One was inoperative unless and until Congress passed legislation making it operative. Such a

---

[43] We have borrowed this felicitous phrasing from John Harrison. Cf. John Harrison, The Power of Congress to Limit the Jurisdiction of the Federal Courts and the Text of Article III, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 203, 211 (1997) ("The Vesting Clause is a self-executing enactment; it lays down rules by saying what shall be.")

[44] U.S. Const. art. II, §2, cl. 5 (emphasis added).

[45] U.S. Const. art. I, §2, cl. 2(emphasis added).

[46] U.S. Const. art. I, §3, cl. 3 (emphasis added).

[47] See Josh Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few 168 (2007).

[48] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §1 (emphasis added).

[49] See Alexander Tsesis, The Thirteenth Amendment and American Freedom: A Legal History 48–53 (2004) (documenting reactions of persons learning of their freedom immediately after ratification).

[50] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

position would be ridiculous. The power to enforce adds to the substantive prohibition—it is not a subtraction from or suspension of it.

And of course, the same is true elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment too. We take it as obvious that Section One is self-executing. Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment, like Section Three states directly operative rules of constitutional law: "No state shall," in Section One, and "No person shall" in Section Three.[51] Both of these provisions are subject to additional enforcement legislation by Congress under Section Five. Yet it is common ground that Section One is self-executing. Nobody thinks (for example) that the prohibitions of Section One are inoperative unless and until Congress enacts legislation pursuant to its Section Five legislative power to bring them to life.

In each instance, Congress certainly can enact legislation "to enforce" the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments' commands, pursuant to their grants of legislative power.[52] Doing so can unlock additional procedural mechanisms, additional deference by courts to Congress's view of the law, and so on. The Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and more were designed to enforce Section One of the Thirteenth and Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment. But, to repeat, the existence of an enforcement power does not mean that the Amendment's specific legal commands lack any independent, self-executing force.[53]

So too, Congress in fact enacted implementing legislation in 1870 to enforce Section Three, authorizing quo warranto civil suits brought by the United States to remove state officials unconstitutionally holding office in violation of Section Three and imposing criminal penalties for knowing violations of Section Three.[54] But Congress's choice to trigger additional procedural mechanisms and federal jurisdiction

---

[51] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 1, 3. Nothing here turns on it, but Section Four of the Fourteenth Amendment, which repudiates rebel and slave debts while guaranteeing the legal obligation of the national debt, also seems to be self-executing. Section Two, which alters Article I, section 2's rule for how Representatives "shall be apportioned," presents a more complicated case. Its rule is immediately operative, like the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, but its rule operates by changing an apportionment process undertaken by Congress. In practice, Congress has ignored it, see Michael Rosin, The Five-Fifths Rule and the Unconstitutional Presidential Election of 1916, 46 Hist. Meth. 57 (2013); Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 395; see also email from John Harrison to Akhil Reed Amar, quoted in id. at 611 n. 96, and it is hard to see how anybody else can realistically enforce it.

[52] U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2; amdt. XIV, sec. 5.

[53] Indeed, Section One was added to an early draft of the Fourteenth Amendment precisely to ensure that state Black Codes would be unenforceable even if there were no federal legislation saying so. Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 30-31, 63-64.

[54] Act of May 31, 1870 (First Ku Klux Klan Act), ch. 114 §§14, 15, 16 Stat. 140, 143. The criminal prohibition in Section 15 of the Act was repealed in the 1909 codification of the penal code, 35 Stat. 1088, 1153, § 341 (1909), and the quo warranto provision in Section 14 was repealed during the 1948 positive law codifications of Title 28 of the U.S. Code, see Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, § 39; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 206 n. 365. Neither of these codifications was thought to make a substantive change by repealing these provisions, see generally William W. Barron, The Judicial Code, 8 F.R.D. 439 (1949); see also The United States Compiled Statutes, Title XIX, page 4459 (1916), which were for Section Three cases does not mean that there was no constitutional prohibition before Congress acted.[55] Congress enforced Section Three's prohibition. Congress was not the one to give it legal effect. Section Three was effective law all along.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three is also noticeably different from other constitutional provisions that deal with misbehavior—provisions that are not self-executing in the same way. Article III, for instance, describes the offense of treason:

> Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.
>
> The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.[56]

Note the contrast. The Treason Clause defines an offense ("Treason . . . shall consist") but it does not itself convict anybody of treason. Section Three, by contrast, enacts its own disqualification ("No person shall be"). It acts on persons, not offenses. This is driven home by the Treason Clause's specific procedures and powers: "[C]onvict[ions] of treason" require two witnesses or a public confession; and "Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason." Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, by contrast enacts its standard and imposes its consequences all at once.

Similarly, the Constitution's impeachment provisions say that those who are impeached "shall be removed from Office."[57] But the Constitution does not itself impeach anybody. Instead, it specifies that somebody else—the House and Senate—must do the impeaching.[58] Again, Section Three's contrast is glaring. The framers of Section Three had the treason clause and impeachment clauses at hand and chose a thought obsolete by then. The repeals therefore certainly did not reflect a decision to preempt or preclude any other existing remedies for Section Three.

---

[55] Professor Magliocca concurs. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 106 & n.101 (noting that "enacting enforcement legislation does not imply that legislation is required" and that the existence of Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment does not imply that the other sections are not self-executing). Indeed, this is especially so because Congress may have been responding to the decision in Griffin's Case (wrongly) holding that such legislation was required for Section Three to have operative legal effect. See infra Part II.C.

[56] U. S. Const. art. III, sec. 3.

[57] U.S. Const. art. II, sec. 4.

[58] U.S. Const. art I, sec. 3 & sec. 4.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

noticeably different path.[59] Section Three does not call for treason trials or the impeachment of insurrections and rebels. It directly imposes an across-the-board disqualification and involves Congress only if Congress wishes to end it.

Section Three's constitutional disqualification, where applicable, just is. It stands on its own as a constitutional rule of law, having come into legal force "as Part of this Constitution," along with the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, "when ratified" as a constitutional amendment.[60] It immediately became "supreme Law of the Land." [61] Its rule took immediate effect. Section Three is, in that sense, legally self-executing.

Is there any serious textual argument to the contrary? We will address Chief Justice Chase's conclusion in Griffin's Case in a moment. But we suspect that resistance to this point often comes instead from some misdirected intuitions. One is the problem of supposed difficulty. It seems easy, perhaps, to apply the constitutional qualifications of age and citizenship.[62] It is pretty obvious what these are and obvious what they demand that we do. But who exactly is disqualified by Section Three is, at least to initial appearances, a more difficult, complicated, and fact-specific question. It is a more difficult question of law because we must plumb the meanings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and so on—and these meanings are not quite as self-evident as "thirty-five years of age" (at least until this article is widely read and accepted). And it is more difficult in practice, because even once we know what the terms of Section Three mean, we must know what exactly every prior-oath-sworn official did.

---

[59] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this understanding. Section Three's opponents criticized the proposal for its immediate consequences on former Confederates, and its proponents seemed to share the same understanding. For opponents, see Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2900 (Senator Doolittle) (amendment "will have the effect of putting a new punishment, not prescribed by the laws, upon all those persons who are embraced within its provisions"); id. at 2916 (Senator Doolittle); id. at 2940 (Senator Hendricks) (complaining about immediate consequences); for proponents, see id. at 2919 (Senator Willey) (defending the amendment's immediate effect because those affected had already "forfeited" their claim to participate in government "by their past conduct'); id. (they lost their "citizenship rights when they committed treason"); Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., App., at 228 (Senator Defrees); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. at 3036 (Senator Henderson) (defending the immediate effect of Section Three against the charge that it is a bill of attainder or ex post facto law); see generally infra Part III.A-B. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-27, 35-37 (documenting all of these discussions) .

[60] U.S. Const. art. V.

[61] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[62] See Gerard N. Magliocca, Background as Foreground: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and January 6th, at 14 n.42 (Mar. 2, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4306094 ("Section Three was unprecedented in the sense that prior restrictions on serving in office were bright-line rules (age and citizenship, for example) instead of standards"). On the other hand, the Constitution's inhabitancy requirement, has proved far from simple in practice. See Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Qualifications of Members of Congress (Jan 15, 2015) at 13-18, https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/R41946.pdf. And there has been recent litigation about the requirement that the President be a "natural born citizen" as well. See Derek T. Muller, "Natural Born" Disputes in the 2016 Election, 85 Fordham L. Rev. 1097 (2016).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Not all participation in insurrection or rebellion is open and notorious. More difficult it may be, to interpret and apply the disqualification of Section Three than the disqualifications of age, citizenship, and residency. But the fact of difficulty is a non sequitur. The fact that it might be hard for us to know today what a legal rule means (or how it applies) does not mean that it is not the legal rule.[63] The Constitution says what it says and we must try to apply it as best we can. To start by asking what is easy for us, and then to assume that the Constitution must mean something that makes our lives easy, is as fallacious as drawing the curve before gathering the data points.[64]

Resistance might also come from the problem of enforcement. The Constitution is generally self-executing law, but still, somebody has to enforce it. Somebody has to read it, understand it, and ensure that our practices conform to its commands. (Many somebodies, actually, as we discuss shortly.) This is true, but again it is a non-sequitur. It is true that government officials must enforce the Constitution, and who does this and how they do it are important questions, maybe the central questions of constitutional law. But the meaning of the Constitution comes first. Officials must enforce the Constitution because it is law; it is wrong to think that it only becomes law if they decide to enforce it. Section Three has legal force already.

B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three?

As we just said, even though Section Three is a self-executing, immediately applicable constitutional legal rule, someone needs to do the actual applying of that rule to particular situations where its application is called for. Section Three's constitutional disqualification exists of its own force as an abstract matter. But someone needs to bring that legal rule to bear in a concrete situation as a practical matter.

Who has the power and duty to do this? We think the answer is: anybody who possesses legal authority (under relevant state or federal law) to decide whether somebody is eligible for office. This might mean different political or judicial actors, depending on the office involved, and depending on the relevant state or federal law. But in principle: Section Three's disqualification rule may and must be followed—applied, honored, obeyed, enforced, carried out—by anyone whose job it is to figure out whether someone is legally qualified to office, just as with any of the Constitution's other qualifications.

---

[63] Christopher R. Green, Constitutional Truthmakers, 32 Notre Dame J. L. Ethics & Pub Pol'y 497, 511-512 (2018).

[64] Cf. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839 (1993) (mocking constitutional interpretation that engages in "the legal equivalent of the method my lab partner and I used in high school chemistry: first draw the desired curve; then plot the data; if time permits, do the experiment"); Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism: Standard and Procedure, 135 Harv. L. Rev. 777 (2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These actors might include (for example): state election officials; other state executive or administrative officials; state legislatures and governors; the two houses of Congress; the President and subordinate executive branch officers; state and federal judges deciding cases where such legal rules apply; even electors for the offices of president and vice president. We will discuss in detail some of these examples presently. But two points are important to keep clear at the outset: First, all of these bodies or entities may possess, within their sphere, the power and duty to apply Section Three as governing law. Second, their authority to do so exists as a function of the powers they otherwise possess. No action is necessary to "activate" Section Three as a prerequisite to its application as law by bodies or persons whose responsibilities call for its application. The Constitution's qualification and disqualification rules exist and possess legal force in their own right, which is what makes them applicable and enforceable by a variety of officials in a variety of contexts.

Consider some illustrations:

1. Seeking Office

a. by election

Anybody who seeks office will at some point need to show that they are entitled to hold that office. At every point that this occurs, Section Three governs. So, for instance, state or local election boards, and state Secretaries of State, may possess state-law authority to make at least initial determinations as to eligibility of candidates for elected office in that state or representing that state in Congress (as authorized by Article I, section 4 of the Constitution)—and, thus, whether or not such candidates shall be placed on a primary or general election ballot.[65] Those state bodies or officers are obliged, often by oath—sometimes by oath mandated by the U.S. Constitution—to act consistently with the requirements of the Constitution in the discharge of their duties.[66] Accordingly, such state actors can and must apply Section Three's disquali-

[65] To be sure, the centralized, government-administered ballot did not come to American until the late Nineteenth Century and so of course states are not constitutionally required to run elections in this way. But if they do, Section Three governs how they carry out their duties.

[66] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.2 ("This Constitution … shall be the supreme Law of the Land"). See also U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."). The nature of the Constitution as supreme, binding law is of course fundamental to the argument for "judicial review," as it is likewise fundamental to the argument for the obligation of all government officials to adhere to the law supplied by the Constitution and give its commands priority over any other source of law or legal duty. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Irrepressible Myth of Marbury, 101 Mich. L. Rev. 2706 (2003); see also William Baude, Severability First Principles, 109 Va. L. Rev. 1, 5-9 (2023).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fication in carrying out their state-law responsibilities—just as they possess the authority and duty to comply with and enforce the Constitution's other qualification-for-office requirements.[67]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work, consider how the state of Georgia entertained a Section Three challenge to the qualifications of Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene under Georgia law. A state administrative law judge took evidence about Representative Greene's involvement in the events of January 6, 2021.[68] The judge proceeded under the theory that if January 6 was a constitutional "insurrection," and if Representative Greene had been part of it, she would be barred from office.[69] But it concluded that the challengers had failed to meet their burden of proof under state law: "In short, even assuming, arguendo, that the Invasion was an insurrection, Challengers presented no persuasive evidence Rep. Greene took any action—direct physical efforts, contribution of personal services or capital, issuance of directives or marching orders, transmissions of intelligence, or even statements of encouragement—in furtherance thereof on or after January 3, 2021."[70] Secretary of State Brad Raffensberger issued a final decision ratifying the hearing officer's proposed findings that day.[71]

Such determinations about ballot eligibility may also be subject to further judicial review. In state courts, these procedures will of course depend on what review is available under state law. Similarly, federal courts might well possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual federal jurisdiction doctrines (such as standing, ripeness, mootness, and abstention), to decide cases of candidate eligibility. Continuing the example, Representative Greene did file a federal lawsuit attempting to enjoin the then-pending state proceedings (mentioned above), and the district court concluded that the case was justiciable and that Younger abstention did not apply, but that Greene's claims failed on the merits.[72] While Greene's appeal to the Eleventh Circuit was pending, she prevailed in the state proceedings, so the case was dismissed as moot.[73] The [67] We note that the determination by state officials that a candidate for election to the U.S. Congress is not disqualified—and may be elected—does not bind the respective houses of Congress, in the exercise of their independent Article I, section 5, powers to act as "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members" and refuse to seat prospective members it judges to be constitutionally disqualified by Section Three or other constitutional limitation. See also infra n. 96 and accompanying text.

---

[68] Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022).

[69] Id. at 5-6.

[70] Id. at 15. The January 3, 2021 cut-off is because that is the date that Representative Greene first took a constitutional oath. The Court also specifically rejected the argument that a Newsmax appearance on January 5, 2021, should be interpreted as a "coded message from Rep. Greene to her co-conspirators to go forward with a previously planned incursion into the Capitol." Id. at 16.

[71] Final Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022).

[72] Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1320 (N.D. Ga. 2022).

[73] Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 909-910 (11th Cir. 2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

details, of course, will vary from case to case. But where any of these tribunals has jurisdiction they too obviously have the power and duty to apply Section Three as the supreme law of the land.

This is not to say that states must provide any particular procedure for bringing a challenge to ballot eligibility qualification or grant a cause of action to particular private individuals to bring such challenges. For instance, in a recent suit seeking to disqualify Arizona Representative Mark Finchem and U.S. Representatives Paul Gosar and Andy Biggs from the 2022 primary ballot, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded that state law did not provide a private cause of action for a disqualification challenge.[74] In principle, that could well be right. Whether to provide a cause of action in such cases is largely a question of state law. Section Three slots in to existing powers and procedures without mandating or micromanaging them.

That said, the Arizona Supreme Court's muddied reasoning in the Finchem-Gosar-Biggs case necessitates a few clarifying points. First, state law can enforce Section Three, and the Fourteenth Amendment does not place any particular presumption against doing so. Unfortunately, the Arizona Supreme Court suggested otherwise, writing that "Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause . . . which suggests that A.R.S. 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates."[75] This inference is mistaken—Congress's power to enforce federal law, including constitutional law, is not exclusive of the states, and states regularly enforce federal law including constitutional law in their own courts.[76]

Second, in some circumstances state law not only can but must enforce Section Three. Under the rule of Testa v. Katt,[77] where a state does open its courts to a cause of action, it must apply federal law evenhandedly to that cause of action. As the unanimous Court put it: "[T]he Constitution and the laws passed pursuant to it are the supreme laws of the land, binding alike upon states, courts, and the people, 'any-thing

---

[74] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[75] Id. at *1. The court did not cite any authority for this interpretation, but its argument does echo a fallacious argument made by Chief Justice Chase in Griffin's Case, which we discuss at greater length presently. See infra Part II.C.2.d. The Arizona Supreme Court also made the additional suggestion that Article I, Section 5 gave Congress "exclusive authority to determine whether to enforce the Disqualification Clause against its prospective members," id. We are skeptical of this point as well, see infra n. 96 and accompanying text, but in any event it would have only applied to federal representatives Gosar and Biggs, not the lead defendant, state representative Finchem. The individual houses of Congress of course have no Article I, Section 5 power, exclusive or otherwise, to determine the membership of state legislatures.

[76] See, e.g., Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458-460 (1990); id. at 469- 470 (Scalia, J., concurring); see also Thomas Koenig & Christopher D. Moore, Of State Remedies and Federal Rights (May 29, 2023) https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4462807.

[77] 330 U.S. 386 (1947).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."[78] And thus "the policy of the federal Act is the prevailing policy in every state."[79] A state cannot treat federal obligations the way it can treat foreign ones.

The Arizona Supreme Court's decision unfortunately can be read to suggest otherwise. The court cryptically wrote that the state "statute's scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law,' and does not include the Disqualification Clause, a legal proscription from holding office."[80] If the court meant to distinguish federal constitutional qualifications from state statutes, it seems to have violated Testa. If the court meant that Section Three's dis-qualification is not a "qualification," that seems nonsensical. And if it meant something else, it is hard to figure out what.

In any event, the real question is what procedure is available for determining whether a candidate is qualified to office. That is basically a question of state law, and the correct procedures will likely vary from state to state. But the courts owe state law a full and fair reading, not one slanted by reticence to acknowledge the life in Section Three.

b. by appointment

Now let us turn to appointments. Just as with elected office, anybody who must decide whether an appointee is qualified must comply with Section Three. Traditionally this includes at a minimum whoever nominated the officer.[81] Thus governors, presidents, and other nominating authorities can and should—indeed, constitutionally must—decline to nominate and appoint to state or federal offices persons who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. And likewise, where nominating authority is subject to additional confirmation—by a state senate, the U.S. Senate, or any other body—that body presumably can and should, constitutionally must, decline to consent to the appointment of such constitutionally disqualified nominees.[82]

---

[78] Id. at 391 (quoting U.S. Const. Art VI, sec. 2).

[79] Id. at 393. To be sure, Testa and especially subsequent cases expanding it have been subject to powerful criticisms as a matter of original meaning, see Ann Woolhandler & Michael G. Collins, State Jurisdictional Independence and Federal Supremacy, 72 Fla. L. Rev. 73, 78-83, 97-105 (2020); Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 742-67 (2009) (Thomas, J., dissenting). We bracket those criticisms here.

[80] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[81] For instance, both President George Washington and President Franklin Roosevelt felt obligated to consider whether their Supreme Court nominees (Patterson and Black, respectively) were constitutionally disqualified by Article I, sec. 6. See William Baude, The Unconstitutionality of Justice Black, 98 Tex. L. Rev. 327, 330, 333-334, 355-356 (2019).

[82] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 914-918 (1994) (discussing constitutional responsibility of political branches to enforce constitutional disqualifications from office irrespective of whether they give rise to a judicial case or controversy, and bemoaning the failure of all to enforce the Emoluments Clause); see also Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 355-356 (similar); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, Straightening Out The Confirmation Mess, 105

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In other words, the election and appointment systems, from top to bottom, frequently make decisions about a candidate's eligibility for office. All of those decisions are legally bound by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment; and all persons making such decisions are correspondingly bound to faithfully interpret, enforce, and apply Section Three.

2. Holding Office

What about those who already hold office—either because Section Three was not attended to before they gained office, or because their disqualifying conduct happened later?[83]

Once again, the answer turns in part on what procedures are available under other law. State officials can be subject to a variety of remedies for unlawfully holding office. They might (or might not) be subject to removal, as a matter of state law, by a private suit quo warranto, by the authority of another executive or judicial officer or administrative board, or perhaps even by the state legislature exercising powers of impeachment or recall. In addition, it is possible that the salaries of such rightfully-disqualified officials—and the legal eligibility of such persons for those salaries—might be subject to the authority and determination of some other state official.

We submit that all such officials—administrators, executives, legislatures—possessing legal authority concerning such matters likewise possess the authority (and duty) to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three's disqualification in the course of exercising that legal authority. And once again: if such determinations are judicially reviewable under state law, the courts likewise possess the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.[84]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work consider how the state of New Mexico removed commissioner Couy Griffin from state office.[85] Griffin was an elected commissioner for Otero County, New Mexico, who promoted, assisted, and

---

Yale L.J. 549, 562-570 (1995) (noting parallel constitutional structural argument for obligation of both the President and the Senate to exercise independent faithful constitutional interpretive judgment in the course of carrying out their respective powers with respect to appointment); Charles L. Black, Jr., A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees, 79 Yale L.J. 657, 658-660 (1970) (similar).

[83] Or because Section Three was not yet adopted as law when they were appointed to office but became operative and disqualified them subsequently. This was the situation presented in Griffin's Case, discussed presently. See infra at II.C.

[84] Of course, federal courts, too, might possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual rules and conditions, to decide such lawsuits just as they will for state determinations of election candidate eligibility. See supra notes 72-73 and accompanying text. And when doing so, they have the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.

[85] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ultimately joined in the January 6 insurrection against the Capitol. A group of New Mexico citizens filed a quo warranto action against Griffin under New Mexico law, seeking his removal from office. The New Mexico district court took evidence, received legal arguments, and then concluded that Griffin was disqualified under Section Three. More precisely, and quite correctly, it held that Griffin had been disqualified since the day of the January 6 insurrection, and ordered his immediate ejection from office, and permanently enjoined him from seeking or holding any other covered position.[86]

As a matter of state procedure, the court concluded that the New Mexico quo warranto statute was a remedy for ejecting unlawful office holders.[87] It also concluded that quo warranto could be sought by any citizen of New Mexico, without any further showing of injury, because the New Mexico courts are not bound by the same "standing" limitations as the federal courts are. As a matter of federal law, the court had no trouble concluding that the events of January 6. 2021 were a constitutional "insurrection." And it had no trouble concluding that Griffin had engaged in that insurrection, both by "voluntarily aid[ing] the insurrectionists' cause by helping to mobilize and incite" the crowd, and by joining in the invasion of the Capitol itself, even though Griffin himself did not commit a violent act.[88] The New Mexico county court correctly recognized both its power and its duty to interpret and apply Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The same general principle applies to the situations of those who hold federal office. Again, anyone who possesses legal power to decide whether such a person can and should hold (or continue to hold) the office in question must apply Section Three's disqualification in doing so.[89] Here, the specific federal constitutional rules for tenure and removal present some interesting complications, which we address shortly.

---

[86] Id. at 46. The New Mexico Supreme Court dismissed Griffin's appeal on procedural grounds. NO. S-1-SC-39571 (N.M. Sup. Ct. Nov. 15, 2022). Meanwhile, the federal courts concluded that they lacked federal jurisdiction over two related claims by Griffin: an attempt to remove the state action to federal court, State ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 1707187 (D.N.M. May 27, 2022) (denying removal because of plaintiffs' lack of Article III standing) and a separate parallel suit attempting to enjoin the state proceedings, Griffin v. White, 2022 WL 2315980 (D.N.M. June 28, 2022) (finding lack of standing, lack of ripeness, and invoking Pullman abstention).

[87] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473, at 24-25 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[88] Id. at 35-38.

[89] The availability of a federal quo warranto action is curiously codified in the D.C. Code, §§ 16-3501-02. Courts have generally construed this statute quite narrowly, holding that only the Attorney General may bring a quo warranto against a public official, and that he has broad discretion not to do so. See Andrade v. Lauer, 729 F.2d 1475, 1498 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 784-785 (9th Cir. 2011); SW Gen., Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 796 F.3d 67, 81 (D.C. Cir. 2015), aff'd, 580 U.S. 288 (2017). The Third Circuit recently dismissed a Section Three quo warranto against former state senator Doug Mastriano on this ground. Hill v. Mastriano, No. 22-2464, 2022 WL 16707073, at *2 (3d Cir. Nov. 4, 2022). See also Hill v. Perry, No. 22-2465, 2023 WL 3336648, at *1 (3d Cir. May 10, 2023) (dismissing similar suits by same plaintiff against Rick Saccone and Scott Perry).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But in general: wherever anyone possesses the constitutional authority or duty to remove others from office for legal reasons, they can and should remove those barred by Section Three. Presidents—and subordinate executive officers acting at the president's direction—should remove from office executive officers, civil and military, who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. Likewise, the House of Representatives should impeach, and the Senate convict and thereby remove from office, civil executive officers who become constitutionally disqualified by Section Three.[90]

Finally and additionally, what happens if all of the above fails? Somebody disqualified by Section Three is given office and nobody removes that person from office. What then? Here too there will often still be additional procedures to enforce Section Three. These procedures mirror those available to enforce the Appointments Clause and other constitutional law of appointments. A litigant can move to disqualify a judge whose appointment is improper.[91] A regulated entity can challenge the actions of an executive official who holds office improperly.[92] Those who cannot constitutionally hold office cannot constitutionally exercise government power, so the subjects of that power can challenge their acts as ultra vires. While there may be some limits to the available relief in some kinds of suits under the "de facto officer doctrine," (more on which shortly), in many cases the courts will be called on to decide if an action is ultra vires. Section Three governs those cases.

3. Special Situations

A few federal constitutional offices raise special cases, where the Constitution itself speaks to official tenure or qualifications.

First consider Congress. Each house of Congress has two specific powers with respect to its own membership in which Section Three might come into play. First, each house has power to "Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of "its own Members."[93] Since one of those qualifications is non-disqualification under Section Three, each house can and must judge whether Section Three forbids the seating of a member. This judgment is conclusive, and it operates as a crucial constitutional [90] An officeholder who has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to enemies of the United States has surely committed a "high Crime or Misdemeanor" within the meaning of Article II, section 4's description of the scope of the impeachment and removal power. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, To End a (Republican) Presidency, 132 Harv. L. Rev. 689, 698-702 (2018). Note that military officers are not subject to impeachment; they are subject instead to the President's removal authority as Commander in Chief. Whether Congress could supplement that authority through appropriate legislation is an interesting question. See Zachary Price, Congress's Power Over Military Offices, 99 Tex. L. Rev. 291 (2021).

---

[91] Nguyen v. United States, 539 U.S. 69, 77–79, 81–82 (2003); Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 346-47.

[92] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 8–9 (1976) (per curiam); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 668 (1988); Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 487–88 (2010); NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550, 2557 (2014); see also Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 36-37.

[93] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 1.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

backstop for each house. No state or group of voters can force upon the House or Senate a Member it judges to be constitutionally disqualified. Indeed, even federal courts could not properly do so. While the Supreme Court has held, in Powell v. McCormack,[94] that Congress cannot create new "Qualifications" and that the federal courts have the power to stop it from doing so, neither Powell nor first principles allow a federal court to second-guess each house's judgment about whether the existing, constitutional, qualifications have been satisfied.[95]

Some have argued that each house's judging power also preempts other early stages of the election process. The argument is that states and state election law have no power to exclude a candidate for Congress because they are constitutionally ineligible to office—that instead the state must allow the voters to send up the ineligible candidate, so as not to prejudge the possibility that the House or Senate will find them eligible.[96] With respect, we do not agree with this argument. As a logical matter, each house's right to judge whether an elected candidate can hold office does not give it the power to force states to elect that candidate (or allow them to be elected) in the first place. And as a textual matter, state legislatures have the power to regulate the "manner" of elections, which includes ballot eligibility.[97] In our view, the better interpretation is that Section Three can be relevant to both the state's power to regulate the manner of elections and each house's power to judge the results of those elections.

---

[94] 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

[95] See Powell, 395 U.S. at 520 n. 41 (reserving the possibility that Section Three disqualification is a qualification); see also P. Allan Dionisopoulos, A Commentary on the Constitutional Issues in the Powell and Related Cases, 17 J. Pub. L. 103, 114-115 (1968) (cited in id. at n.41) (arguing that it is); Powell, 395 U.S. at 521 n.42 (noting that "federal courts might still be barred by the political question doctrine from reviewing the House's factual determination that a member did not meet one of the standing qualifications"). We emphasize that questions of interpretation and application of Section Three are not in general "political questions" that cannot be decided by federal courts, simply because they have political consequences. Where the Constitution supplies a rule, and the rule's application is not committed by the text of the Constitution to the judgment of one of the political branches, the courts are not disabled from deciding a case based on that rule. We simply think that the provision committing to each house the power to be the "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of its own Members does not permit judicial review of determinations of each house that properly fall within these constitutional categories.

[96] See Derek T. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind. L.J. 559, 594-598 (2015); see also Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245, 267-273, 282-284 (4th Cir. 2022) (Richardson, J., concurring); Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 912-916 (11th Cir. 2022) (Branch, J., concurring).

[97] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 4. The same Clause also gives Congress the power to "make or alter" such regulations by legislation if it wishes. Two relatively recent Supreme Court cases have invalidated state ballot eligibility rules for members of Congress that attempted to impose congressional term limits, U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995); Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510 (2001), and Judge Richardson relies on these cases to argue that states cannot judge the qualifications of congressional candidates, Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 273-275 (Richardson, J., concurring). Putting aside whether these cases are correct as an original matter, we think they further support our view. The Court rejected term-limit-ballot-access restrictions because they were an attempt to impose a qualification not contained in the Constitution. E.g., U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 784, 787-788, 806-815. It

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second relevant power each house possesses with respect to its own Members concerns Members already sitting in Congress. Each house also has power to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member."[98] So in addition to the initial power to exclude under Section Three, each house could potentially proceed through the expulsion power instead, by two-thirds vote.[99] As with the power to exclude, the power to expel, where exercised within the scope of the power conferred exclusively on each house, is committed to that house's discretion.

Additionally, Article I's Speech and Debate Clause provides that "for any Speech or Debate in either House," members of Congress "shall not be questioned in any other Place."[100] This means that to the extent that the conduct that violates Section Three was a member of Congress's official statements or legislative actions,[101] each house's powers of exclusion and expulsion are necessarily the sole mechanism for enforcing Section Three.

Federal judges hold their offices during "good Behaviour."[102] What if a sitting federal judge or even a Supreme Court justice has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to the nation's enemies?[103] As a matter of substance this is easy. Whether regarded as simply a violation of the Article III tenure condition of "good Behaviour" or as satisfying the impeachment standard of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors,"[104] conduct meeting Section Three's standard disqualifies a federal judge from office.

As a matter of procedure the question is trickier. The conventional wisdom is that Article III allows good behavior to be judged only through the procedure of impeachment by Congress. An alternative view, with some support in the history, is follows that ballot access rules that follow the qualifications contained in the Constitution could be treated differently.

---

[98] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 2.

[99] There is some debate whether Congress can expel a member for conduct that occurred before being elected. See Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few, supra note 47, at 210-212 (recounting arguments on both sides but arguing that it can); Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Expulsion, Censure, Reprimand, and Fine: Legislative Discipline in the House of Representatives 4-7 (2016) https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/RL31382.pdf (same). At all events, however, continuing to hold office when forbidden to do so by Section Three is ongoing conduct that would seem independently to justify expulsion in the here-and-now.

[100] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 6, cl. 1.

[101] As we elaborate later, we think it is quite rare that such conduct could violate Section Three, even on its own terms.

[102] U.S. Const. art. III.

[103] Cf. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 2, 141 (1866) (Chase, C.J., concurring in the judgment) ("In Indiana, the judges and officers of the courts were loyal to the government. But it might have been otherwise. In times of rebellion and civil war, it may often happen, indeed, that judges and marshals will be in active sympathy with the rebels, and courts their most efficient allies.").

[104] See supra note 90.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that Congress could provide other procedures for adjudicating misbehavior (as for instance in the 1791 Crimes Act, which purported to require the immediate removal of any federal official convicted of bribery or other crimes).[105] Whichever is the answer, the procedures and criteria for judging judges can and must apply Section Three.

Finally, what about the top of the ticket? What if the President or a presidential candidate (or likewise for Vice President) is constitutionally disqualified?[106] Who has the power and duty to enforce Section Three's legal prohibition? Again, the answer depends on whether the supposedly disqualified individual is seeking election to office or already holds it. In the case of a candidate, state election officials and state election law will frequently judge that candidate's ballot eligibility, applying Section Three as described above, and subject to the usual avenues of judicial review. That eligibility question can be a part of a state's Article II election for electors just as much as any other state election.[107] Put simply: a state secretary of state (for example) might well possess state-law authority to determine candidate eligibility for federal elective offices—President and Vice President, U.S. Representatives, U.S. Senators—selected directly or indirectly via state elections; and among those relevant eligibility criteria is whether a candidate is disqualified from the office he or she seeks by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Additionally, presidential electors have the power (and therefore perhaps the responsibility as well) to enforce Section Three.[108] In perhaps half the states, the question is more complicated, because state laws purport to bind the electors in various ways to vote for their party's candidate rather than making their own determination, and the Supreme Court has recently upheld such laws.[109] But even working

---

[105] Saikrishna Prakash & Steven D. Smith, How to Remove A Federal Judge, 116 Yale L.J. 72 (2006). In the interests of full disclosure, one of us was the student lead editor when this piece was published, and continues to think it is probably right, notwithstanding the counterarguments in James E. Pfander, Removing Federal Judges, 74 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1227 (2007). The other of us adheres to the traditional view. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Checking the Court, 10 NYU J. L. & Liberty 18, 76-77 (2016).

[106] We are assuming for now that the Presidency and Vice Presidency are covered by Section Three's language as an "office, civil or military, under the United States." We think that assumption is correct, and we will return to it in Part IV.B.

[107] See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) (upholding state exclusion from presidential primary ballot of twenty-seven-year-old candidate constitutionally disqualified on grounds of age); Hassan v. Colorado, 495 Fed. App'x 947, 948 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J.) (upholding state exclusion from presidential election ballot of naturalized citizen constitutionally disqualified from office by Natural Born Citizen Clause of Article II); see also Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 599-608; see also Muller, Natural Born, supra note 62, at 1100-1106. This is standard practice and law even though the President and Vice President are only indirect candidates, with their electors as direct candidates.

[108] See Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 579-580.

[109] Chiafolo v. Washington, 591 U.S. ___ (2020); see also Muller, supra note 96, at 580. We bracket the serious possibility that Chiafolo was wrongly decided. See, e.g., Mike Rappaport, The Originalist Disaster in Chiafolo, Law & Liberty (Aug. 7, 2020), https://lawliberty.org/the-originalist-disaster-in-

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

within that paradigm, states and their legislatures have their own duties to uphold the Constitution. That means they have a responsibility to arrange that their electors do not elect a constitutionally disqualified candidate, which should be reflected in their laws.

If the voters and presidential electors do select a disqualified candidate for the Presidency, we do not believe that Congress (or the Vice President) have the power to reject that candidate when the votes are counted in joint session. Whatever the extent of Congress's and the Vice President's authority to count the electoral votes, or determine the authenticity of submitted votes—i.e., was this the act of the electors of the state?—we do not believe that they have the authority to evaluate the decisions or actions of the electors themselves.[110] So if a properly selected elector submits a vote for a constitutionally disqualified individual it should still be counted.

Still, once those votes are counted, a disqualified candidate does not become president, even if he has the most votes. This is made explicit by the (self-executing) command of Section Three of the Twentieth Amendment, which sets the constitutional terms of a President's term. It states that at "the time fixed for the beginning of [the President's] term," "if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified."[111] The language thus specifically confirms the possibility of a failure to qualify, and specifies the consequences of that failure. If the President-elect is covered by Section Three, he cannot become President—unless Congress chooses (by supermajority votes) to remove Section Three's disability.

Once the President has taken office, the Constitution provides two paths for involuntary removal from office: impeachment for "high Crimes and Misdemeanors" and removal for being "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" under the procedure of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. The impeachment route is straightforward. As we have discussed, an insurrection against the United States is a paradigm example of a high crime or misdemeanor. On the other hand, it is less clear whether being legally disqualified from holding office makes the would-be President "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" within the meaning of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. (Structurally, the Twenty-fifth Amendment appears to relate to Article II, Section 1, paragraph 6, which deals with Presidential succession, rather than Article II, Section 1, paragraph 5, which deals with eligibility.) But in chiafalo/; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitutional Power of the Electoral College, Public Discourse (Nov. 21, 2016), https://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2016/11/18283/.

---

[110] We take no position on many further details of this issue, including the relative interplay of the Electoral Count Reform Act, Pub.L. 117-328, Div. P, Title I, § 109(a) (Dec. 29, 2022) 136 Stat. 5238-5239, codified in relevant part at 3 U.S.C. 15(b) & (d)(2)(B)(ii), possible constitutional challenges to it, see Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1805 (2002); see also John Harrison, Nobody for President, 16 J.L & Pol. 699 (2000), interpretations of it, but see Derek T. Muller, Electoral Votes Regularly Given, 55 Ga. L. Rev. 1529, 1538 (2021), or the like.

[111] U.S. Const. amdt. XX, sec. 3. Cf, Muller, Regularly Given, supra note 110, at 1538 n.42.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

any event the Twenty-fifth Amendment question will usually be unimportant in practice, because it requires a two thirds vote of both houses, and the Vice President and many cabinet officials, and so it will usually be significantly easier to use the impeachment process instead.[112]

* * *

Tying together all of these different procedures and possibilities: consider briefly (and not-so-hypothetically) a violent insurrection on the seat of government, by a mob joined or given aid or comfort by various government officials, from a state representative or commissioner to a U.S. Senator to the President himself.[113] From the moment of their participation in the insurrection, those officials would be legally ineligible to hold their offices, thanks to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. How this would play out practically might vary across them. As the state official returned home, he would immediately be subject to state law procedures such as a quo warranto suit.[114] He might be removed by such a suit,[115] or might well choose to resign instead.[116] The Senator might choose to brazen it out, counting on the difficulty in getting together a two-thirds vote to expel him. But if he sought re-election the Senate could and should exclude him by a mere majority vote. As for the hypothetical President, by right he ought to be immediately subject to impeachment and conviction by Congress, and perhaps also a Twenty-fifth Amendment declaration by the Vice President and supported by the cabinet. Even if those things did not happen, if he sought re-election, state election officials around the country would be bound by Section Three in deciding whether to put him on the ballot, even in the primary.

And of course, some of these matters would no doubt promptly find their way into the courts as well. Continuing the example of the presidential candidate, if state officials excluded him from ballot eligibility, he would likely be able to sue in state or federal court to challenge state officials' determination of ineligibility. And if he was not excluded by state officials, voters (at least in some states) might possess the legal right to challenge his eligibility. Either way, such a challenge would present a classic legal case or controversy. It is not difficult to imagine such suit being resolved by courts. Indeed, given the magnitude of the question and its consequences, it is not

---

[112] Brian Kalt, Unable: The Law, Politics, and Limits of Section 4 of the Twenty-Fifth Amendment (2019).

[113] See infra Part IV.C. for further discussion.

[114] For two relevant examples, see NMSA. 1978, sec. 44-3; W.V. Code sec. 53-2-1. In West Virginia, such a claim may be brought "[w]henever the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of any county is satisfied that a cause exists therefor he may, at his own instance, or at the relation of any person interested." Id. 53-2-2. For illustrative applications, see State ex rel. Zickefoose v. West, 145 W. Va. 498, 545 (1960); Wells v. Miller, 237 W. Va. 731 (2016).

[115] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[116] Resignation letter from West Virginia Delegate Derrick Evans to Governor Jim Justice (Jan. 9, 2021), available at https://s3.documentcloud.org/documents/20447012/derrick-evans-resignation-letter.pdf.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

difficult to imagine such an important case making its way quickly to the U.S. Supreme Court. It would then become the province and duty of the Court to determine and apply the meaning of Section Three.

Section Three thus functions as a sort of constitutional immune system, mobilizing every official charged with constitutional application to keep those who have fundamentally betrayed the constitutional order from keeping or reassuming power.

C. The Problem of Griffin's Case

A small problem with our view that Section Three is self-executing and immediately operative is that the Chief Justice of the United States said the opposite, almost immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. This was the opinion in Griffin's Case by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, sitting as Circuit Justice in 1869, in one of the first cases to interpret any part of the Amendment. In Griffin's Case, Chief Justice Chase concluded that Section Three is inoperative unless and until Congress passes implementing legislation to carry it into effect.[117] This precedent continues to cast a shadow over Section Three today.[118]

But there is a simple response to this small problem. Griffin's Case is just wrong. It is possible—possible—that its result is correct on an alternate ground, under the so-called de facto officer doctrine, which we will discuss. But Chase's legal reasoning that the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing is unsustainable. Indeed, the more one pulls at his opinion, the more it unravels. We examine it in some detail.[119]

1. Background

Caesar Griffin, a black man, was charged in a Virginia state court with the crime of shooting with the intent to kill. Griffin was tried, convicted, and sentenced to prison. He made no claim that the statute under which he was tried was unconstitutional; nor that he had been subjected to discrimination because of his race; nor that the composition of the jury was improper. As Chase put it: Griffin made "no allegation that the trial was not fairly conducted, or that any discrimination was made against him, either in indictment, trial, or sentence, on account of his color."[120] Nor did Griffin allege that the presiding judge—Judge Hugh W. Sheffey—"did not

---

[117] In re Griffin ("Griffin's Case"), 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D.Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) (Chase 364).
[118] See, e.g., Josh Blackman and S. B. Tillman, Opinion, "Only the Feds Could Disqualify Madison Cawthorn and Marjorie Taylor Greene," The New York Times, (Apr. 20, 2022); Tom Ginsburg, Aziz Huq, & David Landau, The Law of Democratic Disqualification, 111 Calif. L. Rev. at 16, 51 (forthcoming 2023) at https://ssrn.com/abstract=3938600.
[119] For other criticism of Griffin's Case, insightful as always, see Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 102-108; Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 9-14.
[120] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct the trial with fairness and uprightness."[121] Griffin raised just one challenge to the validity of his conviction: that Judge Sheffey (or, one might say, so-called Judge Sheffey)[122] was legally disqualified by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment from serving.

The facts relevant to Judge Sheffey were not disputed either. He had taken the oath: Before the Civil War, Hugh Sheffey had been a member of the Virginia state legislature, as far back as 1849. And he had "engaged in" rebellion: After Virginia purported to secede from the Union, Sheffey continued to serve as a member of Virginia's secessionist legislature. In that role, in 1862, he "voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[123] Thus "it is admitted," wrote Chase, that Judge Sheffey "was one of the persons to whom the prohibition to hold office pronounced by the amendment applied."[124]

Griffin had petitioned the U.S. district judge, Judge John Underwood, for a writ of habeas corpus challenging the lawfulness of his custody, which Judge Underwood granted.[125] The sheriff appealed to the circuit court, which was held by Chase as circuit justice.[126]

---

[121] Id. at 22.

[122] Cf. Will Baude, The deadly serious accusation of being a "so-called judge," Volokh Conspiracy, Wash. Post. (Feb. 4, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2017/02/04/the-deadly-serious-accusation-of-being-a-so-called-judge/ ("[T]o call him a 'so-called' judge is to hint that he is not really a judge, that he lacks judicial power. It is just a hint, but it flirts with a deadly serious issue").

[123] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

[124] Id. at 23.

[125] See Opinion of Judge Underwood in Edward McPherson, The Political History of the United States of America During the Period of Reconstruction (from April 15, 1865, to July 15, 1870), at 462-466 (1875). We are indebted to Myles Lynch for locating this source.

[126] The procedural posture of this and several related cases are extremely confusing and reflect background machinations by both Judge Underwood and Chief Justice Chase: At the time, habeas was apparently available from the district court, or "at chambers," or from the circuit court. If Judge Underwood issued the writ from the district court or at chambers, he could be reviewed by the circuit court, which would include Chief Justice Chase. But if Chief Justice Chase was not present, Judge Underwood could also sit alone as the circuit court. And thanks to a recent statute designed to strip jurisdiction over the anti-Reconstruction suit of Ex parte McCardle, there would be no appeal if Judge Underwood sat as the circuit court. Underwood took this, the unreviewable route, in another habeas case like Griffin's brought by Sally Anderson. Chief Justice Chase then wrote to Underwood with a veiled threat, floating the possibility that a recent statute could be interpreted to deprive Underwood of his ability to hold the circuit court at that time, and encouraging Underwood to hear the cases in the district court or at chambers so that Chase could review him. Underwood obliged. Meanwhile, Virginia also sought an original writ in the Supreme Court to put a stop to Underwood's Section Three docket. The Supreme Court ordered all of the proceedings stayed, and then let Chase go down to the circuit to clean things up, taking no action on the writ. See Charles Fairman, Reconstruction and Reunion at 601-607; Letter from Chase to Underwood (Nov. 19, 1868) in 5 The Salmon P. Chase Papers 285-286 (1998); Letter from Chase to Underwood (Jan. 14, 1869) in id. at 292-293.

This background is briefly alluded to in the synopsis in Griffin's Case which explains that "[a] motion was then made by James Lyons, Esq. in the supreme court of the United States for a writ of prohibition against the district judge, to restrain him from further exercise of such power. The supreme

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Chase on Section Three

Chase reversed. Here is how he framed the problem: Everybody agreed that Sheffey had been lawfully appointed as a state judge in February 1866, while Virginia was controlled by military reconstruction and the Fourteenth Amendment did not exist.[127] The question was whether ratification of Section Three kicked him out. As Chase put it: "whether upon a sound construction of the amendment, it must be regarded as operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power."[128]

Chase said no, rejecting this as a "literal construction" [129] of Section Three. There is a lot going on in this opinion. Chase included a number of makeweight arguments and asides on topics such as the legal history of West Virginia.[130] But his core argument was that surely Section Three cannot mean what it says: It would have bad consequences, can't possibly have been intended by the ratifiers, and would violate the spirit of the Constitution. As we will explain, these arguments are bad ones. Chase then supplemented them with a shocking claim of a secret Supreme Court ruling in favor of an alternative approach—which was both generally improper, but also further impeached Chase's interpretation of Section Three. All in all, Griffin's Case is a case study in how not to go about the enterprise of faithful constitutional interpretation.

---

court advised on the motion, and never announced any conclusion, but shortly afterward the chief justice opened the circuit court at Richmond, and immediately called up the appeal in Griffin's Case. This statement is necessary for a full understanding of the pregnancy of the chief justice's statement that the supreme court agreed with him as to the decision he rendered in this case." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 7-8. But really, these circumstances are extraordinary. We take them up again below.

[127] Id. at 23.

[128] Id. at 18.

[129] Id. at 24.

[130] Chase summarized the intriguing legal history of this Virginia government: When Virginia, by act of its legislature in 1861, purported to secede from the Union, loyal Unionists assembled in convention in Wheeling to organize a new state government. Congress and the Lincoln administration recognized the Wheeling government as the lawful government of Virginia. The Wheeling Virginia government then gave its consent to the creation of a new Wheeling-based state of West Virginia, after which the (Wheeling) Virginia government-in-exile relocated to Alexandria, just across the river from Washington, to serve as the loyal, Union-recognized government of all of what remained as "Virginia." After Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Chase's opinion notes, the "government recognized by the United States was transferred from Alexandria to Richmond" and "became in fact what it was before in law, the government of the whole state." Id. at 18. Judge Sheffey was appointed under the authority of this government. (For the full story – and full formalist legal defense – of the validity of the legal fiction of "Virginia" giving its consent to the creation of a breakaway state of West Virginia, see Vasan Kesavan and Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is West Virginia Unconstitutional? 90 Calif. L. Rev. 291 (2002) For an argument that this aside was actually relevant to Chase's argument, see Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30, discussed infra note 157.)

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these"

The core of Chase's argument was that if Section Three were an immediately operative, self-executing constitutional rule of disqualification, it would have inconvenient consequences in the Reconstruction South. "In the examination of questions of this sort," Chase wrote, "great attention is properly paid to the argument from inconvenience."[131] And here "the argument from inconveniences" was "great" in Chase's estimation— it was "of no light weight."[132]

In several incompletely reconstructed Southern governments, many offices were in fact held by former oath-breaking rebels.[133] If Section Three were automatically operative, it would have immediately barred all such men from office. (Indeed.) Yet, Chase argued, many such disqualified persons in fact had not vacated their offices but instead continued to exercise authority under those offices notwithstanding the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. To give Section Three immediate effect would thus upset the apple cart in a fairly major way. "No sentence, no judgment, no decree, no acknowledgement of a deed, no record of a deed, no sheriff's or commissioner's sale—in short no official act—is of the least validity."[134] Chase found this unthinkable: "It is impossible to measure the evils which such a construction would add to the calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these [Southern] states."[135]

Chase went on: not only did Section Three impose great "inconveniences" and "calamities," it was unfairly punitive—ungraciously ousting once-lawfully-appointed officers from their offices—and ostensibly inconsistent with the "spirit" of prior constitutional principles, concerning due process, bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.[136] And besides, the specific remedy sought—vacating Griffin's conviction—only worked mischief, because it did not even seek the literal removal of Judge Sheffey from office. Put these things together and you have Chase's interpretive driver: "Surely," Chase continued, "a construction which fails to accomplish the main purpose of the amendment, and yet necessarily works the mischief and inconveniences which have been described, and is repugnant to the first principles of justice and right embodied in other provisions of the constitution, is not to be favored, if any other reasonable construction can be found."[137]

---

[131] 11 F. Cas. at 24.
[132] Id. at 25.
[133] Chase also suggested that the problem was not completely limited to the Southern governments. Id. at 25 (observing that "[i]t is well known that many persons, engaged in the late Rebellion, have emigrated to states which adhered to the national government . . ." and that "it is not to be doubted that not a few among them" had previously taken a covered oath, and that "[p]robably some of these persons" had subsequently been elected to office).
[134] Id. at 25. Of course, Chase would undercut this conclusion later in the opinion. See infra Part II.C.
[135] 11 F. Cas. at 25.
[136] More on this point presently, Part II.C.2.c, and again Part III.
[137] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chase tried to funnel these policy arguments into a rule of constitutional construction: "the argument from inconvenience."[138] This argument "it is true, can not prevail over plain words or clear reason," Chase acknowledged.[139] "But, on the other hand," he wrote, "a construction which must necessarily occasion great public and private mischief, must never be preferred to a construction which will occasion neither, or neither in so great a degree, unless the terms of the instrument absolutely require such preference."[140]

This is not an unreasonable principle, as interpretive canons go. When confronted with two plausible interpretations of genuinely ambiguous, unclear text, one of which would produce manifestly jarring results, the less jarring interpretation is more likely the correct one. As James Madison said in his famous speech against the national bank: "Where a meaning is clear, the consequences, whatever they may be, are to be admitted—where doubtful, it is fairly triable by its consequences."[141] Or as Chief Justice Marshall said in United States v. Fisher: "where great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain; in which case it must be obeyed."[142] But Chase's canon was noticeably more aggressive: The supposedly more disruptive reading must "never be preferred" unless the text's terms "absolutely require" such preference.[143] That is putting not just a thumb on the scale, but a whole hand.

But that is not the real problem with Chase's analysis. The real problem was how Chase applied these principles to Section Three.

First, Chase was too quick—far too quick—to dismiss the "literal" reading of the "terms of the instrument" as meaning exactly what they seem to say. As discussed above, the language of Section Three's prohibition on office holding is clear and direct; it is hardly doubtful at all. It takes considerable effort to impute any ambiguity to the text and Chase's opinion does not even undertake that effort. Instead, the opinion assumes its own conclusion—that the text's language is somehow insufficiently clear to justify applying the "literal" meaning of its words. Indeed, even on Chase's own hyper-strict standard, the words of Section Three do "absolutely require" the conclusion that it, on its own, disqualifies covered rebels from office.

Second, Chase was too ready—far too ready—to find that following the ("literal") language of the document would produce (what Chase considered to be) great "inconveniences" or "mischief"— indeed, increase "calamities" already visited upon

---

[138] Id. at 24.
[139] Id. at 24.
[140] Id. at 24.
[141] James Madison, Speech on Feb. 2, 1791, reprinted in Legislative and Documentary History of the Bank of the United States 39, 40 (photo. reprint 2008)
[142] United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch (6 U.S.) 358, 386 (1805)
[143] 11 F. Cas. at 24 (emphasis added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the South. Chase emphasized the breadth of Section Three's language: it applied in all the states, not just the former Confederacy (so?); it applied beyond the context of Civil War but included aiding enemies in a foreign war (so?); it would apply in terms to immediately disqualify men for acts done long ago, for example in the Mexican War (so?); it would apply "to all persons in the category" and "for all time, present and future" (so?). And, taken seriously, this broad rule would, as noted, "annul all official acts" performed by disqualified officers, including judges. (Would it?)

For Chase, all this seemed to border on the shocking—a parade of horribles demanding the search for an alternative construction of Section Three. But why? Because it might have a broad effect? Because it adopted a new rule of constitutional law superseding prior law? Because it would have removed immediately a substantial number of former-oath-swearing-officeholders-turned-rebels from positions of power? Because it could have the effect of invalidating their unauthorized, lawless actions? Chase's parade of horribles assumes, without argument, the correctness of his own apparent policy prejudices.[144]

Now Chase did attempt to groom these prejudices into more plausible legal arguments, which we will get to in a moment. But because these arguments from inconvenience are the heart of Chase's opinion, and because we still see these kinds of arguments repeated today, we pause to emphasize that this is not how judging is supposed to work, even if it too often does.

Chase's construe-to-avoid-the-force-of-constitutional-language-whose-policy-consequences-you-dislike approach to constitutional interpretation is simply wrong. Judges do not get to rewrite constitutional provisions they find objectionable on policy grounds. Relatedly, judges do not get to make up new provisions of law in order to devise policy "solutions" to texts they don't like. Chase's opinion imposed, as a solution to textual literalism and its real and imagined policy inconveniences, a different kind of constitutional provision, one more like the Impeachment Clause and the Treason Clause. Put bluntly, Chase made up law that was not there in order to change law that was there but that he did not like.

b. The argument from "the intention of the people"

In places, Chase raises the inconvenience argument as an inquiry into the "intent" of the Framers: "What was the intention of the people of the United States in adopting the fourteenth amendment? What is the true scope and purpose of the prohibition to hold office contained in the third section?"[145] This at least sounds kind of [144] As Judge Underwood had put it: "Whatever inconvenience may result from the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws, I think the experience of the last few years shows that much greater inconvenience comes from attempting their overthrow." Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 465.

[145] 11 F.Cas. at 24.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

like the question a judge should be asking—the original meaning of the constitutional provision adopted by We The People and binding on those who interpret it. But in fact it conceals still more sleight of hand.

First and foremost, Chase's framing of the interpretive question commits a classic blunder: swapping in original intent for original meaning. In our constitutional system, law is made by enacting texts, not by searching for the unenacted wishes of lawmakers.[146] And whatever evidence Chase might have that the consequences of Section Three were unintended by some of those who voted for it, he had no evidence that these consequences were not entailed by what they voted for.

Second, however dubious it is to look to original intent over original meaning generally, it is especially dicey to do so in the case of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in unusual, exigent circumstances. In Congress, the Amendment represented a compromise between different Republican factions, some much more radical than the others. And in the states, where ratification made it law, the Amendment depended on the ratification votes of the southern states, who were pressured—some might say "coerced"—to ratify the Amendment as the price of regaining their representation in Congress.[147] Even if one accepts this process as lawful (which we do) it is obvious that it means one must cast a skeptical eye on stories about the supposed "intent" of those who ratified it, especially in the South. It may well be that some of the ratifiers had their fingers crossed behind their backs and intended to give the Amendment as little effect and as little quarter as they could get away with. But so what? What matters is what they did, in one of the highest-stakes moments of constitutional law making in American history. By diminishing the plain scope of the Amendment's text, Chase was succumbing to this kind of anti-constitutional subversion.

Third and finally, all of Chase's evidence of this supposed intent just boils down to the inconvenience argument we have just discussed. And as discussed above, this is why one must be especially careful with judges who invoke the supposed "intent" of a written text. When meaning is uncertain, it is permissible to give a slight edge to the interpretation that is more likely to match what its authors were trying to do.

---

[146] See supra notes 9-14, sources cited there, and accompanying text.

[147] See generally, John Harrison, The Lawfulness of the Reconstruction Amendments, 68 U. Chi. L. Rev. 375, 461 (2001). For arguments that Congress's requiring states' ratification as condition of restored representation was entirely lawful and appropriate, see id; Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 329; Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 364-380, see especially id. at 376-378. There is a different argument for ratification, the "loyal denominator" theory, in which the southern states were unnecessary for ratification. See Christopher R. Green, Loyal Denominatorism and the Fourteenth Amendment: Normative Defense and Implications, 13 Duke J. Const. L. & Pub. Pol'y 167, 168 (2017); Christopher R. Green, The History of the Loyal Denominator, 79 La. L. Rev. 47, 48 (2018). One of us has rejected this theory in prior writing, Michael Stokes Paulsen, A General Theory of Article V: The Constitutional Lessons of the Twenty-Seventh Amendment, 103 Yale L.J. 677, 709 (1993); see also Amar, supra note 4, at 378-380, and the other of us is inclined in the same direction.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But it is easy for a judge to use this principle as an excuse for reading into the text his own views of what the law should be. After all, the authors of the provision were reasonable people, trying to do reasonable things, and, I, the judge, am also reasonable, so surely if I don't like this result, they wouldn't have liked this result, and therefore it must not be the result. To write it down this way would give up the game, but it is too easy to think it. Chase's use of original intent is makeweight at best, and a trick at worst.

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law

The "inconveniences" and "calamities" that, surely, were not intended by the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment were Chase's main arguments. But he had a bit more to say. There was "another principle, which in determining the construction of this amendment, is entitled to equal consideration."

> Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of an amendment of a public act, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general terms and spirit of the act amended. This principle forbids a construction of the amendment, not clearly required by its terms, which will bring it into conflict or disaccord with the other provisions of the constitution.[148]

What was the supposed conflict between Section Three and the rest of the Constitution? Chase fretted that Section Three was a penal enactment, imposing punishment without trial on secessionists, and thus in tension with the spirit of earlier provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process:

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once and without trial, deprives a whole class of persons of offices held by them, for cause, however grave. It is true that no limit can be imposed on the people when exercising their sovereign power in amending their own constitution of government. But it is a necessary presumption that the people in the exercise of that power, seek to confirm and improve, rather than to weaken and impair the general spirit of the constitution.[149]

Thus, Chase concluded, Section Three should not be read as accomplishing disqualification of its own force.

---

[148] 11 F.Cas. at 25.
[149] Id. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Now once again, the interpretive rule Chase is formulating here is not totally crazy. But it is a warped version of the real thing. As we discuss at length in the next part: It is true that repeals by implication are disfavored, and this principle applies to constitutional law. But at the same time, constitutional amendments change things, and when an amendment is inconsistent with prior constitutional rules, ultimately it is the amendment that controls. If a new provision fairly can be harmonized with prior law—where there is no true conflict—the provisions should be read harmoniously.[150] But where new language in fact changes old law, by clear terms or necessary logical effect, the greater error is to deny such change out of undue attachment to the former legal regime.

This greater error is exactly what Chase did. Chase leaned very heavily—too heavily—on the rule against implied repeals, ratcheting it up to "forbid[]" readings of a text "not clearly required" by its terms, that would "bring it into conflict or disaccord" with other provisions of the Constitution.[151] Each leaning is wrong. Repeals by implication may be disfavored; but repeals, made in terms or by necessary logical implication, are not presumptively forbidden. Nor does new language changing old provisions require such extraordinary clarity as Chase would have it. The true question is whether the language and logic of a new provision really does present a conflict with prior law. And the idea that constitutional amendments should presumptively be read so as not to change the Constitution (!)—that they should be construed to avoid conflict or even mere disaccord with prior constitutional law—is indefensible. Of course constitutional amendments change prior constitutional law. That is their purpose and function. Now, that doesn't warrant reading them to change more than they really do. But a presumption that constitutional amendments should be read to change as little as possible makes no sense.

Finally, this part of Chase's argument took a puzzling turn that is worth noting. In one of many strange asides, Chase noted the possibility that Section Three had implicitly repealed the Treason Clause: "in the judgment of some enlightened jurists, the legal effect" of Section Three's imposition of a new prohibition on officeholding for rebels and insurrectionists "was to remit all other punishments" for treason.[152] If anything this seemed to hurt Chase's argument against self-execution, because it emphasized that Section Three could change the pre-existing constitutional rules. And at the same time this supposedly enlightened argument was also bonkers. The enactment of a constitutional rule of disqualification from office does not remotely suggest a supersession or repeal of criminal-law punishment for treason. And if it did it would have the perverse effect of leaving Confederates who had not previously

[150] See infra, Part III.
[151] 11 F. Cas. at 25 (emphasis added).
[152] Id. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

taken a constitutional oath subject to the death penalty, while previous office holders avoided all criminal punishment except the officeholding ban.[153]

So why did Chase bring it up? Who were these "enlightened jurists" who imagined such a thing? The answer is . . . Chase himself! He had asserted precisely this wacky construction of Section Three's effect on the criminal penalty for treason—and quietly suggested the argument to defense counsel—in the federal criminal treason prosecution of Jefferson Davis just two years earlier.[154] Even Davis's lawyers had been puzzled by the argument, and wondered if it was some sort of trick, and it seems likely that Chase had complex political motivations in proposing it at the time.[155] This argument was tendentious then, and weirdly irrelevant in Griffin's Case. But it is a helpful reminder that Chief Justice Chase was not shooting straight in his applications of Section Three.

d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power

Having flailed to avoid the natural reading of Section Three, Chase finally offered his alternative, "reasonable construction":

> For in the very nature of things, it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate. To accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcement of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable; and these can only be provided by Congress. Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.' [sic] … The fifth section qualifies the third to the same extent as it would if the whole amendment consisted of these two sections.[156]

Section Five "qualifies" Section Three. Of course, this proves too much. Taken seriously, it would suggest that Section Five likewise "qualifies" Section One and renders its commands—birthright citizenship, privileges or immunities, due process, and equal protection—inoperative until enforced by congressional legislation. It would imply that Section One had no self-executing legal effect, which has never been the law. It also proves too little. It is true, perhaps, that carrying a legal prohibition into

---

[153] See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 92, 95 (C.C.D. Va. 1867).
[154] Id. See Magliocca. Amnesty, supra note 5, at 100-102; Cynthia Nicoletti, Secession on Trial: The Treason Prosecution of Jefferson Davis 293-300 (2017).
[155] Nicoletti suggests—and she is not making this up—that either Chase was gunning for the Democratic nomination for President, or that this was a bank shot to get southern whites to accept the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, by arranging for the Amendment to benefit them. Id. at 293-296.
[156] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

practical effect in actual situations frequently will involve, necessarily, actions by persons and institutions charged with applying that prohibition as law in the course of performing their assigned duties. But as noted above there is no reason why "proceedings" and "decisions" and "enforcement" with respect to Section Three's commands may not be conducted and carried out by these various state and federal actors, exercising their usual authority with respect to such matters.[157] It is simply not true that "these can only be provided by Congress." Congress can provide them. But so can many others. Indeed, that is just what Judge Underwood was trying to accomplish in Griffin's Case, until Chase stopped him.

Chase's tendentious construction of Section Three has gone on to a surprisingly serious career as a precedent. But it simply does not hold up as an original matter. But that is not even the weirdest thing about Griffin's Case.

3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum

Chase concluded his discussion of Section Three this way: "After the most careful consideration, therefore, I find myself constrained to the conclusion that Hugh W. Sheffey had not been removed from the office of judge at the time of the trial and sentence of the petitioner; and that the sentence of the circuit court of Rockbridge county was lawful."[158]

By Chase's logic, such as it was, that should have been the final line of his opinion. But strangely, Chase was not actually done. He then launched into the weirdest part of his opinion, a sort of half-dictum, half-advisory opinion that cast further doubt on all that had come before:

> In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine the question relating to the effect of the sentence of a judge de facto, exercising the office with the color, but without the substance of right. It is proper to say, however, that I should have no difficulty in sustaining the custody of the sheriff under sentence of a court held by such a judge. . . .
>
> This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term, with reference to this and kindred cases in this district, and I am authorized to say that they unanimously concur in [157] Magliocca also suggests that in the specific situation in Griffin's Case, state law may have been "unavailable for enforcement" of Section Three because "Virginia was an unreconstructed state and thus lacked the ordinary powers of a state" and "because Virginia did not yet recognize the Fourteenth Amendment's legitimacy" – in contrast with states such as North Carolina. Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30. We are not sure whether this is giving Chase too much credit or not, but regardless, these points would obviously not hold today, where state law is fully available in every state of the union.

[158] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the opinion that a person convicted by a judge de facto acting under color of office, though not de jure, and detained in custody in pursuance of his sentence, can not be properly discharged upon habeas corpus.[159]

What is going on here? Chase describes an alternate ground for the case—"a judge de facto acting under color of office," which we would now call the "de facto officer doctrine"—explains that it is unnecessary to decide it, but then also explains that he would "have no difficulty" resolving the case on that alternate ground, and also that the rest of the Supreme Court agrees with him. It is hard to make sense of this part of Chase's opinion, but the more one digs in to it the more dubious the whole opinion becomes.

First of all, notice that what Chase says here fatally undercuts his earlier arguments about Section Three. The heart of Chase's argument was that a self-executing Section Three would have calamitous consequences that could not possibly have been intended. But here Chase says that even an illegally appointed officer can be a "de facto" officer whose acts are treated as valid for purposes of a habeas claim. If Chase believed this claim about the de facto officer doctrine, then his earlier claim about the consequences was overblown. The de facto officer doctrine would limit or eliminate the supposedly calamitous consequences and allow Section Three to be given its more natural interpretation in other situations. On its own terms, then, this dictum is colossally self-defeating.[160]

Indeed, if Chase's extensive dictum about Section Three made it "unnecessary" to resolve the de facto officer doctrine, the same was equally true in reverse. Accepting Chase's conclusion about the de facto officer doctrine would have made his erroneous disquisition on Section Three completely unnecessary. The criticisms sometimes levelled against the chief justices who wrote the famous (or infamous) opinions in Marbury v. Madison, and Dred Scott v. Sandford, for having reached out to decide, gratuitously, unnecessarily, and improperly, grand questions of constitutional law,[161] fall far more heavily upon the head of Chief Justice Chase for his opinion in Griffin's Case.

Even stranger, Chase represented that the full Supreme Court unanimously agreed with him that on the de facto officer question. "This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term," Chase asserted, "with

---

[159] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[160] Accord, Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 11 n.25.

[161] See, e.g., Letter from Thomas Jefferson to William Johnson (June 12, 1823) ("This practice of Judge Marshall, of travelling out of his case to prescribe what the law would be in a moot case not before the court, is very irregular and very censurable.") https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Jefferson/98-01-02-3562; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Worst Constitutional Decision of All Time, 78 Notre Dame L. Rev. 995, 1011-12 & n.39 (2003); Baude, Judgment Power, 96 Geo. L.J. 1807, 1823-24 (2008).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reference to this and kindred cases in this district."[162] The full Court had apparently decided the de facto officer question, in secret, without having announced the fact in any case decision or written opinion,[163] in some form of advisory preemptive appellate jurisdiction!?

To be sure, judicial norms were looser back then, but the whole thing was highly irregular even by the standards of the day. Charles Fairman, whose account defends the whole affair as an urgent workaround to stop Judge Underwood, nonetheless acknowledges that "[i]t was most unusual to hear a Justice on circuit declare that he was authorized to announce the opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court on a matter pending in the Circuit Court."[164] Fairman further acknowledges technical problems with this maneuver, because the only issue in front of the full Court was an original writ of prohibition in Ex Parte State of Virginia, where the Court had granted a stay despite manifest procedural flaws.[165] Somehow the Court's non-ruling in a dubious vehicle became a second-hand advisory opinion on a legal question of great importance. The criticisms levelled today at the shenanigans allegedly perpetrated on the Supreme Court's "shadow docket,"[166] fall much more heavily and justifiably on the heads of the Reconstruction justices.

And to return to this point once more, even if we accept this whole problematic advisory opinion, it simultaneously undermines the other part of Chase's decision—his interpretation of Section Three. As Chase described it, there were two alternative ways to resolve the case—one massive constitutional question, and the other a more modest procedural question. Chase claimed that the whole Supreme Court had authorized him to issue a secondhand advisory opinion on the procedural question, an opinion adequate to resolve the Judge Underwood situation. But Chase ignored his colleagues' apparent preference and resolved the case on massive constitutional grounds instead—grounds that he did not claim were endorsed by the rest of the Court. Is there any justification for his doing so other than a personal power grab?

All of this is without taking a view on the merits of the de facto officer question. This, we think, is not as obvious as Chase (and apparently his colleagues) made it out

---

[162] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[163] The Court's one recorded public statement on the matter was a statement from Justice Nelson in the original writ of prohibition case, Ex Parte State of Virginia, that Chief Justice Chase had "informed the court that before the pending motion for prohibition was made, he signified to the district judge his dissent" and that Chase was going to "direct that this division of opinion . . . be certified to this court." Ex parte State of Virginia No. 11, 1868 WL 10951, 19 L. Ed. 153 (1868); Fairman, supra note 126, at 606. That statement did not state the Court's view on the division, and seemed to anticipate that the Justices would deliberate on the issue later in the more ordinary course – not deputize the Chief Justice to go deliver some secret verdict in their stead.

[164] Fairman, supra note 126, at 607.

[165] Id.

[166] Stephen Vladeck, The Shadow Docket: How the Supreme Court Uses Stealth Rulings to Amass Power and Undermine the Republic (2023); William Baude, Foreword: The Supreme Court's Shadow Docket, 9 N.Y.U. J. L. & Lib. 1 (2015).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to be. True, American and English history was full of many statements about the valid acts of "de facto" officers and even specifically judges.[167] But many of these statements could not be taken to their logical extreme in our constitutional system, and indeed, at the founding the Supreme Court had refused to accept the actions of several de facto judges in the saga surrounding Hayburn's Case.[168]

How to reconcile these principles is a difficult question. One possibility, stated in some of the cases, is that an unlawful, but de facto, officer's acts can be questioned directly, and on direct review, but not "collaterally."[169] On this possibility, maybe the de facto officer doctrine was a defense to claims like habeas—the procedural vehicle in Griffin's Case—because habeas was a collateral attack.[170] Habeas could not be used as a substitute for a writ of error, where the challenge would have been properly raised.

But another possibility is that the de facto officer doctrine protects only technical and ordinary legal defects in an officer's appointment, not fundamental inability to exercise power, as when that power is forbidden by the Constitution.[171] On this possibility, Judge Sheffey's acts were inherently void, and thus everything he did fell outside of his court's jurisdiction.[172] The de facto officer arguments in Griffin's Case—and thus the correct legal fate of Caesar Griffin—turn on these technicalities.[173] Indeed, these technicalities were argued by the parties and they were the main subject

---

[167] For many citations, see Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 18-21 (argument of counsel). For more, see also Reply and Response Brief for the United States, Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius (Nos. 18-1334, 18-1475, 18-1496, 18-1514, 18-15121) at 27-47; and Calcutt v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 37 F.4th 293, 342-45 (6th Cir. 2022) (Murphy, J., dissenting).

[168] Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 12 (discussing Yale Todd).

[169] For statements like this, see Ball v. United States, 140 U.S. 118, 128-129 (1891) ("was judge de facto if not de jure, and his acts as such are not open to collateral attack."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 909, 910, 919 (1963); but see id. at 910 & n. 9 (suggesting that a suit is collateral whenever the officer "is not a party," including on "writ of error").

[170] All three cases cited by Chase in Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 27, can be characterized this way. Taylor v. Skrine, 5 S.C.L. 516, 3 Brev. 516 (1815) deals with a writ of execution and observes that "no objections were made to his authority at the time the decree was given." State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521 (1863) relies entirely on In re Boyle 9 Wis. 264 (1859) which is a habeas case holding that the "right to hold the offices cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding of this kind," id. at 267. And People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184., 187 (1860) distinguishes a "direct proceeding" from one where the doctrine applied.

[171] For statements like this, see McDowell v. United States, 159 U.S. 596, 598 (1895) ("presents a mere matter of statutory construction . . . . It involves no trespass upon the executive power of appointment."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, at 918 (discussing Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962)).

[172] But see In re Boyle, cited supra note 170 (distinguishing "the jurisdiction of the court, which may always be inquired into; it is an inquiry into the right of the judge to hold his office, which is a question entirely distinct from that of the jurisdiction of the court over the offence").

[173] In the Supreme Court's most recent de facto officer doctrine case, Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177 (1995), it split the difference, holding the doctrine inapplicable because the case was on direct

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Judge Underwood's opinion below.[174] Chief Justice Chase could have turned his considerable powers to them, had he not been busy knee-capping the Fourteenth Amendment instead.

* * *

There is little to be said in defense of Griffin's Case, but much to be learned from it. The very weakness of its arguments; the obviously result-oriented nature of its legal analysis; and the inconsistency of its conclusion with Section Three's language, end up confirming the core conclusion in this section: Section Three's disqualification of designated persons from office is a self-executing constitutional command that requires nothing more to have immediate legal force.

III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions

Our third proposition is logically and methodologically straightforward but perhaps unsettling in some of its implications: Section Three trumps the earlier parts of the Constitution—to the extent there is a true conflict between them.

As noted above, one of Chief Justice Chase's arguments against enforcing Section Three was that it conflicted (he thought) with prior constitutional norms—of due process, prospectivity, fairness, and so on.[175] Even for those who do not put the claim in so many words, we suspect that they might share a similar intuition—there is something about Section Three, taken seriously, that seems harsh, unforgiving, undemocratic, unAmerican (?), even . . . unconstitutional(!?). If so, it might seem to follow that somebody (judges?) should tame Section Three.

This is an understandable instinct. But it is wrong: dead wrong. We think the conflict with prior constitutional rules is overstated—more feel than real. But to the extent the conflict is real, Section Three wins the face-off.

Constitutional amendments change the Constitution. It thus should be unsurprising—indeed, it is in the very nature of constitutional amendments—that such new provisions, when added to the Constitution, supersede, displace, qualify, adjust, correct, or simply must be considered to satisfy earlier constitutional rules, to the extent of any actual conflict between them. Simply put: a constitutional amendment review and the challenge was constitutional. In the more recent case of Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius, 140 S. Ct. 1649, 1666 (2020), it avoided the issue because it found the appointments lawful.

---

[174] See Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 463-466.

[175] See supra Part III.C.2.c.; see also Ginsburg, Huq, & Landau, supra note 118, at 18 (suggesting that a self-executing interpretation, "while in harmony with the original operation of Section 3, raises due process and perhaps bill of attainder concerns" and for that reason an "alternative, more plausible construction gives Congress authority to determine how Section 3 is enforced").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

supersedes prior law precisely to the extent that it departs from the prior rules. This general maxim of interpretation applies to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment the same as it applies to any other constitutional amendment provision. If the original textual meaning of Section Three's terms, understood in their natural sense and accounting for any terms of art or specialized usages of words, departs from or alters prior constitutional understandings, that new constitutional language must be given full effect and priority over earlier provisions.

These basic principles of conflicting legal provisions were astutely captured by Alexander Hamilton, writing as Publius in The Federalist Number 78. "It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression," Hamilton wrote. When this occurs, the courts must determine the "meaning and operation" of the two provisions.

Hamilton articulated two principles for doing so, which work as a complementary pair. "So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done"—there's the first of the pair, but Hamilton's sentence does not end there, but instead pauses only ever-so-briefly, with a semi-colon, before proceeding to the second rule of the pair: "where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first." This was, Hamilton continued, "a mere rule of construction," but it was an appropriate one, "consonant to truth and propriety," consistently recognized by courts as interpreters of law: that, as "between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference."[176]

Hamilton went on, more famously, to explain that a different interpretive principle governed the interfering acts of a superior and a subordinate authority—and proceeded to derive the proposition customarily called "judicial review."[177] But that is not the interpretive question here. Here, the key point is precisely Hamilton's lead-in proposition: that, as between "interfering" acts of equal legal stature—the paradigm being two statutes, adopted by the same legislature, at different times—the last in time prevails to the extent of any true, irreconcilable conflict. As with statutes adopted by the same legislative authority at different times, so with constitutional provisions adopted by the same authority at different times and possessing the same

---

[176] See The Federalist No. 78 (I. Kramnick ed. 1987) at 439 (Hamilton). These rules were well-established in American and English law. Caleb Nelson, Preemption, 86 Va. L. Rev. 225, 235-244 (2000)

[177] See The Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439-440 (Hamilton) ("But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal status: By the terms of Article V, constitutional amendments are "valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution," when adopted.[178] Thus, where We, the People, have adopted a new constitutional text "interfering" with or departing from prior constitutional provisions, the last-in-time enacted prevails to the extent of any conflict. That is the interpretive principle that governs the relationship between new constitutional language and old language from which it departs.

Actual constitutional examples of these principles abound. The entire Bill of Rights in a sense qualifies, or limits, the original Constitution's grant of enumerated powers—to the extent of a conflict between those powers and the subsequently enumerated rights.[179] Likewise, the Eleventh Amendment qualifies Article III's extension of the federal judicial power to various cases and controversies. To the extent the Eleventh Amendment changes what Article III may originally have provided, the amendment supersedes that prior law.[180]

Much of the time, new amendments can be harmonized with what came before them. Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment's grant of "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article"[181] does not preempt, for example, the Due Process Clause or the Cruel or Unusual Punishments Clause. It does not allow Congress to punish civil rights violations through summary tortures without trial. Similarly, Section Five does not preempt the Veto Clause; it can and should be read together with Article I, to require "appropriate legislation" to go through the preexisting lawmaking process.[182] A new amendment does not ignore the legal system that it amends.

On the other hand, other parts of the Reconstruction Amendments did conflict sharply with prior constitutional norms, and they displaced them precisely to that extent. Consider the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery—a dramatic and particularly obvious illustration of the point that new constitutional language supersedes and repudiates old constitutional language, to the extent of any conflict. The Thirteenth Amendment's abolition of slavery implicitly but necessarily overrides and extinguishes the Fugitive Slave Clause and any other provision of the original Constitution that protected the institution of slavery to the full logical extent of inconsistency with the amendment's flat ban. Similarly, Section Two of the Fourteenth Amendment supersedes and displaces the Constitution's original apportionment

---

[178] U.S. Const. art. V.

[179] On the relationship between rights and powers, see William Baude, Rethinking the Federal Eminent Domain Power, 122 Yale L.J. 1738, 1821-1822 (2013); Jud Campbell, The Invention of First Amendment Federalism, 97 Tex. L. Rev. 517, 561-67 (2019).

[180] Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 624-25; cf. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 21 (1890) (Harlan, J., concurring).

[181] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 5.

[182] See William Baude, Sovereign Immunity and the Constitutional Text, 103 Va. L. Rev. 1, 19 (2017) (offering the examples in this paragraph).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

rules including the notorious Three-fifths Clause.[183] Because the two rules conflict in substance, the amendment prevails over the Constitution's original language.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is in the same family. In most respects, Section Three can be easily harmonized with other parts of the Constitution, such as Article I's Speech or Debate Clause, Article I and II's impeachment provisions, Article II's process of presidential selection, Article III's requirement of a case or controversy, and so on. As we have discussed, Section Three's new constitutional qualification for office is enforced in the same way as other constitutional qualifications for office, and is easily reconciled with existing constitutional rules.

But there are a few constitutional provisions that have been alleged to conflict with Section Three. If and when this is the case, just as any later-enacted constitutional provision supersedes or modifies an earlier-enacted constitutional provisions with which the new provision conflicts, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment logically qualifies and, where the language so compels the conclusion, overrides prior constitutional rules.[184]

Thus, we think all this follows: To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides any limitations otherwise imposed by the Bill of Attainder Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three also overrides limitations imposed by the Ex post Facto Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three likewise overrides—or simply satisfies—prior constitutional requirements of due process of law.

Finally—and this example might present more difficult questions—to the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides, supersedes, or satisfies the free speech principles reflected in the First Amendment. That is: Whatever the [183] See U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2; U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 3. By itself, the Thirteenth Amendment also already rendered the Three-fifths Clause a null set. Section Two then dealt with the injustice of letting the South claim a massive increase in political power for its disenfranchised black population.

---

[184] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this conclusion as well. Opponents of Section Three characterized it as directly imposing retroactive punishment, thus contradicting principles of due process and principles against bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. at 2915 (Sen. Doolittle) (complaining that Section Three was an "ex post facto provision, a bill of attainder"); id. at 2890 (Sen. Cowen) (bill of attainder); id. at App 241 (Sen. Davis) (Section Three "is in the nature of both a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law"); id. at 2940 (Sen. Hendricks) (ex post facto); id. at 2916; see also id. at 2467 (Rep. Boyer) (criticizing earlier version of Section Three as "a bill of attainder or ex post facto law"). These charges were generally premised on the view – with which proponents of the amendment evidently agreed, see id. at 3036 (Sen. Henderson) – that Section Three would preempt these earlier rules to the extent of a direct conflict. Though at one point Senator Davis did make the wild suggestion that Section Three might itself exceed Congress's power to propose amendments to the Constitution. Id. at App. 241 ("The framers of the Constitution did not intend to invest, and have not in fact conferred on Congress the power to initiate alterations of it which would revolutionize the Government formed by it"); see also id. at 3146. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-31, 36-37 (documenting this history).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

correct meaning of Section Three as applied to conspiracies, attempts, incitements, and advocacy that meet the description of "engag[ing] in insurrection or rebellion" or of giving of "aid or comfort" to enemies of the constitutional government of the United States, the constitutional meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment modifies or qualifies what otherwise might have been thought the dictates of the First Amendment.

In the end, we think that these various prior provisions can mostly be read harmoniously with Section Three. Reason and common sense suggest they should be read consistently with one another to the extent fairly possible; and it is, for the most part, fairly possible to do so. But to the legitimate extent of any conflict or tension, Section Three controls over the Bill of Attainder Clause, the Ex Post Facto Clause, the Due Process Clause, and the First Amendment.

The first three are easy.

A. Bills of Attainder

A bill of attainder is the legislative infliction of punishment on specific people without a trial.[185] It is a violation of both the separation of powers and individual rights because it short-circuits the normal adjudication of guilt or innocence. But Section Three is neither a bill nor an attainder. It is not a "bill"—that is, an enactment of the legislature. Rather, it is an enactment of The People as supreme constitutional law. And it is not an "attainder" either—in that it is not at all clear that it inflicts punishment, because disqualification from office is not necessarily or exclusively a form of punishment. For instance, the Twenty-second Amendment is surely not inflicting a "punishment" when it precludes the President from running for a third term.[186] Moreover, Section Three does not inflict it on specified persons or groups, but rather on anybody who has committed a described course of conduct.

To be sure, Supreme Court precedent has read the Bill of Attainder Clauses more broadly, both in a pair of 20th-century "red scare" cases[187] and perhaps more relevantly in a pair of immediate post-Civil War-era loyalty cases: In Cummings v. Missouri[188] and Ex Parte Garland,[189] the Supreme Court invalidated state and federal oath requirements that required an "Ironclad Oath" from anybody holding a range of positions, both public and private. That oath was really a past-loyalty-requirement, requiring people to swear that they had not supported the confederacy or

---

[185] See generally Anthony Dick, The Substance of Punishment Under the Bill of Attainder Clause, 63 Stan. L. Rev. 1177 (2011).
[186] U.S. Const. amdt. XXII. But see Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. 277, 320 (1866) ("Disqualification from office many be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment.").
[187] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437 (1965); United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946).
[188] 71 U.S. 277 (1866).
[189] 71 U.S. 333 (1866).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the like.[190] The Court concluded that these requirements were effectively bills of attainder—and also ex post facto laws—and held them unconstitutional.

Even if one takes these precedents at face value it does not follow that Section Three would similarly be a bill of attainder. First, the "Ironclad Oath" laws had a broader scope than Section Three: Garland dealt with bar membership, and concluded that "exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct."[191] Similarly, the plaintiff in Cummings was a Catholic priest forbidden from preaching.[192] Neither case dealt with a more focused exclusion from constitutional office. Indeed, the majority opinion emphasized this fact, explicitly noting that neither case involved qualifications for public office.[193] Second, because both cases focused on the retroactive effect of the laws,[194] neither case's reasoning would seem applicable to Section Three in post-Civil-War insurrections and rebellions—which of course are the only insurrections and rebellions to which Section Three still applies.[195]

And in any event we doubt that one should take these precedents at face value. First of all, if we had to take sides, we might well be inclined to say that Garland at least may have been wrong, for reasons stated in dissent by Justice Miller (joined by three other justices, including, perhaps somewhat ironically given his later position in Griffin, Chief Justice Chase).[196] Second, and more fundamentally, if constitutional amendments can change the Constitution, a fortiori they can change judicial interpretations (and misinterpretations) of the Constitution. That is of course what Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment famously did with respect to Dred Scott, what the Eleventh Amendment did with respect to Chisholm, and so on.[197] In short, the Court's interpretation of the Bill of Attainder Clause was a stretch, and regardless, it does not stretch far enough to change or limit the meaning of Section Three.

B. Ex Post Facto Laws

---

[190] For much more detailed discussion of the federal "Ironclad Oath" see infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[191] Garland, 71 U.S. at 377.
[192] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 319.
[193] Garland, 71 U.S. at 378.
[194] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 327 ("They are aimed at past acts, and not future acts."); Garland, at 377 ("In the exclusion which the statute adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed").
[195] See supra Part I.B.
[196] Garland, 71 U.S. at 382. Cummings presents a trickier case, as it might involve complicating questions of state power to interfere with religious liberty and church autonomy (albeit before ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment) and an especially weak case for the relevance of past loyalty to engaging in religious occupation.
[197] For a somewhat lighthearted explication of this principle – and a serious treatment of certain of its implications, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, Can a Constitutional Amendment Overrule a Supreme Court Decision? 24 Const. Comm. 285 (2007).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Article I also forbids both the state and federal governments from enacting an "Ex Post Facto" law.[198] An ex post facto law is generally thought to mean a legislative enactment that makes a past act criminal even though it was lawful at the time it was done. Once again, Section Three does not meet this description, being neither a legislative enactment (but rather a new constitutional provision) nor a legislative enactment defining a criminal offense.[199] True, as applied to actions done before 1868, Section Three has retroactive (non-criminal) constitutional legal effect. But as applied to actions done after 1868, the idea that Section Three might depart even from the "spirit" of the ban on ex post facto laws makes precious little sense.

So Section Three no longer produces any conflict—if it ever did—with the Ex Post Facto Clauses or with any Ex Post Facto Spirit that might be supposed to lurk behind them. And even if it did, Section Three would supersede both prior law and lurking spirit.

Indeed, we have this on especially good authority, as this very question has been asked and answered in the past. The Eleventh Amendment, as noted above, had the effect of cutting off jurisdiction previously recognized by Chisholm v. Georgia's interpretation of Article III. In Hollingsworth v. Virginia, the Court then confronted the question whether the Amendment was retroactive, cutting off suits pending when the Amendment became law. The plaintiffs argued in the U.S. Supreme Court against retroactivity, because "[t]he spirit of the constitution," forbade "the mischief of an ex post facto Constitution."[200] Indeed, this argument mirrored precisely the arguments for narrow construction we have seen above: "It is true, that an amendment to the Constitution cannot be controuled by those provisions; and if the words were explicit and positive, to produce the retrospective effect contended for, they must prevail. But the words are doubtful; and, therefore, they ought to be so construed, as to conform to the general principle of the Constitution."[201] But the Supreme Court disagreed emphatically—unanimously ruling the very next day that the Amendment applied retroactively, by necessary implication.[202] As with the Eleventh, so too for the Fourteenth: Had the Supreme Court ever been called upon to consider the question, the right answer surely is that the Fourteenth Amendment's rules immediately governed upon ratification and applied "retroactively" to prior actions covered by the revised constitutional rules.

---

[198] U.S. Const. art. I, §§9 & 10.

[199] To be sure, there are revisionist arguments that the Ex Post Facto clause itself extends to retroactive civil laws too. See Eastern Enterprises v. Apfel, 524 U.S. 498, 538-39 (1998) (Thomas, J., concurring). And as with bills of attainder, in the wake of the Civil War the Supreme Court held that Ironclad Oath requirements were ex post facto laws as well. Cummings, 71 U.S. at 326-332; Garland, 71 U.S. at 377-368. But as discussed in the text, even these principles do not ensnare Section Three going forward, on a non-ex-post-facto basis

[200] 3 U.S. at 378-80 (arguments of counsel).

[201] Id.

[202] Id. at 382. See Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 626-627.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. Due Process of Law

The Constitution also forbids the deprivation of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law," which in many circumstances requires judicial process. Does Section Three's self-executing legal disqualification from office present any incompatibility with this requirement? Again, we think the two sets of provisions readily reconciled by giving the Due Process Clause no more than its due.

First of all, it is far from clear that the right to hold public office is a form of life, liberty, or property. It is a public privilege, a public trust, to be vested with the power of the people. And though it is a closer case, the same thing may be true even for those who already hold office at the moment that Section Three disqualifies them. Due process protects private vested rights from public deprivation. It does not protect public rights.[203] It has been argued that in England, offices were understood as vested rights of property, and occasionally early American courts said so as well.[204] But that was not the better rule in America. Treating offices as property did not fit well with republican principles,[205] and by 1900 the Supreme Court could rightly state: "The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property as such."[206]

In any event, even if it were otherwise, and those who held offices were deprived of property by Section Three, what would follow? Nothing. Section Three would prevail. Consider once again the Thirteenth Amendment, which did directly interfere with private property rights—the right recognized in southern states to hold other humans in bondage. The Thirteenth Amendment instantly, self-executingly, eliminated those property rights, due process notwithstanding.[207] So too would Section Three.

Principles of due process might also animate a different objection—that imposing such harsh consequences on individual wrongdoing simply ought to involve fair notice and an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps this instinct motivates the argument against self-execution, as in Griffin's Case. But in our view this objection is sufficiently answered by the terms of Section Three itself. Perhaps the reason that Section

---

[203] Caleb Nelson, Adjudication in the Political Branches, 107 Colum. L. Rev. 559, 565-593 (2007); William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III, 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1540-1547 (2020).
[204] Jed Shugerman, Freehold Offices vs. "Despotic Displacement": Why "Executive Power" Did Not Include Removal (July 25, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4521119; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 NC 1 (1833).
[205] See Jane Manners & Lev Menand, The Three Permissions, 121 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 20 (2021) ("In revolutionary America, the idea of offices as property was roundly rejected"); Saikrishna Prakash, Removal and Tenure in Office, 92 Va. L. Rev. 1779, 1824 n. 157 (2006) ("A more republican conception of government meant a more republican conception of offices.").
[206] Taylor & Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548 (1900).
[207] See supra notes 48-50 and accompanying text.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three only applies to holding office and not voting, and only applies to prior office-holders, who have previously sworn a constitutional oath—indeed, these limitations are the only ways in which Section Three's scope was appreciably narrowed during the drafting process—is that we can expect once and future officials and oath-takers to be on particularly strong notice about the basic rules of the constitutional order. Section Three does not ensnare garden-variety crime or miscreance. It ensnares offenses against the authority of the system by those who have been and seek to be part of that system.

Similarly, so long as Section Three is applied through the established and customary procedures for determining qualifications for office, many due process objections would seem to disappear. As discussed above, in many scenarios, Section Three's disqualification would be enforced through administrative hearings, quo warranto suits, state and federal judicial review, congressional adjudications, and so on. Anybody who wishes to argue that his conduct is not covered by the substantive sweep of Section Three is free to litigate that point through all relevant channels.[208] Section Three is therefore not in conflict with any requirements of fair notice or an opportunity to be heard.

D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment

With respect to the Constitution's provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process, the harmonization of Section Three with prior constitutional law is easy and relatively unproblematic. There is little conflict between the two provisions, and to the extent there is, Section Three is plain enough that it must prevail. The interaction of Section Three with the First Amendment presents a more interesting, even troubling, question. Does Section Three partially revoke the right to political dissent?

This question begets more questions: What exactly is the relationship between Section Three's language imposing disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" and the First Amendment's protections of the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and petition? Likewise, what is the relationship between the disqualification for having given "aid or comfort" to enemies of the United States and the First Amendment? As we have argued, Section Three in principle can supersede, qualify, or modify (or be deemed to "satisfy") prior constitutional requirements, rendering the provisions of the First Amendment essentially without independent constitutional force as limitations on the scope of Section Three. But how might the prior and important constitutional principles of the First Amendment affect the proper understanding of Section Three's meaning and scope? What exactly does Section Three effectuate, in relation to the First Amendment? Where do the usual protections of the First Amendment leave off and the legal disabilities imposed by Section Three take over, as a matter of the proper understanding of Section Three?

---

[208] See generally supra Part II.B.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There are, crudely, three possible ways of describing the relationship. The first is to find Section Three (implicitly) limited by the First Amendment. The second is, in contrast, to view Section Three as properly understood as carving out a zone of exception to, supersession of, or satisfaction of First Amendment principles. The third, which we believe correct, lies somewhere in the middle: Section Three should be construed, to the extent fairly possible, consistently with the free speech principles memorialized in the First Amendment. But to the extent of a true conflict between them, Section Three must control.

To consider a not-so-hypothetical example, suppose that an officeholder covered by Section Three gives a speech to an assembled crowd encouraging them to engage in rebellious or insurrectionary conduct. (And suppose further that the crowd accepts the encouragement, rebelling against members of Congress carrying out a constitutional duty at the seat of government.) We will return to this example[209] but for now we consider: how do we judge such an example? Is this only a question of the constitutional definition of "engage in insurrection" and "aid or comfort"—of whether an encouraging speech to an insurrectionary crowd is covered by those terms? Or is it also a question of whether that speech is protected by freedom of speech, and under modern doctrine, that would mean the very stringent test of Brandenburg v. Ohio?[210] Or is it somehow both?

To a large extent, we think the conflicts between Section Three and free speech can be minimized—as Hamilton would counsel.[211] First, even under modern doctrine, free speech does not protect several categories of speech that overlap with Section Three. Second, Section Three's terms will not often reach pure speech.

To elaborate on the first point: Modern First Amendment doctrine leaves the government free to punish actual conspiracy and solicitation, direct incitement, and material support of unlawful activities such as insurrection, rebellion, and treason. (There are serious questions about how much modern First Amendment doctrine has exceeded the original protections of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, which we will largely put aside, but the point is that these exceptions are recognized even on today's liberal understandings.[212])

---

[209] See infra Part IV.C.2.

[210] 395 U.S. 444 (1969).

[211] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176 ("So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done.").

[212] For what it is worth, we do not in general dispute many aspects of modern First Amendment doctrine, which we believe often captures the original meaning of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, as applied to modern circumstances. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, Scouts, Families, and Schools, 85 Minn. L. Rev. 1917, 1919-1922 (2001). To get a sense of how one might construct a truly marvelous proof of this, which this margin is too narrow to contain, see for starters, Adam Griffin, First Amendment Originalism: The Original Law and A Theory of Legal Change as Applied to The Freedom of Speech and of The Press, 17 First Amend. L. Rev. 91 (2019); Jud Campbell, Natural Rights

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The First Amendment has long been held not to protect conspiracy to commit a crime or direct solicitation of unlawful activity, because this is "speech integral to criminal conduct."[213] And while one must use some caution about unduly expanding this category, conspiracy and solicitation are at its core.[214] Thus, efforts to steal elections, to pressure state officials to manufacture votes, to pressure other officials (like the Vice President) to violate their constitutional duties in service of a constitutional coup—would all be unprotected by the First Amendment. To the extent those efforts are swept up by Section Three, there would be no conflict.

More familiar may be the modern line of cases concerning "incitement." Over the course of the twentieth century, judicial doctrine increasingly gave greater protection to speech that could be seen as generally inciting unlawful activity, recognizing that earlier doctrine (such as the famous "clear and present danger" test) had too readily permitted suppression of disfavored political views. The modern rule, stated in Brandenburg v. Ohio in 1969, excludes from First Amendment protection only advocacy or expressive conduct (i) "directed to" (ii) triggering or inciting (iii) "imminent" lawless action (presumably including acts of insurrection or rebellion) and (iv) "likely" to produce such action.[215] That is a fairly strict standard, but not one that is impossible to satisfy. Importantly, it does leave open—even under the generous terms of modern First Amendment law—the prospect that some acts of advocacy and expression supporting insurrection or rebellion are simply unprotected by the First Amendment in any event, so that Section Three does not even need to have amended or superseded the First Amendment in order for its terms to be given their full legal effect.

The Supreme Court's relatively recent decision in Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project[216] recognized a further and more controversial limitation on subversive speech: it can be forbidden where it provides "material support" to a foreign organization engaged in or committed to terrorist violence against the nation. The Court concluded that because the "interest in combating terrorism is an urgent objective of the highest order," the Congress could forbid even speech—such as teaching and training—assisting such organizations, and even though the speech did not directly and the First Amendment, 117 Yale L. J. 246 (2017); Jud Campbell, The Emergence of Neutrality, 131 Yale L. J. 861 (2022). (We will cease further digression on this point.)

---

[213] United States v. Hansen, 599 U.S. __, at 18-19 (2023); United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 297 (2008); Giboney v. New Ice Storage, 336 U.S. 490 (1949); Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 989-993, 1007-1008 (2016).

[214] Volokh, supra note 213, at 1011-1015.

[215] 395 U.S. at 447. This standard is elaborated in Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 108-109 (1973); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. 886 (1982). Additionally, Bond v. Floyd, 385 U.S. 116 (1966) rejected the idea that there is a lower First Amendment standard of incitement when a state legislature is excluding an elected member under state law, id. at 132-135; see also Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 449 (1974) (same principle applies to ballot access).

[216] 561 U.S. 1 (2010).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

further terrorist conduct. While this decision is hedged by multiple limiting principles,[217] it illustrates another set of circumstances where the First Amendment would create no conflict with potential applications of Section Three.

In sum, while modern First Amendment doctrine is quite generous in its protection of speech, in many cases it would produce no conflict with the coverage of Section Three. We will elaborate on the second point—the scope of Section Three itself—more fully in Part IV, but for now suffice it to say that the occasions will be rare where speech alone is what qualifies one as having "engaged in insurrection" or provided "aid or comfort" to enemies.

That said, we will concede that the conflict between free speech and Section Three cannot be denied entirely. Consider the Civil War example of Clement Vallandigham, who was arrested and imprisoned by the military on the theory that "he was laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops; to encourage desertions from the army; and to leave the Rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it,"— that he was "warring upon the Military."[218] It is conceivable (though we do not prejudge the point) that Vallandigham's anti-military efforts could be covered by Section Three. And yet it is also quite plausible that his efforts would be protected by free speech.

Or for a sharper example, even more on point, consider the case of Representative-elect John Y. Brown, who was excluded from the Fortieth Congress on the grounds that he had given aid and comfort to the Confederacy by writing to the Louisville Courier promising to resist the Union army "unto the death" and stating that anybody who volunteered for the Union army "ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."[219] This exclusion was part of the backdrop of Section Three's enactment and likely the kind of thing Section Three was intended to cover. But, argues one scholar of the incident, this pre-Section Three exclusion "was entirely unconstitutional" and "plainly violative of the First Amendment."[220] If that was so before Section Three's enactment, does Section Three make it otherwise?[221]

Finally and perhaps most explosively, consider the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. Berger was denounced by members of the House for having given "aid and comfort to the enemies of this country during [217] The Court emphasized that "only material support coordinated with or under the direction of a designated foreign terrorist organization" was banned; "independent advocacy" was "not covered." Id. at 31-32. Additionally, the law only applied to foreign organizations.

---

[218] President Abraham Lincoln to Erastus Corning and others (June 12, 1863), in Abraham Lincoln, Speeches and Writings, 1859-1965, at 454, 459 (Don Fehrenbacher, ed. 1989). See infra notes 269-277 and accompanying text.

[219] See infra notes 270-278, and 343-348 and accompanying text.

[220] Lynch, supra note 5, at 197-198.

[221] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 198 ("Had Section 3 been ratified by this point, these concerns would be assuaged.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

this Great War," and excluded in part on that basis.[222] (Indeed, Berger had also been convicted and sentenced under the Espionage Act, though the charges were overturned by the Supreme Court on grounds of judicial bias.)[223] Another scholar of the incident writes that "Under a good reading of the First Amendment, Berger's speeches and writings could not have been seditious; however under the interpretation prevailing at the time, they probably were."[224] What should we make of such an incident?

In the end, in a case where free speech principles conflict with the best original understanding of "engaged in insurrection" or "aid or comfort," we think that free speech principles must give way. We stress that we do not think that all or even most disloyal speech will rise to the level of triggering Section Three's disqualifications.[225] But where it does, where "it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other," it is the more recent Fourteenth Amendment that "shall be preferred" to the earlier rule.[226]

For those (like us) who value First Amendment liberties of speech, press, assembly, religion, and the right to dissent generally, might Section Three therefore be thought a little dangerous? Might Section Three, in the wrong hands or applied improperly, be used to suppress dissent in the name of excluding insurrectionists from office? Perhaps. We do not shy away from the point. But the supposed danger of a constitutional provision is not really an argument against its meaning. And the potential abuse of a constitutional power, privilege, or disqualification is not really a good legal argument against its existence. Section Three's exclusion could be thought to pose a danger; but insurrection and rebellion are dangers too—all too real dangers, as recent events have shown. Where exactly that line is drawn by the Constitution, and the extent to which that line changes the prior rules of the First Amendment, are ultimately questions of the meaning of Section Three's general terms triggering disqualification from future office—"insurrection," "rebellion," "engaged in," "given aid or comfort to"—and of who all is included under Section Three's ban. To that set of important questions we turn next.

IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping

---

[222] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 190; Lynch, supra note 5, at 211-213; 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 52-63.
[223] Berger v. United States, 255 U.S. 22 (1921). During the initial exclusion, when Berger's conviction was on appeal, the House Committee announced "that it would not be governed by the action of the judge and jury at the Chicago trial," but would review the evidence and legal questions for itself. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 54. But curiously, after the convictions were reversed the House allowed Berger to sit in the sixty-eighth through seventieth Congresses. Lynch, supra note 5, at 213.
[224] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 191.
[225] In our view, for instance, the exclusion of Victor Berger went too far—not because the First Amendment makes an exception to Section Three, but because Berger's advocacy did not satisfy the original meaning of Section Three. See infra note 359.
[226] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We come at last to the heart of the beast: the substance of Section Three's prohibition. We begin (in Subpart A) with the most interesting and important set of issues—the types of misconduct that trigger Section Three. What deeds (and words?) amount to having "engaged in" "insurrection" or "rebellion" against the lawful authority of the Constitution and the system of government it establishes? What acts (or words?) amount to having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of lawful government under the Constitution?

These terms to some extent bear a range of meaning and fair construction. The events they describe are often exceptional and to some extent unique. Still, some applications will be clear and virtually indisputable, falling within the terms' core meaning—the center of the interpretive bullseye, so to speak. Such scenarios so clearly fall within Section Three that they may be said to be contained within the opposite of a safe harbor—a "sure shipwreck,"[227] to borrow Susan Morse's phrase—of unquestionably disqualifying conduct falling within the core of Section Three's meaning: for example, declaring unilateral secession from lawful constitutional government; or the taking up of arms against government (as in the waging of the Civil War). At the other end of the continuum, there will be situations that clearly lie in a safe harbor outside the legitimate range of meaning of Section Three's terms—ordinary expression of political dissent as well as even ordinary law violations. In between these markers, there is a zone of reasonable, fair construction of allowable interpretation and application in which government officials may make judgments that must be conceded to be within the range of what the Constitution permits—and where the decisions and actions of government officials exercising their constitutional powers consequently cannot be considered unlawful and thereby subject to judicial invalidation. Within that fair range of meaning, different interpreters legitimately can reach differing conclusions, all in accordance with the Constitution. We address all of these questions in subpart A.

We then turn more briefly (in subpart B) to the questions of what prior-office-holding, oath-taking categories of persons—persons who then subsequently engaged in insurrection or rebellion—are covered by Section Three's ban and (a similar but distinct question) what future offices are constitutionally barred to such persons. We conclude that Section Three's disqualification is sweeping, both in the substantive conduct that triggers such disqualification and in the office-holders and offices to which it applies. In particular, contrary to one recent revisionist view, we believe it applies to the Presidency.

Finally (in Subpart C) we will consider the attempted overthrow of the 2020 Presidential election. Did the incumbent president's willful, deliberate refusal to accept the outcome of the lawful constitutional election resulting in his defeat for re-election and, instead, his (and others') attempt to overthrow constitutional election results and install or maintain himself in office, by force, by fraud or by attempted de

---

[227] Susan Morse, Safe Harbors, Sure Shipwrecks, 49 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1385 (2016).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

facto political coup d'etat against the regime of lawful constitutional government, constitute engaging in "insurrection or rebellion against the Constitution of the United States"? We think the answer is yes.

Whether called a "rebellion," an attempted coup d'etat seeking to displace lawful government authority under the Constitution, or an "insurrection," instigating, inciting and encouraging a mob to engage in acts of forcible violence directed against the ability of Congress and the Vice President to carry out their constitutional duties—and then refusing to intervene—such conduct is covered by Section Three, and is disqualifying. If those are indeed the facts concerning Donald Trump's (and others') efforts to overthrow the election—and we think they are—such conduct triggers the disqualification rule of Section Three.

Whether other federal and state officeholders—members of Congress, state legislators, past or present state and federal executive and judicial officers—engaged in conduct constituting "insurrection" or "rebellion" (including meaningful action in deliberate furtherance of an attempted coup against lawful constitutional government), or gave "aid or comfort" (approval, encouragement, support) to enemies might sometimes involve more difficult questions of fact and judgment. But they are the questions Section Three compels us to ask, and to answer. Where such evaluations and judgments have been made by actors exercising legitimate authority to make them (as discussed in Part II) and fall within the fair range of Section Three's meaning, those judgments are entitled to full legal effect.

A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies"

What is the proper, original public meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" as used in Section Three? Of having "engaged in" such conduct? Of having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies"?

Because the terms are capacious and the evidence is sprawling, we will start by proposing our working definitions for these terms. We then show how they are largely consistent with standard sources for discerning the meaning of constitutional text: contemporaneous definitions of these terms; usage elsewhere in the Constitution; and contemporaneous public, political, and legal usage of the terms. This last category, which is especially instructive, includes usages from President Lincoln, legislation adopted by the Civil War Congress (both the 1862 "Ironclad" oath and the Second Confiscation Act), and the significant mid-Civil-War decision of the Supreme Court in The Prize Cases. We also consider, albeit in somewhat more abbreviated fashion, statutes and usages leading up to the Civil War, including the Insurrection Act of 1795 as amended, and an important series of exclusions from Congress itself, as well as the relevant legislative history of Section Three, and a few scattered post-enactment applications of Section Three itself.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Working definitions

We begin by offering working definitions of the terms insurrection and rebellion and of what might constitute "engaging in" such conduct or giving "aid or comfort" to enemies under Section Three.

Insurrection is best understood as concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect. The term "insurrection" connotes something more than mere ordinary lawbreaking. It suggests an affirmative contest with, and active resistance to, the authority of the government. It is in that sense more than just organized resistance to the laws—more than just a protest, even one involving civil disobedience. Rather, it is organized resistance to the government. Insurrection is also more than mere "protest" in that it implies some element of forcible resistance. It is something more than a mere spontaneous, disorganized "riot."[228] Insurrection suggests at least some degree of coordinated, concerted action. The term also implies something more than acts of solitary individuals: to qualify as an insurrection the acts in question must involve some form of collective action, even if not an advance plan.

At the same time, insurrection may fall short of outright rebellion—even as the terms overlap and might bleed into each other—in that an insurrection might not seek to overturn, overthrow, or displace the government itself, in whole or in part (as a rebellion does). As the Supreme Court put it in The Prize Cases, in 1863: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion."[229]

Rebellion is thus closely related to insurrection, but perhaps not quite identical in meaning. A rebellion is arguably broader in its reach than an insurrection: rebellion implies an effort to overturn or displace lawful government authority by unlawful means. (In the case of secession, or a declaration of independence, the rebellion is an effort to free those engaged in rebellion from the authority of the existing lawful government.) Rebellion is something beyond mere resistance to government authority in a particular instance or set of instances. A rebellion seeks to replace the existing regime, not just resist its law-executing authority. Rebellion involves repudiation, to some degree or another, of the regime's authority, legitimacy, or validity. It is a challenge, direct or indirect, to the regime itself. The South's attempted secession was a species of rebellion—an attempt to overturn the authority of the Constitution and government of the United States by the states asserting the right to secede. Likewise, an attempted coup d'etat is arguably also a species of rebellion—an effort to displace, replace, upend, or overthrow the existing lawful regime and substitute different authority in its stead.

---

[228] 10 Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution 1296 (Statement of Madison) ("A riot did not come within the legal definition of an insurrection").
[229] 2 Black (67 U.S.) 635, 667 (1863).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The term rebellion can also imply a competing claim to legitimacy. "Rebellion" thus seems to carry a stronger political-claim-of-right valence than does "insurrection."[230] Crucially, however, the fact that an insurrection or rebellion claims political or moral legitimacy—as the American Revolution did; indeed, as the South's secession did—does not make it any the less an insurrection or rebellion. The fact that an attempted coup d'etat, or declaration of independence, or secession, is claimed to be a "vindication" or "restoration" of rightful governmental authority—or asserted to be a pre-emptive effort to thwart some other person's or group's alleged wrongful assertion of authority—does not immunize such action from the legal characterization of rebellion against the regime. If somebody in fact participates in an attempt to overthrow the government, it makes no difference that he might think himself in the right for doing so, see himself as an agent for preserving lawful government, or view his acts and intention not as "rebellion" but restoration. Mistake of law is no defense to a coup d'etat. The South offered a variety of constitutional legal theories in defense of the supposed lawfulness of secession as an act for the vindication of its believed rights.[231] That did not make its acts of rebellion any less acts of rebellion.

As to the overlap and distinction between insurrection and rebellion our working definition is more tentative. It is possible that a rebellion is simply a special case of an insurrection, in the way that a square is a special case of a rectangle. But it is also possible that the term rebellion is not necessarily limited to regime change by

---

[230] Though it is possible that this connotation is anachronistic. See infra note 252.

[231] For important accounts and discussion of Southern arguments for the constitutional propriety and validity of secession, on a variety of asserted grounds, see James M. McPherson, Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era 234-236 (1988) (summarizing Southern constitutional and political theories); Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution 57-91 (2003) (emphasizing arguments of states' rights to interposition, nullification, and secession generally); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lincoln and Judicial Authority, 83 Notre Dame. L. Rev. 1227, 1270-1277 (2008) (setting forth Southern leaders' constitutional arguments that Lincoln's stance against the Dred Scott decision, against judicial supremacy, and against extension of slavery violated the judicially settled constitutional rights of slaveholding persons and states); Kenneth M. Stampp, The Concept of a Perpetual Union, 65 J. Am. Hist. 5-53 (June 1978) (providing detailed history of constitutional and political arguments over the nature of Union and the validity of secession); David P. Currie, The Constitution in Congress: Descent into the Maelstrom 1829-1861, at 228-237 (2005) (discussing and evaluating the constitutional arguments for and against the validity of secession). For the case against the constitutionality of secession, see generally 2 Abraham Lincoln, Speeches & Writings, 1859-1865: Speeches, Letters, Miscellaneous Writings, Presidential Messages & Proclamations, at 217-218 (First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861); id. at 254-258, 260-261 (Message to Congress, July 4, 1861); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Civil War as Constitutional Interpretation, 71 U Chi. L. Rev. 691, 703-715 (2004) (reviewing Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution) (distilling and building on Lincoln's arguments); Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 303-311 (same). For further background, see generally William W. Freehling, The Road to Disunion: Secessionists at Bay 1776-1854 (1990), and for a comprehensive exposition of the Southern view, see Alexander M. Stephens, A Constitutional View of the Late War Between the States; Its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results (1867). As a clarification: we use the term "secession" here and throughout this article to refer to unilateral secession without the consent of the federal government, as in the Civil War, and do not discuss ways the federal government might lawfully consent to the independence of a state or territory.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

force—and thus may occupy some ground not covered by the word "insurrection" (which, we have suggested, must be forcible). There are such things as "bloodless coups": actions that effectively displace or upend the prior constitutional order without shots being fired, but that nonetheless are in unlawful defiance or repudiation of the existing legal order.[232]

To illustrate this hypothesized distinction between insurrection and rebellion: Imagine that the Southern attack on Fort Sumter in April 1861 had preceded any declared right to secession. The attack would have been an act of insurrection—an exercise of concerted, forcible defiance of the authority of the Union government—but not necessarily outright rebellion. Conversely, the ordinances of secession adopted by state conventions in the South in 1860 and 1861[233] preceded (mostly) any acts of actual forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws. The secession ordinances might still immediately constitute acts of "rebellion," even before any accompanying violence. In short: Sumter without secession would have still been insurrection. Secession without Sumter was already rebellion. Put the two events together—acts of forcible insurrection and declarations of avowed rebellion frequently travel in pairs (as they obviously did with the Civil War)—and it becomes difficult to distinguish "insurrection" from "rebellion." The overlap of the two terms in theory becomes complete in practice.

In the end, however, we do not wish to make too much of the ways in which the terms differ in shades of color and in their implication. The coverage of the terms overlaps substantially. Sometimes, the terms, occupying much of the same ground, seem capable of being used almost interchangeably. Indeed, the bigger picture point for understanding Section Three is that "insurrection" and "rebellion," in tandem, cover pretty much the entire terrain of large-scale unlawful resistance to government authority.

So much for our working definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion." What does it mean to have "engaged in" such conduct? We believe one has "engaged" in

---

[232] Indeed, one might characterize the process of adoption of the U.S. Constitution, replacing the regime of the Articles of Confederation, as a peaceful political coup d'etat – an act of "rebellion" if judged by the pre-existing law, but morally and politically justified by the failure of the prior regime and Lockean notions of self-governance, and subsequently legalized by its own success. See generally Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 3-8, 17-20; Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism as a Theory of Legal Change, 38 Harv. J. L. & Pub Pol'y 818, 821, 844, 850 (2015). But cf. Akhil Reed Amar, The Words that Made Us: America's Constitutional Conversation 1760-1840, at 164-165 (2021) (emphasizing the states' retention of sovereignty under the Articles and the idea that states might thus properly exit that regime, legally, on the theory that the Articles had become a breached treaty).

[233] The seceding states adopted their secession resolutions by state "conventions," purporting to parallel the process by which the states ratified the Constitution. See McPherson, supra note 231, at 234-284 (describing secession actions of ten states that purported to secede from the Union). The secession ordinances of the South were self-consciously styled after the Declaration of Independence, which was obviously an act of formal legal rebellion.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

insurrection or rebellion when one has been actively involved in the planning or execution of intentional acts of insurrection or rebellion; or when one has knowingly provided active, meaningful, voluntary, direct support for, material assistance to, or specific encouragement of such actions. Such planning, participation, support, assistance, or encouragement may be in the form of either words or deeds, as long as the person who has "engaged in" such activities embraced the objectives of the insurrection or rebellion in question and did things that contributed in a meaningful way to advancing those objectives.[234] (There is obvious overlap here with the closely related concept of having given "aid or comfort" to the nation's enemies, which we discuss presently.)

Of course, there are also important limits to how far the concept of having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion extends. Mere passive acquiescence, resigned acceptance, silence, or inaction is not typically enough to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion. An exception to this limitation might exist where a person possesses an affirmative duty to speak or act. Further, mere abstract advocacy of, or theorizing concerning, the desirability of insurrection or rebellion, without more, is not the same as actually engaging in it. We think this is true even though the First Amendment does not formally constrain Section Three: it is simply the best understanding of Section Three's terms.

Then there is the related question of what constitutes having given "aid or comfort" to "the enemies thereof." This reads as a separate, independent ground for disqualification: Section Three is triggered by having engaged in insurrection or rebellion "or" having given aid or comfort to enemies. This language, of course, closely echoes the earlier constitutional language of the Treason Clause.[235]

In many cases, giving "aid or comfort" to enemies will be similar to the kind of conduct that counts as having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion through intentional, active assistance. If there is a difference, it is that the term "aid or comfort" reinforces and emphasizes Section Three's coverage of indirect but material assistance. Such material assistance—possibly including expression supporting, encouraging, counseling, or promoting the enemy—might more naturally fall into Section

---

[234] This working definition of having "engaged in" wrongful activity resembles familiar common law understandings of accomplice liability in the area of criminal law, which typically resulted from the combination of (1) assistance to unlawful conduct (with "assistance" including uttering words of encouragement to, or agreeing not to interfere with, such conduct) and (2) the intention to further such unlawful conduct). Federal criminal law today is to similar effect. 18 U.S.C. § 2(a) (2012) ("Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal."). We think it is also generally supported by background mens rea principles. See William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Law of Interpretation, 130 Harv. L. Rev. 1079, 1108 (2017). That said, the context of the Civil War also suggests one important limitation: there is no mistake-of-rebellion defense. See text accompanying infra note 425.

[235] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 ("Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.")

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three's "aid or comfort" language, even where it might be debatable whether to characterize such conduct as directly "engag[ing] in" insurrection or rebellion.

Additionally, while Section Three uses some language paralleling that contained in the Treason Clause, Section Three is by no means limited to the constitutional crime of treason. "Insurrection" and "rebellion" are their own things, distinct from "treason." While some acts of insurrection and rebellion might also constitute treason they need not do so in order to be encompassed within Section Three. So even if "aid or comfort" in Section Three connotes the same type of assistance-and-embrace principles as "Aid and Comfort" in Article III's Treason Clause,[236] the relevant conduct to which such assistance is given might well differ. (And, as noted earlier, it is plain that Section Three requires no prior criminal-law conviction, for treason or any other defined crime, as a prerequisite for its disqualification to apply.)

Finally, aid or comfort to whom? "[T]he enemies thereof." Before the Civil War, some might have limited the term "enemies" to those owing allegiance to a foreign power,[237] but that is not plausibly true of Section Three. Rather, Section Three covers enemies both foreign and domestic. That now-familiar phrase ("enemies foreign and domestic") comes from the "Ironclad Oath," written into law in 1862, in the midst of the Civil War,[238] and it seems clear from the political context of Section Three that it likewise treats domestic enemies as enemies. Indeed, it is almost unthinkable that Confederate rebels would not have been thought "enemies" in the sense employed by the text.

What is less clear is how to define the foreign and domestic enemies covered by Section Three. The most straightforward option, which strikes us as the more likely one, is that "enemies" essentially cross-references the domestic rebels and insurrectionists just described earlier in the sentence (as well as more traditional foreign enemies, of course). On this straightforward reading, Section Three would cover a domestic officeholder who directly engages in insurrection or rebellion, or who gives aid or comfort to others who do so (or, of course, one who gives aid or comfort to foreign enemies). This straightforward reading is also consistent with the operation of another 1862 statute, the Second Confiscation Act.[239] That said, we cannot rule out another narrower possibility, that "enemies" is limited to those with whom the US are effectively at war, and thus excludes insurrections and rebellions that do not rise to the level of a civil war.[240] This would create a more complicated two-track system

---

[236] See infra note 258.
[237] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 174 (discussing United States v. Greathouse, 26 F. Cas. 18, 22 (C.C.N.D. Cal. 1863) (No. 15,254)).
[238] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[239] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.ii.
[240] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 173-178 for more discussion.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

where Section Three covers all insurrections and rebellions, as well as "aid or comfort" to a more limited set of insurrections and rebellions. While it strikes us as less likely, we cannot definitively rule it out.[241]

Our sense of the whole—of Section Three's substantive terms triggering disqualification for those who have engaged in the conduct described—is that Section Three is quite sweeping, using overlapping terms to cover several different characterizations of major collective resistance to the authority of government under the Constitution. Whether it be called "insurrection" or "rebellion"; and whether a covered individual is thought to have "engaged in" such activity or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies," Section Three's disqualification is triggered. The language is not unlimited, to be sure. But the broad and overlapping terms are not intended to be hospitable to loopholes or artful, narrow, technical evasions.

Finally, let us reiterate one consequence of Section Three's breadth and capaciousness. Because Section Three's terms possess a range of meaning, both a determinate core and a fuzzier periphery, we need a second-order rule concerning the authority of decisionmakers to act on the basis of fair interpretations of indefinite terms. We think that the general rule of our constitutional order is that political officials may take actions premised on fair interpretations of indefinite terms, and that when they do so, their actions cannot rightly be held "unconstitutional" by the courts, precisely because they fit within the fair range afforded by the Constitution. Where the Constitution admits of a range of choice, political authorities may exercise choices within that range.

This is foundational to our constitutional law.[242] It is the premise of judicial review as set forth in Marbury v. Madison, which justifies setting aside the acts of

---

[241] What is the referent of "enemies thereof"? Does "thereof" refer to enemies of the United States or enemies of the Constitution of the United States? We think this replicates the question of what "the same" refers to, earlier in the sentence, and presents the same issue of minor and seemingly inconsequential ambiguity. (Does "insurrection or rebellion against the same" refer to insurrection or rebellion against "the United States"?) On balance, we think that it probably makes little practical difference: rebellion against the United States and rebellion against the Constitution of the United States will often amount to the same thing; either one is capable of being considered an instance of the other. Whatever the answer, it should be the same for both—"against the same" and "thereof" refer to the same thing. Our best guess is that it is "the United States."

[242] See, e.g., Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 858 (arguing that where constitutional language states a general principle, "actions of government that fall within the scope of judgment or discretion admitted by the breadth with which that principle is expressed do not violate the Constitution, and are thus allowable"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, A Government of Adequate Powers, 31 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 991, 995 (2008) (arguing that "textual imprecision or generality often admits of a range of choices" and that the correct constitutional answer in such circumstances "is that the legislature must be permitted to choose from options within that range"; thus, "the more indeterminate or under-determinate the range of a constitutional provision, the broader the duty of the courts to defer to what the legislature has enacted"); Kesavan & Paulsen, Secret Drafting History, supra note 9, at 1129-30 n.54 (2003); Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Most Dangerous Branch: Executive Power to Say What the Law other branches only because, and only to the extent to, they deviate from the Constitution's meaning. It is classically illustrated by the Court's reasoning in M'Culloch v. Maryland,[243] which upheld Congress's power to create the Bank of the United States because a generation of political actors had acted within the fair range of meaning of constitutionally granted powers.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And this principle means, as a practical matter, that the breadth of Section Three's broad terms cannot be ignored, or artificially limited, by judicial construction. Where those charged with responsibilities that involve applying Section Three's terms have given that language its full legitimate sweep, that breadth must be honored.

We now canvass—perhaps too briefly and yet at too great a length—some of the evidence supporting these working definitions.

2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions

As we have said, the task of ascertaining true constitutional meaning consists of seeking out the objective, original meaning of the words and phrases of the text: that is, the meaning Section Three's terms and structure would have had in the legal system at the time. A starting point for such an inquiry—though not the ending point—is to look at contemporaneous dictionary definitions. (We think that evidence of contemporaneous political and legal usage of words and phrases contained in the constitutional text is actually quite often stronger evidence of original, objective linguistic meaning: it can serve as a kind of operational, practical concordance that may "define" terms more precisely in their application than can a cold dictionary definition.)

Nineteenth century dictionaries contain definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion" that substantially corroborate our working definitions. Webster defined "insurrection" as "[a] rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state."[244] Rebellion was "[a]n open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government to which one owes allegiance."[245]

Is, 83 Geo. L.J. 217, 333 (1994); Baude & Sachs, Law of Interpretation, supra note 234, at 1120 (describing "the presumption of constitutionality" as a rule of unwritten law); William Baude, Constitutional Liquidation, 71 Stan. L. Rev. 1, 35-36, 44 (2019). Again, we bracket any differences in emphasis between our respective views of the adjudication of ambiguities.

[243] 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819),

[244] 1 Noah Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language 111 (1828, photoreprint 1993) ("Insurrection"); see also Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 702 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (similar); 1 John Boag, A Popular and Complete English Dictionary 727 (1850) (similar).

[245] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also Webster's (Porter 1864), supra note 244, at 1094 (similar); 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Importantly, Webster also noted several distinctions between these and other terms. In defining rebellion, he distinguished an insurrection as "a rising in opposition to a particular act or law, without a design to renounce wholly all subjection to the government," while a rebellion was a more categorical "attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one or to place the country under another jurisdiction."[246] And in defining insurrection, Webster noted that insurrection is "equivalent to sedition, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens."[247] This suggests a spectrum from sedition (not covered by Section Three) to insurrection to rebellion (both covered).

At the same time, Webster also conceded some overlap in these terms, writing that "[i]nsurrection may be, but is not necessarily, rebellion"[248] and that despite these technical distinctions, "[i]nsurrection is however used with latitude as to comprehend either sedition or rebellion."[249] This suggests a great deal of potential breadth and overlap in these terms.

Along similar lines, a prominent mid-century legal dictionary, John Bouvier's Law Dictionary in its 1868 edition, contains detailed definitions of insurrection, rebellion, and aid and comfort. "INSURRECTION" was defined simply as "[a] rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government."[250] "REBELLION" is correspondingly defined: "The taking up arms traitorously against the government. The forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued."[251] Bouvier's thus treated "insurrection" and "rebellion" as nearly interchangeable terms, both involving some degree of concerted and forcible opposition to the authority of the lawfully constituted government but not clearly distinguishing between them.[252]

---

[246] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 1 Boag, supra note 244, at 727; 2 id. at 319 (similar).

[247] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111 ("Insurrection"). For comparison, Webster defined "Sedition" as: "A factious commotion of the people, or a tumultuous assembly of men rising in opposition to law or the administration of justice, and in disturbance of the public peace. Sedition is a rising or commotion of less extent than an insurrection, and both are less than rebellion . . ." 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 66 ("Sedition").

[248] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

[249] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111. Daniel Hemel argues that "Webster's definition of 'insurrection' seems implausibly broad for Section 3 purposes." See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5.

[250] "Insurrection" in 1 John Bouvier. A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union 729-730 (Philadelphia, G.W. Childs, 12th ed., rev. and enl. 1868).

[251] "Rebellion" in 2 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 415 (emphasis added).

[252] See also Joseph Worcester, A Dictionary of the English Language 764, 1190 (1860) (generally equating insurrection and rebellion). Elsewhere in this edition, Bouvier drew a distinction in connotation between "REBEL" and "INSURGENT," suggesting that "rebel is always understood in a bad sense, as one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bouvier's dictionary also offers an instructive definition of "AID AND COMFORT" as "[h]elp, support, assistance, counsel, encouragement." The entry adds this discussion, noting the lack of U.S. judicial interpretation at the time but a generally accepted English background understanding of the term:

> The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, declares that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial discussion. They import, however, help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. 1, c.14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act …[253]

This tends to confirm our broad construction of "aid or comfort" as encompassing many kinds of intentional support, akin to the common law.

3. Intratextualism

In some cases, the Constitution can also serve as its own internal dictionary. The meaning of a constitutional term in one part of the document can inform its meaning in another, either because of the complete (or near) copying of one constitutional text by another or by virtue of subtle contrast, refinement, or qualification in a term's usage. (Professor Akhil Amar has dubbed this method of interpretation "Intratextualism.")[254] Chief Justice Marshall, for example, famously employed this method in M'Culloch v. Maryland as part of his argument for the constitutionality of Congress's chartering of a Bank of the United States.[255] tyranny of constitute authorities," and thus that "[t]he colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels." "Insurgent" and "Rebel" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 729; 2 id. at 415.

---

In a much later edition, Bouvier's drew a distinction between insurrection and rebellion as two different varieties of "actual and open resistance to [government] authority." Insurrection was "an actual uprising against the government" while rebellion "goes beyond insurrection in aim" and attempts actually to overthrow the government authority in question. "Insurrection" and "Rebellion," in 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary & Concise Encycl. (Rawles Rev., 1897). Lynch misstates the date of this edition as 1867, and thus mistakenly cites it as "contemporarily authoritative." Lynch, supra note 5, at 167 n. 80.

[253] "Aid and Comfort" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 107.

[254] Akhil Reed Amar, Intratextualism, 112 Harv. L. Rev. 747, 748 (1999).

[255] M'Culloch, 17 U.S. at 413-414. In construing the scope of the legislative power conferred by the Necessary and Proper Clause, Marshall noted how the word "necessary" was used differently, and subjected to different qualifications, in other parts of the Constitution and found that those differences were useful in interpreting the clause at hand. For discussion of the prominence of intratextual and structural-logic, whole-text arguments in some of Chief Justice Marshall's most significant Supreme Court opinions, including Marbury and M'Culloch, see Paulsen, Marbury, supra note 66, at 2711; see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Plausibility of Personhood, 74 Ohio St. L. J. 13, 33 n. 72 (2013).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Might the Constitution's other usages of terms that also appear in Section Three serve as such markers of meaning for "insurrection" and "rebellion," and "aid or comfort" to enemies, as those terms are used in Section Three? A quick canvass suggests only limited help.

The word "insurrection" appears in the Militia Clause of Article I, Section 8 of the original Constitution: Congress is given the enumerated power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[256] The word "rebellion" appears in the Writ Suspension Clause of Article I, Section 9: "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or invasion the public Safety may require it."[257] In neither instance, however, does the context suggest any particular definition or explication of the term. They are thus of little direct assistance to the task of unpacking the meaning of Section Three.

As noted, the language in Section Three's alternative trigger—the giving of "aid and comfort" to enemies—borrows the nearly identical language of the Treason Clause of Article III. But once again, the similar language in Article III is not self-defining. Nor was there an established, settled, authoritative judicial interpretation of this language that might have been understood specifically to define "aid and comfort" as a constitutional term-of-art at the time of the framing of the Fourteenth Amendment.[258] Moreover, in the 1860s, the pairing of "aid" and/or "comfort" had be-

---

[256] U.S. Const. art. I, §8 cl. 15.

[257] U.S. Const. art. I, §9 cl. 2.

[258] Perhaps the most notable U.S. treason case to date was Ex parte Bollman, in which Chief Justice Marshall delivered an opinion for the Court granting habeas to two of the co-conspirators in Aaron Burr's plot to seize Spanish territory in the American (then-)southwest and attempt to form his own independent nation. Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75 (1807). The opinion combined a relatively narrow construction of the substantive crime of treason (in part because of Article III's text ("only in levying war") with a relatively broad construction of complicity. Thus on one hand: "However flagitious may be the crime of conspiring to subvert by force the government of our country, such conspiracy is not treason," id. at 126, but on the other hand, "if war be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors." Id. Ex parte Bollman was an early and prominent legal landmark supporting some key propositions that would have been familiar to lawyers during the Civil War era: first, that there are such things as conspiracies and plots to "overturn the government," in whole or in part, that though they might not qualify as treason, remain great and culpable legal wrongs; second, that the crime of treason specifically requires showing the existence of an armed assembly to employ force for a treasonable purpose; third, that one may be said to have engaged in (or provided "aid and comfort" to) treason where one is in league with the conspiracy and done any act, large or small, or played "any part," however remote, to further that plot. Whether or not Bollman's construction was sufficiently established to be read in to Section Three itself, it was cited occasionally in the 1860s Congress. See, e.g., 37th Congress 2nd Session Cong. Globe 414 (1862)

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

come ubiquitous in legal and public discourse as a general allegation of improper assistance, making it still less clear that it was perfectly coterminous with the law of the Treason Clause.[259]

Finally, the words "insurrection" and "rebellion" also appear elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment itself, but again in ways that give little external light on Section Three. A person's "participation in rebellion" is specified in Section Two as an allowable ground for denying the right to vote that does not trigger a reduction in a state's representation as a consequence.[260] Section Four of the amendment prohibits payment of debts or obligations "incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion."[261] These neighboring sections use slightly different phrases for the behavior they cover ("participation" and "engaged in"; "aid or comfort" and "in aid of"), but it is difficult to say if the variations are meaningful.

4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage

Perhaps the best evidence of the public meaning of the terms "insurrection," "rebellion," and "engaging in," as they came to be used in Section Three, consists of their common and frequent public, political, and legal usage in the 1860s—the years immediately surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment—by a variety of actors: by President Abraham Lincoln, in prominent speeches, messages, public letters, and proclamations; by Congress, in major acts of legislation; and by the Supreme Court, in the landmark decision in The Prize Cases. The consistent pattern of usage was to treat the actions of the South as being, legally, "insurrection" or "rebellion." A wide range of actions supportive of secession appears to have constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort" to rebellion or insurrection.

This leads us to what we think an obvious "sure shipwreck"[262] for understanding Section Three's terms. Whatever else "insurrection or rebellion" might embrace, they certainly embrace the cluster of actions with which Section Three was, historically, immediately and directly concerned: first, the attempted secession from the authority of the U.S. Constitution—the effort to displace the lawful authority of the United States in favor of the supposedly "seceded" state governments and their confederation into the "Confederate States of America"; and second, engaging in forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws of the United States—armed resistance to the Constitution, specifically in the shape of waging civil war against the nation. Conduct participating in, advancing, supporting, or assisting

---

(statement of Sen. Sumner) (citing Bollman passage quoted above during the proceedings to expel Senator Jesse Bright for writing a letter to Jefferson Davis).

[259] See Harold Holzer, Lincoln and the Power of the Press: The War for Public Opinion 361 (2014) (referring to the phrase "aid and comfort to the enemy" (by the press) as "that catch-basin phrase again.").

[260] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2.

[261] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 4.

[262] Morse, supra note 227.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

either secession or armed resistance to U.S. authority constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort to" the Union's enemies. Section Three encompasses all such actions in support of secession and civil war as included within its substantive trigger.

a. President Lincoln

An extremely important contemporaneous source for understanding the public constitutional meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" in 1860s public discourse is President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln looms large in the public understanding of the day concerning the meaning of those terms. Lincoln consistently characterized secession and the Civil War as acts of insurrection or rebellion, avoiding wherever possible treating "secession" as if it were a separate legal category. Secession, for Lincoln, was a Southern euphemism for rebellion and treason. The Confederacy had no valid legal existence: what was going on with the Civil War was properly called insurrection and rebellion—the lawless attempt to overthrow the constitutional processes of the United States and displace lawful government with unlawful governments.

Lincoln was insistent and relentless—and very public and prominent—on this point, consistently so, across a range of contexts. For instance, the Civil War was emphatically not, in Lincoln's view, a "war" between the United States and another sovereign.[263] It was not subject to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 11 power to "declare War," but was rather an illegal rebellion—a "giant insurrection"—to be suppressed by executive authority pursuant to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 15 power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[264]

Consider just a few prominent and illustrative statements: In his First Inaugural Address, on March 4, 1861, Lincoln, after setting forth arguments that "no State upon its own mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union," concluded that "acts of violence within any State or States against the authority of the United States" are "insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances."[265] Following the attack on Fort Sumter, Lincoln's April 15, 1861 proclamation calling forth the militia

---

[263] On Lincoln's understanding of secession as unconstitutional and his resulting conception of the Civil War as, legally, a situation of insurrection or rebellion (not declared war) see sources cited in note 231. That does not exclude the existence of full constitutional Commander in Chief Clause powers in the situation of actual civil war, however. Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Emancipation Proclamation and the Commander in Chief Power, 40 Georgia L. Rev. 807, 814-823 (2006).

[264] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 11 (Declare War Clause) with U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 15 (power "to provide for calling forth" the Militia for law execution and to suppress insurrections"). Congress's exercise of this power – the Insurrection Acts of 1795 and 1807 – is discussed infra Part IV.A.5.a.

[265] Abraham Lincoln, First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1861), IV Complete Works of Lincoln ("CWL") 262, 265.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

similarly characterized the attack as fitting the statutory definition of insurrection.[266] And in his July 4, 1861 Message to Congress, Lincoln labelled the South's purported secession a "giant insurrection" and, vividly, as "rebellion … sugar coated." The "so-called 'Confederate States'" had formed an "insurrectionary government."[267] In the same July 4 Message, Lincoln used the nature of secession as rebellion to justify suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as authorized by the terms of Article I, section 9, clause 2 of the Constitution, which used exactly that language of "rebellion."[268] Lincoln's use of terms was significant and pulled no punches: efforts to displace lawful government authority with unlawful government—no matter how labelled by their perpetrators, no matter how deluded participants might be as to the lawfulness or propriety of their actions—were insurrectionary; such declarations and actions constituted rebellion.

Two years later, at the height of the war, Lincoln returned to the characterization of the South's actions as "rebellion" (and the constitutional question of power to suspend habeas corpus) in a notable incident testing the limit of Union military suppression of anti-war and disloyal speech. In a June 12, 1863 public letter, nominally addressed to Erastus Corning, Lincoln defended the military arrest of former Ohio Congressman Clement Vallandigham, a notorious racist and prominent "Copperhead" pro-South, anti-Union northerner, who had made a public speech vehemently condemning the Emancipation Proclamation and the propriety of the Union's war effort.

Lincoln distinguished law enforcement arrests from detentions in cases of rebellion. Wrote Lincoln: "Ours is a case of Rebellion—so called by the resolutions before me—in fact, a clear, flagrant, and gigantic case of Rebellion." And that, Lincoln concluded, was what allowed suspension of habeas corpus.[269] In the course of his argument, Lincoln described rebellion as "sudden and extensive uprisings against the government."[270] This is a useful description that supports our working definition: Rebellion is an "uprising." It is something more than mere protest. It is, often, "sudden." It is "extensive." It is directed "against the government." Rebellion is something more than ordinary law violation and that is why it is treated differently by the Constitution.

How did Vallandigham's actions associate him with the rebellion? Lincoln made a forceful case that even pure speech might constitute assistance to rebellion—if it were advocacy producing direct, material effects benefitting the rebel enemy

---

[266] Abraham Lincoln, Proclamation Calling Militia and Convening Congress (April 15, 1861), IV CWL 331, 332.
[267] Abraham Lincoln, Message to Congress in Special Session (July 4, 1861), IV CWL 421, 427-428, 432-437.
[268] Id. at 429-431 (emphasis added).
[269] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 2.
[270] Abraham Lincoln, To Erastus Corning and Others (June 12, 1863), VI CWL 260, 264 (emphasis added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

cause, by tangibly harming the military authority engaged in trying to suppress that rebellion. In the Corning Letter, Lincoln wrote that, "under cover of 'Liberty of speech,' 'Liberty of the press,' and 'Habeas corpus,'" rebel sympathizers "hoped to keep on foot amongst us a most efficient corps of spies, informers, supplyers, and aiders and abettors of their cause in a thousand ways."[271] Claims of freedom of speech could improperly furnish a shield or cloak for wrongful conduct; they supplied "cover" for, and thus assisted, rebellion and insurrection.

Lincoln expanded these arguments in yet more arresting ways. He suggested that, in some circumstances, a person's refusal to speak out against rebellion might be tacit support for such rebellion: a "man who stands by and says nothing, when the peril of his government is discussed, can not be misunderstood. If not hindered, he is sure to help the enemy." He also hinted at regret that he had not earlier arrested prominent oath-breaking officers now "occupying the very highest places in the rebel war service," such as John Breckinridge, Robert E. Lee, Joseph Johnston, and John Magruder: "I think the time not unlikely to come when I shall be blamed for having made too few arrests rather than too many."[272] Lincoln's position seems clear, if perhaps a bit unsettling: claims of freedom of speech did not invariably prevail over the imperative constitutional necessity of suppressing rebellion; where words fueled insurrection, or thwarted its suppression, or signaled disloyalty, the speaker was aiding the enemy. Such expression was not necessarily privileged.

This is not exactly an expansive conception of First Amendment rights. Lincoln fully recognized the difficulties with his stance. He did not ignore the tension between his conclusions and peacetime free speech principles but argued that the tension could be reconciled.[273] In a colorful metaphor, Lincoln ventured:

> I can no more be persuaded that the Government can constitutionally take no strong measures in time of rebellion, because it can be shown that the same could not be lawfully taken in time of peace, than I can be persuaded that a particular drug is not good medicine for a sick man, because it can be shown not to be good food for a well one. Nor am I able to appreciate the danger apprehended by the meeting that the American people will, by means of military arrests during the Rebellion, lose the

---

[271] Id. at 263.

[272] Id. at 265.

[273] In several respects, Lincoln anticipated later judicial free speech doctrines and decisions, such as those distinguishing pure speech from speech linked to prohibited conduct; recognizing limits on speech posing a danger of inciting to crime or lawlessness; recognizing "compelling interest" overrides in exceptional circumstances, including for reasons of national security or military secrecy; finding that government's motives and purposes for a particular action may matter to its lawfulness; and noting where an incidental limitation on expression leaves open alternative channels for expression of the same message. See Paulsen, Civil War, supra note 231, at 698-702 & n.23 (noting how Lincoln anticipated many of the issues and exceptions contemplated by later judicial doctrine concerning the First Amendment's freedom of speech).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> right of Public Discussion, the Liberty of Speech and the Press, the Law of Evidence, Trial by Jury, and Habeas Corpus, throughout the indefinite peaceful future, which I trust lies before them, any more than I am able to believe that a man could contract so strong an appetite for emetics during temporary illness as to persist in feeding upon them during the remainder of his healthful life.[274]

Lincoln also stressed a distinction between speech directed at criticism of the government's political policy—fully protected by the freedom of speech—and expression more or less directly aimed at harming the military's recruitment and war effort. If Vallandigham had been arrested merely because he was "damaging the political prospects of the administration" or "the personal interests of the general," that would be one thing, Lincoln observed. "[I]f there was no other reason for the arrest, then I concede that the arrest was wrong." But as Lincoln understood it, the arrest "was made for a very different reason"—that Vallandigham was "laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops, to encourage desertions from the army, and to leave the rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it." Vallandigham was, in short, "warring upon the military." He who "dissuades one man from volunteering, or induces one soldier to desert, weakens the Union cause as much as he who kills a union soldier in battle." Desertion was punishable by death, of course. In a famous line, Lincoln asked, rhetorically "Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wiley agitator who induces him to desert?"[275] Lincoln's answer was no: "I think that in such a case, to silence the agitator, and save the boy, is not only constitutional, but, withal a great mercy." [276]

Lincoln continued: "If I be wrong on this question of constitutional power," he added, "my error lies in believing that certain proceedings are constitutional when, in cases of rebellion or Invasion, the public Safety requires them, which would not be constitutional when, in absence of rebellion or invasion, the public Safety does not require them -- in other words, that the constitution is not in it's application in all respects the same, in cases of Rebellion or invasion, involving the public Safety, as it is in times of profound peace and public security."[277]

Lincoln thus embraced the view that material assistance to insurrection or rebellion could in some cases take the form of effective advocacy of unlawful conduct that, if engaged in by substantial numbers, would materially advance the rebel cause or harm the military prospects of the Union. The fact that such assistance to rebellion came in the form of words did not furnish any constitutional privilege to such action.

---

[274] Letter to Corning (June 12, 1863), VI CWL at 267. (Emetics referred to a medicine or substance used to induce vomiting.)
[275] Letter to Corning, VI CWL at 266.
[276] Id. at 266-67.
[277] Id. at 267.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Where rebellion threatens public safety or public security, the Constitution permits restriction on advocacy furthering, supporting, or assisting such rebellion.

To be sure, one might well conclude that Lincoln went too far in his arguments in the Corning Letter or in some of his actions during the war. That is an interesting and difficult question—and not our point here. Our point is that Lincoln's view was a prominently expressed contemporaneous understanding—and on the issues of insurrection, rebellion, and complicity, it was consistent with his longstanding and oft-repeated views. This does not directly answer the question whether or to what extent such thinking specifically informed general public understanding of Section Three. But Lincoln's thinking, articulated in such a public context, may well have informed the potential reach of the terms "insurrection or rebellion," and what constitutes engaging in or aiding such conduct, as those terms came to be employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

At all events, Lincoln made clear and prominent the position that declaring secession, engaging in forcible opposition to the constitutional authority of the Union, and materially assisting others in such conduct, all constituted forms of support for and participation in "insurrection" or "rebellion." And this stance continued throughout the war, even as the nation began to look to the war's conclusion and to questions of the post-war status of persons who had participated in that rebellion—questions at the core of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[278]

b. Congress

President Lincoln was not the only public figure grappling with concepts of insurrection and rebellion during the Civil War. Similar themes can be found in the statements and actions of Congress and the Supreme Court.

Start with Congress: We think two specific enactments of Congress during the Civil War are especially probative of the understandings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and of what conduct was publicly understood to constitute having "engaged in" or given assistance to rebellion. First, there is the so-called "Ironclad Oath," adopted

[278] Lincoln's characterization of Southern secession as rebellion continued throughout the war. His December 8, 1863 Message to Congress referred to the Confederacy as "the rebellion." Annual Message to Congress (Dec. 8, 1863), VII CWL at 51 In his accompanying offer of amnesty and pardon, in the Amnesty Proclamation of December 8, 1863, Lincoln referred, repeatedly, to the "rebellion" that "now exists whereby the loyal State governments of several States have for a long time been subverted" (id. at 53), to "said rebellion and treason" (id. at 54), to "said rebellion" (id.) and to persons who had provided "aid" to the "rebellion" in various forms. Interestingly, Lincoln excepted from his offer of forgiveness – in language that would seem to presage the similar terms of Section Three – "all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion" and "all who resigned commissions in the army or navy in the United States, and afterwards aided the rebellion." Id. at 55. Lincoln also left to the respective houses of Congress the exclusive judgment "whether members sent to Congress from any State shall be admitted to seats."

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on July 2, 1862 as the oath one must be able to swear in order to hold federal office.[279] Second, there is the "Second Confiscation Act," adopted that same month, on July 17, 1862, to authorize legal forfeitures of property and slaves, and also to enforce disqualifications from federal office, by persons who had engaged in specified activities constituting "rebellion" or "insurrection."[280] These two enactments, and their implementation to exclude former insurrectionists and rebels from future office, say much about the terms they employed.

i. The Ironclad Oath

Congress adopted The Ironclad Oath in the thick of the Civil War and it was required of most federal officeholders from 1862 to 1884.[281] The text of the Oath sets forth the types of misconduct regarded as disqualifying an individual from eligibility for federal office because he had been engaged in supporting the rebellion—an inquiry very closely parallel to that contained in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, proposed by Congress just a few years later.

The Ironclad Oath required that prospective officeholders swear or affirm that they had not done any of several things. In that sense it did not function like a traditional oath of office—a promise of future behavior—but much more like a disqualification for past misbehavior.[282] It did indirectly what Section Three was soon to do directly. That makes the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers particularly instructive. Here's the oath, with its most-relevant-to-Section-Three features and phrases italicized (and with bracketed numbers inserted):

> I . . . do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never [1] voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have [2] voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have [3] neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have [4] not yielded a

---

[279] 12 Stat. 502.

[280] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). 12 Stat. 627 (1862).

[281] 23 Stat. 21 (1884). There was an important exception. In 1868, Congress provided that anybody who had received amnesty from two-thirds of each house of Congress under Section Three was exempt from the Ironclad Oath and need only swear future loyalty, 15 Stat. 85 (1868), and in 1871 it added that anybody "who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution" yet would otherwise "not be able on account of his participation in the late rebellion to take" the Ironclad Oath, could take the forward-looking oath instead, 16 Stat. 412 (1871). These two provisions effectively equated the Ironclad Oath to Section Three from 1871 on.

[282] For this reason, Lincoln famously wrote: "On principle I dislike an oath which requires a man to swear he has not done wrong. It rejects the Christian principle of forgiveness on terms of repentance. I think it is enough if the man does no wrong hereafter." Endorsement of Abraham Lincoln in Letter from R.M. Edwards to Edwin Stanton, February 5, 1864, 7 Lincoln Papers 169.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto.

While not using the words insurrection or rebellion, the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers would seem strongly suggestive of how Section Three's triggering language likely would have been understood in public usage at the time. The Ironclad Oath is not a definition of Section Three's constitutional terms, of course. But it would appear an apt descriptive specification of the kinds of misconduct included within those terms. Under the oath, disqualifying behavior included: (1) fighting against the United States; (2) aiding or encouraging such armed hostility; (3) accepting office under a hostile authority (or "pretended authority"); and—a highly evocative phrase—(4) "yield[ing]" one's "voluntary support" to "any pretended government, authority, power or constitution . . . hostile or inimical" to the United States.

The content of this oath's requirement establishes a useful, historically prominent marker for the scope of Section Three: What the Ironclad Oath understood to be disqualifying for federal office, Section Three likely embraced as constitutionally disqualifying conduct for the far broader sweep of offices to which it extended.[283]

ii. The Second Confiscation Act

Barely more than two weeks after adopting the Ironclad Oath, the Civil War Congress enacted what is popularly called the "Second Confiscation Act." Its full title spoke explicitly in terms of insurrection and rebellion: "An Act to suppress Insurrection, to punish Treason and Rebellion, to seize and confiscate the Property of Rebels, and for other Purposes."[284]

This Second Confiscation Act was a very prominent piece of legislation. It imposed sweeping penalties, forfeitures, and disqualifications on anybody who had engaged in or assisted the rebellion.[285] The Second Confiscation Act was long and vigorously debated in Congress, much discussed in the press and in public discourse, objected to by many on constitutional grounds, and nearly vetoed by President Lincoln.[286] Enactment of the Second Confiscation Act gave rise to very public pressure

---

[283] The extensive overlap between the meaning of the Ironclad Oath and the Section Three disqualification is confirmed by Congress's own interpretation and application of the oath to its own members, during and after the enactment of Section Three. These applications are detailed infra Part IV.A.5.b.

[284] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). See also 12 Stat. 627 (1862) ("explanatory" joint resolution).

[285] An earlier act had provided for forfeiture more specifically of property or slaves actually used in service of rebellion. 12 Stat. 319 (Aug. 6, 1861).

[286] See generally David P. Currie, The Civil War Congress, 73 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1131, 1185-1195 (2006). Among many noteworthy twists and turns in the road to enactment, President Lincoln came close to vetoing the bill, preparing a veto message with his objections and signing the bill only after Congress passed an "explanatory" joint resolution (which Lincoln signed together with the bill). Lincoln nonetheless appended his original draft veto message setting forth his objections. For discussion of the constitutional objections of Lincoln and others to various aspects of the bill, and his unusual course of

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on President Lincoln to take aggressive action against slavery in rebel states—pressure that helped spur Lincoln to issue his Emancipation Proclamation as an executive military order. The Second Confiscation Act was a big deal. [287]

The Act itself was a complicated and somewhat confusing hodgepodge of distinct provisions, combining property confiscation, emancipation, a new federal crime, and disqualification from office. But the terms it used are especially evocative, visiting legal consequences on persons who "engaged in," "incite[d]," "set on foot," or "assist[ed]" "rebellion" or "insurrection" or who had "given aid or comfort" to rebellion or done acts "aiding and abetting" rebellion. The Act is practically a glossary of the terms used in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment proposed by Congress just four years later.

Specifically: Section 2 made it a new crime, distinct from treason, to "incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof" or to "give aid or comfort thereto" or to "engage in, or give aid and comfort to," any "existing rebellion or insurrection."[288] It is worth pausing to parse the linguistic resemblances to Section Three, and the ways in which like terms are used and explained. Following Lincoln, secession and civil war are equated with "rebellion or insurrection." Those terms are described as involving acts "against action in signing it but nonetheless appending his objections, see id. at 1193-1194; Burrus M. Carnahan, Act of Justice: Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation and the Law of War 105-106 (2007) (noting Lincoln's initial concern that the act would violate Article III's limitations on the punishment for treason and the objections of others that the act was a bill of attainder); Eric Foner, The Fiery Trial: Abraham Lincoln and American Slavery 215-217 (2010). For Lincoln's July 17, 1862 message to Congress, detailing his objections, see V Complete Works of Lincoln 328-331.

---

[287] A month after the Act had been adopted, Horace Greeley published a scathing editorial titled "The Prayer of Twenty Millions," in which he demanded that Lincoln "EXECUTE THE LAWS" faithfully with specific reference to the Second Confiscation Act. Greeley condemned Lincoln's "mistaken deference to Rebel Slavery" and his failure to rebuke his generals for having "habitually disregarded" the Confiscation Act. Lincoln replied to Greeley, equally prominently, within days, in a famous public letter dated August 22, 1862, published in a rival newspaper and "widely reprinted," defending his course of action. V Complete Works of Lincoln 388-389; see Holzer, supra note 259, at 400-401. One month later, Lincoln issued his Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in which he noted and quoted provisions of the Second Confiscation Act (without invoking the statute as actual authority for his proclamation). V Complete Works of Lincoln at 434-435 (stating that "attention is hereby called to" provisions of the act but relying for authority on his powers as executive and military Commander in Chief). See also Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 (noting that "the Second Confiscation Act embodied a major shift in national policy").

[288] 12 Stat. 589, 590. (emphasis added). Section 2 provided penalties for conviction, which included confiscation of slaves. A modified version of this provision remains a crime today, and continues to incorporate the Confiscation Act's disqualification from federal office, id., as well. 18 U.S.C. §2383 ("Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States."). Needless to say, a prosecution under Section 2383 of Title 18 is neither a prerequisite to nor preclusive of the self-executing application of Section Three of the Constitution.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof" (a formulation closely conforming to our working definitions). Section 2 imposes criminal liability on persons who "incite" such acts; who "set on foot" such acts; who "assist" such acts; who in any other way "engage in" such conduct; or who "give aid and comfort to" such conduct. All of these terms have close parallels in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Section 3 of the Act then imposed a sweeping disqualification from future officeholding—a kind of proto-Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "every person guilty of either of the offences described in this act shall be forever incapable and disqualified to hold any office under the United States."[289] Section 5 directed the President to seize rebel property belonging to a long list of confederate officers plus anyone in a loyal state who "shall hereafter assist and give aid and comfort to such rebellion."[290] Officeholding in a rebel government or military was per se blameworthy participation; but general giving of assistance or aid or comfort also qualified as participation in rebellion. Section 6 provided a further authorization for seizure of the property of any person not already mentioned who, "being engaged in armed rebellion against the government of the United States, or aiding or abetting such rebellion," and, after sixty days' notice issued by the President, did not "cease to aid, countenance, and abet such rebellion, and return to his allegiance to the United States."[291] Section 7 and Section 8 provided for in rem proceedings against property "found to have belonged to a person engaged in rebellion, or who has given aid or comfort thereto," in which case it "shall be condemned as enemies' property."[292] And Section 9 famously emancipated slaves of persons "who shall hereafter be engaged in rebellion" against the Union or who "shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto."[293] Throughout these sections, one can see the recurrent use of terms and concepts, and synonyms for such terms, that would reappear in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "engaged in," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "abet," "countenance," "enemies."

Unlike the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act did not give rise to many opportunities for immediate application and further interpretation. In part, this was simply due to the exigencies and realities of Civil War at the time. For example, the civil forfeiture provisions contemplated in rem judicial proceedings against persons in the district where property was located. At the time, such property was often located in areas of rebel control. Often, the federal courts were not even functioning those areas.[294] Similarly, as a practical matter, criminal prosecutions of rebels for

---

[289] 12 Stat. 589, 590.
[290] Id. (emphasis added.)
[291] Id. at 591.
[292] Id.
[293] Id.
[294] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 500 (noting confusing aspects of the Second Confiscation Act and the requirement of "in rem proceedings by district courts that were of course not functioning in the rebellious states"); Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 ("For most property, [the Act] established a cumbersome judicial process that helps to explain why little land was actually seized and sold

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

treason and insurrection had to await Union military success. (And after success came, President Andrew Johnson ultimately pardoned a great many offenders.)[295] The Lincoln administration, focused on other matters, showed little interest in bringing legal actions to enforce the Act's specific policies. The administration, according to one scholar, "chose not to implement the law vigorously."[296] Attorney General Bates "exerted no more than a minimal effort to make the first and second confiscation acts work."[297] And the Act's section authorizing limited military emancipation section was rapidly overtaken—superseded in practical effect—by President Lincoln's far more comprehensive Emancipation Proclamation, issued pursuant to his constitutional Commander in Chief power.

But in some ways the lack of enforcement cases is beside our point here, which concerns the Act's prominence in national discussions and its pervasive use of terms, phrases, and concepts—rebellion, insurrection, engage in, aid or comfort—that would reappear in only slightly different form in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act employed terminology nearly identical to that employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. The usage of the terms in this landmark legislation we think helps explicate the meaning, in public legal context, of the language in the amendment. In the context of 1860s public legal usage, engaging in or giving aid or comfort to rebellion and insurrection extended to a broad range of activity advancing or furthering efforts to unlawfully upend the lawful operation of the U.S. constitutional regime. This strongly supports the conclusion that Section Three's terms can fairly be read quite expansively, as embracing a broad range of conduct directed against the authority of government under the Constitution.

c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases

The most important constitutional decision of the U.S. Supreme Court during the Civil War was The Prize Cases.[298] There, the majority upheld the constitutionality of Lincoln's unilateral military order, made very early in the Civil War, imposing a blockade on Southern ports. In a truly landmark decision, the Supreme Court held that the President's war powers (including the power to impose a blockade) were triggered immediately, as soon as the South's rebellion took the form of organized military resistance to the authority of the U.S. government. The President's power to under its provisions."). See also Silvana R. Siddali, From Property to Person: Slavery and the Confiscation Acts, 1861-1862, at 238 (2005) (remarking that "[t]he confiscation bill that finally emerged was neither sweeping nor enforceable" though opining that "if the law had not been hobbled by its own internal inconsistencies, it might have affected the lives and property of a large majority of southerners.").

---

[295] See Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 141-152 (1960).

[296] John Syrett, The Civil War Confiscation Acts: Failing to Reconstruct the South 55 (2005).

[297] Id. at 72; see also James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems Under Lincoln 288-292 (1926) (describing minimal enforcement of the Second Confiscation Act).

[298] 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635 (1863).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wage civil war against rebel forces derived from his delegated statutory power to employ force to suppress rebellion, the Court held. A congressional declaration of war was neither a prerequisite nor legally appropriate for this type of use of force: "This greatest of civil wars was not gradually developed by popular commotion, tumultuous assemblies, or local unorganized insurrections" but "sprung forth suddenly … in the full panoply of war. The President was bound to meet it in the shape it presented itself, without waiting for Congress to baptize it with a name."[299]

The Court's decision in The Prize Cases is today regarded as the leading judicial exposition of the Constitution's allocation of war powers. At the time, the case had other hugely consequential implications: the principles set forth in the decision essentially endorsed in advance (but of course without addressing the question directly) Lincoln's constitutional justification for the Emancipation Proclamation, which he had issued earlier that year.[300] The decision of The Prize Cases was a very big deal indeed.

Of special interest for our purposes is the Court's usage and explanation—in a highly prominent legal context—of the terms insurrection and rebellion, and their relationship to war and the war powers of the national government: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government," the majority said.[301] A civil war "becomes such by its accidents—the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on."[302] Where a rebellion has come to possess certain military characteristics, the "party in rebellion" might come to be treated as a belligerent for law-of-war purposes, even though a domestic rebellion stands on different constitutional legal ground than war with a foreign nation. "It is not the less a civil war, with belligerent parties in hostile array, because it may be called an 'insurrection' by one side, and the insurgents be considered as rebels or traitors."[303]

In a nutshell: insurrection or rebellion were forms of active resistance to the lawful authority of the government. An insurrection might be something short of outright rebellion. But an insurrection against government authority sometimes grows into full-on "rebellion." A rebellion, in turn, need not take the form of civil war in order to be a rebellion. But sometimes it does. At all events, rebellion seems its own distinct, more general legal concept of repudiation or attempted overthrow of the lawful constitutional regime by unlawful means.

---

[299] Id. at 668-669; see also Stephen I. Vladeck, Emergency Power and the Militia Acts, 114 Yale L. J. 149, 177-180 (2004).
[300] Paulsen, Emancipation, supra 263, at, 814-823.
[301] 67 U.S. at 666 (emphasis added).
[302] Id. at 666
[303] Id. at 668.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Prize Cases also held that persons engaged in insurrection or rebellion could be treated as "enemies" (as well as traitors) for legal purposes. Further, the war power, such as imposition of a blockade, could lawfully affect the legal property rights of persons engaged in "commerce" that "supplies" rebels or insurrectionists—and could do so irrespective of the supposed loyalties of the property owner. Even "neutral" powers' shipping could be seized when it violated a blockade: "Whether property be liable to capture as 'enemies' property' does not in any manner depend on the personal allegiance of the owner. 'It is the illegal traffic that stamps it as "enemies' property."'"[304]

The Prize Cases' treatment of the concepts of insurrection and rebellion, of who constituted "enemies," and of what actions constituted support for rebellion, would have been very much part of the legal culture of the day and provides important legal background as to how these terms would have been understood at the time of the drafting of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, just a few years later. Insurrection and rebellion involve varying degrees of concerted resistance to "the lawful authority of the Government," with insurrection being the arguably somewhat lesser form and rebellion the somewhat greater. A rebellion or insurrection need not involve acts tantamount to levying war. (War is sometimes a feature of rebellion but does not define it.) The Civil War was an outgrowth of insurrection or rebellion. But the fundamental act of rebellion remains the attempt to displace the lawful authority of government by unlawful means. And those who give material assistance to the enemy may also suffer legal consequences.

We find the overall evidence of prominent 1860s political and legal usage of the same concepts and language as would soon be employed by Section Three—"insurrection," "rebellion," and what it meant to "engage in" or provide "aid or comfort" to enemies—highly probative of Section Three's original public meaning. President Lincoln, repeatedly and insistently; Congress, pointedly and consistently; and the Supreme Court, decisively, used these terms in connection with secession, forcible resistance to the legal authority of the Constitution, and participation to varying degrees in efforts to overthrow, subvert, or undermine the authority of lawful government. These usages were public, prominent, legal, and essentially undisputed within the Union. While the specific circumstances of secession and civil war gave rise to these formulations, they did not define or limit the terms' meanings, which were more

---

[304] Id. at 674 (quoting 3 Wash. C.C.R. 183). That said, the Court also cautioned that " 'enemies' property" was "a technical phrase peculiar to prize courts, and depends upon principles of public policy, as distinguished from the common law." Id. at 674. The point that, in a military context, property could be treated as "enemies' property" irrespective of the allegiance of the owner was important to the lawfulness of the Emancipation Proclamation: even though Lincoln's proclamation purported to free the slaves of all persons in rebel-controlled territory – including slaves held by persons claiming to be loyal to the Union – such "property" constituted a resource assisting or supplying the rebellion and thus could be declared seized, confiscated, and liberated as a matter of the military law of war. See Paulsen, Emancipation, supra note 263. See generally John Fabian Witt, Lincoln's Code (2012).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

general. Secession, and civil war, were species of insurrection and rebellion—organized, group resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws and attempts to substitute an unlawful legal regime for the lawful, constitutional one. But insurrection and rebellion were the broader categories. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that these 1860s Civil War usages of terms carried over into the meaning of Section Three.

5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples

a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally)

What about the Insurrection Acts themselves—the statutes that comprised the statutory authority supporting Lincoln's use of military force to suppress secession? These statutes implemented Congress's power "To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" as well as its other war powers over the army and navy. The central statute was enacted in 1795 (superseding a similar enactment in 1792) and was amended in 1807 and 1861. These statutes—the conduct they were understood to reach; the forms and degree of opposition to government authority that were believed to trigger the statutes' application; and the circumstances in which they had been invoked and applied in the past—also would have been part of the background understanding of the term "insurrection" as it came to be incorporated into Section Three.

The 1795 act explicitly recited that it was enacted in part to carry into execution the power to "suppress insurrections." But it also applied to repel invasions and to enforce federal law. Together, these were the three circumstances where Congress had the power to provide for calling out the militia.[305] Section One of the Act allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe," as well as, upon request of state authorities, "in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof."[306] Section Two allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act."[307] Section Two encompasses insurrections against the United States.[308] (Section One specifically deals only with insurrections against a state government.)

In 1807, Congress supplemented this power with the power to call out the army and navy in similar circumstances: "in all cases of insurrection, or obstruction to the

[305] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15.
[306] 2 Stat. 424 (1795), sec. 1.
[307] Id. sec. 2. (emphasis added).
[308] That said, because Section Two is supported by both Congress's power to "suppress Insurrections" and its power "to execute the Laws of the Union," U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15. it could encompass instances of law enforcement that do not rise to the level of a constitutional "insurrection."

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

laws, either of the United States, or of any individual state or territory, where it is lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ, for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval force of the United States as shall be judged necessary …" The 1807 act thus carried forward and repeated the 1795 act's understanding of insurrection.[309]

Finally, on July 29, 1861, Congress amended the trigger again to specifically describe "rebellion." It allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President of the United States, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States . . ."[310]

The various versions of the Insurrection Act illustrate a common theme: insurrection is more than ordinary law violation; it entails "combinations" or "assemblages," acting together, to "oppose[s]" or "obstruct" the ability of government to "execute" the law, in numbers "too powerful" to be suppressed by the usual means of law enforcement.[311]

Moreover, several famous instances in which this statutory authority had been (or might have been) invoked provide additional informative context for understanding "insurrection" or "rebellion." Consider just a few.

The "Whiskey Rebellion" was one famous such instance. In 1794, acting under the 1792 predecessor statute, President George Washington personally led militia forces into western Pennsylvania to suppress a large uprising against the government spurred by resistance to the enactment of a federal tax on distilleries. Notably, the Whiskey Rebellion involved armed mobs, organized and employed for the purposes of intimidating and threatening federal officers, keeping them from performing their

---

[309] 2 Stat. 443 (1807).

[310] 12 Stat. 281 (1861).

[311] Myles Lynch has written that there can exist no insurrection within the meaning of the Insurrection Acts unless the President proclaims that an insurrection exists and, further, that as a consequence, there can exist no insurrection or rebellion within the meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment unless the President proclaims that such an insurrection exists. Lynch, supra note 5, at 168, 214-215. This seems plainly wrong. If the Insurrection Act defines insurrection, it is defined as concerted and powerful obstruction of the execution of the laws by government. It is no part of this definition that an insurrection exists only if the President declares it to exist. The President's proclamation is a statutory prerequisite to the use of military force, not part of the definition of insurrection. The President can use force if he proclaims that there is an insurrection; but it is not an insurrection only because he proclaims it one.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

duties under the law, and preventing others from assuming federal office (or inducing them to renounce their authority).[312]

We believe the "Whiskey Rebellion" would have been regarded in the nineteenth century as a classic illustration of what was meant by the terms insurrection and rebellion.[313] Indeed, by the time of the drafting of Section Three, it seems to have been regularly referred to in precisely those terms.[314] In commonplace usage, as well as in political, and legal discourse, the Whiskey Rebellion was a familiar illustration of an "insurrection" or "rebellion."

"Fries Rebellion," in 1799, was another well-known anti-tax revolt, this time in eastern Pennsylvania.[315] President John Adams invoked the 1795 Act to suppress the "insurrection," as he called it,[316] which had involved threats, intimidation, and violence directed at federal tax assessors by organized bands of persons designed to prevent the assessors from performing their duties, and further such acts directed against the ability of the government to arrest tax resisters. In at least one instance, armed opponents of the government successfully freed prisoners from federal custody. The Adams administration's suppression of the insurrection led to widely publicized treason prosecutions[317] of leaders and instigators of the unlawful resistance, including John Fries. As with the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries Rebellion was characterized by

---

[312] See generally Elkins & McKitrick, The Age of Federalism 461-474 (1993) (detailing actions of organized resistance, intimidation, and threats preventing federal officials from performing their duties – including tarring and feathering, whipping, surrounding of officials' homes by armed mobs, and kidnapping and coerced repudiation of federal authority); see also Ron Chernow, Alexander Hamilton 468-478 (2004) (similar); Robert W. Coakley, The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1789-1878, at 43-68 (1988) (documenting the resistance and military response).

[313] To be sure, one scholar of the Acts suggests that "[i]t may have been dubious whether actions of the Whiskey Rebellion farmers truly rose to the level of insurrection," and that Washington may have treated it as law-obstruction rather than insurrection. Vladeck, at 161 n. 46; see also Coakley, supra note 312, at 67 (suggesting that to "characterize the . . . affair as a 'riot' and the participants as 'rioters'" is "far closer to the truth"). But later sources called it at least an insurrection, see infra note 314, and this goes to show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government.

[314] See 1 Francis Wharton. State Trials of the United States during the Administrations of Washington and Adams 102-184 (1849) (describing "The Trials of the Western Insurgents"); Townsend Ward, The Insurrection of the Year 1794, in the western counties of Pennsylvania (J.B. Lippincott 1858); H.M. Brackenridge, History of the western insurrection in western Pennsylvania: commonly called the whiskey insurrection (W.S. Haven, 1859).

[315] Coakley, supra note 312, 69-77.

[316] John Adams, Proclamation on Insurrection in Pennsylvania, 12 March 1799, https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Adams/99-02-02-3377.

[317] These prosecutions also occasioned a widely-cited jury charge from Circuit Justice Chase, in which he repeatedly discussed "insurrection," describing it as a "rising of any body of the people" and arguing that it qualified as treason because "an insurrection to resist or prevent, by force, the execution of any statute of the United States, has a direct tendency to dissolve all the bands of society, to destroy all order and all laws, and also all security for the lives, liberties and property of the citizens of the United States." Case of Fries, 9 F. Cas. 924, 930 (C.C.D. Pa. 1800). See also 1 Wharton, supra note 314, at 458-609 (describing these proceedings as "The Trial of the Northampton Insurgents").

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

concerted acts of forcible interference with federal officials' ability to perform their duties under law.[318]

Nat Turner's Rebellion, a violent slave revolt in 1831, did not lead to a presidential invocation of the Insurrection Act.[319] But it surely would have been a classic illustration of at least an "insurrection" and perhaps even a "rebellion"—a concerted uprising seeking forcibly to overturn the legal order and thwart government's ability to execute the law. A published report of Turner's own account called it both an insurrection[320] and in one instance an "open rebellion."[321] This example, too, likely would have formed part of the background understanding of the terms insurrection or rebellion at the time they were employed in Section Three.

More broadly, slavery and anti-slavery produced other prominent incidents that would have been classed as small or large insurrections against government—instances that went beyond individual instances of legal disobedience, or of resistance to the laws themselves, and rose to the level of active, concerted, unlawful resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws. Specifically, revolt against the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 sometimes took the form of slave liberation in open defiance of government authority. For example, in Boston in 1850 and 1851, a local vigilance committee invoked "the 'higher law' doctrine" to openly harbor freed slaves to the point that President Millard Fillmore "threatened to send in federal troops."[322] In Christiana, Pennsylvania in 1851, a Quaker community took up arms (!) to defend fugitive slaves, shooting several slaveowners who had arrived from nearby Maryland. This was denounced as an "act of insurrection," and this time President Fillmore did call out federal troops.[323] In Wisconsin in 1859, resistance to federal authority became so widespread as to prefigure the coming of the Civil War.[324] And of course John

---

[318] As with the Whiskey Rebellion, these events show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government. See also Elkins & McKitrick at 696-700 (questioning "whether the circumstances really called for military force of any kind").

[319] Federal troops were used to suppress this and other slave rebellions, but "without following the legal procedures laid down in the statutes of 1795 and 1807." Coakley, supra note 312, at 92-94. Coakley suggests that this the failure to go through the Insurrection Acts reflected "the universal dread of slave revolts" at the time and the fact that "t]he slaves had no political constituency." Id. at 94.

[320] See The Confessions of Nat Turner, The Leader of the Late Insurrection in Southampton, VA, as fully and voluntarily made to Thomas R. Gray, at 3, 5, 7, 20, 22 (1831) (calling it "insurrection"); see also Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Nat Turner's Insurrection, 8 Atlantic Monthly 173 (1861)

[321] See Turner, supra note 320, at 3 ("The late insurrection . . . is the first instance in our history of an open rebellion of the slaves") (emphases added).

[322] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 81-84; Cf. Coakley, supra note 312, at 130-131 (noting debate about whether this disturbance in Boston was sufficiently great to trigger the insurrection acts).

[323] McPherson, supra note 231, at 84-85. See also Thomas Slaughter, Bloody Dawn: The Christian Riot and Racial Violence in the Antebellum North (1991); and cf. id. at ix ("The line between riot and rebellion was shifting during the antebellum period.").

[324] See generally H. Robert Baker, The Rescue of Joshua Glover: A Fugitive Slave, the Constitution, and the Coming of the Civil War (2006) (describing resistance, in the mid-to-late1850s, in Wisconsin to federal legal authority to execute the Fugitive Slave Act).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Brown's fateful raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859 was an explicit act of insurrection and rebellion: a quixotic and ill-prepared attempt to foment a massive slave insurrection and to overthrow the power of proslavery governments in the South.[325] These rebels and insurrectionists were fighting deeply unjust laws, but there is no question that they committed many acts of insurrection nonetheless. Rebellion for a good cause is still rebellion.

Another prominently identified insurrection or rebellion would have been Dorr's Rebellion, in Rhode Island, in 1841-1842 which led to the Supreme Court's 1849 decision in Luther v. Borden.[326] There, a cabal claiming to constitute the new, lawful government of Rhode Island engaged in forcible resistance to and sought to overturn the authority of the prior, lawful state government (the "charter" government that traced its authority to Rhode Island's original colonial charter). The federal government did not invoke the Insurrection Act to intervene, but it well might have. When the Supreme Court ultimately adjudicated the case—through the vehicle of a trespass suit by a member of one faction, against members of the other—the Court held that the question of which government constituted the lawful government of the state was a political question committed to the judgment of Congress and the President and that the judiciary lacked authority to interfere with the political branches' actions (and inactions), which had tacitly supported the charter government. The practical result of the decision—relevant to our inquiry– was that the losing side in the struggle (the faction headed by Mr. Dorr) legally could be treated by the prevailing side (the charter government) as having engaged in "insurrection" against the rightful state government. The Court noted, and seemingly accepted, the charter government's characterization of plaintiff and others having "assembled in arms . . . for the purpose of overthrowing the government by military force"[327] and as having attempted "to assert the authority of [the Dorr government] by force,"[328] as amounting to having "engaged in the insurrection."[329] The Court also referred to the government's actions as having been designed to suppress that "insurrection."[330] The Court appeared to equate with "insurrection" the Dorr group's attempts to displace or supersede the existing government and forcibly assert its own claimed authority as a replacement.

Finally, several notable invocations of the Insurrection Act occurred during the period of Reconstruction during the presidency of Ulysses S. Grant.[331] While these

---

[325] McPherson, supra note 231, 202-208. Federal troops helped suppress this insurrection and rebellion too. See Coakley, supra note 312, at 193 ("This intervention was, as in the case of Nat Turner's Rebellion, an emergency measure undertaken without the usual formalities.").
[326] Luther v. Borden, 58 U.S. (7 How.) 1 (1849). On Dorr's Rebellion generally and the federal response, see Coakley, supra note 312, at 119-127.
[327] Luther, 58 U.S. (7 How.) at 8.
[328] Id. at 37
[329] Id. at 46
[330] Id. at 45.
[331] By this time, the Act had been amended yet again. See 17 Stat. 13, 14-15 (1871), §§ 3-4.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

events occurred after ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment (and thus could not have formed any part of the subjective understanding of the drafters and ratifiers of the meaning of Section Three), they nonetheless deserve mention as roughly contemporaneous evidence of the objective meaning of "insurrection" as displayed by important usage within a few years of adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. Briefly summarized: In South Carolina in 1871, Grant twice invoked the Insurrection Act (as well as suspending habeas corpus, among other actions) to secure order in dealing with the Ku Klux Klan.[332] In Louisiana, in 1872, a contested gubernatorial election spawned efforts by white supremacists to overthrow the elected pro-Reconstruction Republican government, culminating in the infamous "Colfax Massacre" of April 13, 1873, in which a white mob attacked and massacred perhaps 150 black citizens who had been defending a courthouse in Colfax, Louisiana and, more broadly, the Reconstruction Republican government. President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act as authority to suppress the insurrection that sought to overturn the election result.[333] Later, in 1874, Grant again invoked the Insurrection Act in Louisiana, this time to suppress a white supremacist coup d'etat that had overthrown the Republican governor by force.[334] Federal troops reinstated the lawful government, but the insurrectionists established a rival state government that effectively controlled much of Louisiana outside of the capital—New Orleans at the time. (The conflict lasted until 1877, when Reconstruction was abandoned by the national government and white supremacists took full control of the state.) In Mississippi, in 1874, white supremacists fabricated criminal charges against the newly elected black sheriff, Peter Crosby, and deposed him by mob action.[335] Black citizens organizing an effort to reinstate Crosby were attacked by white mobs, resulting in the massacre of as many as 300 black citizens. Again, President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act and sent federal troops to reinstate Crosby and prevent further violence. Also in 1874, in Arkansas, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to quell violence in an ongoing dispute over the 1872 gubernatorial election results.[336] And in 1876, in South Carolina, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to protect the gubernatorial election process from white supremacist groups.[337] Common to each of these instances during the Grant administration was

---

[332] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 197, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Mar. 24, 1871); http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70253; Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 200, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 12, 1871); for background see Michael Bahar, The Presidential Intervention Principle: The Domestic Use of the Military and the Power of the Several States, 5 Harv. Nat'l Sec. J. 537, 613-14 (2014); Lou Falkner Williams, The Great South Carolina Ku Klux Klan Trials, 1871-1872, at 39-49 (1996).

[333] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 213, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (May 22, 1873) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70364

[334] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 220, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (Sept. 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70422

[335]Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 223, Law and Order in the State of Mississippi (Dec. 21, 1874), http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70459.

[336] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 218, Law and Order in the State of Arkansas (May 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70420.

[337] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 232, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 17, 1876) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70542.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the idea that concerted efforts to overturn lawful popular election results by mob action, force, violence, and intimidation constituted "insurrection" against government.

It is difficult to evaluate precisely the probative force of all of these incidents, and application of federal authority to suppress "insurrections," for understanding Section Three. But they were unquestionably part of the picture, contributing to the background for understanding Section Three's terms. They were very much part of a common historical vocabulary of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and culpable participation in the same, familiar to those who drafted and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment: The Whiskey Rebellion, Shays' Rebellion, Nat Turner's Rebellion, Dorr's Rebellion, the insurrections against the Fugitive Slave Act in the 1850s, John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859—all of these incidents would have informed the general understanding of what constitutes "insurrection or rebellion" and what actions amount to having "engaged in" or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to such uprisings. They all tend to support our working definitions of Section Three's terms. Even President Grant's post-1868 invocations of the Insurrection Act, to combat attempts to overthrow election results or displace lawful state authority, may shine some interpretive light backward on Section Three's meaning. If an uprising of similar nature to these events were to occur, it seems to us that it likely would have been understood as an insurrection or rebellion within the coverage of Section Three.

b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates

As noted above, the federal Ironclad Oath adopted during the Civil War closely paralleled the requirements and consequences of Section Three. These parallels are drawn more sharply by a series of cases where both houses of Congress enforced the oath to exclude their own prospective members from being seated. As one scholar has put it, these debates "were littered with relevant concepts, and we can judge the Fortieth Congress's reception to those similar arguments as indicative of their expectations as to Section 3's application."[338] Moreover, several of these proceedings occurred right around the time of the proposal and ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In some cases after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, Congress applied Section Three itself, further demonstrating continuity and overlap with the Ironclad Oath.

The familiar source compiling the houses' debates on such matters of internal administration is Hinds' Precedents, which we rely on here.[339]

---

[338] Lynch, supra note 5, at 196. Lynch ably and accurately describes the most important such cases. See id. at 196-201, 207-210. We find little or nothing to disagree with in his account and analysis of these disputes and are indebted to Lynch's research and analysis.

[339] See generally 1 Asher C. Hinds, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, ch. 14, pp. 431-486 (1907).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, Kentucky: In 1867, Kentucky submitted eight members-elect to the House, seven of whom were challenged as ineligible on the ground that they had given aid or comfort to the Confederacy, during the Civil War. The Committee on Elections concluded that "no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion," ought to be sworn or seated.[340] A subsequent report determined that such charges needed to be "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony" and establish more than mere lack of active support for the Union or passive sympathy for the rebellion but that "the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion."[341] Such acts or speech need not rise to the level of constitutional treason, but they "must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion."[342]

On this standard, the committee found that four of the challenged members-elect were not proved to have either "engaged in armed hostility" to the Government or provided "aid or comfort" to its adversaries. These four were admitted to their seats. Three others—John Y. Brown, John D. Young, and Lawrence Trimble—posed more serious difficulty, however. The House ultimately refused to seat either Brown or Young but admitted Trimble. The facts of these cases are instructive explorations of the boundaries between free speech and "aid or comfort."

The House addressed the John Y. Brown case first. "This election case," Hinds' reports, was "the first of its kind since the formation of the Constitution, and recognized by the House as of the highest importance."[343] It also involved an incident of pure speech as disqualifying a member-elect from office: John Y. Brown had explicitly embraced and advocated violent resistance to the Union in Kentucky. Indeed, he had gone so far as to urge the shooting of any man who volunteered for service in Union forces. Brown's disqualifying conduct consisted solely of such acts of speech. The committee relied on a letter Brown had written to the Louisville Courier in 1861 in which Brown had gone to great lengths to affirm his support for the rebellion in unequivocal terms:

> Editors Louisville Courier:
>
> My attention has been called to the following paragraph, which appeared in your paper of this date:
>
> "JOHN YOUNG BROWN'S POSITION.– This gentleman, in reply to some searching interrogatories put to him by Governor Helm,

[340] Id. §448 at 442.
[341] Id. at 443 (emphasis added).
[342] Id.
[343] Id. at 445.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

said, in reference to the call of the President for four regiments of volunteers to march against the South—

'I would not send one solitary man to aid that Government, and those who volunteer should be shot down in their tracks.'"

This ambiguous report of my remarks has, I find, been misunderstood by some who have read it, who construe my language to apply to the government of the Confederate States! What I did say was this:

"Not one man or one dollar will Kentucky furnish Lincoln to aid him in his unholy war against the South. If this northern army shall attempt to cross our borders, we will resist it unto the death; and if one man shall be found in our Commonwealth to volunteer to join them he ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."

This was not said in reply to any question propounded by ex-Governor Helm, as you have stated, and is no more than I frequently uttered public and privately prior to my debate with him.

Respectfully,

JOHN YOUNG BROWN.[344]

The House concluded, on the strength of this letter alone, that Brown had supported the rebellion and therefore voted to exclude him. This became a precedent for the House's subsequent actions in other cases. The standard applied—whether the facts, "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony," showed that an individual had, by an "act or speech … overt and public … done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion"—had been satisfied by Brown's letter.[345]

Similarly, in March 1868, the House excluded John D. Young under this standard. Young's case also involved speech. The Young case involved numerous expressions of support and sympathy for the South and against the Union, and the committee explicitly took the position "that 'aid and comfort' may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion" by a person (like Young, a county judge) in an "influential position."[346] But Young's case was overdetermined, because there was also testimony that Young had provided material assistance to Confederate troops, by giving them food and provisions and assisting in the capture by Confederate troops of a Union soldier. According to the committee, Young's "expressions and admissions" of sympathy for the enemy, "taken in connection with the open acts of 'aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States,'" established that he could not "'honestly and truly take the oath,'"[347] and the full House agreed.

---

[344] Quoted in id. at §449, p. 445.
[345] Id. at §449, pp. 443, 448.
[346] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).
[347] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The contrasting case of Lawrence Trimble, however, showed that mere political opposition did not establish disloyalty. Aside from some overly vague allegations that he had traded with the enemy, the core of the case against Trimble were his political speeches. Trimble had been the Union candidate for Congress in 1861 and "made Union speeches in that canvass throughout the district." Trimble opposed Lincoln's war policies after the Emancipation Proclamation, asserting that the North was waging "an abolition war" and reportedly was opposed to "voting any more men or money to aid in carrying it on." These views and statements, however, were not materially different from other members' statements in Congress opposing the administration's policy. The committee (and House) considered Trimble's "loyalty unquestioned" and found no case for disqualifying him.[348]

Next consider Tennessee: Tennessee supplied two interesting membership cases, one in the House and one in the Senate. Both involved undoubtedly pro-Union men who nonetheless had held state office under Tennessee's secessionist regime and sworn oaths under it, while seemingly using their positions to support Union interests and resist the secession government. This presented a distinct problem under the Ironclad Oath, which required its swearer to disaffirm that he had ever accepted or exercised office under a pretended government hostile to the United States. What to do? In each case—Senator-elect David Patterson, who had served as a state court judge in the eastern region of Tennessee during the Confederate regime; and Representative-elect R.R. Butler, who had retained his seat in the state legislature during secession, while opposing it—the respective house ultimately admitted the applicant to his seat and permitted him to take a modified oath omitting the never-held-office-under-a-hostile-regime sentence.[349]

A potentially broad understanding of "aid or comfort" also surfaced in the exclusion of Maryland Senator-elect Philip Thomas in 1867.[350] What had Thomas done to support the South in its rebellion? Apparently, he had permitted his minor son, a member of his household, to join the Confederate army, and given his son $100 on the way out the door. The Senate debated whether Thomas had done anything more by way of counsel or encouragement of his son's taking up arms against the United States and it is not clear how the senators evaluated such evidence. Some seemed to have thought Thomas's treatment of his son disqualifying. Others focused instead on allegations that Thomas had resigned as President Buchanan's Treasury Secretary because he disagreed with the President's decision to send federal reinforcements to

---

[348] Id. at §453, p. 459.

[349] Id. at §453, 455, pp. 459-461, 462-465. In Butler's case, two-thirds of both houses voted him amnesty. Id. at 464-465. In Patterson's case, the Senate tried to pass a bill altering the oath for Patterson, but the House tabled it, id. at 46, but perhaps that is okay, if application of the Ironclad Oath, to members of Congress, is a function of each house's separate power to make rules governing its proceedings. U.S. Const. art. I §5.

[350] Hinds' at §§457, 458 at pp. 465-470.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Charleston Harbor.[351] Either theory of Thomas's exclusion suggests that "aid or comfort" to rebellion was understood to sweep broadly and possibly include conduct of a somewhat more passive or quiescent nature—allowing one's son to become a rebel soldier, under circumstances where such permission (and financial assistance) might have been withheld; opposing, or resisting, measures to suppress insurrection and defend national institutions and personnel, and resigning office in protest against such measures.

Cases like these continued in the House and Senate after Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment had taken effect. By this point, the basic principles were more established, and the cases were sometimes more factbound or less illuminating, but they further confirm the continuity between Section Three and the Ironclad Oath, and illustrate the understanding of Section Three very shortly after its adoption.

To recount them very briefly: In 1868, John Christy had received the most votes for Congress in Georgia's sixth district, but the House committee found that Christy, by his own admission, had given "aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement" to persons in armed hostility against the Union and therefore, "in accordance with the precedent in the case of John Y. Brown," was disqualified by the Ironclad Oath, and he was not seated.[352] In 1869, the House sat John Rice from Kentucky despite a divided House committee's conclusion that he was disqualified by Section Three.[353] The pages of the Congressional Globe reveal a debate about whether Rice had in fact joined the Confederate Army, which turned on the dubious credibility of two witnesses.[354] In 1870, the House allowed Representative George Booker of Virginia to keep his seat, despite subsequent charges that he had directly supported the militia of the rebel government in his role as justice of the peace. But Booker made an apparently persuasive case that he had been loyal all along, even as he worked within the Confederacy, and as a practical matter he had already been seated. For one reason or the other, the House ultimately voted to table the issue, leaving Booker in office.[355] Also in 1870, the House allowed Representative Lewis McKenzie of Virginia to sit, despite various votes he had taken as a member of the Virginia house of [351] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470 (reporting that Senator Sumner withdrew a resolution focused on Thomas's son "it being urged that Mr. Thomas's conduct as a Cabinet officer in 1860 afforded more certain grounds for action."). See also Cong. Globe 40th Cong. 2nd Sess. at 1260-1262 (Feb. 19, 1868).

---

[352] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470-472. Interestingly, the Governor of Georgia had concluded that Christy was disqualified under Section Three while the House committee relied on the Ironclad Oath "independently of any question as to ineligibility under the fourteenth amendment," id.

[353] Hinds' at §460, pp. 472-473.

[354] Congressional Globe, 41st Cong, 2nd Sess. pp. 5442-5447 (July 11, 1870). Rice had also been in the Kentucky legislature and voted for a resolution against the coercion of the southern states; but everybody agreed this was not enough to count as aid or comfort, because it was only in January 1861: "No war exist[ed] at the time" and it was before "the policy of the Government had been announced." Id. at 5443 (Butler); see also id. at 5445 (Garfield). Nor could Rice be excluded solely because of his politics. See id. at 5445 ("[T]his man was a Democrat. That is a political sin, but it is not a crime under the law. He is a Democrat yet. I think he is very wrong in being that, but yet it is not a crime.") (Logan).

[355] Hinds' at §461, pp. 474-475.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

delegates in 1861—votes pledging Virginia's commitment to "unite her destiny with the slaveholding States of the South" should attempts to reconcile differences between North and South fail, supporting Virginia's willingness to fight, and to provision Virginia fighters. Because all of these votes occurred before voter ratification of Virginia's secession ordinance on May 23, 1861, and because McKenzie remained "an outspoken Union man" after secession and throughout the war, the House concluded he had neither engaged in rebellion nor given it aid or comfort.

Finally, in 1871, the Senate declined to seat Senator-elect Zebulon Vance from North Carolina.[356] The exclusion of Vance was a particularly easy case. After serving in Congress, he had led Confederate troops in battle against the Union and then became the wartime governor of Confederate-regime North Carolina.[357] If anyone had engaged in rebellion and given aid or comfort to the Union's enemies, it was Vance. He was clearly barred by both Section Three and by the Ironclad Oath. He could be seated only if Congress chose to exercise amnesty, which it did not do until later.[358]

These congressional seating challenges suggest some rough lines as to what Congress thought was "aid or comfort" to the Confederacy. On one hand, direct material support for the rebel cause—providing supplies or working with enemy forces—was clearly aid or comfort. On the other hand, disfavored political beliefs and pre-war political stances were clearly not. In between lay contested territory. But there was no bright line, for instance, protecting all speech or political activity. In some situations, speech alone could be disqualifying. A sufficiently clear and unequivocal statement of disloyalty in the form of proposed active resistance to Union authority or encouragement to violence against Union forces appears generally to have been thought disqualifying. Voluntarily holding confederate office or advocating resistance to the Union also could be enough to disqualify. We do not suggest these individual applications—many of which were contested and complicated—are strictly binding. But they provide useful concrete evidence for how parts of Section Three may well have been understood and thought to work.[359]

---

[356] See generally Hinds' at §463, pp. 478-486.

[357] See generally Richard E. Yates, Zebulon B. Vance: as War Governor of North Carolina, 1862-1865, 3 J. Southern Hist. 43 (1937).

[358] Vance ultimately had the last laugh. Vance was excluded from the 1872 amnesty statute because he had served in the thirty-sixth Congress, Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142; https://bioguide.congress.gov/search/bio/V000021. Cf. Franklin Ray Shirley, Zebulon Vance, Tarheel Spokesman 71 & 152 n. 36 (1962) (claiming that Vance had been waiting for the 1872 amnesty until his opponent Abbott had somehow engineered the amendment to the 1872 act that excluded Vance), but Congress then passed a private bill granting him individual amnesty. 17 Stat. 691 (June 10, 1872). Thanks to Gerard Magliocca for this source. Vance subsequently returned to the North Carolina governorship, and then to the Senate until his death in 1884. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 111 n. 126.

[359] Finally, though it occurred long after this period, there has been one additional congressional exclusion under Section Three: the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. See supra notes 222-224 and accompanying text. The Berger episode of course has no probative value about the original meaning of Section Three, since it occurred more than 50 years after Section

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6. Legislative History

There is only a little fruit to be gleaned from the legislative history of the Fourteenth Amendment—the records of the proposing Congress's debates over its various provisions and of state ratification debates. The Fourteenth Amendment's legislative history is famously voluminous, and Section Three—like the other "forgotten" sections of the Amendment (Section Two and Section Four)—was much more salient to the debates then than it is to today.[360] As briefly noted above, the legislative history supports the key propositions we have advanced earlier in this article—that Section Three was designed to be general and prospective, and not limited to the situation of the Civil War and Reconstruction; that Section Three's disqualification was seen by proponents and opponents alike to be self-executing and automatic; and that Section Three was understood to supersede (or satisfy) prior constitutional limitations.[361]

Perhaps somewhat surprisingly, however, we have found relatively few interpretive insights about the scope of conduct triggering disqualification under Section Three. What evidence there is generally confirms the understanding that the provision would have sweeping consequences: there appears to have been substantial agreement—by both opponents and proponents—that the provision would cover a broad range of activity supporting or assisting the South's efforts to throw off the authority of the Union and the Constitution. The original proposal would have excluded all such persons from voting, not just officeholding and, further, would not have been limited in its coverage to former oath-swearing federal and state officeholders. However, the language concerning what conduct triggered disfranchisement (and, as later revised, disqualification from officeholding) was carried forward throughout the discussion. Opponents of what eventually became Section Three thought the range of what was included in disability-triggering conduct (that is, when one might be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion or given "aid or comfort" to it) was hugely broad in its reach, sweeping in nearly everybody in the rebel South—and viewed the proposal as regrettable on account of such breadth. Significantly, proponents of the amendment did not disagree with its opponents concerning the breadth of the description of disability-triggering conduct. The proponents simply thought such breadth appropriate, necessary, and valuable.[362]

As things proceeded, Congress narrowed the provision in two specific respects. Congress backed away from complete disfranchisement to disqualification from holding office. And relatedly, it narrowed Section Three to cover only those who had sworn a prior oath of loyalty to the U.S. Constitution as federal or state officeholders. Rather

---

Three was enacted. In our view, the House's decision was mistaken—an overzealous reading of the law, the facts, or both.

[360] See generally Graber, Volume 1, supra note 8.

[361] See supra notes 12, 59, & 184.

[362] See generally Graber Section Three manuscript, supra note 12.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

than disenfranchising pretty much the entire white South, it would disqualify from future office those who had held constitutional office and then rebelled.

But what did not change was the broad description of the conduct that triggered disfranchisement (in the earlier proposal) or disqualification from office (in the proposal eventually agreed to).[363] As noted, there is not a great deal of explication of what this conduct was, exactly. But the overall tenor of the debates over what became Section Three suggest that all meaningful connection with, support for, or aid to the Confederacy—officeholding, military service (whether voluntary or not), political support or endorsement, provision of material assistance to rebellion or rebel forces—was regarded by the proposing Congress as covered. The legislative history of Section Three—such as it is—supports a broad understanding of the prohibition contained in its language.

7. Early Applications of Section Three

A final set of evidence comes from the handful of cases applying Section Three shortly after its adoption. Once again, because these examples come after the provision was adopted, they do not provide direct evidence of its original public meaning, but they still can be informative.[364] Section Three came up in a range of procedural and institutional situations; each of these situations further confirms Section Three's broad substantive sweep.[365]

For instance, the 1867 Military Reconstruction Act—which imposed provisional governments on the southern states until they obtained readmission to representation in Congress by enacting new, republican, Reconstruction-compliant constitutions—directly incorporated Section Three of the proposed (but not yet ratified) Fourteenth Amendment as a restriction on those governments. Persons disqualified

---

[363] Congress also rejected a series of proposed amendments to Section Three that would have narrowed or limited the conduct or persons to which the language would apply – e.g., only to persons who joined the Confederacy while still holding prior office under the U.S. Constitution; only to persons who had sworn oaths to the Constitution since 1851; only to persons who had not received presidential pardons; and only to persons who had voluntarily served the confederacy. Republican defenders of Section Three successfully opposed these proposed limitations on Section Three's scope, arguing that limiting the ban to persons who still held office under the Constitution when they joined the Confederacy would indulge the pretext that resignation from office before engaging in or assisting rebellion absolved one of any prior duty of loyalty to the United States Constitution. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. p. 2770 (statement of Sen. Howard). Republicans likewise rejected the proposed limitation to persons who had "voluntarily" assisted or participated in rebellion, because it would raise unnecessary and difficult proof problems and permit spurious claims of involuntary participation. Indeed, one senator noted that Alexander Stephens, Vice President of the Confederacy, had testified before the Joint Committee on Reconstruction that he "never entered into the rebellion voluntarily"! Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. p. 2918 (statement of Sen. Willey).

[364] See, e.g., Baude, Liquidation, supra note 242, at 61-62; Paulsen, Most Dangerous, supra note 242, at 293, 303.

[365] Additionally, some of Congress's application of the Ironclad Oath to its own members also entailed the application of Section Three, see supra Part IV.A.5.b.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

under Section Three could not hold office under the provisional governments, nor could they serve in—or even vote for those who would serve in—the state's constitutional convention.[366]

Andrew Johnson's attorney general, Henry Stanbery, published a two-part opinion in 1867 setting forth his interpretation of the Act and thus, indirectly, of Section Three.[367] Stanberry's opinion is explicitly slanted toward a narrow construction of Section Three, because of his concerns that it would be punitive and ex post facto in this context.[368] Even so, Stanberry's opinion found Section Three's definition of what constituted participation in rebellion to be quite broad:

> "All those who, in legislative or other official capacity, were engaged in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, or persons who, in their individual capacity, have done any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion, may well be said, in the meaning of this law, to have engaged in rebellion."[369]

As to individuals, Stanberry also reiterated several times that any voluntary support, even if not violent, was covered and culpable. He found "it to be clear, that in the sense of this law persons may have engaged in rebellion without having actually levied war or taken arms,"[370] and added that "wherever an act is done voluntarily in aid of the rebel cause . . . it must work disqualification under this law."[371]

Subsequent cases took even broader positions. For instance, in the 1869 decision of Worthy v. Barrett, the North Carolina Supreme Court concluded that a state sheriff was disqualified under Section Three for holding basically the same office as a sheriff when his state was in rebellion. The court's reasoning on this issue was succinct but clear:

> What will amount to having engaged in the rebellion?
>
> (1st.) Holding any of these offices under the Confederate government.

---

[366] An Act to provide for the more efficient Government of the Rebel States, 14 Stat. 428, 429, sec. 5-6 (March 2., 1867).
[367] Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 141 (1867); Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 182 (1867).
[368] 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 159-160. But see supra Part III.A-B (explaining why the constitutional ex post facto and attainder principles do not apply to Section Three, especially as applied to new insurrections and rebellions).
[369] Id. at 161-162 (emphasis added)
[370] Id. at 161.
[371] Id. at 165.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 2d Voluntarily aiding the rebellion, by personal service, or by contributions, other than charitable, of any thing that was useful or necessary in the Confederate service.[372]

That is, the North Carolina Supreme Court embraced Stanberry's view that almost any voluntary assistance to the rebel cause was a form of engaging in rebellion, but also held that holding any office, even an ordinary non-military office far from the front lines, was a form of engaging in rebellion covered by Section Three.[373]

Shortly after this—and shortly after Chief Justice Chase's unsound and unfortunate decision in Griffin's Case had held that Section Three required congressional legislation in order to be put into operation – Congress enacted federal procedures to directly enforce Section Three in federal court. The 1870 Enforcement Act, also known as the First Ku Klux Klan Act, authorized district attorneys of the United States to bring quo warranto actions to remove officials holding office "contrary to the provisions of the third section of the fourteenth article of amendment of the Constitution" and to bring criminal prosecutions against person who "shall hereafter knowingly accept or hold" office in violation of Section Three.[374] In proceedings brought under both enforcement sections of the Act, in the short period between 1870 and 1872, the scope of Section Three's prohibition was interpreted broadly. (Recall that in 1872 Congress removed Section Three's disqualification as to most former rebels.)

Consider first a notable criminal prosecution under the 1870 Act. In North Carolina again, this time in federal court, the government brought criminal charges against Amos Powell, for accepting an appointment as county sheriff despite being covered by Section Three.[375] Powell's alleged act of rebellion was having "furnished a substitute for himself to the Confederate army," and Powell's defense was that this was involuntary, because he was about to be involuntarily conscripted himself.[376] This gave the federal court, through Judge Hugh Lennox Bond, occasion to instruct the jury on the relevance of voluntariness to Section Three:

> [T]he word "engage" implies, and was intended to imply, a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection or Rebellion, and to bring it to a successful termination; and unless you find the defendant did that, with which he is charged, voluntarily, and not by compulsion, he is not guilty of the indictment. But it is not every appearance of force nor timid fear that will

---

[372] Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 203 (1869). The court also applied the Worthy rule to the even easier case of a county attorney who "took part in th[e] rebellion by serving in the Confederate army, voluntarily." In Re Tate, 63 N.C. 308 (1869).

[373] By contrast, Stanberry had concluded that officers who "discharged official duties not incident to war, but in the preservation of order and the administration of law, are not to be considered as thereby engaging in rebellion." 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 162.

[374] 16 Stat. 140, 142-143, sections 14 & 15. See supra note 54.

[375] United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605 (C.C.D.N.C 1871).

[376] Id. at 607.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> excuse such actual participation in the Rebellion or Insurrection. Defendant's conduct must have been prompted by a well grounded fear of great bodily harm and the result of force, which the defendant was neither able to escape nor resist. And further, the defendant's action must spring from his want of sympathy with the insurrectionary movement, and not from his repugnance to being in an army, merely.[377]

In other words, only great duress and pure heart would be a defense if one's conduct otherwise provided material support to the rebellion. Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged" in insurrection covered a wide swath of voluntary participatory acts supporting or assisting rebellion, some bordering on near-passive acquiescence.

Meanwhile, in Tennessee. the U.S. Attorney brought dozens of federal enforcement actions, including against three members of the Tennessee Supreme Court.[378] Many of those charged were unquestionably covered by Section Three because they had fought in the Civil War, for the Confederacy. But some were charged for more remote participation. For instance, Thomas Nelson, one of the Tennessee Justices, had been a unionist during the war, and indeed at one point a prisoner of the Confederacy. His participation in the rebellion appears to have been limited to being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from Tennessee, after Tennessee's purported secession, and traveling to Washington to attempt to represent the state in Congress.[379] While these Section Three claims were never adjudicated, the fact that they were brought in the first place is consistent with the broad sweep of Section Three.[380]

The other scattered discussion of Section Three we have found are more ambiguous, but still consistent with these broad interpretations of Section Three's substantive disqualification—broad interpretations of insurrection, rebellion, "engaged in," and so on. Recall, for instance, that in Griffin's Case, it was essentially taken as given that Judge Hugh Sheffey would be disqualified by Section Three (if it applied) because he was "a member of the legislature of Virginia in 1862 during the late Rebellion, and as such voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[381] Other cases are consistent with similarly

---

[377] Id. Additionally, Powell had served as a justice of the peace under the Confederate government, but the federal court held this not to qualify, for reasons similar to those articulated by Attorney General Stanberry. Id.

[378] Sam D. Elliott, When the United States Attorney Sued to Remove Half the Tennessee Supreme Court: The Quo Warranto Cases of 1870, 49 Tenn. B.J. 20 (2013); see also Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.

[379] For one fawning account of Nelson, see Oliver P. Temple, Notable Men of Tennessee From 1833 to 1875. at 166-215 (1912).

[380] Justice Nelson resigned while these actions were pending, and the rest of the actions were abandoned with the passage of the 1872 Amnesty Act and a change in the federal attitude towards Section Three. Elliott, supra note 378.

[381] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D.Va. 1869).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

broad assumptions.[382] We have found none that took a substantially narrower view of Section Three, and even if some exist, they would seem to be the minority and inferior construction.

The application of Section Three immediately after its enactment is consistent with what the text, structure, context, and history of Section Three all tell us: to have "engage[d] in insurrection and rebellion," or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" was understood to embrace an incredibly broad sweep of voluntary conduct that provides support, material assistance, or specific encouragement to such actions.

In the end, the sum total of evidence concerning the original textual meaning of Section Three—contemporaneous dictionary definitions; parallel constitutional use of the same or similar language; the inferences that fairly may be drawn from the legislative history of Section Three's drafting; the especially strong evidence from 1860s Civil War era political and legal usage of nearly the precise same terms (in prominent presidential statements, congressional enactments and their implementation, and a landmark Supreme Court constitutional decision employing the same terms); the general legal backdrop of eighteenth century Insurrection Acts and the myriad and familiar historical incidents of "insurrection" and "rebellion" to which they applied; and finally early practice enforcing Section Three—points in a consistent direction: toward a broad understanding of what constitutes insurrection and rebellion and a remarkably broad understanding of what types of conduct constitute engaging in or perhaps giving aid or comfort to such movements.

B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred?

The next step in the analysis of Section Three is rather more tedious than difficult. But it is important to get it right: Holders of what prior offices or positions are covered by Section Three's disqualification from future office if they engaged in insurrection or rebellion? And from what future offices or positions are they thereby disqualified? The text of Section Three takes up these points in reverse order (and so we shall too) and uses slightly different language for each category.

First, the offices or positions from which a disqualified person is barred:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or an elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State … [383]

[382] Sands v. Commonwealth, 62 Va. (21 Gratt.) 871, 873, 885–87 (1872). There is reason to think there were hundreds of other Section Three actions brought during this time period, but few records of the specifics of the cases. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.
[383] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the offices or positions previously held, and for which an oath to the Constitution was taken, that trigger Section Three's disqualification:

> … who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States … [384]

We begin with a few observations.

First, the language of these provisions should be read in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one.[385] Keep this in mind as we proceed: we think readers should be wary of any interpretation of Section Three that would impute to the text a hyper-technical set of hidden distinctions not fully warranted by the language. Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside.

Second, it appears that the list of disqualification-triggering offices tracks closely, but not identically, the listing of positions for which the original Constitution imposed an oath requirement. Article VI of the Constitution dictates that "Senators and Representatives . . . Members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several states, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."[386] Article II, overlapping this general oath mandate, prescribes a specific oath for the President, who swears both that he will "faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States" and

---

[384] Id.

[385] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Captain James T. Kirk and the Enterprise of Constitutional Interpretation: Some Modest Proposals from the Twenty-third Century, 59 Albany L. Rev. 671, 674-76 (1995). For instance, consider the story, passed down from Albert Gallatin to Max Farrand to William Treanor, that Gouverneur Morris slyly attempted to replace a comma with a semicolon in Article I in order to convert the "General Welfare" Clause from a limitation on the tax power into a freestanding power of regulation. William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Guverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 20-24 (2021). Putting aside whether this story is really true, David S. Schwartz, Framing the Framer: A Commentary on Treanor's Governeur Morris as Dishonest Scrivener, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 51, 69-73 (2022), a sensible approach to constitutional interpretation should obviously resist such antics. Even if Morris had succeeded in smuggling in the semi-colon, that maneuver should not be decisive in interpreting the Clause. See Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 338-339 & n. 151.

[386] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"'to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.'"[387]

Section Three's listing of triggering positions largely tracks the substance (and to some extent even the sequence) of the all-offices-legislative-executive-judicial-federal-and-state oath mandates. Section Three's list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified builds on this list. All positions that trigger disqualification are disqualified-from. In addition, the disqualified-from list includes, notably, presidential electors, who are not listed in the Constitution as persons required to swear an oath to the Constitution. The wording also appears designed to clarify that the ban extends to "military" offices—including state military offices—whether or not they would be considered "executive" offices under state law or Article VI. Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application. And if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions plus disqualified from being an elector for President and Vice President. That seems to be the basic structure of the provision.

Our third observation is related. It appears to us that the text's overall project of office-listing, in both clauses, was designed to be reasonably comprehensive, covering the waterfront: both taking care not to accidentally leave out anything considered important—including everybody who was constitutionally required to have sworn an oath—and adding positions where appropriate, as with adding the category of electors to the list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified.

With these principles in mind, it appears to us that the two clauses—describing what past positions trigger disqualification and what future positions fall within the scope of that disqualification—can and should be read, together, in a straightforward manner. First, as to the persons to whom the provision applies (the second, "triggering" clause): Section Three's disqualification attaches to persons who previously swore an oath to support the Constitution as:

> [i] a "member" of Congress, or as
> [ii] an "officer of" the United States, or as > [iii] a "member" of any State legislature, or as > [iv] an "executive or judicial officer of" any State.[388]

---

[387] U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 8. On the Presidential Oath Clause generally, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitution of Necessity, 79 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1257, 1260-1267 (2004); on "to the best of my Ability," see William Baude, Signing Unconstitutional Laws, 86 Ind. L.J. 303, 310 (2011).
[388] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These four categories are then closely paralleled (with differences noted) in the description of offices from which covered persons are excluded (the first clause). Covered insurrectionists, rebels, and aid-and-comforters are disqualified from being:

> [i] "a Senator or Representative" in Congress (paralleling "member," a seemingly purely stylistic variation) or
> [ii] an elector for President or Vice President (a new exclusion from a position that is not an oath-required triggering position); or
> [iii] holding "any office, civil or military," "under" either federal or state government (paralleling "officer" of the United States or of any State, respectively, in the second and fourth triggering categories above—with the noted clarification of the inclusion of "military" officers).

The description "civil" office, in the disqualified-from list seems designed to embrace the categories of "executive or judicial" officer in the triggering list. Though somewhat more awkward, we think an elected office in a state legislature also qualifies as a "civil" office within the language and design of Section Three, reading the word "office" in this context in an ordinary, non-technical sense.[389]

The overall result is a broad list of disqualification-triggering positions covering essentially every major federal or state legislative, executive, and judicial office; and a list of barred-from positions embracing all of the above plus electors for president and vice president (and clarifying "military"). The legislative positions in question are the relevant elected offices—members of the legislature, whether a state legislature or the federal Congress—and do not embrace unelected staff positions. The executive positions embrace anyone in the executive branches of federal or state government who holds an "office" within that branch.

To be sure, there might be ancillary questions concerning what federal executive and judicial positions qualify as an "office," held by an "officer"—as opposed to non-officer, non-"office"-holding employees. That is: exactly how far down the organizational chart does the list of triggering and disqualified-from positions go?[390] Like-

---

[389] Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5 (setting forth arguments why state legislative offices are included within the general catch-all category of excluded-from "civil" offices.); contra John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 126 N. Am. Rev. 53, 54 (1878). None of this in our view affects the question whether a Member of Congress may properly be designated as an "Officer" to whom the duties of the office of President may devolve upon presidential and vice-presidential death, resignation, or inability, which turns on different considerations. Compare Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 113 (1995) with John F. Manning, Not Proved: Some Lingering Questions About Legislative Succession to the Presidency, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 141 (1995).

[390] Serious scholarship has explored those questions with respect to the Appointments Clause. Jennifer L. Mascott, Who Are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 Stan. L. Rev. 443 (2018). We do not address that somewhat peripheral question here, but leave such issues for another day.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wise, for the federal judicial branch, Article III judges and justices are plainly covered. (Other officers in the judicial branch, such as the clerks in Ex Parte Hennen,[391] are presumably covered as well—as well as perhaps bankruptcy judges, magistrate judges and the like.)[392] Non-office-holding employees, again, would not be covered. And of course there might be similar residual questions as to what state government positions constitute state executive "office" held by "officers" (thus, perhaps, the special need for designation "military," to be sure state military positions are included), and what state judicial-branch positions constitute a judicial office. But in the main, the description of who all is covered by Section Three and what offices such person, if disqualified, is excluded from holding strikes us as fairly straightforward.

The only challenge anyone has raised concerning this general description is the argument by professors Josh Blackman and Seth Tillman that a person who has served as President (and the same argument is made as to Vice President), while perhaps having held an office "under" the United States, is not properly classified as an "officer of" the United States.[393] On this view, disqualified persons might be barred from being President or Vice President—the authors are somewhat non-committal about this[394]—but having been President or Vice President, and engaged in insurrection or rebellion, does not trigger disqualification of an individual from anything! On this argument, the President and Vice President—alone among constitutional oath-takers—are exempt from Section Three's consequences.

We do not buy it, for many reasons: First, it adopts precisely the type of "secret code" hidden-meanings hermeneutic we think should be viewed extremely skeptically. Moreover, the code has a facially implausible consequence: an insurrectionist President is not covered by Section Three's disqualification (though nearly every other federal or state officeholder is); the President is (perhaps?) a disqualified-from office but not a disqualification-triggering office. This makes little sense.[395]

---

[391] 38 U.S. 230, 258 (1839) ("[T]hat a clerk is one of the inferior officers contemplated by [the Appointments Clause] cannot be questioned"). To be clear, Hennen dealt with the clerk of court, not what we would now call a term judicial law clerk.

[392] That said, to the extent that one maintains that magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges cannot lawfully exercise judicial power or executive power of their own, see William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1554-56, 1574-75 (2020), one might question whether they are truly "officers" at all. Again, we leave this issue for another day.

[393] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is The President An "Officer of the United States" For Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 N.Y.U. J. L. & Liberty 1 (2021).

[394] See, e.g., id. at 6, 17, 21.

[395] To be sure, faithful readings of the Constitution sometimes yield counterintuitive outcomes. See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Someone Should Have Told Spiro Agnew, 14 Const. Comm. 245 (1997); (suggesting the possibility that a straightforward reading of the constitutional text yields the "stupid" – and surely inadvertent – result that the Vice President would be the presiding officer over his own impeachment trial in the Senate and that this is a result to be rectified); Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1468. But that does not mean we should close our eyes to plausibility and common sense, especially when the proposed textual reading is such a stretch. See also Paulsen, supra, Nothing But the Text, supra note 10, at 1439-1440 (noting cautions concerning use of the "absurdity" canon to

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second (and relatedly), the argument rather implausibly splits linguistic hairs. No one denies that the President is an executive branch officer holding executive office. At the risk of belaboring the obvious: Article II refers to the "office" of President innumerable times. It specifies the length of term for which the President "holds his Office," certain minimum qualifications for eligibility "to that Office," what happens upon the President's removal "from Office," or inability to discharge "the Powers and Duties of said Office," and the oath he shall take before entering "on the Execution of his Office."[396] If the Presidency is not an office, nothing is.

So the argument must rely instead on the fine parsing of prepositional phrases. The President (perhaps?) holds an "office under" the United States but is not an "officer of" the United States? This seems to defy textual common sense. Far more sensible and straightforward to conclude, we think, that the officeholder holding the office of President is an officer "of" the United States who holds office under the authority of the United States. The minor textual difference between the triggering clause ("officer of") and the positions-disqualified clause ("office under")—a choice between prepositions—appears to be of no significant substantive consequence in Section Three, much as other minor textual variations in or among constitutional provisions often do not support differences in meaning.[397] Indeed, one far simpler and more straightforward explanation for the Constitution's use of "office under" and "officer of" in Section Three and elsewhere is that "office" and "officer" simply take different prepositions: the Constitution uses "of" when referring to an officer and "under" when referring to an office.

Finally, even if a plausible argument can be constructed that the difference might have once been thought capable of sustaining a term-of-art distinction with respect to different prepositional phrases in the original Constitution—surmounting the presumption against "secret code" interpretation—there is no evidence of such a distinction in Section Three and little logic to such a distinction either.[398] deny plain textual meaning, but noting how the canon is a sometimes useful tool in discerning actual textual meaning.).

---

[396] See generally U.S. Const. Art. II.

[397] For instance, consider the differently phrased, but seemingly identical enforcement clauses of the Reconstruction Amendments. U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."); id. amdt. XIC, sec. 5 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."); id. amdt. XV, sec. 2 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."). Or consider the Constitution's "gratuitous (one could also say strange) punctuation marks." Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 348 (giving examples).

[398] One of us has previously complimented Tillman's prior scholarship that attempts to prove such a systematic term-of-art/secret code in the original Constitution. William Baude, Constitutional Officers: A Very Close Reading, JOTWELL (Jul. 28, 2016) https://conlaw.jotwell.com/constitutional-officers-a-very-close-reading/. But the very pieces of evidence that are most arresting in that context also confirm extensive linguistic drift or changing understandings in the decades after the founding. Compare id. (foreign gifts to Washington) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Original Public Meaning of the Foreign

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Third, a variant of the Blackman-Tillman argument was explicitly made and explicitly refuted in the congressional debates proposing Section Three. Senator Reverdy Johnson of Maryland charged that the language employed was defective because the offices of President and Vice President had inadvertently been omitted from Section Three. The amendment "does not go far enough," Johnson averred.[399] "I do not see but that any one of these gentlemen may be elected President or Vice President of the United States, and why did you omit to exclude them?"[400] Johnson was complaining that these two officers should be included in Section Three and there was no good reason to omit them. Whereupon Senator Morrill of Maine interrupted: "Let me call the Senator's attention to the words 'or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States.'"[401] Senator Johnson promptly, and somewhat sheepishly, retreated: "Perhaps I am wrong as to the exclusion from the presidency; no doubt I am; but I was misled by noticing the special exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives."[402]

The Blackman-Tillman argument is not quite the same, but it is the mirror image of Johnson's concern. Johnson's inquiry was whether a covered, insurrectionist nonetheless might become president. The Blackman-Tillman argument is that an insurrectionist president is not an "officer of" the United States whose prior position triggers Section Three's restrictions on future office. The Johnson-Morrill colloquy does not specifically address that reverse-image argument. But it certainly suggests that the framers of Section Three were not parsing it as a secret code with facially implausible consequences. The question whether Section Three applied to former Presidents and Vice Presidents does not appear to have been raised again, by anyone.[403] Nor did anybody else involved in drafting or ratifying Section Three suggest that the mirror-image question would be any different. Subject to all the usual reservations about the use of legislative history (and legislative silence) in determining Emoluments Clause: A Reply to Professor Zephyr Teachout, 107 Nw. U.L. Rev. Colloquy 180, 190 (2013) (contrary practice by Presidents Van Buren, Tyler, and Jackson); compare Baude, supra this note (Hamilton's list) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Reports of My Death Were Greatly Exaggerated, at 20-21 https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=3037107 (describing a scrivener's "condensed" version of this document likely made "circa 1830" that may reflect a different understanding of the constitutional terms); cf. Blackman & Tillman, supra note 393, at 24-31 (acknowledging, and arguing against, the possibility of linguistic drift). In other words, such secret code (if any) turns out to have been written in disappearing ink.

---

[399] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st sess. at 2899 (1866)

[400] Id.

[401] Id.

[402] Id.

[403] Former President John Tyler of Virginia subsequently sided with the Confederacy and was elected to the Confederate Congress (but died before assuming office). And former Vice President John Breckinridge subsequently served as a Confederate general and, later, as Confederate Secretary of War. See Blackman & Tillman, supra 393, at 45-46 (acknowledging this). While Tyler and Breckinridge had served in other disqualification-triggering posts, if the text really had failed to include the offices of President and Vice President as triggering disqualification these incidents would have shown that to be a glaring and dangerous omission.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

textual meaning, this further confirms the more natural reading. The only time anything like the question was raised, the point was answered by a proponent of Section Three, clearly and unequivocally, and the questioning Senator accepted the answer as correct.

Fourth and finally, in an additional piece of prepositional jujitsu, Blackman and Tillman tellingly equivocate about whether the President holds "office under" the United States as well. (If he does, Section Three stops covered insurrectionists from becoming President, and if not, not.) Blackman and Tillman do not deny this possibility, but they do not confirm it either. The difficulty for them is that both answers show the implausibility of their position.

If Blackman and Tillman maintain that the President does not hold "office under" the United States, then they must fly in the face of the directly on point discussion between Senators Johnson and Morrill. They must claim to understand Section Three better than its framers. This seems unlikely. But if they confirm that the President does hold "office under" the United States, then they must maintain a sharp and crucial distinction between "office under" and "officer of." As Mark Graber has observed, this distinction was also contradicted by Section Three's framers: "[T]he members of the Congress who framed Section 3 of the 14th Amendment often indicated—and sometimes explicitly stated—that all persons who held office 'under the United States' were officers 'of the United States.' During the debates over Section 3, no representative or senator alluded to the existence of a distinction between 'of' and 'under'. Representatives and senators often described the president as having an 'office under the United States' and being an 'officer of the United States.'"[404] If a secret code was really at work, it was an extraordinarily well-kept secret. The implausibility of both horns of the Blackman-Tillman straddle demonstrates the implausibility of their position.

In short, the ordinary sense of the text; the structure and logic of its provisions; the evident design to be comprehensive; the text's many references to the office of the Presidency as an "office"; the seeming absurdity of the prospect of exclusion of the offices of President and Vice President from triggering the disqualification fashioned [404] Mark Graber Disqualification From Office: Donald Trump v. the 39th Congress, Lawfare (Feb. 24, 2023). Professor Graber notes further that a "unanimous House select committee report issued barely a month after Congress sent the 14th Amendment to the states concluded that 'a little consideration of this matter will show that 'officers of' and 'officers under' the United States are 'indiscriminately used in the Constitution.'" In addition, "[t]he most comprehensive study of state ratification . . . does not point to a single example of any journalist or participant in a state convention who distinguished between 'officers under' and 'officers of' or who otherwise thought a president who participated in an insurrection could not be disqualified under Section 3.'" John Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit. J. Am. Legal Stud. (forthcoming), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4440157; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 158-160 (collecting authorities supporting the same point); Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 16 n. 48 ("My research . . . shows that President Andrew Johnson repeatedly referred to himself as "the chief executive officer of the United States").

---

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

by the Radical Reconstruction Congress that drafted the Fourteenth Amendment; the fact that the only legislative debate over the language discussing whether Section Three inadvertently omitted the offices of President and Vice President rejected any such suggestion; and the fact that no one ever suggested that the "under/of" difference meant the presidency was not a covered office triggering Section Three, all convince us that the natural conclusion is the correct one: Section Three includes in its coverage, or "triggering" language, insurrectionists who once served as President and Vice President. And Section Three excludes disqualified insurrectionists from subsequently holding the office of either President or Vice President.

C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election

We come finally to the urgent question of the day: How does Section Three apply to the events of 2020-2021—the efforts by Donald Trump (and others) to overthrow the results of the 2020 presidential election and install Trump as president for another term, despite his loss to Joseph Biden?

Consider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021.

Taken as a whole, these actions represented an effort to prevent the lawful, regular, termination of President Trump's term of office in accordance with the Constitution. They were an attempt to unlawfully overturn or thwart the lawful outcome of a presidential election and to install, instead, the election loser as president. They constituted a serious attempt to overturn the American constitutional order. Does Section Three cover this conduct? Did these events constitute "insurrection" or "rebellion" within the meaning of the Constitution? And if so, who all might be said to have "engaged in" that conduct, or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to those who did? We will consider those questions in turn.

1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion

We begin with the general legal question whether the attempted overturning of the result of the 2020 presidential election is covered by Section Three in any respect. Do such efforts, in part or in whole, qualify as insurrection or rebellion, disqualifying prior-oath-swearing persons who participated in such acts from future office? In our view, based on all the foregoing analysis, the answer is yes.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There are multiple arguments for how Section Three would apply to the events of 2020-2021, but let us first focus on the events of January 6, 2021.[405] These include first the cluster of actions taken in assembling, encouraging, charging, and inciting an armed (in part) mob, producing the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol, Congress, and the Vice President. For some, importantly including Trump, these acts would also include subsequent deliberate inaction against the January 6 attack—by persons with duties and capacity to act to suppress, halt, or quell the insurrection in progress—that effectively facilitated, permitted, aided, and encouraged such insurrectionary violence.

Overall, it seems to us to be quite clear that the specific series of events leading up to and culminating in the January 6, 2021 attack qualifies as an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three: "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect."[406] The large group of people who descended upon, entered, and occupied the U.S. Capitol building used force to prevent a key step in the constitutional transfer of power. The group was in part coordinated, not merely a riot.[407] Some members of the group were armed,[408] and many used force to breach the Capitol, to overpower law enforcement there, and to effectuate their unlawful aim.[409]

Furthermore, it seems that, as a whole, the group's goal—to the extent the group had a specific objective in mind—was to disrupt the constitutional transfer of power, by disrupting a necessary formal step in the constitutional process.[410] The invasion of the Capitol on January 6 was not simply a violation of the law (though it was that of course). It was not merely a protest of a particular legal measure, but a forcible prevention and disruption of it. And it was not the disruption of just any legal measure, but of one that was itself central to the allocation of authority under our Constitution. If this is a fair description of what happened on January 6, then that

---

[405] In describing these events, we rely generally here and throughout on the public record assembled by the House January 6th Committee. Final Report, Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol, H.R. 117-000 (117th Cong., 2nd Sess.). Of course, to the extent that a potentially disqualified officer wished to prove that this public record was inaccurate or incomplete as relevant to them, they could attempt to do so in the relevant proceedings and to the relevant decisionmaker. See generally supra Part II.B.

[406] Supra Part IV.A.1. The fact that President Trump may have supported the insurrection, see infra II.C.2.b, does not change this. In our system the President is not "the government," and especially not when Congress is carrying out a constitutionally mandated role in supervising the transfer of power.

[407] See, e.g., January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 499-502, 530-531.

[408] Id. at 640-642.

[409] Id. at 646-647, 651-659.

[410] Id. at 502-510, 521-530.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

day was something quite different from more common acts of protest, even disruptive protest. January 6 was an insurrection.

To be sure, the events of January 6 itself—the attack on Congress and the Capitol—did not remotely rival in overall magnitude, or in sheer carnage, the experience of the U.S. Civil War, where more than 600,000 people died. Still, considered as discrete events, it is notable that more people died, and many more were injured, as a result of the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol than died or suffered injuries as a result of the attack on Fort Sumter. The events of January 6 match, in their essential elements—concerted resistance to federal authority, serious attempts to frustrate execution of national law, attacks on government officials and facilities, intimidation and violence—and arguably exceeded in their seriousness, the events of the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries' Rebellion, and other more limited historical insurrections. And at all events, it is less the magnitude or degree of disruption occasioned by an insurrection than whether it fits within the broad meaning of Section Three, as illuminated by evidence of its original meaning and historical understandings. As the Prize Cases teach, not every insurrection or rebellion ripens into a full-fledged war.[411] Most of the time, the authority of the state can nip it in the bud. But it is still an insurrection.[412]

Our assessment of the events of January 6, specifically, as an "insurrection" confirms the judgment made by public authorities: An act of Congress, to "award four congressional gold medals to the United States Capitol Police and those who protected the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021,"[413] found that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. The text of the act contains an official finding: "On January 6, 2021, a mob of insurrectionists forced its way into the U.S. Capitol building and congressional office buildings and engaged in acts of vandalism, looting, and violently attacked Capitol Police officers."[414] Another finding noted the historic magni-

---

[411] See supra Part IV.A.4.c.

[412] What about other disruptive, disorderly, even violent protests during the same time period? For instance, the many such events that erupted during the summer of 2020 in the wake of the police killing of George Floyd? So far as we can tell, none of these were covered by Section Three. Of course mere protest is not insurrection. Some of these protests devolved into riots, but even a riot is not necessarily an insurrection. And even if some of them went further, amounted to "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect," and met the definition of insurrection, they would seem to be insurrections against the state governments, not the United States, and thus outside the scope of Section Three. But of course if there were any other insurrections against the United States, Section Three applies to them all.

[413] Pub. Law. 117-32 (Aug. 5, 2021), 135 Stat. 322.

[414] Id. sec. 1(1). In the state Section Three proceedings against Marjorie Taylor Greene, supra notes 68-73 and accompanying text, the hearing officer cited this statute to conclude "Congress has characterized the Invasion as an insurrection." Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SEC-STATE-CE-57-Beaudrot, at 9-10 (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022). The hearing officer found it unnecessary to decide for himself, however, "Whether the Invasion of January 6 amounted to an insurrection." Id. at 18.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

tude and symbolic importance of that insurrection against democracy: "The desecration of the U.S. Capitol, which is the temple of American Democracy, and the violence targeting Congress are horrors that will forever stain our Nation's history."[415] The impeachment charges brought against President Trump as a result of January 6 were equally explicit in concluding that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. A majority of the House of Representatives approved (232 to 197) an article of impeachment charging then-President Trump with "incitement of insurrection" for the events of January 6th.[416] The Senate's vote to convict Trump of this charge, while falling short of the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution's impeachment process, constituted a substantial majority (57 to 43) of the Senate endorsing the House's charge and characterization. Majorities of both houses of Congress thus determined—at least twice—that January 6th was an insurrection; and in the impeachment proceedings majorities of both houses determined that Trump was responsible for having incited that insurrection.[417]

Finally, there is an additional possibility that we should see the events of January 6, 2021, as just one part of a broader "rebellion" against constitutional government, much like secession—actions seeking unlawfully to displace or replace the authority of lawful constitutional government and substitute a constitutionally unauthorized governmental authority in its stead.

We acknowledge that applying the term "rebellion" to the events of 2020-2021 goes beyond the Civil War era dictionaries. The attempt to overturn the 2020 election was neither an "open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government," as Webster would have it, nor (outside of the insurrection of January 6) "the taking up of arms" or "forcible opposition" as Bouvier would have it.[418] It is not a perfect fit.

Nonetheless, consider the argument that the term "rebellion" could be used more broadly to describe a coup d'etat seeking to overthrow the constitutional order—including a so-called "bloodless" coup d'etat (where no force is used) and a successful "self-coup" of the bloodless variety[419] (where the existing unlawful regime commands such force that it need not be used). Consider the following chain of logical steps: 1. A military coup d'etat upending lawful government by use of force surely qualifies,

---

[415] Pub. Law. 117-32, sec. 1(4).
[416] H. Res. 24 (117th Cong., 1st Sess. Jan 25, 2021).
[417] For what it is worth, other scholars have also agreed that January 6th was an insurrection. See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 23 n.65; Vlahoplus, supra note 404, at 1; Farah Peterson, Our Constitutionalism of Force, 122 Colum. L. Rev. 1539, 1622-25 (2022); see also Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Mark A. Graber, Treason, Insurrection, and Disqualification: From the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 to Jan. 6, 2021, Lawfare (Sep. 26, 2022) at https://www.lawfaremedia.org/article/treason-insurrection-and-disqualification-fugitive-slave-act-1850-jan-6-2021.
[418] See supra Part IV.A.2.
[419] See generally Daniel J. Hemel, Self-Coup and The Constitution, 37 Const. Comm. (forthcoming 2023).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

constitutionally, as a "rebellion." It is literally an effort unlawfully to overthrow constitutional government, by force. 2. It follows that a military coup d'etat upending lawful government by show or threat of force should be treated the same way, even though force was not used. 3. A military coup d'etat by the existing regime—a "self-coup," would seem, legally, to be the same thing. In such a case the regime does not seize power, by show or threat of force; it retains power by show or threat of force. But it is logically identical to situations #1 and #2. 4. A "bloodless" self-coup against the lawful regime, where no force is used because none is needed, should be treated the same as #3. Indeed, it seems fair to say that situation #4 is merely an instance of situation #3. 5. The same self-coup attempt, but that styles itself as not renouncing but instead as restoring or maintaining, the constitutional regime—but that in truth seeks to overthrow or defeat that regime—logically should be treated the same as #4. If one accepts this chain of reasoning, one might then fairly conclude that the entirety of the course of conduct attempting dishonestly and unlawfully to overthrow the 2020-2021 election constituted a "rebellion," even though this might stretch somewhat the dictionary definitions of the term.[420]

Calling the events of 2020 and 2021 "insurrection" or potentially even "rebellion" might seem to some exaggerated or hyperbolic. It is not. It is simply being legally precise and not shying away from difficult or upsetting consequences that flow from legal precision. We believe it is important to call the events of 2020 and 2021 by their true legal names, their right names, unshielded by artful euphemism.[421]

2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort"

This brings us to the rubber-hits-the-road question: Who all, by virtue of their personal, voluntary conduct, can be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion in connection with the efforts to overthrow the result of the presidential election of 2020 and unlawfully maintain Donald Trump in office as President of the United States? Additionally, perhaps, who might be said to have provided "aid or comfort" to those insurrectionists and rebels?

As detailed at great—perhaps excruciating—length above, "engaged in" under Section Three is properly understood to embrace a broad range of willful participatory

---

[420] In similar fashion, we note that—at least at first—the purported "secession" of a state from the Union was not universally acknowledged to be itself an act constituting "rebellion" as a legal matter It too did not fit perfectly the standard dictionary definition (unless and until force was used or threatened). But the logic of the matter led Lincoln—and Congress, and the Supreme Court—to conclude that secession, in practical and legal terms, was a species of "rebellion" and legally to be treated as such. See supra Part IV.A.4. As set forth in the text, the same logic suggests that conduct tantamount to an attempted coup d'etat (including attempting to maintain a defeated incumbent president in office, dishonestly and unlawfully) may fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection or rebellion."

[421] For the sake of completeness, we add that we think the events of 2020-2021 probably do not rise to the level of "treason" or "levying war" against the United States, though of course it is possible that further investigation will reveal truly treasonous conduct that is not yet on the public record.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct. This includes, certainly, deliberate acts in the nature of planning, promoting, encouraging, counseling, supporting, materially assisting, advancing, or facilitating activity or plots that can fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection" or "rebellion." And, as noted, in certain circumstances it might well include inaction supporting insurrection. Finally, giving "aid or comfort" arguably expands the range of acts of participation, support, and encouragement that qualify as triggering Section Three's disqualification.[422]

Who, then, engaged in such behavior?

a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation

Some applications of Section Three are factually straightforward. Others might involve potentially more difficult questions of fact and proof concerning the degree and nature of an individual's voluntary and intentional participation in (i) the overall plot and concrete efforts to overthrow the election and install Trump as president re-elect; (ii) the assembly, instigation, and incitement of a mob to attack the Capitol on January 6, 2021 to prevent certification of the election outcome; or (iii) the willful failure to take action to suppress the attack on Congress while it was in progress.

As discussed in Part II, above, judgments concerning the application of the legal standards of Section Three to specific individuals may and must be made by a variety of public actors—all those whose responsibilities call for application of the Constitution's criteria for eligibility to hold office. The ultimate judgment will rest with different actors and institutions in different circumstances: sometimes by state election officials; sometimes by presidential electors; sometimes by state and federal executive branch officials; sometimes by the respective houses of Congress or by state legislatures. In many cases, the judgment ultimately will fall to state and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. Everybody in such positions is bound to apply Section Three faithfully and enforce its commands rigorously.

That said, from our interpretation of Section Three's broad sweep, it is clear that at least two purported factual defenses are simply immaterial:

First, it is no defense that an individual might claim that his or her conduct does not constitute having engaged in or supported "insurrection" or "rebellion" because the election was in fact stolen—that is, that Trump in fact won the election—making it legitimate to "stop the steal." The problem is that the premise is simply false. Decisionmakers can and should act on the well settled factual understanding that Joe Biden won, and Donald Trump lost, the election of 2020.[423]

---

[422] See generally supra Part IV.A.

[423] See not only the January 6 Report, supra note 405, but also John Danforth, Benjamin Ginsburg, Thomas B. Griffith, David Hoppe, J. Michael Luttig, Michael W. McConnell, Theodore B. Olson &

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, it likewise is no defense that an individual believed (even if mistakenly) that the election had in fact been stolen, or believed that their insurrectionary conduct was somehow lawful. That one may have been deluded or deceived by disinformation does not excuse acts of insurrection or rebellion. And as the South's secession and the resulting Civil War illustrate, a bogus and unsuccessful constitutional theory does not excuse them either. In other words, there is no mistake-of-insurrection defense to Section Three.[424] Acts intentionally done as part of what is in fact and in law insurrection or rebellion are covered, irrespective of an individual's wrong subjective belief that no such insurrection or rebellion occurred, or the reasons for such wrong belief.[425]

b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office

The most politically explosive application of Section Three to the events of January 6, is at the same time the most straightforward. In our view, on the basis of the public record, former President Donald J. Trump is constitutionally disqualified from again being President (or holding any other covered office) because of his role in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 election and the events leading to the January 6 attack.

The case for disqualification is strong. There is abundant evidence that Trump deliberately set out to overturn the result of the 2020 presidential election result, calling it "stolen" and "rigged";[426] that Trump (with the assistance of others) pursued numerous schemes to effectuate this objective; that among these were efforts to alter the vote counts of several states by force, by fraud, or by intended intimidation of state election officials,[427] to pressure or persuade state legislatures and/or courts unlawfully to overturn state election results,[428] to assemble and induce others to submit bogus slates of competing state electors,[429] to persuade or pressure Congress to refuse to count electors' votes submitted by several states,[430] and finally, to pressure the

---

Gordon H. Smith, Lost, Not Stolen: The Conservative Case that Trump Lost and Biden Won the 2020 Presidential Election (2022), https://lostnotstolen.org.

[424] This is consistent with principles of mens rea that distinguish knowledge of what one is doing from knowledge of the proper legal characterization of what one is doing. See, e.g., Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. ___, at 4 n.2 (2023).

[425] Now what if the shoe were on the other foot? What if Trump had somehow succeeded in unlawfully holding apparent office after January 20, 2021? Would comparable actions by Biden supporters have constituted "insurrection"? We think not. The true facts matter. A rebellion against lawful government is rebellion, but acts of counter-insurgency against an attempted coup d'etat are not.

[426] And not that it matters, see supra Part IV.C.2.a, but it also appears that Trump knew that these accusations were false. See January 6 Report, supra note 405, 100-01, 103-04, 203, 213, 789.

[427] Id. at 202-203, 263-265; see also id. at 223-231,

[428] Id. at 296-300.

[429] Id. at 341-354.

[430] Id. at 431.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Vice President unconstitutionally to overturn state election results in his role of presiding over the counting of electors' votes.[431]

Leading up to January 6, Trump repeatedly solicited, suborned, and pressured Vice President Mike Pence to prevent the counting of the electoral votes in favor of President-elect Biden.[432] Not only that: Trump assembled a large crowd to march on the Capitol and intimidate Congress and the Vice President into complying with his wishes and thereby prevent the official counting of the votes of electors confirming Trump's defeat. Trump had announced on Twitter a protest to be held on January 6, 2021: "Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!"[433] According to testimony amassed by the House's January 6th Commission, Trump's supporters interpreted this as a call to arms, sometimes literally.[434]

Then there are the events of January 6 specifically. When January 6 arrived, Trump delivered an incendiary address at the White House Ellipse to the crowd of supporters he had effectively summoned to the Capitol to oppose what he had been calling the "steal" of the election. Trump reiterated his false claim that he had in fact won the election—"we won this election and we won it by a landslide"—but that the Democrats and the media had "stolen" the election and "rigged" a false outcome. "They rigged it like they've never rigged an election before," he charged. "Make no mistake, this election was stolen from you, from me and from the country. … This [is] the most corrupt election in the history, maybe of the world." The crowd was "gathered together in the heart of our nation's capital for one very, very basic and simple reason: To save our democracy." Trump called on the crowd to march on the Capitol. "Our country has had enough. We will not take it anymore and that's what this is all about. … We will stop the steal." He urged the assembled mass of thousands, some of whom Trump knew to be armed, to "fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore."[435]

Some might quibble that the speech is ambiguous.[436] Not all of Trump's rambling address called literally for the crowd to "fight." Some of his statements were

---

[431] Id. at 441-458.
[432] Id. at 441-458.
[433] Quoted in id. at 499.
[434] Id. at 499-540.
[435] For the quotations in this paragraph, see "Transcript of Trump's Speech at Rally Before US Capitol Riot," Associated Press, (Jan. 13, 2021), available at https://apnews.com/article/election-2020-joe-biden-donald-trumpcapitol-siege-media-e79eb5164613d6718e9f4502eb471f27. See also id. ("And again, most people would stand there at 9 o'clock in the evening and say, 'I want to thank you very much,' and they go off to some other life. But I said something is wrong here, something is really wrong, can't have happened, and we fight. We fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore.").
[436] See Michael Conklin, Capital Offense: Is Donald Trump Guilty of Inciting a Riot at the Capital?, 15 U. St. Thomas J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 483 (2022); see also Alan Z. Rozenshtein & Jed Handelsman Shugerman, January 6, Ambiguously Inciting Speech, and the Overt-Acts Rule, 37 Const. Comm. at 2-3, 20-21 (forthcoming 2023).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ambiguous and at one point he remarked that the crowd would be marching "peacefully and patriotically."[437] He never directly and literally called for attacking the Capitol or the Vice President. Much of what might be thought incitement to lawlessness was innuendo. Nonetheless, the general and specific message was that the election had been stolen; that a constitutional fraud of colossal proportions and cataclysmic consequence was in the process of being perpetrated on the nation; that the crowd needed to take "strong" and direct action to protect the country; and that immediate action was necessary to prevent Vice President Pence and Congress from ratifying the unconstitutional election of an illegitimate president and doing irreparable damage to the nation.

These ambiguities have given rise to a debate about whether Trump's speech did or did not cross the strict incitement threshold of Brandenburg v. Ohio.[438] It could well be that it did cross the line: Trump had deliberately assembled the mob of supporters, steeled them to action, knew that they were ready to take immediate action, and directed them to take it.[439] But the most important thing is that the Brandenburg question is beside the point. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact the legal standard of Brandenburg v. Ohio. It enacts the standards of participation in and support for "insurrection or rebellion," and it qualifies, modifies, or simply satisfies the First Amendment to the extent of any conflict between these constitutional principles.[440] First Amendment or no, the speech was part of Trump's participation in and support for the insurrection.

Finally, as events unfolded and the violence began, Trump maintained silence—and indeed deliberate indifference bordering on tacit encouragement—for what had by that time clearly become a forcible insurrection. For three hours after learning that his supporters had attacked the Capitol, Trump took no action to urge them to leave, despite being begged to do so by his advisors and despite having a constitutional duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.[441] During this same period, while the insurrection was in progress and after the Capitol had been breached, he again condemned Vice President Pence for not "hav[ing] the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution,"[442] a statement that the January 6th Commission concluded was "a statement that could

---

[437] Transcript, supra note 435.
[438] 395 U.S. 444 (1969); compare Conklin, supra note 436, with Alexander Tsesis, Incitement to Insurrection and the First Amendment, 57 Wake Forest L. Rev. 971 (2022); see also Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 3 n.3 (citing these and other sources and describing this disagreement).
[439] As Rozenshtein and Shugerman also emphasize, "Trump's speech was accompanied by several overt acts in furtherance of inciting an attack against the Capitol," which they argue takes it outside of the Brandenburg framework for that reason. Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 38.
[440] See supra Part III.D (arguing that Section Three is not limited by the free speech principles of the First Amendment).
[441] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577-606.
[442] Donald J. Trump, Tweets of January 6, 2021, available at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/tweets-january-6-2021

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

only further enrage the mob" and that in fact apparently did so.[443] Once Trump finally did—after several hours and with great reluctance—direct his supporters to leave the Capitol, they quickly dispersed.[444]

This culpable inaction—failing to intervene to stop an insurrection in progress, declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite having both the capacity and responsibility to intervene—is another crucial part of Trump's responsibility for the January 6 insurrection. Section Three reaches a broad range of conduct providing meaningful assistance to or support for acts of insurrection or rebellion performed by others, even quite passively.[445] Sitting by and doing nothing—declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite possessing the material capacity and legal responsibility to intervene—might qualify. Additionally and equally important, Trump's deliberate inaction renders his January 6 speech much more incriminating in hindsight, because it makes it even less plausible (if it was ever plausible) that the crowd's reaction was all a big mistake or misunderstanding.

Taking these events as a whole, and judging them under the standard of Section Three, it is unquestionably fair to say that Trump "engaged in" the January 6 insurrection through both his actions and his inaction. Officials—administrators, courts, legislators—whose responsibilities call upon them to apply Section Three properly and lawfully may, indeed must, take action within their powers to preclude Trump from holding future office,

Moreover, if one accepts the broader argument that the entire campaign to overthrow the results of the 2020 election was a form of constitutional rebellion,[446] then Trump's complicity is even more obvious—as the leader, motive force, and chief attempted perpetrator of that rebellion. Indeed, it would not be going too far to say that Trump, having previously sworn a constitutionally required oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States knowingly attempted to execute what, had it succeeded, would have amounted to a political coup d'etat against the Constitution and its system of elections and overturn the results of the constitutional process, in order to maintain himself in office as President contrary to law. If that itself constitutes "rebellion" against the Constitution, Trump's overall

---

[443] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577.

[444] Even as he urged peace in a video to the insurrectionists ("we can't play into the hands of these people. We have to have peace") he continued to express affection for them ("So go home. We love you. You're very special.") and to reiterate that the "election was stolen from us." Donald J. Trump, Videotaped Remarks During the Insurrection at the United States Capitol, at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/videotaped-remarks-during-the-insurrection-the-united-states-capitol. Later that night he tweeted: "These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!" Trump Tweets, supra note 442.

[445] Cf. notes 350-351 and accompanying text (describing the exclusion of Senator-elect Phillip Thomas).

[446] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

course of conduct disqualifies him under Section Three, even apart from the specific incitement to storm the Capitol on January 6.

The bottom line is that Donald Trump "engaged in" "insurrection or rebellion" and gave "aid or comfort" to others engaging in such conduct, within the original meaning of those terms as employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. If the public record is accurate, the case is not even close. He is no longer eligible to the office of Presidency, or any other state or federal office covered by the Constitution. All who are committed to the Constitution should take note and say so.

c. Beyond Trump

Donald Trump is at the top of the list of Section Three disqualifications, but the list does not end with him. The public record to date shows many others who are or may be connected to either the insurrection of January 6 or to a possible broader rebellion. These include government lawyers, executive branch officials, state officeholders, and even members of Congress. It is not for us to definitively say who all these may be—that, as we have said, is ultimately the responsibility and judgment of all those whose public duties call upon them to apply the Constitution's provisions concerning officeholder qualifications. But to see why this responsibility is urgent, consider the following categories:

Consider first those who marched with—who rose up with—the January 6 mob itself. Some of these folks, such as Couy Griffin of New Mexico, and Derrick Evans of West Virginia, have already been stripped of or resigned from their state offices, as Section Three contemplates.[447] They present the easiest case of "engag[ing] in . . . insurrection." Open and shut.

But many more cases follow. Consider those who were not part of the uprising itself, but who provided planning, encouragement, assistance, or other material support to those who rose up on January 6. Recent proceedings against U.S. Representatives Biggs, Gosar, and Greene, for instance, raise this as a serious possibility.[448] Pennsylvania State Senator Doug Mastriano—who is also a retired military officer and recent gubernatorial candidate—is said to have transported busloads of people to what became the insurrection and "was near the Capitol during the attack."[449] Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani worked extensively to overturn the election, and likewise riled the mob at the Ellipse on January 6.[450] Trump Chief of [447] See supra notes 85-88, 114-116 and accompanying text.

[448] See supra notes 68-80 and accompanying text.
[449] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 294. Such a claim was brought against Mastriano in federal court but dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. See supra note 89.
[450] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 536, 577, 581, 593-594, 608; https://www.rev.com/blog/transcripts/rudy-giuliani-speech-transcript-at-trumps-washington-d-c-rally-wants-trial-by-combat

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Staff (and former legislator) Mark Meadows planned and organized parts of the January 6 rally and apparently also "directed that [Giuliani] be allowed to speak" to the crowd.[451] These current and former officeholders are also subject to serious challenge under Section Three.

And if one entertains the argument that the entire course of conduct to overthrow the 2020 election was a broader rebellion,[452] the list just grows longer and longer. According to the public record: Former National Security Advisor General Michael Flynn proposed a plan to seize voting machines, invalidate election results, and rerun the vote in swing states won by Biden.[453] Would-be Trump electors (some of whom came from state political offices covered by Section Three) met on December 14 even in states where Biden's electors had been chosen, thus laying the groundwork for Trump's schemes.[454] Assistant Attorney General Jeffrey Clark sought to use the power and authority of the Department of Justice to fraudulently upend state election results.[455] At least one member of Congress pressed for the removal of more senior Department of Justice officials who opposed Clark's scheme, and lobbied for the appointment of Clark as Acting Attorney General, thus providing aid or comfort.[456] These officials, too, would be subject to challenge.

We could go on, but we have made the point: All persons who betrayed their earlier constitutional oaths by subsequently engaging in conduct (in any of a number of forms) directed at overthrowing the result of a lawful presidential election or supporting an attack on Congress and the Capitol, should face serious inquiry under Section Three. If they try to hold, retain, re-obtain, or seek public office, their eligibility for such positions should be stringently scrutinized. That inquiry should be conducted by every relevant level of government, from state election officials to the halls of Congress, to the courts throughout the country. In many cases we may not yet even know the full extent of the participation and support for acts of insurrection or rebellion in 2020-2021. But we must find out.

Taking Section Three seriously as part of our nation's operative, ongoing fundamental law means that such inquiries are constitutionally necessary. Indeed, they are constitutionally required. Taking Section Three seriously, as binding constitutional law, means faithfully ascertaining and fearlessly applying the objective, original meaning of its words and phrases, understood in their historical context, whether we like that meaning or not, and tirelessly following the logic of the text's meaning to its fair conclusions. The upshot of doing so, we think—the consequence of adhering to constitutional principle—may well be the disqualification from public office of a

---

[451] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 533, 535-536.
[452] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.
[453] January 6 Report, supra note 405, 222.
[454] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 352-353. Several of these would-be electors previously held state and local offices, and so are covered by Section Three.
[455] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 50.
[456] Id. at 50 (discussing actions of Pennsylvania U.S. Representative Scott Perry).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

great many more individuals than is generally recognized. In many cases, the inquiry has not yet begun. It is past time to start the reckoning.

Conclusion

Despite its long slumber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is alive and in force. It remains fully legally operative. It is constitutionally self-executing—that is, its command is automatically effective, directly enacted by the Constitution itself. And it is sweeping: It sweeps over earlier and inconsistent constitutional provisions. It sweeps in a broad range of conduct attacking the authority of the United States. And it sweeps in a broad category of former oath-swearing officeholders turned insurrectionists or aiders and comforters of insurrection or rebellion. It is enforceable by anybody whose duties provide occasion for judging legal eligibility for office. Indeed, each of these actors has a duty to faithfully apply Section Three. All possess legitimate constitutional interpretive authority to construe and apply this constitutional prohibition, many of them independently of other actors, including courts.

All of this has obvious, important, and immediate legal implications.

We the People should honor and vigorously enforce this important provision of our Constitution. It should not be allowed to become a dead letter from disuse. Its purpose, while inspired by specific historical events, is one of general and continuing importance. The idea that men and women who swore an oath to support the Constitution as government officials, but who betrayed that oath by engaging in or abetting acts of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, should be disqualified from important positions of government power in the future (unless forgiven by supermajorities of both houses of Congress) remains a valid, valuable, and we think vital precept. Disqualifying candidates and officials from office is not something to be done lightly, but Section Three was not enacted lightly. Section Three remains part of our Constitution, part of our nation's fundamental law. If we honor the Constitution, we must honor Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

That means that those who possess the power and duty to apply and enforce Section Three have a constitutional responsibility to do so, fairly but vigorously. If state election boards or secretaries of state determine that a candidate for state elective office or a candidate seeking to represent that state in Congress is constitutionally disqualified from holding that office, those state authorities should exercise the state-law powers they possess to remove ineligible candidates from the ballot. If the House or Senate determines that a person elected to serve as a member of such body is constitutionally disqualified from holding such a position, they should refuse to seat or expel that person. And if a candidate for President, or an already-elected President, is constitutionally disqualified from office by Section Three, then that disqualification should be enforced by state election officials, by electors, by Congress through the impeachment process, and by the Vice-President, cabinet and, Congress in carrying out the Twenty-fifth Amendment. In any and all these situations, and more, where the enforcement of Section Three's constitutional disqualifications is properly presented to the judiciary in a case over which a court possesses jurisdiction, it is the constitutional duty, province, and responsibility of federal and state judges exercising the judicial power to faithfully apply and enforce Section Three according to its terms.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No official should shrink from these duties. It would be wrong – indeed, arguably itself a breach of one's constitutional oath of office—to abandon one's responsibilities of faithful interpretation, application, and enforcement of Section Three. It is wrong to shrink on the pretext that some other officials may or should exercise their authority—as if one's own constitutional obligations cease to exist if others fail to act. And it is wrong to shrink from observing, and enforcing, the Constitution's commands on the premise that doing so might be unpopular in some quarters, or fuel political anger, or resentment, or opposition, or retaliation. The Constitution is not optional and Section Three is not an optional part of the Constitution.

Importantly, it is also wrong to shrink from applying Section Three on grounds of "democracy," whether on the premise that Section Three should be ignored or narrowly construed because it limits who voters may choose, or on the premise that only the voters should enforce Section Three. It is true, as we have said, that limiting democratic choice is not something to be done lightly, but it is something the Constitution does, and for serious reasons.[457] The Constitution cannot be overruled or disregarded by ordinary election results. (And we note that there is particular irony in invoking democracy to shrink from applying Section Three to the insurrectionists of 2020-2021, who refused to abide by election results and instead sought to overthrow them.)[458]

Finally, we believe it would be wrong for courts to refuse to decide cases, otherwise lawfully within their jurisdiction, concerning Section Three on the pretense that such matters are "political questions." Outside of certain exercises of power to exclude, expel, or impeach and try, committed to each House's judgment, Section Three is enforceable by the judiciary as well as by other officials.[459] Section Three's terms embody rules and standards, enforceable as any other constitutional provision

---

[457] See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 14-24 (arguing at length that "the democracy canon is a seductive but mistaken way of reading Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment," and that it "elevates a background constitutional principle in a way that is inconsistent with the text, purpose, and history of Section Three").

[458] See William Baude, The Real Enemies of Democracy, 109 Cal. L. Rev. 2407, 2418-20 (2021) ("The real enemies of democracy, at a more fundamental level, are those who try to ignore the rules of the game after they have already lost it. This past election, that means the real enemies of democracy were President Donald Trump and those who fought for him.").

[459] Supra note 95.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

is enforceable. There is no freestanding judicial power to abstain from enforcing the Constitution whenever doing so might be difficult or controversial.

We think that if these constitutional duties are taken seriously, there is a list of candidates and officials who must face judgment under Section Three. Former president Donald Trump is at the top of that list, but he is not the end of it. As we have said, it is not for us to say who all is disqualified by virtue of Section Three's constitutional rule. That is the duty and responsibility of many officials, administrators, legislators, and judges throughout the country. Where they are called on to decide eligibility to office, they are called on to enforce Section Three, applying the Constitution's legal standard to the facts before them in a given instance. Our point is to emphasize Section Three's continuing force, and broad sweep.

At all events, if a President or former President of the United States; a current or former officer of the federal executive branch; a Member or former Member of Congress; a current or former state legislator or state executive official; or a current or former federal or state court judge, planned, supported, assisted, encouraged, endorsed, or aided in a material way those who engaged in the insurrection of January 6, or otherwise knowingly and willfully participated in a broader rebellion against the constitutional system, such persons are constitutionally disqualified from office. In such situations, Section Three's constitutional disqualifications can, should, and must be carried out.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/12/2023 8:31:58 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Tracker
Attachments: 14A Litigation tracker (Oct. 12) .docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/11/2023 11:09:50 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order
Attachments: Castro v Federal Election Commission.pdf; Caplan v. Trump (Doc 017) 2023-08-31 Order Of Dismissal[88].pdf; Castro v. Oliver (Doc 005) 2023-09-18 Memorandum Opinion And Order To Show Cause.pdf; Clark v. Weber (Doc 020) 2023-10-02 Order To Show Cause As To Why The Complaint Should Not Be Dismissed For Lack Of Subject Matter Jurisdiction[74].pdf; Castro v. Warner (Doc 013) 2023-09-28 Proposed Findings And Recommendation.pdf; Castro v. Trump (Doc 033) 2023-06-26 Order Granting Def's MTD And Closing Case[20].pdf; Castro v. SC Election Commission (Doc 016) 203-09-27 Report And Recommendation.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather and Erik,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 2:51 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 2:46 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 1:33 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

Gearing up, see attached.

H

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2022 WL 17976630
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, District of Columbia.

John Anthony CASTRO, Plaintiff,
v.
FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION, Defendant.

Civil Action No.: 22-2176 (RC)
|
Signed December 6, 2022

Attorneys and Law Firms

John Anthony Castro, Mansfeld, TX, Pro Se.

Jacob Stephen Siler, Kevin Deeley, Federal Election Commission, Washington, DC, Shaina J. Ward, Washington, DC, for Defendant.

ORDER

GRANTING DEFENDANT'S PARTIAL MOTION TO DISMISS; DENYING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND/OR A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

RUDOLPH CONTRERAS, United States District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

1 Plaintiff John Castro files this pro se action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the Federal Election Commission ("FEC" or "Commission") concerning Donald J. Trump's candidacy for President of the United States. The Commission now moves to dismiss. For the reasons described below, the Court agrees with the FEC that Mr. Castro lacks standing to bring Count II, and accordingly denies Plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and/or a preliminary injunction. And because subsequent events have rendered Count I moot, the Court will also dismiss the Complaint in its entirety.

II. BACKGROUND

Mr. Castro is a U.S. citizen and an FEC-registered 2024 Republican primary presidential candidate. Compl. ¶ 8, ECF No. 1. On March 23, 2022, he filed an administrative complaint with the FEC demanding, among other things, that the agency declare Mr. Trump a "candidate" within the meaning of the Federal Election Campaign Act ("FECA") based on Mr. Trump's alleged campaign spending and the FEC's campaign finance rules. Id. ¶ 11. The Commission acknowledged the complaint the next day but did not act within its statutorily prescribed 120-day period. Id. ¶¶ 11–12. Pursuant to 52 U.S.C. § 30109(a)(8) and the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, Mr. Castro brought suit in this Court. Id. ¶¶ 2, 12. In his two-count complaint, Mr. Castro avers that the agency has unlawfully failed to: (1) require Mr. Trump to file a statement of candidacy, id. ¶¶ 79–83, and, supposing this occurs, (2) reject his statement of candidacy based on the Fourteenth Amendment's Disqualification Clause, id. ¶¶ 84–88. On November 15, 2022, Mr. Trump filed his statement of candidacy with the Commission, rendering Count I moot. See Donald J. Trump, FEC Form 2 (Nov. 15, 2022), https://docquery.fec.gov/cgi-bin/forms/P80001571/1661552/. The FEC seeks to dismiss Count II for lack of standing and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Def.'s Mem. of P. & A. Supp. Partial Mot. Dismiss at 10–15, ECF No. 14-1. At the same time, Mr. Castro moves for a temporary restraining order, or in the alternative, a preliminary injunction, enjoining the agency from accepting Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy. See Pl.'s Mot. for TRO and/or Prelim. Inj. at 1, ECF No. 17. The motions are ripe for decision.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

When considering a motion to dismiss, courts accept all material factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in plaintiffs' favor. See Am. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Co., 642 F.3d 1137, 1139 (D.C. Cir. 2011). However, courts must address jurisdiction as a "threshold matter," Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 94–95 (1998), and "[t]he burden of establishing any jurisdictional facts to support the exercise of the subject matter jurisdiction rests on the plaintiff," CEA Inst. v. Andre, 74 F. Supp. 3d 462, 465 (D.D.C. 2014); see also McBride v. Mnuchin, No. 19-cv-60, 2019 WL 3323412, at *2 (D.D.C. July 24, 2019) ("Before addressing the merits of a case, a court must confirm that it has subject matter jurisdiction."). Standing is "an essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III," Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992), and therefore is "a necessary 'predicate to any exercise of [Article III courts'] jurisdiction,' " Dominguez v. UAL Corp., 666 F.3d 1359, 1361 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (quoting Fla. Audubon Soc'y v. Bentsen, 94 F.3d 658, 663 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (en banc)). Accordingly, "[e]very plaintiff in federal court bears the burden of establishing the three elements that make up the 'irreducible constitutional minimum' of Article III standing: injury-in-fact, causation, and redressability." Id. at 1362. Standing is "not dispensed in gross"; rather, plaintiffs must show standing as to each claim. Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 734 (2008) (quoting Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 358 n.6 (1996)).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IV. ANALYSIS

2 The parties agree that Mr. Trump's filing of his statement of candidacy on November 15, 2022 moots Count I. See Pl.'s Mem. of P. & A. Supp. Mot. for TRO and/or Prelim. Inj. at 3, ECF No. 18; Def.'s Opp'n to TRO and/or Prelim. Inj. at 5, ECF No. 19. Count II, what remains, asks the Court to require the FEC to reject Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy on the basis that his alleged involvement in the events of January 6, 2021 at the U.S. Capitol bars him from running for President of the United States. Mr. Castro bases his theory on the Fourteenth Amendment's Disqualification Clause, which provides in full:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. Const., amend. XIV, § 3. The Court declines to reach the merits of Count II, however, because Mr. Castro fails to establish standing. Mr. Castro alleges that, as a result of the FEC's acceptance of Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy, he suffers a competitive injury because he himself is competing in the 2024 Republican presidential primary and vying for the same support and donations as Mr. Trump. Pl.'s Mem. P. & A. Opp'n Mot. to Dismiss at 16–17, ECF No. 15. Assuming, without deciding, that Mr. Castro's theory of injury is viable, he nonetheless fails the traceability and redressability requirements of standing.

First, Mr. Castro's alleged injury—having to compete with Mr. Trump—is not traceable to the Commission. Traceability requires "a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560; accord Kimelman v. Garland, 588 F. Supp. 3d 84, 87 (D.D.C. 2022). According to Mr. Castro, by accepting Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy, FEC Form 2, the Commission has confirmed Mr. Trump's eligibility to run for President, thereby creating competitive harm for Mr. Castro. But this erroneous idea —upon which Mr. Castro's entire case turns—is completely lacking in support. The FEC explains that it possesses "no authority" to "evaluate a prospective candidate's eligibility for federal office." Def.'s Mem. of P. & A. Supp. Partial Mot. Dismiss at 10. It represents that, under the FECA, Congress only gave the agency power to regulate federal campaign finance—that is, among other things, "the raising, spending, and disclosing of campaign funds"—and not to determine who is constitutionally eligible to run for office. Id. at 11; see generally 52 U.S.C. §§ 30101–30126. Mr. Castro has not pointed to a statute or regulation indicating otherwise.

Nothing in the statement of candidacy, FEC Form 2, lends credence to Mr. Castro's belief that it plays a role in determining Mr. Trump's eligibility to run for office. The statement of candidacy is a two-page form that an individual must file with the FEC for the purposes of designating a principal campaign committee within "15 days after becoming a candidate." 52 U.S.C. § 30102(e)(1); 11 C.F.R. § 101.1; see, e.g., Donald J. Trump, FEC Form 2 (Nov. 15, 2022), https://docquery.fec.gov/cgi-bin/forms/P80001571/1661552. A "candidate," for purposes of the FECA, is simply any "individual [who] has received contributions aggregating in excess of $5,000 or has made expenditures aggregating in excess of $5,000" or given another consent to do so on their behalf (where such person has received or made such contributions or expenditures). 52 U.S.C. § 30101(2); 11 C.F.R. § 100.3(a). Mr. Castro has failed to meet his burden to show the Court how the Commission's handling of Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy has any bearing on Mr. Castro's alleged injury.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3 Second, and relatedly, Mr. Castro's alleged injury is not redressable. Because "the Commission has no jurisdiction to reject Trump's candidacy filings," Def.'s Reply at 4, ECF No. 16, the Court has no authority to order the agency to violate the law, see Long Term Care Pharmacy All. v. Leavitt, 530 F. Supp. 2d 173, 185 (D.D.C. 2008) ("Plaintiffs cannot establish standing by requesting relief that the Court lacks the authority to grant[.]"); see also Berg v. Obama, 574 F. Supp. 2d 509, 525 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (explaining that plaintiff lacked standing because he could not "identif[y] a specific provision of the [FECA] that entitle[d]" him to relief as "[i]t seem[ed] clear that the [FECA] does not address the sort of corruption that Plaintiff allege[d]"), aff'd, 586 F.3d 234 (3d Cir. 2009).

Even were the Court somehow able to force the Commission to reject Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy, Mr. Castro has not shown how this would cure his alleged injury. If the FEC cannot confer constitutional legitimacy to Mr. Trump's candidacy by accepting his statement of candidacy, the Court fails to see how rejection of the same would stop Mr. Trump from running his campaign and competing against Mr. Castro. See Def.'s Opp'n to TRO and/or Prelim. Inj. at 2 ("The filing of a declaration of candidacy ... is not a conferral by the Commission of authorization to run for office or raise campaign funds."). Here, too, Mr. Castro has failed to carry his burden. See The Wilderness Soc. v. Norton, 434 F.3d 584, 590 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ("The redressability inquiry poses a simple question: '[I]f plaintiffs secured the relief they sought, ... would [it] redress their injury'?" (quoting Mountain States Legal Found. v. Glickman, 92 F.3d 1228, 1233 (D.C. Cir. 1996)).

To summarize, it is undisputed that Count I is moot. The Court dismisses Count II because Plaintiff lacks standing. Because the Court concludes that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over this suit, it accordingly denies Plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order and/or a preliminary injunction.

It is hereby:

ORDERED that Defendant's partial motion to dismiss (ECF No. 14) is GRANTED; and it is ORDERED that Plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order and/or a preliminary injunction (ECF No. 17) is DENIED; and it is ORDERED that the Complaint is dismissed in its entirety.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2022 WL 17976630

End of Document

© 2023 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Document is Judicial Watch Viewing Michigan Ford

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA

CASE NO. 23-CV-61628-ROSENBERG

LAWRENCE A. CAPLAN,
BARRY BUTIN, and MICHAEL STRIANESE,

Plaintiffs,

v.

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Defendant.
_____/

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

THIS CAUSE is before the Court on the Amended Complaint of Plaintiffs, Lawrence A. Caplan, Barry Butin, and Michael Strianese, against Defendant, Donald J. Trump. DE 7. Plaintiffs ask the Court to enter a declaratory judgment barring Defendant from (1) seeking the office of President of the United States and (2) participating in the Florida Presidential primary election in 2024. Id. at 1, 10. Plaintiffs assert that Defendant is ineligible to serve as President under the Fourteenth Amendment because of his alleged participation in events that took place at the United States Capitol on January 6, 2021, and related activities. Id. at 5-6. The Court concludes that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction and dismisses the Complaint.

Under the federal Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a), the Court has "substantial discretion in deciding whether to declare the rights of litigants." Wilton v. Seven Falls Co., 515 U.S. 277, 286 (1995). "If a district court, in the sound exercise of its judgment, determines after a complaint is filed that a declaratory judgment will serve no useful purpose, it cannot be incumbent upon that court to proceed to the merits before staying or dismissing the action." Id. at 288; see also Cardinal Chem. Co. v. Morton Int'l, Inc., 508 U.S. 83, 95 n.17 (1993) ("[T]he Declaratory Judgment Act affords the district court some discretion in determining whether or not to exercise that jurisdiction, even when it has been established."); Nat'l Trust Ins. Co. v. S. Heating & Cooling, Inc., 12 F.4th 1278, 1281 (11th Cir. 2021) ("As the permissive text suggests, a district court has discretion in deciding whether to entertain an action under the Act."); Old Republic Union Ins. Co. v. Tillis Trucking Co., Inc., 124 F.3d 1258, 1260 (11th Cir. 1997) (district court is authorized in its discretion to dismiss an action seeking a declaratory judgment). As explained below, the Court exercises its discretion to dismiss the Amended Complaint for lack of jurisdiction because Plaintiffs lack standing.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This Court has "an independent obligation to determine whether subject matter jurisdiction exists, even in the absence of a challenge from any party." Ruhrgas AG v. Marathon Oil Co., 526 U.S. 574, 583 (1999); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(3) ("If the court determines at any time that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction, the court must dismiss the action."); Univ. of S. Ala. v. Am. Tobacco Co., 168 F.3d 405, 410 (11th Cir. 1999) ("[I]t is well settled that a federal court is obligated to inquire into subject matter jurisdiction sua sponte whenever it may be lacking.").

Inquiry into standing "is an essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). Standing "is a threshold jurisdictional question which must be addressed prior to and independent of the merits of a party's claims." Bochese v. Town of Ponce Inlet, 405 F.3d 964, 974 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 102 (1998)). Thus, this Court has jurisdiction over a case only if the plaintiff has standing to sue. See Kerchner v. Obama, 612 F.3d 204, 207 (3d Cir. 2010). "In the absence of standing, a court is not free to opine in an advisory capacity about the merits of a plaintiff's claims, and the court is powerless to continue." CAMP Legal Def. Fund., Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 451 F.3d 1257, 1269 (11th Cir. 2006) (internal citation and quotation omitted).

"A generalized interest of all citizens in constitutional governance does not suffice to confer standing on one such citizen." Sibley v. Obama, 866 F. Supp. 2d 17, 20 (D.D.C. 2012) (citing additional cases). To have standing, a plaintiff must show he has a "personal stake" in the alleged dispute and that the injury is "particularized" to him. Id. (quoting Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 819 (1997) ("We have consistently stressed that a plaintiff's complaint must establish that he has a 'personal stake' in the alleged dispute, and that the alleged injury suffered is particularized as to him."). "[E]ven in a proceeding which he prosecutes for the benefit of the public . . . [the plaintiff] must generally aver an injury peculiar to himself, as distinguished from the great body of his fellow citizens." Lance v. Coffman, 549 U.S. 437, 440 (2007) (quoting Tyler v. Judges of Court of Registration, 179 U.S. 405, 406 (1900)).

Document is Judicial Watch Viewer Michigan Form

Here, Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge Defendant's qualifications for seeking the Presidency, as the injuries alleged are not cognizable and not particular to them. Plaintiffs allege that they have standing because Plaintiff Caplan has actively participated in the last twelve Presidential elections, voted for both Republicans and Democrats, is a Florida resident and United States citizen, is an attorney and member of various courts, and has never been sanctioned. DE 1 at 2. Plaintiffs further allege that Plaintiff Butin is a Florida resident and United States citizen and Plaintiff Strianese is a Nevada resident and United States citizen. Id. Plaintiffs allege they will suffer injury if Defendant is allowed to run for President and prevail when he could be disqualified or removed from office. Id. at 2-3. However, an individual citizen does not have standing to challenge whether another individual is qualified to hold public office. See, e.g., Kerchner, 612 F.3d at 207; Berg v. Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 239 (3d Cir. 2009).

In Berg, the plaintiff, an attorney representing himself, filed a complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in district court before the 2008 Presidential election, alleging that then-candidate Barack Obama was ineligible to run for President because he was not a "natural born citizen" within the meaning of Article II. Berg, 586 F.3d at 237. The district court observed that "[s]tanding has been a consistent barrier to lower courts hearing generalized, undifferentiated claims by voters and citizens," and noted various cases in which citizens attempted to challenge a Presidential candidate's eligibility for office or other governmental actions but lacked standing. Berg v. Obama, 574 F. Supp. 2d 509, 517 (E.D. Pa. 2008) (citing, e.g. Ex parte Levitt, 302 U.S. 633 (1937) (per curiam) (citizen and member of Supreme Court bar "merely a general interest common to all members of the public" and lacked standing to challenge appointment and confirmation of Supreme Court Justice)); Jones v. Bush, 122 F. Supp. 2d 713, 716-18 (N.D. Tex. 2000) (voters did not have standing to assert a Twelfth Amendment violation that allegedly infringed on their right to cast meaningful votes, and court explained that "plaintiffs conspicuously fail to demonstrate how they, as opposed to the general voting population, will feel its effects."); Hollander v. McCain, 566 F. Supp. 2d 63, 69 (D.N.H. 2008) (voters lacked standing to challenge Senator John McCain's eligibility for President and to exclude him from the Presidential primaries, and court stated that "voters have no standing to complain about the participation of an ineligible candidate in an election.")). The court concluded that an alleged injury "stemming from a presidential candidate's failure to satisfy the eligibility requirements of the Natural Born Citizen Clause is not concrete or particularized enough to constitute an injury in fact sufficient to satisfy Article III standing." Berg, 574 F. Supp. 2d at 518.

Document is Judicial Watch Vault Michigan Proof

The Third Circuit affirmed the district court's rulings in Berg and reiterated that the plaintiff "suffered no injury particularized to him" and, therefore, lacked standing. Berg, 586 F.3d at 239. Courts throughout the United States have uniformly concluded that citizens do not have standing to bring lawsuits challenging a candidate's eligibility for national office. See, e.g., Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 778, 780-84 (9th Cir. 2011) (group of military personnel, state representatives, political candidates, and individual citizens did not have standing to challenge President Obama's eligibility to hold office); Chapman v. Obama, 719 F. App'x 13 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (per curiam) ("The district court correctly concluded that appellant lacked standing to challenge President Barack Obama's qualifications for holding office."); Const. Ass'n Inc. by Rombach v. Harris, No. 20-cv-2379, 2021 WL 4442870, at *2-3 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2021) (finding plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge Vice President Kamala Harris' eligibility for office and dismissing case); Christie v. President of the United States, 532 F. App'x 88, 89 (3d Cir. 2013) (plaintiff lacked standing to assert claims that President committed treason); Fischer v. Cruz, No. 16-cv-1224, 2016 WL 1383493, at *2-3 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 7, 2016) (finding plaintiff lacked standing to challenge Senator Ted Cruz's eligibility for President and citing additional cases dismissed for lack of standing).

Document is Judicial Watch Vault Michigan Ford

Further, at least two courts have concluded that citizens attempting to disqualify individuals from participating in elections or from holding office based on the January 6, 2021 events at the United States Capitol lacked standing. See, e.g., Stencil v. Johnson, 605 F. Supp. 3d 1109 (E.D. Wis. 2022). In Stencil, the plaintiffs sought a declaratory judgment that three members of Wisconsin's Congressional delegation were ineligible to serve under the Fourteenth Amendment because their participation in the January 6 attack constituted an insurrection against the United States. Id. at 1112-13. Among other things, the court determined that the plaintiffs lacked standing and explained that "[e]very citizen and voter could claim to have suffered the same injury as the plaintiffs here, which amounts to nothing more than engaging in political advocacy against candidates for office or issue advocacy against the views the candidates hold. The relief that the plaintiffs seek would no more directly and tangibly benefit them than it would the public at large." Id. at 1117. See also Hill v. Mastriano, No. 22-2464, 2022 WL 16707073, at *1 (3d Cir. Nov. 4, 2022) (plaintiff seeking declaratory judgment disqualifying defendant from running for governor based on January 6, 2021 events lacked standing, rendering claim subject to dismissal). The Hill court also noted that "the appropriate process for testing title to public office" is a writ of quo warranto, which must be filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and may only be filed by the sovereign or a representative thereof. See id. at *2; D.C. Code § 16-3503; Drake, 664 F.3d at 784-85.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiffs in this case similarly lack standing and, thus, this Court lacks jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Court exercises its discretion under the Declaratory Judgment Act, along with its obligation to examine its own jurisdiction, to dismiss this case.

Based on the foregoing, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. The Clerk of the Court is instructed to CLOSE THIS CASE. All pending motions are DENIED AS MOOT and all deadlines are TERMINATED.

DONE and ORDERED in Chambers, West Palm Beach, Florida, this 31st day of August, 2023.

Robin L. Rosenberg

ROBIN L. ROSENBERG
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Copies furnished to Counsel of Record

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO

JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO,

Plaintiff,

v. Civ. No. 23-766 KK/GJF

MAGGIE TOULOUSE OLIVER and DONALD JOHN TRUMP,

Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

THIS MATTER is before the Court on pro se Plaintiff's (1) Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief [ECF 1] ("Complaint") and (2) Motion by Pro Se Litigant to Obtain Electronic Case Filing Rights [ECF 2] ("Motion").

I. THE COMPLAINT

Plaintiff is a Republican primary presidential candidate for the 2024 United States presidential election. He alleges that Defendant Trump is ineligible to pursue and hold any public office in the United States pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution for providing aid and comfort to the participants in the January 6, 2021, insurrection. See Compl. [ECF 1] at 9–11. Plaintiff seeks declaratory judgments and an injunction against Defendant Toulouse Oliver, New Mexico Secretary of State, "to prevent the acceptance and/or processing of any ballot access documentation of Defendant Donald John Trump for both the primary election and general election." Id. at 12, ¶ 18. Plaintiff alleges that, as a "political competitor," he is suffering irreparable injuries "because Trump, who is constitutionally ineligible to hold office, is siphoning off votes and contributions." Id. at 35, ¶ 103.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. DECLARATORY RELIEF

Plaintiff seeks the following declaratory judgments:

(i) "whether Trump is constitutionally eligible to pursue and/or hold the Office of the Presidency of the United States on the factual assertion that he provided aid or comfort to the January 6 Insurrectionists;"

(ii) "whether, if Trump was found to have provided aid or comfort to the January 6 Insurrectionists, Castro has the legal right to enjoin Trump from campaigning for the Presidency since that would violate Section 3 of the 14th Amendment, FECA, and/or constitute knowingly fraudulent misrepresentation regarding eligibility;"

(iii) "whether [Plaintiff] can secure an injunction to prevent the unconstitutional act of Trump submitting a state ballot access application. In other words, whether the Court can issue an injunction preventing Trump from engaging in the unconstitutional act of submitting a state ballot access application since that would be violative of his disqualification from public office pursuant to Section 3 of the 14th Amendment;"

(iv) "whether [Plaintiff] has standing and the right to secure an injunction to prevent individual state election authorities from accepting and processing Trump's state ballot access application;"

(v) "whether [Plaintiff] would have standing and the right to secure an injunction against the Republican Party to prevent his formal nomination at the Republican National Convention if Trump won the primary election;" and

(vi) "whether [Plaintiff], having declared and verified his intention to be a write-in candidate for the general election if he is unsuccessful in securing the nomination of the Republican Party, would have standing and the right to secure an injunction against the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies preventing the inauguration of Trump if Trump won the general election." Compl. at 22-24.

The Court orders Plaintiff to show cause why the Court should exercise its discretion and entertain Plaintiff's requests for declaratory judgments:

> Whether a district court has discretion to entertain a suit for declaratory judgment does not depend solely on the jurisdictional basis of the suit. As the Supreme Court stated in Wilton v. Seven Falls Co., "district courts possess discretion in determining whether . . . to entertain an action under the Declaratory Judgment Act, even when the suit otherwise satisfies subject matter jurisdictional prerequisites." 515 U.S.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 277, 282 (1995) (emphasis added). This is because the Declaratory Judgment Act itself is "an enabling Act, which confers a discretion on the courts," regardless of the jurisdictional bases upon which the suit is brought. Id. at 287 (quotation omitted).

United States v. City of Las Cruces, 289 F.3d 1170, 1180–81 (10th Cir. 2002); 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) (Declaratory Judgment Act providing that district courts "may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration" (emphasis added)). In determining whether to accept jurisdiction in a declaratory judgment action, the Court should ask:

> [1] whether a declaratory action would settle the controversy; [2] whether it would serve a useful purpose in clarifying the legal relations at issue; [3] whether the declaratory remedy is being used merely for the purpose of "procedural fencing" or "to provide an arena for a race to res judicata"; [4] whether use of a declaratory action would increase friction between our federal and state courts and improperly encroach upon state jurisdiction; and [5] whether there is an alternative remedy which is better or more effective.

State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Mhoon, 31 F.3d 979, 983 (10th Cir. 1994) (quoting Allstate Ins. Co. v. Green, 825 F.2d 1061, 1063 (6th Cir. 1987)).

III. INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

"Plaintiff John Anthony Castro asks this Court to issue an injunction preventing Defendant Secretary of State from accepting and/or processing Defendant Donald John Trump's ballot access documentation, including, but not limited to, nominating papers and nominating petitions." Compl. at 11, ¶ 16. It appears Plaintiff is seeking a temporary restraining order. See Compl. at 34, ¶ 99 (stating: "The court may issue a temporary restraining order").

> The court may issue a temporary restraining order without written or oral notice to the adverse party or its attorney only if:
>
> > (A) specific facts in an affidavit or a verified complaint clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition; and
> >
> > (B) the movant's attorney certifies in writing any efforts made to give notice and the reasons why it should not be required.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

. . . .

> The Court may issue a preliminary injunction or a temporary restraining order only if the movant gives security in an amount that the court considers proper to pay the costs and damages sustained by any party found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1) and (c). Plaintiff has not certified in writing any efforts he has made to give notice to Defendants or the reasons why notice should not be required. Plaintiff also has not given any security and has not offered any reasons regarding what amount of security is proper.

The Court orders Plaintiff to show cause why the Court should not dismiss his request for a temporary restraining order for failure to comply with Rule 65(b)(1)(B) and (c).

IV. DEFENDANT DONALD JOHN TRUMP

The Complaint states: "Defendant Donald John Trump is a nominal defendant." Compl. at 8, ¶ 5; see also Party (2), Black's Law Dictionary (9th ed. 2009) (defining a "nominal party" as "[a] party to an action who has no control over it and no financial interest in its outcome; esp., a party who has some immaterial interest in the subject matter of a lawsuit and who will not be affected by any judgment"). It appears that Defendant Trump is more than a nominal party because Defendant Trump has an interest that could be affected by the Court's judgment. See Compl. at 12, ¶ 18 (Plaintiff seeks an injunction against Defendant Toulouse Oliver, New Mexico Secretary of State, "to prevent the acceptance and/or processing of any ballot access documentation of Defendant Donald John Trump for both the primary election and general election"). Furthermore, the Complaint does not contain factual allegations showing that the Court has personal jurisdiction over Defendant Trump. See Dental Dynamics, LLC v. Jolly Dental Group, LLC, 946 F.3d 1223, 1228 (10th Cir. 2020) (plaintiff bears burden of establishing personal jurisdiction).

The Court orders Plaintiff to show cause why the Court should not dismiss this case for lack of personal jurisdiction over Defendant Trump. See Fed. Civ. P. 19(b) ("If a person who is required to be joined if feasible cannot be joined, the court must determine whether, in equity and good conscience, the action should proceed among the existing parties or should be dismissed").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

V. THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND THE JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Plaintiff seeks declaratory judgments regarding his legal relationships with the Republican Party and the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies. See Compl. at 23 (seeking declarations whether Plaintiff has standing to enjoin the Republican Party from nominating Trump and to enjoin the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies preventing the inauguration of Trump). The Republican Party and the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies are not parties to this action.

The Court orders Plaintiff to show cause why the Court should entertain Plaintiff's requests for declaratory judgments regarding the Republican Party and the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies given that they are not Defendants in this action and Plaintiff has not shown that the Court has subject matter and personal jurisdiction to enjoin The Republican Party and the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

VI. RECUSAL OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICE CLARENCE THOMAS

It appears that Plaintiff may be seeking an order from this Court requiring that United States Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas recuse from any appeal of this case to the United States Supreme Court. After providing a definition of "insurrection" to be "an act or instance of revolting against civil authority or an established government," Plaintiff states: "This would apply to the wife of United States Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, Virginia Thomas, requiring Justice Thomas' mandatory recusal under 28 U.S.C. § 455, which Plaintiff asserts herein to preserve for appeal." Compl. at 26-27, ¶ 71.

The Court orders Plaintiff, to the extent he seeks an order requiring recusal of Justice

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Thomas, to show cause why the Court should not dismiss Plaintiff's request for lack of jurisdiction.

VII. MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE ELECTRONICALLY

Plaintiff asks the Court for permission to participate in electronic case filing in this case, asserting that he has reviewed the requirements for e-filing and has access to the technology necessary to e-file successfully. See Mot. [ECF 2] at 1.

The Court grants Plaintiff permission to file electronically in this case only. See Guide for Pro Se Litigants at 13, District of New Mexico (October 2022) ("approval to electronically file documents within a case must be granted by the presiding judge for each case in which the pro se litigant wishes to file using their CM/ECF account"). The Court will revoke permission to file electronically if Plaintiff abuses his electronic filing privilege or fails to comply with the rules and procedures in the District of New Mexico's Guide for Pro Se Litigants and the District of New Mexico's CM/ECF Administrative Procedures Manual. Account registration forms, procedure manuals, and other information can be obtained at the Court's website at http://www.nmd.uscourts.gov/filing-information. This Order only grants Plaintiff permission to participate in CM/ECF; Plaintiff is responsible for registering to become a participant. See CM/ECF Administrative Procedures Manual, District of New Mexico (Revised January 2021).

VIII. CONCLUSION

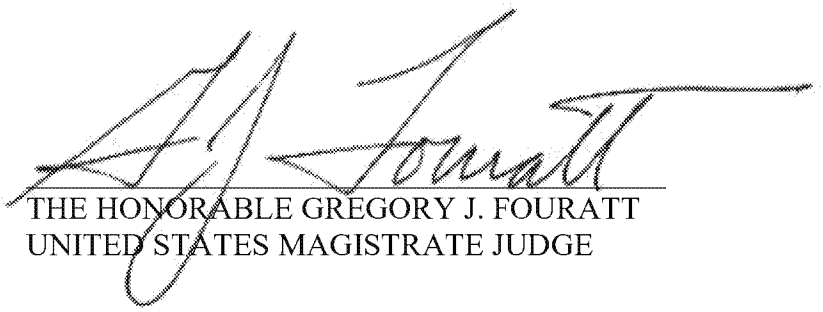
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that:

(1) Plaintiff shall, pursuant to Sections II through VII above, and no later than October 10, 2023, show cause why the Court should not dismiss Plaintiff's claims. Failure to timely show cause may result in dismissal of this case.

(2) Plaintiff's Motion File Electronically [ECF 2] is GRANTED.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SO ORDERED.



THE HONORABLE GREGORY J. FOURATT
UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

CIVIL MINUTES – GENERAL

Case No. 2:23-CV-07489-DOC-DFMx Date: October 2, 2023

Title: A.W. CLARK V. SHIRLEY WEBER

PRESENT:

THE HONORABLE DAVID O. CARTER, JUDGE

Karlen Dubon	Not Present
Courtroom Clerk	Court Reporter
ATTORNEYS PRESENT FOR PLAINTIFF: None Present	ATTORNEYS PRESENT FOR DEFENDANT: None Present

PROCEEDINGS (IN CHAMBERS): ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE AS TO WHY THE COMPLAINT SHOULD NOT BE DISMISSED FOR LACK OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

This matter is before the Court sua sponte. Plaintiff A.W. Clark ("Plaintiff" or "Clark") filed their Complaint ("Compl.") (Dkt. 1) on September 9, 2023. Since then, Plaintiff has filed a Motion for a Preliminary Injunction (Dkt. 13), and Defendant Secretary of State Shirley Weber ("Defendant" or "the Secretary") filed a Motion for Order for Briefing Schedule (Dkt. 18). Before the Court can consider these motions and permit this case to proceed, it must be assured that it has subject matter jurisdiction.

"[F]ederal courts have an independent obligation to ensure that they do not exceed the scope of their jurisdiction, and therefore they must raise and decide jurisdictional questions…" Henderson ex rel. Henderson v. Shinseki, 562 U.S. 428, 434 (2011). "[S]tanding is an aspect of subject matter jurisdiction." Fleck and Assocs., Inc. v. City of Phoenix, 471 F.3d 1100, 1106 n.4 (9th Cir. 2006). Federal courts have consistently held that voters lack standing to enforce Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment when the voter does not allege that they suffered a particularized injury. See Caplan v. Trump, No. 23-CV-61628-ROSENBERG (S.D. Fla. Aug. 31, 2023) (collecting cases). Here, the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Muckrock FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

CIVIL MINUTES – GENERAL

Case No. 2:23-CV-07489-DOC-DFMx Date: October 2, 2023

Complaint does not allege that Plaintiff will suffer an injury unique from other voters if the Court does not grant their requested relief. See Compl. ¶¶ 6, 105 (alleging that Plaintiff "is an eligible voter" and that they, like all voters, have a "right to vote for a candidate for president who is constitutionally eligible to be president").

Therefore, Plaintiff is ORDERED TO SHOW CAUSE in writing, not to exceed 12 pages within fourteen (14) days of this Order why this action should not be dismissed sua sponte for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Defendant may submit a response in the same period. Plaintiff's filing a first amended complaint will be deemed a sufficient response to this Order. All filing deadlines in this matter are hereby CONTINUED until twenty-one (21) days after Plaintiff responds to this Order.

The Clerk shall serve this minute order on the parties.

MINUTES FORM 11 Initials of Deputy Clerk: kdu

CIVIL-GEN

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan Page

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA
CHARLESTON DIVISION

JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO,

Plaintiff, 2:23-CV-00598

vs.

SECRETARY OF STATE
ANDREW WARNER, and DONALD JOHN TRUMP,

Defendants.

PROPOSED FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION

Pending before the Court is the Emergency Application for a Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits (ECF No. 9) filed on September 20, 2023 by the Plaintiff, who is proceeding pro se. By Order entered on September 11, 2023, this matter was referred to the undersigned United States Magistrate Judge for the submission of proposed findings of fact and a recommendation for disposition pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B). (ECF No. 6) Having reviewed the Plaintiff's Emergency Application (ECF No. 9) and pertinent legal authority, the undersigned has concluded that the Emergency Application should be DENIED for the reasons stated infra:

Factual And Procedural Background

On September 7, 2023, the Plaintiff filed his Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief asserting that he "intends to either appear on the 2024 Republican primary ballot in this state or to file documentation to be a formally recognized write-in candidate in both the primary and general elections" and has filed the instant suit seeking "declaratory judgment that Defendant Donald John Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the 14th

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Amendment" and injunctive relief "against Defendant Secretary of State to prevent the acceptance and/or processing of any ballot access documentation of Defendant Donald John Trump for both the primary election and general election." (ECF No. 1 ¶¶ 18-19).[1]

In the pending Emergency Application, the Plaintiff asks this Court to enjoin the Defendant Secretary of State from accepting . . . Defendant Donald John Trump's declaration of candidacy . . . ." and hold a preliminary injunction hearing, consolidated with a trial on the merits, to take place on or before September 29, 2023. (ECF No. 9 at 1-2)

Neither Defendant has answered or responded to the Plaintiff's pleadings at this time.[2]

The Standard[3]

Rule 65(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure sets forth the limited circumstances under which a temporary restraining order can be granted as follows:

> A temporary restraining order may be granted without written or oral notice to the adverse party or that party's attorney only if (1) it clearly appears from specific facts shown by affidavit or by the verified complaint that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the applicant before the adverse party or that

[1] The undersigned notes that the Plaintiff has filed the same or similar complaints in numerous other states. See, e.g., Castro v. Toulouse Oliver, C/A No. 23-766 KK/GJF, 2023 WL 6065304 (D.N.M. Sept. 18, 2023). The Plaintiff also previously filed suit against the Federal Election Commission ("FEC"), asking the court in part "to require the FEC to reject Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy on the basis that his alleged involvement in the events of January 6, 2021 . . . ." Castro v. Fed. Election Comm'n, No. CV 22-2176 (RC), 2022 WL 17976630, at *2 (D.D.C. Dec. 6, 2022), aff'd, No. 22-5323, 2023 WL 2899541 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 10, 2023). The Plaintiff's complaint was dismissed for lack of standing, in addition to other reasons. See id.

[2] A notice of appearance of counsel has just recently been filed for the Defendant Secretary of State (ECF No. 12), however, no appearance has been made on behalf of the Defendant Trump.

[3] As noted above in FN. 1, the Plaintiff has filed the same or similar complaints in other districts, including one in the sister state of South Carolina located in this Circuit. Furthermore, the Plaintiff has filed a nearly identical motion in the South Carolina matter as the one presently pending before the undersigned. As a result, the undersigned has the benefit of reviewing the Report and Recommendation filed by United States Magistrate Judge Shiva V. Hodges in the matter of Castro v. SC Elections Commission, et. al. Case No. 3:23-4501-MGL-SVH (ECF No. 16). Judge Hodges' research, legal analysis, findings, and recommendations are relevant and persuasive in the matter pending before the undersigned. Therefore, the undersigned has taken the liberty of adopting much of Judge Hodges' research, legal analysis, findings, and recommendations in this filing. For stylistic reasons, the undersigned has not given attribution to Judge Hodges' work in each instance in which the undersigned has quoted verbatim from her Report and Recommendation, but does wish to give her credit, by this footnote, that the undersigned has taken the liberty of using Judge Hodges' scholarship in formulating this Proposed Findings and Recommendation.

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> party's attorney can be heard in opposition, and (2) the applicant's attorney certifies to the court in writing the efforts, if any, which have been made to give the notice and the reasons supporting the claim that notice should not be required.

Fed.R. Civ. P. 65(b). Rule 65(a) provides that a court may issue a preliminary injunction only on notice to the adverse party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a). The Fourth Circuit explained the different functions of temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions in Hoechst Diafoil Company v. Nan Ya Plastics Corporation, 174 F.3d 411, 422 (4th Cir. 1999), as follows:

> While a preliminary injunction preserves the status quo pending a final trial on the merits, a temporary restraining order is intended to preserve the status quo only until a preliminary injunction hearing can be held: '[U]nder federal law [temporary restraining orders] should be restricted to serving their underlying purpose of preserving the status quo and preventing irreparable harm just so long as is necessary to hold a hearing, and no longer.' Granny Goose, 415 U.S. at 439.

"A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that [1] he is likely to succeed on the merits, [2] that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, [3] that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and [4] that an injunction is in the public interest." Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20, 129 S.Ct. 365, 374, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008)(emphasis added); see also, Leaders of a Beautiful Struggle v. Baltimore Police Dep't, 2 F.4th 330, 339 (4th Cir. 2021). [A]ll four requirements must be satisfied." The Real Truth About Obama, Inc. v. Federal Election Commission, 575 F.3d 342, 346 (4th Cir. 2009), judgment vacated on other grounds, 559 U.S. 1089, 130 S.Ct. 2371, 176 L.Ed.2d 764 (2010).[4] The Fourth Circuit has explained that "[b]ecause a preliminary injunction affords, on a temporary basis, the relief that can be granted permanently after trial, the party seeking the preliminary injunction must demonstrate by 'a clear showing' that, among other things, it is likely to succeed on the merits at trial." Id. Furthermore, the Supreme Court "rejected a standard that allowed the plaintiff to demonstrate only a 'possibility' of irreparable harm because that standard was 'inconsistent with our characterization of injunctive relief as an extraordinary remedy that may be awarded upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief." Id. (citing Winters, 55 U.S. at 22, 129 S.Ct. at 375-376.) Thus, a Court may not issue a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order "simply to eliminate a possibility of a remote future injury." Kates v. Packer, 2014 WL 1218905, * 3 (M.D.Pa. March 24, 2014)(quoting Holiday Inns of America, Inc. v. B&B Corp., 409 F.2d 614, 618 (3rd Cir. 1969)("The requisite for injunctive relief has been characterized as a 'clear showing of immediate irreparable injury,' or a 'presently existing actual threat.'"). The irreparable harm alleged by movant must be "neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent." Direx Israel, Ltd. v. Breakthrough Medical Corp., 952 F.2d 802, 812 (4th Cir. 1991), abrogation recognized on other grounds, Sarsour v. Trump, 245 F.Supp.3d 719, n. 6 (4th Cir. 2017); also see Kates, 2014 WL 1218905 at * 3 (The irreparable harm must be "actual and imminent, not merely speculative.") As the Fourth Circuit has explained, the Court is no longer required to balance the irreparable harm to the respective parties. Real Truth, 575 F.3d at 347. Rather, the movant must make a clear showing that he is likely to be irreparably harmed, and the Court must "pay particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedies of an injunction." Id.(citations omitted).

[4] The United States Supreme Court vacated the original decision in Real Truth for further consideration in light of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. 310, 130 S.Ct. 876, 175 L.Ed.2d 753 (2010). The Real Truth About Obama, Inc. v. Federal Election Commission, 559 U.S. 1089, 130 S.Ct. 2371, 176 L.Ed.2d 764 (2010). The Fourth Circuit, however, reissued its opinion on Parts I and II of its opinion. The Real Truth About Obama, Inc. v. Federal Election Commission, 607 F.3d 355 (4th Cir. 2010).

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

While the standards for issuing a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction are the same, the distinction between the two hinges on whether the court issues the order "without notice" in a temporary restraining order pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b) or "with notice" in a preliminary injunction pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a). Ciena Corp. v. Jarrard, 203 F.3d 312,

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

320 (4th Cir. 2000) ("whether an interlocutory injunction entered is labeled a TRO or a preliminary injunction is not of particular moment, so long as the party opposing the injunction is given notice and an opportunity to oppose that is commensurate with the duration of the injunction. Thus, an interlocutory injunction entered without notice may extend only [fourteen] days with a possible [fourteen]-day extension, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(b), whereas an interlocutory injunction with an unlimited term may be entered only after giving notice sufficient to enable the opposing party to prepare an opposition, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(a)").

Discussion

In addition to a temporary restraining order, the Plaintiff additionally seeks an expedited preliminary injunction hearing to be consolidated with a trial on the merits, as provided by Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a)(2), (b)(3). These rules provide in part as follows:

> (a) Preliminary Injunction.
>
> (1) Notice. The court may issue a preliminary injunction only on notice to the adverse party.
>
> (2) Consolidating the Hearing with the Trial on the Merits. Before or after beginning the hearing on a motion for a preliminary injunction, the court may advance the trial on the merits and consolidate it with the hearing. Even when consolidation is not ordered, evidence that is received on the motion and that would be admissible at trial becomes part of the trial record and need not be repeated at trial. But the court must preserve any party's right to a jury trial.
>
> (b) Temporary Restraining Order.
>
> (1) Issuing Without Notice. The court may issue a temporary restraining order without written or oral notice to the adverse party or its attorney only if:
>
> (A) specific facts in an affidavit or a verified complaint clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition; and
>
> (B) the movant's attorney certifies in writing any efforts made to give notice and the reasons why it should not be required.

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(2) Contents; Expiration. Every temporary restraining order issued without notice must state the date and hour it was issued; describe the injury and state why it is irreparable; state why the order was issued without notice; and be promptly filed in the clerk's office and entered in the record. The order expires at the time after entry—not to exceed 14 days—that the court sets, unless before that time the court, for good cause, extends it for a like period or the adverse party consents to a longer extension. The reasons for an extension must be entered in the record.

(3) Expediting the Preliminary-Injunction Hearing. If the order is issued without notice, the motion for a preliminary injunction must be set for hearing at the earliest possible time, taking precedence over all other matters except hearings on older matters of the same character. At the hearing, the party who obtained the order must proceed with the motion; if the party does not, the court must dissolve the order.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 65.

A temporary restraining order – particularly one granted without notice to the defendant – is an "emergency procedure and is appropriate only when the applicant is in need of immediate relief." 11A Charles Wright, Arthur Miller & Mary Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2951 (2d ed.); see also Steakhouse, Inc. v. City of Raleigh, 166 F.3d 634, 637 (4th Cir. 1999)("The grant of interim [injunctive] relief is an extraordinary remedy involving the exercise of a very far-reaching power, which is to be applied only in the limited circumstances which clearly demand it."). "Ex parte temporary restraining orders are no doubt necessary in certain circumstances, but under federal law they should be restricted to serving their underlying purpose of preserving the status quo and preventing irreparable harm just so long as is necessary to hold a hearing, and no longer." Granny Goose Foods, Inc. v. Brotherhood of Teamsters and Auto Truck Drivers , 415 U.S. 423, 439 (1974) (citations omitted).

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(A), a temporary restraining order shall not issue in the absence of "specific facts [that] clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party may be heard in opposition." The Plaintiff, who states he is a Republican primary candidate for the 2024 Presidential Election, argues his "only remedy" is a temporary restraining order in order to obtain an expedited preliminary injunction hearing consolidated with a trial on the merits on or before September 29, 2023, "to permit resolution on appeal as well as certain review by the U.S. Supreme Court prior to the commencement of the State Presidential Primary filing period." (ECF No. 9 at 6)

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan Page

However, the Plaintiff has failed to provide specific facts showing immediate and irreparable injury will occur prior to defendants' providing a response in opposition to his motion. While he argues that he is "already suffering irreparable competitive injuries because Defendant Donald John Trump . . . . is siphoning off votes and contributions" from him, the Plaintiff fails to provide any specific facts in support of this allegation or forecast in what way this alleged damage may be impacted by the commencement of West Virginia's presidential primary filing period. Id. Although he may be correct that "votes cannot be redistributed once cast" and "financial contributions cannot be refunded once given," the Plaintiff does not indicate what specific votes or contributions have been or will be siphoned off from his campaign during the expediated timeline he has requested: the Plaintiff asserts that both he and Defendant Trump are "pursuing the same voter and donor pies" (ECF No. 1 ¶30) – but this is an insufficient showing of immediate and irreparable injury.

This instance is also unlike those cited by Plaintiff where courts have found violation of a constitutional right to cause irreparable harm. See, e.g., Roman Cath. Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo , 141 S. Ct. 63, 67 (2020) ("The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.") (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S.

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

347, 373 (1976)). Yet the Plaintiff contends otherwise:

> The United States Constitution conferred onto individuals like Plaintiff John Anthony Castro with the right to not have to politically compete with someone that either engaged in or merely provided aid or comfort to an insurrection or insurrectionists. This is a new constitutional right not previously recognized by the federal judiciary.

(ECF No. 1 ¶ 108, see also Id. ¶ 8 ("Section 3 of the 14th Amendment created an implied cause of action for a fellow candidate to obtain relief for a political competitive injury by challenging another candidate's constitutional eligibility on the grounds that they engaged in or provided 'aid or comfort' to an insurrection"); see also ECF No. 9 at 4 (" The U.S. Constitution bars Defendant Donald John Trump from holding public office, so it is only logical that [he] be prevented by denying him access to appear on the state ballot and enjoying the state from counting his write-in votes.").

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. As the Fourth Circuit has held, the violation of constitutional rights "for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable harm." Leaders, 2 F.4th at 346 (citation omitted).

This Court need not resolve this issue at this time, that is whether Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides the Plaintiff with a cause of action against a fellow candidate under these circumstances. The matter immediately before this Court concerns the Plaintiff's request for a temporary restraining order, but he has failed to show any harm, including any possible constitutional harm, is "neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent." Manning v. Hunt, 119 F.3d 254, 263 (4th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted); see also Siegel v. LePore, 234 F.3d 1163, 1177 (11th Cir. 2000) (collecting cases and holding presumption of irreparable harm only applicable to invasion of privacy and violation of First Amendment rights); Pinson v. Pacheco, 397 F. App'x 488, 492 (10th Cir. 2010) ("We may assume that a constitutional injury is irreparable in the sense that it cannot be adequately redressed by post-trial relief. However, that has no bearing on whether the alleged constitutional injury is imminent. If the possibility of future harm is speculative, the movant has not established that he will suffer irreparable injury . . . if the preliminary injunction is denied . . . .") (citation and emphasis omitted)).

Document by Judicial Watch via Michigan Page

Here, the Plaintiff has failed to carry his burden at this time to show immediate and irreparable injury sufficient to justify grant of his motion for temporary restraining order where he has failed to identify a single date or relevant deadline concerning the West Virginia presidential election, and where he has failed to identify how any specific date or relevant deadline may impact any alleged harm. To be sure, the Court can take judicial notice of factual information located in postings on government websites – of relevance here, that would be the website maintained by the Defendant Secretary of State.[5] See Philips v. Pitt Cnty. Mem'l Hosp., 572 F.3d 176, 180 (4th Cir. 2009) (court may "properly take judicial notice of matters of public record"). Moreover, the Plaintiff's argument – "without a Temporary Restraining Order, this Court would be unable to conduct an expedited preliminary injunction hearing thereby guaranteeing that the issue will be mooted and infringe upon Plaintiff's First Amendment right to petition the federal judiciary to redress his grievance[]" – is too speculative to warrant a temporary restraining order. (ECF No. 9-2 at 2, see also ECF No. 9 at 6 ("A denial of this requested relief guarantees the issue will be mooted; thus, it is effectively a final decision under the Collateral-Order Doctrine and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 129l(a)(l).")) Indeed, the Plaintiff argues:

[5] https://sos.wv.gov/elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> This case will involve an inevitable appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for this circuit as well as the United States Supreme Court. Castro cannot wait until both Castro and Trump are state-registered candidates because that would guarantee that the injury would become irreparable, possibly moot the case, possibly transforms the case into a nonjusticiable political question, or expose the Republican Party to irreparable harm as they could lose their party's presumptive or actual nominee after millions of Americans cast their ballots in the primaries. Delaying judicial review of these questions would be a constitutional crisis of the federal judiciary's own making. Castro implores the federal judiciary to avoid unintentionally engineering a crisis. If the federal judiciary addresses these issues now via the Declaratory Judgments Act and injunctive relief, the Republican Party would have time to recover by funding, supporting, and nominating a constitutionally eligible candidate.

(ECF No. 1 ¶45)

At bottom, the Plaintiff fails to provide the Court with sufficient reason necessitating a temporary restraining order at this time under the governing jurisprudence in this Circuit.

PROPOSAL AND RECOMMENDATION

Based upon the foregoing, it is therefore respectfully PROPOSED that the District Judge confirm and accept the foregoing factual findings and legal conclusions and RECOMMENDED that the District Judge DENY the Plaintiff's Emergency Application for a Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits (ECF No. 9).

The Plaintiff is hereby notified that this "Proposed Findings and Recommendation" is hereby FILED, and a copy will be submitted to the Honorable United States District Judge Irene C. Berger. Pursuant to the provisions of Title 28, United States Code, Section 636(b)(1)(B), and Rule 6(d) and 72(b), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the parties shall have fourteen (14) days (filing of objections) and three (3) days (if received by mail) from the date of filing of this Findings and Recommendation within which to file with the Clerk of this Court specific written objections identifying the portions of the Findings and Recommendation to which objection is made and the basis of such objection. Extension of this time period may be granted for good cause.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Failure to file written objections as set forth above shall constitute a waiver of de novo review by the District Court and a waiver of appellate review by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Snyder v. Ridenour, 889 F.2d 1363, 1366 (4th Cir. 1989); Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 155 (1985); Wright v. Collins, 766 F.2d 841, 846 (4th Cir. 1985); United States v. Schronce, 727 F.2d 91, 94 (4th Cir. 1984). Copies of such objections shall be served on opposing parties, District Judge Berger and this Magistrate Judge.

The Clerk is hereby directed to mail a copy of this Order to the Plaintiff, who is acting pro se, and transmit a copy to counsel of record.

ENTER: September 28, 2023.

Omar J. Aboulhosn
United States Magistrate Judge

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
WEST PALM BEACH DIVISION

CASE NO. 23-80015-CIV-CANNON

JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO,

Plaintiff,

v.

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Defendant.
_____/

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND CLOSING CASE

THIS CAUSE comes before the Court upon Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (the "Motion"), filed on February 15, 2023 [ECF No. 18]. The Court has reviewed the Amended Complaint [ECF No. 7], the Motion [ECF No. 18], Plaintiff's Response in Opposition [ECF No. 26], Defendant's Reply [ECF No. 28], and the full record. Upon full review, and accepting as true the allegations in the Amended Complaint [ECF No. 7],[1] the Motion [ECF No. 18] is GRANTED. Plaintiff's Complaint is DISMISSED for lack of Article III standing and ripeness. Because Plaintiff has not alleged concrete harm or ripeness as required under Article III, the Court need not consider the merits of Defendant's additional arguments.

***

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED AND ADJUDGED as follows:

1. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss [ECF No. 18] is GRANTED.
2. Plaintiff's Amended Complaint [ECF No. 7] is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

[1] The Court previously granted Plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint after dismissing his initial Complaint as a shotgun pleading [ECF No. 6 p. 6].

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Plaintiff's Motion for Ruling and to Expedite Consideration [ECF No. 30] is DENIED AS MOOT.

4. The Clerk is directed to CLOSE this case.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers at Fort Pierce, Florida, this 23rd day of June 2023.

AILEEN M. CANNON
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

cc: counsel of record

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

John Anthony Castro, Plaintiff, vs. SC Elections Commission, Executive Director Howard M. Knapp, and Donald J. Trump, Defendants.	C/A No.: 3:23-4501-MGL-SVH REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

John Anthony Castro ("Plaintiff") states he "intends to either appear on the 2024 Republican primary ballot in this state or to file documentation to be a formally recognized write-in candidate in both the primary and general elections" and has filed the instant suit seeking "declaratory judgment that Defendant Donald John Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the 14th Amendment" and injunctive relief "against Defendant South Carolina Elections Commission Executive Director Howard M. Knapp to prevent the acceptance and/or processing of any ballot access documentation of Defendant Donald John Trump for both the primary election and general election." [ECF No. 1 ¶¶ 18–19].[1]

[1] Plaintiff has filed the same or similar complaints in multiple other states. See, e.g., Castro v. Toulouse Oliver, C/A No. 23-766 KK/GJF, 2023 WL

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This matter comes before the court on Plaintiff's motion filed on September 19, 2023, titled "emergency motion for temporary restraining order and expedited preliminary injunction hearing consolidated with a preliminary bench trial on the merits," in which he requests the court enjoin the "South Carolina Elections Commission from accepting . . . Defendant Donald John Trump's declaration of candidacy . . . ." and hold a preliminary injunction hearing, consolidated with a trial on the merits, to take place on or before September 29, 2023. [ECF No. 14 at 1–2].[2]

6065304 (D.N.M. Sept. 18, 2023). Plaintiff also previously filed suit against the Federal Election Commission ("FEC"), asking the court in part "to require the FEC to reject Mr. Trump's statement of candidacy on the basis that his alleged involvement in the events of January 6, 2021 . . . ." Castro v. Fed. Election Comm'n, No. CV 22-2176 (RC), 2022 WL 17976630, at *2 (D.D.C. Dec. 6, 2022), aff'd, No. 22-5323, 2023 WL 2899541 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 10, 2023). Plaintiff's complaint was dismissed for lack of standing, in addition to other reasons. See id.

[2] In full, Plaintiff requests the following injunctive relief:

> Plaintiff John Anthony Castro, pursuant to Fed, R, Civ. P. 65(b), moves this Honorable Court for the entry of a Temporary Restraining Order ("TRO") enjoining Defendant South Carolina Elections Commission from accepting or scheduling an appointment for the acceptance of Defendant Donald John Trump's declaration of candidacy, ballot access fee, petitions in support thereof, and any other ballot access documentation that Defendant Donald John Trump may submit or others, including, but not limited to, the State or National Republican Party, may submit for, on behalf of, or for the benefit of Defendant Donald John Trump to prevent a violation of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

[ECF No. 14 at 1].

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The United States Supreme Court has stated that to obtain a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction, a plaintiff must establish: (1) he is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief; (3) the balance of equities tips in his favor; and (4) an injunction is in the public interest. Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008); see also Leaders of a Beautiful Struggle v. Baltimore Police Dep't, 2 F.4th 330, 339 (4th Cir. 2021). While the standards for issuing a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction are the same, the distinction between the two hinges on whether the court issues the order "without notice" in a temporary restraining order pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b) or "with notice" in a preliminary injunction pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a). Ciena Corp. v. Jarrard, 203 F.3d 312, 320 (4th Cir. 2000) ("whether an interlocutory injunction entered is labeled a TRO or a preliminary injunction is not of particular moment, so long as the party opposing the injunction is given notice and an opportunity to oppose that is commensurate with the duration of the injunction. Thus, an interlocutory injunction entered without notice may extend only [fourteen] days with a possible [fourteen]-day extension, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(b), whereas an interlocutory injunction with an unlimited term may be entered only after giving notice sufficient to enable the opposing party to prepare an opposition, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(a)").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In addition to a temporary restraining order, Plaintiff additionally seeks an expedited preliminary injunction hearing to be consolidated with a trial on the merits, as provided by Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a)(2), (b)(3). These rules provide in part as follows:

> (a) Preliminary Injunction.
>
> > (1) Notice. The court may issue a preliminary injunction only on notice to the adverse party.
> >
> > (2) Consolidating the Hearing with the Trial on the Merits. Before or after beginning the hearing on a motion for a preliminary injunction, the court may advance the trial on the merits and consolidate it with the hearing. Even when consolidation is not ordered, evidence that is received on the motion and that would be admissible at trial becomes part of the trial record and need not be repeated at trial. But the court must preserve any party's right to a jury trial.
>
> (b) Temporary Restraining Order.
>
> > (1) Issuing Without Notice. The court may issue a temporary restraining order without written or oral notice to the adverse party or its attorney only if:
> >
> > > (A) specific facts in an affidavit or a verified complaint clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition; and
> > >
> > > (B) the movant's attorney certifies in writing any efforts made to give notice and the reasons why it should not be required.
> >
> > (2) Contents; Expiration. Every temporary restraining order issued without notice must state the date and hour it > was issued; describe the injury and state why it is irreparable; state why the order was issued without notice; and be promptly filed in the clerk's office and entered in the record. The order expires at the time after entry—not to exceed 14 days—that the court sets, unless before that time the court, for good cause, extends it for a like period or the adverse party consents to a longer extension. The reasons for an extension must be entered in the record.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

>
> (3) Expediting the Preliminary-Injunction Hearing. If the order is issued without notice, the motion for a preliminary injunction must be set for hearing at the earliest possible time, taking precedence over all other matters except hearings on older matters of the same character. At the hearing, the party who obtained the order must proceed with the motion; if the party does not, the court must dissolve the order.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 65.

A temporary restraining order—particularly one granted without notice to the defendant—is an "emergency procedure and is appropriate only when the applicant is in need of immediate relief." 11A Charles Wright, Arthur Miller & Mary Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2951 (2d ed.); see also Steakhouse, Inc. v. City of Raleigh, 166 F.3d 634, 637 (4th Cir.1999) ("The grant of interim [injunctive] relief is an extraordinary remedy involving the exercise of a very far-reaching power, which is to be applied only in the limited circumstances which clearly demand it."). "Ex parte temporary restraining orders are no doubt necessary in certain circumstances, but under federal law they should be restricted to serving their underlying purpose of preserving the status quo and preventing irreparable harm just so long as is necessary to hold a hearing, and no longer." Granny Goose Foods, Inc. v. Brotherhood of Teamsters and Auto Truck Drivers, 415 U.S. 423, 439 (1974) (citations omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(A), a temporary restraining order shall not issue in the absence of "specific facts [that] clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party may be heard in opposition." Plaintiff, who states he is a Republican primary candidate for the 2024 Presidential Election, argues his "only remedy" is grant of his motion, providing for a preliminary injunction hearing consolidated with a trial on the merits on or before September 29, 2023, "to permit resolution on appeal as well as certain review by the U.S. Supreme Court prior to the commencement of the State Presidential Primary filing period." [ECF No. 14 at 5–6].

Here, however, Plaintiff has failed to provide specific facts showing immediate and irreparable injury will occur prior to defendants' providing a response in opposition to his motion.

Plaintiff disagrees, arguing first that he is "already suffering irreparable competitive injuries because Defendant Donald John Trump . . . . is siphoning off votes and contributions" from Plaintiff. Id. at 6. However, Plaintiff fails to provide any specific facts in support of this allegation or forecast in what way this alleged damage may be impacted by the commencement of South Carolina's presidential primary filing period. Although he may be correct that "votes cannot be redistributed once cast" and "financial contributions cannot be refunded once given," Plaintiff does not indicate what specific votes or contributions have been or will be siphoned off from his campaign during the expediated timeline he has requested. Id.[3]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This instance is also unlike those cited by Plaintiff where courts have found violation of a constitutional right to cause irreparable harm. See, e.g., Roman Cath. Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 141 S. Ct. 63, 67 (2020) ("The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.") (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976)).

Plaintiff argues otherwise as follows:

> The United States Constitution conferred onto individuals like Plaintiff John Anthony Castro with the right to not have to politically compete with someone that either engaged in or merely provided aid or comfort to an insurrection or insurrectionists. This is a new constitutional right not previously recognized by the federal judiciary.

[ECF No. 1 ¶ 108, see also id. ¶ 8 ("Section 3 of the 14th Amendment created an implied cause of action for a fellow candidate to obtain relief for a political competitive injury by challenging another candidate's constitutional

[3] That "Trump is a declared candidate currently courting voters and seeking funds on his campaign website," like Plaintiff [see ECF No. 1 ¶ 30], is an inadequate showing of immediate and irreparable injury.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

eligibility on the grounds that they engaged in or provided 'aid or comfort' to an insurrection"); ECF No. 14 at 4 (Plaintiff arguing that the "U.S. Constitution bars Defendant Donald John Trump from holding public office," arguing that "it is only logical that [he] be prevented by denying him access to appear on the state ballot and enjoying the state from counting his write-in votes.")].

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. As the Fourth Circuit has held, the violation of constitutional rights "for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable harm." Leaders, 2 F.4th at 346 (citation omitted).

The court need not resolve this issue at this time, whether section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides Plaintiff with a cause of action against a fellow candidate under these circumstances. Focusing on his request for a temporary restraining order, Plaintiff has failed to show any harm, including any possible constitutional harm, is "neither remote nor speculative, but actual and imminent." Manning v. Hunt, 119 F.3d 254, 263 (4th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted); see also Siegel v. LePore, 234 F.3d 1163, 1177 (11th Cir. 2000) (collecting cases and holding presumption of irreparable harm only applicable to invasion of privacy and violation of First Amendment rights); Pinson v. Pacheco, 397 F. App'x 488, 492 (10th Cir. 2010) ("We may assume that a constitutional injury is irreparable in the sense that it cannot be adequately redressed by post-trial relief. However, that has no bearing on whether the alleged constitutional injury is imminent. If the possibility of future harm is speculative, the movant has not established that he will suffer irreparable injury . . . if the preliminary injunction is denied . . . .") (citation and emphasis omitted)).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Here, Plaintiff has failed to carry his burden at this time to show immediate and irreparable injury sufficient to justify grant of his motion for temporary restraining order where he has failed to identify a single date or relevant deadline concerning the South Carolina presidential election, or any state's presidential election, and where he has failed to identify how any specific date or relevant deadline may impact any alleged harm.[4]

---

[4] A court may take judicial notice of factual information located in postings on government websites. See Philips v. Pitt Cnty. Mem'l Hosp., 572 F.3d 176, 180 (4th Cir. 2009) (court may "properly take judicial notice of matters of public record"). In South Carolina, candidates running for President of the United States have two options for gaining ballot access. https://scvotes.gov/candidates/. First, he or she can file with a certified

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For similar reasons, the court rejects Plaintiff's argument as speculative that "without a Temporary Restraining Order, this Court would be unable to conduct an expedited preliminary injunction hearing thereby guaranteeing that the issue will be mooted and infringe upon Plaintiff's First Amendment right to petition the federal judiciary to redress his grievance." [ECF No. 14-2 at 2, see also ECF No. 14 at 6 ("A denial of this requested relief guarantees the issue will be mooted; thus, it is effectively a final decision under the Collateral-Order Doctrine and appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291(a)(1).")].[5] political party to run for that party's nomination. Id., see also https://abcnews.go.com/Politics/south-carolina-gop-votes-move-back-2024-primary/story?id=100167365 (reporting Republican candidates must file with the South Carolina Republican Party by October 31, 2023 to gain access to the ballot as a presidential candidate in South Carolina). Second, he or she may file a nominating petition, on or around July 15, 2024. https://scvotes.gov/candidates/. Write-in votes for President of the United States are not allowed. Id. The South Carolina Presidential Republican primary is February 24, 2024. See https://www.richlandcountysc.gov/Government/Departments/Voter-Registration-Elections/Elections.

---

[5] Related, Plaintiff also argues as follows:

> This case will involve an inevitable appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for this circuit as well as the United States Supreme Court. Castro cannot wait until both Castro and Trump are state-registered candidates because that would guarantee that the injury would become irreparable, possibly moot the case, possibly transforms the case into a nonjusticiable political question, or expose the Republican Party to irreparable harm as they could lose their party's presumptive or actual nominee after millions of Americans cast their ballots in the primaries. Delaying judicial review of these questions would be a constitutional crisis of the federal judiciary's own making. Castro

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In short, Plaintiff fails to provide the court with sufficient reason necessitating a temporary restraining order at this time. See, e.g., Hoechst Diafoil Co. v. Nan Ya Plastics Corp., 174 F.3d 411, 422 (4th Cir. 1999) ("While a preliminary injunction preserves the status quo pending a final trial on the merits, a temporary restraining order is intended to preserve the status quo only until a preliminary injunction hearing can be held: '[U]nder federal law [temporary restraining orders] should be restricted to serving their underlying purpose of preserving the status quo and preventing irreparable harm just so long as is necessary to hold a hearing, and no longer.'") (citing Granny Goose Foods, 415 U.S. at 439)).

Accordingly, the undersigned recommends the district judge deny Plaintiff's emergency motion for temporary restraining order and expedited preliminary injunction hearing consolidated with a preliminary bench trial. [ECF No. 14]. However, the undersigned makes no recommendation as to the merits of Plaintiff's underlying request for injunctive relief, and Plaintiff's > implores the federal judiciary to avoid unintentionally engineering a crisis. If the federal judiciary addresses these issues now via the Declaratory Judgments Act and injunctive relief, the Republican Party would have time to recover by funding, supporting, and nominating a constitutionally eligible candidate.

---

[ECF No. 1 ¶ 45].

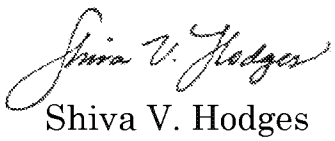
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

request for preliminary injunction, which requires notice to the adverse party, remains unaddressed in this case.

III. Conclusion and Recommendation

For the foregoing reasons, the undersigned recommends the court deny Plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order and expedited preliminary injunction hearing consolidated with a preliminary bench trial. [ECF No. 14].

IT IS SO RECOMMENDED.



September 27, 2023
Columbia, South Carolina

Shiva V. Hodges
United States Magistrate Judge

The parties are directed to note the important information in the attached "Notice of Right to File Objections to Report and Recommendation."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Notice of Right to File Objections to Report and Recommendation

The parties are advised that they may file specific written objections to this Report and Recommendation with the District Judge. Objections must specifically identify the portions of the Report and Recommendation to which objections are made and the basis for such objections. "[I]n the absence of a timely filed objection, a district court need not conduct a de novo review, but instead must 'only satisfy itself that there is no clear error on the face of the record in order to accept the recommendation.'" Diamond v. Colonial Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 416 F.3d 310 (4th Cir. 2005) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 72 advisory committee's note).

Specific written objections must be filed within fourteen (14) days of the date of service of this Report and Recommendation. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1); Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a), (d). Filing by mail pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 5 may be accomplished by mailing objections to:

Robin L. Blume, Clerk
United States District Court
901 Richland Street
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

Failure to timely file specific written objections to this Report and Recommendation will result in waiver of the right to appeal from a judgment of the District Court based upon such Recommendation. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1); Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140 (1985); Wright v. Collins, 766 F.2d 841 (4th Cir. 1985); United States v. Schronce, 727 F.2d 91 (4th Cir. 1984).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Caroline Chambers [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/8/2022 4:33:37 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: ISD report
Attachments: 08.25.2022 "ToreSays" Calls on Followers to Contact Secretaries of State.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather -
Attached is the ISD report we discussed.

Caroline Chambers | Senior Advisor
States United Democracy Center
202-365-2521 | @statesunited
caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

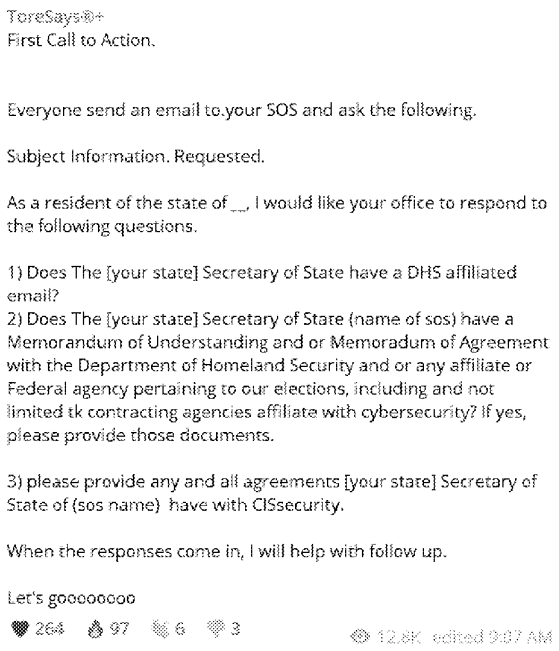
ISD | Powering solutions to extremism, hate and disinformation

"TORESAYS" CALLS ON FOLLOWERS TO CONTACT SECRETARIES OF STATE

25 August 2022

Overview

The email sent to the Pennsylvania Secretary of Commonwealth is likely part of a coordinated effort on Telegram led by "ToreSays" (real name: Terpsehore Maras-Lindeman), a podcaster and blogger known for her ardent support of Donald Trump and a wide range of conspiracy theories, including QAnon.



ToreSays®+
First Call to Action.

Everyone send an email to your SOS and ask the following.

Subject Information. Requested.

As a resident of the state of __, I would like your office to respond to the following questions.

1) Does The [your state] Secretary of State have a DHS affiliated email?
2) Does The [your state] Secretary of State (name of sos) have a Memorandum of Understanding and or Memoradum of Agreement with the Department of Homeland Security and or any affiliate or Federal agency pertaining to our elections, including and not limited tk contracting agencies affiliate with cybersecurity? If yes, please provide those documents.

3) please provide any and all agreements [your state] Secretary of State of (sos name) have with CISsecurity.

When the responses come in, I will help with follow up.

Let's gooooooo

264 97 6 3 12.8K edited 9:07 AM

On August 23, ToreSaysPlus (55.1K subscribers) posted a copy of the same email (see screenshot right) sent to Secretary Chapman. The post, self-described as a "First Call to Action" asks subscribers to send emails to their respective Secretaries of State featuring the same language used in the previously described email. The post slightly overperformed compared to other posts, receiving 12.8K views, over 300 interactions, and 318 comments. Many comments feature claims that the authors contacted their Secretaries, and some include screenshots of emails sent to Secretaries in numerous states, including Arizona, Michigan, Pennsylvania, North Dakota, and Ohio, among many others. "ToreSays" did not post the same "call to action" on her other accounts on Gab, Facebook, or Instagram, or on her website.

The "call to action" is predominately limited to Telegram. While a few users posted the message on Facebook (see here), it has garnered little attention on other platforms. However, researchers did identify a repost on Telegram by the Texas Three Percenters (391 members). While there were no comments or interactions observed on the Texas Three Percenters channel, the repost suggests that followers of some extremist groups may be aware of or even participating in the "call to action."

About "ToreSays"

"ToreSays" is the screen name of Terpsehore Maras-Lindeman, a podcaster and blogger from North Dakota (now residing in Ohio) known for her ardent support of Donald Trump and a wide range of conspiracy theories, including QAnon. In 2020, Maras-Lindeman authored an affidavit alleging that voting systems companies rigged the election against Trump. Sidney Powell cited the affidavit in complaints regarding elections in Wisconsin and Arizona.

Copyright © Institute for Strategic Dialogue (2022). ISD-US is a non-profit corporation with 501(c)(3) status registered in the District of Columbia with tax identification number 27-1282489. All Rights Reserved. Any copying, reproduction or exploitation of the whole or any part of this document without prior written approval from ISD is prohibited.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Since 2020, Maras-Lindeman has worked to build a network of likeminded followers across the US, who she encourages to surface information on election and elected officials. This network is coordinated through Telegram; however, she does have followers across other platforms, including Gab, Facebook, Instagram, and a website (hyperlinked above in overview).

- She is currently running for office as an independent candidate for Ohio Secretary of State.

- Her fans are religiously devoted. Earlier this year, they gifted her more than $100,000 to buy a new car after she claimed her vehicle was stolen from her in a string of car burglaries allegedly targeting Trump supporters shopping at a Walmart.

- Unlike other influencers who post primarily content to the internet with the intention of delivering entertainment and information, Maras-Lindeman has worked to bond with her audience and organize her fans, enabling her to achieve consistently high levels of engagement online and move her followers to action.

Copyright © Institute for Strategic Dialogue (2022). ISD-US is a non-profit corporation with 501(c)(3) status registered in the District of Columbia with tax identification number 27-1282489. All Rights Reserved. Any copying, reproduction or exploitation of the whole or any part of this document without prior written approval from ISD is prohibited.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

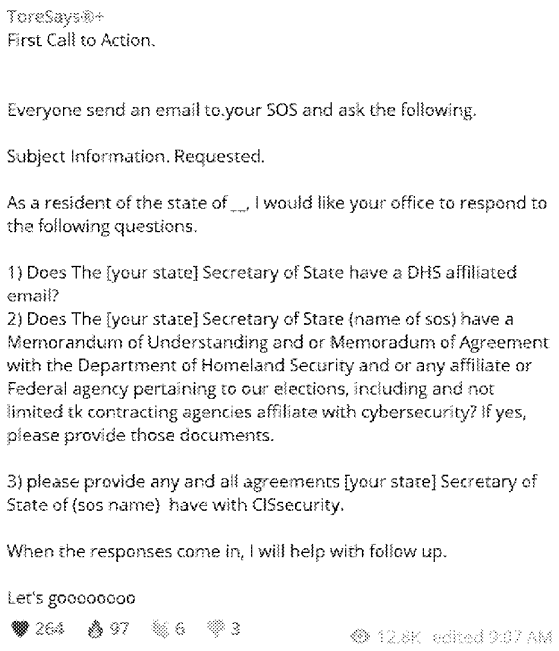
ISD | Powering solutions to extremism, hate and disinformation

"TORESAYS" CALLS ON FOLLOWERS TO CONTACT SECRETARIES OF STATE

25 August 2022

Overview

The email sent to the Pennsylvania Secretary of Commonwealth is likely part of a coordinated effort on Telegram led by "ToreSays" (real name: Terpsehore Maras-Lindeman), a podcaster and blogger known for her ardent support of Donald Trump and a wide range of conspiracy theories, including QAnon.



ToreSays®+
First Call to Action.

Everyone send an email to your SOS and ask the following.

Subject Information. Requested.

As a resident of the state of __, I would like your office to respond to the following questions.

1) Does The [your state] Secretary of State have a DHS affiliated email?
2) Does The [your state] Secretary of State (name of sos) have a Memorandum of Understanding and or Memoradum of Agreement with the Department of Homeland Security and or any affiliate or Federal agency pertaining to our elections, including and not limited tk contracting agencies affiliate with cybersecurity? If yes, please provide those documents.

3) please provide any and all agreements [your state] Secretary of State of (sos name) have with CISsecurity.

When the responses come in, I will help with follow up.

Let's gooooooo

264 97 6 3 12.8K edited 9:07 AM

On August 23, ToreSaysPlus (55.1K subscribers) posted a copy of the same email (see screenshot right) sent to Secretary Chapman. The post, self-described as a "First Call to Action" asks subscribers to send emails to their respective Secretaries of State featuring the same language used in the previously described email. The post slightly overperformed compared to other posts, receiving 12.8K views, over 300 interactions, and 318 comments. Many comments feature claims that the authors contacted their Secretaries, and some include screenshots of emails sent to Secretaries in numerous states, including Arizona, Michigan, Pennsylvania, North Dakota, and Ohio, among many others. "ToreSays" did not post the same "call to action" on her other accounts on Gab, Facebook, or Instagram, or on her website.

The "call to action" is predominately limited to Telegram. While a few users posted the message on Facebook (see here), it has garnered little attention on other platforms. However, researchers did identify a repost on Telegram by the Texas Three Percenters (391 members). While there were no comments or interactions observed on the Texas Three Percenters channel, the repost suggests that followers of some extremist groups may be aware of or even participating in the "call to action."

About "ToreSays"

"ToreSays" is the screen name of Terpsehore Maras-Lindeman, a podcaster and blogger from North Dakota (now residing in Ohio) known for her ardent support of Donald Trump and a wide range of conspiracy theories, including QAnon. In 2020, Maras-Lindeman authored an affidavit alleging that voting systems companies rigged the election against Trump. Sidney Powell cited the affidavit in complaints regarding elections in Wisconsin and Arizona.

Copyright © Institute for Strategic Dialogue (2022). ISD-US is a non-profit corporation with 501(c)(3) status registered in the District of Columbia with tax identification number 27-1282489. All Rights Reserved. Any copying, reproduction or exploitation of the whole or any part of this document without prior written approval from ISD is prohibited.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Since 2020, Maras-Lindeman has worked to build a network of likeminded followers across the US, who she encourages to surface information on election and elected officials. This network is coordinated through Telegram; however, she does have followers across other platforms, including Gab, Facebook, Instagram, and a website (hyperlinked above in overview).

- She is currently running for office as an independent candidate for Ohio Secretary of State.

- Her fans are religiously devoted. Earlier this year, they gifted her more than $100,000 to buy a new car after she claimed her vehicle was stolen from her in a string of car burglaries allegedly targeting Trump supporters shopping at a Walmart.

- Unlike other influencers who post primarily content to the internet with the intention of delivering entertainment and information, Maras-Lindeman has worked to bond with her audience and organize her fans, enabling her to achieve consistently high levels of engagement online and move her followers to action.

Copyright © Institute for Strategic Dialogue (2022). ISD-US is a non-profit corporation with 501(c)(3) status registered in the District of Columbia with tax identification number 27-1282489. All Rights Reserved. Any copying, reproduction or exploitation of the whole or any part of this document without prior written approval from ISD is prohibited.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/12/2023 6:46:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, October 11, 2023 at 7:38 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

Thanks Jonathan (and Zack), appreciate it.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, October 11, 2023 7:10 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather and Erik,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 2:51 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 2:46 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 1:33 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

Gearing up, see attached.

H

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/16/2023 3:06:09 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief
Attachments: Davis 23-128 Resp to Show Cause_JW.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 7:12 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/19/2023 6:25:59 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Lindsey et al v Whiter et al - waivers of service

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, October 19, 2023 at 12:30 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Lindsey et al v Whiter et al - waivers of service

Hi Jonathan,

Plaintiffs counsel finally reached out, we agreed to waivers of service. So, we will have 60 days likely from today or tomorrow to file a motion to dismiss.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/19/2023 6:08:54 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Subpoena

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, October 19, 2023 at 1:19 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Subpoena

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/9/2022 4:40:09 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: AZ voting machine/decertification lawsuit
Attachments: 2022-09-08 Order Denying Petition and TRO[87][1].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Quick update: We just learned that the Arizona Supreme Court dismissed the case yesterday. The text of the order is in the final two pages of the PDF.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Friday, September 9, 2022 at 11:59 AM
To: "Meingast, Heather (AG)" <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: AZ voting machine/decertification lawsuit

Good morning, Heather. I've attached the filings from the Arizona lawsuit I mentioned yesterday that seeks to decertify Arizona's election results based on claims that the voting machines were not properly certified and also seeks to compel retention of documents from the 2020 election. You'll see that Russell Newman, the Nokomis, FL-based attorney who is affiliated with Gen. Flynn's America Project, is involved with both the Arizona and Michigan Actions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Arizona Supreme Court

Civil Special Action

CV-22-0217-SA DANIEL WOOD et al v BRNOVICH/HOBBS/DUCEY/BRUTINEL

Appellate Case Information

Case Filed: 31-Aug-2022 Archive on: 8-Sep-2032 (planned)

Case Closed: 8-Sep-2022

Dept/Composition

Side 1. DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE, Petitioner

(Litigant Group) DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE

- Daniel Wood
- Brian Steiner
- Paul Rice

Side 2. MARK BRNOVICH, in his official Capacity as the Attorney General for the State of Arizona; KATIE HOBBS, in her official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State; DOUG DUCEY, in his official capacity as the Governor of the State of Arizona; ROBERT M. BRU, Respondent

(Litigant Group) MARK BRNOVICH, in his official Capacity as the Attorney General for the State of Arizona; KATIE HOBBS, in her official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State; DOUG DUCEY, in his official capacity as the Governor of the State of Arizona; ROBERT M. BRU

- Mark Brnovich, Arizona Attorney General's Office
- Katie Hobbs, Arizona Secretary of State

CASE STATUS

Sep 8, 2022.....Decision Rendered Aug 31, 2022....Pending

CASE DECISION

08-Sep-2022 ORDER

* Before us is the fourth matter filed directly in this Court by some combination of petitioners challenging the 2020 election results.

On May 7, 2021, Petitioner Brian Steiner and others filed an action styled, We the People, ex rel., v. Ducey, et al.

Ann Timmer

Filed: 08-Sep-2022 Mandate:

Decision Disposition
Dismissed

5 PROCEEDING ENTRIES

1.	31-Aug-2022	FILED: Verified Petition for Writ of Mandamus (Treated as a Petition for Special Action); Declaration of Brian Steiner (Petitioners Wood, et al., Pro Se)
2.	31-Aug-2022	FILED: Consolidated Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Memorandum of Law in Support Thereof (Petitioners Wood, et al., Pro Se)
3.	7-Sep-2022	RECEIPT No.: ASC2022-00857 ; $280.00 Applied to: DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE - Class A Filing Fee ($280.00) Paid for: DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE - By nCourt LLC Portal (Memo: 3200A3B9-37C5-495E-8C00-B3856C7091E3)
4.	8-Sep-2022	FILED: Motion for Counsel for Writ of Mandamus and TRO Filed August 31, 2022 (Petitioners Wood, et al)

Information presented in this document may not reflect all case activity and is subject to change without notice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

5. 8-Sep-2022 Before us is the fourth matter filed directly in this Court by some combination of petitioners challenging the 2020 election results.

On May 7, 2021, Petitioner Brian Steiner and others filed an action styled, We the People, ex rel., v. Ducey, et al., CV-21-0114-SA. The petitioners contended that twenty elected officials were "alleged usurpers" who were "in office illegally" and if not, the respondents should "prove otherwise." In that action, the petitioners alleged that voting systems were "contractually uncertified and illegal" because "[m]achines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use ... if they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 and if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2022." For the relief requested, the petitioners asked that each of the twenty elected officials "be removed from the trusted office." This Court dismissed the petition because it could find no legal basis for the relief requested and because the action was untimely under A.R.S. § 12-673(A) and observing:

Although our courts have recognized that electors may have an implied private right of action to challenge voting machines' compliance with applicable statutory requirements in certain limited circumstances, see, e.g., Chavez v. Brewer, 222 Ariz. 309, 318 ¶ 28 (App. 2009), nothing in the statutes Petitioners cite grants them a private right of action to remove office holders and sit in their stead. In fact, in a quo warranto action, "a claimant to an office may have judgment only on the strength of his own title and not upon any infirmity or weakness in the defendant's title." Tracy v. Dixon, 119 Ariz. 165, 166 (1978). (Emphasis added.)

On October 21, 2021, Petitioners Rayana B. Eldan, Brian Steiner, and Daniel Wood, pro se, filed an "Affidavit of Complaint, Petition for Redress by Writs of Mandamus." Petitioners asked this Court for an order directing the Secretary of State to rescind the Certificates of Election of the Presidential Electors and alleging that the certificates were "invalid and void" and also directing the County Boards of Supervisors and Clerks to rescind the Certificates of Election issued in the county elections. Eldan et al. v. Katie Hobbs, Secretary of State, et al. CV-21-0255-SA. The entire Court entered an order dismissing that proceeding on November 8, 2021, quoting the above language from the dismissal order in the CV-21-0114-SA case and stating:

The Court will not attempt to further instruct Petitioners on the need to plead factual allegations upon which relief can be granted in accordance with pertinent court rules. However, irrespective of the Petitioners' claims of election irregularities, they have alleged no basis for relief under which they may obtain an order directing state officials to "rescind" prior elections or to remove elected office holders from office .... (Emphasis added.)

In Wood v. Secretary of State Katie Hobbs, CV-21-0149—SA, Petitioner Daniel Clayton Wood filed a petition on June 4, 2021, and alleged that "Our voting equipment for use in elections did not have certification from any accredited laboratories," and demanded that the Secretary of State "respond to the questions above within 5 days, by affidavit, before this court, sworn under penalty of perjury. If you do not respond within 5 days, you agree by acquiescence, that you are knowingly interfering with the rights of the people ...." On June 8, 2021 the Court dismissed the petition because Petitioner had failed to comply with A.R.S. § 12-2043 and therefore could not bring a quo warranto proceeding.

In the instant petition, Petitioners Daniel Wood, Brian Steiner and Paul Rice, purporting to be acting with the assistance of Florida counsel, have filed a "Consolidated Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Memorandum of Law in Support Thereof." In the motion, Petitioners advise that federal law requires that records, documents, and evidence from the 2020 presidential election must be preserved for twenty-two months, which, they contend, expires September 3, 2022. Therefore, the Court should "issue a Temporary Restraining Order to prevent the Defendants, and anyone acting in concert with the Defendants, from destroying the records, documents and evidence pertaining to Arizona's 2020 presidential election. The Plaintiffs may need the records, documents and evidence pertaining to Arizona's 2020 presidential election in their presentation of their case in chief," and to pursue their "42 U.S.C. § 1983 violation of civil rights case."

In their "Petition for Writ of Mandamus" brought under A.R.S. § 12-2021, also filed in this action, Petitioner argue that the Attorney General, Governor, Secretary of State, and Chief Justice illegally certified the election. They contend that under A.R.S. § 16-442, machines or devices used in election for federal, state, or county offices may only be certified for use if they comply with the Help America Vote Act of 2002 and if they have been tested and approved by a laboratory. "If voting hardware and/or software were used in violation of Arizona law, then said election is void ab initio and said election cannot be lawfully certified by any Defendant." Petitioners contend that because the legal requirements of A.R.S. § 16-442 were not met, the defendants had no authority to certify the results. They reason, "If none of the Defendants had the legal authority to certify Arizona's 2020 presidential election results, then this Court must issue a peremptory writ of mandamus . . . compelling the Defendants to decertify Arizona's 2020 presidential election and to rerun Arizona's 2020 presidential election in accordance with Arizona law." They ask that the Court "issue a peremptory Writ of Mandamus" compelling defendants to decertify the election; recall the Biden electors, "remove the Maricopa County votes from the 2020 election results as they were/are void ab initio, order Maricopa County to rerun the Arizona 2020 presidential election in accordance with the law, as soon as possible, by way of a special election, with paper ballots only, on a single election day, omitting Zuckerboxes and 'no excuse' absentee mail-in ballots, with the paper ballots being counted by hand with multiple members of all political parties present to observe, with unobstructed 24/7 public livestream cameras of all vote counting so that Arizona can restore voter confidence and Arizona's commitment to free and fair elections, with the Defendants then adding Maricopa County's presidential election votes to the remaining votes and ordering the Defendants to then certify a lawful 2020 presidential election," and such other relief as the Court deems appropriate.

First, the challenge to the election is untimely. The laws of Arizona set forth the process for contesting an election—a process that requires the filing of a contest within five days after the canvass of the election. Election contests based on alleged improprieties are not new. See Moore v. City of Page, 148 Ariz. 151, 155 (App. 1986)(pointing out that election contests have been brought based on a claim that unregistered voters have voted; that the election was held in a building other than that designated in the election notice; that ineligible electors were allowed to vote and that the ballot was not in the form required; and agreeing in that case that the failure to purge voters would support a contest "on account of illegal votes." (internal citations omitted)). Such contests must, however, be timely:

It is commonly stated that election contests are purely statutory and dependent upon statutory provisions for their conduct. Pursuant

Information presented in this document may not reflect all case activity and is subject to change without notice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is commonly stated that election contests are purely statutory and dependent upon statutory provisions for their conduct. Brown v. Superior Court, 81 Ariz. 236 (1956); Fish v. Redeker, 2 Ariz. App. 602 (1966). The failure of a contestant to an election to strictly comply with the statutory requirements is fatal to his right to have the election contested. Dale v. Greater Anchorage Area Borough, 439 P.2d 790 (Alaska, 1968). We have held particularly that the "'requirements as to the time within which the contest must be brought are regarded as mandatory, and unless strictly complied with The court is without jurisdiction to proceed'"; Brown v. Superior Court, supra, 81 Ariz. at 239. Citing 29 C.J.S. Elections § 259.

The rationale for requiring strict compliance with the time provisions for initiating a contest is the strong public policy favoring stability and finality of election results. (Emphasis added; citations cleaned up.)

Donaghey v. Att'y Gen., 120 Ariz. 93, 95 (1978) (emphasis added).

Second, as this Court previously observed, "irrespective of the Petitioners' claims of election irregularities, they have alleged no basis for relief under which they may obtain an order directing state officials to 'rescind' prior elections or to remove elected office holders from office ...."

The Court, en banc, observes that Petitioners have cited no authority for the proposition that they or anyone else may overturn the Arizona statutes that govern both the conduct of elections and the challenges to the results of such elections. Likewise, they cannot dictate the terms of a proposed effort to "rerun the 2020 presidential election," which was certified almost two years ago. Therefore,

IT IS ORDERED dismissing the petition.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED denying the request for temporary restraining order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED denying the motion for expedited consideration as moot.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED denying Petitioners' "Motion for Counsel for Writ of Mandamus and TRO" as moot. (Hon. Ann A. Scott Timmer)

Information presented in this document may not reflect all case activity and is subject to change without notice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/9/2022 3:59:22 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: AZ voting machine/decertification lawsuit
Attachments: 20220902101800698[41][2].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good morning, Heather. I've attached the filings from the Arizona lawsuit I mentioned yesterday that seeks to decertify Arizona's election results based on claims that the voting machines were not properly certified and also seeks to compel retention of documents from the 2020 election. You'll see that Russell Newman, the Nokomis, FL-based attorney who is affiliated with Gen. Flynn's America Project, is involved with both the Arizona and Michigan Actions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED

AUG 3 1 2022

CLERK SUPREME COURT

Daniel Wood, pro se
Brian Steiner, pro se
Paul Rice, pro se
P.O. Box 50631
Phoenix, AZ 85076
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)

Prepared with Assistance of Counsel:
Russell A. Newman (Pro Hac Vice Application Forthcoming)
TN BPR# 033462
The Newman Law Firm
253 Tamiami Trail S., Ste. 120
Nokomis, FL 34275
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)
russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT

DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE, Plaintiffs, v. MARK BRNOVICH, in his official capacity as the Attorney General for the State of Arizona, KATIE HOBBS, in her official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State, DOUG DUCEY, in his official capacity as the Governor of the State of Arizona, ROBERT M. BRUTINEL, in his official capacity as the Chief Justice for the Arizona Supreme Court, Defendants.	CASE NO. : CV-22-0217-SA DECLARATION OF BRIAN STEINER (Election Matter) (TRO Requested)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF ARIZONA)

COUNTY OF MARICOPA)

COMES NOW the Declarant, Brian Steiner, and states under oath and penalty of perjury as follows:

1. I am a pro se Plaintiff in the above-captioned case.

2. I am a resident of Maricopa County.

3. I have not made an effort to give notice to the Defendants regarding my Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order.

4. The records, documents and evidence from Arizona's 2020 presidential election will be destroyed in a matter of days, specifically on September 4, 2022.

5. There is no reason to destroy the records, documents and evidence from the 2020 presidential election.

6. I need all of this evidence to pursue any/all legal claims that I have against any/all Defendants.

7. I will suffer an immediate and irreparable injury, loss or damage in my present case and in my 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights violations case if the records, documents and evidence from Arizona's 2020 presidential election are destroyed.

8. Based upon the foregoing I do not believe notice should be required because any such effort would be futile.

FURTHER DECLARANT SAYETH NOT.

/s/ Brian Steiner
Brian Steiner
Pro Se Plaintiff
August 31, 2022

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED

AUG 3 1 2022

CLERK SUPREME COURT

Daniel Wood, pro se
Brian Steiner, pro se
Paul Rice, pro se
P.O. Box 50631
Phoenix, AZ 85076
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)

Prepared with Assistance of Counsel:
Russell A. Newman (Pro Hac Vice Application Forthcoming)
TN BPR# 033462
The Newman Law Firm
253 Tamiami Trail S., Ste. 120
Nokomis, FL 34275
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)
russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT

DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE, Plaintiffs, v. MARK BRNOVICH, in his official capacity as the Attorney General for the State of Arizona, KATIE HOBBS, in her official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State, DOUG DUCEY, in his official capacity as the Governor of the State of Arizona, ROBERT M. BRUTINEL, in his official capacity as the Chief Justice for the Arizona Supreme Court, Defendants.	CASE NO. : CV-0217-SA CONSOLIDATED MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT THEREOF (Election Matter) (TRO Requested)

COME NOW Plaintiffs, Daniel Wood, Brian Steiner, and Paul Rice, and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

pursuant to Ariz. R. Civ. P. 65[1] hereby file this Motion for Temporary Restraining Order to enjoin and/or restrain Defendants and its officers, agents, servants, employees and attorneys and other persons who are in active concert or participation with anyone described in Rule 65(d)(2)(A) or (B) from destroying any records, evidence or materials in any way related to Arizona's 2020 presidential election. Additionally, Plaintiffs request that this court expedite the preliminary injunction hearing. In support of Plaintiff's motion for temporary restraining order Plaintiffs respectfully show this court the following:

I. STATEMENT OF RELEVANT FACTS

On November 3, 2020, Maricopa County conducted an illegal and unlawful presidential election. Verified Petition for Writ of Mandamus, ¶ 8. The unlawful and illegal 2020 presidential election was certified by the Defendants on November 30, 2020. See id at ¶¶ 10-13. Pursuant to 52 U.S.C. § 20701, records, documents and all evidence form Arizona's 2020 presidential election must be preserved for twenty-two (22) months. Arizona's 2020 presidential election occurred on November 3, 2020. Id at ¶ 8. 11/03/2020 + 22 months = 09/03/22. As such, Arizona's records, documents

[1] While A.R.S. § 12-2021 provides the appellate Arizona Supreme Court with original Jurisdiction for a writ of mandamus, the Arizona Rules of Appellate Procedure fail to include relief that is ordinarily available in a court with original jurisdiction, such as Temporary Restraining Orders. As such, the rules of civil procedure in courts with original jurisdiction will be cited as this court has original jurisdiction and has the authority to issue a Temporary Restraining Order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and all evidence from the 2020 presidential election will be destroyed unless this court intervenes and issues this Temporary Restraining Order and a preliminary injunction ordering the Defendants and its officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys and other persons who are in active concert or participation with anyone described in Rule 65(d)(2)(A) or (B) to preserve any/all documents, records and/or evidence relating to Arizona's 2020 presidential election.

II. ARGUMENT AND CITATION OF AUTHORITY

Pursuant to Ariz. R. Civ. P. 65, "The court may issue a temporary restraining order without written or oral notice to the adverse party only if:

> (A) specific facts in an affidavit or a verified complaint clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will likely result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition, or that prior notice will likely cause the adverse party to take action resulting in such injury, loss, or damage; and
>
> (B) the movant's attorney certifies in writing any efforts made to give notice or the reasons why it should not be required.

Ariz. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1) (emphasis added). Preliminary injunction granted without imposition of bond on movants was enforceable. Matter of Wilcox Revocable Trust (App. Div.1 1998) 192 Ariz. 337, 965 P.2d 71. An injunction is not void even though it fails to contain reasons for its issuance. State v. Nettz (App. Div.2 1977) 114 Ariz. 296, 560 P.2d 814. Failure to comply with provision of this rule requiring that order granting injunction set forth reason for injunction's issuance does not render order void.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Laks v. Laks (App. Div.2 1975) 25 Ariz.App. 58, 540 P.2d 1277.

In the case at bar, this court may issue a Temporary Restraining Order to prevent the Defendants, and anyone acting in concert with the Defendants, from destroying the records, documents and evidence pertaining to Arizona's 2020 presidential election. The Plaintiffs may need the records, documents and evidence pertaining to Arizona's 2020 presidential election in their presentation of their case in chief. There is absolutely no reason why the records, documents and evidence should be destroyed when they are needed in Plaintiffs' case in chief and Plaintiffs' 42 U.S.C. § 1983 violation of civil rights case. Plaintiffs will suffer immediate and irreparable injury, loss or damage if this court does not immediately halt the destruction of said records, documents and evidence. This evidence is essential to Plaintiffs' case in chief and it will be needed in Plaintiffs' 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights violations case. The injury, loss or damage is the destruction of Plaintiffs' ability to plead and prove their case in chief. This injury, loss or damage is immediate because the destruction of said records, documents or evidence will occur in a matter of days. These records, documents and evidence have been preserved for nearly two years and there is no good reason why they should be destroyed when they are still needed. Permitting the destruction of relevant and/or necessary records, documents or evidence would violate Ariz. R. Civ. P. 1, which states that the law should be "construed, administered, and employed by the court and the parties to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding." Ariz. R. Civ. P. 1 (emphasis added). Justice requires that this Court preserve records, documents and/or evidence that is currently being preserved and which may be needed in the instant case. There is no good reason to destroy the documents, records and/or evidence of Arizona's 2020 presidential election at this time. As such, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this court grant their motion for temporary restraining order instanter, there being no just reason for delay.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Respectfully submitted this 31st day of August, 2022.

PRO SE* PLAINTIFFS

By: /s/ Daniel Wood
/s/ Brian Steiner
/s/ Paul Rice
P.O. Box 50631
Phoenix, AZ 85076
Email: info@thenewmanlawfirm.com
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)

PREPARED WITH ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

Russell A. Newman, TN BPR # 033462
(Motion for Admission Pro Hac Forthcoming)
The Newman Law Firm
253 S. Tamiami Trail
Suite 120
Nokomis, FL 34275
Email: russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)
Attorney for Plaintiffs

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED
AUG 3 1 2022
CLERK SUPREME COURT

Daniel Wood, pro se
Brian Steiner, pro se
Paul Rice, pro se
P.O. Box 50631
Phoenix, AZ 85076

Prepared with Assistance of Counsel:
Russell A. Newman (Pro Hac Vice Application Forthcoming)
TN BPR# 033462
The Newman Law Firm
253 Tamiami Trail S., Ste. 120
Nokomis, FL 34275
(615) 710-5725 (Telephone)
russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT

DANIEL WOOD, BRIAN STEINER and PAUL RICE, Plaintiffs, v. MARK BRNOVICH, in his official capacity as the Attorney General for the State of Arizona, KATIE HOBBS, in her official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State, DOUG DUCEY, in his official capacity as the Governor of the State of Arizona, ROBERT M. BRUTINEL, in his official capacity as the Chief Justice for the Arizona Supreme Court, Defendants.	CASE NO. : CV-22-0217-SA VERIFIED PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS (Election Matter) (TRO Requested)

COME NOW Plaintiffs, Daniel Wood, Brian Steiner, and Paul Rice hereby file

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

this Verified Petition for Writ of Mandamus and in support thereof, would show unto this Court as follows:

I. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

1. This verified petition is for a writ of mandamus. Jurisdiction[1] is proper in this Court pursuant to A.R.S. § 12-2021 et al. The duty to certify Arizona's 2020 presidential election results is a ministerial duty to which the statute specifically describes the manner of performance. The Defendants must certify a lawful election and they may not certify an illegal/unlawful election.

2. Venue is proper pursuant to A.R.S. § 12-401.

II. PARTIES

3. Plaintiff Daniel Wood is an Arizona resident who voted in Arizona's statewide 2020 presidential election.

4. Plaintiff Brian Steiner is an Arizona resident who voted in Arizona's statewide 2020 presidential election.

5. Plaintiff Paul Rice is an Arizona resident who voted in Arizona's statewide 2020 presidential election.

---

[1] The 2020 presidential election is/was a statewide election. The writ seeks to compel state officials to discharge a duty owed by state law. The Supreme Court of Arizona is a statewide court. It only stands to reason that a state branch of government should be the proper entity to compel a co-equal state branch of government to discharge a duty owed by a state statute. This Court has jurisdiction and jurisdiction is proper.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6. Plaintiffs are citizens of The United States of America and they are over the age of eighteen (18).

7. Plaintiffs have a constitutional right to participate in the 2020 presidential election. See U.S. Const. Amend. 26.

8. Plaintiffs suffered a distinct and palpable injury when the State of Arizona conducted an unlawful presidential election on November 3, 2020.

9. Plaintiffs suffered another distinct and palpable injury when unlawful 2020 presidential election results were unlawfully certified on November 24, 2020.

10. On November 30, 2020, Defendant Katie Hobbs was the Secretary of State and she unlawfully certified the 2020 presidential election.

11. On November 30, 2020, Defendant Doug Ducey was the Governor of Arizona and he unlawfully certified the 2020 presidential election.

12. On November 30, 2020, Defendant Mark Brnovich was Arizona's Attorney General and he unlawfully certified the 2020 presidential election.

13. On November 30, 2020, Defendant Robert M. Brutinel was the Chief Justice of the Arizona Supreme Court and he unlawfully certified the 2020 presidential election.

14. "All elections shall be free and equal, and no power, civil or military, shall at any time interfere to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage." Ariz. Const. Art. II, § 21.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. Introduction.

15. On November 3, 2020, the State of Arizona attempted to conduct an election for President of the United States of America.

16. However, the Defendants purported certification of the Arizona 2020 presidential election did not comply with either Arizona law or federal law.

17. Pursuant to Constitution of the United States, "Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector." U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

> U.S.C.A. Const. Art. II § 1, cl. 2
>
> Section 1, Clause 2. Presidential Electors
>
> Currentness
>
> Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

18. Pursuant to Arizona law, "Machines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use in this state and may only be used in this state IF they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 and if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002." A.R.S. § 16-442(B) (emphasis added).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Effective: August 3, 2018

A.R.S. § 16-442

§ 16-442. Committee approval; adoption of vote tabulating equipment; experimental use; emergency

Currentness

A. The secretary of state shall appoint a committee of three persons, to consist of a member of the engineering college at one of the universities, a member of the state bar of Arizona and one person familiar with voting processes in the state, no more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, and at least one of whom shall have at least five years of experience with and shall be able to render an opinion based on knowledge of, training in or education in electronic voting systems, procedures and security. The committee shall investigate and test the various types of vote recording or tabulating machines or devices that may be used under this article. The committee shall submit its recommendations to the secretary of state who shall make final adoption of the type or types, make or makes, model or models to be certified for use in this state. The committee shall serve without compensation.

B. Machines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use in this state and may only be used in this state if they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 and if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002.

19. If voting hardware and/or software has not been lawfully certified pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002, then said voting machine may not be used in an Arizona election. See id.

20. If a voting hardware and/or software has not been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002, then said voting hardware or software may not be used in an Arizona election. See id.

21. If voting hardware and/or software were used in violation of Arizona law, then said election is void ab initio and said election cannot be lawfully certified by any Defendant. See id.

22. Void ab initio is defined as "Having no legal effect from inception." Thompson Reuters Practical Law, definition of "Void ab initio" last visited June 21, 2022

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(https://1.next.westlaw.com/Glossary/PracticalLaw/I41334c8d07ef11ebbea4f0dc9fb69570?contextData=(sc.Default)&firstPage=true&transitionType=Default)

23. Void ab initio means that the action taken is void; it is not voidable. See id.

24. Void ab initio means that the action taken "has no legal effect." Id.

25. "A void action cannot be ratified or validated [or certified]." Id.

26. "An action that is void ab initio never had any legal effect." Id (emphasis added).

Glossary

Void ab initio

Having no legal effect from inception.

A law, agreement, sale, or other action that is void has no legal effect. A void action cannot be ratified or validated. An action that is void ab initio never had any legal effect. Ab initio is usually italicized because it is a Latin term that means from the beginning.

Void and void ab initio have the same technical definition, but void ab initio is a stronger term that is less likely to be improperly confused with voidable.

END OF DOCUMENT

RESOURCE ID W-027-8278 DOCUMENT TYPE GLOSSARY

PRODUCTS
PLC Arbitration - International, PLC US Antitrust, PLC US Bankruptcy & Restructuring, PLC US Capital Markets & Corporate Governance, PLC US Commercial Litigation, PLC US Commercial Transactions, PLC US Corporate and M&A, PLC US Corporate and Securities, PLC US Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation, PLC US Federal Litigation, PLC US Finance, PLC US Glossary, PLC US Government Practice: Federal, PLC US Government Practice: State & Local, PLC US Health Care, PLC US Intellectual Property and Technology, PLC US Labor and Employment, PLC US Law Department, PLC US Legal Operations & Professional Development, PLC US Life Sciences & FDA Regulatory, PLC US Real Estate, PLC US Securities Litigation & Enforcement, PLC US Tax, PLC US Trusts & Estates

© 2022 THOMSON REUTERS. NO CLAIM TO ORIGINAL U.S. GOVERNMENT WORKS.

27. In order for Arizona to conduct a valid election, the Arizona Secretary of State must comply with the requirements contained in A.R.S. § 16-442 et seq. See A.R.S. § 16-442.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

28. If the legal requirements contained in A.R.S. § 16-442 were not met, then the Arizona Secretary of State had no authority to use any voting machine or device in violation of said statute.

29. If the legal requirements contained in A.R.S. § 16-442 were not met, then the Defendants had no authority to certify the results of Arizona's 2020 presidential election and all 2020 presidential election signatures are void ab initio.

STATE OF ARIZONA OFFICIAL CANVASS

2020 GENERAL ELECTION OFFICIAL CANVASS CERTIFICATION

I, Katie Hobbs, Arizona Secretary of State, do hereby certify that the foregoing canvass is a true, correct and complete tabulation of the votes cast at the 2020 General Election held in the State of Arizona on the 3rd day of November, 2020. The canvass displays the name of each person who appeared on the ballot for a federal and state office in the election and the number of votes received for each person, as shown by the tabulations received from the Boards of Supervisors of each county in the State of Arizona.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Arizona, this 30th day of November, 2020, at the Capitol in Phoenix.

Katie Hobbs
Secretary of State

A.R.S. § 16-648 requires that the canvass be conducted in the presence of the Governor and Attorney General whose affirming signatures follow.

Doug Ducey
Governor

Mark Brnovich
Attorney General

Page 11

STATE OF ARIZONA OFFICIAL CANVASS

2020 GENERAL ELECTION OFFICIAL CANVASS CERTIFICATION

I, Katie Hobbs, Arizona Secretary of State, do hereby certify that the foregoing canvass of election returns is a true, correct and complete tabulation of the votes cast for and against Propositions at the 2020 General Election held in the State of Arizona on the 3rd day of November, 2020.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Arizona, this 30th day of November, 2020, at the Capitol in Phoenix.

Katie Hobbs
Secretary of State

A.R.S. § 16-648 requires that this canvass be conducted in the presence of the Governor and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court whose affirming signatures follow.

Doug Ducey
Governor

Robert M. Brutinel
Chief Justice
Arizona Supreme Court

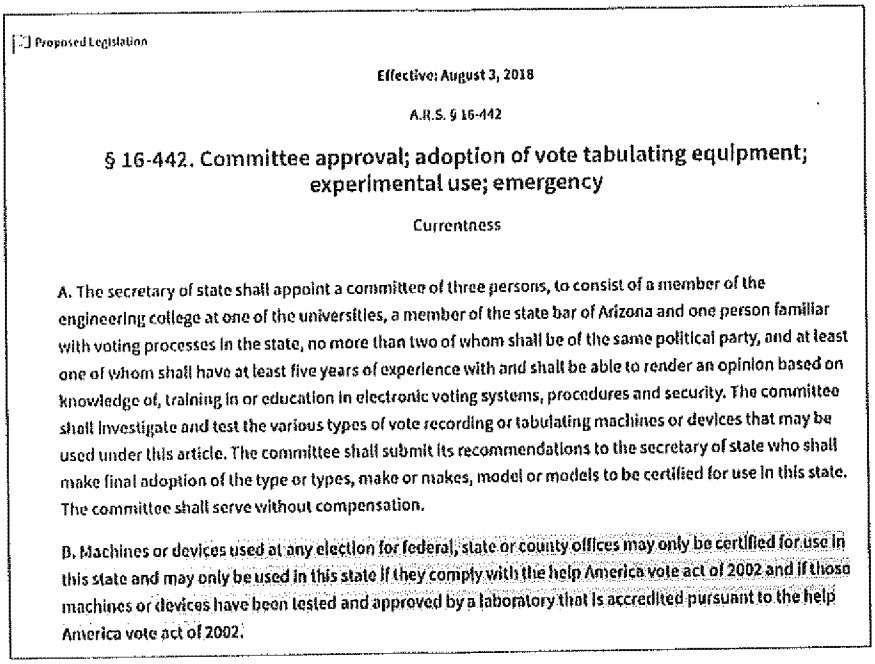
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Arizona Secretary of State, 2020 Election State Canvass, https://azsos.gov/sites/default/files/2020_General_State_Canvass.pdf (last visited June 30, 2022).

30. If none of the Defendants had the legal authority to certify Arizona's 2020 presidential election results, then this Court must issue a peremptory writ of mandamus against each named Defendant compelling the Defendants to decertify Arizona's 2020 presidential election and to rerun Arizona's 2020 presidential election in accordance with Arizona law.

B. The Dominion electronic voting machines that were used in the 2020 presidential election were not certified by an accredited Voting System Test Laboratory.

31. "Machines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use in this state and may only be used in this state IF they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 AND if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002." A.R.S. § 16-442(B) (emphasis added).



Proposed Legislation

Effective: August 3, 2018

A.R.S. § 16-442

§ 16-442. Committee approval; adoption of vote tabulating equipment; experimental use; emergency

Currentness

A. The secretary of state shall appoint a committee of three persons, to consist of a member of the engineering college at one of the universities, a member of the state bar of Arizona and one person familiar with voting processes in the state, no more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, and at least one of whom shall have at least five years of experience with and shall be able to render an opinion based on knowledge of, training in or education in electronic voting systems, procedures and security. The committee shall investigate and test the various types of vote recording or tabulating machines or devices that may be used under this article. The committee shall submit its recommendations to the secretary of state who shall make final adoption of the type or types, make or makes, model or models to be certified for use in this state. The committee shall serve without compensation.

B. Machines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use in this state and may only be used in this state if they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 and if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

32. Arizona law requires that its voting machines be certified by a Voting System Test Laboratory that "is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002." Id (emphasis added).

> B. Machines or devices used at any election for federal, state or county offices may only be certified for use in this state and may only be used in this state if they comply with the help America vote act of 2002 and if those machines or devices have been tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002.

33. The Help America Vote Act of 2002 created "the Election Assistance Commission" and the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) is referred to in the Act as the "Commission." 52 U.S.C. § 20921 (formerly cited as 42 U.S.C. § 15321).

> 52 U.S.C.A. § 20921
> Formerly cited as 42 USCA § 15321
>
> § 20921. Establishment
>
> Currentness
>
> There is hereby established as an independent entity the Election Assistance Commission (hereafter in this subchapter referred to as the "Commission"), consisting of the members appointed under this subpart. Additionally, there is established the Election Assistance Commission Standards Board (including the Executive Board of such Board) and the Election Assistance Commission Board of Advisors under subpart 2 of this part (hereafter in this subpart referred to as the "Standards Board" and the "Board of Advisors", respectively) and the Technical Guidelines Development Committee under subpart 3 of this part.

34. The Election Assistance Commission "shall serve as a national clearinghouse and resource for the compilation of information and review of procedures with respect to the administration of Federal elections by -- … (2) carrying out the duties described in part B of this subchapter (relating to the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting system hardware and software)...." 52 U.S.C. § 20922 (formerly cited as 42 U.S.C. § 15322).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 52 U.S.C.A. § 20922
> Formerly cited as 42 USCA § 15322
>
> § 20922. Duties
>
> Currentness
>
> The Commission shall serve as a national clearinghouse and resource for the compilation of information and review of procedures with respect to the administration of Federal elections by--
>
> (1) carrying out the duties described in subpart 3 of this part (relating to the adoption of voluntary voting system guidelines), including the maintenance of a clearinghouse of information on the experiences of State and local governments in implementing the guidelines and in operating voting systems in general;
>
> (2) carrying out the duties described in part B of this subchapter (relating to the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting system hardware and software);

35. The Election Assistance Commission "shall provide for the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting system hardware and software by accredited laboratories." 52 U.S.C. § 20971(a)(1) (formerly cited as 42 U.S.C. § 15371) (emphasis added).

> 52 U.S.C.A. § 20971
> Formerly cited as 42 USCA § 15371
>
> § 20971. Certification and testing of voting systems
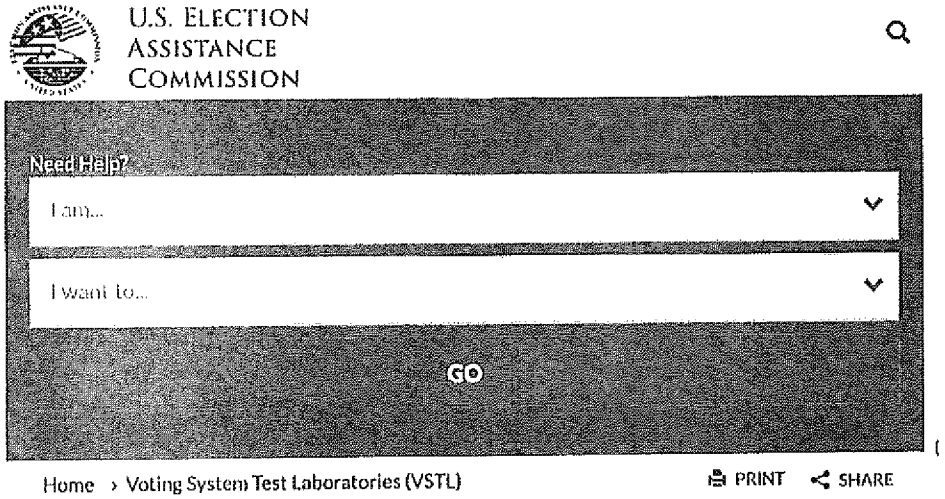
>
> Currentness
>
> (a) Certification and testing
>
> (1) In general
>
> The Commission shall provide for the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting system hardware and software by accredited laboratories.
>
> (2) Optional use by States
>
> At the option of a State, the State may provide for the testing, certification, decertification, or recertification of its voting system hardware and software by the laboratories accredited by the Commission under this section.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

36. Additionally, at "the option of a State, the State may provide for the testing, certification, decertification, or recertification of its voting system hardware and software by the laboratories accredited by the Commission under this section." 52 U.S.C. § 20971(a)(2) (formerly cited as 42 U.S.C. § 15371) (emphasis added).

37. Pursuant to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, there are only two Voting System Test Laboratories (VSTL) that are accredited by the Election Assistance Commission: (1) Pro V&V; and (2) SLI Compliance. U.S. Election Assistance Commission, VOTING SYSTEM TEST LABORATORIES (VSTL), https://www.eac.gov/voting-equipment/voting-system-test-laboratories-vstl (last visited June 21, 2022) (emphasis added).



VOTING SYSTEM TEST LABORATORIES (VSTL)

Section 231(b) of the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002 (42 U.S.C. §15371(b)) requires that the EAC provide for the accreditation and revocation of accreditation of independent, non-federal laboratories qualified to test voting systems to Federal standards. Generally, the EAC considers for accreditation those laboratories evaluated and recommend by the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) pursuant to HAVA Section 231(b)(1). However, consistent with HAVA Section 231(b)(2)(B), the Commission may also vote to accredit laboratories outside of those recommended by NIST upon publication of an explanation of the reason for any such accreditation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Pro V&V

6705 Odyssey Dr NW Suite C,
Huntsville, Alabama 35806
Status: Accredited
Program Manager: , President
Phone: 256-713-1111
Learn More >

SLI Compliance, a Division of Gaming Laboratories International, LLC

4720 Independence Street
Wheat Ridge, Colorado 80033
Status: Accredited
Program Manager: , Director of Operations
Phone: 303-422-1566
Learn More >

2 results found.
page 1 of 1

38. Pursuant to the Arizona Secretary of State, the Dominion voting machines used in the 2020 presidential election were certified on November 5, 2019, with an EAC System ID # as follows: DVS-DemSuite5.5-B. Arizona Secretary of State, Certified Vote Tabulating Equipment, https://azsos.gov/sites/default/files/2020.07.22_Official_List.pdf (last visited June 21, 2022).

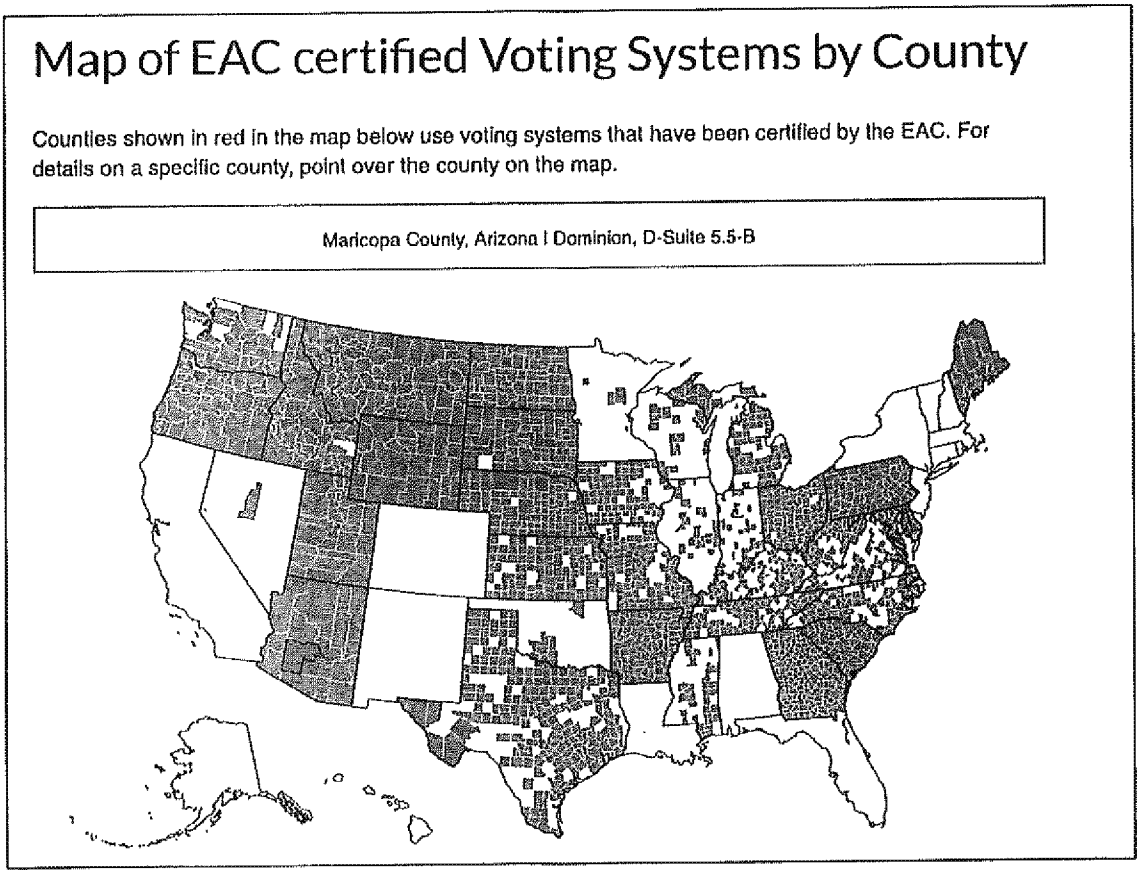
Arizona Secretary of State
Certified Vote Tabulating Equipment
Pursuant to A.R.S. § 16-442

Updated 07/22/2020

Company	Voting System/System Component	Software	Hardware/Firmware	EAC System ID #	Date of Certification
Diebold	~~GEMS 1.18.24~~ Voting System *See original certification 11/2005	~~EMP Model D software (4.6.2)~~	~~AccuVote-TSX DRE Model D (4.6.4)~~ ExpressPoll 5000 Electronic Poll Book (CardWriter (1.0) component only) Election Media Processor (EMP) Model D software (4.6.2)	~~N-1-06-22-22-003~~ N-1-06-22-22-004 N-1-06-22-22-005	~~8/15/2007~~
Dominion	EMS 5.5.32.4	EMS-Election Event Designer (5.5.32.4) EMS- Results Tally & Reporting (5.5.32.4) EMS-Audio Studio (5.5.32.4) EMS-Data Center Manager (5.5.32.4) EMS-Application Server (5.5.32.4) EMS-Network Attached Storage (5.5.32.4) EMS-Database Server (5.5.32.4) EMS-Election Data Translator (5.5.32.4) EMS-Adjudication (5.5.32.1) ImageCast Voter Activation (ICVA) (5.5.32.4) ImageCast Central (ICC) (5.5.32.5) ImageCast Precinct2 (ICP2) (5.5.1.8) ImageCast X (ICX) (5.5.13.2)	ICVA Smart Card Reader (ACR39U) ICC Scanner (Canon Dr-G1130) ICC Scanner (InoTec HiPro 821) ICP2 Hardware (PCOS-330A) Ballot Box-Stacking (ICP2) (PCOS-350A) ICX Classic Hardware (Avalue SID-21V-Z37) ICX BMD Printer (HP M402dne) ICX BMD UPS (APC SMT1500C) Accessible Tactile Interface USB (ATI for ICP2 & ICX) (Rev.A)	DVS-DemSuite5.5-B	11/05/2019

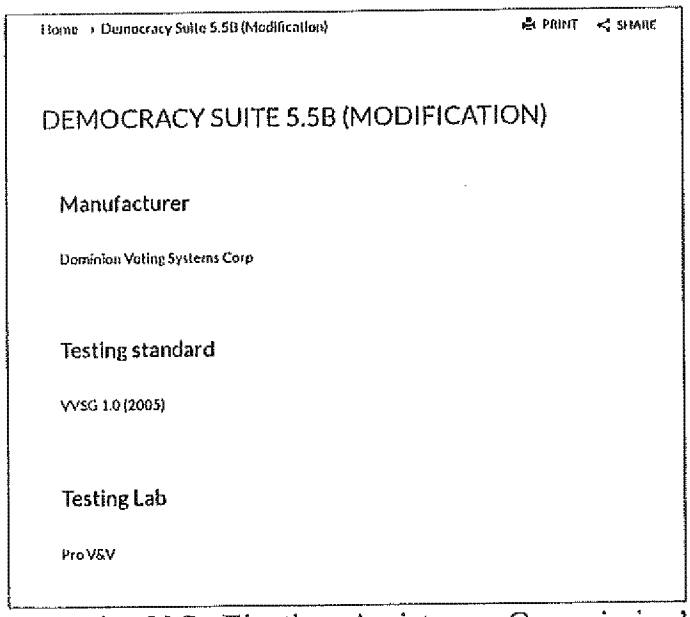
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

39. During the 2020 presidential election Dominion voting machines with DVS-DemSuite5.5-B were used in Maricopa County, Arizona. U.S. Election Assistance Commission System Certification Process, https://www.eac.gov/voting-equipment/system-certification-process.

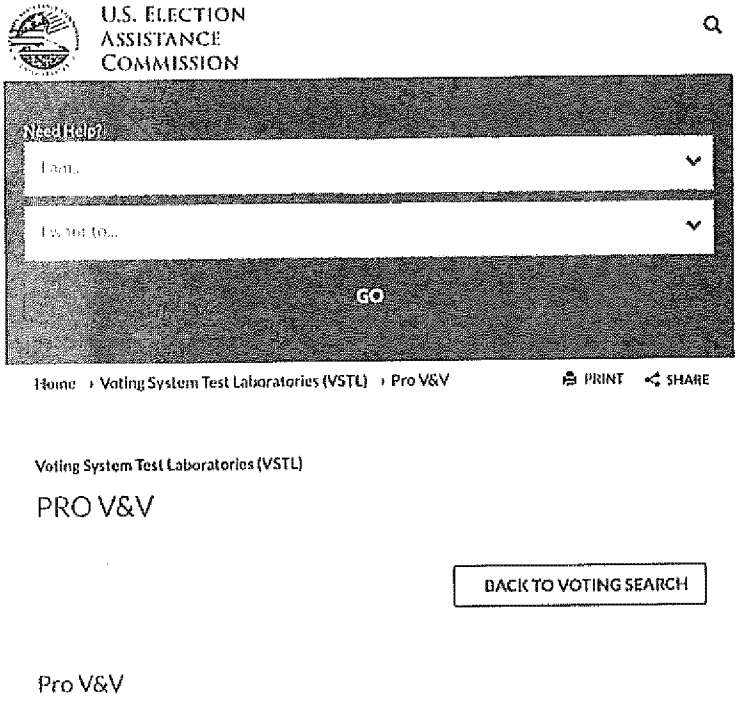


40. Pursuant to the Arizona Secretary of State's website and hyperlink in the above PDF, DVS-DemSuite5.5-B is manufactured by Dominion Voting Systems Corp and the Testing Laboratory was Pro V&V. U.S. Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/voting-equipment/democracy-suite-55b-modification (last visited June 21, 2022).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



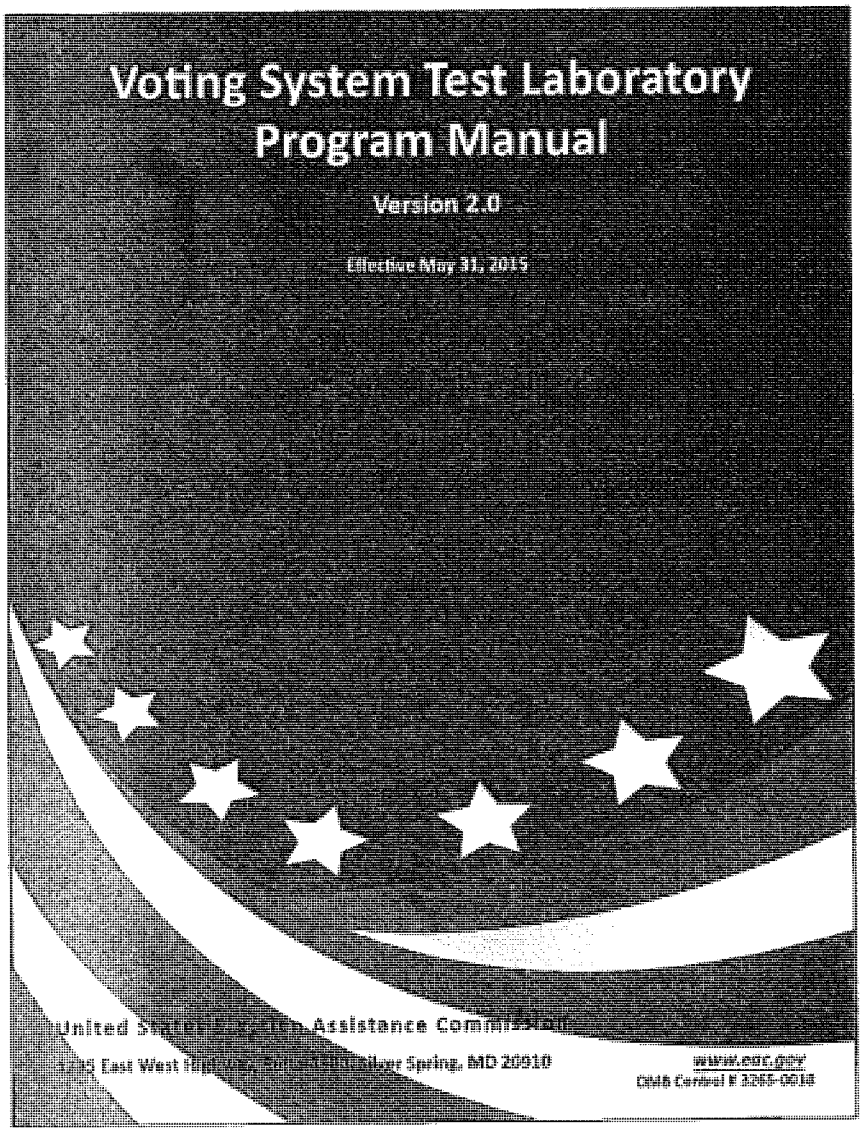
41. Pursuant to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission's website, Pro V&V received a Certificate of Accreditation on February 24, 2015. U.S. Election Assistance Commission, Voting System Test Labratories, https://www.eac.gov/voting-equipment/voting-system-test-laboratories-vstl/pro-vv (last visited August 11, 2022).



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Pro V&V was accredited by the EAC on February 24, 2015. Federal law provides that EAC accreditation of a voting system test laboratory cannot be revoked unless the EAC Commissioners vote to revoke the accreditation: "The accreditation of a laboratory for purposes of this section may not be revoked unless the revocation is approved by a vote of the Commission." 52 U.S. Code § 20971(c)(2). The EAC has never voted to revoke the accreditation of Pro V&V. Pro V&V has undergone continuing accreditation assessments and had new accreditation certificate issued on February 1, 2021.

42. Pursuant to Version 2.0 of the Voting System Test Laboratory Program Manual, which was effective May 31, 2015, "A grant of accreditation is valid for a period not to exceed two years." Voting System Test Laboratory Program Manual, p. 39, § 3.8.



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Voting System Test Laboratory Program Manual, Version 2.0

3.7.4. Accreditation Logo. A VSTL may display the EAC laboratory accreditation logo. Only the EAC authorized logo may be used. The display must be used in a manner consistent Sections 3.7.1. - 3.7.3., above. Specifications for the reproduction and use of the EAC logo are found in Appendix D.

3.8. Expiration and Renewal of Accreditation. Accreditation is valid for a period not to exceed two years. A VSTL's accreditation expires on the date annotated on the Certificate of Accreditation. VSTLs in good standing shall renew their accreditation by submitting an application package to the Program Director, consistent with the procedures of Section 3.4 of this Chapter, no earlier than 60 days before the accreditation expiration date and no later than 30 days before that date. Laboratories that timely file the renewal application package shall retain their accreditation while the review and processing of their application is pending. VSTLs in good standing shall also retain their accreditation should circumstances leave the EAC without a quorum to conduct the vote required under Section 3.5.5.

43. Pro V&V received its certification on February 24, 2015.

United States Election Assistance Commission

Certificate of Accreditation

Pro V&V, Inc.
Huntsville, Alabama

is recognized by the U.S. Election Assistance Commission for the testing of voting systems to the 2005 Voluntary Voting Systems Guidelines under the criteria set forth in the EAC Voting System Testing and Certification Program and Laboratory Accreditation Program. Pro V&V is also recognized as having successfully completed assessments by the National Voluntary Laboratory Accreditation Program for conformance to the requirements of ISO/IEC 17025 and the criteria set forth in NIST Handbooks 150 and 150-22.

Effective Through

February 24, 2017

Date: 2/24/15

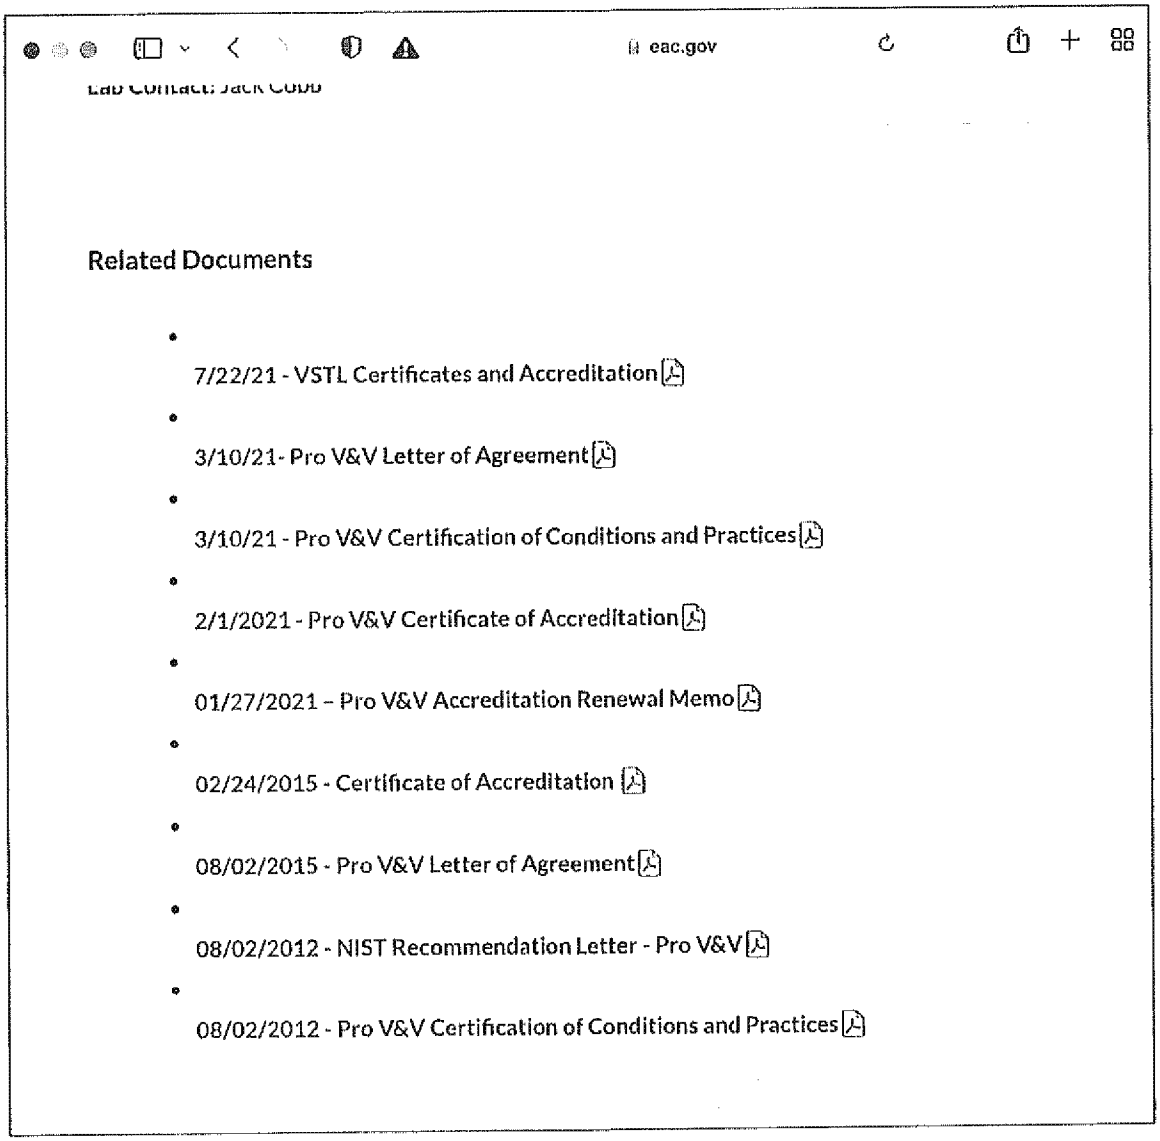
Acting Executive Director, U.S. Election Assistance Commission

EAC Lab Code: 1501

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

44. Pro V&V's Certificate of Accreditation expired on February 24, 2017.

45. On November 3, 2020, Pro V&V was not accredited by the U.S. Election Assistance Commission. U.S. Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/voting-equipment/voting-system-test-laboratories-vstl/pro-vv (last visited August 11, 2022).



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

46. Pro V&V did not receive another Certificate of Accreditation until January 27, 2021, which was after the November 3, 2020 presidential election.

47. Since Arizona law expressly requires its voting "machines or devices" to have been "tested and approved by a laboratory that is accredited pursuant to the help America vote act of 2002" and Pro V&V was not accredited on November 5, 2019, it was unlawful and illegal for the Defendants to certify Arizona's 2020 presidential election when said results included Maricopa County's votes, which were void ab initio and uncertifiable.

48. The Dominion voting hardware and software that was used in the 2020 presidential election in Maricopa County failed to comply with A.R.S. § 16-442(B); said election was unlawful.

49. Election results that contain illegal and unlawful votes cannot be certified.

50. As such, the Defendants' certification of Arizona's 2020 presidential election was/is void *ab initio as the Defendants only have the authority to certify a lawful election.

51. Since it was unlawful and illegal for the Defendants to certify the 2020 presidential election with the Maricopa County votes included, the Defendants' signatures are void *ab initio.

52. An election that is void ab initio cannot be certified.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

WHEREFORE, premises considered, the Plaintiffs pray as follows:

1. That good and adequate service be had on all Defendants;

2. That this Court issue a peremptory Writ of Mandamus compelling the Arizona Secretary of State, Governor, Attorney General and Chief Justice to decertify Arizona's 2020 presidential election, recall Arizona's Joseph Robinette Biden, Jr.'s presidential electors, remove the Maricopa County votes from the 2020 presidential election results as they were/are void ab initio, order Maricopa County to rerun the Arizona 2020 presidential election, in accordance with the law, as soon as possible, by way of a special election, with paper ballots only, on a single election day, omitting Zuckerboxes and "no excuse" absentee mail-in ballots, with the paper ballots being counted by hand, with multiple members of all political parties present to observe, with unobstructed 24/7 public livestream cameras of all vote counting so that Arizona can restore voter confidence and Arizona's commitment to free and fair elections, with the Defendants then adding Maricopa County's presidential election votes to the remaining votes and ordering the Defendants to then certify a lawful 2020 presidential election; and

3. Such other relief to which the Plaintiffs may show themselves to be entitled.

Respectfully submitted this 31st day of August, 2022.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PRO SE* PLAINTIFFS

/s/ Daniel Wood
/s/ Brian Steiner
/s/ Paul Rice
P.O. Box 50631
Phoenix, AZ 85076
Email: russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)

PREPARED WITH ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

Russell A. Newman, TN BPR # 033462
(Motion for Admission Pro Hac Forthcoming)
The Newman Law Firm
253 S. Tamiami Trail
Suite 120
Nokomis, FL 34275
Email: russell@thenewmanlawfirm.com
(615) 554-1510 (Telephone)
Attorney for Plaintiffs

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

STATE OF Arizona)
COUNTY OF Pinal)

I have read the foregoing factual allegations contained in this Verified Writ of Mandamus and do hereby certify that they are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

JOY ANN HOLSINGER
Notary Public, State of Arizona
Pinal County
Commission # 574198
My Commission Expires
October 29, 2023

Daniel Wood
Plaintiff

SWORN TO AND SUBSCRIBED before me this 24 day of August, 2022.

Notary Public

My Commission Expires:

10/29/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

STATE OF ARIZONA)

COUNTY OF PINAL)

I have read the foregoing factual allegations contained in this Verified Writ of Mandamus and do hereby certify that they are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

JOY ANN HOLSINGER
Notary Public, State of Arizona
Pinal County
Commission # 574198
My Commission Expires
October 29, 2023

Brian Steiner
Plaintiff

SWORN TO AND SUBSCRIBED before me this 24 day of August, 2022.

Notary Public

My Commission Expires:

10/29/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

STATE OF Arizona)

COUNTY OF Maricopa)

I have read the foregoing factual allegations contained in this Verified Writ of Mandamus and do hereby certify that they are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

Paul Rice
Plaintiff

SWORN TO AND SUBSCRIBED before me this 23rd day of August, 2022.

Notary Public

My Commission Expires:

01-04-2026

WESTON BINGHAM
Notary Public - State of Arizona
MARICOPA COUNTY
Commission # 619765
Expires January 04, 2026

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/19/2023 10:31:25 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Constitutional Accountability Center brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Here is a link to CAC's webpage about its brief in the Minnesota case: https://www.theusconstitution.org/litigation/growe-v-simon/

The brief is here: https://www.theusconstitution.org/wp-content/uploads/2023/10/2023-10-06-CAC-14.3-Amicus-Brief-FINAL.pdf

It focuses exclusively on the federal constitutional issues.

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/24/2023 9:14:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
Subject: Marc Elias re Lindsey v. Whitmer

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

FYI - https://www.democracydocket.com/opinion/a-dangerous-legal-theory-returns-for-2024/

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/20/2023 6:12:52 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: 14.3 update
Attachments: 2023-10-18 Secretary Simon Response Brief.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Secretary Simon is not taking a position on the merits. He does say the case is ripe and the court should rule on the issues presented. I've attached his brief.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, October 20, 2023 at 11:30 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: 14.3 update

In Minnesota, is the Secretary taking a position on the merits?

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, October 20, 2023 9:00 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: 14.3 update

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

Please find attached the 14.3 Litigation Tracker for this week with updates highlighted.

Some things of note:

Colorado:

- In Anderson v. Griswold:
- The court denied Trump's Anti-SLAPP Motion to Dismiss.
- Secretary Griswold notified the court that her office received candidacy materials for Trump but would hold the application as pending while awaiting direction from the court.
- Trump filed a Motion to Realign Secretary Griswold as a Petitioner, citing her intent to hold Trump's candidacy application, comments she has made publicly about Trump, and the statement in her 9/29 Omnibus Response that "the Secretary believes that Mr. Trump incited the insurrection."

Michigan

- In Davis v. Benson and La Brant v. Benson:
- Secretary Benson filed a brief answering questions posed by the court. Secretary Benson argued that the Secretary has no affirmative legal duty or authority to decide whether the Fourteenth Amendment renders Trump eligible to be placed on the ballot prior to a court's review of the issue. Secretary Benson took no position as to the constitutional questions raised by 14.3 but laid out arguments raised on both sides.
- Trump filed motions to intervene and motions for summary disposition.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- A hearing is tentatively scheduled for November 6.

Minnesota

- In Growe v. Simon:
- The court denied the 2024 Trump Campaign's motion to intervene for procedural reasons. The court invited the Trump Campaign to file an amicus brief, which it did.
- Secretary Simon filed his brief arguing that Petitioners have standing and that the case is ripe. In the alternative (if the case is not ripe), Secretary Simon argues that the case is functionally justiciable and should be decided immediately.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No. A23-1354

STATE OF MINNESOTA

IN SUPREME COURT

Joan Growe, et al.,

Petitioners,

vs.

Steve Simon, Minnesota Secretary of State,

Respondent.

RESPONDENT STEVE SIMON'S BRIEF

LOCKRIDGE GRINDAL NAUEN, P.L.L.P.

Charles N. Nauen (#121216)
David J. Zoll (#0330681)
Rachel A. Kitze Collins (#0396555)

100 Washington Avenue South, Suite 2200
Minneapolis, MN 55401-2159
(612) 339-6900
cnnauen@locklaw.com
djzoll@locklaw.com
rakitzecollins@locklaw.com

OFFICE OF THE MINNESOTA ATTORNEY GENERAL

Nathan J. Hartshorn (#0320602)
Allen Cook Barr (#0399094)

445 Minnesota Street, Suite 1400
St. Paul, MN 55101
(651) 757-1316

Attorneys for Respondent Steve Simon

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FREE SPEECH FOR PEOPLE

Ronald Fein (pro hac vice)
Amira Mattar (pro hac vice)
Courtney Hostetler (pro hac vice)
John Bonifaz (pro hac vice)
Ben Clements (pro hac vice)

1320 Centre Street, #405
Newton, MA 02459
(617) 244-0234

Attorneys for Petitioners

JACOBSON, MAGNUSON,
ANDERSON & HALLORAN, P.C.

R. Reid LeBeau, II (#347504

180 East Fifth Street, Suite 940
St. Paul, MN 55101
(651) 644-4710

Attorney for Respondent Republican Party Minnesota

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

LEGAL ISSUES 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

STATEMENT OF FACTS 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. SECTION 204B.44 GRANTS PETITIONERS STANDING TO BRING THE PETITION. 4

II. THE PETITION IS JUSTICIABLE. 5

A. The Petition is Ripe for Adjudication. 5

B. Even If It Were Not Ripe, the Court Can Hear the Petition Because It Is Functionally Justiciable and Presents an Important Question of Statewide Significance that Must Be Decided Immediately. 7

CONCLUSION 10

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

FEDERAL CASES

McCarney v. Ford Motor Co.,
657 F.2d 230 (8th Cir. 1981) 6

Sierra Club v. Morton,
405 U.S. 727 (1972) 4

STATE CASES

Begin v Ritchie,
836 N.W.2d 545 (Minn. 2013) 5

Clark v. Pawlenty,
755 N.W.2d 293 (Minn. 2008) 5

Clifford v. Hoppe,
357 N.W.2d 98 (Minn. 1984) 1, 4

De La Fuente v. Simon,
940 N.W.2d 477 (Minn. 2020) 2

Dean v. City of Winona,
868 N.W.2d 1 (Minn. 2015) 1, 6, 7

In re Guardianship of Tschumy,
853 N.W.2d 728 (Minn. 2014) 8

Jasper v. Comm'r of Pub. Safety,
642 N.W.2d 435 (Minn. 2002) 6

League of Women Voters Minn. v. Ritchie,
819 N.W.2d 636 (Minn. 2012) 1, 4

Lee v. Delmont,
36 N.W.2d 530 (Minn. 1949) 6

Moe v. Alsop,
180 N.W.2d 255 (Minn. 1970) 4

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Minn. Majority v. Ritchie,
No. A09-950 (Minn. filed Jul. 22, 2009) 5

Onvoy, Inc. v. ALLETE, Inc.,
736 N.W.2d 611 (Minn. 2007) 1, 6, 7

Pfoser v. Harpstead,
953 N.W.2d 507 (Minn. 2021) 8

Snell v. Walz,
985 N.W.2d 277 (Minn. 2023) 8

Snyder's Drug Stores, Inc. v. Minn. State Bd. of Pharmacy,
221 N.W.2d 162 (Minn. 1974) 4

State by Humphrey v. Philip Morris Inc.,
551 N.W.2d 490 (Minn. 1996) 4

State v. Brooks,
604 N.W.2d 345 (Minn. 2000) 9

State v. Murphy,
545 N.W.2d 909 (Minn. 1996) 6

State v. Rud,
359 N.W.2d 573 (Minn. 1984) 1, 8, 9

STATE STATUTES

Minn. Stat. § 203B.081 3

Minn. Stat. § 204B.35 3

Minn. Stat. § 204B.45 3

Minn. Stat. § 204B.44 ..... Passim

Minn. Stat. § 207A.11 2

Minn. Stat. § 207A.12 3

Minn. Stat. § 207A.13 2

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

LEGAL ISSUES

I. Do Petitioners have standing to bring the petition?

The Court raised this issue in its September 20 order.

Most apposite authorities:

Minn. Stat. § 204B.44 (2022)

League of Women Voters Minn. v. Ritchie, 819 N.W.2d 636 (Minn. 2012)

Clifford v. Hoppe, 357 N.W.2d 98 (Minn. 1984)

II. Is the petition ripe for adjudication?

The Court raised this issue in its September 20 order.

Most apposite authorities:

Onvoy, Inc. v. ALLETE, Inc., 736 N.W.2d 611 (Minn. 2007)

Dean v. City of Winona, 868 N.W.2d 1 (Minn. 2015)

State v. Rud, 359 N.W.2d 573 (Minn. 1984)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioners invoked this Court's original jurisdiction under Minn. Stat. § 204B.44, asking the Court to (1) declare that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States and (2) direct Respondent Secretary of State Steve Simon to exclude Trump's name from the ballot for Minnesota's presidential nomination primary in March and its general election in November.

The Court directed the parties to file briefs addressing standing, ripeness, and the interpretation and application of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Minnesota will hold a presidential nomination primary on March 5, 2024. See Minn. Stat. § 207A.11(b) (2022) (addressing date for presidential nomination primary). Major political parties in the state wishing to participate in the primary are required to submit the names of the candidates that will appear on their respective primary ballots no later than January 2. See id. § 207A.13, subd. 2(a) (2022). In the 2020 election cycle, the two participating parties submitted their candidate lists months before the deadline. See, e.g., De La Fuente v. Simon, 940 N.W.2d 477, 481 (Minn. 2020) (noting that Republican Party of Minnesota submitted candidate list for 2020 presidential nomination primary in October 2019). The Secretary, however, has no knowledge regarding when the parties will transmit their lists in the 2024 cycle.

In September 2023, Petitioners asked this Court to hold that an anticipated candidate for the Republican Party presidential nomination is ineligible to appear on ballots in

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Minnesota because he is disqualified from office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Because of the deadlines in state and federal law, Minnesota election officials must provide printed ballots and programmed assistive voting equipment to voters no later than January 19, 2024. See Minn. Stat. §§ 203B.081, subd. 1; 204B.35, subd. 4; 204B.45, subd. 2; 207A.12(a) (2022); Maeda Decl. ¶ 5. To meet this deadline, election officials must have the final list of candidates for the presidential primary ballot no later than the close of business on Friday, January 5, 2024. (Maeda Decl. ¶¶ 10-12.)

ARGUMENT

The Secretary agrees with Petitioners that they have standing to bring this petition and that the issues raised in the petition are ripe for adjudication. He takes no position, however, on the further issues the Court referenced in its September 20 order regarding the interpretation and application of the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Order ¶ 3(2).)

The question presented by the petition is of extraordinary importance. Minnesota election officials have a pressing need to see the question resolved within the limited time remaining before the January 5 deadline—which promises to be a tall order if the Court determines, as it has in other recent cases involving candidate eligibility, that a fact-finding hearing before a special master is necessary in this matter. As a result, the Secretary asks the Court to hear and rule on the merits of the petition so that the county and local officials at the core of the state's election system can conduct the presidential primary in the orderly and professional fashion that Minnesotans expect and deserve.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. SECTION 204B.44 GRANTS PETITIONERS STANDING TO BRING THE PETITION.

Standing is the requirement that a party have a sufficient stake in a controversy to seek relief from a court. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 731-32 (1972). A suit brought by an entity that lacks standing must be dismissed. State by Humphrey v. Philip Morris Inc., 551 N.W.2d 490, 497 (Minn. 1996). Under Minnesota law, a plaintiff can acquire standing in two ways: by alleging that they have suffered an "injury-in-fact" or by demonstrating that they are the beneficiary of a legislative enactment granting standing. *Snyder's Drug Stores, Inc. v. Minn. State Bd. of Pharm*acy, 221 N.W.2d 162, 165 (Minn. 1974).

Petitioners brought their petition under Minn. Stat. § 204B.44, which authorizes "[a]ny individual [to] file a petition . . . for the correction of" particular errors and omissions related to elections. Minn. Stat. § 204B.44(a) (2022); Pet. 1, 6 ¶ 25. The statute thus grants standing to a wide variety of persons and organizations. League of Women Voters Minn. v. Ritchie, 819 N.W.2d 636, 645 n.7 (Minn. 2012). There can be no serious dispute that Petitioners, all of whom allege they are Minnesota voters, are within the class of entities who possess statutory standing to bring the petition. See id.; see also Clifford v. Hoppe, 357 N.W.2d 98, 100 n.1 (Minn. 1984) (holding that "a registered voter has a sufficient interest in the election" to sustain Minn. Stat. § 204B.44 petition); Moe v. Alsop, 180 N.W.2d 255, 257 & n.1 (Minn. 1970) (holding, before creation of section 204B.44, that any "person qualified to vote" had standing to challenge eligibility of candidate on ballot).[1]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. THE PETITION IS JUSTICIABLE.

If the underlying eligibility issue in this case is not resolved in a timely manner, it runs the risk of interfering with the orderly administration of the state's elections. As a result, in light of (1) the lack of any real ambiguity regarding whether the state Republican Party will select Donald Trump as one of its candidates for the March presidential nomination primary and (2) Minnesota election officials' pressing need to receive the final lists of certified candidates to appear on primary ballots, the petition is both ripe and justiciable. Even if the Court holds that Petitioners' claims are technically unripe, it should hear and decide those claims nonetheless pursuant to the "functional justiciability" standard it has adopted for technically moot issues that are presented under similarly important and exigent circumstances.

A. The Petition is Ripe for Adjudication.

Minnesota courts may only hear and decide legal claims that are justiciable—that is, claims that (1) involve "definite and concrete assertions of right that emanate from a

---

[1] State law balances the broad grant of statutory standing in section 204B.44 by placing narrow subject-matter restrictions on the kinds of alleged errors and omissions that are subject to correction under the statute. See, e.g., Begin v Ritchie, 836 N.W.2d 545, 548 (Minn. 2013) (holding that statute "does not embrace claims based on conduct that may only generally implicate elections"); Minn. Majority v. Ritchie, No. A09-950, at 5 (Minn. filed Jul. 22, 2009) ("[T]he plain language of the statute requires that the claim relate to a duty concerning a specific election."). But because the instant petition unquestionably seeks "correction of [a] ballot and directly related election procedures," see Clark v. Pawlenty, 755 N.W.2d 293, 299 (Minn. 2008), the petition fits within these subject-matter limitations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal source," (2) involve a "genuine conflict in tangible interests between parties with adverse interests," and (3) are "capable of specific resolution by judgment rather than presenting hypothetical facts that would form an advisory opinion." Onvoy, Inc. v. ALLETE, Inc., 736 N.W.2d 611, 617-18 (Minn. 2007). This Court does not issue advisory opinions, nor does it "decide cases merely to establish precedent." Jasper v. Comm'r of Pub. Safety, 642 N.W.2d 435, 439 (Minn. 2002). Legal claims can be non-justiciable if, among other things, they are brought too soon (rendering them unripe) or if they are brought too late for the court to provide effectual relief (rendering them moot). McCarney v. Ford Motor Co., 657 F.2d 230, 233 (8th Cir. 1981).

A case is ripe when it presents "a substantial and real controversy between the parties" that is based on a "direct and imminent injury." State v. Murphy, 545 N.W.2d 909, 917 (Minn. 1996). Issues that "have no existence other than in the realm of future possibility" are "purely hypothetical" and are therefore not justiciable. Lee v. Delmont, 36 N.W.2d 530, 537 (Minn. 1949). Finally, this Court does not apply ripeness or other justiciability doctrines "mechanically"; instead, it examines all facts and circumstances that support or cut against accepting jurisdiction over a legal dispute. Dean v. City of Winona, 868 N.W.2d 1, 5 (Minn. 2015).

Petitioners' claims meet the requirements that this Court has recognized for a justiciable controversy. Specifically, the claims involve definite and concrete assertions of right that emanate from Minn. Stat. § 204B.44 and Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment; they involve a genuine conflict in tangible interests between Petitioners, the Intervenor-Respondent Minnesota Republican Party, and Donald Trump, who are parties with adverse interests; and they are capable of specific resolution by the Court's judgment rather than presenting hypothetical facts that would form an advisory opinion. See Onvoy, 736 N.W.2d at 617-18.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Although Intervenor-Respondent Minnesota Republican Party has not, to date, submitted a list of presidential nomination primary candidates to the Secretary that includes Donald Trump, that event cannot be characterized as hypothetical. As alleged in the petition, it seems certain that the state Republican party will name Trump as one of the candidates it desires to include on the March primary ballot. (See, e.g., Pet. ¶¶ 1, 315.) There is therefore no meaningful risk that this Court's decision on the legal issues addressed by the other parties will be an advisory opinion. Cf. Onvoy, 736 N.W.2d at 617-18. Meanwhile, Minnesota election officials' countervailing need to have these legal questions resolved in time for them to conduct the nomination primary in an orderly fashion counsels strongly in favor of erring on the side of addressing the merits.

For these reasons, the non-"mechanical" analysis of justiciability that this Court conducts, see Dean, 868 N.W.2d at 5, leads to the conclusion that Plaintiffs' claims are ripe and therefore justiciable. The petition describes a live and current dispute, and as a result this Court can hear it without delay.

B. Even If It Were Not Ripe, the Court Can Hear the Petition Because It Is Functionally Justiciable and Presents an Important Question of Statewide Significance that Must Be Decided Immediately.

One important consequence of this Court's non-mechanical approach to justiciability is that some legal claims, though they are technically moot, are nonetheless properly subject to adjudication by Minnesota courts. When a case is "functionally justiciable" and also presents an important question of statewide significance that must be decided immediately, this Court has discretion to hear it even if it is formally moot. State v. Rud, 359 N.W.2d 573, 576 (Minn. 1984); see also Snell v. Walz, 985 N.W.2d 277, 284 (Minn. 2023). If the fact that the Republican Party has not yet submitted its primary candidates to the Secretary leads the Court to conclude Petitioners' claims are unripe, the facts of this case support recognizing a functionally identical limited exception to the ripeness standard. The Court should hold that, under very rare circumstances like these, it has discretion to hear formally unripe claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mootness is the temporal mirror image of ripeness. A case must be dismissed as moot when a decision on the merits is no longer necessary or a court can no longer award effective relief. Pfoser v. Harpstead, 953 N.W.2d 507, 514 n.4 (Minn. 2021). This Court, however, has recognized a narrow exception to mootness that grants the Court discretion to hear a formally moot case if

1. The action is "functionally justiciable"—that is, the record contains sufficient material to permit effective judicial analysis, including substantive presentations of both sides of the relevant issues—and
2. The issues presented are "important public issues of statewide significance that should be decided immediately."

Rud, 359 N.W.2d at 576. In the narrow range of cases that meet the above criteria, judicial resolution of questions that are technically moot is necessary to prevent serious adverse effects on the state and its judicial system. See, e.g., In re Guardianship of Tschumy, 853 N.W.2d 728, 741 (Minn. 2014) (applying exception to formally moot case because of pressing need to clarify scope of guardians' authority to consent to remove their wards from life support); State v. Brooks, 604 N.W.2d 345, 348 (Minn. 2000) (applying exception to consideration of formally moot issue related to cash bail because rejecting appeal risked creating "a class of defendants with constitutional claims but no remedy"); Rud, 359 N.W.2d at 576 (applying exception because "a failure to decide [formally moot issues] now could have a continuing adverse impact in other criminal trials if trial judges were to rely on the Court of Appeals' decision").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The criteria that define the mootness exception recognized in Rud very rarely apply to legal claims that are unripe, because it is only under extraordinary circumstances that (1) a particular legal issue is nominally unripe but nonetheless (2) it has been briefed in such depth, from multiple sides, that it is functionally justiciable and (3) it requires resolution immediately to avoid serious consequences on a matter of statewide significance. In other words, extending the functional-justiciability exception to mootness so that it also applies to ripeness would impact only an extremely narrow class of actions. Regardless, the policy justification for recognizing this Court's discretion to hear unripe claims under these circumstances is no different than the justification for the mootness exception: there is no reason to inflict damage on Minnesotans by failing to reach highly consequential legal issues that are well within the Court's ability to resolve without delay.

Though few disputes would fall within a functional-justiciability exception to the ripeness rule, this case clearly does so. The current litigation is functionally justiciable, because the Court has received extensive briefing on all relevant legal issues from parties and amici and because there currently remains sufficient time for a special master to resolve any genuine disputes of material fact.[2] Moreover, under the current circumstances, the eligibility of presidential candidates to appear on ballots in Minnesota's presidential nomination primary is a vital issue of statewide concern that requires immediate resolution. Minnesota's election officials need the legal issues raised in the petition answered so that they can conduct the March primary in an orderly and professional fashion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For these reasons, if the Court determines that Petitioners' claims are not yet ripe, the Secretary requests that the Court extend the functional justiciability mootness exception to unripe cases as well. Under that exception, the Court can and should exercise its discretion to hear the petition so that Minnesota election officials can receive clear instructions regarding the contents of the March primary ballot no later than January 5.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, the Secretary requests that the Court hold that Petitioners have standing to bring the claims in the Petition and that those claims are ripe for adjudication. In the alternative, the Secretary requests that the Court find the case is functionally justiciable and decide it immediately.

---

[2] The potential need for special-master proceedings is a key element of the time pressure in this matter. There is currently sufficient time before ballot-printing must begin for a special master to conduct an evidentiary hearing and issue findings of fact and then allow the matter to return to this Court for final resolution. If, however, the Court dismisses the petition as unripe and thus forces Petitioners to wait and re-file only when the state Republican party elects to submit its list of presidential primary candidates, it is likely that there will be too little time remaining for any such process to be completed before January 5.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dated: October 18, 2023

Respectfully submitted,

KEITH ELLISON
Attorney General
State of Minnesota

/s/Nathan J. Hartshorn
NATHAN J. HARTSHORN
Assistant Attorney General
Atty. Reg. No. 0320602

ALLEN COOK BARR
Assistant Attorney General
Atty Reg. No. 0399094

445 Minnesota Street, Suite 1400
St. Paul, Minnesota 55101-2131
(651) 757-1252 (Voice)
(651) 297-1235 (Fax)
nathan.hartshorn@ag.state.mn.us allen.barr@ag.state.mn.us

ATTORNEYS FOR RESPONDENT
STEVE SIMON, MINNESOTA SECRETARY OF STATE

#5595984

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 10/12/2023 7:23:57 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: 14.3 "self-executing" issue
Attachments: Baude & Paulsen.pdf; In re Griffin[15].pdf; Blackman & Tillman.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

Heather and Erik,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I hope this is helpful.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Abstract: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids holding office by former office holders who then participate in insurrection or rebellion. Because of a range of misperceptions and mistaken assumptions, Section Three's full legal consequences have not been appreciated or enforced. This article corrects those mistakes by setting forth the full sweep and force of Section Three.

First, Section Three remains an enforceable part of the Constitution, not limited to the Civil War, and not effectively repealed by nineteenth century amnesty legislation. Second, Section Three is self-executing, operating as an immediate disqualification from office, without the need for additional action by Congress. It can and should be enforced by every official, state or federal, who judges qualifications. Third, to the extent of any conflict with prior constitutional rules, Section Three repeals, supersedes, or simply satisfies them. This includes the rules against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws, the Due Process Clause, and even the free speech principles of the First Amendment. Fourth, Section Three covers a broad range of conduct against the authority of the constitutional order, including many instances of indirect participation or support as "aid or comfort." It covers a broad range of former offices, including the Presidency. And in particular, it disqualifies former President Donald Trump, and potentially many others, because of their participation in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 presidential election.

Introduction 3
I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today 7
A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language 7
B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?) 11
II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing 17
A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification 17
B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three? 22
1. Seeking Office 23
a. by election 23
b. by appointment 26
2. Holding Office 27
3. Special Situations 29
C. The Problem of Griffin's Case 35
1. Background 35
2. Chase on Section Three 37
a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" 38
b. The argument from "the intention of the people" 40

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law 42
d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power 44
3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum 45
III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions 49
A. Bills of Attainder 53
B. Ex Post Facto Laws 54
C. Due Process of Law 56
D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment 57
IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping 61
A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies" 63
1. Working definitions 64
2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions 70
3. Intratextualism 72
4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage 74
a. President Lincoln 75
b. Congress 79
i. The Ironclad Oath 80
ii. The Second Confiscation Act 81
c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases 84
5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples 87
a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally) 87
b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates 93
6. Legislative History 99
7. Early Applications of Section Three 100
B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred? 104
C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election 112
1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion 112
2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort" 116
a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation 117
b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office 118
c. Beyond Trump 122
Conclusion 124

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude* & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Introduction

"Section 3 has long since faded into history."
- Eric Foner[1]

Reports of Section Three's demise are greatly exaggerated. It turns out that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment remains of direct and dramatic relevance today—a vital, fully operative rule of constitutional law with potentially far-reaching contemporary real-world consequences. Section Three remains in legal force, and has a broad substantive sweep.

Here is what it says:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.[2]

This section of the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular historical situation and acute problem arising in the aftermath of the Civil War.

---

* Harry Kalven, Jr. Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.
 Distinguished University Chair and Professor of Law, University of St. Thomas Law School. We thank Frank Bowman, Steve Calabresi, Josh Chafetz, John Harrison, Ed Hartnett, Daniel Hemel, Brian Kalt, Myles Lynch, Gerard Magliocca, Michael McConnell, Derek Muller, Farah Peterson, Eric Posner, Micah Quigley, Richard Re, Michael L. Rosin, Stephen Sachs, Greg Sisk, Seth Barrett Tillman, and workshop participants at the University of Chicago Law School and University of St. Thomas Law School for helpful comments on the first draft of this article, T.J. Bowman, Nicole Catlin, Connie Gong, Sarah Leitner, James Marmaduke, Matt Phillips, and Georgios Sarris for valuable research assistance, and countless others for discussions about these issues—though not all of them gave aid or comfort to our conclusions.

[1] Eric Foner, The Second Founding: How the Civil War and Reconstruction Remade the Constitution 85 (2019).

[2] U.S. Const. art. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States in the South had purported (unconstitutionally)[3] to secede from the Union; they had purported to form the (so-called) "Confederate States of America" in rebellion against the authority of the U.S. Constitution; and they had waged a bloody four-year war of rebellion against the United States. Yet even after the rebellion had been defeated, Southern States had audaciously sent to Congress, to serve as U.S. Senators and Representatives, men who had notoriously violated previously sworn oaths to support the U.S. Constitution by subsequently engaging in or supporting secession, rebellion, and civil war against the authority of the United States (to say nothing of those now serving again in their state governments). The former Confederates who arrived in Washington included "four Confederate generals, four colonels, several Confederate congressmen and members of Confederate state legislatures, and even the vice president of the Confederacy, Alexander Stephens."[4]

The Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment rightly regarded the situation as outrageous—not only morally, but practically. If former Confederates held the levers of federal and state government power, effective "reconstruction" of the political order and any hope of extending the full and equal protection of the laws to the newly freed former slaves would be at an end. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment responded to that outrage, enacting a sweeping disqualification from state and federal office of those who had, as legislators or officers in the federal or state government prior to the War, sworn required oaths of loyalty to the United States Constitution and subsequently engaged in "insurrection or rebellion" against the U.S. constitutional authority or given "aid or comfort" to its enemies. Only a two-thirds majority vote of both houses of Congress could remove that sweeping disqualification.

Fast-forward a century and a half. The events surrounding efforts to overturn the result of the presidential election of 2020 have sparked renewed scholarly, judicial, and political interest in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[5] The core events are familiar to all—the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for States' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several States; the efforts of Members of Congress to assert a similar power to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; the fomenting

---

[3] See infra note 231 and sources cited there.

[4] Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 377 (2005); see also Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 176-179 (1960); Allen C. Guelzo, Reconstruction: A Concise History 25 (2018).

[5] The most important scholarly articles (to which we are deeply indebted) are Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment.. 87 (2021); Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty and Disqualification: Reconstructing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 William & Mary Bill of Rights J. 153 (2021), both of which were written before the events of January 6, and Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-to Guide, Lawfare (Jan. 19, 2021), available at https://www.lawfareblog.com/disqualifying-insurrectionists-and-rebels-how-guide.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and immediate incitement of a mob to attempt to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes—all in an attempt to prevent the defeated incumbent President, Donald Trump, from losing power in accordance with the Constitution.

This was undoubtedly a serious assault on the American constitutional order. Not since the Civil War has there been so serious a threat to the foundations of the American constitutional republic. It takes little imagination to describe the efforts to maintain Trump in office, notwithstanding his defeat, as an attempted political coup d'etat. These actions culminated in the incitement and execution of a violent uprising at the Capitol on January 6, 2021—an "insurrection" aimed at preventing Congress and the incumbent Vice President from performing their constitutional responsibilities to count the votes for President and Vice President in the 2020 election. Several of the people involved in these events—most notably the defeated President, Donald Trump—had previously taken oaths to support the Constitution. If they engaged in or gave aid and comfort to an insurrection against the constitutional government, Section Three would appear to bar them from holding office again.

As legal officials and citizens generally have begun to confront the application of Section Three, they have foundered on the most fundamental questions. How does Section Three's disqualification apply—does it apply—to those who planned, supported, encouraged, assisted, incited, or otherwise participated in the events surrounding the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020? Does Section Three's century-and-a-half old disqualification, designed for the aftermath of the Civil War, even remain legally operative in the first place? If so, what must be done to enforce Section Three? Does it require implementing legislation or criminal trials (or impeachments) before its disqualification kicks in? How does Section Three interact with the rest of the constitutional order—are its subjects protected by constitutional principles of attainder, anti-retroactivity, due process and free speech? And if Section Three does apply—to what and to whom? What actions count as having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" against the Constitution of the United States or having "given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof"? Which officials are covered by Section Three's exclusions?

This article attempts to answer these questions. It makes four key points (or clusters of points):

First. Section Three remains legally operative. It is no less part of the Constitution than the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is not a dead letter. The Constitution is a binding, authoritative written text, not a collection of specific historical purposes and intentions. Where the text applies, it applies. Its legal force is not limited to the immediate problem or purpose that prompted its enactment. Section Three is not limited to the circumstances of the Civil War and Reconstruction, even if the meaning of its terms may be illuminated by that experience and history.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor has Section Three somehow been "repealed" by Congress's two major nineteenth-century statutes granting amnesty to those covered by Section Three. This is not because it would be impossible for a constitutional provision to expire by its terms after a period of time, or upon the occurrence of a particular event, or upon action taken by future actors. Article I, Section 9, for example, created a constitutional prohibition of most congressional regulation of the international slave trade for a period of twenty years—but its prohibition then vanished in 1808. Section Three, however, does not work that way. It imposes a general, prospective, rule of disqualification, which Congress may remove by two-thirds vote of both houses only once it has occurred. Section Three is prospective; Congressional amnesty is retrospective.

Second. Section Three is legally self-executing. That is, Section Three's disqualification is constitutionally automatic whenever its terms are satisfied. Section Three requires no legislation or adjudication to be legally effective. It is enacted by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its disqualification, where triggered, just is. It follows that Section Three's disqualification may and should be followed and carried out by all whose duties are affected by it. In many cases, Section Three will give rise to justiciable controversies in the courts. In others it will be enforceable by state and federal officials. But no prior judicial decision, and no implementing legislation, is required for Section Three to be carried out by officials sworn to uphold the Constitution whose duties present the occasion for applying Section Three's commands. Section Three is ready for use.

While Section Three's requirements could be made the subject of enforcement legislation by Congress, under its general power under Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce" the provisions of the amendment, no such legislation is constitutionally required as a prerequisite to Section Three doing what Section Three itself does. Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase's circuit court opinion to the contrary, In re Griffin,[6] is simply wrong on this point—full of sleight of hand, motivated reasoning, and self-defeating maneuvers—as we will explain at length. In re Griffin should be hooted down the pages of history, purged from our constitutional understanding of Section Three.

Third. Section Three supersedes (or satisfies) earlier-enacted constitutional provisions to the extent of any supposed conflict between them. Section Three, at the time it was adopted as part of the Constitution, imposed a disqualification from office based on an individual's past conduct. Even if imposition of such a disability might otherwise, if done by statute, have been a forbidden Ex Post Facto law or Bill of Attainder, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment constitutionally supersedes any prior provision conflicting with its terms.

[6] 11 F. Cas. 7, 22-27 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This principle extends to a more unsettling point. To the extent Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" or giving "aid or comfort" to "the enemies" might turn out to be in tension with the First Amendment's protection of freedom of speech, Section Three supersedes the First Amendment to the extent of any true conflict. To be sure, the proper construction of Section Three's terms ("insurrection," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "enemies") will leave much speech and advocacy completely free. But in the cases where it does not, the terms of Section Three, not the constructions of the First Amendment, decide where the line is.

This leads to the article's fourth and final group of points:

Fourth. Section Three's disqualification is sweeping in its terms. It disqualifies from future office-holding persons who "engaged in"—an expansive and encompassing term connoting many forms of participation in or active support of—a broad swath of activity covered by the terms "insurrection or rebellion" or the giving of "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of the nation or its constitutional order. It applies to a broad swath of civilian, military, and legislative office holders who swore oaths of fidelity to the Constitution, and it disqualifies such persons from holding in the future any of an extraordinarily broad swath of public offices. Taking Section Three seriously, on its own terms, means taking seriously the enormous sweep of the disqualification it creates. And, we will argue, taking Section Three seriously means that its constitutional disqualifications from future state and federal officeholding extend to participants in the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020, including former President Donald Trump and others. The substantive terms of Section Three's prohibition are not themselves difficult or inscrutable (even if there might be questions of application at the outer edges of the text's meaning). But they are potentially breathtaking in their straightforward consequences.

In what follows, we develop each of these four core points at length.

Section Three remains a valid, prospective, enforceable, self-executing, broad, and relevant part of our Constitution. It falls to us to fulfill our duties to it. These include the duties of legislative bodies, state and federal election officials, executive officers, and perhaps others to take up the Constitution, including Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and wield it faithfully and forcefully against its enemies. Taking Section Three seriously means excluding from present or future office those who sought to subvert lawful government authority under the Constitution in the aftermath of the 2020 election by engaging in insurrection or rebellion or giving aid or comfort to enemies of the lawful constitutional order.

I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today

A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The first step in our argument is an easy one, but perhaps not immediately obvious to everyone: Section Three's disqualification remains an operative rule of the Constitution. The reason this might not be obvious, at least to the uninitiated, is that Section Three plainly was designed for a specific historical situation—the circumstances of Reconstruction following the end of the Civil War. The implication, in the eyes of some, might be that that historical situation limits the scope of the provision's operation. We think any such inference badly mistaken. Section Three was prompted by historical circumstances, but that does not in any way detract from its enduring force.

To be sure, Section Three clearly bears the hallmarks of its historical context. It is, for one thing, a radical rule. The sheer sweep of the disqualification from offices that it imposed on former Southern officeholders-turned-rebels was dramatic. Its operation was hugely disruptive of antebellum patterns of elite political leadership, apparently indifferent to inconvenience, and seemingly rather punitive in its consequences. Section Three is harsh. It is categorical. It is insistent. It seems to have been deliberately designed to turn the prior Southern political order upside down. As Eric Foner puts it, "Section 3 aimed to promote a sweeping transformation of Southern public life."[7]

In these respects, the disqualification reflects and embodies the distinctive political impulses of the so-called Radical Republican Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866. If its disqualification had radical policy consequences for the South, so be it.[8] It was more important to strip insurrectionists and rebels of governing power completely, to remake Southern political society thoroughly, and to prevent Southern backsliding from the full consequences of Union victory entirely, than to be concerned about such things as seeming harshness, impracticality, or disruptiveness. Section Three is very much a creation and creature of its day.

Yet it is (or should be) basic constitutional law that it is the enduring text of the Constitution that supplies the governing rule, not the ostensible "purpose" or specific historical situation for which the text was written. Constitutional provisions, written into our fundamental law, live beyond the circumstances that prompted their adoption. And many such constitutional provisions are written in broad, or general, terms that obviously extend beyond the specific situation or situations that led to their enactment. Sometimes this is by design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule, applicable to a broad class of circumstances, as a more general, "neutral," way of addressing a class of situations of which the specific problem motivating the writing of the text might be just one instance. The thinking might be that if the principle giving rise to the text is a correct one, it should be correct in like circumstances, not just the one situation that provoked the rule's adoption. And sometimes a text's breadth and

---

[7] Eric Foner, Reconstruction, 1863-1877, at 260 (1988).
[8] Mark Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 1 (2023, University Press of Kansas).

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

generality might not reflect conscious design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule that unintentionally went further than the problem they had in mind. Put colloquially, the text sometimes "overshoots" its drafters' intended purposes. (A text might undershoot the problem its framers had in mind to address, too—or achieve only part of its intended purpose, perhaps because of political compromise.)

The reason does not really matter. It is the rule as drafted and enacted in the written text that counts, whether it goes further than the purposes supposed to have inspired its adoption, or even whether it falls short of fully achieving those purposes. While evidence of intention, usage, purpose, and political context can assist in ascertaining the meaning of the enactment, it is that objective meaning that constitutes the law, not the ostensible purposes or motivations that supposedly lay behind it. This is "originalism," our system's basic method for interpreting the Constitution and its amendments.[9]

Consider, for example, Section One of the same Fourteenth Amendment. As a matter of historical purpose, the specific mischief the framers of Section One had in mind was the enactment of "Black Codes" in Southern States that discriminated against the newly freed former slaves. But the words chosen by the drafters to enact the rule embodied in the text command, in general terms, that no state shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" nor deny to any "person" within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws"—rules not cast in racial terms at all, let alone limited to the immediate situation of former enslaved persons. The rules enacted apply to all persons irrespective of race. So it was entirely plausible for lawyers to argue that Section One also barred the same kind of discrimination against women citizens that it barred against black citizens. It doesn't matter that the drafts*men* of the amendment might not have had women "in mind" if women are covered by the meaning of the words they actually wrote and ratified.[10] Similarly, it was entirely plausible to argue that Section One went so far as to ban racially segregated schools.[11] The answers to each of these questions turn on the objective, original

---

[9] See Vasan Kesavan & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Interpretive Force of the Constitution's Secret Drafting History, 91 Geo. L. J. 1113, 1124-1148 (2004); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Does the Constitution Prescribe Rules for Its Own Interpretation? 103 Nw. U. L. Rev. 857, 872-883 (2009); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Misunderstood Eleventh Amendment, 169 U Pa. L. Rev. 609, 624-625 (2021); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, Grounding Originalism, 113 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1455, 1456-1460 (2019). For purposes of this article, we can bracket any differences in emphasis between Paulsen's objective-original-meaning originalism and Baude's original-law originalism.

[10] We have used such examples before. Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 901-902; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Text, the Whole Text, and Nothing but the Text, So Help Me God: Un-Writing Amar's Unwritten Constitution, 81 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1385, 1421 n. 68 (2014); William Baude, Jud Campbell, & Stephen Sachs, General Law and the Fourteenth Amendment , 76 Stan. L. Rev. at 67-68 (forthcoming 2024).

[11] We have used this example before, too. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839-840 (1993); William Baude, Is Originalism Our Law?, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2349, 2380-2381 (2015). See also Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 66.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

meaning of "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and "equal protection of the laws," not whether the 1866 Congress and subsequent ratifiers had thought through the possible radical implications of their own work. If the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment's terms forbade racially discriminatory classifications of any and all kinds, as a matter of the rules of late-1860s language and usage, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether it was intended or expected that governments could enforce certain types of racial discrimination, like enforced racial segregation. The rule as adopted might overshoot the purposes, expectations, or desires of those who voted for it. But the rule is the rule; the text's meaning is the text's meaning.

Thus, if the framers and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment enacted a general rule in Section Three—a disqualification from future officeholding keyed to having taken an oath to the Constitution and subsequently engaging in insurrection or rebellion against the United States—rather than a provision that by its terms applied only to the case of former Civil War secessionists and Confederate officials and officers,[12] it is the general rule that matters. That the rule had a particular political purpose behind it as a matter of history might be an aid to correct interpretation of the language supplying that rule. (We will make such an argument below, concerning the meaning, in context, of the phrase "insurrection or rebellion.")[13] But in the end the question is what rule was enacted. If Section Three's rule fell short somehow, missing some folks its drafters might have meant to ensnare, those persons are not ensnared. The text might (or might not) be thought deficient in this regard—as having failed to fulfill its full purpose. But the text means what it says. Similarly, if the rule supplied by the objective meaning of the text runs right on past the specific historical purpose for which it was enacted and embraces as well other insurrectionists, rebels, and aiders and comforters of enemies, that rule must be given full legal effect as part of the Constitution. The rule's overbreadth in terms of its perceived purpose, and even its inconvenience as a consequence of such overbreadth, are beside the point.[14]

---

[12] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history of Section Three confirms that this is what the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment did. Earlier drafts had limited the Section's application to the "late insurrection." Later versions dropped this limitation and generalized Section Three's application to "insurrection" and "rebellion." See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2767-68, 2770 2869, 2921; see also Mark A. Graber, Rewarding Loyalty (?) and Punishing Treason Through Disenfranchisement and Bans on Officeholding: Section 3, at 3-4 (unpublished chapter, forthcoming in The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 2, University Press of Kansas) (documenting this development).

[13] Infra Part IV.A.

[14] See, e.g., Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 908-909 (1994) (making this point about the disqualification of some senators and representatives from eligibility for certain appointed offices posed by the Emoluments Clause of Article I, § 6, cl. 2); William Baude, The 2023 Scalia Lecture: Beyond Textualism?, 46 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y (forthcoming 2023) ("Sometimes rules go beyond their reasons; a rule can be overbroad compared to the reasons for enacting it. And sometimes rules are underbroad; a rule cannot quite do all the things that you might want to do given the reasons for enacting the rule. Textualism recognizes that when the judge enforces the law, the law's rule might sometimes be different from what the people who enacted the law would have wanted had they thought about the situation."). For an extended discussion of the abuse of arguments

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, we take it as almost too obvious to require stating that constitutional provisions have indefinite life unless and until repealed or amended by subsequent constitutional enactments. The fact that an unrepealed, unamended provision of law is "old" does not in any way weaken its legal force. The First Amendment is old too, as is the entire original Constitution. But both remain in force. This is true even if the purpose for which a constitutional provision was originally written has ceased to be relevant, or even if the constitutional provision at issue might be thought in today's society to be something of an anachronism.[15] There are, of course, some self-identified living constitutionalists who deny this point—who think that old texts have a legal shelf life and lose their potency over time, as "the interest in sovereignty fades."[16] But in our view, this just shows what is wrong with such living constitutionalism.[17] The Constitution is not a spice cabinet.

All of this might seem to belabor the obvious. Few interpreters of Section Three explicitly deny that it continues to govern new insurrections and rebellions.[18] But sometimes we wonder if this kind of denial is sneaking in to people's intuitions—subtly infecting and distorting the actual interpretation of Section Three. So let us start from the right first principles: Section Three remains constitutionally fully in force, as alive as the day it was enacted.

B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?)

But what about this? The second sentence of Section Three provides that Congress "may by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[19] Just as the first sentence's disqualification is not limited specifically to the Civil War, neither is Congress's power to grant amnesty. Thus, Congress can, by the requisite vote, remove any disqualification that exists by virtue of the operation of Section Three. But just exactly how far does that power reach? Could Congress, by two-thirds majorities, essentially extinguish the legally operative effect of Section Three entirely, by removing the disability imposed by Section Three generally, prospectively, and universally? Put from inconvenience, see infra Part II.C.2.a (discussing Chief Justice Chase's appalling opinion in Griffin's Case).

---

[15] Michael Stokes Paulsen, Dirty Harry and the Real Constitution, 64 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1457, 1486-1490 (1997) (discussing privilege against self-incrimination).

[16] David A. Strauss, The Supreme Court, 2014 Term—Foreword: Does the Constitution Mean What It Says?, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (2015); see also Adam M. Samaha, Originalism's Expiration Date, 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1295 (2008).

[17] See Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1487 (responding to Strauss).

[18] For a rare example, see an argument made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935) ("It was also seriously contended by counsel that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment was an outgrowth of the Civil War and that such a provision cannot possibly apply to the present case").

[19] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

more vividly: Can Congress, by two-thirds vote of each house, essentially "explode" Section Three—render it inoperative in the future, for all time?

These questions turn out not to be completely hypothetical. In two statutes enacted in the late nineteenth century, Congress might arguably have done this. One statute (from 1872) removed "from all persons whomsoever"—except designated categories of individuals—all "political disabilities imposed" by Section Three.[20] Another (from 1898) further removed "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred."[21] And indeed, in a recent case (brought by then-Representative Madison Cawthorn) a federal judge relied on these statutes to conclude that Section Three was now legally dead.[22] Is that right? Do these statutes—can these statutes—grant amnesty to all insurrectionists, past, present and future?[23]

No. While the argument is not entirely bonkers, it does not withstand more serious scrutiny. It is wrong on both statutory and constitutional grounds. Consider the statutes first. Neither one purports to rescind Section Three's operative rule for all time. They do not pretend to explode the first sentence of the constitutional provision.

Begin with the 1872 act. In 1872, after a period of case-by-case consideration of amnesty requests, Congress, as mentioned above, enacted a general statute removing disqualification from a broad description of persons embraced by Section Three's prohibition. As Professor Magliocca recounts, the statute reflected a mixture of motives: genuine mercy and magnanimity; the practical consequences of Section Three in the South; the burdens and biases of case-by-case consideration of private bills; the politics of a presidential election year; and the general but regrettable retreat from aggressive Congressional Reconstruction.[24] But what is most important is what it says. The statute reads, in full:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-

---

[20] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[21] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.
[22] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 889-892 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022). This argument, too, was made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55.
[23] The power in general of Congress by two-thirds vote of each House to remove Section Three's disability and the history of its exercise are the central themes of Professor Gerard Magliocca's excellent article, cited supra note 5.
[24] See generally Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 112-120.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

