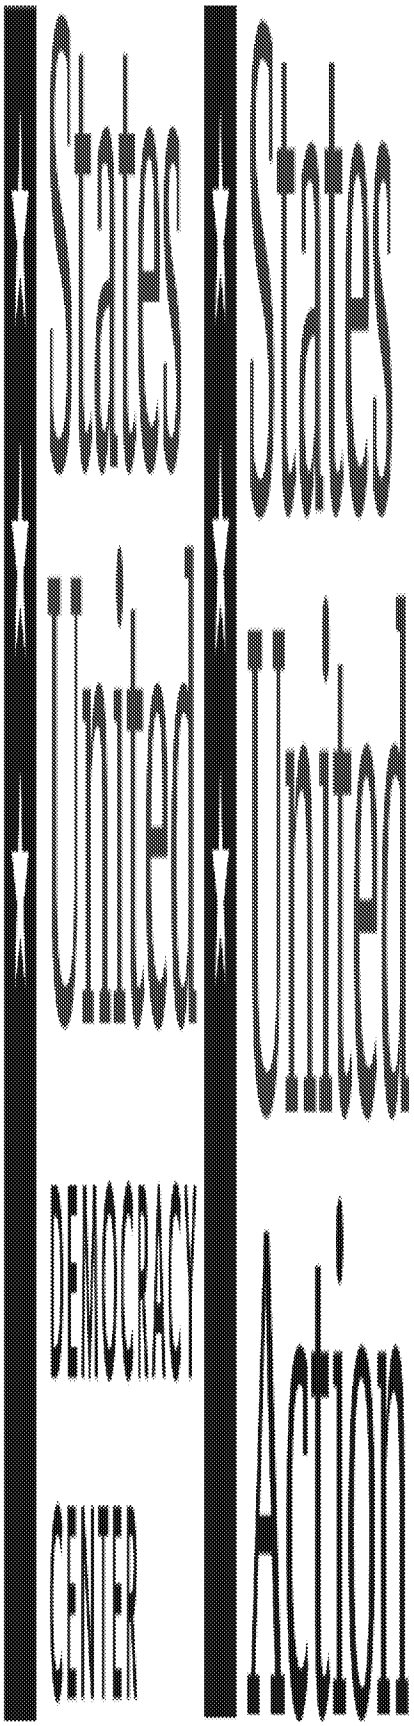
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/5/2022 8:39:24 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: State Leaders Head to Washington

State Leaders Head to Washington

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Only have a minute?

- Election Deniers scored multiple wins in the Arizona and Michigan primaries and will now head to the general election in November. As States United has documented, candidates who continue to spread lies about our elections are running for positions that oversee or influence election administration across the country, posing a threat to our democracy.

- Bipartisan leaders testified in front the Senate Rules Committee urging Congress to pass reforms to the Electoral Count Act that would protect the peaceful transfer of presidential power and prevent a repeat of the January 6 insurrection. "We have a duty and responsibility to make sure it never happens again," Senator Joe Manchin of West Virginia told his colleagues.

- Two Arizona Republicans—Kelli Ward, the chairwoman of the Arizona Republican Party, and Kelly Townsend, a state senator—privately expressed concern in December 2020 that a plan to put forward a slate of fake electors for Donald Trump could be seen as treason, according to emails obtained by The New York Times. Kelli Ward signed on as a fake elector anyway.

- Guy Reffitt, who brought a gun to the Capitol on Jan. 6, 2021, and was the first of the rioters to be convicted at trial, was sentenced to more than seven years in prison. Before handing down the penalty, Judge Dabney Friedrich described Reffitt's behavior as the "antithesis" of patriotism.

State Leaders Head to Washington

Two secretaries of state traveled to Capitol Hill this week with one simple message: Election officials across the country are facing an unprecedented wave of harassment and threats, and it has to stop.

In testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Secretaries of State Jocelyn Benson of Michigan and Maggie Toulouse Oliver of New Mexico described a vicious climate of intimidation that election administrators are enduring, just for doing their jobs. Some have had their families threatened or been forced into hiding themselves.

"The status quo is unsustainable and unacceptable," Benson said.

She's right. A Justice Department task force created last year to examine threats against election workers has looked at more than 1,000 contacts that were reported as hostile or harassing. About one in 10 were serious enough to trigger a criminal investigation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The harassment and threats are often based on lies about our elections, which have fostered what Toulouse Oliver called an "atmosphere of distrust." Nationwide, one in three election officials report feeling unsafe. Many have left their jobs.

At the same time, election officials are facing new laws meant to complicate or criminalize their work, and they are being bombarded by "burdensome and often nonsensical" demands for information and access to secure election equipment, as Benson said.

Both secretaries called on Congress to pass additional protections for election officials, including safeguarding their personal information to prevent doxxing and harassment.

The stakes are clear. As Benson put it: "We cannot have a secure democracy if we do not protect the security of the people who administer our elections."

State of the States

In Arizona, the Republican attorney general concluded there was no truth to the claim that hundreds of ballots were cast on behalf of dead voters in 2020. Attorney General Mark

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Brnovich said his office investigated allegations by the state Senate president that 282 people who died before Oct. 5, 2020, somehow voted in the November election. His office only identified one such case. Senate President Karen Fann made the complaint based on reports from the Cyber Ninjas, the firm hired to run the so-called audit of the election results in Arizona. "Our agents investigated all individuals that Cyber Ninjas reported as dead, and many were very surprised to learn they were allegedly deceased," Brnovich wrote to Fann.

Also in Arizona, the Santa Cruz County Superior Court rejected an attempt by the chair of the county Republican Party to gain access to confidential voter signatures on early ballot affidavit envelopes and in the voter registration file. The party chair sought to misuse a challenge process to improperly second-guess county election officials' signature verification of early ballots. The Arizona secretary of state filed an amicus brief explaining to the court that the request violated Arizona law, could disenfranchise voters, and could disrupt accurate and timely processing and counting of early ballots. The States United Democracy Center served as pro-bono counsel on the brief.

In Pennsylvania, the state Supreme Court upheld a law that allows any voter to use a mail-in ballot. Pennsylvania's vote-by-mail law passed in 2019 with wide bipartisan support but was challenged two years later by a county election commissioner and Republican lawmakers, many of whom had voted for the measure. More than 5 million Pennsylvania voters have used mail-in ballots since the passage of the law, which also gives voters more time to register and to return absentee ballots. The States United Democracy Center is serving as pro-bono co-counsel with the attorney general of Pennsylvania, as well as Hangley Aronchick and Kaplan Hecker.

In Texas, a federal judge struck down restrictive residency requirements in SB 1111, a voting law passed last year. Judge Lee Yeakel of U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas found that two provisions of the law were unconstitutional and permanently blocked their enforcement. The first prohibited voters from establishing their residence with the aim of influencing an election, and the second appeared to eliminate the option for voters to register to vote at a temporary address. The States United Democracy Center is serving as pro bono co-counsel for Lisa Wise, the election administrator of El Paso County, who made the case that the provisions were vague and confusing, could lead to voter suppression, and did not further county interests. Two days after the decision, the Texas Attorney General and two county election officials—all of whom intervened in the case as defendants—filed an appeal.

In the News

The New York Times: In 4 Swing States, G.O.P. Election Deniers Could Oversee Voting. By Jennifer Medina, Reid J. Epstein and Nick Corasiniti.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"If any one of these election deniers wins statewide office, that's a five-alarm fire for our elections," said Joanna Lydgate, the chief executive of the States United Action, a bipartisan legal watchdog organization. "It could throw our elections into chaos. It could put our democracy at risk."

Public News Service: MN Primary: Democracy Concerns Swirl Around Election Deniers. By Mike Moen.

"Minnesota's primary vote is less than a week away, and a pro-democracy group reported it is one of several states with a number of 'election deniers' on the ballot. The States United Action contended the nationwide trend poses a threat to future elections."

AZ Mirror: Mark Finchem is the latest in a wave of election deniers moving toward controlling elections. By Kira Lerner.

"As of July 28, at least 20 election deniers are running for secretary of state in 16 states, according to States United Action, an organization that tracks these races."

The Washington Post: Memo shows Wisconsin GOP lawyer privately opposed decertifying Biden's 2020 win. By Patrick Marley.

"The contrasting public and private messages offer a glimpse into the dueling pressures facing Republicans in Wisconsin as they struggle to balance Trump's baseless demands for reversing the election with the legal and political realities on the ground."

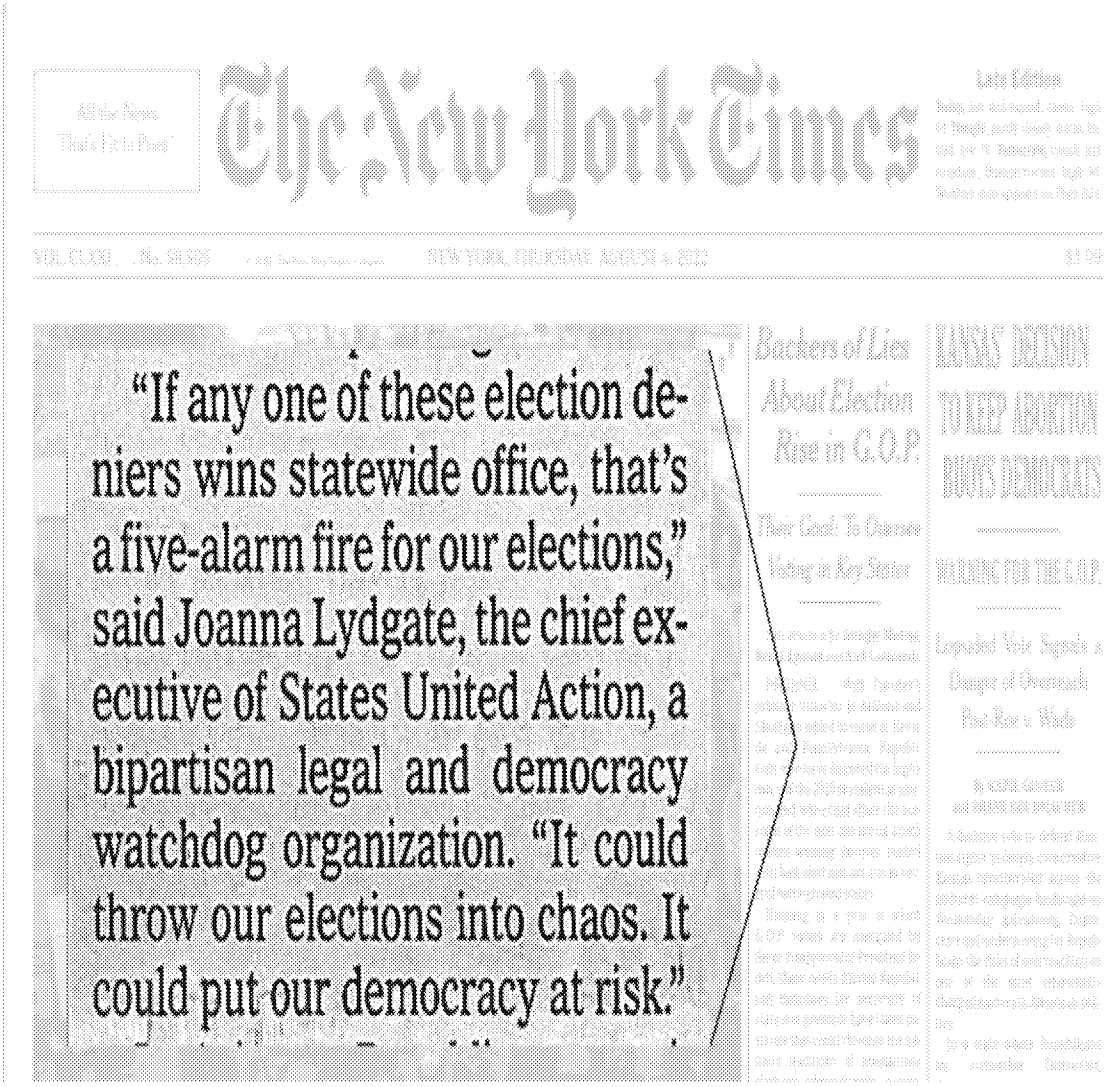
Houston Public Media: Harris County will consider legal action against Texas over its selection for a 2022 election audit. By Andrew Schneider.

"Harris County Attorney Christian Menefee ... said such audits without any evidence of voter fraud could undermine the credibility of the election results. 'Not only do we have these audits, which drain county resources, but we have conspiracy theorists who file lawsuits against Harris County that my office ends up having to defend,' Menefee said."

Quote of the Week

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States United CEO Joanna Lydgate, on the front page of The New York Times, explains what's at risk if Election Deniers take control of statewide offices that run and defend elections:*



The New York Times

"If any one of these election deniers wins statewide office, that's a five-alarm fire for our elections," said Joanna Lydgate, the chief executive of States United Action, a bipartisan legal and democracy watchdog organization. "It could throw our elections into chaos. It could put our democracy at risk."

Backers of Lies About Election Rise in G.O.P.

Their Goal: To Oversee Voting in Key States

KANSAS DECISION TO KEEP ABORTION ROILS DEMOCRATS

WALKING FOR THE G.O.P.

Follow States United on Twitter and Facebook to stay up-to-date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

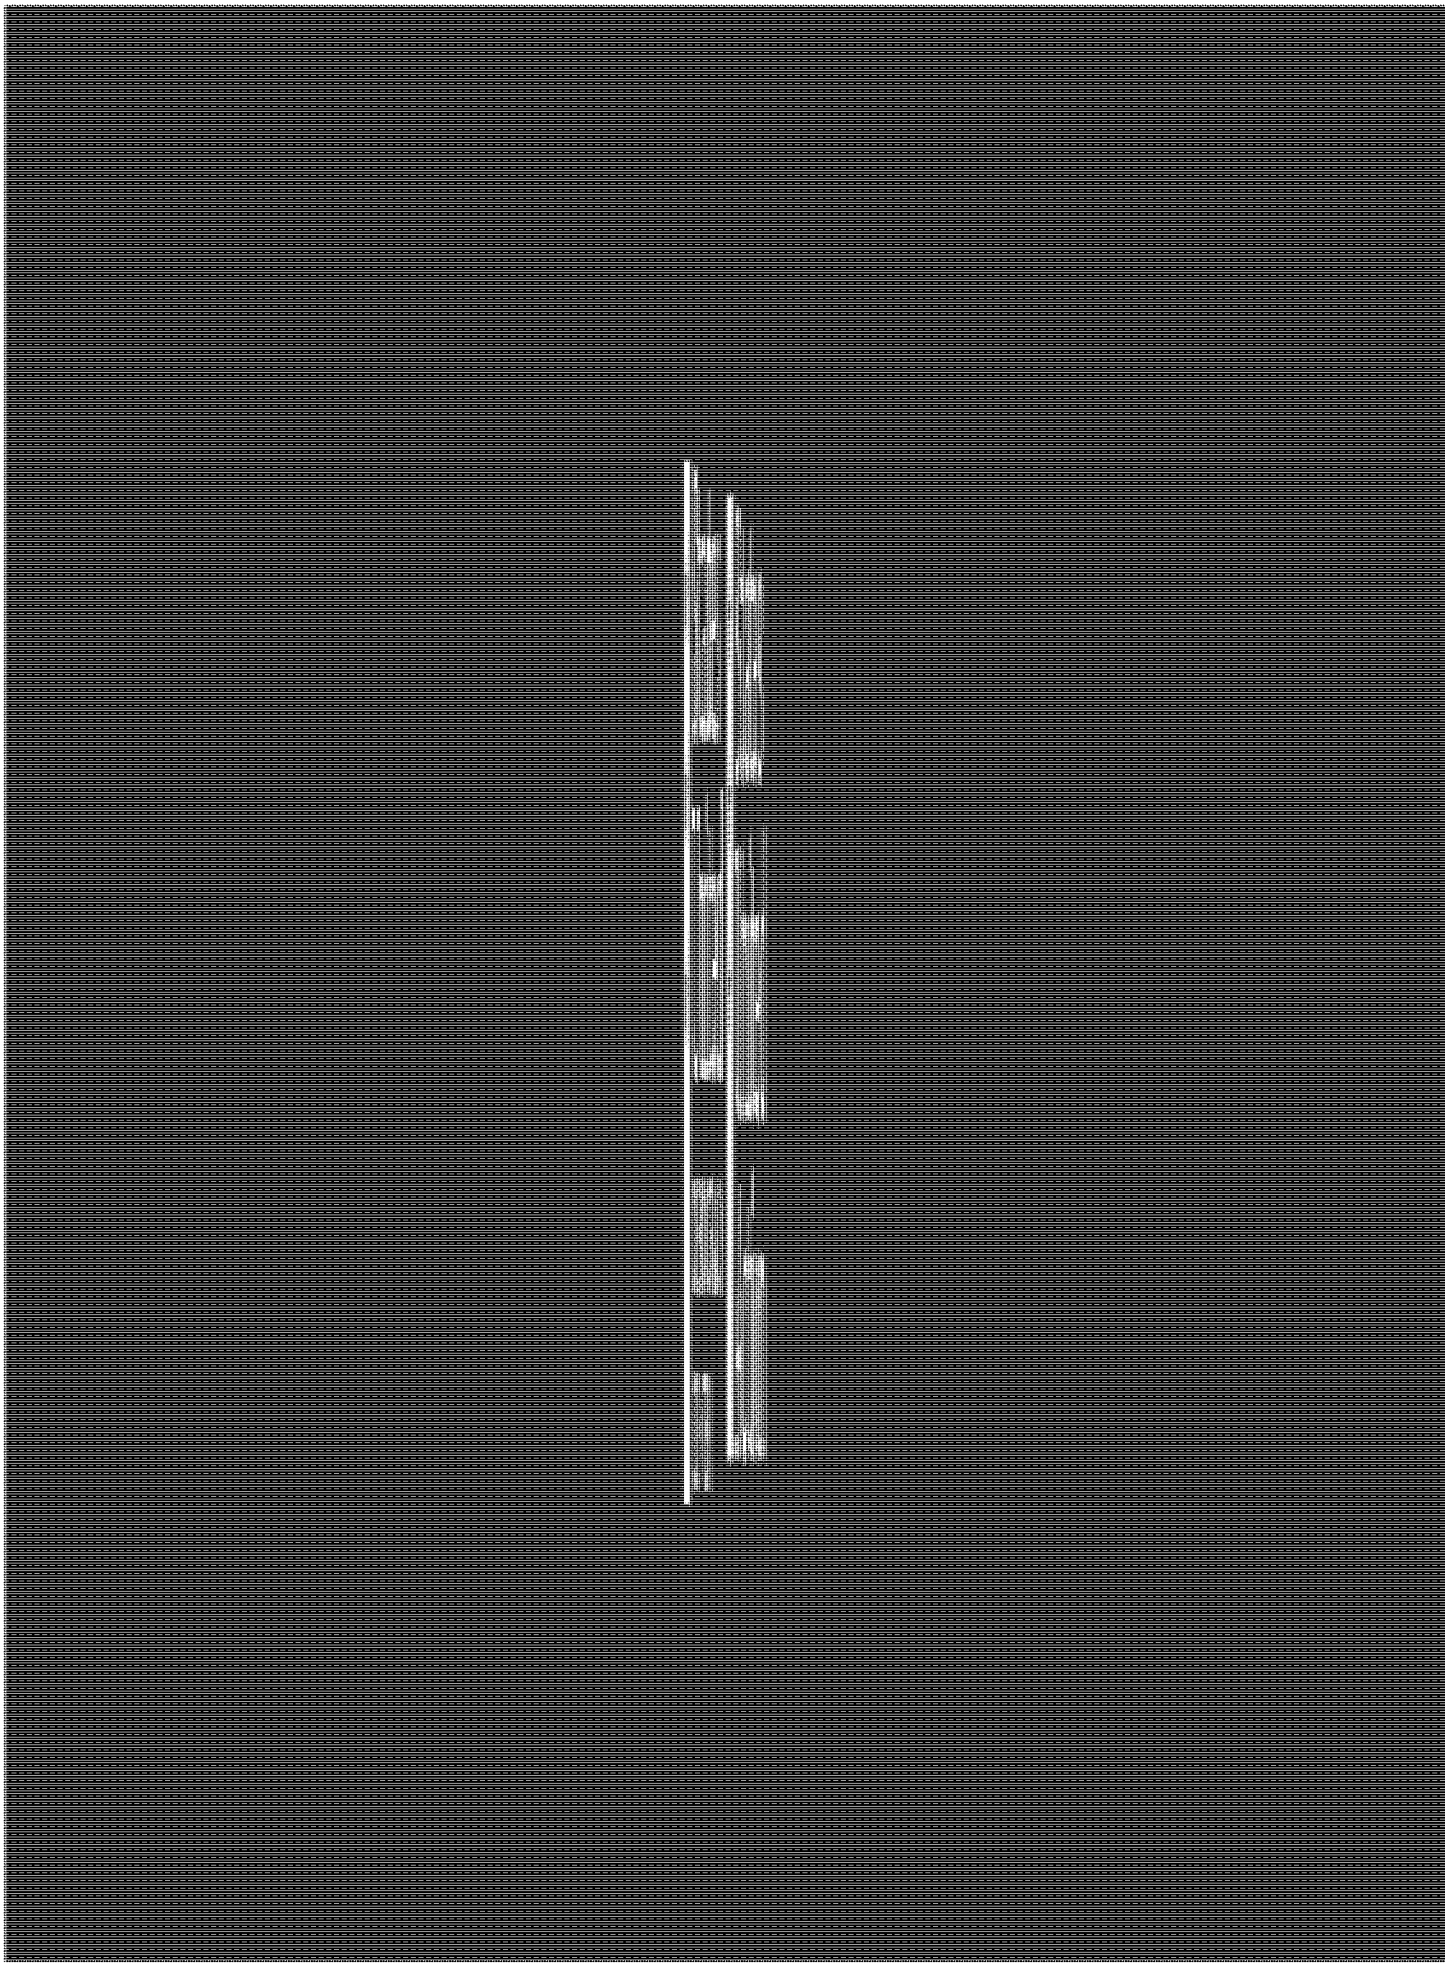
About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1420 K Street NW · Ste 800 · Washington, DC 20005-3377 · USA

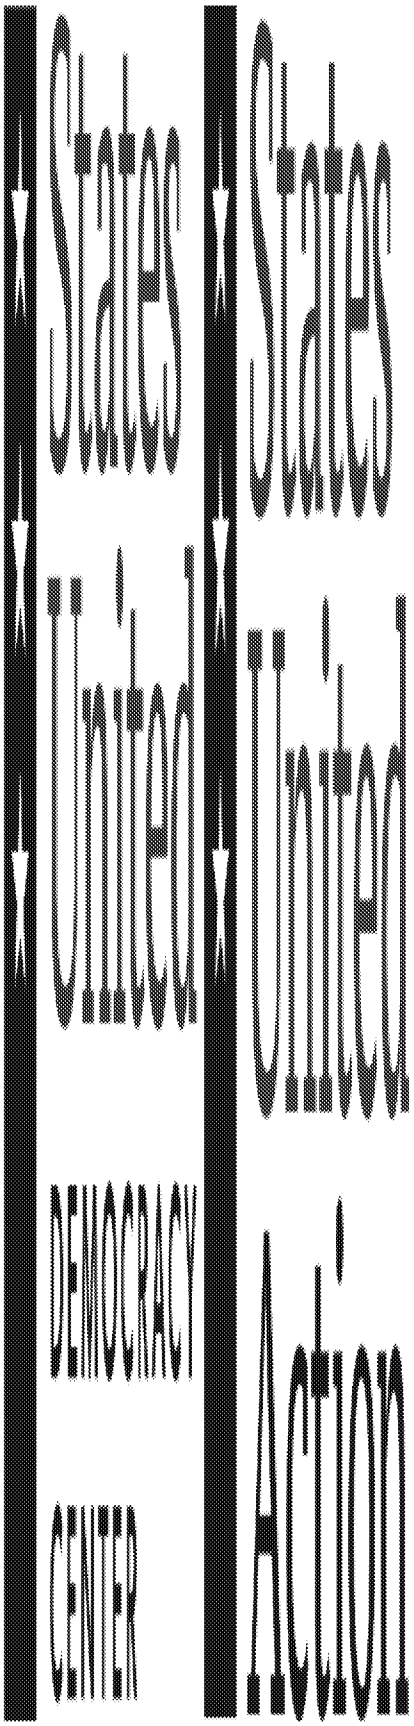
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/12/2022 10:01:27 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Clearing the Bar for Accountability

Clearing the Bar for Accountability

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Only have a minute?

- Michael Gableman, who led a partisan sham review into the 2020 election results in Wisconsin, was fired by Assembly Speaker Robin Vos. The review, which has cost taxpayers roughly $1 million, has been plagued by partisan antics and comical errors. Gableman was warned repeatedly by judges to stop deleting records and was held in contempt by one court. A judge said last month that Gableman's review had turned up "absolutely no evidence of election fraud."

- Tim Michels, an Election Denier, won the Republican nomination for governor in Wisconsin on Tuesday. He will face Democratic incumbent Gov. Tony Evers in the general election. Michels has avoided questions about certifying election results in 2024, and he has declined to rule out the so-called decertification of the state's 2020 results, an idea that has no basis in law or the Constitution.

- News of the FBI search at Mar-a-Lago, the Florida home of former President Trump, touched off a surge of violent rhetoric on the far right that reminded some experts of the days before Jan. 6, 2021. Rachel Kleinfeld, a senior fellow in the Democracy, Conflict, and Governance Program at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and a States United Advisory Board member, told The New York Times that such rhetoric "normalizes violence and encourages people inclined toward it to be more violent."

- A judge in Georgia gave parties until the end of this week to respond to an amicus brief filed by a group of former federal prosecutors arguing that Sen. Lindsey Graham should be required to comply with a special grand jury subpoena. The special grand jury is examining attempts to overturn the 2020 election results in Georgia. The judge said she expected to rule soon. The States United Democracy Center, Kaplan Hecker & Fink LLP, and Jonathan L. Williams, P.A., served as co-counsel on the brief.

Clearing the Bar for Accountability

When they are admitted to the bar, lawyers swear an oath to uphold the Constitution. They are guardians of the rule of law in the United States, and that includes protecting our democracy.

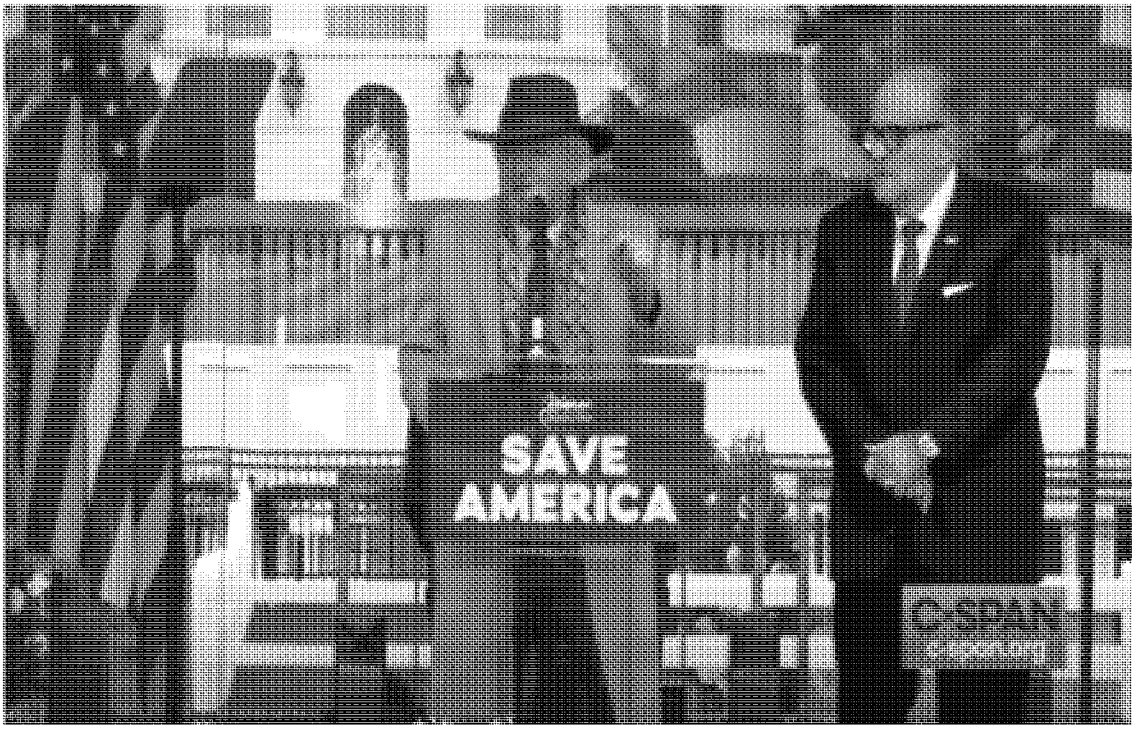
John Eastman did the opposite. He was an architect of former President Trump's attempt to overturn the 2020 election, including by arguing that then-Vice President Pence could throw out valid electoral votes for President Biden.

"This was false, and Dr. Eastman knew it was false," as Rep. Liz Cheney, the vice chair of the House select committee investigating the January 6 attack on the Capitol, put it at a hearing in

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

June. “In other words, it was a lie.”

Recent evidence has further highlighted Eastman’s misconduct. Thanks in part to the select committee, we’ve learned that he asked for a presidential pardon, and that he knew his arguments wouldn’t hold up in court.



This week the States United Democracy Center and our partners at Lawyers Defending American Democracy (LDAD) filed a bar complaint asking the District of Columbia’s Office of Disciplinary Counsel (ODC) to open an investigation into Eastman’s conduct.

The complaint was signed by 50 prominent attorneys and former officials from both parties. Signatories include former presidents of the D.C. Bar, former federal judges, and White House ethics advisors from the Bush and Obama administrations.

The request to the ODC is the latest in Eastman-related accountability news. The State Bar of California is already investigating Eastman after States United and LDAD filed similar complaints there. In Georgia, a special grand jury has issued a subpoena for Eastman’s testimony as it examines the attempt to overturn the 2020 election there. And the Justice Department recently obtained a warrant to search Eastman’s cell phone.

This complaint is another example of steps States United is taking toward holding Eastman and others to account for undermining free and fair elections. Preserving our democracy starts with the principle that no one is above the law—including lawyers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

State of the States

In Georgia, a judge ordered Rudy Giuliani to appear in person before the special grand jury investigating attempts to overturn the 2020 election results in that state. Fulton County Superior Court Judge Robert McBurney set Giuliani's appearance for Aug. 17 unless he can provide a better explanation from his doctor about why he needs more time. As part of her investigation, Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis is looking into two appearances by Giuliani before Georgia legislators in December 2020 to promote election lies.

In Michigan, Attorney General Dana Nessel is seeking a special prosecutor to consider charges against nine people in an alleged plot to gain improper access to vote-tabulating machines used in the 2020 election. One of the nine is Matthew DePerno, the Election Denier chosen by Michigan Republicans to run against Nessel this fall. Papers filed by Nessel describe DePerno as "one of the prime instigators of the conspiracy" and say she is seeking the special prosecutor because of the potential conflict of interest posed by this year's election.

In Pennsylvania, Doug Mastriano, the Republican nominee for governor and an Election Denier, appeared virtually before the House select committee investigating the January 6 attack. The session lasted less than 15 minutes, his lawyer told The Philadelphia Inquirer, and a source told CNN that Mastriano didn't answer a single question. Mastriano, a state senator, was filmed passing through breached barricades and police lines at the Capitol during the attack. He was subpoenaed by the select committee earlier this year.

In the News

Arizona Mirror: Senate 'audit' leaders Doug Logan and Ben Cotton are facing a Michigan criminal probe. By Jerod MacDonald-Evoy.

"The office of Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel, a Democrat, has petitioned the Michigan Prosecuting Attorneys Coordinating Council to name a special prosecutor to investigate Logan and others who falsely believed the election was stolen from Donald Trump and then set out to gather evidence by gaining access to ballot tabulators."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Associated Press: Jury is told 2 men wanted to kidnap Whitmer, start revolt. By Joey Cappelletti and Ed White.

"Two anti-government extremists sought to spark a 'second American revolution' by kidnapping Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, a prosecutor told jurors Wednesday, as the government tried for a second time to get convictions in an alleged plot to shock the country into chaos before the 2020 election."

Houston Chronicle: How Texas counties are helping voters after new law led to 25,000 rejected mail ballots. By Taylor Goldenstein and Jen Rice.

"As primary voting started early this year, Texas election officials spent much of their time on the phone with voters who were frustrated and confused about new rules for mail voting that led their ballots to be rejected."

MLive: '2000 Mules' fact check: Michigan experts debunk election fraud claims. By Ben Orner.

"It's a supposed blockbuster film on the political right showing widespread ballot drop box fraud in Michigan and other battleground states. But insufficient methods and a lack of convincing evidence fail '2000 Mules' in proving its central claims about the 2020 election, according to MLive interviews with voting, technology and politics experts."

The Associated Press: Nevada judge denies loser's protest of GOP governor primary. By Scott Sonner.

"[Republican Joey Gilbert] was seeking a recount of ballots by hand that he claimed — without any evidence — would result in him winning the GOP nomination by more than 55,000 votes."

The New York Times: Hunting for Voter Fraud, Conspiracy Theorists Organize 'Stakeouts'. By Tiffany Hsu and Stuart A. Thompson.

"In the nearly two years since former President Donald J. Trump catapulted false claims of widespread voter fraud from the political fringes to the conservative mainstream, a constellation of his supporters have drifted from one theory to another in a frantic but unsuccessful search for evidence."

Tweet of the Week

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Integrity First for America (@IntegrityforUSA) on five years after the violence in Charlottesville, Virginia:

Integrity First for America
@IntegrityforUSA

Five years ago today, Nazis and white supremacists stormed the city of Charlottesville with a plan to commit violence, unleash terror, and spread their hate.

Five years ago today, the people of Charlottesville came together to resist fascism and defend their community.

9:26 AM · Aug 11, 2022 · TweetDeck

We're Hiring!

The States United team is growing. We're building out key positions as we work to protect the integrity of our elections and serve as a resource to state leaders. You can check out our open positions and apply here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Follow States United on Twitter and Facebook to stay up-to-date!

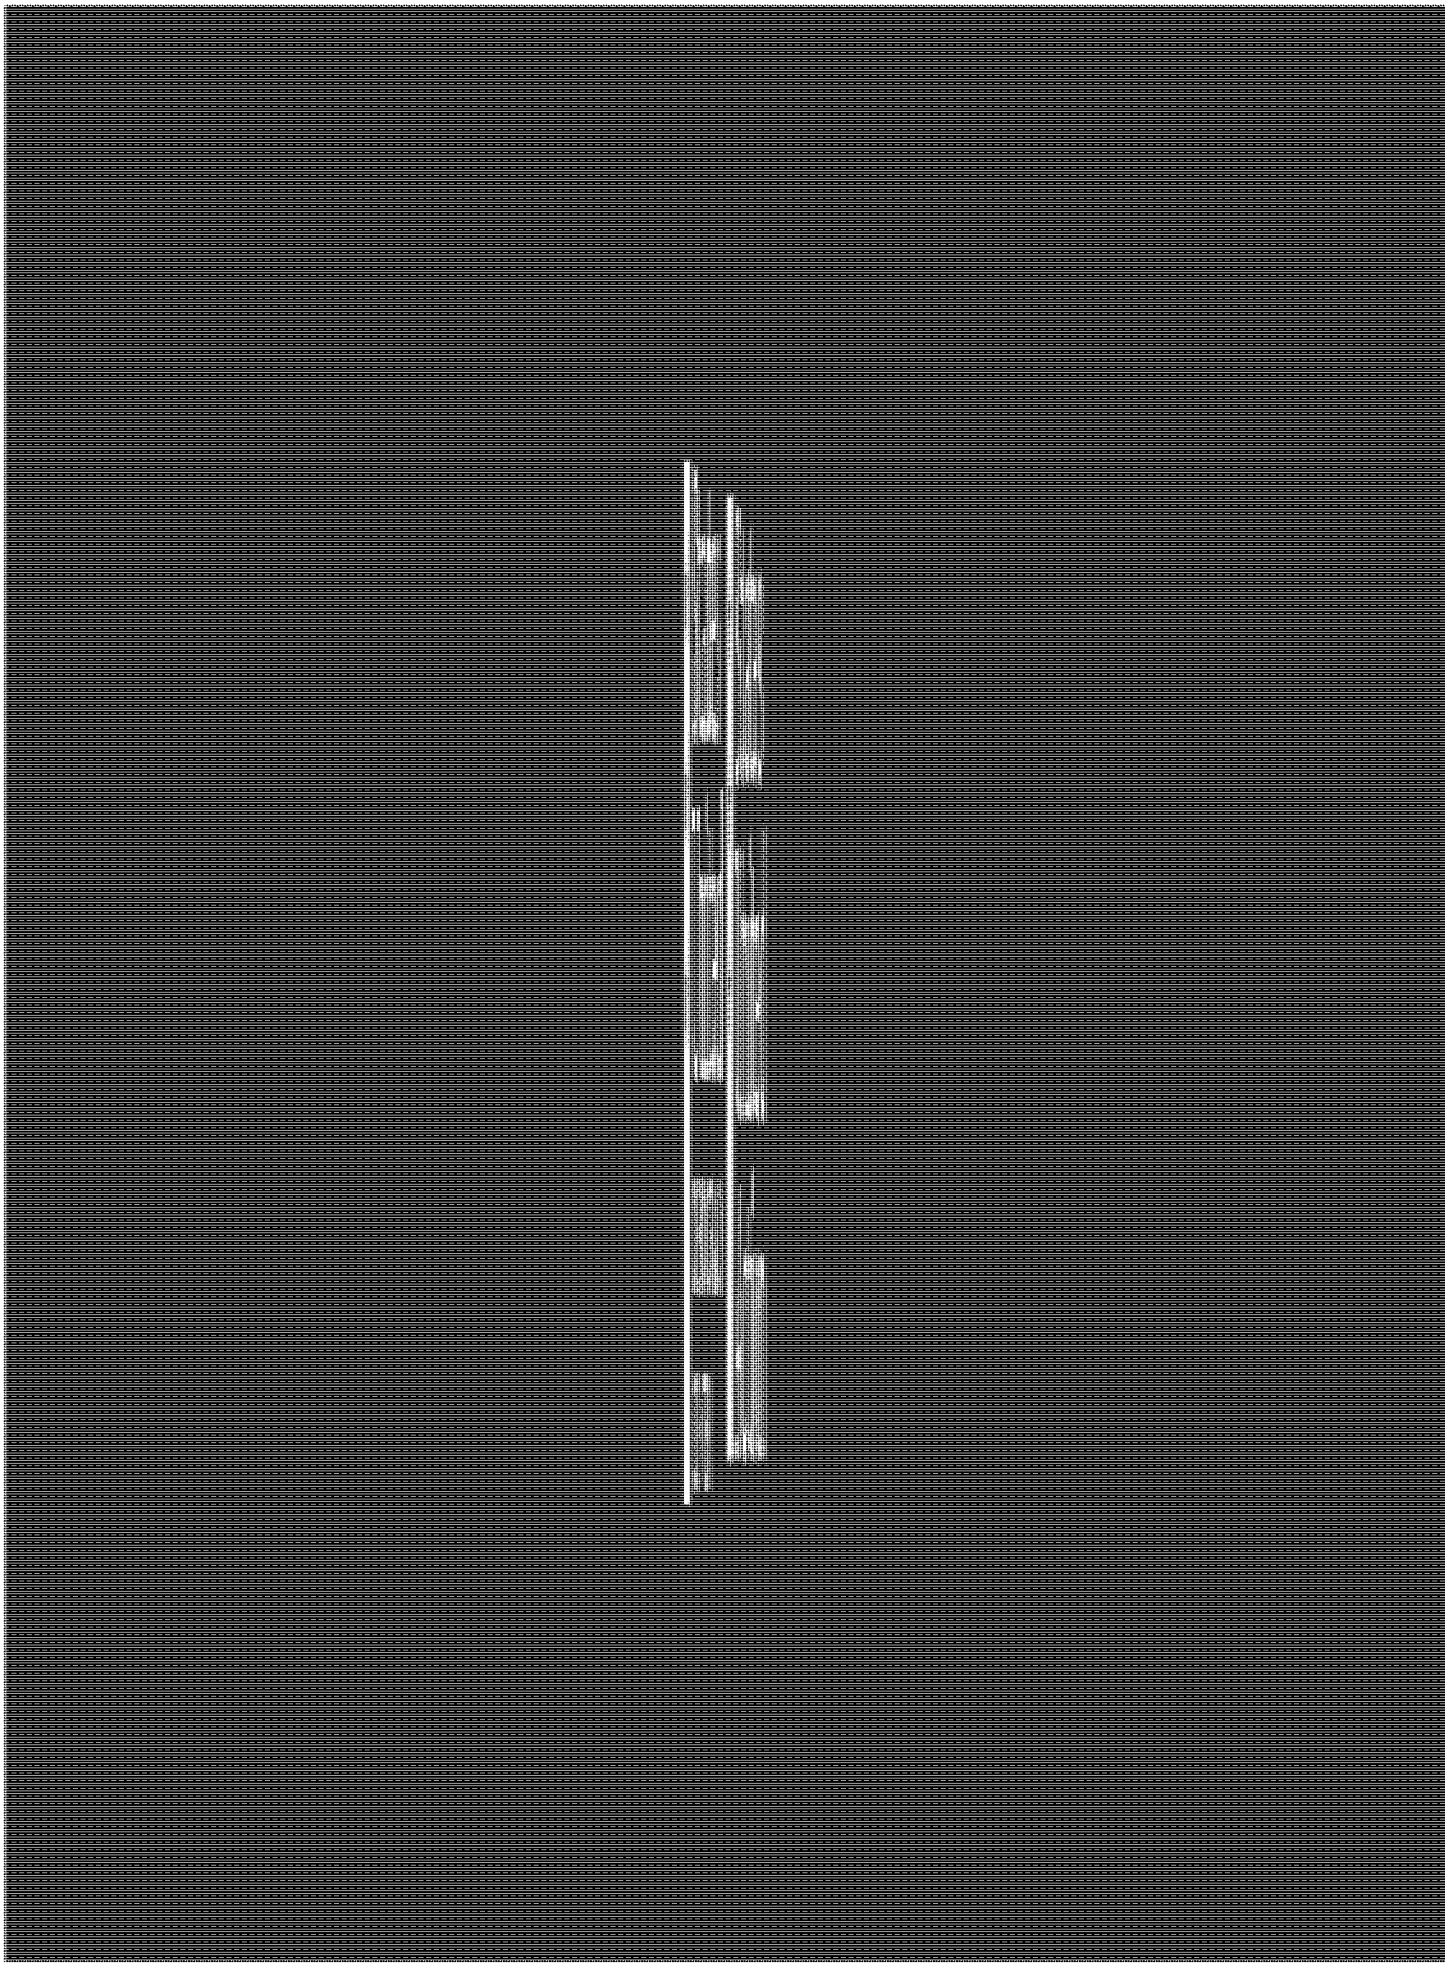
About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1420 K Street NW · Ste 800 · Washington, DC 20005-3377 · USA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 11/11/2022 3:30:08 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: A Good Day for Democracy

A Good Day for Democracy

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

Only have a minute?

- Election Deniers running to oversee voting were defeated across the country in the midterm elections. Some did win—mostly Republican incumbents. But through Friday morning, only a handful of non-incumbent Election Deniers had won their races for governor, attorney general, or secretary of state, according to States United Action.

- Voters in Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin can be confident that their votes will be counted and respected in 2024, after Election Deniers lost all their races for statewide election oversight roles in those states. "Your right to vote won," Josh Shapiro, the governor-elect of Pennsylvania, told supporters.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Vote-counting continues in Arizona, where Election Deniers are on the ballot for all three statewide offices that control elections, and in Nevada, where Election Deniers are on the ballot for attorney general and secretary of state.

- Federal authorities have seen no evidence that any voting system in the United States deleted or changed votes, or was "in any way compromised in any race in the country," the director of the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency said after the election.

A Good Day for Democracy

It was the biggest trend of this election year: Across the country, 141 Election Deniers ran for governor, attorney general, or secretary of state. Each of them had undermined trust in our elections. Each of them wanted the power to oversee elections in the future.

Many were sent packing in the primaries—often by Republican incumbents who refused to endorse the Big Lie. But dozens advanced to the general election. Election Deniers were on the ballot in more than half the country.

On Tuesday, voters had the final say. And they made clear that they believe in free and fair elections. They won't accept statewide officials who ignore the will of the people and pick the winners themselves.

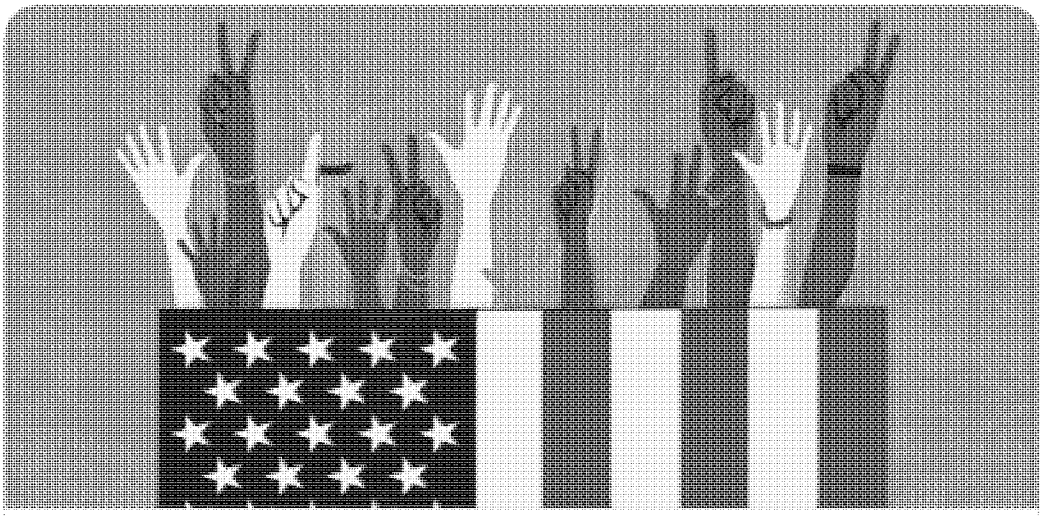
Election Deniers were rejected in state after state, including a clean sweep in races for statewide offices that oversee elections in Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

"You showed up because you saw our democracy was on the brink of existence," Wisconsin Gov. Tony Evers told supporters after he fended off an Election Denier challenge. "And you decided to do a damn thing about it."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Brennan Center
@BrennanCenter
Official

Glitches were few. Voter intimidation was rare. And many of the election deniers were denied. Democracy won in the 2022 midterms.



brennancenter.org
Democracy Wins the 2022 Midterms

As of early Friday, out of 94 races this year for governor, attorney general, and secretary of state, only five non-incumbent Election Deniers had won their races, according to States United Action. Nine others were already sitting elected officials in red states.

It was a resounding win for democracy. Of course, even one Election Denier is too many. And scores of other Election Deniers did win races for Congress and in state legislatures. The lies these candidates spread did real damage, and that can't be left unaddressed. We must continue telling the truth and combatting the lies about our election system and election officials who are conducting free, fair, secure elections in the face of threats.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So the fight goes on. Not just in two years, but now. When Election Deniers hold office and try to ignore the will of the people and break the law, we must hold them accountable—shining a light on what they say and do, calling them out, and taking them to court.

We can do that while still celebrating the overwhelming judgment of the American people: They're fed up with the lies about our elections. They want the will of the people to prevail. This week, we can all be grateful that it did.

State of the States

In Arizona, Election Denier candidates made irresponsible claims about the election while the votes were still being counted. Abraham Hamadeh, running for attorney general, tried to claim victory before the results were clear. Kari Lake, the Election Denier running for governor, talked about "cheaters and crooks" in her Election Night speech. And Mark Finchem, a candidate for secretary of state, floated unfounded conspiracy theories about the count.

In Georgia, former House Speaker Newt Gingrich must appear before the special grand jury investigating interference in the 2020 election, a judge ruled. Fani Willis, the Fulton County district attorney, is seeking Gingrich's testimony as part of a wide-ranging investigation into efforts by Trump allies to overturn the election results in Georgia. In a petition to the judge overseeing the special grand jury, Willis said that Gingrich was involved in a plan to run TV ads that relied on false claims of election fraud. She said her request was based on information made public by the House January 6 Select Committee. Separately, a South Carolina judge said in a written order this week that Mark Meadows, the former White House chief of staff, must testify before the special grand jury.

In the News

The New York Times: Election Denial Didn't Play as Well as Republicans Hoped
By Nick Corasaniti, Reid J. Epstein and Jonathan Weisman

"The voters stepped up to defend democracy," said Joanna Lydgate, the chief executive of States United Action, a nonpartisan election group. "In most places, Americans decisively rejected election deniers who wanted power over their votes."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TIME: Election Deniers Were Among the Biggest Losers of the 2022 Midterms
By Charlotte Alter

"When it comes to the statewide positions that control our elections, Americans pretty decisively rejected the election deniers who wanted power of their votes," says Joanna Lydgate, CEO of States United Action. "Really very few of these folks have been successful."

WBUR: Election deniers: The winners and losers
Here & Now

"Here & Now's Peter O'Dowd talks with Joanna Lydgate, president of the non-profit States United Action, which has been tracking these election deniers seeking to hold office and have the power to run future elections."

The Washington Post: Key election deniers concede defeat after disputing Trump's 2020 loss
By Emma Brown and Amy Gardner

"In a number of cases, the losing candidates conceded their races Wednesday, opting not to follow a precedent that Trump had set and that scholars had feared could become a troubling new norm of American democracy."

The Associated Press: VoteCast: Inflation top concern, but democracy a worry too
By Josh Boak and Hannah Fingerhut

"Just as Republicans had hoped, high inflation was the top consideration for voters in the midterm elections, AP VoteCast shows. But the survey reveals that a core issue for President Joe Biden, the survival of democracy, also weighed heavily on voters' minds, as control of Congress — and a choice between sharply contrasting visions of America — hung in the balance."

Vox: The midterms showed American democracy won't go down without a fight
By Zack Beauchamp

"...Republicans who denied the legitimacy of the 2020 election seem to have performed particularly poorly. At the state level, where the actual power to disrupt future elections lies, Democrats are very close to running the table. ... When you combine these results with Georgia, where Republican Gov. Brian Kemp and Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger held on despite resisting Trump's attempt to alter the vote total in 2020, the picture for 2024 suddenly looks far rosier for small-d democracy than expected."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Arizona Republic: Despite judge's order, Cochise County officials proceed with plans for a full hand count of ballots
By Mary Jo Pitzl

"Cochise County officials are proceeding with a hand count of every ballot cast in Tuesday's election, despite a court ruling that bars them from doing so. Meanwhile, the Board of Supervisors on Wednesday authorized its attorney to appeal that ruling to the Arizona Supreme Court, complicating the timeline for when — or if — the controversial count would actually happen."

Reuters: Arizona, Nevada election officials count ballots under high security
By Tim Reid and Ned Parker

"Arizona and Nevada security officials remained on high alert on Wednesday for election-related protests and allegations of voter fraud, as they prepared for days of ballot counting to determine final results in key races for governor and U.S. Senate."

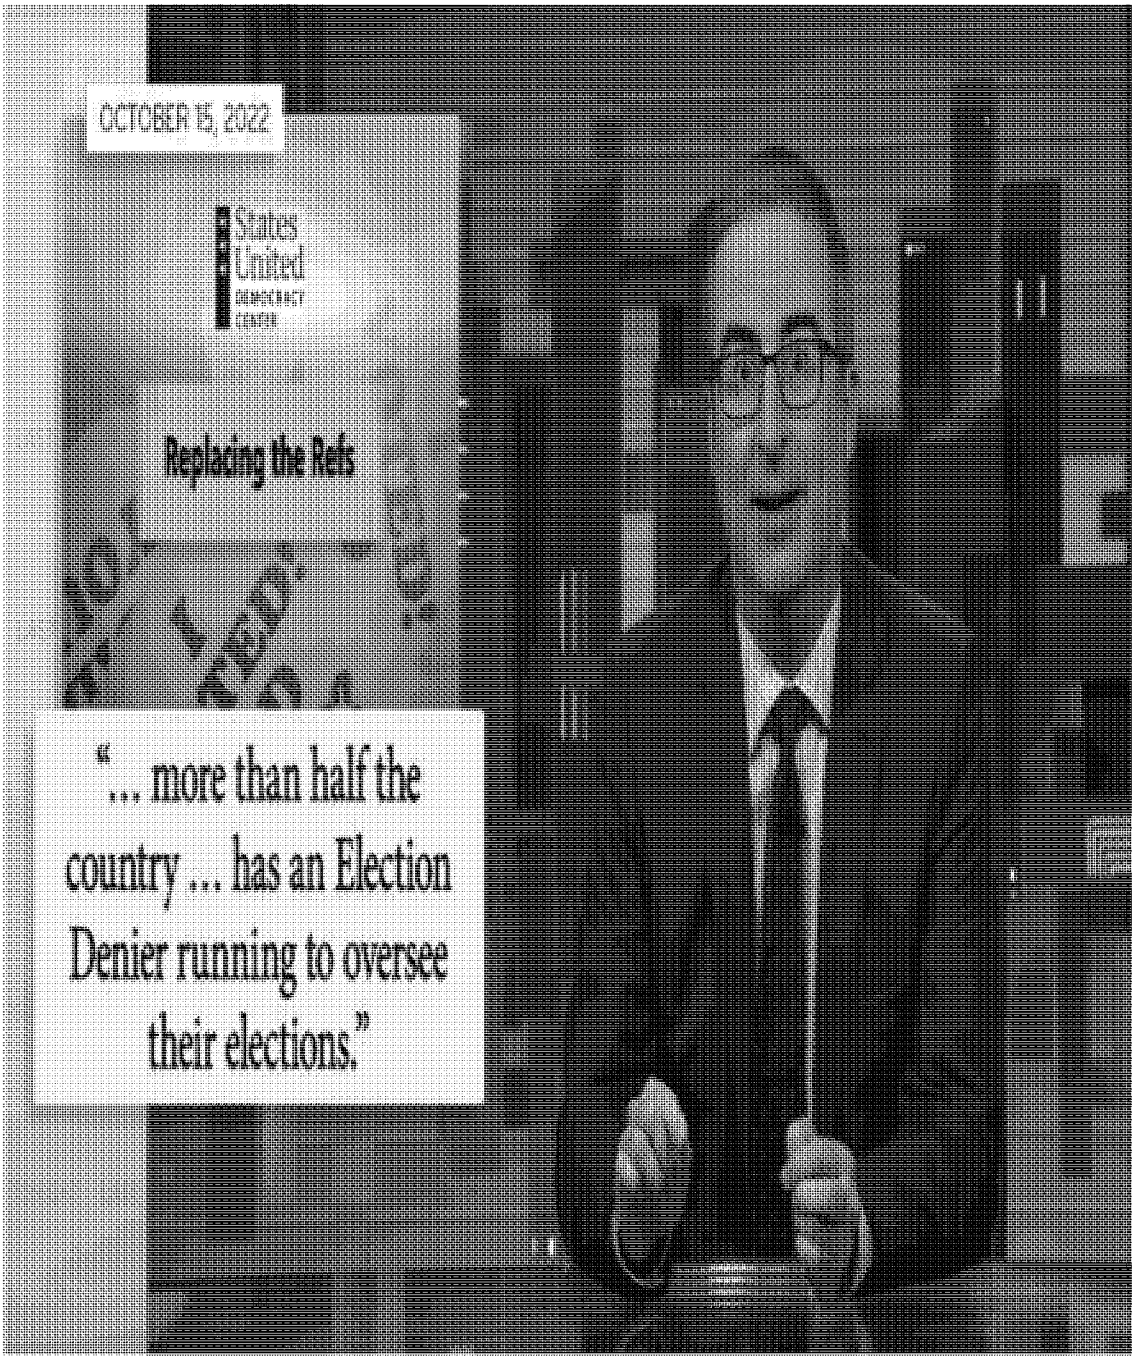
Detroit Free Press: Michigan has unofficial 2022 election results. Here's what happens next.
By Clara Hendrickson

"Once counties have certified their results, the state board reviews the vote totals from all 83 counties in Michigan and certifies statewide races and those races that cross county lines. This year, the Board of State Canvassers has until Nov. 28 to certify the midterm election results. Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson said she predicts quick resolution if a county fails to certify its results or the state board deadlocks."

Video of the Week

HBO's "Last Week Tonight with John Oliver" cited States United in a breakdown of election subversion of all kinds. The episode aired before this week's midterms, but it includes themes that remain as threats to our democracy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



We're Hiring!

The States United team is growing. We're building out key positions as we work to protect the integrity of our elections and serve as a resource to state leaders. You can check out our open positions and apply here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Follow States United on Twitter and Facebook to stay up-to-date!

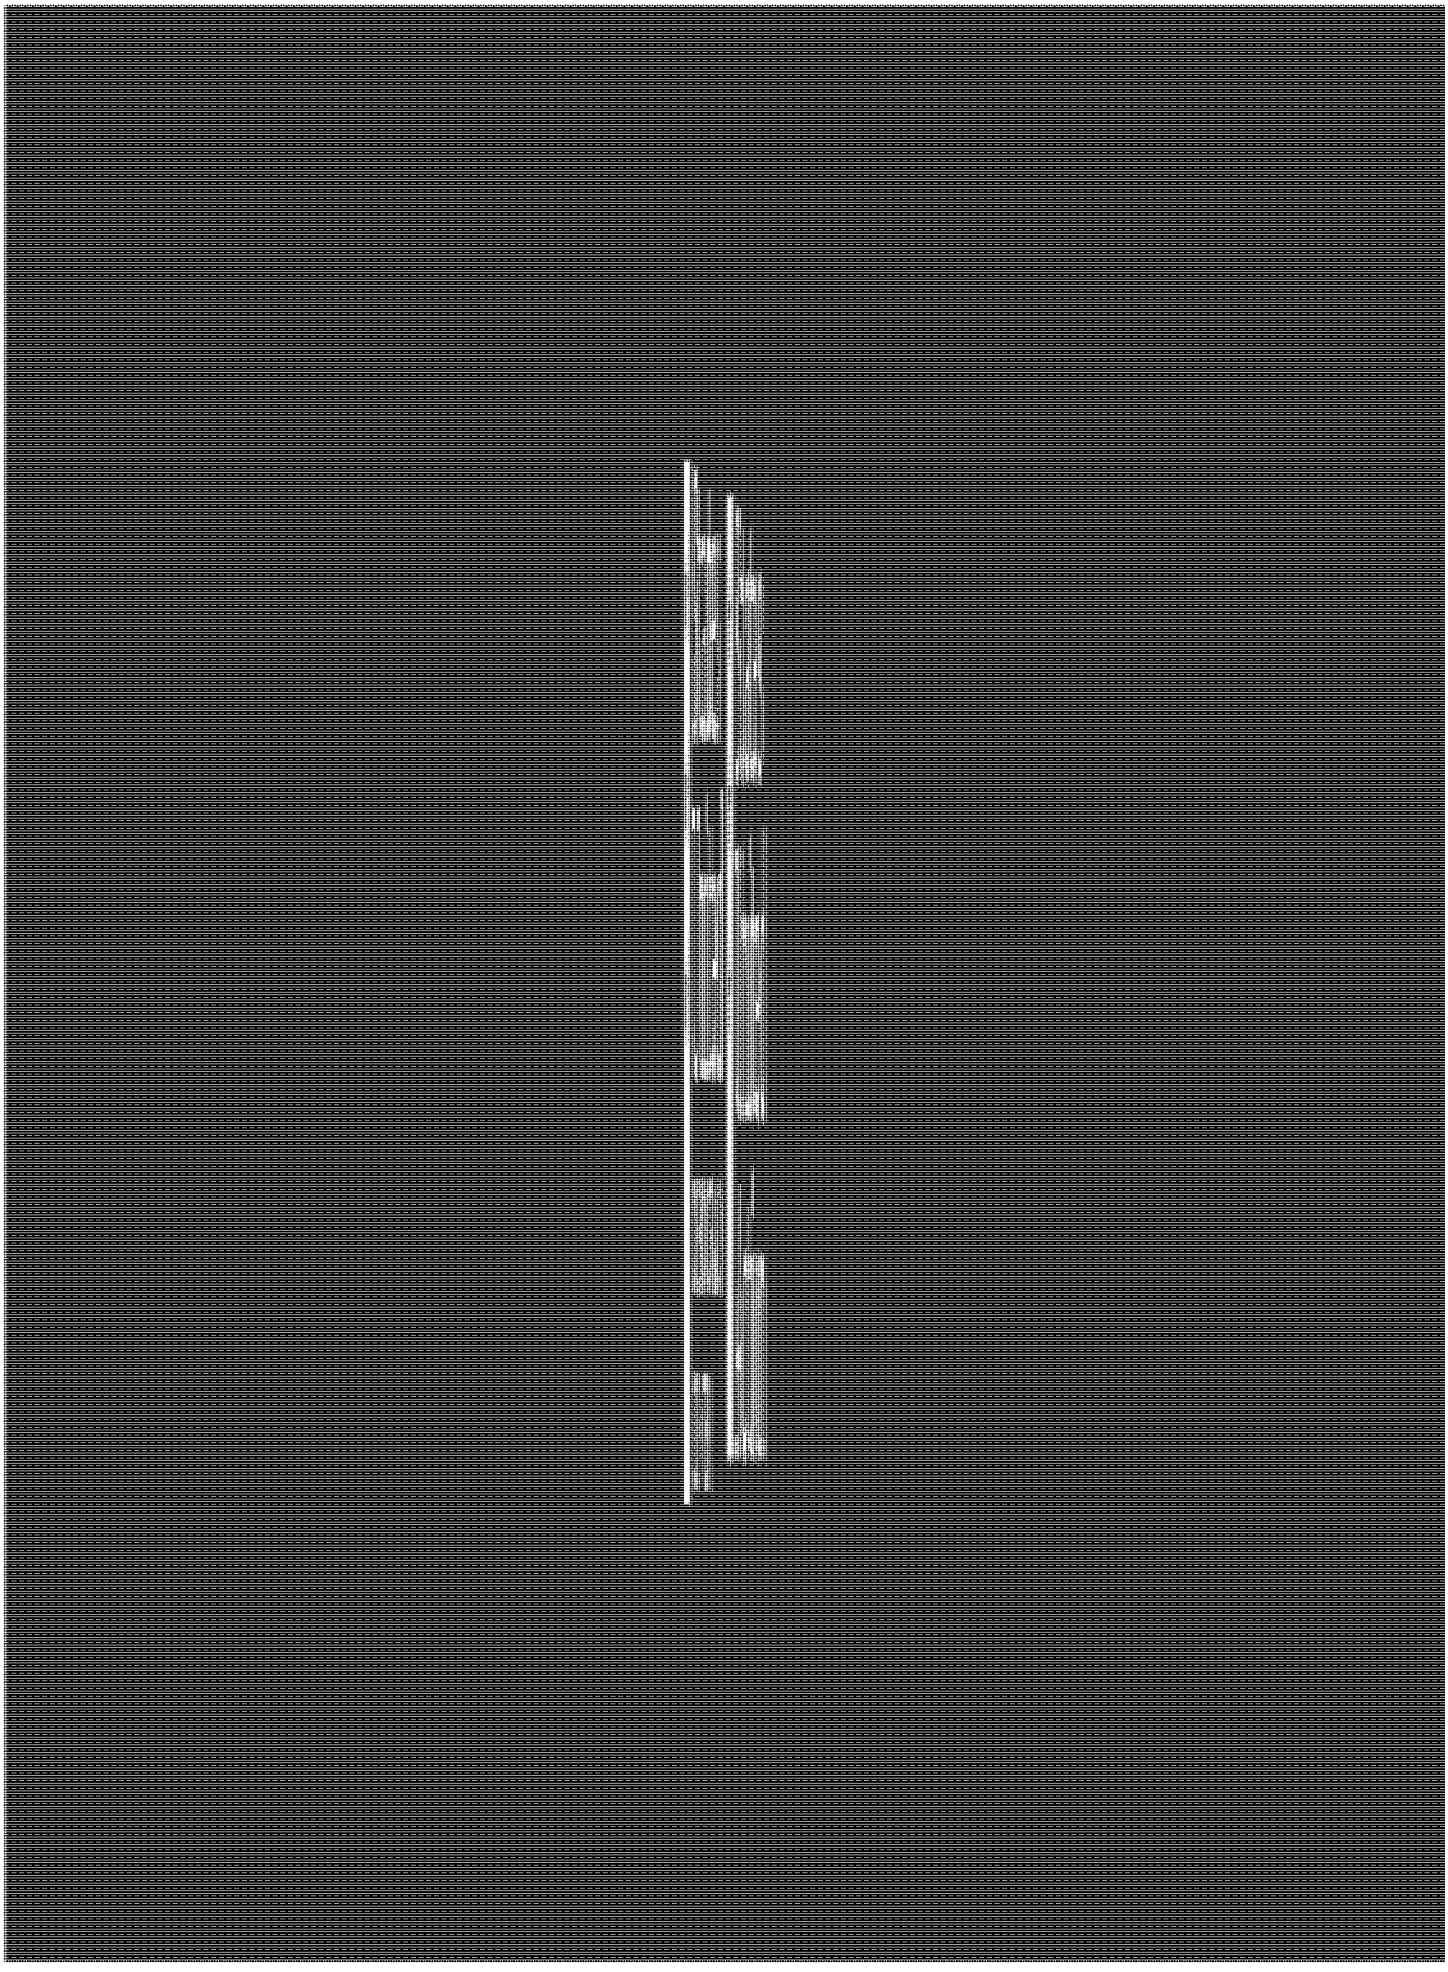
About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1420 K Street NW · Ste 800 · Washington, DC 20005-3377 · USA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/27/2023 8:29:48 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: What Accountability Looks Like

What Accountability Looks Like

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United DEMOCRACY CENTER States United Action

Only have a minute?

- The State Bar of California announced 11 disciplinary charges against John Eastman and will seek to have him disbarred for his role in trying to overturn the results of the 2020 election on behalf of former President Trump. States United first filed an ethics complaint against Eastman with the California Bar in October 2021.

- A jury in Washington, D.C., convicted four members of the Oath Keepers of seditious conspiracy for their roles in the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol. Stewart Rhodes, the group's founder, and Kelly Meggs, the leader of its Florida chapter, were convicted of the same charge in November. All six are awaiting sentencing.

- Arizona Attorney General Kris Mayes plans to redirect her office's Election Integrity Unit to focus on defending the freedom to vote and protecting election officials and election workers. Under Mayes's predecessor, the unit focused on voter fraud and "found scant evidence of it occurring in Arizona," Mayes told The New York Times.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

What Accountability Looks Like

Accountability is one of the strongest tools we have to prevent another attack like Jan. 6. When people step outside the bounds of our democracy, they must face consequences — not just in the courts but within their professions.

The State Bar of California this week took a major step toward accountability for John Eastman, who helped craft a legal strategy to try to overturn the 2020 election on behalf of then–President Trump.

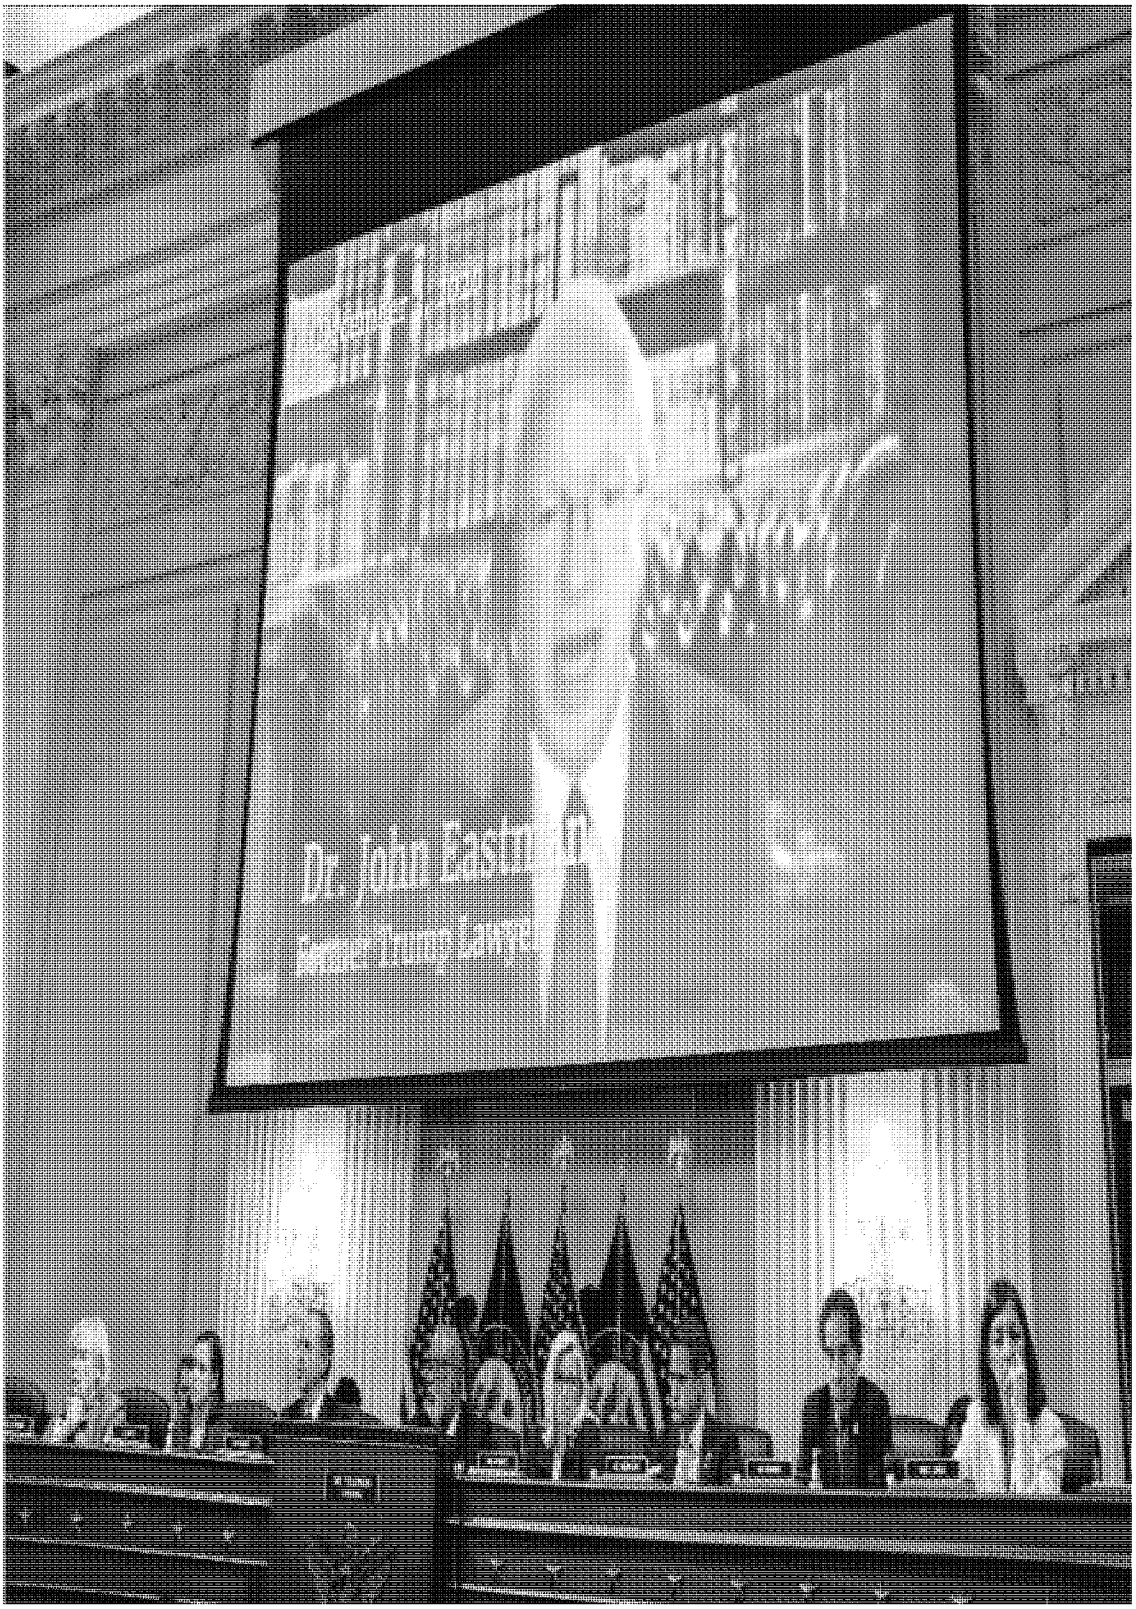
The state bar unveiled 11 disciplinary charges against Eastman and said it would seek to have him disbarred.

George Cardona, the California Bar's chief trial counsel, said Eastman violated his "highest legal duty," adherence to the U.S. and California Constitutions, in "an attempt to usurp the will of the American people and overturn election results for the highest office in the land."

"There is nothing more sacrosanct to our American democracy than free and fair elections and the peaceful transfer of power," Cardona said.

After the 2020 election, Eastman devised strategy, drafted legal memos, and advised President Trump and Vice President Pence with the purpose of obstructing the counting of electoral votes on Jan. 6, 2021.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



John Eastman appears on screen during a hearing of the House January 6 Select Committee last year. (Jabin Botsford/The Washington Post via Getty Images)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As the California Bar's Notice of Disciplinary Charges spells out, Eastman knew, or should have known, that his efforts were not supported by the facts or the law. And on Jan. 6, 2021, his lies helped provoke the crowd that later attacked the Capitol.

States United first filed an ethics complaint against Eastman with the California Bar in October 2021, and continued to file supplemental material as more information came to light about Eastman's role in trying to overturn the election.

Accountability shouldn't stop here. And as we said in a letter to the House January 6 Select Committee last year, other lawyers who took part in the efforts to overturn the 2020 election should face consequences.

We encourage other state bars to follow the strong example set by the California Bar. John Eastman betrayed our democracy and repeatedly, willfully violated his professional duty to uphold our Constitution. He should never be allowed to practice law again.

State of the States

In Georgia, Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis said "decisions are imminent" in the criminal investigation into attempts to overturn the state's 2020 election results. Willis argued at a hearing this week that a special grand jury's final report on the investigation should be kept under seal for now. "The state understands the media's inquiry and the world's interest, but we have to be mindful of protecting future defendants' rights," she told Judge Robert McBurney. News organizations argued that the report should be made public. McBurney did not immediately rule on the matter and promised there would be "no rash decisions." The special grand jury heard from dozens of witnesses about attempts to reverse former President Trump's loss in Georgia. Willis will determine whether to seek criminal charges following the special grand jury's report.

In the News

The Washington Post: Calif. seeks to disbar Trump adviser John Eastman over Jan. 6 charges
By Mariana Alfaro

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"The move to file disciplinary charges against Eastman was applauded by the States United Democracy Center, a Washington-based group promoting fair and secure elections that in a statement described Eastman as the 'mastermind' of the plot to overturn the 2020 election. 'He abused the legal system and violated the oath he swore as an attorney, in an attempt to block the will of the people and prevent the peaceful transfer of power,' said Christine P. Sun, the group's senior vice president of legal."

Los Angeles Times: Op-Ed: Hold John Eastman accountable for Trump's coup strategy
By Norm Eisen, Dennis Aftergut, and Christine P. Sun

"Swift action from the bar is critical to stopping Eastman from continuing to undermine both the legal profession and our democracy — and to warn other lawyers never to take this dangerous path."

AP: Lawmakers seek to bar insurrectionists from holding office
By Maysoon Khan

" ... The committee's recently concluded work may have provided another springboard for lawmakers to act and propose ways to hold people accountable, said Victoria Bassetti, a senior policy adviser at States United Democracy Center, a nonpartisan organization that advocates for fair elections."

POLITICO: Election deniers set sights on next target
By Zach Montellaro

"Swing state voters broadly rejected candidates in last year's midterms who questioned the results of the 2020 elections. But unfounded accusations of fraud and other malfeasance continue to tear at the machinery of U.S. elections."

Arizona Mirror: Election denial is lucrative: Kari Lake raised $2.5 million after Election Day
By Jim Small

"Following the election, Lake's campaign spent $3 million. And while she was telling her supporters that the money was needed to contest the election and ensure she was installed as the rightful governor of Arizona, that didn't happen. Only $228,000 was spent on the lawsuit aiming to overturn the election — less than 10% of her post-election haul."

Bridge Michigan: Michigan clerks: We need more money, guidance to implement early voting
By Yue Stella Yu

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"State elections clerks say they want more funding, time to process ballots and guidance as they adjust to a new, constitutionally implemented system that requires nine days of early voting."

City & State Pennsylvania: Bipartisan state panel issues new report aiming to clarify mail-in ballot rules
By Harrison Cann

"Since the implementation of Act 77, the 2019 law that allowed mail-in voting, county and elections officials have agreed on one thing: voters need clarity on how to do it. A bipartisan research group within the state legislature issued a report on mail-in ballots this week that addresses some concerns about mail-in voting, recommending the General Assembly clarify laws surrounding date and signature requirements, secrecy envelopes and drop boxes."

Votebeat and The Texas Tribune: Three Texas counties are suing the attorney general to get clarity on when the public can access post-election ballots
By Natalia Contreras

"At least three Texas counties — Tarrant, Williamson and Harris — have sued Attorney General Ken Paxton and are asking a judge to strike down a legal opinion he released last year that says anyone can access voted ballots right after an election. The lawsuits allege Paxton's opinion violates state and federal law, contradicts his own previous direction on the issue and exposes local elections administrators to potential criminal charges."

Tweet of the Week

Our friends at Issue One look at the lucrative business of election lies:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Issue One
@IssueOneReform

Who were some of the companies and political consultants that turned election denialism into profit during the 2022 midterm cycle? Our report pulls back the curtain.

issueone.org
Who Profited from Election Deniers? - Issue One

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and Twitter to stay up-to-date!

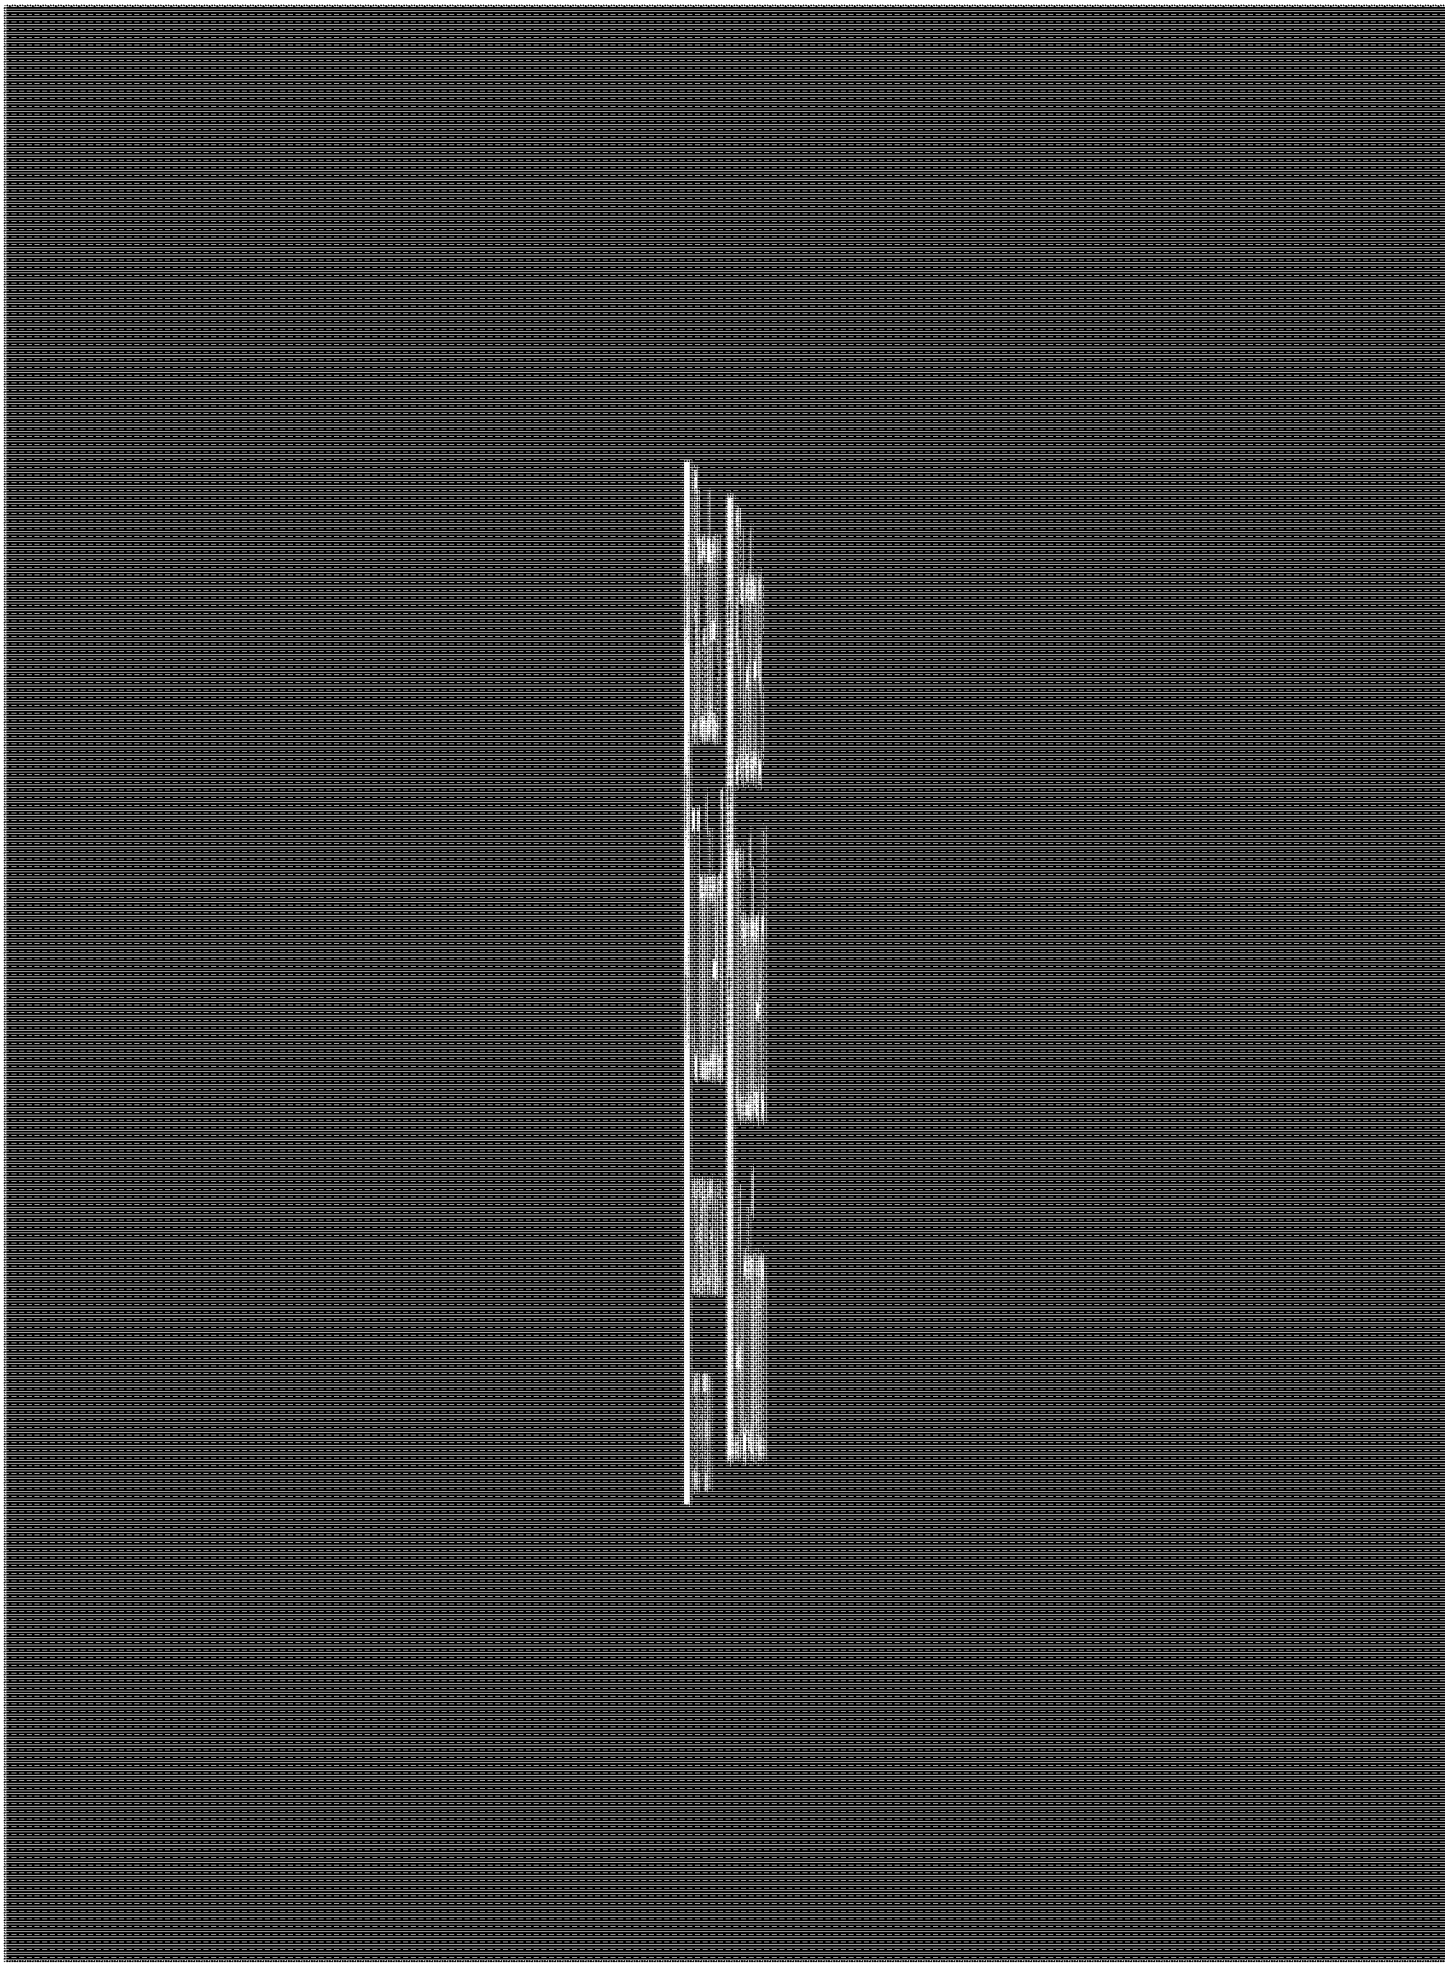
About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Was this forwarded to you?
Sign up for daily updates here.

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1420 K Street NW · Ste 800 · Washington, DC 20005-3377 · USA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/3/2023 9:57:03 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Fox and Facts

Fox and Facts

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

Only have a minute?

- The Justice Department urged a court to reject former President Trump's claim that he should be immune from being sued over the Jan. 6 attack. Two Capitol police officers are among those suing the former president for the physical and psychological injuries they suffered during the riot.

- The Supreme Court asked for more briefs to inform its next steps in Moore v. Harper, a redistricting case concerning a radical legal theory that could give partisan state legislatures virtually unchecked power over federal elections. The North Carolina Supreme Court agreed last month to reconsider the underlying dispute.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel said she was among those targeted by a heavily armed man who allegedly threatened to kill all Jewish members of the state government.

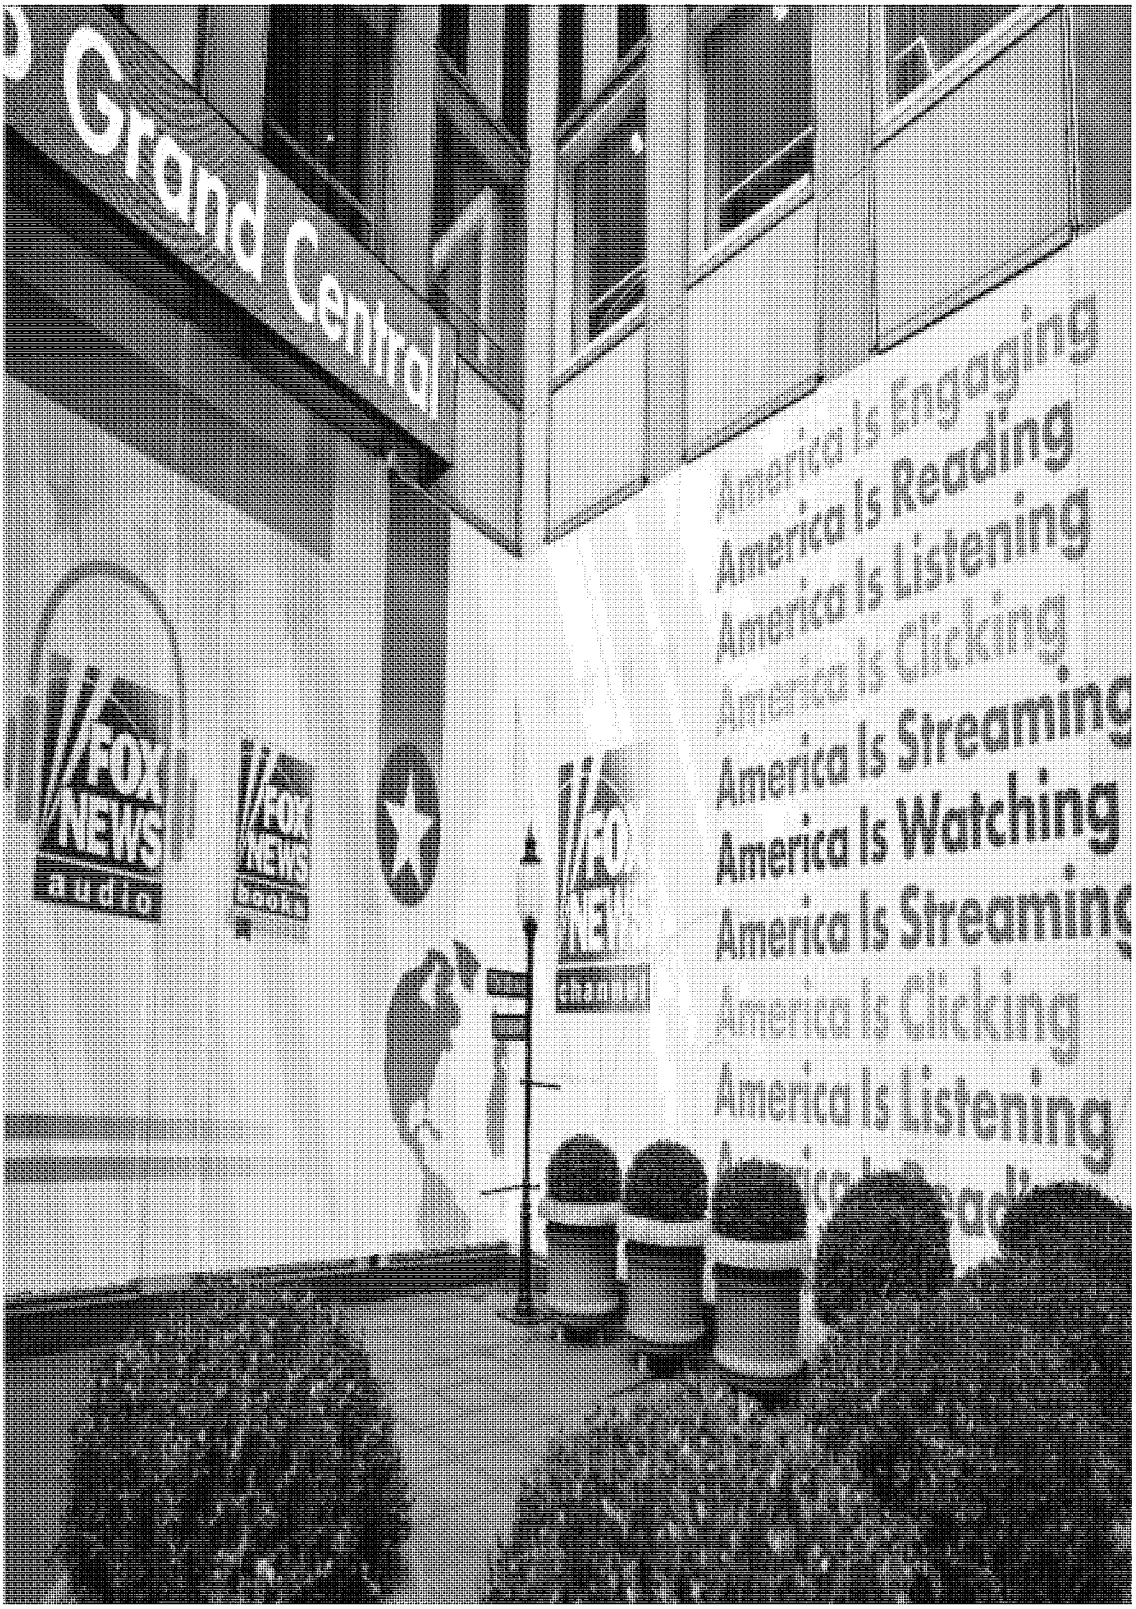
Fox and Facts

In the days after the 2020 election, Fox News and Fox Business broadcast wild and unfounded allegations about rigged voting machines and other conspiracy theories.

Behind the scenes, we now know that Fox's own hosts and executives were ridiculing these claims as "absurd," "ludicrous," and "shockingly reckless." But they were worried about losing viewers to far-right competitors. Profits were at stake.

These are among the revelations from a $1.6 billion lawsuit filed against Fox by Dominion Voting Systems. In a deposition made public this week, Rupert Murdoch himself said he wished the networks had been "stronger in denouncing" the lies, despite acknowledging that Fox hosts repeatedly endorsed conspiracy theories about a stolen election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Michael M. Santiago/Getty Images

It will be up to a court to decide whether the networks' conduct amounted to defamation. But it was a clear disservice to Fox viewers, who deserved to know that the election wasn't rigged or stolen. It was free, fair, and secure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It was also a disservice to hundreds of dedicated state and local election officials, who had to fight a torrent of disinformation, not to mention threats to their own safety, to get the truth out in real time.

"Even under wave after wave of scrutiny," as Votebeat wrote this week, state and local election officials' "reassurances about the security and integrity of the 2020 election have been supported by the facts."

By giving oxygen to what were obviously ridiculous conspiracy theories, Fox caused lasting damage to Americans' faith and confidence in our elections. The voters who tuned in deserved better. They deserved the truth.

State of the States

In Wisconsin, the nonprofit organization Law Forward filed an ethics complaint against Michael Gableman, who was fired after leading a sham review of the 2020 election that found no evidence of fraud. Law Forward filed the complaint with the Office of Lawyer Regulation, an agency of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, and urged the agency to hold Gableman accountable. The complaint, which runs more than 100 pages, details how he hired conspiracy theorists, intimidated voters with unlawful subpoenas, spread disinformation, and lied repeatedly to the government and the public. An accompanying letter calls Gableman's review a "disastrous and embarrassing attack on Wisconsin's legal and political institutions." Law Forward said in a statement: "His actions were and continue to be a threat to democracy, plain and simple, and a violation of his sworn duty to uphold both the U.S. and Wisconsin constitutions."

In the News

AP: Failing at polls, election deniers focus on state GOP posts
By Nicholas Riccardi and Joey Cappelletti

"'The rise of this dangerous ideology nationwide and the rise within party machinery are ominous,' said Norm Eisen, a prominent Washington lawyer and former ambassador who is executive chair of States United Democracy Center, which tracks election deniers. 'It's an outrageous phenomenon.'"

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Newsweek (Opinion): The Threat of Election Denial Is Still Real—and Very Dangerous
By former U.S. Sen. Tim Wirth and Tom Rogers

" ... election deniers are still very much regrouping for another assault on our democratic election process, and they still have plenty of troop strength at the state, the county and local level."

The Wall Street Journal: House Republicans Plan Wider Media Access to Jan. 6 Video
By Andrew Ackerman and Siobhan Hughes

"House Republican lawmakers said they plan to allow a broad group of media outlets to view security-camera footage from the Jan. 6, 2021, riot at the U.S. Capitol, about a week after Fox News host Tucker Carlson said his show was granted access to the tapes."

The Arizona Republic: At Arizona Capitol, Republican leaders spotlight far-fetched election conspiracies
By Ray Stern

"If the presentations have proven anything, it's that conspiracy-minded Republican leaders aren't backing down in the face of election losses and investigations that continue to debunk their claims."

Votebeat: Cochise County gives election skeptic recorder near full control of elections
By Jen Fifield

"Elections in Cochise County [Ariz.] will now be run almost entirely by Recorder David Stevens, an election skeptic who has said he does not fully trust all of his county's election procedures and believes the county can and should move to hand-counting ballots."

MLive: Bills would ban guns at Michigan polls, punish election worker harassment
By Ben Orner

"Michigan House Democrats have introduced a package of bills they say will protect election officials and workers by increasing penalties for harassment and banning guns from voting locations. The four bills follow promises that Democrats have made early in this new legislature — where they hold majorities in both chambers — to further secure Michigan's elections."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bolts: West Virginia Adds to Election Deniers' Ongoing Takeover of State Politics
By Alex Burness

"This takeover of GOP infrastructure by candidates who spread false conspiracies about the 2020 election has continued even since their high-profile losses in the fall of 2022."

WPR: Pricetag on Assembly Republicans' investigation into the 2020 presidential election nears $2.5M
By Anya van Wagtendonk

"A court judgment against Assembly Speaker Robin Vos, R-Rochester, has added another $135,000 to the cost of the Assembly Republicans' investigation into the 2020 presidential election. The ruling brings the total price tag attached to that investigation to almost $2.5 million in taxpayer dollars, according to a review by WisPolitics."

Profile of the Week

Arizona Attorney General Kris Mayes spoke to The Guardian about protecting the freedom to vote and her vow to prosecute those who threaten election officials.

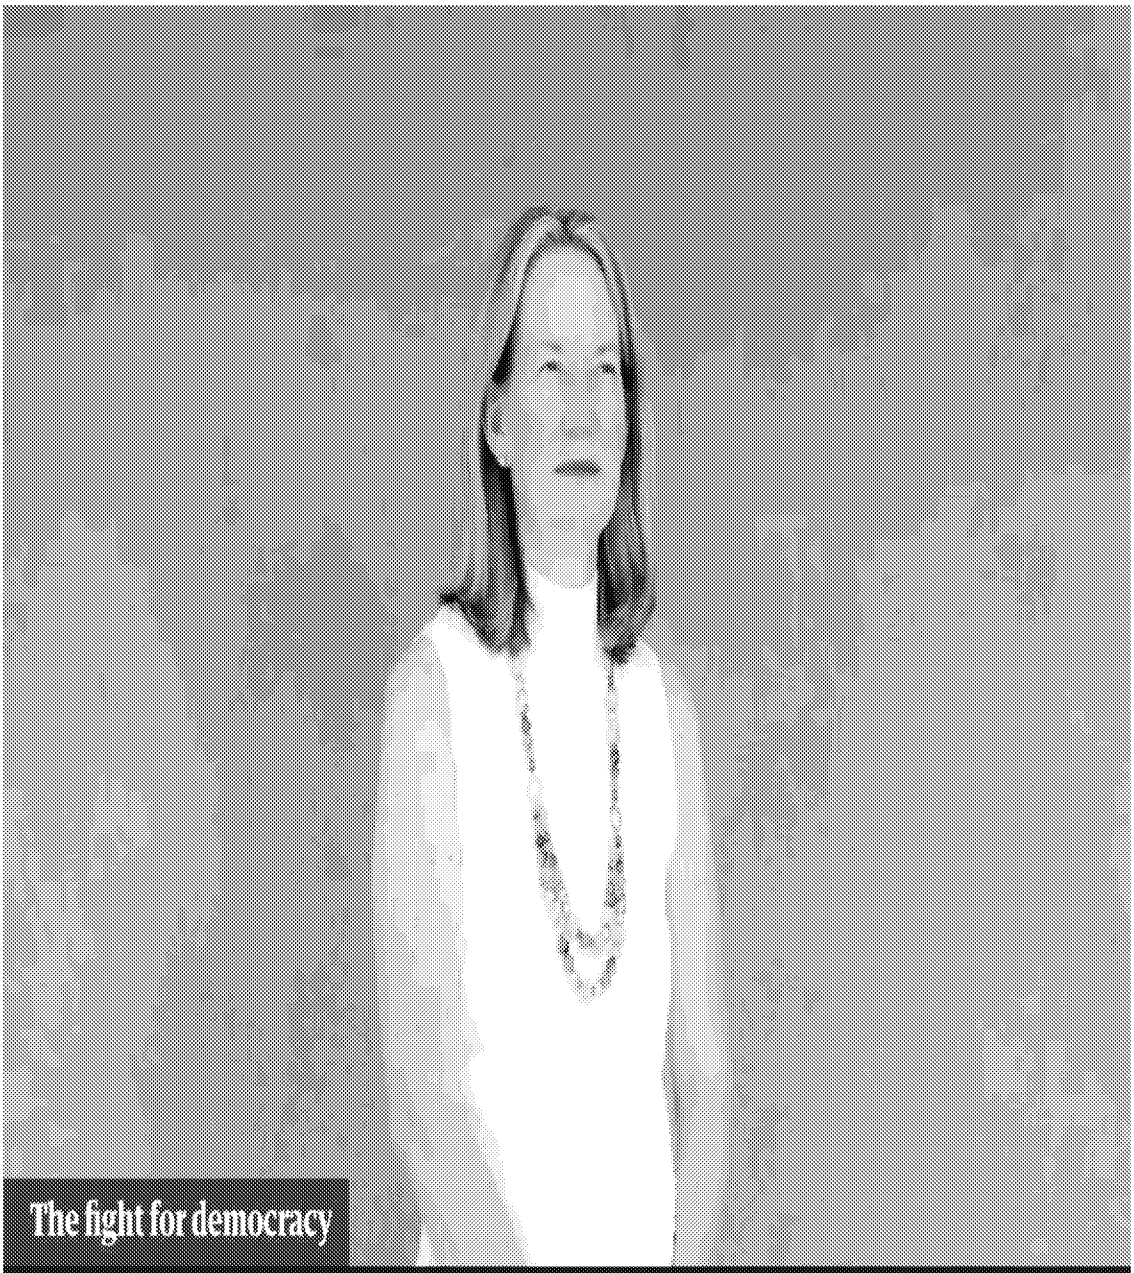
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



The fight for democracy

'We will prosecute death threats': Arizona's new attorney general fights to protect election workers

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and Twitter to stay up-to-date!

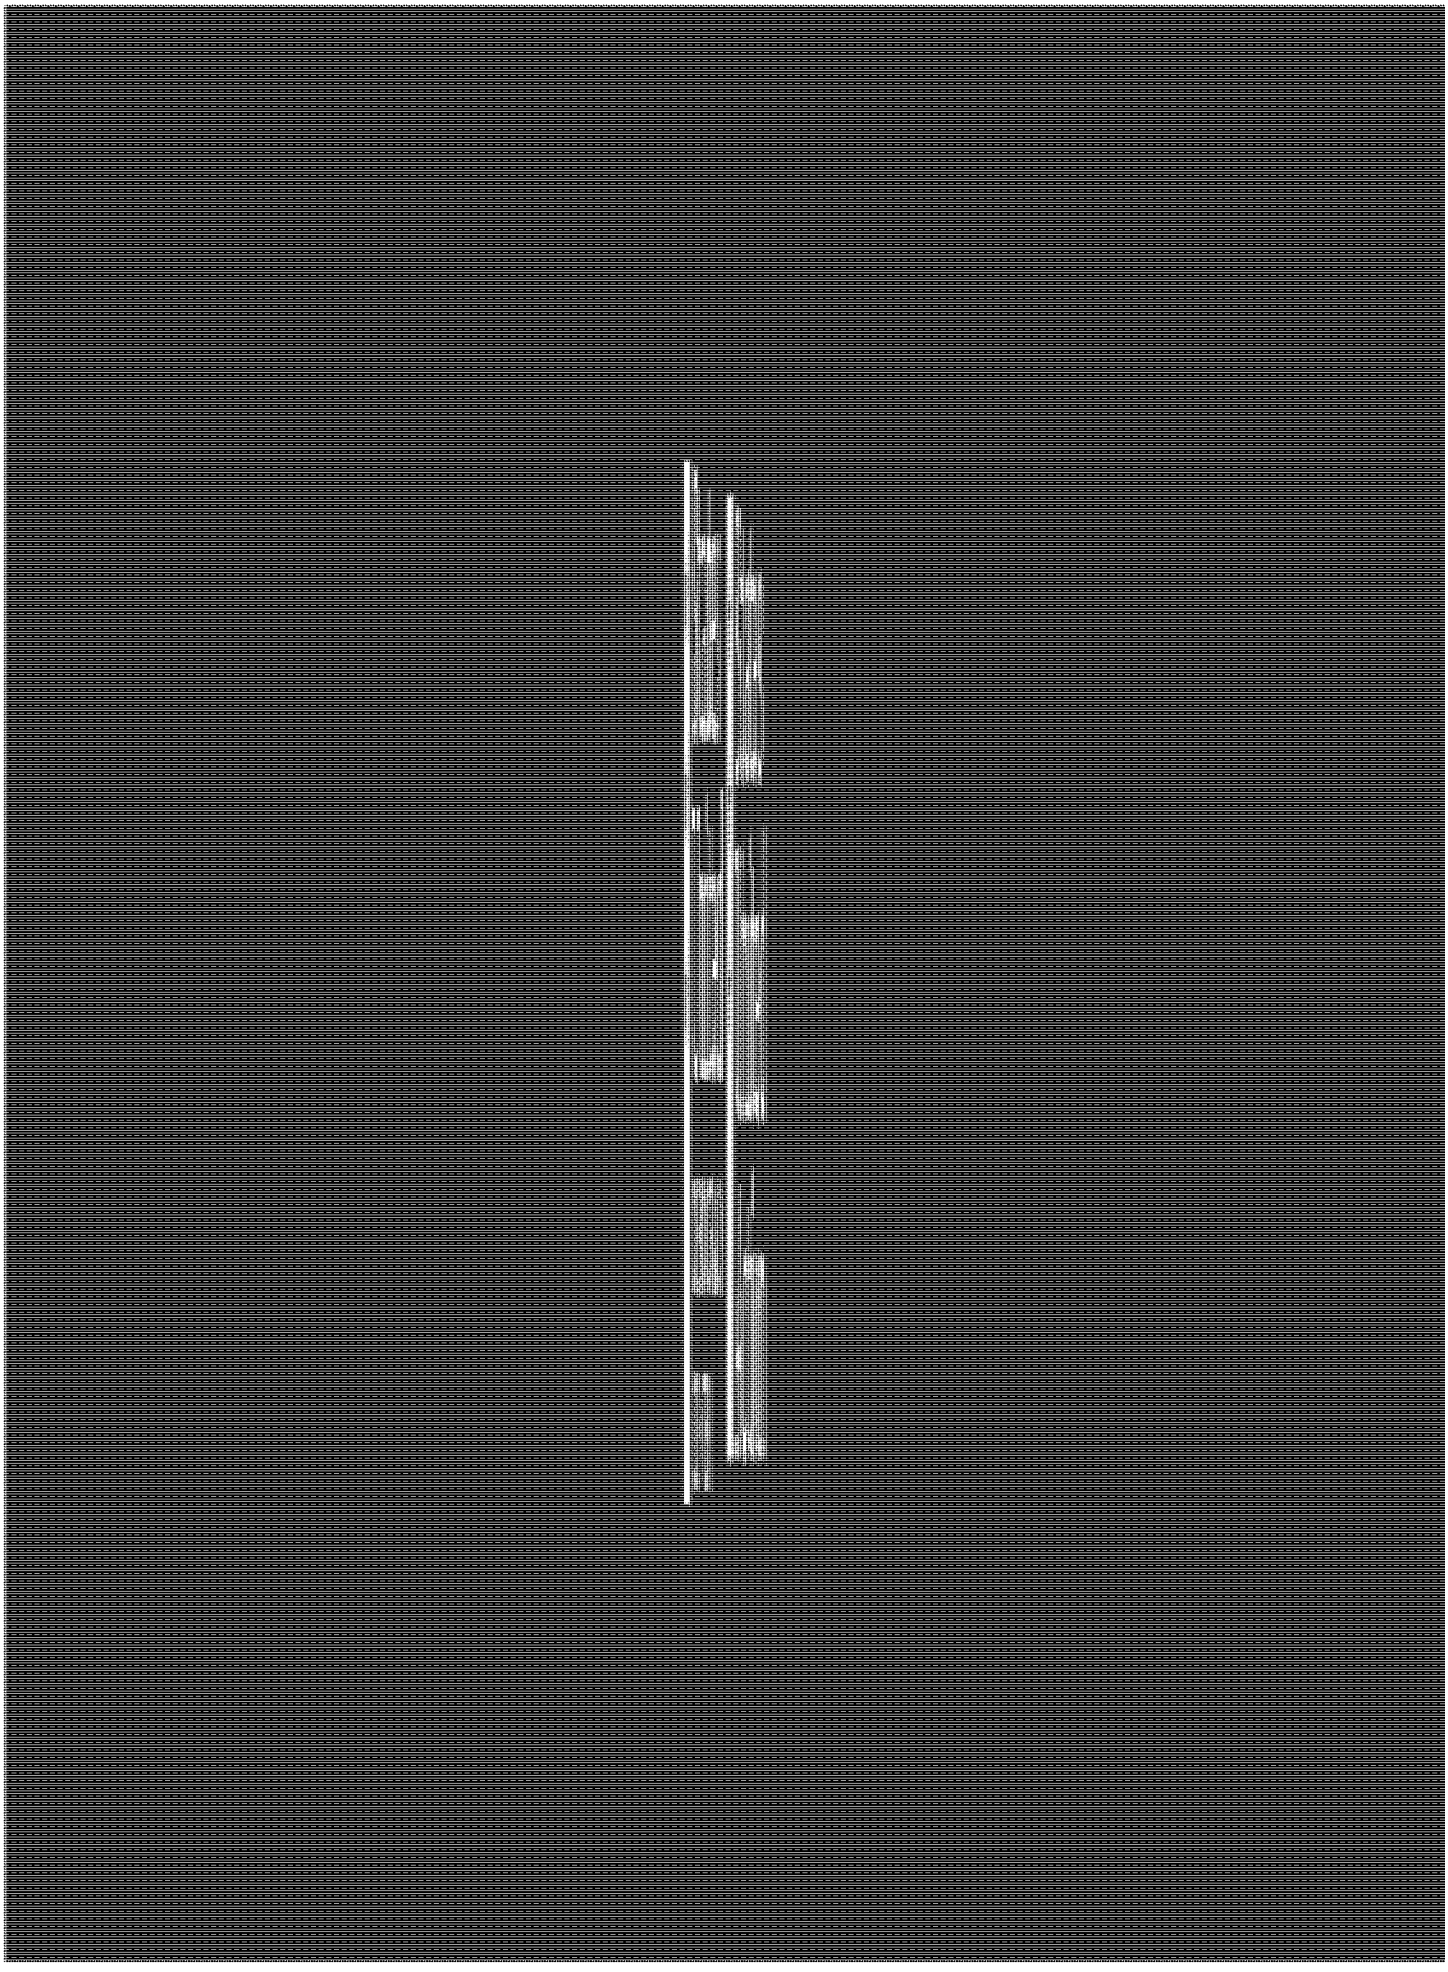
About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Was this forwarded to you?
Sign up for daily updates here.

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1101 17th St NW · Suite 250 · Washington, DC 20036 · USA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/17/2023 8:39:51 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Who Political Violence Threatens

Who Political Violence Threatens

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United DEMOCRACY CENTER States United Action

Only have a minute?

- As a jury continued deliberations in the trial of six affiliates of the Oath Keepers charged for their actions during the Jan. 6 attack on the Capitol, federal prosecutors completed more than two months of testimony in a separate case against five members of the Proud Boys.

- A man accused of aiding the plot to kidnap Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer pleaded guilty to attempting to provide material support for terrorism in the 2020 kidnapping conspiracy. He agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in their case against four additional defendants who are set to face a state terrorism trial in August over the plot.

- An annual threat assessment from the U.S. intelligence community affirms that Russia tried to interfere in the 2022 midterm elections. The report warns that these efforts, including spreading disinformation, have intensified over the past few years. States United continues to make combatting the spread of disinformation a top priority.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Who Political Violence Threatens

In Michigan, the three statewide officials responsible for overseeing and defending elections are all women: Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson, and Attorney General Dana Nessel.

All three defeated Election Deniers to win re-election last fall. All three have been threatened with violence. In 2020, Whitmer was the target of a plot by a group of men who planned to kidnap her and kill any police officers who stood in their way. Accountability for those threats is still ongoing.

Our history reflects the countless and continuing efforts of women to strengthen our democracy and make it more inclusive. But we must also acknowledge that women are disproportionately targeted by political violence.

Public officials who are women and racial or ethnic minorities are much more likely to report being harassed or threatened, according to a survey of local elected officials last year by Princeton University, Bridging Divides Initiative, the Anti-Defamation League, and CivicPulse.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The 19th, a news organization that focuses on gender, politics, and policy, this week published an enlightening read on this sobering reality.

As Katie Reisner, senior counsel at States United, explains in the story, a recent example in

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New Mexico illustrates how easily Election Denier behavior and disinformation can translate into direct danger for elected officials.

In that case, authorities say a failed political candidate was at the center of a series of drive-by shootings at the homes of Democratic officials, including state Sen. Linda Lopez. A bullet went through the bedroom of her 10-year-old daughter.

Confronting political violence, along with the disinformation that feeds it, is an urgent priority. At States United, we provide guidance on best practices for countering political violence, and work with law enforcement to help keep election officials safe. Fighting dangerous election lies goes hand in hand with these efforts.

The climate of threats faced by the country's thousands of dedicated election officials and election workers, most of them women, is unacceptable. Their security is essential to maintaining peace, order, and trust in our democracy.

State of the States

In Arizona, Attorney General Kris Mayes said the State Bar and other entities should determine whether her predecessor, Mark Brnovich, faces consequences for withholding a report by state investigators that found there was no widespread fraud in the state's 2020 election. After Brnovich kept the findings private, Mayes published them herself last month and said they "show what we have suspected for over two years — the 2020 election in Arizona was conducted fairly and accurately by elections officials." Gov. Katie Hobbs's office has urged the State Bar to look into Brnovich's withholding of the findings, saying the revelation "exposed what is likely unethical conduct" by the former attorney general.

In the News

The 19th: Threats against Michigan women leaders highlight ongoing concerns over political violence
By Barbara Rodriguez

"Experts on political violence say women, and particularly women of color, are disproportionately impacted by threats of harassment and political violence. 'The New Mexico example illustrates how quickly it can go from someone aggrieved because of election

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disinformation or denialism … to someone acting on the way in which they are aggrieved,' said Katie Reisner, senior counsel for States United Democracy Center, a nonpartisan organization that advocates for free, fair and secure elections."

The Washington Post: The hits keep coming for election-deniers
By Aaron Blake

" … while the wheels of justice indeed turn slowly, the sanctions for those who baselessly spread and promoted such claims continue to increase. Just this month, that list grew to include both a Trump campaign legal adviser and one of the most conspiratorial, Trump-backed candidates to appear on the 2022 ballot."

The New York Times: 'History Will Hold Donald Trump Accountable' for Jan. 6, Pence Says
By Jonathan Weisman

"Former Vice President Mike Pence, delivering his strongest public rebuke yet to the president who made him his running mate, said on Saturday night 'that history will hold Donald Trump accountable' for the Jan. 6, 2021, attack on the Capitol, which he called 'a disgrace.'"

Votebeat: States' withdrawals weaken ERIC and show conspiracy theories taking deep root
By Carrie Levine

"Withdrawing from it will leave states with fewer tools to uncover voters who have moved or died and should no longer be on the rolls, creating more opportunities for the voter fraud that critics say they are worried about. The program's diminished membership also will result in less outreach to eligible voters who haven't yet registered."

Axios: Colorado GOP picks election denier to lead party into 2024 election
By John Frank

"The Colorado Republican Party's new leader believes Donald Trump won the 2020 election and considers Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell a 'feckless leader.' … The party's roughly 400-member central committee selected Dave Williams, a former state representative who challenged incumbent GOP congressman in 2022 and lost, as the party's new chair."

Reveal: DeSantis' Election Police Have Largely Flopped in Florida Voter Prosecutions. A New Law Aims to Change That.
By Maryam Saleh and Ese Olumhense

"A new Florida law gives Gov. Ron DeSantis' prosecutors power to pursue more election-related cases — a move explicitly designed to circumvent recent judicial scrutiny of the state's highly politicized voter prosecutions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Texas Tribune: Texas Senate passes bill to make illegal voting a felony again
By Pooja Salhotra and Natalia Contreras

"The Texas Senate on Tuesday gave final approval, on a 19–12 vote, to legislation that would raise the penalty for voting illegally from a misdemeanor to a felony, a priority for Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick and other conservative lawmakers who have worked to remake the state's voting laws since the 2020 election, despite the lack of evidence of widespread voter fraud in Texas."

The Texas Tribune: Ken Paxton's campaign against election crimes ensnared a Texas justice of the peace three times before judges thwarted the efforts
By Alejandro Serrano

"Many of the illegal voting cases the Texas attorney general has boasted about are unraveling after a key court ruling. But Tomas Ramirez III said the pursuit of charges against him has taken its toll."

Opinion of the Week

Tom Joscelyn, a former staffer for the House January 6 Select Committee, calls out Tucker Carlson's distortion of Jan. 6, 2021 in Politico Magazine.*

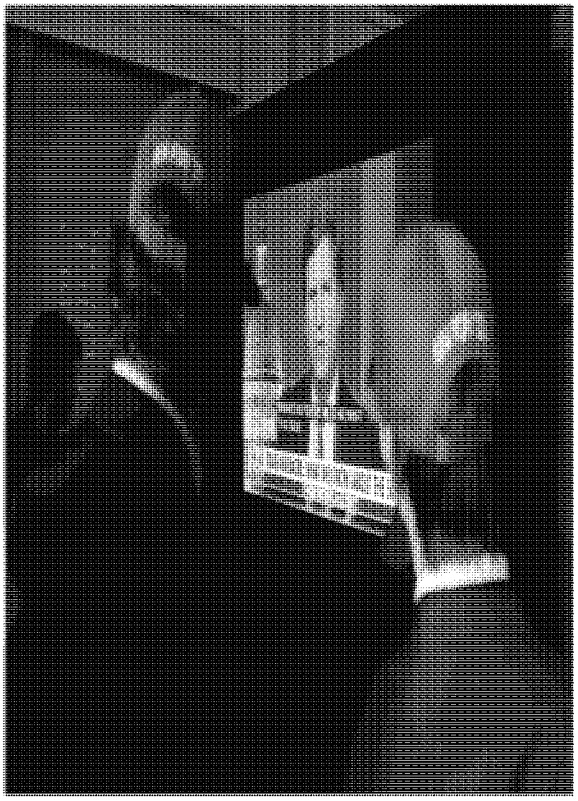
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MAGAZINE

LAW AND ORDER

Opinion | I Helped Write the Jan. 6 Committee Report. Here's What Tucker Carlson Left Out.

Conspiracy theories from the Fox News host are easily squashed.



Tucker Carlson promised viewers that his reveal of this massive tranche of video would dramatically alter our collective understanding of the events. It did not. | Brynn Anderson/AP Photo

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and Twitter to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit www.statesuniteddemocracy.org.

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit www.statesunitedemocracy.org/states-united-action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This email was sent to meingasth@michigan.gov

why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

States United Democracy Center · 1101 17th St NW · Suite 250 · Washington, DC 20036 · USA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 9/20/2024 9:30:39 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Michigan webpage
Attachments: Protecting Michigan Voters from AI Generated Election Misinformation - DRAFT-2.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Our team's comments are attached. Have a great weekend!

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, September 18, 2024 at 8:40 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Michigan webpage

AG wants to go live as soon as possible.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, September 18, 2024 5:39:51 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Michigan webpage

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks. Will get back to you ASAP. Do you have a deadline?

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, September 18, 2024 at 3:39 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Michigan webpage

Hi Jonathan,

Attached is what we can provide, screen shot and word doc. If changes could be made in track changes on word doc that would be great.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
Sent: 3/29/2024 1:04:06 PM
To: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: CA bar court recommends disbarring Eastman

Thanks, Robert

Daniel Osher
Deputy Legal Counsel, Executive Office of the Governor
osherd@michigan.gov
(517) 242-0089

From: Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, March 28, 2024 3:10:16 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: CA bar court recommends disbarring Eastman

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather and Dan,

Flagging for you the State Bar Court of California's recommendation that John Eastman be disbarred from the practice of law in California. Matter of Eastman, Case No. SBC-23-O-30029-YDR (Cal. Bar. Ct. Mar. 27, 2024). The recommendation comes following a 35-day trial last year that detailed Eastman's role in efforts to overturn the results of the 2020 election.

Specific to Michigan, the decision makes the following references to:

- Eastman's involvement in Texas v. Pennsylvania, the lawsuit brought seeking to invalidate election results in the 2020 election in Michigan and other states. Id. at 9–10.

- Eastman's "January 6 scenario" memos outlining his recommendation that Vice President Pence acknowledge fake slates of electors from seven states, including Michigan, and declare Trump re-elected. Id. at 43.

- Eastman's allegation in the "January 6 scenario" memos that Michigan mailed out absentee ballots to every registered voter ahead of the 2020 election, instead of absentee ballot applications as permitted by law. Id. at 46

- Eastman's 1/5 meeting with Greg Jacob and Marc Short, respectively legal counsel and chief of staff for VP Pence, where Eastman repeated his request that VP Pence reject electoral votes from Michigan and other states. Id. at 66.

- Eastman's article published in American Mind on Jan.18, 2021, where he repeats allegations of fraud in Michigan's 2020 election. In the article, Eastman alleges there were "more absentee votes cast than had been requested" in Wayne County and "votes were electronically flipped from Trump to Biden" in Antrim County. Id. at 71. The opinion specifically notes that by November or December of 2020, Eastman was aware that Michigan had conducted a full hand count of Antrim County and found that the machine count was accurate. Id. 73. This portion of the decision cites testimony from Jonathan Brater. Id. at 72.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Eastman's false statement in the American Mind article that a report by J. Alex Halderman supported his Antrim County claims. Id. at 73.

- Eastman's use of reports generated by Russell Ramsland analyzing Dominion voting machines and the results in Antrim County. Id. at 73. The opinion states, "Ramsland's claims were not credible and reflected a fundamental misunderstanding of Michigan election administration." Id.

Eastman will officially become ineligible to practice law in California in two days. He may request an appeal with the State Bar Court's Review Department and then later with the California Supreme Court. We will keep you updated.

Thanks,
Robert

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, March 27, 2024 at 6:17 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>, Osher, Daniel <osherd@michigan.gov>
Cc: Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: CA bar court recommends disbarring Eastman

He can appeal but will not be able to practice during the appeal. Will review decision (attached) for references to Michigan tomorrow. Please let Mike know. Thank you.

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/29/2024 9:51:26 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 'This Is a Big Deal'

'This Is a Big Deal'

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- After a lengthy ethics trial, a judge recommended that former Trump attorney John Eastman should permanently lose his law license in California because of his role in the plot to overturn the 2020 presidential election. States United filed the initial ethics complaint in 2021 against Eastman.

➡ READ: States United's statement

- Former Justice Department official Jeffrey Clark began his own disciplinary trial in Washington, D.C. Clark could be the next former Trump attorney to lose his law license for efforts to overturn the 2020 election. His actions were "essentially a coup attempt at the Department of Justice," a lawyer for the D.C. Bar said.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- The U.S. Department of Justice announced that it is cracking down on threats to election officials. Since the creation of its Election Threats Task Force in 2021, the department has brought about 20 prosecutions, with many resulting in substantial prison sentences.

- A judge imposed a partial gag order on former President Trump in his New York criminal case about falsifying business records to hide damaging information from voters before and after the 2016 election. The order prevents Trump from making statements about prosecutors, court staff, jurors, and potential witnesses. The case is scheduled to go to trial on April 15.

'This Is a Big Deal'

This week saw a landmark moment in the fight for democracy and the rule of law.

A California judge on Wednesday recommended disbarment for John Eastman, who was a principal architect of Donald Trump's plot to steal the 2020 election. To protect both the public and the legal system, the judge said Eastman deserved "the most severe available professional sanction."

Accountability takes time, but it's worth it. States United filed a bipartisan ethics complaint against Eastman two and a half years ago, asking the California Bar to investigate "serious evidence of professional misconduct."

That complaint clearly and methodically laid out the case that Eastman betrayed his duty to uphold the law when he helped Trump try to stop the transfer of power. Eastman pushed the unfounded theory that Vice President Mike Pence could single-handedly reverse the outcome of the election. And Eastman did so with dire consequences for our democracy.

The California Bar opened an investigation and later filed 11 disciplinary counts against Eastman. At trial last year, election officials from both parties testified that Eastman's claims were baseless, and that the 2020 election was free, fair, and secure. Eastman stuck to conspiracy theories, even while the trial was underway.

On Wednesday, the judge concluded the bar proved 10 counts by clear and convincing evidence, including that Eastman misled the courts, failed to uphold the Constitution, and committed acts involving "moral turpitude." Lawyers have a duty to zealously represent their clients, the judge wrote, but they must stay within the bounds of the law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

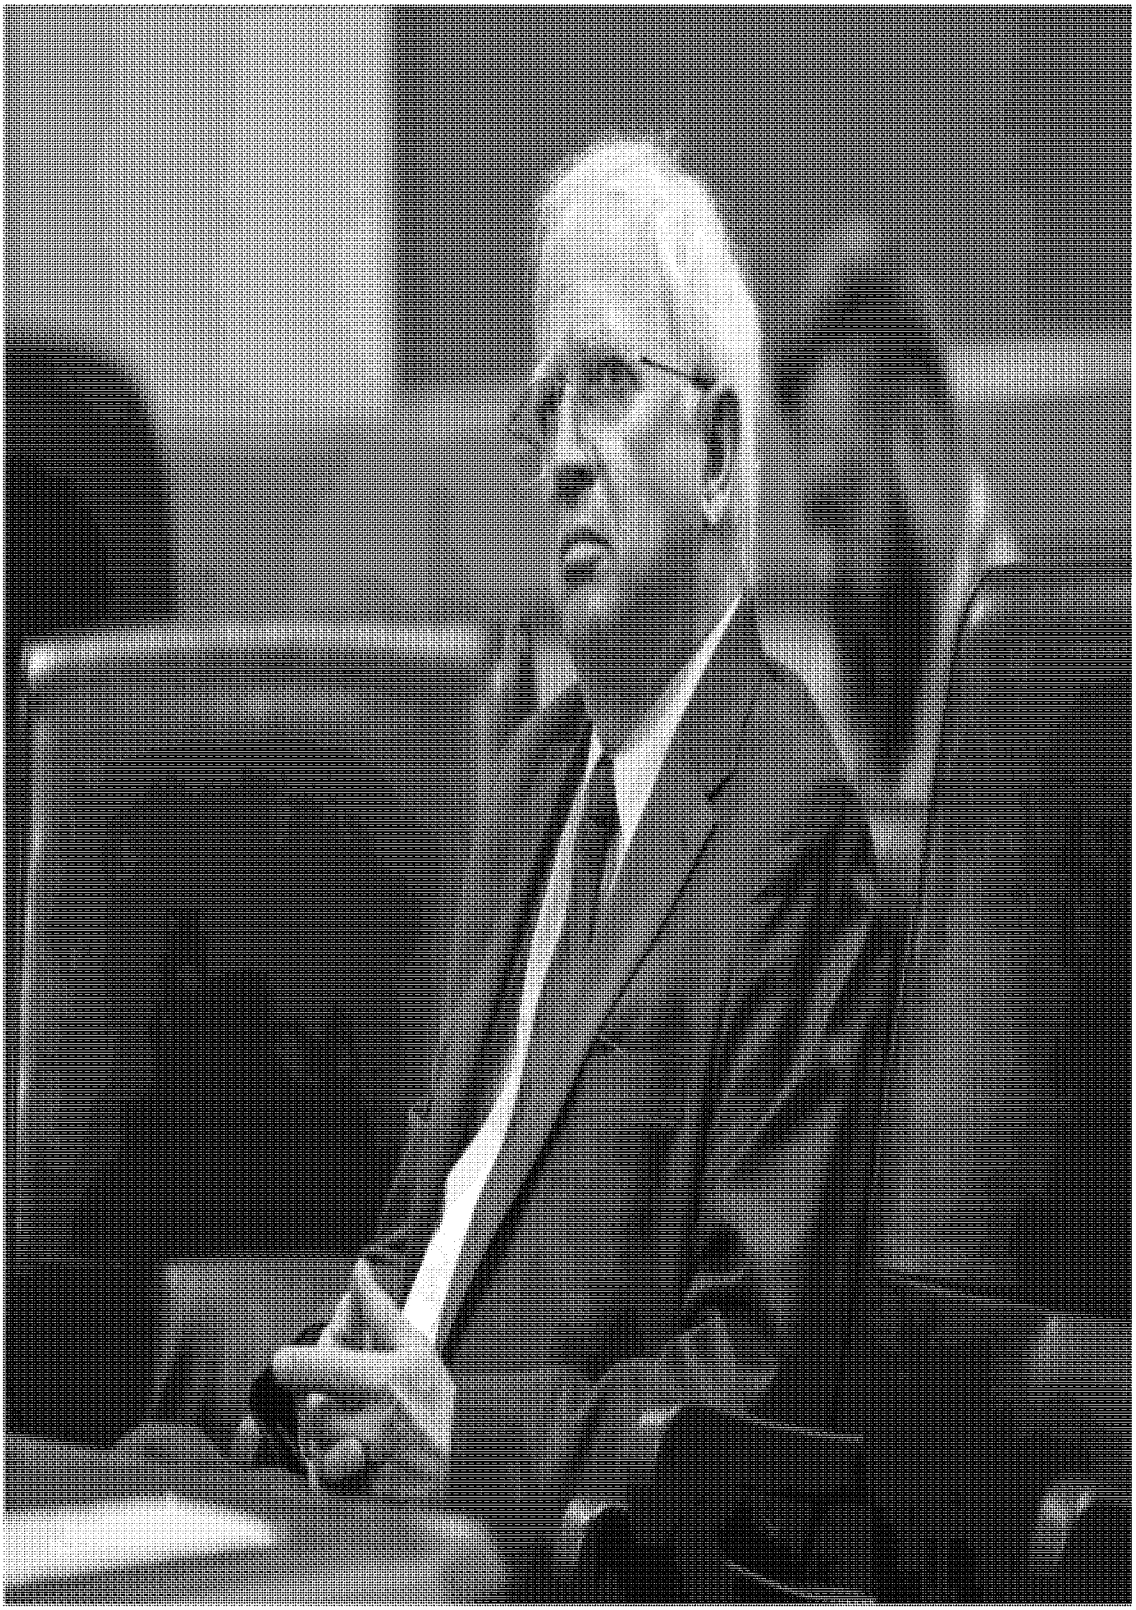
There's more on the decision, including reaction from States United, in these reports from The New York Times, The Associated Press, CNN, and the Los Angeles Times.

Now, accountability marches on. Eastman still faces criminal charges in Georgia. Jeffrey Clark's bar trial opened this week, and other lawyers connected to the Trump plot face their own disciplinary proceedings. It all reinforces one principle: No one is above the law—not presidents, and not their lawyers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



John Eastman. (Jason Getz/Pool/Getty Images)

Justice for Crystal Mason

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A Texas appeals court this week acquitted Crystal Mason, who was wrongfully convicted of illegal voting in a case that bipartisan legal experts called a clear miscarriage of justice. In 2018, Mason was sentenced to five years in prison for casting a provisional ballot in the 2016 presidential election, believing she was eligible to vote. The system worked exactly as intended: Mason's provisional ballot received additional scrutiny, state election officials determined the Tarrant County resident was ineligible, and her vote was never counted. Despite the lack of any concrete harm to the county and no intent to commit fraud—Mason was then prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced to five years in prison for her mistake. States United filed two friend-of-the-court briefs in support of Mason's acquittal.

Mason said she was overjoyed by the appeals court's decision. She also expressed determination: "I was thrown into this fight for voting rights and will keep swinging to ensure no one else has to face what I've endured for over six years, a political ploy where minority voting rights are under attack."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Crystal Mason. (ACLU of Texas)

Celebrating Women's History Month

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As Women's History Month comes to a close, we celebrate the women who power and protect our democracy. State officials, election workers, pro-democracy organizations, and more all play a vital role. You can read more about some of the women leading that work on our X profile.

Women—particularly women of color—are also far more likely to endure harassment and threats of political violence. Just this week, District Attorney Fani Willis wrote that she, her family, and her staff are still receiving threats, seven months after Trump and his allies were indicted in Fulton County, Georgia. The same goes for Judge Tanya Chutkan, who is overseeing Trump's criminal trial in D.C. There are plenty more cases like theirs, at all levels of government.

There is justice coming, though. Georgia election workers Ruby Freeman and Shaye Moss were awarded $148 million in damages in December after Rudy Giuliani falsely accused them of election fraud. A man who threatened Arizona Gov. Katie Hobbs was sentenced this week to more than two years in prison.

Our democracy depends on women—they make up 80% of election workers—but they also depend on us. It is imperative that we hold accountable those who threaten our democracy, and who threaten the women who help uphold it. We're so grateful to all the women who partner with us in that work.

State of the States

In Arizona, Kari Lake requested default judgment in a defamation case brought by Maricopa County Recorder Stephen Richer. Richer brought the case after Lake spread lies and conspiracy theories alleging that he was involved in election fraud. She falsely claimed it resulted in her loss in the 2022 election for governor. By requesting default judgment, Lake essentially admitted that she defamed Richer and that her statements were untrue. "After months of doubling down and defending their lies across Arizona, in the media, and on social media, when push came to shove, the Defendants decided to completely back down and concede that their lies were just that: lies," Richer said in a statement. The matter now goes to a jury to determine damages.

In Pennsylvania, a federal court dismissed an attempt by 24 state lawmakers to challenge the state's automatic voter registration policy, which was implemented by Gov. Josh Shapiro. "I will always remain focused on protecting our democracy and ensuring our elections are free, fair, safe, and secure," Shapiro said in a statement. "Let today's ruling be another reminder that taking legal advice from Donald Trump is never a winning strategy."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the News

- USA Today: Judge recommends disbarment for John Eastman, one of Donald Trump's lawyers challenging 2020 election results

"This is a big deal," said Joanna Lydgate, CEO of the States United Democracy Center, said in a statement. "When he helped Donald Trump try to overthrow the results of a free and fair election, John Eastman put his personal agenda above the decision of American voters. He broke his oath to uphold the Constitution, and he betrayed the legal profession."

- The Nevada Independent: Nevada lawmakers named in election denial report walk back past comments

The two Nevada lawmakers highlighted in a new report tracking election deniers in state legislatures have reversed themselves and now say that there was no evidence that massive voter fraud occurred in the 2020 election.

The March report from [States United Action] claimed that state Sen. Jeff Stone (R-Henderson) and Assemblyman Ken Gray (R-Dayton) spread lies that former President Donald Trump won the 2020 election, despite evidence to the contrary, and noted that the two could influence election-related legislation as members of their respective chambers' judiciary committees.

- ABC News: Fani Willis vows nothing 'will derail' Trump's election interference trial

- The Washington Post: GOP scrambles to organize early and mail voting despite Trump's attacks

- The Washington Post: How disinformation fuels violence — and makes our politics worse

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- The Washington Post: Was the 2020 election stolen? Job interviews at RNC take an unusual turn.

- The Guardian: Revealed: the election deniers relentlessly hounding Georgia officials

- The Guardian: Overworked, underpaid, under attack: on the frontlines in a US election office

- NPR: Meta is limiting how much political content users see. Here's how to opt out of that

---

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit [illegible]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Our mailing address is:

States United Democracy Center

1101 17th St NW

Suite 250

Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Want to change how you receive these emails?

You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/12/2024 8:58:52 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Trying Times

Trying Times

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center | States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- Justice Department Special Counsel Jack Smith urged the U.S. Supreme Court to reject former President Trump's latest immunity claim. Smith's brief rejects the argument that Trump is immune from prosecution in the federal election interference case. Trump's claim was strongly rejected by a federal appeals court in February. The Supreme Court will hear the case on April 25.

➡ READ: The federal charges, explained

- Attorneys for Trump made three attempts to delay his upcoming criminal trial in New York. Each attempt was denied. The former president's trial about falsifying business records and hiding information from voters in 2016 is scheduled to begin on Monday.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Attorneys for the State Bar of California asked a judge to reject John Eastman's request to reactivate his law license. Last month's recommendation that he be disbarred shows that Eastman "demonstrated a willingness to misrepresent facts, violate the law, and pursue frivolous claims on behalf of clients," prosecutors argued.

➡ READ: Backgrounder: John Eastman's ethics trial

State of the States

In Georgia, Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis asked the Georgia Court of Appeals to reject the latest attempt to delay the election interference case. Willis urged the court to refuse to hear an appeal seeking to reverse Judge Scott McAfee's ruling that she can continue prosecuting the case. On behalf of legal and ethics experts, States United filed a brief arguing that the Court of Appeals should refuse to accept the appeal and let the trial court's ruling stand.

In the News

- NBC News: Trump official Jeffrey Clark likely violated ethics rules with 2020 election theories, D.C. Bar panel finds Gillian Feiner, senior counsel at the States United Democracy Center, said that the board's preliminary finding "is another step towards holding Clark accountable" for conduct that undermined democracy and the rule of law.

"We've already seen other attorneys like Rudy Giuliani, John Eastman, and Jenna Ellis face consequences for their actions concerning the 2020 election, and today's decision signals that Jeffrey Clark is up next," Feiner said. "No one is above the law."

- WIRED: Election Workers Are Already Burned Out—and on High Alert

Research conducted by the nonpartisan election integrity group States United

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Action found 201 election deniers currently serving as state legislators in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, the seven states that pushed fake electors following the 2020 vote. Forty-nine of these legislators, States United Action tells WIRED, "sit on committees that deal most directly with election-related bills and/or hold legislative leadership positions that allow them to influence those committees and bills."*

- 12News: Democracy watchdog identifies 31 'election deniers' at AZ Legislature

"Election deniers in state legislatures have the potential to undermine the will of the voters," said Kelly Rader, Research Director for [States United]. "We also think there is a connection between the election denier rhetoric, the conspiracy theories about our elections, and the potential for violence in and around elections."

- The Associated Press: Judge rejects Trump's First Amendment challenge to indictment in Georgia election case

- The New York Times: Georgia's Lieutenant Governor to Face Inquiry for Role as Fake Trump Elector

- The New York Times: Capitol Police Hire Special Prosecutors to Handle Rise in Threats Against Congress

- The Washington Post: New voting laws in swing states could shape 2024 election

- CNN: RNC under Lara Trump spreads 'massive fraud' claims about 2020 election

- Stateline: Republicans scrutinize voting rolls and ramp up for mass challenges ahead of election

- The Detroit News: Pushing election fraud theories, nonprofit spent $1.2 million in Michigan in 2022

- Las Vegas Review-Journal: Lawsuit to block Nevada election worker protection law dismissed

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Recommended Reading

In an op-ed in the Erie Times-News, Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Al Schmidt details some of the steps his office is taking to make sure that the state's elections—including the primaries on April 23—are fair, safe, and secure.

GoErie

Sec. Al Schmidt: How Pa. is working to ensure free, fair, safe and secure elections

Al Schmidt Your Turn

Published 4:45 a.m. ET April 5, 2024 | Updated 4:45 a.m. ET April 5, 2024

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit [illegible]

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit [illegible]

Our mailing address is:

States United Democracy Center

1101 17th St NW

Suite 250

Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Want to change how you receive these emails?

You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/10/2024 9:56:50 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks!

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, April 10, 2024 at 3:56 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

Here is the opinion.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, April 10, 2024 3:20 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Overcome by events, as they say. Congrats.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, April 10, 2024 at 1:23 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>, Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 at 3:13 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>, Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 2:37 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Daniel Osher
Deputy Legal Counsel
Office of the Governor, State of Michigan
osherd@michigan.gov
(517) 242-0089

*This email and any associated documents may contain information that is privileged or otherwise exempt from disclosure. It is intended for use only by the person to whom it is addressed. Please contact me before disclosure. If you have received this email in error, please (1) do not forward or use this information in any way; and (2) contact me immediately.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 1:55 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/5/2024 9:11:21 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Another Round at the Bar

Another Round at the Bar

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- Judge Scott McAfee denied former President Trump's latest attempt to have his election interference charges dismissed in Georgia. McAfee ruled against Trump's argument, saying that the charges couldn't be dismissed on First Amendment grounds at this point in the trial.

➞ READ: Trump's Georgia charges, explained

- Former Justice Department official Jeffrey Clark committed at least one professional ethics violation when he worked to help Trump try to overturn the 2020 election, a D.C. Bar panel found. The panel's preliminary finding could result in Clark's law license being revoked.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

➞ READ: Backgrounder: Jeffrey Clark's disciplinary trial

- Judge Juan Merchan rejected Trump's attempt to delay his criminal trial in New York about falsifying business records and hiding information from voters in 2016. Merchan also expanded the gag order he issued last week after the former president attacked the judge's family on social media.

- States United Action's ElectionDeniers.org is nominated for a Webby Award for Best News & Politics website! You can vote for the site—the only comprehensive tracker of Election Deniers in America—by selecting "Replacing the Refs". Voting is open until Thursday, April 18.

➞ VOTE: The Webby Awards

Another Round at the Bar

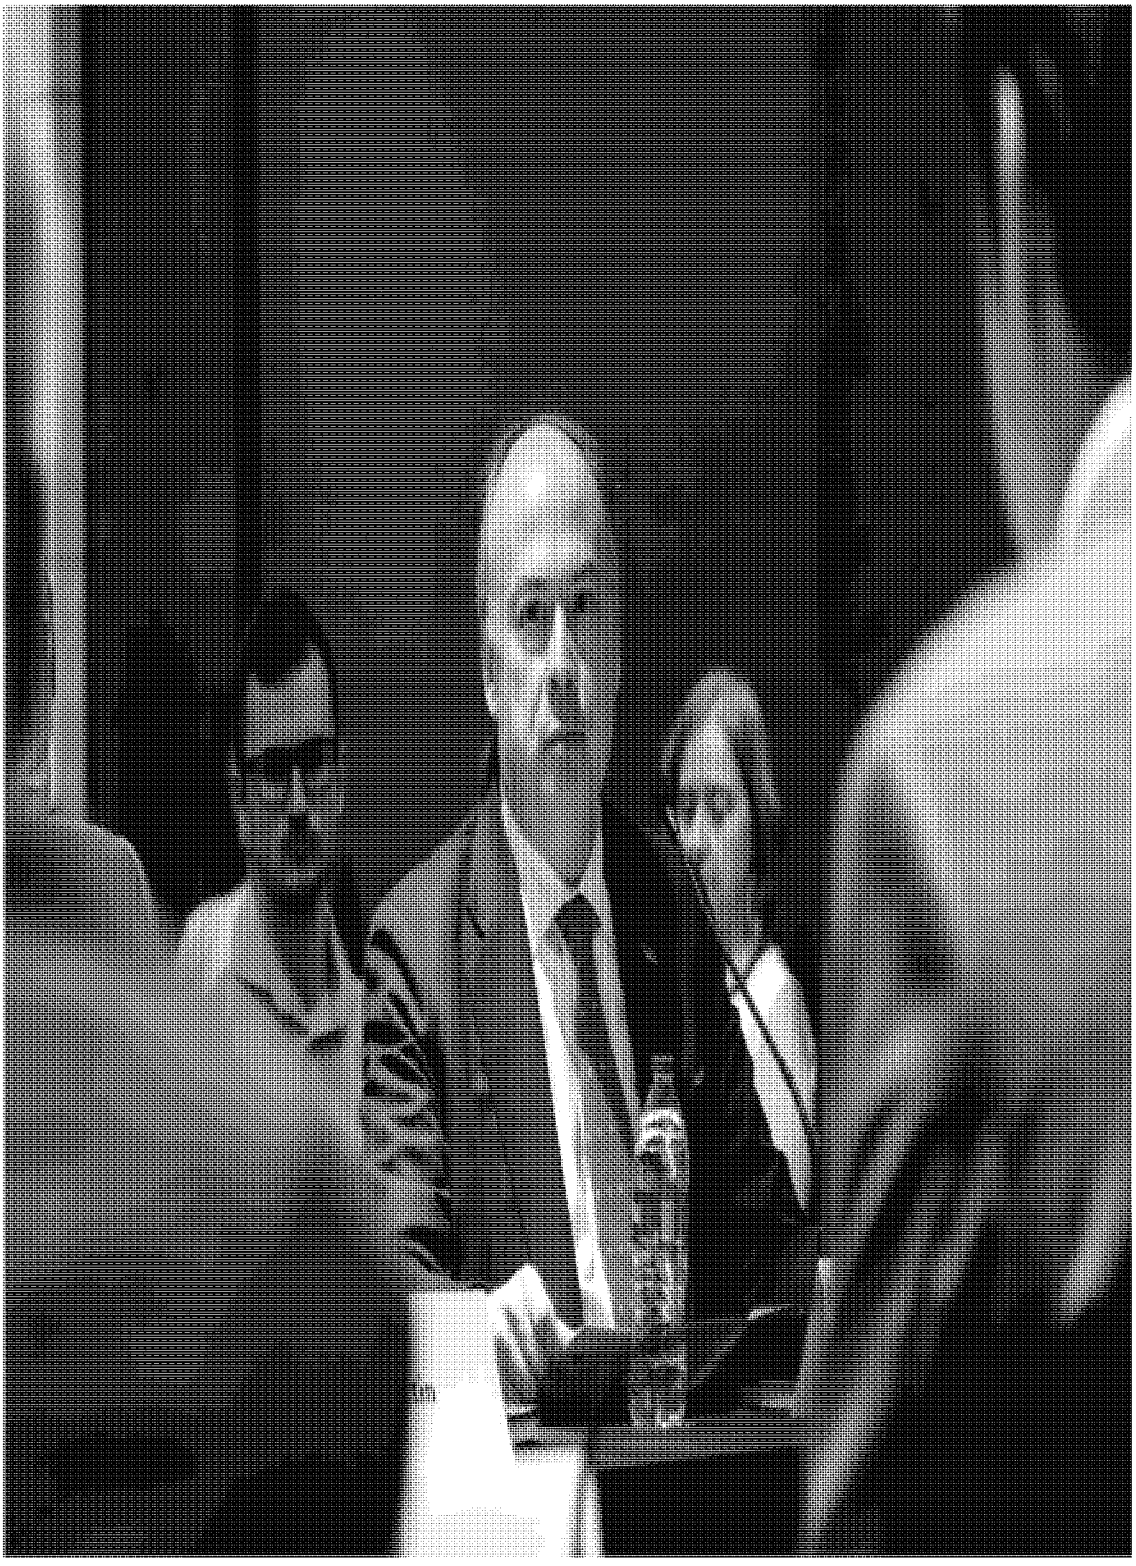
In 2022, Washington, D.C. Bar officials filed disciplinary charges against Jeffrey Clark, a former Justice Department official. They alleged that while he was working at the Justice Department in the final months of the Trump administration, Clark worked to help Trump try to overturn the 2020 election in Georgia—and violated his professional ethics obligations in the process.

On Thursday, the committee that heard evidence and arguments in his disciplinary trial made a preliminary finding that Clark had violated at least one attorney ethics rule. The decision puts Clark on a path to potential disbarment, just as former Trump attorney John Eastman was recommended for in California last month.

Accountability takes time, but it's worth it. As States United Senior Counsel Gillian Feiner said simply in a statement to the press on Thursday: "No one is above the law."

➞ READ: Backgrounder: Jeffrey Clark's disciplinary trial

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Jeffrey Clark. (Michael A. McCoy/Getty Images)

State of the States

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Wisconsin, Gov. Tony Evers filed a brief urging the Wisconsin Supreme Court to decide that clerks in the state may choose drop boxes as one option for safe, secure voting. Seeking to intervene in Priorities USA v. Wisconsin Election Commission, Evers argued that the court's 2022 decision to ban most drop boxes should be reversed as Wisconsin's election laws do not prohibit drop boxes. In March, the state Supreme Court agreed to decide whether their prior decision should be reversed.

"Drop box voting is safe and secure," Evers said in a statement. "In Wisconsin, we must work to protect that freedom and to empower our clerks and election administrators working hard at the local level to make decisions that are right for their communities."

In the News

- Los Angeles Times: Editorial: John Eastman tried to help Trump overturn the 2020 election. Of course he should be disbarred

- The Associated Press: States move to shore up voting rights protections after courts erode federal safeguards

- The New York Times: From Pizzagate to the 2020 Election: Forcing Liars to Pay or Apologize

- CBS News: Judges, witnesses, prosecutors increasingly warn of threats to democracy in 2024 elections as Jan. 6 prosecutions continue

- NBC News: Meet some of the violent Jan. 6 rioters Donald Trump keeps calling 'hostages'

- The Guardian: RNC plan for 2020 denialist to head 'election integrity' unit raises alarms

- CNN: Poll: Most Americans want Supreme Court to reject Trump immunity claims

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- NBC News: Texas woman acquitted of voter fraud in high profile case says it's her 'duty' to continue voting rights advocacy

- CBS Detroit: Detroit-area man charged with threatening Oakland County election official

- Votebeat Wisconsin: How Milwaukee's top election official has worked to restore trust after a 2020 misstep

---

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Our mailing address is:

States United Democracy Center

1101 17th St NW

Suite 250

Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Want to change how you receive these emails?

You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/10/2024 5:23:03 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged
Attachments: 2024.04.10 Keefer summary.docx; DAWN KEEFER et al Plaintiffs v JOSEPH R BIDEN et al Defendants.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 at 3:13 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>, Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 2:37 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Daniel Osher
Deputy Legal Counsel
Office of the Governor, State of Michigan
osherd@michigan.gov
(517) 242-0089

This email and any associated documents may contain information that is privileged or otherwise exempt from disclosure. It is intended for use only by the person to whom it is addressed. Please contact me before disclosure. If you have received this email in error, please (1) do not forward or use this information in any way; and (2) contact me immediately.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, March 26, 2024 1:55 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2024 WL 1285538
Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.
United States District Court, M.D. Pennsylvania.

DAWN KEEFER, et al., Plaintiffs,

v.

JOSEPH R. BIDEN, et al., Defendants.

Civil No. 1:24-CV-00147

|

Filed 03/26/2024

MEMORANDUM

JENNIFER P. WILSON United States District Judge Middle District of Pennsylvania

1 This lawsuit, brought by twenty-six Pennsylvania State Representatives and one Pennsylvania Senator,[1] challenges certain executive actions regarding voter registration taken by both United States President Joseph R. Biden and various federal officials[2] and Pennsylvania Governor Joshua Shapiro and various state officials[3] on the ground that these executive actions violate both the Electors and Elections Clauses of the United States Constitution. (Doc. 18.) Before the court are the motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim and lack of jurisdiction filed by the Federal and State Defendants. (Docs. 40, 46.)[4] The motions to dismiss will be granted because this court does not have subject matter jurisdiction due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing to raise the claims at issue.[5]

1 The Plaintiffs in this matter are Representatives Dawn Keefer, Timothy Bonner, Barry Jozwiak, Barbara Gleim, Joseph Hamm, Wendy Fink, Robert Kauffman, Stephanie Borowicz, Donald (Bud) Cook, Paul (Mike) Jones, Joseph D'Orsie, Charity Krupa, Leslie Rossi, David Zimmerman, Robert Leadbetter, Daniel Moul, Thomas Jones, David Maloney, Timothy Twardzik, David Rose, Joanne Stehr, Aaron Berstine, Kathy Rapp, Jill Cooper, Marla Brown, Mark Gillen, and Senator Cris Dush. They are referred to collectively as "Plaintiffs."

2 The individual federal government Defendants, all sued in their official capacity, are as follows: President Joseph R. Biden, Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack, Secretary of Health and Human Services Xavier Becerra, Secretary of State Antony Blinken, Secretary of Department of Housing and Urban Development Marcia Fudge, Secretary of Energy Jennifer Granholm, and Secretary of Education Dr. Miguel Cardona. Plaintiffs also name the United States, U.S. Department of Agriculture ("USDA"), U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), U.S. Department of State ("State Department"), U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development ("HUD"), U.S. Department of Energy, and U.S. Department of Education as defendants. Collectively, the foregoing people and entities will be referred to as "Federal Defendants."

3 The individual state government Defendants, all sued in their official capacities, are Governor Joshua Shapiro, Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt, and Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions Jonathan Marks. They are referred to collectively as "State Defendants."

4 State Defendants filed their motion to dismiss on March 20, 2024. (Doc. 46.) Although this motion is not fully briefed, the issue of standing has been fully addressed in the context of Plaintiffs' motion for injunctive relief, such that the court can address the issue of standing with no further briefing.

5 The court also notes that Plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary injunction on February 16, 2024. (Doc. 19.) Because Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring the claims asserted in this lawsuit, the motion for preliminary injunction will be denied as moot in a separate order.

BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

2 Plaintiffs challenge an Executive Order issued by President Biden, an announcement by Governor Josh Shapiro, and a "directive" issued by Former Pennsylvania Governor Tom Wolf, all regarding various aspects of voter registration. (Doc. 18.) Plaintiffs allege that these three executive actions have violated their individual Constitutional rights under the Electors and Elections Clauses of the United States Constitution. (Id. at ¶67.)

The Electors Clause provides as follows:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2. The Elections Clause provides: "The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators." U.S. CONST. art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

Plaintiffs allege that:

> [U]nder the Electors Clause, the Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislators, as part of two associations called the senate and the house of representatives respectively, may enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto, to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections. Thus, Plaintiffs, as individual state legislators, have federal rights under the Elections Clause and the Electors Clause to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places, and manner of federal actions.

(Doc. 18, ¶¶ 49, 50.)

Regarding the Federal Defendants, Plaintiffs challenge Executive Order 14019 ("EO 14019"), [6] which, they allege "requires all federal agencies to develop a plan to increase voter registration, and increase voter participation, or get out the vote ... efforts." (Id. at ¶ 70.) Plaintiffs allege that HHS, HUD, Department of Energy, USDA, and U.S. General Services Administration "GSA"), [7] have implemented voter registration plans in accordance with EO 14019 and have registered voters in Pennsylvania in accordance with these plans. (Id. at ¶¶ 72–84.) Plaintiffs contend that EO 14019 > directs all non-independent executive agencies to engage in voter registration and to solicit and facilitate third-party organizations to conduct voter registration on agency premises, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, so it is certain that other agencies are carrying out similar efforts without disclosing their unlawful activities to the public or to the Pennsylvania Legislature.

(Id. at ¶ 85.) Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 requires all federal agencies to "identify and partner with specified partisan third party organizations[,]" "distribute voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms[,]" "assist applicants in completing voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms[,]" "solicit third-party organizations and directs state officials to provide voter registration services on agency premises." (Id. at ¶¶ 86–90.)

6 EO 14019 went into effect on March 7, 2021.

7 GSA is not a named defendant in this action.

Plaintiffs contend that "all agency action in conformity with [EO] 14019 is without congressional delegation or funding, and conducted merely by executive fiat[,]" and that "all federal agency actions in conformity with [EO] 14019 are unauthorized by law." (Id. at ¶¶ 102, 103.) Plaintiffs further allege that EO 14019 is not in conformity with Pennsylvania's voter registration scheme, as provided by Pennsylvania law. (Id. at ¶¶ 107, 108.)

3 In Count I, Plaintiffs request a declaratory judgment that EO 14019 is unconstitutional because it "nullifies the votes of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactment of the Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 178.) Plaintiffs also allege that they are suffering "an injury-in-fact because the Executive Order denies them a voting opportunity to which the Constitution entitles them." (Id. at ¶ 179.) In sum, the Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 unlawfully attempts to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors and, thus, "[t]he order should not be permitted to nullify the state legislators' power to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto power, regarding the regulation of the times, places, and manner of federal elections." (Id. at ¶ 186.) In Count II, Plaintiffs challenge EO 14019 under the Administration[8] Procedure Act ("APA") as substantively arbitrary and capricious and contrary to Constitution or statute. (Id. at ¶¶ 194–201.) In Count III, Plaintiffs challenge EO 14019 as procedurally arbitrary and capricious for failing to comply with notice and comment procedures under the APA. (Id. at ¶¶ 202–21.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

8 The court notes that 5 U.S.C. § 706 is more commonly referred to as the Administrative Procedure Act.

Regarding the State Defendants, Plaintiffs challenge two executive actions. First, Plaintiffs challenge Governor Shapiro's 2023 announcement that "he was unilaterally implementing automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania." (Id. at ¶ 109.) Plaintiffs allege that "[b]eginning on September 19, 2023, Commonwealth residents obtaining new or renewed driver licenses and ID cards have been and continue to be automatically registered to vote by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation unless they opt out of doing so." (Id. at ¶ 110.) Plaintiffs allege that the "regulatory schema of elections" set forth by the legislature requires an "application" to register to vote, which requires an overt action by the applicant. (Id. at ¶¶ 115–119.) In sum, Plaintiffs argue that Governor Shapiro's directive to the Department of Transportation to change the process for applying to vote in conjunction with applying for a driver's license violates Pennsylvania's established procedures, codified at 25 PA. CON. STAT. ANN. §§ 1321, 1323, 1327. Plaintiffs allege that "Governor Shapiro's directive to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, and its implementation, is inconsistent with existing laws, and as such, is not legally authorized." (Id. at ¶ 128.)[9]

9 Plaintiffs also allege that the state legislature has previously declined to pass automatic voter registration laws, most recently in January 2023, as support for their claim that this action by the Governor nullifies their votes. (Id. at ¶¶ 132, 133.)

In Count IV, Plaintiffs bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Governor Shapiro seeking an injunction "enjoining and prohibiting [his] automatic voter registration regime" as unconstitutional because it nullifies the legislators' vote and the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors and Elections Clauses, "diminishes the influence of the individual legislators," and "deprives [them] of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an elections free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 215.) Plaintiffs also allege that the announcement "denies Plaintiffs a voting opportunity to the acceptance [or] rejection of a voter registration schema, that under the U.S. and Pennsylvania Constitutions can only originate in the Pennsylvania legislature or U.S. Congress." (Id. at ¶ 216.)

The second state executive action that Plaintiffs challenge is a 2018 "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" ("2018 Directive") issued under former Governor Tom Wolf. (Id. at ¶ 139.) This challenge is brought against Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt and Deputy Secretary for Elections Jonathan Marks. (Id.) The 2018 Directive "directs Pennsylvania counties to register applicants even if an applicant provides invalid identification." (Id. at ¶ 140.) Plaintiffs allege that this directive violates Pennsylvania law, specifically 25 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN § 1328. (Id. at ¶¶ 144–46.) Further, Plaintiffs allege that the directive, which "direct[s] the counties to process incomplete or inconsistent voter applications like all other applications violates clear provisions of Pennsylvania law[,]" and as such, "undermines the state legislature as the 'entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution' to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections." (Id. at ¶¶ 154, 155.)

4 In Count V, Plaintiffs bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, asking the court to enjoin and prohibit the 2018 Directive "and similar guidance" as unconstitutional because it nullifies the legislators' vote and the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors and Elections Clauses,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"diminishes the influence of the individual legislators" and "deprives [them] of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an elections free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 223.) Plaintiffs also allege that the 2018 Directive denied them "their U.S. constitutional right to vote on and direct election policy, established under both the Elections Clause and Electors Clause." (Id. at ¶ 226.)

Underlying all counts, Plaintiffs allege they have standing as state legislators because they "are injured by Defendants when [Defendants] exercise positive regulatory authority over election practices that circumvent or usurp the authority of the legislature." (Id. at ¶ 160.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege they have "been denied the opportunity to exercise their constitutionally vested authority to cast their legislative vote on affirming or rejecting those new regulatory regimes." (Id. at ¶ 162.) Plaintiffs also allege they have standing as candidates who will suffer the harm of having to compete in "elections [that] have been interfered with by unlawful regulations" and "where their opponents have been provided an unlawful advantage." (Id. at ¶¶ 171, 172.) Finally, Plaintiffs allege they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Id. at ¶¶ 174, 175.)

Plaintiffs initiated this lawsuit by filing a complaint on January 25, 2024. (Doc. 1.) Thereafter, they filed the operative amended complaint and simultaneously filed a motion for preliminary injunction. (Docs. 18, 19.)[10] Federal Defendants filed a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim and lack of jurisdiction on March 1, 2024. (Doc. 40.) Federal Defendants also filed a brief in opposition to the motion for preliminary injunction on the same date. (Doc. 41.) State Defendants filed a brief in opposition to the motion for preliminary injunction on March 1, 2024. (Doc. 42.) Plaintiffs filed reply briefs to State Defendants and Federal Defendants briefs in opposition on March 15, 2024. (Docs. 44, 45.) On March 20, 2024, State Defendants filed a motion to dismiss and brief in support. (Docs. 46, 47.) Accordingly, the issue of standing is ripe for review.

10 On February 23, 2024, the Foundation for Government Accountability filed a motion for leave to file an amicus brief, which was granted on February 26, 2024. (Docs. 29, 33.) The amicus brief was filed on February 26, 2024, and the court reviewed the amicus brief in considering the motions to dismiss. (Doc. 34.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Defendants seek dismissal of the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. The court, in determining whether it has subject-matter jurisdiction, must decide "whether the allegations on the face of the complaint, taken as true, allege facts sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of the district court." Taliaferro v. Darby Twp. Zoning Bd., 458 F.3d 181, 188 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting Licata v. U.S. Postal Serv., 33 F.3d 259, 260 (3d Cir. 1994)). Rule 12(b)(1) challenges may be "facial" or "factual." See Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977). A facial attack challenges whether jurisdiction has been properly pled and requires the court to "only consider the allegations of the complaint and documents referenced therein and attached thereto, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Gould Elecs., Inc. v. United States, 220 F.3d 169, 176 (3d Cir. 2000) (citing Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891.) Conversely, when a defendant sets forth a factual attack on subject-matter jurisdiction, "the Court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself whether it has power to hear the case.... 'no presumptive truthfulness attaches to plaintiff's allegations, and the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating for itself the merits of jurisdictional claims.' " Carpet Group Int'l v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, Inc., 227 F.3d 62, 69 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891).

5 In this instance, Defendants argue Plaintiffs do not have standing and present the court with a facial attack on subject matter jurisdiction. As a result, the court will "only consider the allegations of the complaint and documents referenced therein and attached thereto, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Gould Elecs. Inc., 220 F.3d at 176 (citing Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891.)

DISCUSSION

Both the Federal and State Defendants argue that the amended complaint must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their claims. Plaintiffs argue they have standing because the complaint alleges "that the Elections and Electors' Clauses' references to 'legislature' confer rights onto the individual state legislators." (Doc. 21, p. 10.) On this basis, Plaintiffs contend that their individual rights as state legislators are injured by the executive actions at issue because those actions are an "exercise [of] positive regulatory authority over election practices that circumvent[s] or usurp[s] the authority of the legislature." (Doc. 18, ¶ 160.) Essentially, Plaintiffs argue they have each been injured individually because they have "been denied the opportunity to exercise their constitutionally vested authority to cast their legislative vote on affirming or rejecting those new regulatory regimes." (Id. at ¶ 162.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiffs present various arguments to support their theory of individual legislator standing. First, Plaintiffs analogize their membership in the legislature to various other types of entities, such as a corporation, arguing that as "the purpose of extending rights to corporations is to protect the rights of the people associated with the corporation[,]" so too the "purpose of the Elections Clause and Electors Clause ... is to protect the privileges and rights of the individual state legislators." (Doc. 21, p. 9.) Plaintiffs also analogize a state legislature to a militia and the press, as "entities" made up of real persons who have the right to defend their participation in the entity. (Doc. 44, pp. 10, 11.)

Second, Plaintiffs rely on Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939), Moore v. Harper, 600 U.S. 1, 27 (2023), [11] and their assertion that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has authorized "individual state legislators to bring legislative usurpation claims." (Doc. 21, p. 10.) (citing Fumo v. City of Phila., 972 A.2d 487, 491 (Pa. 2009)). Plaintiffs also argue that they have standing as candidates for office who potentially may run in an unlawfully-operated election. (Id. at 12.) Plaintiffs argue that they are injured by the executive actions because "it results in the registration of voters outside of [Pennsylvania's] carefully constructed and constitutionally-authorized registration regime." (Doc. 45, p. 14.) Finally, Plaintiffs argue they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Doc. 21, p. 13.)

11 Plaintiffs' reliance on Moore v. Harper consists of quoting the language from the decision stating: "[t]he legislature acts both as a lawmaking body created and bound by its state constitution, and as the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution." 600 U.S. at 27. Plaintiffs rely on this quotation to support their theory that because they are members of "the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution [,]" they possess an individual right that gives them standing to vindicate that right in the federal courts. (Doc. 21, p. 10.)

6 In response, Federal Defendants argue that, under Supreme Court case law, "individual members [of a legislature] lack standing to assert the institutional interests of a legislature." (Doc. 41, p. 11.) (citing Va. House of Delegates v. Bethune-Hill, 139 S. Ct. 1945, 1954 (2019)). In support of this argument, Federal Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' alleged injury, usurpation of the authority to regulate elections conferred upon state legislatures, is not meaningfully distinguishable from the institutional injuries alleged in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997), Goode v. City of Phila., 539 F.3d 311 (3d Cir. 2008), and Yaw v. Delaware River Basin Comm., 49 F.4th 301 (3d Cir. 2022). In each of these cases, the Supreme Court and Third Circuit, respectively, found that individual legislators did not have standing to bring a challenge to an action that allegedly injured the legislature as a whole. (Doc. 41, pp. 11–13.) In sum, Federal Defendants argue that the alleged injury "concerns the right to vote of 'all Members of' the Pennsylvania Legislature 'equally,' and so it is precisely the type of non-particularized, 'institutional injury' that is insufficient for legislator standing." (Id. at 13) (emphasis in original)). [12]

12 Both Plaintiffs and Federal Defendants address standing globally and make no separate arguments based on the cause of action. Therefore, the court will do the same.

In response to Plaintiffs' argument regarding their potential standing as candidates, Federal Defendants argue that the amended complaint "contains no concrete allegations establishing that the EO will have a material impact on the votes cast in Plaintiffs' particular districts, and that this impact will harm Plaintiffs' electoral prospects." (Id. at 15.)

State Defendants' arguments regarding institutional injury and legislative standing largely mirror those of Federal Defendants and rely on the same body of case law. (See Doc. 42, pp. 12–19.) State Defendants additionally note that the declarations attached to the amended complaint simply state that Defendants have violated the law and provide no individualized allegation of injury, the amended complaint contains no allegation of "how any Plaintiff is affected by the conduct challenged in this case in a way that is any different from any other member of Pennsylvania's General Assembly [,]" and the amended complaint contains no allegation that "legislative powers have been usurped" because "[n]either changes to a registration application nor instructions to counties–both done under statutorily assigned authority–stops the General Assembly from passing any laws regarding either topic." (Id. at 17–19.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. Article III Standing

Pursuant to Article III of the United States Constitution, federal courts are constrained to resolve only "Cases" and "Controversies." U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2, cl. 1. "No principle is more fundamental to the judiciary's proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies." Raines, 521 U.S. at 818 (quoting Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rts. Org., 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976)). Ensuring that a plaintiff has Article III standing " 'serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches,' and confines the federal courts to a properly judicial role." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 330, 338 (2016) (citations omitted).

Article III standing requires that the plaintiff, who bears the burden of establishing these elements, prove: (1) an injury-in-fact; (2) that is fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct; and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. Id. (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992)). When standing is challenged at the pleading stage, "the plaintiff must 'clearly ... allege facts demonstrating' each element." Id. (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 518 (1975)).

As to the first element, an injury-in-fact must be " 'an invasion of a legally protected interest' that is 'concrete and particularized,' and 'actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.' " Id. (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560). A particularized injury must "affect the plaintiff in a personal and individual way." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 n.1. Further, any threatened injury must be "certainly impending." Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013).

1. Plaintiffs Lack Standing as Legislators

7 The seminal case regarding legislative standing is the Supreme Court's decision in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997). There, members of the U.S. Congress who voted against the Line Item Veto Act sued the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, asserting that the Line Item Veto Act was unconstitutional because it altered "the legal and practical effect of all votes [the members] may cast on bills[,]" divested the members "of their constitutional role in the repeal of legislation," and altered "the constitutional balance of powers between the Legislative and Executive branches[.]" Id. at 816.

The Supreme Court held that the members who filed suit did not have standing because they did not allege any "injury to themselves as individuals," rather "the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed, and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829 (citations omitted). The Court held that the members who filed suit failed to allege an injury to themselves as individuals because they had "not been singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies[,]" and they only alleged that the Act caused "a type of institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress and both House of Congress equally." Id. at 821. Further, the Court noted that the members did not allege a deprivation of "something to which they personally are entitled–such as their seats as Members of Congress after their constituents had elected them." Id.

The Court also distinguished one prior case that addressed the issue of legislator standing, Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939). In Coleman, the Kansas State Senate was split twenty to twenty on the passage of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution. Id. at 436. The Lieutenant Governor then cast a tie-breaking vote, and the twenty losing Senators sued to challenge "the right of the Lieutenant Governor to cast the deciding vote in the Senate." Id. The Supreme Court held that the twenty senators who voted against ratification had standing to sue because they had "a plain, direct and adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes." Id. at 438. The Coleman Court further explained that the Kansas senators had "set up and claimed a right and privilege under the Constitution of the United States to have their votes given effect and the state court has denied that right and privilege." Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Raines Court limited the holding and application of Coleman, stating that Coleman stands "for the proposition that legislators whose votes would have been sufficient to defeat (or enact) a specific legislative Act have standing to sue if that legislative action goes into effect (or does not go into effect), on the ground that their votes have been completely nullified." Raines, 521 U.S. at 823. Thus, the Raines court held that the members in that case did not have standing under Coleman because they did not allege "that they voted for a specific bill, that there were sufficient votes to pass the bill, and that the bill was nonetheless deemed defeated." Id. at 824.

The Supreme Court has considered legislator standing twice since Raines. In Arizona State Legislature v. Arizona Independent Redistricting Comm., 576 U.S. 787, 792 (2015), the entire Arizona State Legislature sued to challenge the constitutionality of a voter-adopted initiative which established an independent commission charged with drawing and adopting redistricting maps, arguing that giving this authority to an independent commission is contrary to the Elections Clause's directive that the legislature of each state shall determine the times, places, and manner of elections. In Arizona, the defendants challenged the plaintiffs' standing under Raines, but the Supreme Court held that the legislature, as a whole and authorized by an internal vote, had standing to redress the alleged institutional injury suffered by the legislature as a whole. Id. at 802. Ultimately, the court held that the voter initiative at issue "would 'completely nullif[y]' any vote by the Legislature, now or 'in the future,' purporting to adopt a redistricting plan." Id. at 804 (citing Raines, 521 U.S. at 823–24). [13]

13 On the merits in Arizona, the Supreme Court held that "the Elections Clause permits the people of Arizona to provide for redistricting by independent commission[,]" and denied the Legislature's appeal. Id. at 813.

8 Conversely, in Va. House of Delegates, the Supreme Court held that only one house of a bicameral state legislature did not have standing to sue on behalf of the legislature as a whole. Va. House of Delegates, 139 S. Ct. at 1952. First, the Court noted that it is possible for a state to designate its House of Representatives as its agent, which would be sufficient to confer standing to vindicate the state's interests. Id. at 1951–52. Per the Va. House of Delegates Court, a state may authorize the "House to litigate on the State's behalf, either generally or in a defined class of cases." Id. at 1952. The Court held that Virginia had not done so in that case. Id. Second, the Court considered whether the House of Representatives had legislator standing under Raines. The Court held that the "Virginia constitutional provision the House [challenges] allocates redistricting authority to the 'General Assembly,' of which the House constitutes only a part." Id. at 1953. Thus, the Court held the case was more similar to Raines because "[j]ust as individual members lack standing to assert the institutional interests of a legislature, a single House of a bicameral legislature lacks capacity to assert interests belonging to the legislature as a whole." Id. at 1953–54 (citations omitted).

The Third Circuit has decided cases in line with Raines, most recently in Yaw v. Delaware River Basin Comm'n, 49 F.4th 302 (3d Cir. 2022). In Yaw, a group of Pennsylvania Senators sued the Delaware River Basin Commission, arguing that the ban on fracking at issue in that case "deprived [them] of their lawmaking authority relative to millions of Pennsylvanians residing within the 6,000 square miles of Sovereign territory subsumed by the Basin and any legislation, now or in the future, on this subject has been nullified." Id. at 311. Relying on a review of the same cases discussed above, the Third Circuit held that "this argument runs headlong into the well-established principle that individual legislators lack standing to assert institutional injuries belonging to the legislature as a whole." Id. The Third Circuit held that the alleged injuries were "classic examples of institutional injuries because they sound in a general loss of legislative power that is 'widely dispersed' and 'necessarily damages all [members of the General Assembly] ... equally.' " [14] Id. at 314 (citing Raines, 521 U.S. at 821) (alterations in original). The Third Circuit noted that the plaintiffs "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals[,]" and had not "been authorized to represent the interests of these institutions in court." Id. at 314. Finally, the Third Circuit noted that, under the theory presented by plaintiffs, "any individual legislator would have standing to challenge any federal statute or regulation ... that, under the Constitution's Supremacy Clause, has a preemptive effect on state lawmaking. Article III does not sweep so broadly." Id. at 315 (citation omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

[14] The alleged injuries in Yaw included suspending law in the Commonwealth, displacing/suspending the Commonwealth's "comprehensive statutory scheme," attempting to "exercise legislative authority exclusively vested in the General Assembly," wholly nullifying "any present or future legislative action," depriving Commonwealth citizens of the "right to be governed by their duly-elected representatives," diluting the rights of the citizens of the Commonwealth "to choose their own officers for governmental administration," and diminishing the "legislative powers of the Senate Plaintiffs." Id. at 313–14.

Here, Plaintiffs attempt to circumvent the institutional injury issue by asserting that the Elections and Electors Clauses give them an "individual" right which they are seeking to vindicate. However, as the descriptions of their alleged injuries make clear, they are seeking to vindicate injuries that would be suffered by the Legislature as a whole.[15] Just as in the binding precedent described above, Plaintiffs here do not allege that they specifically, as individuals, are suffering a harm because of the executive actions at issue. Rather, the harm is to the authority of the Pennsylvania General Assembly to establish the times, places, and manner of elections as provided by the Constitution. Moreover, Plaintiffs claim that they, as "real persons who are part of an exclusive entity, the state legislature of Pennsylvania[, ... have] a right to protect [their] individual [ ] constitutional rights and privileges to participate in making laws regarding the manner of elections [ ]." (Doc. 44, p. 7.) Just as the Third Circuit concluded in Yaw, this claim sweeps too broadly. If every state legislator has an individual right to vindicate their right to "participate in making laws," then the standing requirement of a particularized injury would be rendered meaningless because every legislator would suffer an injury in the same way. See Yaw, 49 F.4th at 314.

[15] For example, Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 "nullifies the votes of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactment of the Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 178.) They allege the automatic voter registration announcement by Governor Shapiro "nullifies the votes and diminishes the influence of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 215.) And, they allege the HAVA directive by Secretary Schmidt "nullifies the votes and diminishes the influence of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 223.)

9 Further, there is no allegation that these specific Plaintiffs have suffered an injury that is any different than any other member of the Pennsylvania General Assembly. Thus, Plaintiffs have alleged only an institutional injury resulting from "a general loss of legislative power[.]" Yaw, 49 F.4th at 314. Additionally, unlike in Coleman, Plaintiffs here have not suffered a complete nullification of their vote, such that they no longer can legislate in the election field. Plaintiffs' argument that they "have no ability to undo the executive actions through ordinary legislation[,]" and that the laws they already have passed "have been nullified and overridden by the executive actions[,]" overstates the matter, as none of the executive actions challenged in this case remove or divest any authority from the legislature in creating voting regulations within the state, such as in Arizona. Should the General Assembly wish to counter any of the alleged effects of the challenged executive actions, the executive actions do not constrain them from doing so. Moreover, as in Arizona, should the Pennsylvania General Assembly, as a whole, wish to challenge these executive actions as contrary to law and usurping its authority, the General Assembly may do so. However, these twenty-seven Plaintiffs, may not seek to vindicate that institutional injury without the approval of the institution. Therefore, Plaintiffs are seeking to assert an injury to the institutional rights of the Pennsylvania General Assembly, which they cannot do as individual legislators.[16]

[16] The court notes that there is no allegation that they have been authorized to undertake this action on behalf of the General Assembly as a whole.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Plaintiffs argue that they have been "authorized' by the State to undertake litigation in a "class of cases" under Va. House of Delegates. (Doc. 45, p. 11.) Plaintiffs claim that Pennsylvania case law holding that legislators "are granted standing to challenge executive actions when specific powers unique to their functions under the constitution are diminished or interfered with[,]" shows that they have been authorized to litigate on the state's behalf in "a defined class of cases." (Id. (citing Wilt v. Beal, 363 A.2d 876, 881 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1976) and Va. House of Delegates, 139 S. Ct. at 1952)). This is incorrect. The Supreme Court in Va. House of Delegates pointed to state statutes, such as in Indiana, where the legislature, through statute, had authorized itself to "employ attorneys other than the Attorney General to defend any law enacted creating legislative or congressional districts for the State of Indiana." 139 S. Ct. at 1952 (citing Ind. Code § 2-3-8-1 (2011)). Holding that a certain party has standing to pursue a certain case does not equate to the state authorizing that party to bring all actions on its behalf.

The court recognizes that Plaintiffs rely on Kerr v. Hickenlooper, 744 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 2014) ("Kerr I") to support their argument that an individual legislator has standing to challenge a specific law that "has stripped the legislature of its rightful power." Id. at 1167. However, as noted by State Defendants, although Plaintiffs state that the judgment in Kerr I was "vacated on other grounds," it was, in fact, vacated on the issue of standing after the Supreme Court decided Arizona. See Hickenlooper v. Kerr, 576 U.S. 1079 (2015). On remand, the Tenth Circuit looked again at the issue of whether individual legislator plaintiffs had standing to claim that a state constitutional amendment "deprive[d] them of their ability to perform the 'legislative core functions of taxation and appropriation.' " Kerr v. Hickenlooper II, 824 F.3d 1207, 1215 (10th Cir. 2016) ("Kerr II"). In Kerr II, the Tenth Circuit explicitly held that "the legislator-plaintiffs assert only an institutional injury, and thus lack standing to bring this action." Accordingly, the decision in Kerr II provides no support to Plaintiffs.

Finally, to the extent that Plaintiffs argue they have standing based on Pennsylvania law, this same argument was dismissed by the Third Circuit in Yaw. Whether it is true or not that individual legislators have standing under Pennsylvania law, the Yaw court held that "[t]he fact that a party has standing in state court does not mean that they have standing in federal court.... Article III standing 'limits the power of federal courts and is a matter of federal law. It does not turn on state law, which obviously cannot alter the scope of the federal judicial power.' " Yaw, 49 F.4th at 316 (citing Protect Our Parks, Inc. v. Chi. Park Dist., 971 F.3d 722, 730–31 (7th Cir. 2020)).

10 Accordingly, the court concludes that, in reality, Plaintiffs allege an institutional injury to the power of the Pennsylvania General Assembly as a whole to legislate the times, places, and manner of elections. As such, Plaintiffs, as individual legislators, do not have standing because they have not alleged any particular injury that is not also suffered by each member of the Pennsylvania General Assembly.

B. Plaintiffs Lack Standing as Candidates

Plaintiffs also argue they have standing as candidates. (Doc. 18, ¶¶ 169–173; Doc. 21, pp. 11, 12; Doc. 45, pp. 12–15). Plaintiffs argue that "Defendants' actions collectively undermine the integrity of Pennsylvania's elections by introducing procedures that were not provided by the Legislature." (Doc. 21, p. 12.) They further argue that implementation of these executive actions results in "the pool of Pennsylvania voters [being] manipulated by legally unauthorized, deceptive practices, undermining the integrity of elections across the Commonwealth." (Doc. 45, p. 15.)

Federal Defendants argue that this injury is not "certainly impending[,]" as required by Article III and Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 401 (2013), and the "Complaint contains no allegations describing how Plaintiffs' candidacies will 'certainly' be harmed by the EO." (Doc. 41, p. 15.) State Defendants argue that "Plaintiffs fail to identify any concrete or particularized way that eligible electors registering to vote injures them in any of these [candidates, citizens, taxpayers, and voters] capacities." (Doc. 42, p. 19 n.6)

The court agrees with the Federal and State Defendants that Plaintiffs have not alleged any particular harm to their candidacies as a result of any executive actions taken by any defendant. A vague, generalized allegation that elections, generally, will be undermined, is not the type of case or controversy that this court may rule on under Article III. See Toth v. Chapman, 2022 WL 821175, at * 7 (M.D. Pa. March 16, 2022.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs do not have standing as candidates. [17]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

17 Plaintiffs also alleged they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Doc. 18, p. 29.) As noted by both Defendants, these claims are entirely speculative, and Plaintiff does not argue these bases of standing beyond their motion in support of preliminary injunction. (Doc. 41, p. 16; Doc. 47, p. 22 n.4.) Accordingly, the court concludes that Plaintiffs have not established standings on any of these grounds either.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert the institutional injuries they raise here. Plaintiffs argue they have been granted an "individual" right in the Electors and Elections Clauses of the U.S. Constitution, but binding precedent obligates this court to reject this argument. The injuries that Plaintiffs allege are suffered equally by each Pennsylvania legislator. As such, Plaintiffs have not alleged any individualized and particularized harm. Accordingly, Plaintiffs do not have standing to pursue their challenges to the executive actions at issue in this lawsuit, and their amended complaint is dismissed. An order follows.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2024 WL 1285538

End of Document

© 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
Sent: 4/12/2024 8:04:55 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: US v. Mackey oral argument

Thanks, Jonathan

Daniel Osher
Deputy Legal Counsel, Executive Office of the Governor
osherd@michigan.gov
(517) 242-0089

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, April 12, 2024 3:14:30 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: US v. Mackey oral argument

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Dan and Heather,

I hope you've had a good week. As I mentioned, I listened to the oral argument in United States v. Mackey, which took place before the Second Circuit last Friday (after the earthquake).

Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Happy to address any questions I can. The case is expedited, and we'll keep an eye out for the decision.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/18/2024 5:57:42 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Appeal in Kardaal AVR Case

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will do. We'll send it to you when it's filed.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, April 18, 2024 at 1:38 PM
To: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Appeal in Kardaal AVR Case

Interesting, thanks Zack. I would like to get a copy of their brief when it is filed. Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, April 18, 2024 1:10 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Appeal in Kardaal AVR Case

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

We just wanted to flag that Erick Kardaal today filed a notice of appeal in Keefer v. Biden—the ISL case brought by Pennsylvania legislators challenging automatic voter registration that was dismissed last month.

Best,

Zack Goldberg (he/him) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
917.656.6234 | @statesunited
zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/18/2024 5:10:03 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Appeal in Kardaal AVR Case
Attachments: Keefer NoA.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

We just wanted to flag that Erick Kardaal today filed a notice of appeal in Keefer v. Biden—the ISL case brought by Pennsylvania legislators challenging automatic voter registration that was dismissed last month.

Best,

Zack Goldberg (he/him) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
917.656.6234 | @statesunited
zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Representatives Dawn Keefer, Timothy Bonner, Barry Jozwiak, Barbara Gleim, Joseph Hamm, Wendy Fink, Robert Kauffman, Stephanie Borowicz, Donald (Bud) Cook, Paul (Mike) Jones, Joseph D'orsie, Charity Krupa, Leslie Rossi, David Zimmerman, Robert Leadbeter, Daniel Moul, Thomas Jones, David Maloney, Timothy Twardzik, David Rowe, Joanne Stehr, Aaron Berstine, Kathy Rapp, Jill Cooper, Marla Brown, Mark Gillen And Senator Cris Dush— All Pennsylvania Legislators, Plaintiffs,

v.

Joseph R. Biden, In His Official Capacity As The President Of The United States, Or His Successor; United States; U.S. Department Of Agriculture; Tom Vilsack, In His Official Capacity As Secretary Of Agriculture; U.S. Department Of Health And Human Services; Xavier Becerra, In His Official Capacity As Secretary Of Health And Human Services; U.S. Department Of State; Antony Blinken, In His Official Capacity As Secretary Of State; U.S. Department Of Housing And Urban Development; Marcia Fudge, In Her Official Capacity As Secretary Of Housing And Urban Development; U.S. Department Of Energy; Jennifer Granholm, In Her Official Capacity As Secretary Of Energy; U.S. Department Of Education; Dr. Miguel Cardona, In His Official Capacity As Secretary Of Education; Josh Shapiro, In His Official Capacity As Governor Of Pennsylvania, Or His Successor; Al Schmidt, In His Official Capacity As Secretary Of The Commonwealth, Or His Successor; Jonathan Marks, In His Official

Civil Case No. 1:24-CV-00147

Judge Jennifer P. Wilson

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Capacity As The Deputy Secretary For Elections And Commissions, Or His Successor, Defendants.

Notice is given that the Plaintiffs Representatives Dawn Keefer, Timothy Bonner, Barry Jozwiak, Barbara Gleim, Joseph Hamm, Wendy Fink, Robert Kauffman, Stephanie Borowicz, Donald (Bud) Cook, Paul (Mike) Jones, Joseph D'orsie, Charity Krupa, Leslie Rossi, David Zimmerman, Robert Leadbeter, Daniel Moul, Thomas Jones, David Maloney, Timothy Twardzik, David Rowe, Joanne Stehr, Aaron Berstine, Kathy Rapp, Jill Cooper, Marla Brown, Mark Gillen And Senator Cris Dush, appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit from the district court's Memorandum filed on March 26, 2024 (Doc No. 48) and Order filed on March 26, 2024 (Doc. No. 49), granting the Defendants' motion to dismiss (March 20, 2024 (Doc. No. 46)). The Memorandum, Decision, and Order and judgment adjudicated all claims as to all parties.

Dated: April 18, 2024

/s/Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal, 229647
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Janae Steggall [janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/25/2024 7:16:42 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Caroline Chambers [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Grossi, Christina [GrossiC1@michigan.gov]; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Katherine Reisner [katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kerrin Garripoli [kerrin@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zoe Chernicoff [Zoe@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Anderson, Christina (MDOS) [AndersonC42@michigan.gov]; Benander, Angela (MDOS) [BenanderA1@michigan.gov]; Hardmon, Cheri (MDOS) [HardmonC@michigan.gov]; Edevbie, Aghogho (MDOS) [EdevbieA@michigan.gov]; Craine, Khyla (MDOS) [CraineK@michigan.gov]; El-Sulayman, Halima (MDOS) [ElSulaymanH1@michigan.gov]; Caroline O'Leary [carolineo@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Lizzie Ulmer [lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Rollow, Jake (MDOS) [RollowJ@michigan.gov]; Sargent, Aubrey (AG) [SargentA1@michigan.gov]; Sharon Song [sharon@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS) [SittsJ@michigan.gov]; Aboona, Rebecca (AG) [AboonaR1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn1@michigan.gov; Nassim Alisobhani [nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]

Subject: Research Update
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 4/30/2024 8:30:00 PM
End: 4/30/2024 9:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

The Teams meeting information is below:

Microsoft Teams Need help?

Join the meeting now

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:

Dial-in by phone

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, New York City

Find a local number

Phone conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

For organizers: Meeting options | Reset dial-in PIN

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/3/2024 3:41:35 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Privileged - EPGA

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

This is really helpful. Thank you.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, May 3, 2024 at 10:38 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Privileged - EPGA

Hi Jonathan,

Maybe these briefs will help?

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Allen, Christopher (AG) <AllenC28@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, May 3, 2024 9:44 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Sherman, Ann (AG) <ShermanA@michigan.gov>; Restuccia, Eric (AG) <RestucciaE@michigan.gov>
Cc: Gustafson, Holly (AG) <GustafsonH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Inquiry from States United SAAG

Heather,

See attached the merits briefing on behalf of the Governor in the MSC. The supplemental brief ordered by the Court has some history of the emergency powers laws and other public health related laws, and the supplemental authority was filed after that with some additional points. Let me know if you need anything else!

Chris

Christopher M. Allen
Assistant Solicitor General
Michigan Department of Attorney General
517.582.5546 (work cell)
517.335.7628 (SG main line)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Teams call

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Thursday, May 2, 2024 4:37 PM
To: Sherman, Ann (AG) <ShermanA@michigan.gov>; Restuccia, Eric (AG) <RestucciaE@michigan.gov>; Allen, Christopher (AG) <AllenC28@michigan.gov>
Cc: Gustafson, Holly (AG) <GustafsonH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Inquiry from States United SAAG

Hi Team,

I have a request for a brief(s) from the EPGA case, MSC No. 161492, that would have a nice history of the laws. Do you recall which brief had a nice outline, and if so can I get a copy? Not super urgent.

Thanks,
Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/1/2024 9:38:36 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden (PA Kaardal case)--privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Let me see what I can find out.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Wednesday, May 1, 2024 5:18:18 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Keefer v. Biden (PA Kaardal case)--privileged

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, April 30, 2024 6:41 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Keefer v. Biden (PA Kaardal case)--privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Quick update on this: Kaardal filed a motion for expedited consideration yesterday. The details of proposed schedules (at pp. 14-15) make little sense, but it appears that Kaardal is asking for the petition to be considered at the May 9 or 16 conference. By rule, the respondents have until May 9 to respond.

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Monday, April 29, 2024 at 4:57 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <osherd@michigan.gov>, Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Robert Cotter

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

<Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Keefer v. Biden (PA Kaardal case)--privileged

Hi Dan and Heather,

I hope you had a good weekend. On Friday, the Supreme Court docketed a petition for certiorari before judgment from Erick Kaardal on behalf of the group of Pennsylvania legislators he represents. (Docket is here.) The purported need for speed is that "individual state legislator standing is necessary to preserve the integrity of the 2024 federal elections." A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Responses from the state and federal respondents are due on May 28. As yet, there's no briefing schedule in the Third Circuit, nor has Kaardal sought an expedited schedule. A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

We'll keep you apprised of developments. Please let me know if you have any questions or would like to discuss in the meantime.

Best,

Jonathan

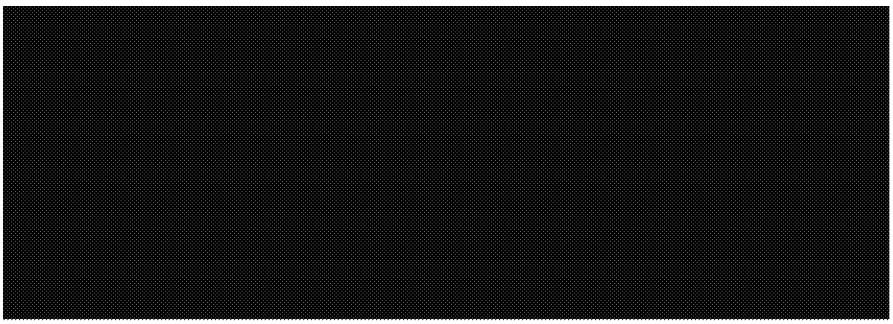
Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/15/2024 3:34:38 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Delta County press release

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



For immediate release

Delta County, [May 13th, 2024] — A group of Delta County citizens is looking into recent election results. Working closely with Election Integrity Force member Joanne Bakale, Citizens for Electoral Justice member Scott Augiuey, and former MI Legislator , Pat Colbeck, the group has identified certain statistical anomalies and suspicious voting ratios.

Suspicious Voting Ratios

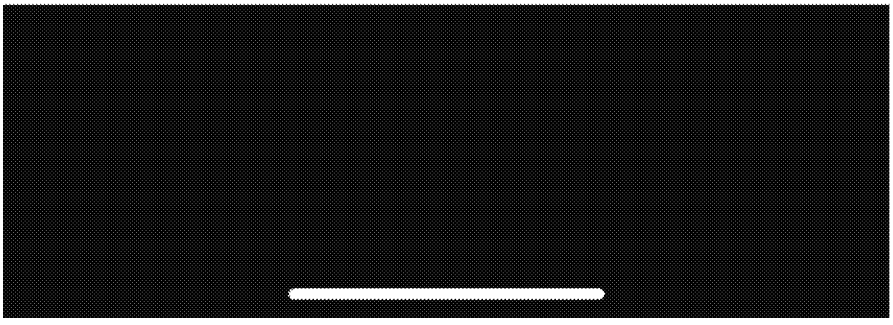
The statistical analysis reveals identical voting ratios for two districts. These ratios of exactly 2.64 are inconsistent with statistical probability and warrant further investigation. The Delta County Citizens aim to ensure the integrity of our electoral process by addressing these discrepancies and if irregularities are shown to exist, then resolve them.

In addition to canvassing, the Delta County Citizens are formally requesting a hand recount and a forensic audit of the results. This will allow experts to thoroughly examine the voting process used in local elections. Transparency and accountability are essential for maintaining public trust in our electoral system.

Delta County residents should be assured that these investigations are necessary and beneficial to the integrity of this process. We intend to secure confidence in our elections. The Delta County community will benefit from a secure and accountable electoral process. One in which we can all vote with confidence.

For media Inquirys please contact

Sethhakkola@hotmail.com



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

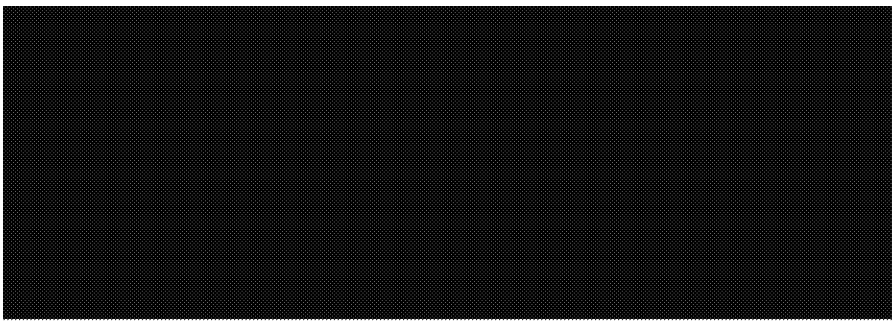
From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/15/2024 9:17:11 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Delta County press release

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Seth Hakkola, the person listed on the release as the contact is, I'm told, the son of one of the canvassers who voted against certification, Bonnie Hakkola.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, May 15, 2024 at 11:34 AM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Subject: Delta County press release

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



For immediate release

Delta County, [May 13th, 2024] — A group of Delta County citizens is looking into recent election results. Working closely with Election Integrity Force member Joanne Bakale, Citizens for Electoral Justice member Scott Anginey, and former MI Legislator , Pat Colbeck, the group has identified certain statistical anomalies and suspicious voting ratios.

Suspicious Voting Ratios

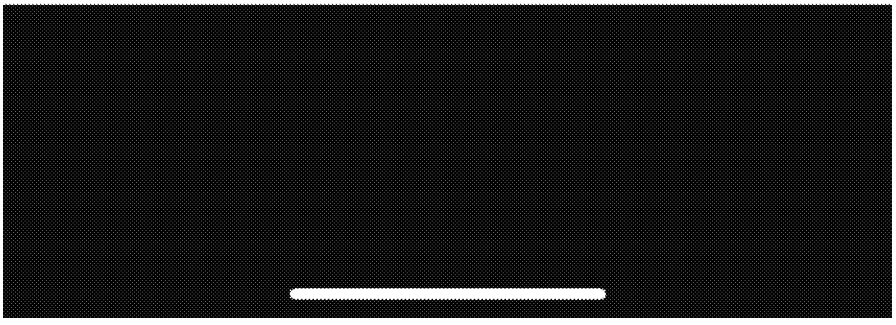
The statistical analysis reveals identical voting ratios for two districts. These ratios of exactly 2.64 are inconsistent with statistical probability and warrant further investigation. The Delta County Citizens aim to ensure the integrity of our electoral process by addressing these discrepancies and if irregularities are shown to exist, then resolve them.

In addition to canvassing, the Delta County Citizens are formally requesting a hand recount and a forensic audit of the results. This will allow experts to thoroughly examine the voting process used in local elections. Transparency and accountability are essential for maintaining public trust in our electoral system.

Delta County residents should be assured that these investigations are necessary and beneficial to the integrity of this process. We intend to secure confidence in our elections. The Delta County community will benefit from a secure and accountable electoral process. One in which we can all vote with confidence.

For media Inquirys please contact

Sethhakkola@hotmail.com



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/28/2024 7:45:31 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Call this week?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

In case this isn't on your radar. Event tomorrow in Detroit.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, May 28, 2024 at 1:26 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>, Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Call this week?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Me neither.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, May 28, 2024 1:12 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Call this week?

Won't impact me!

Daniel Osher
Deputy Legal Counsel
Executive Office of Governor Gretchen Whitmer
(517) 242-0089

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, May 28, 2024 12:09 PM
To: Osher, Daniel <OsherD@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Call this week?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

I know the Mackinac conference is this week. Will that affect our Thursday call?

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/7/2024 6:47:57 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Kaul to Action

Kaul to Action

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- Wisconsin Attorney General Josh Kaul announced felony criminal charges against three former Trump advisors in connection with the fake electors plot in that state in 2020.

- The ethics board of the District of Columbia Bar recommended disbarment for former Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani. The board said Giuliani violated attorney conduct rules in Pennsylvania when he sought to have that state's 2020 election results overturned.

- The publisher behind the movie "2000 Mules," which pushed a widely disproven conspiracy theory about ballot drop boxes, halted distribution of the film and apologized to a Georgia man falsely accused of election fraud. The movie's false claims were in circulation for two years.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- A federal judge ordered former Trump advisor Steve Bannon to report to prison July 1. Bannon was convicted of contempt of Congress in 2022 for refusing to provide documents and testimony to the House January 6 Select Committee.

Kaul to Action

This week proved that accountability for efforts to undermine our democracy isn't just about Donald Trump's criminal cases.

Wisconsin became the fifth state to announce criminal charges tied to the appointment of fake pro-Trump electors in 2020. Attorney General Josh Kaul vowed to protect "the integrity of our electoral process."

Kenneth Chesebro, an architect of the electors strategy across seven states lost by Trump, was charged with forgery, as were Mike Roman and James Troupis. Chesebro also faces charges in Georgia; Roman is charged in Georgia and Arizona.

Laws differ from state to state, and each set of fake electors carried out its scheme differently, so state officials have reached different conclusions about which charges to bring and against whom. (We broke it down, state by state, in April.)

Elsewhere in accountability news, Rudy Giuliani may be disbarred in the District of Columbia for his part in the 2020 plot in Pennsylvania. Just last week, Jenna Ellis had her law license suspended in Colorado for three years. Similar efforts are moving forward against John Eastman and Jeffrey Clark, and Sidney Powell faces calls for disbarment in Texas.

Protecting our elections means pushing for accountability at every level, not just for Trump but for everyone involved in attempts to undermine the will of the people.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wisconsin Attorney General Josh Kaul announces the charges this week.
(Wisconsin Attorney General via Facebook)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Georgia, the state Court of Appeals froze the criminal election interference case against former President Trump at least until October. The appeals court scheduled arguments for Oct. 4 on Trump's attempt to have Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis disqualified. The trial judge previously ruled that Willis should not be disqualified. But the appeal almost certainly means Trump will not face trial in Georgia before the presidential election in November.

➟ READ: Our backgrounder on the Georgia case

In the News

- Roll Call: Election officials, retired lawmakers plead for more money to protect voting
- NBC News: Trump supporters try to dox jurors and post violent threats after his conviction
- The Guardian: Republican who refused to certify Georgia primary a member of election denialist group
- AZ Mirror: Lake lawyers await discipline for making false claims to AZ Supreme Court
- Michigan Advance: Benson shares outlook on election law and poll worker protections ahead of November election
- South Dakota Searchlight: Voters reject machine-counting ban in all three counties where it was on the ballot
- Wisconsin Examiner: Wisconsin AG Kaul files felony charges against Trump associates in fake elector scheme

Recommended Listening

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Nevada Secretary of State Cisco Aguilar joined WBUR radio's "On Point" to discuss safeguarding the state's free and fair elections.

'We are underreacting to how serious this moment is'

On Point 47:17 Jun 5, 2024

Recommended Reading

The New York Times profiled a Republican clerk in Nevada who's standing up for the facts about her county's elections in the face of lies, conspiracy theories, and a recall effort.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Cindy Elgan, the Esmeralda County clerk for two decades, faced a recall this spring.

A Republican Election Clerk vs. Trump Die-Hards in a World of Lies

Cindy Elgan has overseen elections in rural Nevada without incident for 20 years, but now even her neighbors wonder if she's part of "the deep state cabal."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit

Our mailing address is:
States United Democracy Center
1101 17th St NW
Suite 250
Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/11/2024 6:27:45 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Quick chat Wednesday?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Talk to you then.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, June 11, 2024 at 9:31 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Quick chat Wednesday?

Should work. Lets say 11:30.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, June 10, 2024 9:01 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Quick chat Wednesday?

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Is there a time you could talk to me and Dax on Wednesday between 11:30 and 2:30?

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/14/2024 6:32:24 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Sentence Structure

Sentence Structure

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- Former President Trump completed a mandatory interview with New York probation officials ahead of his sentencing on July 11. A jury of everyday Americans convicted Trump last month of 34 felony counts related to falsifying business records.

- Jim Marchant, an Election Denier, lost the Republican primary for U.S. Senate in Nevada. He's one of several high-profile Election Deniers who lost statewide elections in 2022, then used their newfound platforms to launch campaigns in 2024.

➡ EXPLORE: ElectionDeniers.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- James Troupis, a lawyer facing a felony criminal forgery charge in connection with the fake electors plot in Wisconsin in 2020, was suspended from a state judicial ethics panel.

- States United published a resource to help election officials shore up their defenses against threats posed by artificial intelligence.

State of the States

In Arizona, the state Court of Appeals upheld more than $47,000 in sanctions against Mark Finchem for a baseless election challenge. Finchem lost the 2022 secretary of state's race by 120,000 votes, then challenged the result in a lawsuit that made unsupported claims of misconduct. A judge dismissed that lawsuit in December 2022 and later imposed the sanctions, finding that Finchem's challenge was "groundless and not brought in good faith."

In the News

- CNN: Officials in Arizona release Rudy Giuliani's mug shot after he pleaded not guilty in election subversion case

- Arizona Daily Star: Appeals Court says Kari Lake isn't entitled to rerun of election she lost

- The Detroit News: Matt DePerno, while facing charges, announces run for Michigan Supreme Court

- Nevada Current: Preference for mail ballots high, Nevada early voter turnout data show

- Nevada Current: Aguilar joins officials warning about threat of AI misinforming voters

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- CBS News via KDKA: Pennsylvania moves to upgrade its mail-in voting process even as Trump objects to Pennsylvania's mail-in voting

- Wisconsin Public Radio: Attorney who oversaw Wisconsin fake electors scheme suspended from judicial ethics panel

Recommended Reading

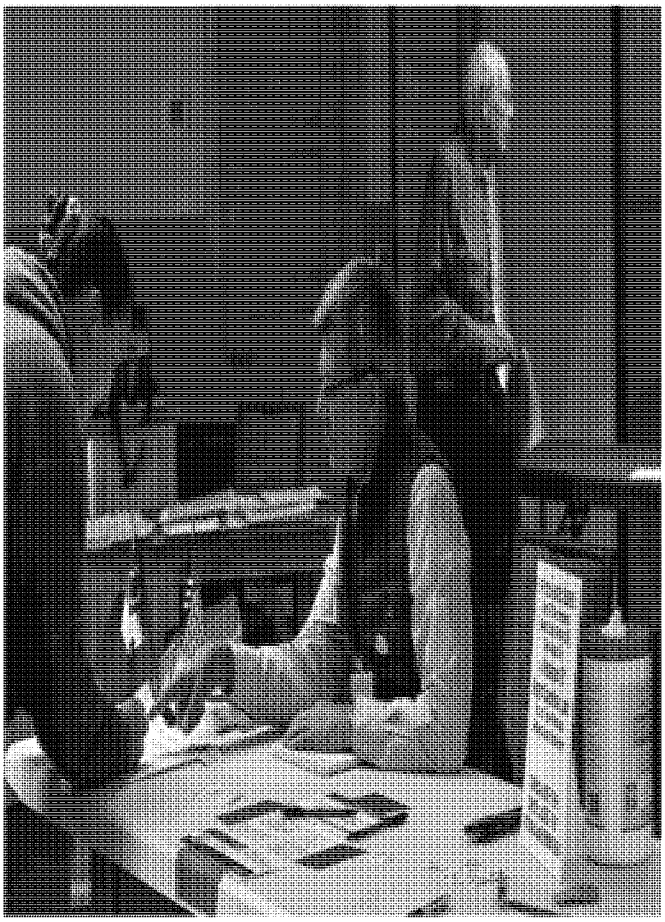
For The Fulcrum, Carah Whaley, director of election protection for our partners at Issue One, writes about the resilience and "unwavering dedication" of election officials. We can all show our support by becoming poll workers, Whaley writes.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Election officials are heroes. Support them by becoming poll workers.

By Carah Whaley

June 05, 2024



Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit

Our mailing address is:
States United Democracy Center
1101 17th St NW
Suite 250
Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org] on behalf of Gabriel Moreno [Gabriel@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/13/2024 6:53:04 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Craig Newby [cnewby@ag.nv.gov]; Kron Michael C [Michael.C.Kron@doj.oregon.gov]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Laena St Jules [LStJules@ag.nv.gov]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Eisenberg, Lisa E. [leisenberg@attorneygeneral.gov]; Lindsay.McKenzie@ag.ny.gov; Eric.Haren@ag.ny.gov; 'Thomson, Aimee' [aimeethomson@pa.gov]

Subject: FW: Connecting re: USPS (SUDC)
Location: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Start: 6/17/2024 7:30:00 PM
End: 6/17/2024 8:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

---

From: Gabriel@statesuniteddemocracy.org
When: 2:30 PM - 3:00 PM June 17, 2024
Subject: Connecting re: USPS (SUDC)
Location: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Gabriel Moreno is inviting you to a scheduled Zoom meeting.

Join Zoom Meeting
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:

One tap mobile
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Dial by your location
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Meeting ID:
Passcode: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Find your local number: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Gabriel Moreno [Gabriel@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/17/2024 4:21:30 PM
To: Craig Newby [cnewby@ag.nv.gov]; Kron Michael C [Michael.C.Kron@doj.oregon.gov]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Laena St Jules [LStJules@ag.nv.gov]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Eisenberg, Lisa E. [leisenberg@attorneygeneral.gov]; Lindsay.McKenzie@ag.ny.gov; Eric.Haren@ag.ny.gov; 'Thomson, Aimee' [aimeethomson@pa.gov]
CC: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]

Subject: Canceled: Connecting re: USPS (SUDC)
Location: https://us02web.zoom.us/j/83617137447?pwd=vHh2wTYDhOfARZYBbwfn9m9jGRZ1HL.1

Start: 6/17/2024 7:30:00 PM
End: 6/17/2024 8:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Free

Importance: High

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

We will be rescheduling this call for the coming weeks. Please be on the look out for my scheduling emails. Thank you!

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]
Sent: 6/27/2024 1:58:34 PM
To: Amanda Carberry [amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Grossi, Christina [GrossiC1@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: RE: Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in

Good morning,

Unfortunately, I won't be able to join this morning's 10:30 AM check-in as I now have a conflicting obligation for the Secretary. I'm generally available this afternoon to touch base if there are specific questions for me.

Be well,

Michael J. Brady (he/his), Chief Legal Director
Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
Michigan Department of State mobile: 517.599.7343

-----Original Appointment-----
From: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, January 16, 2024 10:39 AM
To: Amanda Carberry; Jonathan Williams; Robert Cotter; Zack Goldberg; Brady, Mike (MDOS); Grossi, Christina; Osher, Daniel; Meingast, Heather (AG)
Subject: Bi-weekly Democracy Check-in When: Thursday, June 27, 2024 10:30 AM-11:00 AM (UTC-05:00) Eastern Time (US & Canada).
Where: Microsoft Teams Meeting

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer, mobile app or room device
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, New York City
Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/26/2024 11:03:13 PM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Murthy v. Missouri analysis
Attachments: Murthy v. Missouri Summary 6.26.24[80].docx; Murthy v. Missouri[85].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

PRIVILEGED

Linus and Heather,

We wanted to update you on this morning's U.S. Supreme Court decision in Murthy v. Missouri. As you'll recall, the case was about whether the federal government improperly coerced social media platforms to take down election and COVID related mis and dis-information and thus violated the First Amendment. A complete summary is attached along with the opinion, but big picture, the Court held that the challengers—the state of Missouri and Louisiana as well as five individual social media users—lacked standing to sue because they failed to provide sufficient evidence of a direct injury.

The decision reverses the injunction that had been issued by the Fifth Circuit against the federal government, which barred a wide range of communications with the social media platforms. This means there is currently no injunction in place, but because the Court did not reach the merits, it did not address the merits of the First Amendment claim.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

NOTE: Where it is feasible, a syllabus (headnote) will be released, as is being done in connection with this case, at the time the opinion is issued. The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U. S. 321, 337.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Syllabus

MURTHY, SURGEON GENERAL, ET AL. v. MISSOURI ET AL.

CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 23–411. Argued March 18, 2024—Decided June 26, 2024

Under their longstanding content-moderation policies, social-media platforms have taken a range of actions to suppress certain categories of speech, including speech they judge to be false or misleading. In 2020, with the outbreak of COVID–19, the platforms announced that they would enforce these policies against users who post false or misleading content about the pandemic. The platforms also applied misinformation policies during the 2020 election season. During that period, various federal officials regularly spoke with the platforms about COVID–19 and election-related misinformation. For example, White House officials publicly and privately called on the platforms to do more to address vaccine misinformation. Surgeon General Vivek Murthy issued a health advisory that encouraged the platforms to take steps to prevent COVID–19 misinformation "from taking hold." The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention alerted the platforms to COVID–19 misinformation trends and flagged example posts. The Federal Bureau of Investigation and Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency communicated with the platforms about election-related misinformation in advance of the 2020 Presidential election and the 2022 midterms.

Respondents are two States and five individual social-media users who sued dozens of Executive Branch officials and agencies, alleging that the Government pressured the platforms to censor their speech in violation of the First Amendment. Following extensive discovery, the District Court issued a preliminary injunction. The Fifth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court held that both the state plaintiffs and the individual plaintiffs had Article III standing to seek injunctive relief. On the merits, the court held that the Government entities and officials, by "coerc[ing]" or "significantly encourag[ing]" the platforms' moderation decisions, transformed those decisions into state action. The court then modified the District Court's injunction to state that the defendants shall not coerce or significantly encourage social-media companies to suppress protected speech on their platforms.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

Held: Neither the individual nor the state plaintiffs have established Article III standing to seek an injunction against any defendant. Pp. 8–29.

(a) Article III's "case or controversy" requirement is "fundamental" to the "proper role" of the Judiciary. Raines v. Byrd, 521 U. S. 811, 818. A proper case or controversy exists only when at least one plaintiff "establish[es] that [she] ha[s] standing to sue," ibid.—i.e., that she has suffered, or will suffer, an injury that is "concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent; fairly traceable to the challenged action; and redressable by a favorable ruling," Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U. S. 398, 409. Here, the plaintiffs' theories of standing depend on the platforms' actions—yet the plaintiffs do not seek to enjoin the platforms from restricting any posts or accounts. Instead, they seek to enjoin the Government agencies and officials from pressuring or encouraging the platforms to suppress protected speech in the future.

The one-step-removed, anticipatory nature of the plaintiffs' alleged injuries presents two particular challenges. First, it is a bedrock principle that a federal court cannot redress "injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court." Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U. S. 26, 41–42. Second, because the plaintiffs request forward-looking relief, they must face "a real and immediate threat of repeated injury." O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U. S. 488, 496. Putting these requirements together, the plaintiffs must show a substantial risk that, in the near future, at least one platform will restrict the speech of at least one plaintiff in response to the actions of at least one Government defendant. Here, at the preliminary injunction stage, they must show that they are likely to succeed in carrying that burden. On the record in this case, that is a tall order. Pp. 8–10.

(b) The plaintiffs' primary theory of standing involves their "direct censorship injuries." Pp. 10–26.

(1) The Court first considers whether the plaintiffs have demonstrated traceability for their past injuries. Because the plaintiffs are seeking only forward-looking relief, the past injuries are relevant only for their predictive value. The primary weakness in the record of past restrictions is the lack of specific causation findings with respect to any discrete instance of content moderation. And while the record reflects that the Government defendants played a role in at least some of the platforms' moderation choices, the evidence indicates that the platforms had independent incentives to moderate content and often exercised their own judgment. The Fifth Circuit, by attributing every platform decision at least in part to the defendants, glossed over complexities in the evidence. The Fifth Circuit also erred by treating the defendants, plaintiffs, and platforms each as a unified whole. Because "standing is not dispensed in gross," TransUnion LLC v. Ramirez, 594 U. S. 413, 431, "plaintiffs must demonstrate standing for each claim they press" against each defendant, "and for each form of relief they seek," ibid. This requires a threshold showing that a particular defendant pressured a particular platform to censor a particular topic before that platform suppressed a particular plaintiff's speech on that topic. Complicating the plaintiffs' effort to demonstrate that each platform acted due to Government coercion, rather than its own judgment, is the fact that the platforms began to suppress the plaintiffs' COVID–19 content before the defendants' challenged communications started. Pp. 10–14.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(2) The plaintiffs fail, by and large, to link their past social-media restrictions and the defendants' communications with the platforms. The state plaintiffs, Louisiana and Missouri, refer only to action taken by Facebook against a Louisiana state representative's post about children and the COVID–19 vaccine. But they never say when Facebook took action against the official's post—a critical fact in establishing a causal link. Nor have the three plaintiff doctors established a likelihood that their past restrictions are traceable to either the White House officials or the CDC. They highlight restrictions imposed by Twitter and LinkedIn, but point only to Facebook's communications with White House officials. Plaintiff Jim Hoft, who runs a news website, experienced election-related restrictions on various platforms. He points to the FBI's role in the platforms' adoption of hacked-material policies and claims that Twitter restricted his content pursuant to those policies. Yet Hoft's declaration reveals that Twitter took action according to its own rules against posting private, intimate media without consent. Hoft does not provide evidence that his past injuries are likely traceable to the FBI or CISA. Plaintiff Jill Hines, a healthcare activist, faced COVID–19-related restrictions on Facebook. Though she makes the best showing of all the plaintiffs, most of the lines she draws are tenuous. Plus, Facebook started targeting her content before almost all of its communications with the White House and the CDC, thus weakening the inference that her subsequent restrictions are likely traceable to Government-coerced enforcement of Facebook's policies. Even assuming Hines can eke out a showing of traceability, the past is relevant only insofar as it predicts the future. Pp. 14–21.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

(3) To obtain forward-looking relief, the plaintiffs must establish a substantial risk of future injury that is traceable to the Government defendants and likely to be redressed by an injunction against them. The plaintiffs who have not pointed to any past restrictions likely traceable to the Government defendants (i.e., everyone other than Hines) are ill suited to the task of establishing their standing to seek forward-looking relief. But even Hines, with her superior showing on past harm, has not shown enough to demonstrate likely future harm at the hands of these defendants. On this record, it appears that the frequent, intense communications that took place in 2021 between the Government defendants and the platforms had considerably subsided by 2022, when Hines filed suit. Thus it is "no more than conjecture" to assume that Hines will be subject to Government-induced content moderation. Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U. S. 95, 108.

The plaintiffs' counterarguments are unpersuasive. First, they argue that they suffer "continuing, present adverse effects" from their past restrictions, as they must now self-censor on social media. O'Shea, 414 U. S., at 496. But the plaintiffs "cannot manufacture standing merely by inflicting harm on themselves based on their fears of hypothetical future harm that is not certainly impending." Clapper, 568 U. S., at 416. Second, the plaintiffs suggest that the platforms continue to suppress their speech according to policies initially adopted under Government pressure. But the plaintiffs have a redressability problem. Without evidence of continued pressure from the defendants, the platforms remain free to enforce, or not to enforce, their policies—even those tainted by initial governmental coercion. And the available evidence indicates that the platforms have continued to enforce their policies against COVID–19 misinformation even as the Federal Government has wound down its own pandemic response measures. Enjoining the Government defendants, therefore, is unlikely to affect the platforms' content-moderation decisions. Pp. 21–27.

(c) The plaintiffs next assert a "right to listen" theory of standing. The individual plaintiffs argue that the First Amendment protects their interest in reading and engaging with the content of other speakers on social media. This theory is startlingly broad, as it would grant all social-media users the right to sue over someone else's censorship—at least so long as they claim an interest in that person's speech. While the Court has recognized a "First Amendment right to receive information and ideas," the Court has identified a cognizable injury only where the listener has a concrete, specific connection to the speaker. Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U. S. 753, 762. Attempting to satisfy this requirement, the plaintiffs emphasize that hearing unfettered speech on social media is critical to their work as scientists, pundits, and activists. But they do not point to any specific instance of content moderation that caused them identifiable harm. They have therefore failed to establish an injury that is sufficiently "concrete and particularized." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U. S. 555, 560. The state plaintiffs assert a sovereign interest in hearing from their citizens on social media, but they have not identified any specific speakers or topics that they have been unable to hear or follow. And States do not have third-party "standing as parens patriae to bring an action against the Federal Government" on behalf of their citizens who have faced social-media restrictions. Haaland v. Brackeen, 599 U. S. 255, 295. Pp. 27–28.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

83 F. 4th 350, reversed and remanded.

BARRETT, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which ROBERTS, C. J., and SOTOMAYOR, KAGAN, KAVANAUGH, and JACKSON, JJ., joined. ALITO, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which THOMAS and GORSUCH, JJ., joined.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOTICE: This opinion is subject to formal revision before publication in the United States Reports. Readers are requested to notify the Reporter of Decisions, Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D. C. 20543, pio@supremecourt.gov, of any typographical or other formal errors.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–411

VIVEK H. MURTHY, SURGEON GENERAL, ET AL., PETITIONERS v. MISSOURI, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

[June 26, 2024]

JUSTICE BARRETT delivered the opinion of the Court.

During the 2020 election season and the COVID–19 pandemic, social-media platforms frequently removed, demoted, or fact checked posts containing allegedly false or misleading information. At the same time, federal officials, concerned about the spread of "misinformation" on social media, communicated extensively with the platforms about their content-moderation efforts.

The plaintiffs, two States and five social-media users, sued dozens of Executive Branch officials and agencies, alleging that they pressured the platforms to suppress protected speech in violation of the First Amendment. The Fifth Circuit agreed, concluding that the officials' communications rendered them responsible for the private platforms' moderation decisions. It then affirmed a sweeping preliminary injunction.

The Fifth Circuit was wrong to do so. To establish standing, the plaintiffs must demonstrate a substantial risk that, in the near future, they will suffer an injury that is traceable to a Government defendant and redressable by the injunction they seek. Because no plaintiff has carried that burden, none has standing to seek a preliminary injunction.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I

A

With their billions of active users, the world's major social-media companies host a "staggering" amount of content on their platforms. Twitter, Inc. v. Taamneh, 598 U. S. 471, 480 (2023). Yet for many of these companies, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube, not everything goes.[1] Under their longstanding content-moderation policies, the platforms have taken a range of actions to suppress certain categories of speech. They place warning labels on some posts, while deleting others. They also "demote" content so that it is less visible to other users. And they may suspend or ban users who frequently post content that violates platform policies.

For years, the platforms have targeted speech they judge to be false or misleading. For instance, in 2016, Facebook began fact checking and demoting posts containing misleading claims about elections. Since 2018, Facebook has removed health-related misinformation, including false claims about a measles outbreak in Samoa and the polio vaccine in Pakistan. Likewise, in 2019, YouTube announced that it would "demonetize" channels that promote anti-vaccine messages.

In 2020, with the outbreak of COVID–19, the platforms announced that they would enforce their policies against users who post false or misleading content about the pandemic. As early as January 2020, Facebook deleted posts it deemed false regarding "cures," "treatments," and the effect of "physical distancing." 60 Record on Appeal 19,035 (Record). And it demoted posts containing what it described as "conspiracy theories about the origin of the virus." Id., at [1] Since the events of this suit, Twitter has merged into X Corp. and is now known as X. Facebook is now known as Meta Platforms. For the sake of clarity, we will refer to these platforms as Twitter and Facebook, as they were known during the vast majority of the events underlying this suit.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

19,036. Twitter and YouTube began applying their policies in March and May 2020, respectively. Throughout the pandemic, the platforms removed or reduced posts questioning the efficacy and safety of mask wearing and the COVID–19 vaccine, along with posts on related topics.

The platforms also applied their misinformation policies during the 2020 Presidential election season. Facebook, in late 2019, unveiled measures to counter foreign interference campaigns and voter suppression efforts. One month before the election, multiple platforms suppressed a report about Hunter Biden's laptop, believing that the story originated from a Russian hack-and-leak operation. After the election, the platforms took action against users or posts that questioned the integrity of the election results.

Over the past few years, various federal officials regularly spoke with the platforms about COVID–19 and election-related misinformation. Officials at the White House, the Office of the Surgeon General, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) focused on COVID–19 content, while the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) concentrated on elections.

White House. In early 2021, and continuing primarily through that year, the Director of Digital Strategy and members of the COVID–19 response team interacted with the platforms about their efforts to suppress vaccine misinformation. They expressed concern that Facebook in particular was "one of the top drivers of vaccine hesitancy," due to the spread of allegedly false or misleading claims on the platform. App. 659–660. Thus, the officials peppered Facebook (and to a lesser extent, Twitter and YouTube) with detailed questions about their policies, pushed them to suppress certain content, and sometimes recommended policy changes. Some of these communications were more aggressive than others. For example, the director of Digital Strategy, frustrated that Facebook had not removed a particular post, complained: "[L]ast time we did this dance, it ended in an insurrection." Id., at 698. Another official, unhappy with Facebook's supposed lack of transparency about its vaccine misinformation problems, wrote: "Internally we have been considering our options on what to do about it." Id., at 657. Publicly, White House communications officials called on the platforms to do more to address COVID–19 misinformation—and, perhaps as motivation, raised the possibility of reforms aimed at the platforms, including changes to the antitrust laws and 47 U. S. C. §230.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Surgeon General. In July 2021, Surgeon General Vivek Murthy issued a health advisory on misinformation. The advisory encouraged platforms to "[r]edesign recommendation algorithms to avoid amplifying misinformation," "[i]mpose clear consequences for accounts that repeatedly violate platform policies," and "[p]rovide information from trusted and credible sources to prevent misconceptions from taking hold." 3 Record 662. At a press conference to announce the advisory, Surgeon General Murthy argued that the platforms should "operate with greater transparency and accountability." 2 id., at 626. The following year, the Surgeon General issued a "Request for Information," seeking, among other things, reports on each platform's "COVID–19 misinformation policies." Impact of Health Misinformation in the Digital Information Environment in the United States Throughout the COVID–19 Pandemic Request for Information (RFI), 87 Fed. Reg. 12714 (Mar. 7, 2022).

CDC. Like the White House, the CDC frequently communicated with the platforms about COVID–19 misinformation. In early 2020, Facebook reached out to the agency, seeking authoritative information about the virus that it could post on the platform. The following year, the CDC's communications expanded to other platforms, including Twitter and YouTube. The CDC hosted meetings and sent reports to the platforms, alerting them to misinformation trends and flagging example posts. The platforms often asked the agency for fact checks on specific claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FBI and CISA. These agencies communicated with the platforms about election-related misinformation. They hosted meetings with several platforms in advance of the 2020 Presidential election and the 2022 midterms. The FBI alerted the platforms to posts containing false information about voting, as well as pernicious foreign influence campaigns that might spread on their sites. Shortly before the 2020 election, the FBI warned the platforms about the potential for a Russian hack-and-leak operation. Some companies then updated their moderation policies to prohibit users from posting hacked materials. Until mid-2022, CISA, through its "switchboarding" operations, forwarded third-party reports of election-related misinformation to the platforms. These communications typically stated that the agency "w[ould] not take any action, favorable or unfavorable, toward social media companies based on decisions about how or whether to use this information." 72 Record 23,223.

B

Respondents are two States and five individual social-media users. They were the plaintiffs below, and for the sake of narrative clarity, we will refer to them as "plaintiffs" in this opinion. (Likewise, we will refer to the Government individuals and agencies as "defendants" rather than petitioners.) The individual plaintiffs—three doctors, the owner of a news website, and a healthcare activist—allege that various platforms removed or demoted their COVID–19 or election-related content between 2020 and 2023. The States, Missouri and Louisiana, claim that the platforms have suppressed the speech of state entities and officials, as well as their citizens' speech.

Though the platforms restricted the plaintiffs' content, the plaintiffs maintain that the Federal Government was behind it. Acting on that belief, the plaintiffs sued dozens of Executive Branch officials and agencies, alleging that they pressured the platforms to censor the plaintiffs' speech in violation of the First Amendment. The States filed their complaint on May 5, 2022. The next month, they moved for a preliminary injunction, seeking to stop the defendants from "taking any steps to demand, urge, encourage, pressure, or otherwise induce" any platform "to censor, suppress, remove, de-platform, suspend, shadow-ban, de-boost, restrict access to content, or take any other adverse action against any speaker, content, or viewpoint expressed on social media." 1 id., at 253. The individual plaintiffs joined the suit on August 2, 2022.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After granting extensive discovery, the District Court issued a preliminary injunction. Missouri v. Biden, 680 F. Supp. 3d 630, 729 (WD La. 2023). The court held that officials at the White House, the Surgeon General's Office, the CDC, the FBI, and CISA likely "coerced" or "significantly encouraged" the platforms "to such extent that the[ir content-moderation] decision[s] should be deemed to be the decisions of the Government." Id., at 694 (internal quotation marks omitted). It enjoined those agencies, along with scores of named and unnamed officials and employees, from taking actions "for the purpose of urging, encouraging, pressuring, or inducing in any manner the removal, deletion, suppression, or reduction of content containing protected free speech posted on social-medial platforms." Missouri v. Biden, 2023 WL 5841935, *1–*2 (WD La., July 4, 2023).[2]

Following a grant of panel rehearing, the Fifth Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part. Missouri v. Biden, 83

[2] The District Court also enjoined the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) and the State Department, along with their officials and employees. 680 F. Supp. 3d, at 700–701, 704–705. The Fifth Circuit removed these entities and individuals from the injunction, however, so they are not before us. Missouri v. Biden, 83 F. 4th 350, 391 (2023).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

F. 4th 350 (2023). It first held that the individual plaintiffs had Article III standing to seek injunctive relief, reasoning that the social-media companies had suppressed the plaintiffs' speech in the past and were likely to do so again in the future, id., at 367–369, and that both of these injuries were "traceable to government-coerced enforcement" of the platform's policies and "redressable by an injunction against the government officials," id., at 373. The court also concluded that the States had standing, both because the platforms had restricted the posts of individual state officials and because the States have the "right to listen" to their citizens on social media. Id., at 371–372.

On the merits, the Fifth Circuit explained that "a private party's conduct may be state action if the government coerced or significantly encouraged it." Id., at 380 (citing Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U. S. 991, 1004 (1982); emphasis deleted). To identify coercion, it asked whether "the government compelled the [private party's] decision by . . . intimating that some form of punishment will follow a failure to comply." 83 F. 4th, at 380. The court explained that the Government significantly encourages a private party's choice when it exercises "active, meaningful control, whether by entanglement in the party's decision-making process or direct involvement in carrying out the decision itself." Id., at 377.[3]

Applying those tests, the Fifth Circuit determined that White House officials, in conjunction with the Surgeon General's Office, likely both coerced and significantly encouraged the platforms to moderate content. Id., at 388. The court concluded that the same was true for the FBI. Ibid. It held that the CDC and CISA significantly encouraged (but did not coerce) the platforms' moderation decisions.

[3] Because we do not reach the merits, we express no view as to whether the Fifth Circuit correctly articulated the standard for when the Government transforms private conduct into state action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Id., at 389, 391.

The Fifth Circuit agreed with the District Court that the equities favored the plaintiffs. Id., at 392–394. It then modified the District Court's injunction to state that the defendants, and their employees and agents, shall not "'coerce or significantly encourage social-media companies to remove, delete, suppress, or reduce, including through altering their algorithms, posted social-media content containing protected free speech.'" Id., at 397. The court did not limit the injunction to the platforms that the plaintiffs use or the topics that the plaintiffs wish to discuss, explaining that the harms stemming from the defendants' conduct "impac[t] every social-media user." Id., at 398.

The federal agencies and officials applied to this Court for emergency relief. We stayed the injunction, treated the application as a petition for a writ of certiorari, and granted the petition. 601 U. S. ___ (2023).

II

We begin—and end—with standing. At this stage, neither the individual nor the state plaintiffs have established standing to seek an injunction against any defendant. We therefore lack jurisdiction to reach the merits of the dispute.

A

Article III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to "Cases" and "Controversies." The "case or controversy" requirement is "'fundamental to the judiciary's proper role in our system of government.'" Raines v. Byrd, 521 U. S. 811, 818 (1997) (quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U. S. 26, 37 (1976)). Federal courts can only review statutes and executive actions when necessary "to redress or prevent actual or imminently threatened injury to persons caused by . . . official violation of law." Summers v. Earth Island Institute, 555

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U. S. 488, 492 (2009). As this Court has explained, "[i]f a dispute is not a proper case or controversy, the courts have no business deciding it, or expounding the law in the course of doing so." DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U. S. 332, 341 (2006).

A proper case or controversy exists only when at least one plaintiff "establish[es] that [she] ha[s] standing to sue." Raines, 521 U. S., at 818; Department of Commerce v. New York, 588 U. S. 752, 766 (2019). She must show that she has suffered, or will suffer, an injury that is "concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent; fairly traceable to the challenged action; and redressable by a favorable ruling." Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U. S. 398, 409 (2013) (internal quotation marks omitted). These requirements help ensure that the plaintiff has "such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to warrant [her] invocation of federal-court jurisdiction." Summers, 555 U. S., at 493 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The plaintiffs claim standing based on the "direct censorship" of their own speech as well as their "right to listen" to others who faced social-media censorship. Brief for Respondents 19, 22. Notably, both theories depend on the platform's actions—yet the plaintiffs do not seek to enjoin the platforms from restricting any posts or accounts. They seek to enjoin Government agencies and officials from pressuring or encouraging the platforms to suppress protected speech in the future.

The one-step-removed, anticipatory nature of their alleged injuries presents the plaintiffs with two particular challenges. First, it is a bedrock principle that a federal court cannot redress "injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court." Simon, 426 U. S., at 41–42. In keeping with this principle, we have "been reluctant to endorse standing theories that require guesswork as to how independent decisionmakers will exercise their judgment." Clapper, 568 U. S., at 413. Rather than guesswork, the plaintiffs must show that the third-party platforms "will likely react in predictable ways" to the defendants' conduct. Department of Commerce, 588 U. S., at 768. Second, because the plaintiffs request forward-looking relief, they must face "a real and immediate threat of repeated injury." O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U. S. 488, 496 (1974); see also Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U. S. 149, 158 (2014) ("An allegation of future injury may suffice if the threatened injury is certainly impending, or there is a substantial risk that the harm will occur" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Putting these requirements together, the plaintiffs must show a substantial risk that, in the near future, at least one platform will restrict the speech of at least one plaintiff in response to the actions of at least one Government defendant. On this record, that is a tall order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Before we evaluate the plaintiffs' different theories, a few preliminaries: The plaintiff "bears the burden of establishing standing as of the time [s]he brought th[e] lawsuit and maintaining it thereafter." Carney v. Adams, 592 U. S. 53, 59 (2020). She must support each element of standing "with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U. S. 555, 561 (1992). At the preliminary injunction stage, then, the plaintiff must make a "clear showing" that she is "likely" to establish each element of standing. See Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U. S. 7, 22 (2008) (emphasis deleted). Where, as here, the parties have taken discovery, the plaintiff cannot rest on "mere allegations," but must instead point to factual evidence. See Lujan, 504 U. S., at 561 (internal quotation marks omitted).

B

1

The plaintiffs' primary theory of standing involves their

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"direct censorship injuries." They claim that the restrictions they have experienced in the past on various platforms are traceable to the defendants and that the platforms will continue to censor their speech at the behest of the defendants. So we first consider whether the plaintiffs have demonstrated traceability for their past injuries.

Here, a note of caution: If the plaintiffs were seeking compensatory relief, the traceability of their past injuries would be the whole ball game. But because the plaintiffs are seeking only forward-looking relief, the past injuries are relevant only for their predictive value. See O'Shea, 414 U. S., at 495–496 ("Past exposure to illegal conduct" can serve as evidence of threatened future injury but "does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief"). If a plaintiff demonstrates that a particular Government defendant was behind her past social-media restriction, it will be easier for her to prove that she faces a continued risk of future restriction that is likely to be traceable to that same defendant. Conversely, if a plaintiff cannot trace her past injury to one of the defendants, it will be much harder for her to make that showing. See Clapper, 568 U. S., at 411. In the latter situation, the plaintiff would essentially have to build her case from scratch, showing why she has some newfound reason to fear that one of the named defendants will coerce her chosen platform to restrict future speech on a topic about which she plans to post—in this case, either COVID–19 or the upcoming election. Keep in mind, therefore, that the past is relevant only insofar as it is a launching pad for a showing of imminent future injury.

The primary weakness in the record of past restrictions is the lack of specific causation findings with respect to any discrete instance of content moderation. The District Court made none. Nor did the Fifth Circuit, which approached standing at a high level of generality. The platforms, it reasoned, "have engaged in censorship of certain viewpoints on key issues," while "the government has engaged in a years-long pressure campaign" to ensure that the platforms suppress those viewpoints. 83 F. 4th, at 370. The platforms' "censorship decisions"—including those affecting the plaintiffs—were thus "likely attributable at least in part to the platforms' reluctance to risk" the consequences of refusing to "adhere to the government's directives." Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We reject this overly broad assertion. As already discussed, the platforms moderated similar content long before any of the Government defendants engaged in the challenged conduct. In fact, the platforms, acting independently, had strengthened their pre-existing content-moderation policies before the Government defendants got involved. For instance, Facebook announced an expansion of its COVID–19 misinformation policies in early February 2021, before White House officials began communicating with the platform. And the platforms continued to exercise their independent judgment even after communications with the defendants began. For example, on several occasions, various platforms explained that White House officials had flagged content that did not violate company policy. Moreover, the platforms did not speak only with the defendants about content moderation; they also regularly consulted with outside experts.

This evidence indicates that the platforms had independent incentives to moderate content and often exercised their own judgment. To be sure, the record reflects that the Government defendants played a role in at least some of the platforms' moderation choices. But the Fifth Circuit, by attributing every platform decision at least in part to the defendants, glossed over complexities in the evidence.[4]

---

[4]The Fifth Circuit relied on the District Court's factual findings, many of which unfortunately appear to be clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the defendants and the platforms had an "efficient report-and-censor relationship." Missouri v. Biden, 680 F. Supp. 3d 630,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Fifth Circuit also erred by treating the defendants, plaintiffs, and platforms each as a unified whole. Our decisions make clear that "standing is not dispensed in gross." TransUnion LLC v. Ramirez, 594 U. S. 413, 431 (2021). That is, "plaintiffs must demonstrate standing for each claim that they press" against each defendant, "and for each form of relief that they seek." Ibid. Here, for every defendant, there must be at least one plaintiff with standing to seek an injunction. This requires a certain threshold showing: namely, that a particular defendant pressured a particular platform to censor a particular topic before that platform suppressed a particular plaintiff's speech on that topic.

Heeding these conditions is critically important in a sprawling suit like this one. The plaintiffs faced speech restrictions on different platforms, about different topics, at 715 (WD La. 2023). But much of its evidence is inapposite. For instance, the court says that Twitter set up a "streamlined process for censorship requests" after the White House "bombarded" it with such requests. Ibid., n. 662 (internal quotation marks omitted). The record it cites says nothing about "censorship requests." See App. 639–642. Rather, in response to a White House official asking Twitter to remove an impersonation account of President Biden's granddaughter, Twitter told the official about a portal that he could use to flag similar issues. Ibid. This has nothing to do with COVID–19 misinformation. The court also found that "[a] drastic increase in censorship . . . directly coincided with Defendants' public calls for censorship and private demands for censorship." 680 F. Supp. 3d, at 715. As to the "calls for censorship," the court's proof included statements from Members of Congress, who are not parties to this suit. Ibid., and n. 658. Some of the evidence of the "increase in censorship" reveals that Facebook worked with the CDC to update its list of removable false claims, but these examples do not suggest that the agency "demand[ed]" that it do so. Ibid. Finally, the court, echoing the plaintiffs' proposed statement of facts, erroneously stated that Facebook agreed to censor content that did not violate its policies. Id., at 714, n. 655. Instead, on several occasions, Facebook explained that certain content did not qualify for removal under its policies but did qualify for other forms of moderation.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA different times. Different groups of defendants communicated with different platforms, about different topics, at different times. And even where the plaintiff, platform, time, content, and defendant line up, the links must be evaluated in light of the platform's independent incentives to moderate content. As discussed, the platforms began to suppress the plaintiffs' COVID–19 content before the defendants' challenged communications started, which complicates the plaintiffs' effort to demonstrate that each platform acted due to "government-coerced enforcement" of its policies, 83 F. 4th, at 370 (emphasis deleted), rather than in its own judgment as an "'independent acto[r],'" Lujan, 504 U. S., at 562. With these factors in mind, we proceed to untangle the mass of the plaintiffs' injuries and Government communications.

2

The plaintiffs rely on allegations of past Government censorship as evidence that future censorship is likely. But they fail, by and large, to link their past social-media restrictions to the defendants' communications with the platforms. Thus, the events of the past do little to help any of the plaintiffs establish standing to seek an injunction to prevent future harms.

Louisiana and Missouri. The state plaintiffs devote minimal attention to restriction of their own social-media content, much less to a causal link between any such restriction and the actions of any Government defendant. They refer only to Facebook's "flagg[ing] . . . and deboost[ing]" of a Louisiana state representative's post about children and the COVID–19 vaccine. Brief for Respondents 20; App. 635–636. We need not decide whether an injury to a state representative counts as an injury to the State, because evidence of causation is lacking.[5] The States assert only that in November 2021, Facebook, "as a result of [its] work [with the CDC]," updated its policies "to remove additional false claims about the COVID–19 vaccine for children." 37 Record 11,457. But they never say when Facebook took action against the official's post—and a causal link is possible only if the removal occurred after Facebook's communication with the CDC. There is therefore no evidence to support the States' allegation that Facebook restricted the state representative pursuant to the CDC-influenced policy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jayanta Bhattacharya, Martin Kulldorff, and Aaron Kheriarty. These plaintiffs are doctors who questioned the wisdom of then-prevailing COVID–19 policies, including lockdowns and mask and vaccine mandates. Each faced his first social-media restriction in 2020, before the White House and the CDC entered discussions with the relevant platforms. Plaintiffs highlight restrictions imposed by Twitter and LinkedIn, starting in 2021, on Dr. Kulldorff's posts about natural immunity. They also point out that Twitter restricted the visibility of Dr. Kheriarty's posts about vaccine safety and efficacy, as well as the ethics surrounding vaccine mandates. Attempting to show causation, the plaintiffs emphasize that in January 2022, Facebook reported to White House officials that it had recently demoted one post advocating for natural immunity over vaccine immunity. But neither the timing nor the platforms line up (nor, in Dr. Kheriarty's case, does the content), so the plaintiffs cannot show that these restrictions were traceable to the White House officials. In fact, there is no record evidence that White House officials ever communicated at all [5] The Fifth Circuit held that States "sustain a direct injury when the social-media accounts of state officials are censored due to federal coercion." 83 F. 4th, at 372. Because the State failed to show that its official was censored, we need not express a view on this theory.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

with LinkedIn.

Drs. Bhattacharya and Kulldorff claim that, after disagreeing with the CDC and other federal health officials, they faced a "relentless covert campaign of social-media censorship." App. 585 (emphasis deleted). They refer to the platforms' suppression of the Great Barrington Declaration, their coauthored report calling for an end to lockdowns. But their declarations do not suggest that anyone at the CDC was involved; rather, they point to officials at the National Institutes of Health and the NIAID. Those entities are not before us. With nothing else to show, Drs. Bhattacharya, Kulldorff, and Kheriarty have not established a likelihood that their past restrictions are traceable to either the White House officials or the CDC.

Jim Hoft. Both Hoft and his news website, "The Gateway Pundit," experienced election and COVID–19-related restrictions on various platforms. Hoft tries to demonstrate his standing to sue only the FBI and CISA, which means that only the suppression of his election-related posts is relevant. (As already discussed, the record contains no evidence that either the FBI or CISA engaged with the platforms about the pandemic.) First, Hoft points to the FBI's role in the platforms' adoption of hacked-material policies. And he claims that Twitter, in December 2020, censored content about the Hunter Biden laptop story under such a policy. The post was titled: "Where's Hunter? How is Hunter Celebrating the New Year? New Photos of Hunter Biden Pushing Drugs on Women Emerge." Hoft's own declaration reveals that Twitter acted according to its "rules against posting or sharing privately produced/distributed intimate media of someone without their express consent." Id., at 608. Hoft provides no evidence that Twitter adopted a policy against posting private, intimate content in response to the FBI's warnings about hack-and-leak operations. Plus, it was Hoft's brother, Joe Hoft, who posted this tweet; Twitter therefore suspended Joe Hoft's account. It is unclear why Jim Hoft would have standing to sue for his brother's injury.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Hoft claims that his content appears on a CISA document tracking posts that various entities had flagged for the platforms as misinformation. The spreadsheet shows that a private entity, the Election Integrity Partnership—not CISA—alerted Twitter to an unidentified article from the Gateway Pundit. And the spreadsheet does not reveal whether Twitter removed or otherwise suppressed that post. This evidence does not support the conclusion that Hoft's past injuries are likely traceable to the FBI or CISA.

Jill Hines. Of all the plaintiffs, Hines makes the best showing of a connection between her social-media restrictions and communications between the relevant platform (Facebook) and specific defendants (CDC and the White House). That said, most of the lines she draws are tenuous, particularly given her burden of proof at the preliminary injunction stage—recall that she must show that her restrictions are likely traceable to the White House and the CDC.

A healthcare activist, Hines codirects "Health Freedom Louisiana," a group that advocated against COVID–19 mask and vaccine mandates. In October 2020—before the start of communications with the White House and the bulk of communications with the CDC—Facebook began to reduce the reach of Hines' and Health Freedom's pages. Hines tries to connect Facebook's subsequent actions against her to both the White House officials and the CDC.

First, Facebook "deplatformed" (i.e., deleted) one of Health Freedom's groups in July 2021. The last post in the group asked members to contact state legislators about health freedom legislation. Three months earlier, a White House official sent Facebook several "suggestions" that were "circulating around the building and informing thinking," including that the platform should "end group recommendations for groups with a history of COVID–19 or vaccine misinformation." 54 Record 16,870–16,871. A week later, Facebook replied that it had "already removed all health groups from our recommendation feature." App. 716. It is hard to know what to make of this. Facebook reported that it had already acted, which tends to imply that Facebook made its decision independently of the White House. Moreover, Facebook and the White House communicated about removing groups from recommendation features, not deleting them altogether—further weakening the inference that Facebook was implementing White House policy rather than its own.[6]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Next, in April 2023, Facebook gave Hines a warning after she reposted content from Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. Two years earlier, White House officials had pushed Facebook to remove the accounts of the "disinformation dozen," 12 people (including Kennedy) supposedly responsible for a majority of COVID–19-related misinformation. Hines tries to link the warning she received to this earlier White House pressure. Again, though, the link is weak. There is no evidence that the White House asked Facebook to censor every user who reposts a member of the disinformation dozen, nor did Facebook change its policies to do so. Facebook's 2023 warning to Hines bears only a tangential relationship to the White House's 2021 directive to Facebook.

Hines traces her remaining restrictions to the CDC. Beginning in October 2020, Facebook fact checked Hines' posts about pregnant women taking the COVID–19 vaccine,

---

[6] Hines tries to link this restriction to the Surgeon General's Office as well, suggesting that the White House and Surgeon General together pressured Facebook. But the record reveals that a White House official sent the relevant email, and Facebook responded only to White House officials. The Surgeon General's Office was seemingly uninvolved. Thus, Hines cannot demonstrate that her past restriction is traceable to the Surgeon General's Office. The plaintiffs do not attempt to draw any other connections between their restrictions and the Surgeon General's Office.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

along with posts including data from the Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS). And in March 2021, the CDC flagged several misinformation trends for Facebook, including claims related to pregnancy and VAERS data. Because Hines does not provide dates for the fact checks, we cannot know whether the CDC could be responsible.

In May 2022, Facebook restricted Hines' account for posting an article discussing increased rates of myocarditis in teenagers following vaccination. A little over a year earlier, the CDC warned Facebook against claims of "unsubstantiated links to new [vaccine] side effects," including "'irritab[ility],'" "'auto-immune issues, infertility,'" and "'neurological damage including lowered IQ.'" 54 Record 17,042–17,043 (emphasis deleted). There is no evidence that the CDC ever listed myocarditis as an unsubstantiated side effect—but because it is an alleged side effect, it at least falls under the same umbrella as the CDC's communication. Health Freedom's February 2023 violation, by contrast, was for posting that vaccine manufacturers would not compensate those with vaccine-related injuries—a topic that bears little resemblance to the content that the CDC flagged.

In April 2023, Hines received violations for posts about children and the vaccine. In November 2021, Facebook worked with the CDC to update its policies to remove additional false claims including that "'the COVID vaccine is not safe for kids.'" 37 id., at 11,457. It is not clear that either of Hines' posts violated the CDC-influenced policy against false claims related to children and the vaccine. One simply referred to the World Health Organization's COVID–19 vaccine recommendations for children, and the other discussed the role of children within the "predatory" pharmaceutical industry. App. 789–790. Given the loose match between the policy and the posts, it is hard to call it "likely" that Facebook was enforcing the CDC's preferences rather than its own.[7]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

With one or two potentially viable links, Hines makes the best showing of all the plaintiffs. Still, Facebook was targeting her pages before almost all of its communications with the White House and the CDC, which weakens the inference that her subsequent restrictions are likely traceable to "government-coerced enforcement" of Facebook's policies, 83 F. 4th, at 370 (emphasis deleted), rather than to Facebook's independent judgment.[8] Even assuming, however, [7] The dissent does not dispute the Court's assessment of these asserted links. Instead, the dissent draws links that Hines herself has not set forth, often based on injuries that Hines never claimed. Compare post, at 19–20, with Brief for Respondents 19–20; App. 628–632. For instance, the dissent says that in May 2021, Facebook began demoting content from accounts that repeatedly shared misinformation, purportedly due to White House pressure. Post, at 10, 19. Because Facebook frequently fact checked Hines' posts, the dissent simply assumes (without citing Hines' declarations) that her content was subsequently hidden from her friends' feeds. Post, at 19. Likewise, pointing to an August 2021 policy change, the dissent concludes that the mid-July 2021 deplatforming of one of Hines' groups rendered her other pages "non-recommendable." Ibid. Hines, however, never claimed as much—and the plaintiffs bear the burden to establish standing by setting forth "specific facts." Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U. S. 555, 561 (1992) (internal quotation marks omitted). It is especially important to hold the plaintiffs to their burden in a case like this one, where the record spans over 26,000 pages and the lower courts did not make any specific causation findings. As the Seventh Circuit has memorably put it, "[j]udges are not like pigs, hunting for truffles buried [in the record]." Gross v. Cicero, 619 F. 3d 697, 702 (2010) (internal quotation marks omitted).

---

[8] By acknowledging the real possibility that Facebook acted independently in suppressing Hines' content, we are not applying a "new and heightened standard," as the dissent claims. Post, at 20. The whole purpose of the traceability requirement is to ensure that "in fact, the asserted injury was the consequence of the defendants' actions," rather than of "the independent action" of a third party. Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U. S. 26, 42, 45 (1976). Nor is our analysis inconsistent with Department of Commerce v. New York, 588 U. S. 752 (2019). See post, at 19. There, the plaintiffs, including several States, challenged the Secretary of Commerce's decision to reinstate a that Hines has eked out a showing of traceability for her past injuries, the past is relevant only insofar as it predicts the future. And this weak record gives her little momentum going forward.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3

To obtain forward-looking relief, the plaintiffs must establish a substantial risk of future injury that is traceable to the Government defendants and likely to be redressed by an injunction against them. To carry that burden, the plaintiffs must proffer evidence that the defendants' "allegedly wrongful behavior w[ould] likely occur or continue."

---

citizenship question on the census. 588 U. S., at 761, 764. They argued that this question would make noncitizens less likely to respond to the census, leading to an inaccurate population count and the concomitant loss of congressional seats and federal funding. Id., at 766–767. The plaintiffs' injuries thus depended on the actions of third parties. Id., at 767–768. The District Court found that noncitizens had historically responded at lower rates than citizens to previous versions of the census (and other surveys) that included a citizenship question and that noncitizens were disproportionately likely to stop responding to those questionnaires once they reached the citizenship question. New York v. United States Dept. of Commerce, 351 F. Supp. 3d 502, 578–579 (SDNY 2019). Crediting those findings, this Court concluded that the plaintiffs "met their burden of showing that third parties will likely react in predictable ways to the citizenship question." Department of Commerce, 588 U. S., at 768. The dissent suggests that it "would have been difficult for [the plaintiffs] to determine which noncitizen households failed to respond to the census because of a citizenship question and which had other reasons." Post, at 20. But the evidence made clear that the citizenship question drove noncitizens' lower response rates; the District Court made no findings about noncitizens' response rates to the census generally. Here, by contrast, the evidence is murky. Facebook targeted Hines' posts (and others like hers) before the White House entered the picture, meaning that Facebook had independent incentives to restrict Hines' content. It is therefore difficult to say that the White House was responsible (even in part) for all of Hines' later restrictions—especially absent clear links between White House content-moderation requests to Facebook and Facebook's actions toward Hines. Cf. post, at 21.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Environmental Services (TOC), Inc., 528 U. S. 167, 190 (2000). At the preliminary injunction stage, the plaintiffs must show that they are likely to succeed in carrying that burden. See Winter, 555 U. S., at 22. But without proof of an ongoing pressure campaign, it is entirely speculative that the platforms' future moderation decisions will be attributable, even in part, to the defendants.

The plaintiffs treat the defendants as a monolith, claiming broadly that "'the governmen[t]'" continues to communicate with the platforms about "'content-moderation issues.'" Brief for Respondents 29 (quoting 83 F. 4th, at 369). But we must confirm that each Government defendant continues to engage in the challenged conduct, which is "coercion" and "significant encouragement," not mere "communication." Plus, the plaintiffs have only explicitly identified an interest in speaking about COVID–19 or elections—so the defendants' discussions about content-moderation issues must focus on those topics.

We begin with the plaintiffs who have not pointed to any past restrictions likely traceable to the Government defendants. This failure to establish traceability for past harms—which can serve as evidence of expected future harm—"substantially undermines [the plaintiffs'] standing theory." Clapper, 568 U. S., at 411. These plaintiffs (i.e., everyone other than Hines) are thus particularly ill suited to the task of establishing their standing to seek forward-looking relief.

Take Hoft, the only plaintiff who has expressed interest in speaking about elections (and thus the only plaintiff with potential standing to sue the FBI and CISA). The FBI's challenged conduct was ongoing at the time of the complaint, as the agency worked with the platforms during the 2022 midterm election season. Still, Hoft must rely on a "speculative chain of possibilities" to establish a likelihood of future harm traceable to the FBI. Id., at 414. Hoft's future posts (presumably about the 2024 Presidential election) must contain content that falls within a misinformation trend that the FBI has identified or will identify in the future. The FBI must pressure the platforms to remove content within that category. The platform must then suppress Hoft's post, and it must do so at least partly in response to the FBI, rather than in keeping with its own content-moderation policy. Hoft cannot satisfy his burden with such conjecture. CISA, meanwhile, stopped switchboarding in mid-2022, and the Government has represented that it will not resume operations for the 2024 election. Especially in light of his poor showing of traceability in the past, Hoft has failed to demonstrate likely future injury at the hands of the FBI or CISA—so the injunction against those entities cannot survive.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The doctors and the state plaintiffs, who focus on COVID–19 content, have a similarly uphill battle vis-à-vis the White House, the Surgeon General's Office, and the CDC. Hines, with her superior showing on past harm, is in a slightly better position to demonstrate likely future harm at the hands of these defendants. Still, she has not shown enough.

Starting with the White House and Surgeon General's Office, the vast majority of their public and private engagement with the platforms occurred in 2021, when the pandemic was still in full swing. By August 2022, when Hines joined the case, the officials' communications about COVID–19 misinformation had slowed to a trickle. Publicly, the White House Press Secretary made two statements in February and April 2022. First, she said that the platforms should continue "call[ing] out misinformation and disinformation." 3 Record 758. Two months later, she spoke generally about §230 and antitrust reform, but did not mention content moderation or COVID–19 misinformation. In March 2022, the Surgeon General issued a voluntary "Request for Information" from the platforms about their misinformation policies.[9]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Privately, Facebook sent monthly "Covid Insights" reports to officials in the White House and the Surgeon General's Office, at least until July 2022. These reports contained information about the top 100 vaccine-related posts in the United States, including whether Facebook took action against any of them. In June, Facebook asked if it should continue sending these reports, as it had stopped seeing "problematic vaccine related" content in the top posts. 50 id., at 15,645–15,646. The official replied that, though he would "normally say we are good to discontinue," the reports would be helpful "as we start to ramp up . . . vaccines" for children under five. Id., at 15,645. The record contains no other evidence of private contact with respect to COVID–19 misinformation.

On this record, it appears that the frequent, intense communications that took place in 2021 had considerably subsided by 2022. (Perhaps unsurprisingly, given the changed state of the pandemic.) It is thus very difficult for Hines to show that she faces future harm that is traceable to officials in the White House and the Surgeon General's Office. Recall the Fifth Circuit's reasoning regarding traceability for past harms: In the face of a governmental "pressure campaign," the "platforms' censorship decisions were likely attributable at least in part to [their] reluctance to risk the adverse legal or regulatory consequences that could result from a refusal to adhere to the government's directives." 83 F. 4th, at 370. But in the months leading up to this suit, these officials issued no directives and threatened no consequences. They only asked for information about the most popular vaccine-related posts. Hines does not allege that her content has fallen, or is likely to fall, in that category.

---

[9] According to a declaration submitted by the Surgeon General's Chief of Staff, no one in that office met with the platforms to discuss their submissions "or otherwise had substantive communications with social media companies about the RFI." 61 Record 19,480.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In these circumstances, Hines cannot rely on "the predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties"; rather, she can only "speculat[e] about the decisions of third parties." Department of Commerce, 588 U. S., at 768. It is "no more than conjecture" to assume that Hines will be subject to White House-induced content moderation. Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U. S. 95, 108 (1983). Hines (along with the other plaintiffs) has therefore failed to establish a likelihood of future injury traceable to the White House or the Surgeon General's Office. Likewise, the risk of future harm traceable to the CDC is minimal. The CDC stopped meeting with the platforms in March 2022. Thereafter, the platforms sporadically asked the CDC to verify or debunk several claims about vaccines. But the agency has not received any such message since the summer of 2022.[10]

The plaintiffs' counterarguments do not persuade. First, they argue that they suffer "continuing, present adverse effects" from their past restrictions, as they must now self-censor on social media. O'Shea, 414 U. S., at 496. But the plaintiffs "cannot manufacture standing merely by inflicting harm on themselves based on their fears of hypothetical future harm that is not certainly impending." Clapper, 568 U. S., at 416. And as we explained, the plaintiffs have not shown that they are likely to face a risk of future censorship traceable to the defendants. Indeed, even before the defendants entered the scene, the plaintiffs "had a similar incentive to engage in" self-censorship, given the platforms' independent content moderation. Id., at 417. So it is "difficult to see how" the plaintiffs' self-censorship "can be traced to" the defendants. Ibid.

[10] The dissent claims that the future injury prong is satisfied because Facebook continued to censor Hines at the time of her complaint and thereafter. Post, at 17. But the dissent gives short shrift to the key point: By the time Hines filed suit in August 2022, the White House was no longer engaged in any sort of "pressure campaign" toward Facebook. (Note that the dissent, in its 10-page recounting of the record, devotes only one paragraph to the events of 2022. Post, at 14.) Thus, when Hines sued, it was unlikely that Facebook's actions were fairly traceable to the White House at the time—or would be going forward.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the plaintiffs and the dissent suggest that the platforms continue to suppress their speech according to policies initially adopted under Government pressure. Post, at 21. That may be true. But the plaintiffs have a redressability problem. "To determine whether an injury is redressable," we "consider the relationship between 'the judicial relief requested' and the 'injury' suffered." California v. Texas, 593 U. S. 659, 671 (2021). The plaintiffs assert several injuries—their past social-media restrictions, current self-censorship, and likely social-media restrictions in the future. The requested judicial relief, meanwhile, is an injunction stopping certain Government agencies and employees from coercing or encouraging the platforms to suppress speech. A court could prevent these Government defendants from interfering with the platforms' independent application of their policies. But without evidence of continued pressure from the defendants, it appears that the platforms remain free to enforce, or not to enforce, those policies—even those tainted by initial governmental coercion. The platforms are "not parties to the suit, and there is no reason they should be obliged to honor an incidental legal determination the suit produced." Lujan, 504 U. S., at 569 (plurality opinion); see also Haaland v. Brackeen, 599 U. S. 255, 293–294 (2023).

Indeed, the available evidence indicates that the platforms have enforced their policies against COVID–19 misinformation even as the Federal Government has wound down its own pandemic response measures. For instance, Hines reports that Facebook imposed several restrictions on her vaccine-related posts in the spring of 2023. Around the same time, in April 2023, President Biden signed a joint resolution that ended the national COVID–19 emergency. See Pub. L. 118–3, 137 Stat. 6. The next month, the White House disbanded its COVID–19 Response Team, which was responsible for many of the challenged communications in this case. Enjoining the Government defendants, therefore, is unlikely to affect the platforms' content-moderation decisions.[11]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C

We conclude briefly with the plaintiffs' "right to listen" theory. The individual plaintiffs claim an interest in reading and engaging with the content of other speakers on social media. The First Amendment, they argue, protects that interest. Thus, the plaintiffs assert injuries based on the restrictions that countless other social-media users have experienced.

This theory is startlingly broad, as it would grant all social-media users the right to sue over someone else's censorship—at least so long as they claim an interest in that person's speech. This Court has "never accepted such a boundless theory of standing." Already, LLC v. Nike, Inc., 568 U. S. 85, 99 (2013). While we have recognized a "First Amendment right to 'receive information and ideas,'" we [11] As with traceability, the dissent is wrong to claim that we are applying a "new and elevated standard for redressability." Post, at 22. Far from holding plaintiffs to a "certainty" standard, ibid., we simply conclude that an injunction against the Government defendants is unlikely to stop the platforms from suppressing the plaintiffs' speech. And while traceability and redressability are "'often "flip sides of the same coin,"'" post, at 22 (quoting FDA v. Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine, 602 U. S. 367, 380 (2024); emphasis added), that is not always the case. Facebook might continue to remove Hines' posts under a policy that it adopted at the White House's behest (thus satisfying traceability). But if the White House officials have already abandoned their pressure campaign, enjoining them is unlikely to prompt Facebook to stop enforcing the policy (thus failing redressability). Finally, by invoking Massachusetts v. EPA, it is the dissent that applies a new and loosened standard for redressability. Post, at 22. In that case, we explained that state plaintiffs are "entitled to special solicitude" when it comes to standing, and we conducted our analysis accordingly. 549 U. S. 497, 520 (2007). That "special solicitude" does not apply to Jill Hines, an individual.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

have identified a cognizable injury only where the listener has a concrete, specific connection to the speaker. Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U. S. 753, 762 (1972). For instance, in Mandel, we agreed that a group of professors had a First Amendment interest in challenging the visa denial of a person they had invited to speak at a conference. Id., at 762–765. And in Virginia Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., we concluded that prescription-drug consumers had an interest in challenging the prohibition on advertising the price of those drugs. 425 U. S. 748, 756–757 (1976).

Attempting to satisfy this requirement, the plaintiffs emphasize that hearing unfettered speech on social media is critical to their work as scientists, pundits, and activists. But they do not point to any specific instance of content moderation that caused them identifiable harm. They have therefore failed to establish an injury that is sufficiently "concrete and particularized." Lujan, 504 U. S., at 560.

The state plaintiffs, claiming their own version of the "right to listen" theory, assert a sovereign interest in hearing from their citizens on social media. See 83 F. 4th, at 372–373. But this theory suffers from the same flaws as the individual plaintiffs' theory. The States have not identified any specific speakers or topics that they have been unable to hear or follow.

The States cite this supposed sovereign injury as a basis for asserting third-party standing on behalf of "the citizens they would listen to." Brief for Respondents 30. But "[t]his argument is a thinly veiled attempt to circumvent the limits on parens patriae standing." Brackeen, 599 U. S., at 295, n. 11. Namely, States do not have "'standing as parens patriae to bring an action against the Federal Government.'" Id., at 295.

The States, like the individual plaintiffs, have failed to establish a likelihood of standing.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

* * *

The plaintiffs, without any concrete link between their injuries and the defendants' conduct, ask us to conduct a review of the years-long communications between dozens of federal officials, across different agencies, with different social-media platforms, about different topics. This Court's standing doctrine prevents us from "exercis[ing such] general legal oversight" of the other branches of Government. TransUnion, 594 U. S., at 423–424. We therefore reverse the judgment of the Fifth Circuit and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–411

VIVEK H. MURTHY, SURGEON GENERAL, ET AL., PETITIONERS v. MISSOURI, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

[June 26, 2024]

JUSTICE ALITO, with whom JUSTICE THOMAS and JUSTICE GORSUCH join, dissenting.

This case involves what the District Court termed "a far-reaching and widespread censorship campaign" conducted by high-ranking federal officials against Americans who expressed certain disfavored views about COVID–19 on social media. Missouri v. Biden, 680 F. Supp. 3d 630, 729 (WD La. 2023). Victims of the campaign perceived by the lower courts brought this action to ensure that the Government did not continue to coerce social media platforms to suppress speech. Among these victims were two States, whose public health officials were hampered in their ability to share their expertise with state residents; distinguished professors of medicine at Stanford and Harvard; a professor of psychiatry at the University of California, Irvine School of Medicine; the owner and operator of a news website; and Jill Hines, the director of a consumer and human rights advocacy organization. All these victims simply wanted to speak out on a question of the utmost public importance.

To protect their right to do so, the District Court issued a preliminary injunction, App. 278–285, and the Court of Appeals found ample evidence to support injunctive relief. See Missouri v. Biden, 83 F. 4th 350 (CA5 2023).

If the lower courts' assessment of the voluminous record is correct, this is one of the most important free speech cases to reach this Court in years. Freedom of speech serves many valuable purposes, but its most important role is protection of speech that is essential to democratic self-government, see Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U. S. 443, 451–452 (2011), and speech that advances humanity's store of knowledge, thought, and expression in fields such as science, medicine, history, the social sciences, philosophy, and the arts, see United States v. Alvarez, 567 U. S. 709, 751 (2012) (ALITO, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The speech at issue falls squarely into those categories. It concerns the COVID–19 virus, which has killed more than a million Americans.[1] Our country's response to the COVID–19 pandemic was and remains a matter of enormous medical, social, political, geopolitical, and economic importance, and our dedication to a free marketplace of ideas demands that dissenting views on such matters be allowed. I assume that a fair portion of what social media users had to say about COVID–19 and the pandemic was of little lasting value. Some was undoubtedly untrue or misleading, and some may have been downright dangerous. But we now know that valuable speech was also suppressed.[2] That is what inevitably happens when entry to

---

[1] Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Deaths by Week and State, https://www.cdc.gov/nchs/nvss/vsrr/COVID19/index.htm (last accessed June 21, 2024).

[2] This includes information about the origin of the COVID–19 virus. When the pandemic began, Facebook began demoting posts supporting the theory that the virus leaked from a laboratory. See Interim Staff Report of the House Judiciary Committee, The Censorship-Industrial Complex: How Top Biden White House Officials Coerced Big Tech To Censor Americans, True Information, and Critics of the Biden Administration, p. 398 (May 1, 2024) (Committee Report), https://judiciary.house.gov/sites/evo-subsites/republicans-judiciary.house.gov/files/evo-media-document/Censorship-Industrial-Complex-WH-Report_Appendix.pdf. "In February 2021, in response to . . . tense conversations with the new Administration," Facebook changed its policy to instead remove posts about the lab leak theory wholesale. Ibid.; accord, id., at 463 (Facebook executive explained that the platform removed these posts "[b]ecause we were the marketplace of ideas is restricted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Of course, purely private entities like newspapers are not subject to the First Amendment, and as a result, they may publish or decline to publish whatever they wish. But government officials may not coerce private entities to suppress speech, see National Rifle Association of America v. Vullo, 602 U. S. 175 (2024), and that is what happened in this case.

The record before us is vast. It contains evidence of communications between many different government actors and a variety of internet platforms, as well as evidence regarding the effects of those interactions on the seven different plaintiffs. For present purposes, however, I will focus on (a) just a few federal officials (namely, those who worked either in the White House or the Surgeon General's office), (b) only one of the most influential social media platforms, Facebook, and (c) just one plaintiff, Jill Hines, because if any of the plaintiffs has standing, we are obligated to reach the merits of this case. See Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U. S. 47, 52, n. 2 (2006).

With the inquiry focused in this way, here is what the under pressure from the administration and others to do more and it was part of the 'more' package"). But since then, both the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Department of Energy have found that the theory is probably correct. See, e.g., A. Kaur & D. Diamond, FBI Director Says Covid–19 "Most Likely" Originated From Lab Incident, Washington Post (Feb. 28, 2023), https://www.washingtonpost.com/nation/2023/02/28/fbi-director-christopher-wray-wuhan-lab; J. Herb & N. Bertrand, US Energy Department Assesses Covid–19 Likely Resulted From Lab Leak, Furthering US Intel Divide Over Virus Origin, CNN (Feb. 27, 2023), https://www.cnn.com/2023/02/26/politics/covid-lab-leak-wuhan-china-intelligence/index.html. Facebook reversed its policy, and Mark Zuckerberg expressed regret that the platform had ever removed the posts: "This seems like a good reminder that when we compromise our standards due to pressure from an administration in either direction, we'll often regret it later." Committee Report 398.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

record plainly shows. For months in 2021 and 2022, a coterie of officials at the highest levels of the Federal Government continuously harried and implicitly threatened Facebook with potentially crippling consequences if it did not comply with their wishes about the suppression of certain COVID–19-related speech. Not surprisingly, Facebook repeatedly yielded. As a result Hines was indisputably injured, and due to the officials' continuing efforts, she was threatened with more of the same when she brought suit. These past and threatened future injuries were caused by and traceable to censorship that the officials coerced, and the injunctive relief she sought was an available and suitable remedy. This evidence was more than sufficient to establish Hines's standing to sue, see Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U. S. 555, 561–562 (1992), and consequently, we are obligated to tackle the free speech issue that the case presents. The Court, however, shirks that duty and thus permits the successful campaign of coercion in this case to stand as an attractive model for future officials who want to control what the people say, hear, and think.

That is regrettable. What the officials did in this case was more subtle than the ham-handed censorship found to be unconstitutional in Vullo, but it was no less coercive. And because of the perpetrators' high positions, it was even more dangerous. It was blatantly unconstitutional, and the country may come to regret the Court's failure to say so. Officials who read today's decision together with Vullo will get the message. If a coercive campaign is carried out with enough sophistication, it may get by. That is not a message this Court should send.

In the next section of this opinion, I will recount in some detail what was done by the officials in this case, but in considering the coercive impact of their conduct, two prominent facts must be kept in mind.

First, social media have become a leading source of news for many Americans,[3] and with the decline of other media, their importance may grow.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, internet platforms, although rich and powerful, are at the same time far more vulnerable to Government pressure than other news sources. If a President dislikes a particular newspaper, he (fortunately) lacks the ability to put the paper out of business. But for Facebook and many other social media platforms, the situation is fundamentally different. They are critically dependent on the protection provided by §230 of the Communications Decency Act of 1996, 47 U. S. C. §230, which shields them from civil liability for content they spread. They are vulnerable to antitrust actions; indeed, Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg has described a potential antitrust lawsuit as an "existential" threat to his company.[4] And because their substantial overseas operations may be subjected to tough regulation in the European Union and other foreign jurisdictions, they rely on the Federal Government's diplomatic efforts to protect their interests.

For these and other reasons,[5] internet platforms have a powerful incentive to please important federal officials, and the record in this case shows that high-ranking officials

---

[3] See, e.g., J. Liedke & L. Wang, News Platform Fact Sheet, Pew Research Center (Nov. 15, 2023), https://www.pewresearch.org/journalism/fact-sheet/news-platform-fact-sheet; A. Watson, Most Popular Platforms for Daily News Consumption in the United States as of August 2022, by Age Group, Statista (Jan. 4, 2024), https://www.statista.com/statistics/717651/most-popular-news-platforms.

[4] C. Newton, Read the Full Transcript of Mark Zuckerberg's Leaked Internal Facebook Meetings, The Verge (Oct. 1, 2019), https://www.theverge.com/2019/10/1/20892354/mark-zuckerberg-full-transcript-leaked-facebook-meetings.

[5] For pending or potential legislation affecting internet platforms, see Congressional Research Service, C. Cho, L. Zhu, & K. Busch, Defining and Regulating Online Platforms (Aug. 25, 2023), https://crsreports.congress.gov/product/pdf/R/R47662/11.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

skillfully exploited Facebook's vulnerability. When Facebook did not heed their requests as quickly or as fully as the officials wanted, the platform was publicly accused of "killing people" and subtly threatened with retaliation.

Not surprisingly these efforts bore fruit. Facebook adopted new rules that better conformed to the officials' wishes, and many users who expressed disapproved views about the pandemic or COVID–19 vaccines were "deplatformed" or otherwise injured.

I

A

I begin by recounting the White House-led campaign to coerce Facebook. The story starts in early 2021, when White House officials began communicating with Facebook about the spread of misinformation about COVID–19 on its platform. Their emails started as questions, e.g., "Can you also give us a sense of misinformation that might be falling outside of your removal polices?" 10 Record 3397. But when the White House did not get the results it wanted, its questions quickly turned to virtual demands. And sometimes, those statements were paired with explicit references to potential consequences.

We may begin this account with an exchange that occurred in March 2021, when the Washington Post reported that Facebook was conducting a study that examined whether posts on the platform questioning COVID–19's severity or the vaccines' efficacy dissuaded some Americans from being vaccinated.[6] The study noted that Facebook's rules permitted some of this content to circulate. Rob Flaherty, the White House Director of Digital Strategy, promptly emailed Facebook about the report. The subject line of his email contained this accusation: "You are hiding the ball." 30 id., at 9366. Flaherty noted that the White House was "gravely concerned that [Facebook] is one of the top drivers of vaccine hesitancy," and he demanded to know how Facebook was trying to solve the problem. Id., at 9365. In his words, "we want to know that you're trying, we want to know how we can help, and we want to know that you're not playing a shell game with us when we ask you what is going on." Ibid.

[6] E. Dwoskin, Massive Facebook Study on Users' Doubt in Vaccines Finds a Small Group Appears To Play a Big Role in Pushing the Skepticism, Washington Post (Mar. 14, 2021), https://www.washingtonpost.com/technology/2021/03/14/facebook-vaccine-hesitancy-qanon.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Andy Slavitt, the White House Senior Advisor for the COVID–19 Response, chimed in with similar complaints. "[R]elative to othe[r]" platforms, he said, "interactions with Facebook are not straightforward" even though the misinformation problems there, in his view, were "worse." Id., at 9364. According to Slavitt, the White House did not believe that Facebook was "trying to solve the problem," so he informed Facebook that "[i]nternally we have been considering our options on what to do about it." Ibid.

Facebook responded apologetically to this and other missives. It acknowledged that "[w]e obviously have work to do to gain your trust." Id., at 9365. And after a follow-up conversation, the platform promised Flaherty and Slavitt that it would adopt additional policies to "reduc[e] virality of vaccine hesitancy content." Id., at 9369. In particular, Facebook promised to "remove [any] Groups, Pages, and Accounts" that "disproportionately promot[e] . . . sensationalized content" about the risks of vaccines, even though it acknowledged that user stories about their experiences and those of family members or friends were "ofte[n] true." Ibid. Facebook also promised to share additional data with the White House, ibid., but Flaherty was not fully satisfied. He said that the additional data Facebook offered was not "going to get us the info we're looking for," but "it shows to me that you at least understand the ask." Id., at 9368.

In April, Flaherty again demanded information on the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"actions and changes" Facebook was taking "to ensure you're not making our country's vaccine hesitancy problem worse." Id., at 9371. To emphasize his urgency, Flaherty likened COVID–19 misinformation to misinformation that led to the January 6 attack on the Capitol. Ibid. Facebook, he charged, had helped to "increase skepticism" of the 2020 election, and he claimed that "an insurrection . . . was plotted, in large part, on your platform." Ibid. He added: "I want some assurances, based in data, that you are not doing the same thing again here." Ibid. Facebook was surprised by these remarks because it "thought we were doing a better job" communicating with the White House, but it promised to "more clearly respon[d]" in the future. Ibid.

The next week, Facebook officers spoke with Slavitt and Flaherty about reports of a rare blood clot caused by the Johnson & Johnson vaccine. Id., at 9385. The conversation quickly shifted when the White House noticed that one of the most-viewed vaccine-related posts from the past week was a Tucker Carlson video questioning the efficacy of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine. Id., at 9376, 9388. Facebook informed the White House that the video did not "qualify for removal under our policies" and thus would be demoted instead, ibid., but that answer did not please Flaherty. "How was this not violative?" he queried, and "[w]hat exactly is the rule for removal vs demoting?" Id., at 9387. Then, for the second time in a week, he invoked the January 6 attack: "Not for nothing, but last time we did this dance, it ended in an insurrection." Id., at 9388. When Facebook did not respond promptly, he made his demand more explicit: "These questions weren't rhetorical." Id., at 9387.

If repeated accusations that Facebook aided an insurrection did not sufficiently convey the White House's displeasure, Flaherty and Slavitt made sure to do so by phone.[7] In

[7] Notes recounting these calls were released by the House Judiciary Committee after the District Court entered the preliminary injunction one call, both officials chided Facebook for not being "straightforward" and not "play[ing] ball." Committee Report 141–142. Flaherty also informed Facebook that he was reporting on the COVID–19 misinformation problem to the President. Id., at 136.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After a second call, a high-ranking Facebook executive perceived that Slavitt was "outraged—not too strong a word to describe his reaction"—that the platform had not removed a fast-spreading meme suggesting that the vaccines might cause harm. Id., at 295. The executive had "countered that removing content like that would represent a significant incursion into traditional boundaries of free expression in the US," but Slavitt was unmoved, in part because he presumed that other platforms "would never accept something like this." Ibid.

A few weeks later, White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki was asked at a press conference about Facebook's decision to keep former President Donald Trump off the platform. See Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki and Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack (May 5, 2021) (hereinafter May 5 Press Briefing).[8] Psaki deflected that question but took the opportunity to call on platforms like Facebook to "'stop amplifying untrustworthy content . . . , especially related to COVID–19, vaccinations, and elections.'" 78 Record 25170. In the same breath, Psaki reminded the platforms that President Biden "'supports . . . a robust anti-trust program.'" Id., at 25171 (emphasis deleted); May 5 Press Briefing.

Around this same time, Flaherty and Slavitt were interrogating Facebook on the mechanics of its content-moderation rules for COVID–19 misinformation. 30 Record and were published in a Committee Report. See Committee Report; Fed. Rule Evid. 201.

---

[8] https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/05/05/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-and-secretary-of-agriculture-tom-vilsack-may-5-2021.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9391, 9397. Flaherty also forwarded to Facebook a "COVID–19 Vaccine Misinformation Brief" that had been drafted by outside researchers and was "informing thinking" in the White House on what Facebook's policies should be. 52 id., at 16186. This document recommended that Facebook strengthen its efforts against misinformation in several ways. It recommended the adoption of "progressively severe penalties" for accounts that repeatedly posted misinformation, and it proposed that Facebook make it harder for users to find "anti-vaccine or vaccine-hesitant propaganda" from other users. Ibid. Facebook declined to adopt some of these suggestions immediately, but it did "se[t] up more dedicated monitoring for [COVID] vaccine content" and adopted a policy of "stronger demotions [for] a broader set of content." 30 id., at 9396.

The White House responded with more questions. Acknowledging that he sounded "like a broken record," Flaherty interrogated Facebook about "how much content is being demoted, and how effective [Facebook was] at mitigating reach, and how quickly." Id., at 9395. Later, Flaherty chastised Facebook for failing to prevent some vaccine-hesitant content from showing up through the platform's search function. Id., at 9400. "'[R]emoving bad information from search' is one of the easy, low-bar things you guys do to make people like me think you're taking action," he said. Id., at 9399. "If you're not getting that right, it raises even more questions about the higher bar stuff." Ibid. A few weeks after this latest round of haranguing, Facebook expanded penalties for individual Facebook accounts that repeatedly shared content that fact-checkers deemed misinformation; henceforth, all of those individuals' posts would show up less frequently in their friends' news feeds. See 9 id., at 2697; Facebook, Taking Action Against People Who Repeatedly Share Misinformation

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(May 26, 2021).[9]

Perhaps the most intense period of White House pressure began a short time later. On July 15, Surgeon General Vivek Murthy released an advisory titled "Confronting Health Misinformation." 78 Record 25171, 25173. Dr. Murthy suggested, among other things, algorithmic changes to demote misinformation and additional consequences for misinformation "'super-spreaders.'" U. S. Public Health Service, Confronting Health Misinformation: The U. S. Surgeon General's Advisory on Building a Healthy Information Environment 12 (2021).[10] Dr. Murthy also joined Psaki at a press conference, where he asked the platforms to take "much, much more . . . aggressive action" to combat COVID–19 misinformation "because it's costing people their lives." Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki and Surgeon General Dr. Vivek H. Murthy (July 15, 2021).[11]

At the same press conference, Psaki singled out Facebook as a primary driver of misinformation and asked the platform to make several changes. Facebook "should provide, publicly and transparently, data on the reach of COVID–19 [and] COVID vaccine misinformation." Ibid. It "needs to move more quickly to remove harmful, violative posts." Ibid. And it should change its algorithm to promote "quality information sources." Ibid. These recommendations echoed Slavitt's and Flaherty's private demands from the preceding months—as Psaki herself acknowledged. The White House "engage[s] with [Facebook] regularly," she said, and Facebook "certainly understand[s] what our asks [9] https://about.fb.com/news/2021/05/taking-action-against-people-who-repeatedly-share-misinformation.

---

[10] https://www.hhs.gov/sites/default/files/surgeon-general-misinformation-advisory.pdf.

[11] https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/07/15/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-and-surgeon-general-dr-vivek-h-murthy-july-15-2021.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

are." Ibid. Apparently, the White House had not gotten everything it wanted from those private conversations, so it was turning up the heat in public.

Facebook responded by telling the press that it had partnered with the White House to counter misinformation and that it had "removed accounts that repeatedly break the rules" and "more than 18 million pieces of COVID misinformation." 78 Record 25174. But at another press briefing the next day, Psaki said these efforts were "[c]learly not" sufficient and expressed confidence that Facebook would "make decisions about additional steps they can take." See id., at 25175; Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki (July 16, 2021).[12]

That same day, President Biden told reporters that social media platforms were "'killing people'" by allowing COVID-related misinformation to circulate. 78 Record 25174, 25212. At oral argument, the Government suggested that the President later disclaimed any desire to hold the platforms accountable for misinformation, Tr. of Oral Arg. 34–35, but that is not so. The President's so-called clarification, like many other statements by Government officials, called on "'Facebook'" to "'do something about the misinformation'" on its platform. B. Klein, M. Vazquez, & K. Collins, Biden Backs Away From His Claim That Facebook Is 'Killing People' by Allowing COVID Misinformation, CNN (July 19, 2021).[13]

And far from disclaiming potential regulatory action, the White House confirmed that it had not "'taken any options off the table.'" Ibid. In fact, the day after the President's supposed clarification, the White House Communications Director commended the President for "speak[ing] very aggressively" and affirmed that platforms "certainly . . .

[12] https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/07/16/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-july-16-2021.

[13] https://www.cnn.com/2021/07/19/politics/joe-biden-facebook/index.html.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

should be held accountable" for publishing misinformation. 61 Record 19400–19401. Indeed, she said that the White House was "reviewing" whether §230 should be amended to open the platforms to suit. Id., at 19400.

Facebook responded quickly. The same day the President made his "killing people" remark, the platform reached out to Dr. Murthy to determine "the scope of what the White House expects from us on misinformation going forward." 9 id., at 2690. The next day, Facebook asked officials about how to "get back to a good place" with the White House. 30 id., at 9403. And soon after, Facebook sent an email saying that it "hear[d]" the officials' "call for us to do more," and promptly assured the White House that it would comply. 9 id., at 2706. In spite of the White House's inflammatory rhetoric, Facebook at all times went out of its way to strike a conciliatory tone. Only two days after the President's remark—and before his supposed clarification—Facebook assured Dr. Murthy that, though "it's not great to be accused of killing people," Facebook would "find a way to deescalate and work together collaboratively." Id., at 2713.

Concrete changes followed in short order. In early August, the Surgeon General's Office reached out to Facebook for "an update of any new/additional steps you are taking with respect to health misinformation in light of " the July 15 advisory. Id., at 2703. In response, Facebook informed the Surgeon General that it would soon "expan[d] [its] COVID policies to further reduce the spread of potentially harmful content." Id., at 2701.

White House-Facebook conversations about misinformation did not end there. In September, the Wall Street Journal wrote about the spread of misinformation on Facebook, and Facebook preemptively reached out to the White House to clarify. 8 id., at 2681. Flaherty asked (again) for information on "how big the problem is, what solutions you're implementing, and how effective they've been." Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Then in October, the Washington Post published yet another story suggesting that Facebook knew more than it let on about the spread of misinformation. Flaherty emailed the link to Facebook with the subject line: "not even sure what to say at this point." Id., at 2676. And the Surgeon General's Office indicated both publically and privately that it was disappointed in Facebook. See @Surgeon_General, X (Oct. 29, 2021) (accusing Facebook of "lacking . . . transparency and accountability");[14] 9 Record 2708. Facebook offered to speak with both the White House and the Surgeon General's Office to assuage concerns. 8 id., at 2676.

Interactions related to COVID–19 misinformation continued until at least June 2022. Id., at 2663. At that point, Facebook proposed discontinuing its reports on misinformation, but assured the White House that it would be "happy to continue, or to pick up at a later date, . . . if we hear from you that this continues to be of value." Ibid. Flaherty asked Facebook to continue reporting on misinformation because the Government was preparing to roll out COVID–19 vaccines for children under five years old and, "[o]bviously," that rollout "ha[d] the potential to be just as charged" as other vaccine-related controversies. Ibid. Flaherty added that he "[w]ould love to get a sense of what you all are planning here," and Facebook agreed to provide information for as long as necessary. Ibid.

What these events show is that top federal officials continuously and persistently hectored Facebook to crack down on what the officials saw as unhelpful social media posts, including not only posts that they thought were false or misleading but also stories that they did not claim to be literally false but nevertheless wanted obscured. See, e.g., 30 id., at 9361, 9365, 9369, 9385–9388. And Facebook's reactions to these efforts were not what one would expect from an independent news source or a journalistic entity dedicated to holding the Government accountable for its actions. Instead, Facebook's responses resembled that of a subservient entity determined to stay in the good graces of a powerful taskmaster. Facebook told White House officials that it would "work . . . to gain your trust." Id., at 9365. When criticized, Facebook representatives whimpered that they "thought we were doing a better job" but promised to do more going forward. Id., at 9371. They pleaded to know how they could "get back to a good place" with the White House. Id., at 9403. And when denounced as "killing people," Facebook responded by expressing a desire to "work together collaboratively" with its accuser. 9 id., at 2713; 78 id., at 25174. The picture is clear.

---

[14] https://twitter.com/Surgeon_General/status/1454181191494606854.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B

While all this was going on, Jill Hines and others were subjected to censorship. Hines serves as the co-director of Health Freedom Louisiana, an organization that advocated against vaccine and mask mandates during the pandemic. Over the course of the pandemic—and while the White House was pressuring Facebook—the platform repeatedly censored Hines's speech.

For instance, in the summer and fall of 2021, Facebook removed two groups that Hines had formed to discuss the vaccine. 4 id., at 1313–1315. In January 2022, Facebook restricted posts from Hines's personal page "for 30 days . . . for sharing the image of a display board used in a legislative hearing that had Pfizer's preclinical trial data on it." Id., at 1313. In late May, Facebook restricted Hines for 90 days for sharing an article about "increased emergency calls for teens with myocarditis following [COVID] vaccination." Id., at 1313–1314. Hines's public pages, Reopen Louisiana and Health Freedom Louisiana, were subjected to similar treatment. Facebook's disciplinary actions meant that both public pages suffered a drop in viewership; as Hines put it,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"Each time you build viewership up [on a page], it is knocked back down with each violation." Id., at 1314. And from February to April 2023, Facebook issued warnings and violations for several vaccine-related posts shared on Hines's personal and public pages, including a post by Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., and an article entitled "'Some Americans Shouldn't Get Another COVID-19 Vaccine Shot, FDA Says.'" 78 id., at 25503–25506. The result was that "[n]o one else was permitted to view or engage with the[se] post[s]." Id., at 25503.

II

Hines and the other plaintiffs in this case brought this suit and asked for an injunction to stop the censorship campaign just described. To maintain that suit, they needed to show that they (1) were imminently threatened with an injury in fact (2) that is traceable to the defendants and (3) that could be redressed by the court. Lujan, 504 U. S., at 560–561; O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U. S. 488, 496 (1974). Hines satisfied all these requirements.

A

Injury in fact. Because Hines sought and obtained a preliminary injunction, it was not enough for her to show that she had been injured in the past. Instead, she had to identify a "real and immediate threat of repeated injury" that existed at the time she sued—that is, on August 2, 2022. O'Shea, 414 U. S., at 496; see also Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Environmental Services (TOC), Inc., 528 U. S. 167, 191 (2000); Mollan v. Torrance, 9 Wheat. 537, 539 (1824).

The Government concedes that Hines suffered past injury, but it claims that she did not make the showing needed to obtain prospective relief. See Brief for Petitioners 17. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals rejected this argument and found that Hines had shown that she was likely to be censored in the future. 680 F. Supp. 3d, at 713; 83 F. 4th, at 368–369. We have previously examined such findings under the "clearly erroneous" test. See Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc., 438 U. S. 59, 77 (1978). But no matter what test is applied, the record clearly shows that Hines was still being censored when she sued—and that the censorship continued thereafter. See supra, at 15–16. That was sufficient to establish the type of injury needed to obtain injunctive relief. O'Shea, 414 U. S., at 496; see also County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U. S. 44, 51 (1991).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B

Traceability. To sue the White House officials, Hines had to identify a "causal connection" between the actions of those officials and her censorship. Bennett v. Spear, 520 U. S. 154, 169 (1997). Hines did not need to prove that it was only because of those officials' conduct that she was censored. Rather, as we held in Department of Commerce v. New York, 588 U. S. 752 (2019), it was enough for her to show that one predictable effect of the officials' action was that Facebook would modify its censorship policies in a way that affected her. Id., at 768.

Hines easily met that test, and her traceability theory is at least as strong as the State of New York's in the Department of Commerce case. There, the State claimed that it would be hurt by a census question about citizenship. The State predicted that the question would dissuade some noncitizen households from complying with their legal duty to complete the form, and it asserted that this in turn could cause the State to lose a seat in the House of Representatives, as well as federal funds that are distributed on the basis of population. Id., at 766–767. Although this theory depended on illegal conduct by third parties and an attenuated chain of causation, the Court found that the State had established traceability. It was enough, the Court held, that the failure of some aliens to respond to the census was "likely attributable" to the Government's introduction of a citizenship question. Id., at 768.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This is not a demanding standard, and Hines made the requisite showing—with room to spare. Recall that officials from the White House and Surgeon General's Office repeatedly hectored and implicitly threatened Facebook to suppress speech expressing the viewpoint that Hines espoused. See supra, at 6–15. Censorship of Hines was the "predictable effect" of these efforts. Department of Commerce, 588 U. S., at 768. Or, to put the point in different terms, Facebook would "likely react in predictable ways" to this unrelenting pressure. Ibid.

This alone was sufficient to show traceability, but here there is even more direct proof. On numerous occasions, the White House officials successfully pushed Facebook to tighten its censorship policies, see supra, at 7, 10, 13, and those policies had implications for Hines.[15] First, in March [15]The Court discounts this evidence because Hines did not draw the same links in her briefing. See ante, at 20, n. 7. But we have an "independent obligation" to assess standing, Summers v. Earth Island Institute, 555 U. S. 488, 499 (2009), and a "virtually unflagging obligation" to exercise our jurisdiction if standing exists, Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U. S. 800, 817 (1976). "[A] case like this one, where the record spans over 26,000 pages" and the plaintiffs have provided numerous facts, deserves some scrutiny before we simply brush standing aside. Ante, at 20, n. 7.

---

As it happens, Hines has said enough to establish standing. First, she says that, at the behest of the White House, Facebook announced new measures to combat misinformation about COVID–19 and the vaccines. Second, she says that her Facebook pages fell under those policies. Third, she says that she suffered the penalties imposed by Facebook, such as demotion of her posts and pages. See 4 Record 1315; 78 id., at 25503. She may not explicitly say that the policy changes caused the penalties she experienced. But what theory makes more sense—that a user falling within Facebook's amended policies was censored under those policies or that something else caused her injury?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2021, the White House pressured Facebook into implementing a policy of removing accounts that "disproportionately promot[e] . . . sensationalized content" about vaccines. Supra, at 7. Later that year, Facebook removed two of Hines's groups, which posted about vaccines. Supra, at 15. And when Hines sued in August 2022, she reported that her personal page was "currently restricted" for sharing vaccine-related content and, thus, that she was "under constant threat of being completely deplatformed." 4 Record 1314.

Second, in May, Facebook told Slavitt that it would "se[t] up more dedicated monitoring" of vaccine content and apply demotions to "a broader set of content." Supra, at 10. Then, a few weeks later, Facebook also increased demotions of posts by individual Facebook accounts that repeatedly shared misinformation. Ibid. Hines says that she was repeatedly fact-checked for posting about the vaccines, see supra, at 15–16; 4 Record 1314, so these policy changes apparently increased the risk that posts from her personal account would have been hidden from her friends' Facebook feeds.

Third, in response to the July 2021 comments from the White House and the Surgeon General, Facebook made more changes. Supra, at 13. And from the details Hines provides about her posting history, this policy change would have affected her. For one thing, Facebook "rendered 'non-recommendable'" any page linked to another account that had been "removed" for spreading misinformation about COVID–19. 9 Record 2701. Hines says that two of her groups were removed for alleged COVID misinformation around this time. Supra, at 15; 4 Record 1315. So under the new policy, her other pages would apparently be non-recommendable. Perhaps for this reason, though Hines attempted to convince members of her deplatformed group to migrate to a substitute group, only about a quarter of its membership made the move before the substitute group too was removed. Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For another, Facebook "increas[ed] the strength of [its] demotions for COVID and vaccine-related content that third party fact checkers rate[d] as 'Partly False' or 'Missing Context.'" 9 id., at 2701. And Facebook "ma[de] it easier to have Pages/Groups/Accounts demoted for sharing COVID and vaccine-related misinformation by . . . counting content removals" under Facebook's COVID–19 policies "towards their demotion threshold." Ibid. Under this new policy, Facebook would now consider Hines's "numerous" community standards violations, 4 id., at 1314, when determining whether to make her posts less accessible to other users. So, for instance, when Hines received several citations in early 2023, this amendment would have governed Facebook's decision to "downgrad[e] the visibility of [her] posts in Facebook's News Feed (thereby limiting its reach to other users)." 78 id., at 25503. The record here amply shows traceability.

The Court reaches the opposite conclusion by applying a new and heightened standard. The Court notes that Facebook began censoring COVID–19-related misinformation before officials from the White House and the Surgeon General's Office got involved. Ante, at 20; see also Brief for Petitioners 18. And in the Court's view, that fact makes it difficult to untangle Government-caused censorship from censorship that Facebook might have undertaken anyway. See ante, at 20. That may be so, but in the Department of Commerce census case, it also would have been difficult for New York to determine which noncitizen households failed to respond to the census because of a citizenship question and which had other reasons. Nevertheless, the Court did not require New York to perform that essentially impossible operation because it was clear that a citizenship question would dissuade at least some noncitizen households from responding. As we explained, "Article III 'requires no more than de facto causality,'" so a showing that a citizenship question affected some aliens sufficed. Department of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Commerce, 588 U. S., at 768.

Here, it is reasonable to infer (indeed, the inference leaps out from the record) that the efforts of the federal officials affected at least some of Facebook's decisions to censor Hines. All of Facebook's demotion, content-removal, and deplatforming decisions are governed by its policies.[16] So when the White House pressured Facebook to amend some of the policies related to speech in which Hines engaged, those amendments necessarily impacted some of Facebook's censorship decisions. Nothing more is needed. What the Court seems to want are a series of ironclad links—from a particular coercive communication to a particular change in Facebook's rules or practice and then to a particular adverse action against Hines. No such chain was required in the Department of Commerce case, and neither should one be demanded here.

In addition to this heightened linkage requirement, the Court argues that Hines lacks standing because the threat of future injury dissipated at some point during summer 2022 when the officials' pressure campaign tapered off. Ante, at 25, n. 10. But this argument errs in two critical respects. First, the effects of the changes the officials coerced persisted. Those changes controlled censorship decisions before and after Hines sued.

Second, the White House threats did not come with expiration dates, and it would be silly to assume that the threats lost their force merely because White House officials opted not to renew them on a regular basis. Indeed, the record suggests that Facebook did not feel free to chart its own course when Hines sued; rather, the platform had promised to continue reporting to the White House and remain responsive to its concerns for as long as the officials requested. Supra, at 14.

---

[16] See Meta, Policies, https://transparency.meta.com/policies (last accessed June 19, 2024).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In short, when Hines sued in August 2022, there was still a link between the White House and the injuries she was presently suffering and could reasonably expect to suffer in the future. That is enough for traceability.

C

Redressability. Finally, Hines was required to show that the threat of future injury she faced when the complaint was filed "likely would be redressed" by injunctive relief. FDA v. Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine, 602 U. S. 367, 380 (2024). This required proof that a preliminary injunction would reduce Hines's "risk of [future] harm . . . to some extent." Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U. S. 497, 526 (2007) (emphasis added). And as we recently explained, "[t]he second and third standing requirements—causation and redressability—are often 'flip sides of the same coin.'" Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine, 602 U. S., at 380. Therefore, "[i]f a defendant's action causes an injury, enjoining the action or awarding damages for the action will typically redress that injury." Id., at 381.

Hines easily satisfied that requirement. For the reasons just explained, there is ample proof that Hines's past injuries were a "predictable effect" of the Government's censorship campaign, and the preliminary injunction was likely to prevent the continuation of the harm to at least "some extent." Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U. S., at 526.

The Court disagrees because Facebook "remain[s] free to enforce . . . even those [policies] tainted by initial governmental coercion." Ante, at 26. But as with traceability, the Court applies a new and elevated standard for redressability, which has never required plaintiffs to be "certain" that a court order would prevent future harm. Larson v. Valente, 456 U. S. 228, 243–244, n. 15 (1982). In Massachusetts v. EPA, for example, no one could say that the relief sought—reconsideration by the EPA of its decision not to regulate the emission of greenhouse gases—would actually remedy the Commonwealth's alleged injuries, such as the loss of land due to rising sea levels. The Court's decision did not prevent the EPA from adhering to its prior decision, 549 U. S., at 534–535, and there was no way to know with any degree of certainty that any greenhouse gas regulations that the EPA might eventually issue would prevent the oceans from rising. Yet the Court found that the redressability requirement was met.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Similarly, in Department of Commerce, no one could say with any certainty that our decision barring a censorship question from the 2020 census questionnaire would prevent New York from losing a seat in the House of Representatives, 588 U. S., at 767, and in fact that result occurred despite our decision. S. Goldmacher, New York Loses House Seat After Coming Up 89 People Short on Census, N. Y. Times, Apr. 26, 2021.[17]

As we recently proclaimed in FDA v. Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine, Article III standing is an important component of our Constitution's structural design. See 602 U. S., at 378–380. That doctrine is cheapened when the rules are not evenhandedly applied.

* * *

Hines showed that, when she sued, Facebook was censoring her COVID-related posts and groups. And because the White House prompted Facebook to amend its censorship policies, Hines's censorship was, at least in part, caused by the White House and could be redressed by an injunction against the continuation of that conduct. For these reasons, Hines met all the requirements for Article III standing.

III

I proceed now to the merits of Hines's First Amendment

---

[17] https://www.nytimes.com/2021/04/26/nyregion/new-york-census-congress.html.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

claim.[18] Government efforts to "dictat[e] the subjects about which persons may speak," First Nat. Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U. S. 765, 784–785 (1978), or to suppress protected speech are "'presumptively unconstitutional,'" Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U. S. 819, 830 (1995). And that is so regardless of whether the Government carries out the censorship itself or uses a third party "'to accomplish what . . . is constitutionally forbidden.'" Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U. S. 455, 465 (1973).

As the Court held more than 60 years ago in Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U. S. 58 (1963), the Government may not coerce or intimidate a third-party intermediary into suppressing someone else's speech. Id., at 67. Earlier this Term, we reaffirmed that important principle in National Rifle Association v. Vullo, 602 U. S., at 187–191. As we said there, "a government official cannot do indirectly what she is barred from doing directly," id., at 190, and while an official may forcefully attempt to persuade, "[w]hat she cannot do . . . is use the power of the State to punish or suppress disfavored expression," id., at 188.

In Vullo, the alleged conduct was blunt. The head of the state commission with regulatory authority over insurance companies allegedly told executives at Lloyd's directly and in no uncertain terms that she would be "'less interested'" in punishing the company's regulatory infractions if it ceased doing business with the National Rifle Association. Id., at 183. The federal officials' conduct here was more [18] To obtain a preliminary injunction, Hines was required to establish that she is likely to succeed on the merits, that she would otherwise suffer irreparable harm, and that the equities cut in her favor. Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U. S. 7, 20 (2008). In a First Amendment case, the equities are bound up in the merits. See Elrod v. Burns, 427 U. S. 347, 373 (1976) (plurality opinion) ("The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury"). So I focus on Hines's likelihood of success.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

subtle and sophisticated. The message was delivered piecemeal by various officials over a period of time in the form of aggressive questions, complaints, insistent requests, demands, and thinly veiled threats of potentially fatal reprisals. But the message was unmistakable, and it was duly received.

The principle recognized in Bantam Books and Vullo requires a court to distinguish between permissible persuasion and unconstitutional coercion, and in Vullo, we looked to three leading factors that are helpful in making that determination: (1) the authority of the government officials who are alleged to have engaged in coercion, (2) the nature of statements made by those officials, and (3) the reactions of the third party alleged to have been coerced. 602 U. S., at 189–190, and n. 4, 191–194. In this case, all three factors point to coercion.

A

I begin with the authority of the relevant officials—high-ranking White House officials and the Surgeon General. High-ranking White House officials presumably speak for and may have the ability to influence the President, and as discussed earlier, a Presidential administration has the power to inflict potentially fatal damage to social media platforms like Facebook. See supra, at 5. Facebook appreciates what the White House could do, and President Biden has spoken openly about that power—as he has every right to do. For instance, he has declared that the "policy of [his] Administration [is] to enforce the antitrust laws to meet the challenges posed by . . . the rise of the dominant Internet platforms," and he has directed the Attorney General and other agency heads to "enforce the antitrust laws . . . vigorously." Promoting Competition in the American Economy, Executive Order No. 14036, 3 CFR 609 (2021).[19] He has [19] https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/presidential-actions/2021/07/09/executive-order-on-promoting-competition-in-the-american-

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

also floated the idea of amending or repealing §230 of the Communications Decency Act. See, e.g., B. Klein, White House Reviewing Section 230 Amid Efforts To Push Social Media Giants To Crack Down on Misinformation, CNN (July 20, 2021)[20]; R. Kern, White House Renews Call To 'Remove' Section 230 Liability Shield, Politico (Sept. 8, 2022).[21]

Previous administrations have also wielded significant power over Facebook. In a data-privacy case brought jointly by the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, Facebook was required "to pay an unprecedented $5 billion civil penalty," which is "among the largest civil penalties ever obtained by the federal government." Press Release, Dept. of Justice, Facebook Agrees To Pay $5 Billion and Implement Robust New Protections of User Information in Settlement of Data-Privacy Claims (July 24, 2019).[22]

A matter that may well have been prominent in Facebook's thinking during the period in question in this case was a dispute between the United States and the European Union over international data transfers. In 2020, the Court of Justice of the European Union invalidated the mechanism for transferring data between the European Union and United States because it did not sufficiently protect EU citizens from Federal Government surveillance. Data Protection Comm'r v. Facebook Ireland Limited, Case C–311/18 (2020). The EU-U. S. conflict over data privacy hindered Facebook's international operations, but Facebook could economy.

---

[20] https://www.cnn.com/2021/07/20/politics/white-house-section-230-facebook/index.html.

[21] https://www.politico.com/news/2022/09/08/white-house-renews-call-to-remove-section-230-liability-shield-00055771.

[22] https://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/facebook-agrees-pay-5-billion-and-implement-robust-new-protections-user-information.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

not "resolve [the conflict] on its own." N. Clegg & J. Newstead, Our Response to the Decision on Facebook's EU-US Data Transfers, Meta (May 22, 2023).[23] Rather, the platform relied on the White House to negotiate an agreement that would preserve its ability to maintain its trans-Atlantic operations. K. Mackrael, EU Approves Data-Transfer Deal With U. S., Averting Potential Halt in Flows, Wall Street Journal, July 10, 2023.[24]

It is therefore beyond any serious dispute that the top-ranking White House officials and the Surgeon General possessed the authority to exert enormous coercive pressure.

B

1

Second, I turn to of the officials' communications with Facebook, which possess all the hallmarks of coercion that we identified in Bantam Books and Vullo. Many of the White House's emails were "phrased virtually as orders," Bantam Books, 372 U. S., at 68, and the officials' frequent follow-ups ensured that they were understood as such, id., at 63. To take a few examples, after Flaherty read an article about content causing vaccine hesitancy, he demanded "to know that [Facebook was] trying" to combat the issue and "to know that you're not playing a shell game with us when we ask you what is going on." 30 Record 9365; see supra, at 7. The next month, he requested "assurances, based in data," that Facebook was not "making our country's vaccine hesitancy problem worse." 30 Record 9371; see supra, at 7–8. A week after that, he questioned Facebook about its policies "for removal vs demoting," and when the platform did not [23] https://about.fb.com/news/2023/05/our-response-to-the-decision-on-facebooks-eu-us-data-transfers.

[24] https://www.wsj.com/articles/eu-approves-data-transfer-deal-with-u-s-averting-potential-halt-in-flows-7a149c9.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

promptly respond, he added: "These questions weren't rhetorical." 30 Record 9387; see supra, at 8. When Facebook provided the White House with some data it asked for, Flaherty thanked Facebook for demonstrating "that you at least understand the ask." 30 Record 9368; see supra, at 7.

Various comments during the July pressure campaign likewise reveal that the White House and the Surgeon General's Office expected compliance. At the press conference announcing the Surgeon General's recommendations related to misinformation, Psaki noted that the White House "engage[s] with [Facebook] regularly," and Facebook "certainly understand[s] what our asks are." Supra, at 11. The next day, she expressed confidence that Facebook would "make decisions about additional steps they can take." 78 Record 25175; see supra, at 12. And eventually, the Surgeon General's Office prompted Facebook for "an update of any new/additional steps you are taking with respect to health misinformation in light of" the July 15 advisory. 9 Record 2703; see supra, at 13.

These demands were coupled with "thinly veiled threats" of legal consequences. Bantam Books, 372 U. S., at 68. Three instances stand out. Early on, when the White House first expressed skepticism that Facebook was effectively combatting misinformation, Slavitt informed the platform that the White House was "considering our options on what to do about it." 30 Record 9364; see supra, at 7. In other words, if Facebook did not "solve" its "misinformation" problem, the White House might unsheathe its potent authority. 30 Record 9364.

The threat was made more explicit in May, when Psaki paired a request for platforms to "'stop amplifying untrustworthy content'" with a reminder that President Biden "'supports . . . a robust anti-trust program.'" 78 id., at 25170–25171 (emphasis deleted); May 5 Press Briefing; see also supra, at 9. The Government casts this reference to legal consequences as a defense of individual Americans against censorship by the platforms. See Reply Brief 9. But Psaki's full answer undermines that interpretation. Immediately after noting President Biden's support for antitrust enforcement, Psaki added, "So his view is that there's more that needs to be done to ensure that this type of . . . life-threatening information is not going out to the American public." May 5 Press Briefing. The natural interpretation is that the White House might retaliate if the platforms allowed free speech, not if they suppressed it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, in July, the White House asserted that the platforms "should be held accountable" for publishing misinformation. 61 Record 19400; see supra, at 11–13. The totality of this record—constant haranguing, dozens of demands for compliance, and references to potential consequences—evince "a scheme of state censorship." Bantam Books, 372 U. S., at 72.

2

The Government tries to spin these interactions as fairly benign. In its telling, Flaherty, Slavitt, and other officials merely "asked the platforms for information" and then "publicly and privately criticized the platforms for what the officials perceived as a . . . failure to live up to the platforms' commitments." Brief for Petitioners 31. References to consequences, the Government claims, were "fleeting and general" and "cannot plausibly be characterized as coercive threats." Id., at 32.

This characterization is not true to what happened. Slavitt and Flaherty did not simply ask Facebook for information. They browbeat the platform for months and made it clear that if it did not do more to combat what they saw as misinformation, it might be called to account for its shortcomings. And as for the supposedly "fleeting" nature of the numerous references to potential consequences, death threats can be very effective even if they are not delivered every day.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Government also defends the officials' actions on the ground that "[t]he President and his senior aides are entitled to speak out on such matters of pressing public concern." Reply Brief 11. According to the Government, the officials were simply using the President's "bully pulpit" to "inform, persuade, and protect the public." Brief for Petitioners 5, 24.

This argument introduces a new understanding of the term "bully pulpit," which was coined by President Theodore Roosevelt to denote a President's excellent (i.e., "bully"[25]) position (i.e., his "pulpit") to persuade the public.[26] But Flaherty, Slavitt, and other officials who emailed and telephoned Facebook were not speaking to the public from a figurative pulpit. On the contrary, they were engaged in a covert scheme of censorship that came to light only after the plaintiffs demanded their emails in discovery and a congressional Committee obtained them by subpoena. See Committee Report 1–2. If these communications represented the exercise of the bully pulpit, then everything that top federal officials say behind closed doors to any private citizen must also represent the exercise of the President's bully pulpit. That stretches the concept beyond the breaking point.

In any event, the Government is hard-pressed to find any prior example of the use of the bully pulpit to threaten censorship of private speech. The Government cites four instances in which past Presidents commented publicly about the performance of the media. President Reagan lauded the media for "tough reporting" on drugs. Reagan Presidential Library & Museum, Remarks to Media Executives at a

---

[25] Webster's International Dictionary of the English Language 191 (1902).

[26] See D. Goodwin, The Bully Pulpit: Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, and the Golden Age of Journalism, pp. xi–xii (2013) (Goodwin).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

White House Briefing on Drug Abuse (Mar. 7, 1988).[27] But he never threatened to do anything to media outlets that were soft on the issue of drugs. President Theodore Roosevelt "lambasted 'muck-raking' journalists" as "'one of the most potent forces for evil'" and encouraged journalists to speak truth, rather than slander. Brief for Petitioners 24 (quoting The American Presidency Project, Remarks at the Laying of the Cornerstone of the Office Building of the House of Representatives (Apr. 14, 1906)).[28] But his comment did not threaten any action against the muckrakers, see Goodwin 480–487, and it is unclear what he could have done to them. President George W. Bush denounced pornography as "debilitating" for "communities, marriages, families, and children." Presidential Proclamation No. 7725, 3 CFR 129 (2003 Comp.). But he never threatened to take action against pornography that was not "obscene" within the meaning of our precedents.

The Government's last example is a 1915 speech in which President Wilson deplored false reporting that the Japanese were using Turtle Bay, California, as a naval base. The American Presidency Project, Address at the Associated Press Luncheon in New York City (Apr. 20, 1915).[29] Speaking to a gathering of reporters, President Wilson proclaimed: "We ought not to permit that sort of thing to use up the electrical energy of the [telegraph] wires, because its energy is malign, its energy is not of the truth, its energy is mischief." Ibid. Wilson's comment is best understood as metaphorical and hortatory, not as a legal threat. And in any event, it is hard to see how he could have brought about censorship of telegraph companies because the Mann-

---

[27] https://www.reaganlibrary.gov/archives/speech/remarks-media-executives-white-house-briefing-drug-abuse.

[28] https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/remarks-the-laying-the-cornerstone-the-office-building-the-house-representatives-the-man.

[29] https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/address-the-associated-press-luncheon-new-york-city.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Elkins Act, enacted in 1910, deemed them to be common carriers, and that meant that they were obligated to transmit all messages regardless of content. See 36 Stat. 544–545; T. Wu, A Brief History of American Telecommunications Regulation, in 5 Oxford International Encyclopedia of Legal History 95 (2007). Thus, none of these examples justifies the conduct at issue here.

C

Finally, Facebook's responses to the officials' persistent inquiries, criticisms, and threats show that the platform perceived the statements as something more than mere recommendations. Time and time again, Facebook responded to an angry White House with a promise to do better in the future. In March, Facebook attempted to assuage the White House by acknowledging "[w]e obviously have work to do to gain your trust." 30 Record 9365. In April, Facebook promised to "more clearly respon[d] to [White House] questions." Id., at 9371. In May, Facebook "committed to addressing the defensive work around misinformation that you've called on us to address." 9 id., at 2698. In July, Facebook reached out to the Surgeon General after "the President's remarks about us" and emphasized its efforts "to better understand the scope of what the White House expects from us on misinformation going forward." Id., at 2690. And of course, as we have seen, Facebook repeatedly changed its policies to better address the White House's concerns. See supra, at 7, 10, 13.

The Government's primary response is that Facebook occasionally declined to take its suggestions. Reply Brief 11; see, e.g., supra, at 10. The implication is that Facebook must have chosen to undertake all of its anti-misinformation efforts entirely of its own accord.

That is bad logic, and in any event, the record shows otherwise. It is true that Facebook voluntarily undertook some anti-misinformation efforts and that it declined to make some requested policy changes. But the interactions recounted above unmistakably show that the White House was insistent that Facebook should do more than it was doing on its own, see, e.g., supra, at 11–12, and Facebook repeatedly yielded—even if it did not always give the White House everything it wanted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Internal Facebook emails paint a clear picture of subservience. The platform quickly realized that its "handling of [COVID] misinformation" was "importan[t]" to the White House, so it looked for ways "to be viewed as a trusted, transparent partner" and "avoid . . . public spat[s]." Committee Report 181, 184, 188. After the White House blamed Facebook for aiding an insurrection, the platform realized that it was at a "crossroads . . . with the White House." Id., at 294. "Given what is at stake here," one Facebook employee proposed reevaluating the company's "internal methods" to "see what further steps we may/may not be able to take." Id., at 295. This reevaluation led to one of Facebook's policy changes. See supra, at 8–10.

Facebook again took stock of its relationship with the White House after the President's accusation that it was "killing people." Internally, Facebook saw little merit in many of the White House's critiques. One employee labeled the White House's understanding of misinformation "completely unclear" and speculated that "it's convenient for them to blame us" "when the vaccination campaign isn't going as hoped." Committee Report 473. Nonetheless, Facebook figured that its "current course" of "in effect explaining ourselves more fully, but not shifting on where we draw the lines," is "a recipe for protracted and increasing acrimony with the [White House]." Id., at 573. "Given the bigger fish we have to fry with the Administration," such as the EU-U. S. dispute over "data flows," that did not "seem like a great place" for Facebook-White House relations "to be." Ibid. So the platform was motivated to "explore some moves that we can make to show that we are trying to be responsive." Ibid. That brainstorming resulted in the August 2021 rule changes. See supra, at 13, 19–20.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In sum, the officials wielded potent authority. Their communications with Facebook were virtual demands. And Facebook's quavering responses to those demands show that it felt a strong need to yield.

For these reasons, I would hold that Hines is likely to prevail on her claim that the White House coerced Facebook into censoring her speech.

* * *

For months, high-ranking Government officials placed unrelenting pressure on Facebook to suppress Americans' free speech. Because the Court unjustifiably refuses to address this serious threat to the First Amendment, I respectfully dissent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/28/2024 9:32:15 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: This Week in Democracy

This Week in Democracy

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- CNN hosted the first presidential debate of the year between President Biden and former President Trump. When the questions turned to democracy, Trump lied about the Jan. 6 attack and refused to commit to accepting the results of the November election. Biden, at a Friday rally in North Carolina, acknowledged the post-debate reaction to his performance and emphasized that this election is about larger issues. "The choice in this election is simple," he said. "Donald Trump will destroy our democracy."

- The U.S. Supreme Court on Friday ruled that one of the charges levied against hundreds of Jan. 6 defendants—including Trump—should be reconsidered by a lower court. The charges will not be immediately dismissed but could affect both ongoing and previously decided cases.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- The U.S. Supreme Court denied Steve Bannon's request to delay the prison sentence he is facing after being convicted for defying a subpoena from the House Jan. 6 Committee. He must report to prison by July 1.

- In New York, Justice Juan Merchan partially lifted Trump's gag order. The former president can now talk about the jury and witnesses in his criminal hush money trial but is still barred from disclosing the identities of individual jurors. Trump is also prohibited from commenting about court staff, prosecutors, or their families. The order will remain in effect until Trump's sentencing, which is scheduled for July 11.

- States United released an updated guide to social media platforms' policies about election mis- and disinformation. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled on Wednesday that the government can contact social media companies to request that misinformation be removed.

➞ READ: Our guide to social media policies

Celebrating Pride Month

During Pride Month, we recognize that LGBTQ+ Americans' contributions in our communities, at the ballot box, and in elected office are vital to our democracy.

This year, for the first time ever, there is at least one out LGBTQ+ elected official in every state and Washington, D.C., according to recent research. And 94 percent of LGBTQ+ registered voters said they were either "definitely" or "probably" going to vote this November, according to a March survey.

Our democracy is at its best when all of us, no matter who we love or how we identify, can make our voice heard. A more inclusive democracy is something we can all take pride in.

In the News

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- PBS NewsHour: How right-wing disinformation is fueling conspiracy theories about the 2024 election

- The Washington Post: Pro-Trump extremists are sure he will win. That could be dangerous.

- The Washington Post: Trump allies test a new strategy for blocking election results

- The Washington Post (Opinion): Election denialism isn't gone. Trump's backers are probing for weaknesses.

- The New York Times: Trump Allies Begin First Line of Attack Against Arizona Election Case

- Arizona's Family: Arizona GOP official threatens to lynch Maricopa County Recorder Stephen Richer

- Arizona Mirror: Another attempt by Lake and Finchem to revive their tabulator case was dismissed

- The Detroit News: Ex-Michigan GOP chair asks Court of Appeals to overturn her ouster

- Votebeat Pennsylvania: Right-wing group targets errors in Pennsylvania voter registration records

- Nevada Current: Appeal not Nevada attorney general's only option for pursuing fake electors

Recommended Reading

Joyce Vance, a former U.S. Attorney and member of States United's Bipartisan Advisory Board, interviewed States United CEO Joanna Lydgate for the latest installment of Five Questions, a special feature of her newsletter, Civil Discourse. The two discussed Project 2025, Trump's plan to remake the federal government if he wins. You can read the conversation here and subscribe to Civil Discourse for more here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States United DEMOCRACY CENTER

Five Questions about Project 2025 with Joanna Lydgate, CEO of States United

From Civil Discourse with Joyce Vance

Donate

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit

Our mailing address is:
States United Democracy Center
1101 17th St NW
Suite 250
Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Madeline Breeden [madeline@statesuniteddemocracy.org] on behalf of Janae Steggall [janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/2/2025 2:11:54 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Caroline Chambers [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Grossi, Christina [GrossiC1@michigan.gov]; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Katherine Reisner [katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zoe Chernicoff [Zoe@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Anderson, Christina (MDOS) [AndersonC42@michigan.gov]; Benander, Angela (MDOS) [BenanderA1@michigan.gov]; Hardmon, Cheri (MDOS) [HardmonC@michigan.gov]; Edevbie, Aghogho (MDOS) [EdevbieA@michigan.gov]; Craine, Khyla (MDOS) [CraineK@michigan.gov]; El-Sulayman, Halima (MDOS) [ElSulaymanH1@michigan.gov]; Caroline O'Leary [carolineo@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Barbara (AG) [teszlewiczb@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Rollow, Jake (MDOS) [RollowJ@michigan.gov]; Sargent, Aubrey (AG) [SargentA1@michigan.gov]; Sharon Song [sharon@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS) [SittsJ@michigan.gov]; Aboona, Rebecca (AG) [AboonaR1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn1@michigan.gov; Nassim Alisobhani [nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Edward Medrano [edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Madeline Breeden [madeline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sally Marsh [Sally@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Bush, Kimberly (AG) [BushK2@michigan.gov]; Wimmer, Daniel (AG) [WimmerD2@michigan.gov]; Leddy, Robert [LeddyR@michigan.gov]; Lizzie Ulmer [lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]

Subject: Canceled: Research Update
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 1/2/2025 5:00:00 PM
End: 1/2/2025 5:30:00 PM
Show Time As: Free

Importance: High

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Pulling down today's meeting!

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: States United Democracy Center [info@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/3/2025 8:25:03 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Mike Check

Mike Check

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

States United Democracy Center

States United Action

This Week in Democracy

- Mike Johnson survived a close vote and held on to his job as House speaker. Today is the opening day of the 119th Congress, which includes some members who are making history.

➞ EXPLORE: Election Denial in Congress

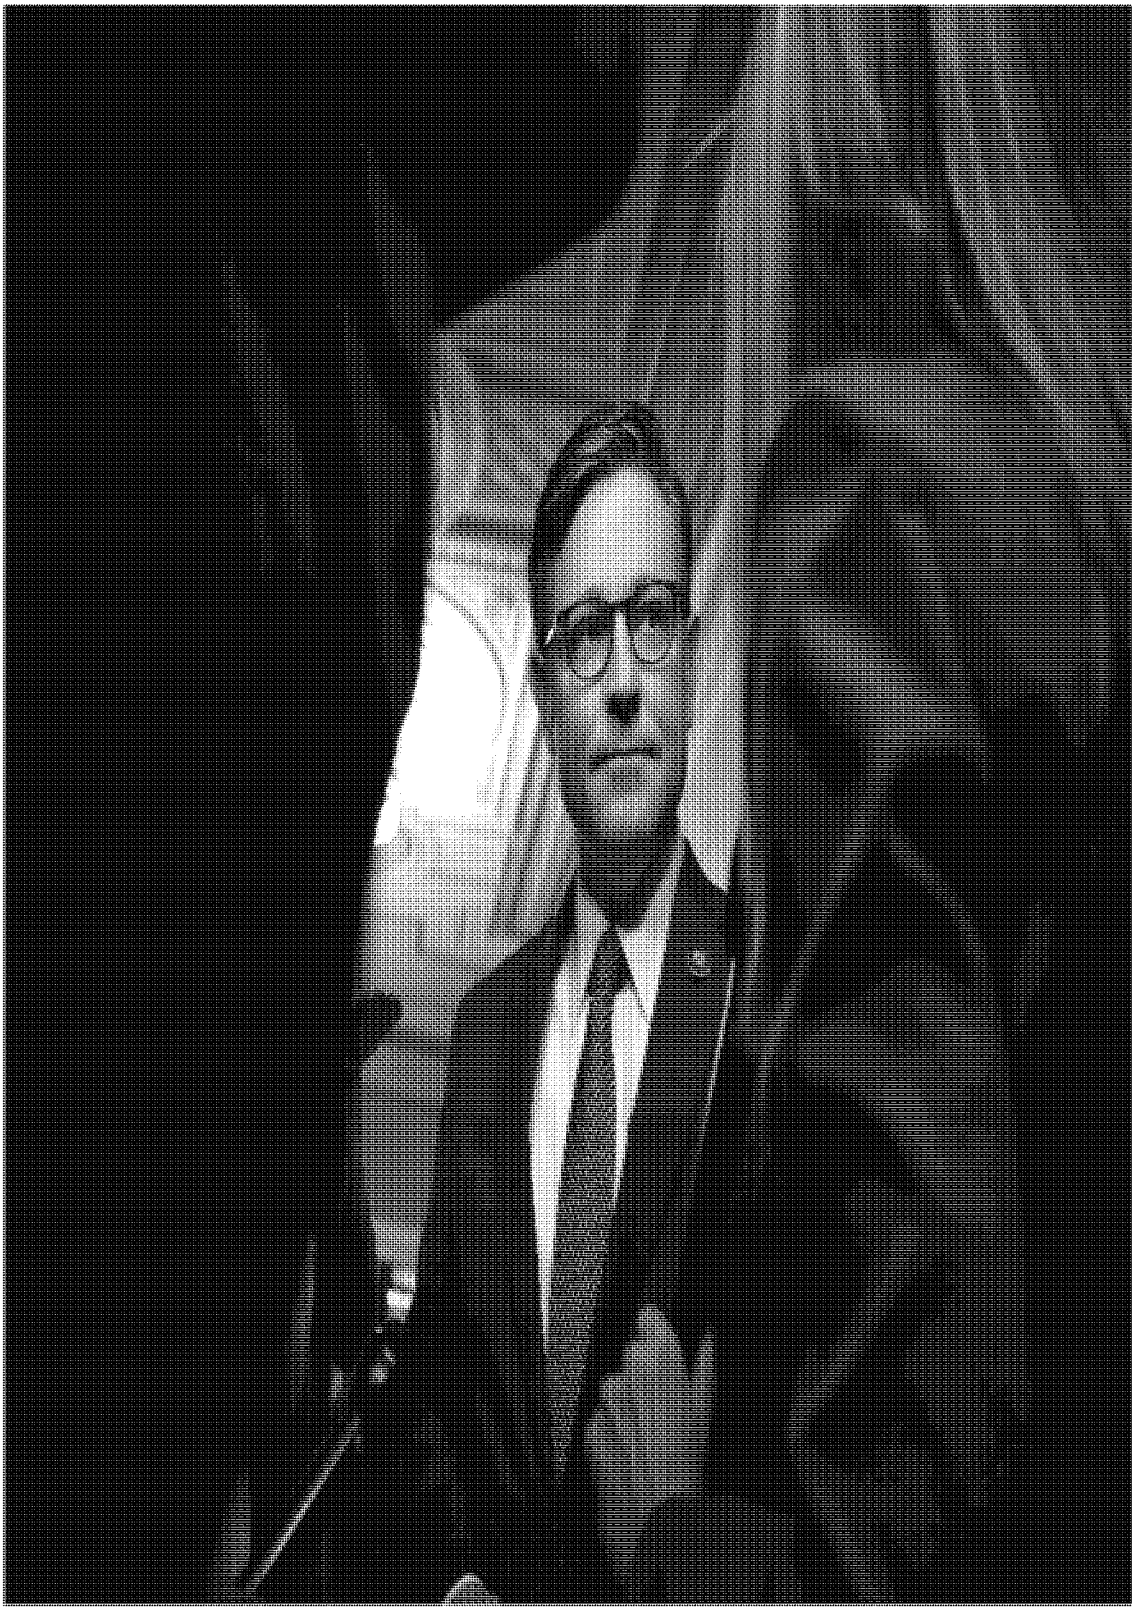
- The new Congress will gather for a joint session next Monday to count the electoral votes and certify Donald Trump's presidential victory. The day will mark four years since the Jan. 6, 2021, Capitol attack, when the peaceful transfer of power was interrupted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Strict security protections will be in place for the electoral count, former President Jimmy Carter's state funeral on Jan. 9, and Trump's inauguration on Jan. 20. Law enforcement leaders reassured the public about those protections after the terror attack in New Orleans.

- The bipartisan leaders of the House committee that investigated the 2021 Capitol attack, Rep. Bennie Thompson and former Rep. Liz Cheney, were awarded the Presidential Citizens Medal, one of the country's highest civilian honors.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



Speaker Mike Johnson (Justin Sullivan/Getty Images)

State of the States

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Pennsylvania, a court sided with the Commonwealth in a dispute over one county's handling of its voting machines. In 2021, two Fulton County commissioners allowed an outside vendor to examine the county's voting machines, part of a fruitless attempt to find fraud in the 2020 election. The state's top election official later decertified the machines, citing security concerns, and notified the county that the outside inspection had broken state law. The Commonwealth Court ruled this week that the Commonwealth has the power to prohibit counties from allowing unauthorized outside access to voting equipment.

In the News

- The New York Times: Giuliani, Slow to Hand Over Assets, Appears in Court to Answer to Judge
- NBC News: Trump's criminal cases fading away, but some legal perils still loom in 2025
- NBC Washington: D.C. tightens security after New Orleans attack, before Carter funeral and inauguration
- The Guardian: What did U.S. election officials learn about our democracy from 2024's vote?
- WSB: Georgia election law's provisions on unhoused voters, absentee ballot storage take effect
- The Associated Press: Arizona official who delayed county's 2022 election certification didn't have immunity, court says
- AP: Court sides with state over Pennsylvania county's handling of voting machines after 2020 election
- ABC News: Special counsel Jack Smith withdraws from appeal of classified docs case against Trump's co-defendants

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Donate

Your tax-exempt donation will support States United Democracy Center's work to empower the state and local leaders who safeguard our democracy.

Follow States United on LinkedIn, Facebook, and X to stay up to date!

About the States United Democracy Center

The States United Democracy Center is a nonpartisan organization advancing free, fair, and secure elections. We focus on connecting state officials, law enforcement leaders, and pro-democracy partners across America with the tools and expertise they need to safeguard our democracy. We are more than a think tank—we are an action tank. And together, we are committed to making sure every vote is counted, every voice is heard, and every election is safe. To learn more, visit [illegible].

About States United Action

States United Action is a nonpartisan section 501(c)(4) nonprofit organization with a mission to protect our elections and our democracy. States United Action advocates for policies that protect election integrity, hold democracy violators accountable, and prevent political violence that threatens to undermine the will of the American people, and amplifies the voices of state leaders and law enforcement leaders who share these values. To learn more, visit [illegible].

Our mailing address is:
States United Democracy Center
1101 17th St NW
Suite 250
Washington, DC 20036

Add us to your address book

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/19/2023 6:32:26 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: admissions
Attachments: 20230919143003.pdf

Let me know if these are ok.

H

From: MeingastH@michigan.gov <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 2:30 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Scan To Me

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN

APPLICANT/REGISTRANT NAME: Jonathan L. Williams

DATED

SIGNATURE OF APPLICANT/REGISTRANT

STATEMENT OF SPONSORING ATTORNEY
IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR ADMISSION

[To be completed only if applying for admission] Statement of a sponsoring attorney of the Bar of this court, stating when the sponsoring attorney was admitted to practice in this court, under what circumstances the attorney has known the applicant, that the attorney knows the applicant to be of good character and reputation, and that the attorney believes the applicant to be well qualified as a member of the Bar of this court. For applicants residing in another state, the sponsor may be a judge of a court of record of that state, or a federal judge.

I was admitted to practice in this Court on March 10, 2000. I have known Mr. Williams for approximately one year in connection with his work on election- and other government-related areas of law. I know Mr. Williams to be of good character and reputation and believe him to be well qualified as a member of the Bar of this Court.

Heather Meingast
SPONSORING ATTORNEY'S NAME

Heather S. Meingast
SIGNATURE OF SPONSORING ATTORNEY OR JUDGE

9-19-23
DATED

P55439
STATE BAR I.D. NO.

☐ I am newly admitted to the State Bar of _____ and request a waiver of the sponsorship requirement. [One year or less from time of application.] No other waivers will be granted except in extraordinary circumstances.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN

Declaration of Sponsor

Sponsor Information
Full Name:	Heather S. Meingast
Firm Name:	Michigan Department of the Attorney General
Street Address:	525 West Ottawa Street
Apartment or Suite:
City, State and Zip:	Lansing, MI 48906
Country:	USA
Phone Number:	517-335-7659
Email Address:	MeingastH@michigan.gov

Please select the reason this Declaration of Sponsor is being submitted.
If neither reason applies, this form is NOT required and should NOT be submitted to the Court.

☑ Oath performed remotely via telephone or video conference –LR 83.20(d)(4).

☐ Declaration of Disciplinary Issues – LR 83.20(c)(2).

Declaration

I, the above-named sponsor, state that:

a) I am currently a member in good standing of the bar of this Court.

b) That I have known the applicant, Jonathan L. Williams, personally for 1 years 0 months.

c) That the applicant has engaged in the practice of law as follows:

Mr. Williams has practiced law for 14 years, with a focus on litigation and government-related law.

d) The applicant is of good character and reputation and is qualified to practice as a member of the bar of this Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the above is true and correct.

Heather S Meingast — Signature of Sponsor

9-19-23 — Date

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/18/2023 6:12:59 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Michigan law on unqualified presidential candidates

Thanks!

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, September 18, 2023 9:15 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Michigan law on unqualified presidential candidates

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

This memo is a companion to the memo on disqualification under the Fourteenth Amendment that I shared with you Friday. Please let me know if you'd like to discuss. We'd be happy to develop any of these issues further and assist defense of any litigation related to these issues.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/22/2023 7:00:14 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Call re Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) -PRIVILEGED

Ok, sounds good.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 22, 2023 2:59 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Call re Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) --PRIVILEGED

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

I'll call you then. Teams is not behaving for me lately.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, September 22, 2023 at 2:58 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Call re Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) -PRIVILEGED

How about 2:30?

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 22, 2023 2:55 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Call re Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) RIVILEGED

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Today's gotten away from me. Is there a good time Monday to talk abou Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) I'm available any time other than 1130-1230 and 130-2. Have a great weekend!

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/25/2023 6:47:24 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: FW: Castro v Benson & Trump - pro se complaint filed 8/31
Attachments: 20230831 Verified Cmplnt.pdf

Importance: High

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:56 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) <BraterJ@michigan.gov>; Fracassi, Adam (MDOS) <FracassiA@michigan.gov>; McInerney, Jenny (MDOS) <McInerneyJ1@michigan.gov>; Bourbonais, Lori (MDOS) <bourbonaisl@michigan.gov>; Schaar, Meghan (MDOS) <SchaarM1@michigan.gov>; Lillie, Erin (MDOS) <LillieE@michigan.gov>
Cc: Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Castro v Benson & Trump - pro se complaint filed 8/31
Importance: High

Hi All,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

From: AG-NOI <AG-NOI@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:20 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>
Subject: FW: Copies of Complaints per MCL 600.6434 (case 23-000114-MZ through 23-000123-MP)

From: Angela Davis <ADavis@courts.mi.gov>
Sent: Thursday, September 7, 2023 11:07 AM
To: AG-NOI <AG-NOI@michigan.gov>
Subject: Copies of Complaints per MCL 600.6434 (case 23-000114-MZ through 23-000123-MP)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good Afternoon,

Attached are recently processed complaints that were filed in the Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Please note that case #23-000117-MZ is purposefully omitted as the complaint was never filed in this matter. Also, cases #23-000118-MK and #23-000121-MZ are transfer cases. A copy of the complaint in each case when they are received by the Court of Claims.

Have a nice day,

Angela

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO
12 Park Place, Mansfield, TX 76063

Plaintiff,

v.

SECRETARY OF STATE, JOCELYN BENSON
430 W. Allegan Street, Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor, Lansing, MI 48918

DONALD J. TRUMP
1100 S. Ocean Blvd, Palm Beach, FL 33480

Defendants.

Case No. 23-000122-MZ

Brock A. Swartzle

VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. CLAIM FOR RELIEF 3

II. MORE DEFINITIVE STATEMENTS AND ANALYSES 5

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

aff'd, No. 12-5335, 2013 WL 1164506 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 11, 2013) 5
Butler, 2 Bart. El. Cas. 461 (1868) 13
Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 90, 92-94, (C.C.D. Va. 1867) (No. 3,621a) 15
Citizens for Resp. & Ethics in Washington v. Trump, 939 F.3d 131, 143 (2d Cir. 2019) 7
Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010) 6
Fulani v. Brady, 935 F.2d 1324, 1327-28 (D.C. Cir. 1991) 5
Fulani v. League, 882 F.2d 621 (2d Cir. 1989) 6
Gottlieb v. FEC, 143 F.3d 618, 621 (D.C. Cir. 1998) 5
Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) 14
Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) 15
Hassan v. FEC, 893 F. Supp. 2d 248, 255 (D.D.C. 2012) 5
In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) 11
J.G. Randall, The Civil War and Reconstruction 707 (1937) (first omission in original) 11
La. Energy and Power Auth. v. FERC, 141 F.3d 364, 367 (D.C. Cir. 1998) 6
Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118 (2014) 7
McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 107 6
McKee v. Young, 2 Bart. El. Cas. 422 (1868) 11
Mendoza v. Perez, 754 F.3d 1002, 1011 (D.C. Cir. 2014) 6
New World Radio, Inc. v. FCC, 294 F.3d 164, 170 (D.C. Cir. 2002) 5
Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969) 16
Public Citizen v. FEC, 788 F.3d 312 (DC Cir. 2015). 7
Shays v. FEC, 414 F.3d 76, 83 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). 2, 5
Shays v. FEC, 414 F.3d 76, 87 (D.C. Cir. 2005) 4, 5
Sherley v. Sebelius, 610 F.3d 69, 72–73 (D.C. Cir. 2010) 6
Tanzin v. Tanvir, 141 S. Ct. 486, 491 (2020) 9
U.S. v. Powell, 65 N.C. 709 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871) 9, 14
U.S. v. Powell, 65 N.C. 709 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871). 16

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

TO THE HONORABLE COURT:

Plaintiff, JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO, appearing pro se, files this Complaint for Injunctive Relief against Defendants Secretary of State and Donald John Trump and alleges as follows:

I. CLAIM FOR RELIEF

SHORT & PLAIN STATEMENT SHOWING JURISDICTION

1. Because this cause of action seeks injunctive relief against the Secretary of State in the officer holder's official capacity, this Court has jurisdiction.

PARTIES

2. Plaintiff John Anthony Castro is a U.S. citizen and Republican primary presidential candidate (Candidate FEC ID Number P40007320) for the 2024 Presidential Election who currently resides at 12 Park Place in Mansfield, Texas.

3. Defendant Secretary of State is a representative of the state being sued in official capacity. Secretary of State can be found at 430 W. Allegan Street, Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor, Lansing, MI 48918.

4. Defendant Donald John Trump is a U.S. citizen and Republican primary presidential candidate (Candidate FEC ID Number P80001571) for the 2024 Presidential Election who currently resides at 1100 South Ocean Boulevard in West Palm Beach, Florida.

5. Defendant Donald John Trump is a nominal defendant.

SHORT & PLAIN STATEMENT SHOWING ENTITLEMENT TO RELIEF

6. Section 3 of the 14th Amendment creates an implied cause of action for a fellow candidate to obtain relief for a political competitive injury by challenging another candidate's constitutional eligibility on the grounds that they engaged in or provided "aid or comfort" to an insurrection.

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7. On September 29, 2020, then Commander-in-Chief of the United States Armed Forces issued an executive military order to a paramilitary organization known as the Proud Boys that was led by Chairman Enrique Tarrio.

8. On January 6, 2021, after witnessing a large group of Trump supporters violently attacking the United States Capitol to prevent the lawful certification of the 2020 election results with the goal of unlawfully compelling Donald John Trump's inauguration on January 20, 2021 (hereafter referred to as the "January 6th Insurrection"), Defendant Donald John Trump stated on live television, "we love you, you're very special" to the insurrectionists. Defendant Donald John Trump provided the insurrectionists with comfort in the form of words of sympathy.

9. On January 29, 2022, Defendant Donald John Trump publicly stated, "If I run and if I win, we will treat those people from January 6 fairly. We will treat them fairly. And if it requires pardons, we will give them pardons." Defendant Donald John Trump promised the insurrectionists aid in the form of executive pardons for their criminal attempt to unlawfully overturn the 2020 election results.

10. On May 4, 2023, Proud Boys Chairman Enrique Tarrio was convicted of Seditious Conspiracy. Sedition and Insurrection are synonymous terms. In effect, Enrique Tarrio, the individual to whom Defendant Donald John Trump issued an executive military order, was convicted of conspiracy to commit an insurrection.

11. Based on these instances and other acts of ratification of the acts of and sympathy with the convicted criminals of the January 6th Insurrection, Defendant Donald John Trump provided "aid or comfort" to an insurrection in violation of Section 3 of the

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and is, therefore, constitutionally ineligible to pursue or hold any public office in the United States.

12. Because Plaintiff is a fellow FEC-registered Republican primary candidate, Plaintiff will suffer an injury that may be redressed by the judiciary with injunctive relief.

DEMAND FOR RELIEF

13. Plaintiff John Anthony Castro asks this Court to issue an injunction preventing Defendant Secretary of State from accepting and/or processing Defendant Donald John Trump's ballot access documentation, including, but not limited to, nominating papers and nominating petitions.

14. Plaintiff requests any other relief he may be entitled to at law or equity.

II. MORE DEFINITIVE STATEMENTS AND ANALYSES

15. The framers of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment intended the constitutional provision to be both self-executing and to provide a cause of action. More specifically, the Union sought to punish the insurrectionary Confederacy by making their ability to hold public office unconstitutional. The framers did this with the specific intent of removing the more politically popular insurrectionists from the ballot since they violated their oaths of allegiance to the U.S. Constitution and the use of peaceful political mechanisms to non-violently resolve disputes.

PLAINTIFF'S STANDING TO BRING SUIT

16. To establish standing, a plaintiff must show that it has suffered an "injury in fact caused by the challenged conduct and redressable through relief sought from the court."[1]

17. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has explained that political competitor standing is akin to economic competitor standing, whereby a plaintiff has standing to challenge a government action that benefits a plaintiff's competitor to the detriment of the plaintiff.[2] Political competitor standing, however, is only available to plaintiffs who can show that they "personally compete[] in the same arena with the same party to whom the government has bestowed the assertedly illegal benefit."[3] The D.C. Circuit has also held that if a plaintiff can show he is a "direct and current competitor," then competitor standing must be recognized as a matter of established case law.[4] Courts have recognized that a "candidate—as opposed to individual voters and political action groups—would theoretically have standing based upon a 'competitive injury'" if he could show that "he personally competes in the same arena with the same party."[5]

[1] Shays v. FEC, 414 F.3d 76, 83 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (citation omitted).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

18. John Anthony Castro registered as a candidate with the Federal Election Commission and is directly and currently competing against Donald J. Trump for the Republican nomination for the Presidency of the United States. As such, Plaintiff meets all of the criteria for standing.

19. A fellow primary candidate, whose injury would be competitive injury in the form of a diminution of votes and/or fundraising, has judicial standing to sue a candidate he or she believes is ineligible to hold office.[6]

20. Plaintiff will suffer a concrete competitive injury if the constitutionally

---

[2] See Shays v. FEC, 414 F.3d 76, 87 (D.C. Cir. 2005).
[3] Gottlieb v. FEC, 143 F.3d 618, 621 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Fulani v. Brady, 935 F.2d 1324, 1327-28 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (holding that presidential candidate did not have "competitor standing" to challenge CPD's tax-exempt status where the candidate was not eligible for tax-exempt status); Hassan v. FEC, 893 F. Supp. 2d 248, 255 (D.D.C. 2012), aff'd, No. 12-5335, 2013 WL 1164506 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 11, 2013) ("Plaintiff cannot show that he personally competes in the same arena with candidates who receive funding under the Fund Act because he has not shown that he is or imminently will be eligible for that funding.").
[4] New World Radio, Inc. v. FCC, 294 F.3d 164, 170 (D.C. Cir. 2002)
[5] Hassan v. FEC, 893 F. Supp. 2d 248, 255 n.6 (D.D.C. 2012) (emphases added) (quoting Gottlieb, 143 F.3d at 621)
[6] See Fulani v. League, 882 F.2d 621 (2d Cir. 1989).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ineligible Defendant Donald John Trump is permitted to appear on the ballot.[7] If the judiciary permits Defendant Donald John Trump to appear on the ballot, this will siphon off millions of votes to a constitutionally ineligible candidate in violation of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. There is no question this political competitive injury is traceable to the actual competitor, Donald J. Trump.

21. Plaintiff understands that the competitor standing doctrine recognizes "parties suffer constitutional injury in fact when agencies… otherwise allow increased competition."[8] In accordance with the D.C. Circuit's ruling in Mendoza v. Perez, Plaintiff will suffer a constitutional injury in fact sufficient to confer Article III standing.[9]

22. When Section 3 of the 14th Amendment was adopted, it was specifically designed to ensure that non-insurrectionists did not have to politically compete with the more popular pro-insurrectionist politicians in the South. It was specifically designed to remove overwhelming popular pro-insurrectionists from the ballot. As such, Plaintiff is not simply within the zone of interests; Plaintiff is the precise type of person Section 3 of the 14th Amendment sought to protect.

23. Although the U.S. Supreme Court arguably abolished the doctrine of prudential standing in Lexmark,[10] Plaintiff satisfies prudential standing in that his injury is particularized and concrete, he satisfies Article III standing, and he is within the zone of interests sought to be protected by Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.[11]

24. Allowing Defendant Donald John Trump to appear on the ballot would constitute unlawful state action in violation of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment of the United States

---

[7] See McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 107, overruled on other grounds by Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010).
[8] See Mendoza v. Perez, 754 F.3d 1002, 1011 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (citing to La. Energy and Power Auth. v. FERC, 141 F.3d 364, 367 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Sherley v. Sebelius, 610 F.3d 69, 72–73 (D.C. Cir. 2010)).
[9] Mendoza v. Perez, 754 F.3d 1002 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
[10] Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118 (2014)
[11] Public Citizen v. FEC, 788 F.3d 312 (DC Cir. 2015).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution.[12]

RELEVANT LAW & LEGAL ANALYSIS

25. Defendant Donald John Trump is a declared candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency of the United States for the 2024 election season.

26. Article II, Section 1 of the United States Constitution states that any person who enters the Office of the President of the United States of America shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

27. Since the founding of our nation, those who assume civil or military positions under federal or state law are required to take an oath and thereby state that they will defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

28. Taking the side of a foreign enemy is covered by the Treason Clause in Article III, Section 3, Clause 1 of the United States Constitution. It states: "Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort."

29. The Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause in Section 3 of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution covers taking the side of a domestic enemy.

Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause

30. Section 3 of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution is best described as the Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause. It establishes that, in order to be eligible to hold any office in the United States, a person must have never violated an Oath of Office, which always includes a pledge to support the United States Constitution.

[12] See Citizens for Resp. & Ethics in Washington v. Trump, 939 F.3d 131, 143 (2d Cir. 2019).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

31. The Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause in Section 3 of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution states that "[n]o person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."

Amendment XIV, Section 3, Clause 1

32. Clause 1 of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution reads: "No person shall… hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath… to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof."

33. The word "engaged" for the purpose of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment "implies, and was intended to imply, a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection… And further, the… action must spring from [a] want of sympathy with the insurrectionary movement."[13]

34. As the U.S. Supreme Court has articulated, "[w]ithout a statutory definition, [one must] turn to the phrase's plain meaning."[14]

35. Merriam-Webster's Dictionary defines an "insurrection" to be "an act or instance

[13] See U.S. v. Powell, 65 N.C. 709 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871).
[14] See Tanzin v. Tanvir, 141 S. Ct. 486, 491 (2020) (thereafter referencing Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary for the plain meaning of a term).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of revolting against civil authority or an established government." An instance is "a step, stage, or situation viewed as part of a process or series of events." Participation in the early or late stages of an event still constitute "an instance." This would apply to the wife of United States Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, Virginia Thomas, requiring Justice Thomas' mandatory recusal under 28 U.S.C. § 455, which Plaintiff asserts herein to preserve for appeal.

36. Of the term "revolting," Merriam-Webster says "to renounce… subjection." Renounce is to "refuse to follow, obey, or recognize." Subjection is being "placed under authority." Thus, an insurrection include all stages of the event wherein at at least one stage there was a refusal to recognize the authority of an established governmental body, such as the United States Senate and its ceremonial reading of the certified election results and engaging in violence to undermine both that process and the United States Constitution.

37. Defendant Donald John Trump summoned the mob to our nation's Capitol, organized and assembled the mob, allowed weapons in the crowd by ordering security to let them pass, radicalized the mob with incendiary rhetoric, ordered them to march to the Capitol, refused to make public statements to denounce the violence and call off the mob for 187 minutes, and when it became clear that the mob had failed to use violence to prevent the certification of the election results, then and only then, did former President Donald J. Trump order the mob to go home, but not before saying "we love you" and calling the violent mob "very special" after they had violently attacked the United States Capitol. All of these instances were part of the overall January 6 Insurrection in which Donald J. Trump was directly and irrefutably involved.

38. Clause 1 of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the United States

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution declares that anyone deemed to have engaged in insurrection are "enemies." However, less focus is given to the fact that Section 3 similarly disqualifies those who have given "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists.

39. "Aid or comfort may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion, from one occupying an influential position."[15]

40. There is a distinction between domestic "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists and foreign "aid and comfort" to invaders. This was highlighted by President Andrew Johnson's comments to a New Hampshire delegation that "Treason is a crime and must be punished as a crime… It must not be excused as an unsuccessful rebellion."[16] It was later reasoned that if "insurrection and levying war was accepted as treason, hundreds of thousands of men, most of them youths, were guilty of the offense that carried a mandatory sentence of death by hanging."[17] "To the Congress, the old law was unworkable for the [Civil War]… [thus, on] July 31, 1861, Congress passed a law which provided that anyone found guilty of conspiracy to overthrow the United States Government or to interfere with the operation of its laws shall be guilty of a high crime."[18]

41. "The offenses for which exclusion from office is denounced are not merely engaging in insurrection… but the giving of aid or comfort to their enemies."[19] In that case, Judge Chase, whom himself was balancing his need for impartiality with his desire to pursue the Presidency, insinuated that the inclusion of the "aid or comfort" disqualifier in Section 3 of the 14th Amendment applied only in the context of a foreign invasion or war. Judge Chase was an

---

[15] McKee v. Young, 2 Bart. El. Cas. 422 (1868).
[16] See J.G. Randall, The Civil War and Reconstruction 707 (1937) (first omission in original).
[17] See Jonathan Truman Dorris, Pardon and Amnesty Under Lincoln and Johnson – The Restoration of the Confederates to Their Rights and Privileges 1861-1898, at 4 (1953).
[18] See C. Ellen Connally, The Use of the Fourteenth Amendment by Salmon P. Chase in the Trial of Jefferson Davis, 42 Akron L. Rev. 1165, 1165 (2009).
[19] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

abolitionist but still an ambitious and aspiring politician who considered campaigning for the Presidency and did not want to upset the South by declaring that the reference in Section 3 to "enemies" applied to the insurrectionists and rebels that fought for the Confederacy. Giving "aid and comfort" to foreign enemies was already covered by the Treason Clause in Article III, Section 3, Clause 1 of the United States Constitution. Section 3 of the 14th Amendment, being a post-civil war amendment, was referring solely to domestic enemies that engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States and had previously given an oath to support the Constitution; thereby only targeting higher-level officials that are required to take oaths.

42. This is supported by the fact that the "final version of Section 3 reflected a refinement of the radicals' philosophy of formal equality. Opposition to the broader House proposal arose in part from the widespread view that many Confederate soldiers, even if not conscripted, had little real choice but to join the Southern cause. In that light, the final version of Section 3 was not less punitive so much as it was more targeted. Whereas the House version promised to affect the rank and file, the Senate version would reach only the senior leadership. Moreover, the Senate version was, in important ways, harsher than the House version. The House measure would have sunset in 1870 and applied only to federal elections. By contrast, the final version [of Section 3] permanently rendered virtually the entire political leadership of the South ineligible for office, both state and federal. The final version of Section 3 thus reflected a nuanced view: as compared with felons, Confederate officials were more deserving of punishment and Southern foot soldiers were less so."[20]

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

43. Every federal, state, and local public official that offered words of encouragement, show of sympathy, or expression of support for or defense of, the January 6 Insurrection must, pursuant to Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution, be declared ineligible to hold any civil or military office in the United States at the federal, state, or local level.

Amendment XIV, Section 3, Clause 2

44. Clause 2 of Section 3 of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution reads: "Congress may, by a vote of two-third of each House, remove such disability." (Emphasis added).

45. Plaintiff emphasizes the Constitution's use of the term "each" since there appears to be widespread misconception that only the U.S. House of Representatives is needed to remove the disqualifying disability, which stems from the 1868 case of Butler.[21] Therefore, if 290 members of the U.S. House of Representatives and 67 members of the U.S. Senate vote to remove the disqualifying disability, a person otherwise ineligible to hold office under Section 3 of the 14th Amendment could hold office. In today's political climate, this is impossible.

46. It is also critical to anticipatorily highlight that a Presidential pardon does not remove this disability since the United States Constitution provides that only Congress may lift the disability. This is contrary to an old, outdated, and clearly biased Attorney General Opinion from Southern Confederate Augustus Garland that attempted to limit its scope; it inexplicably ignored the term "each" and suggested a presidential pardon could remove the qualification

[20] See Richard M. Re, Christopher M. Re, Voting and Vice: Criminal Disenfranchisement and the Reconstruction Amendments, 121 Yale L.J. 1584, 1622–23 (2012); also see Eric Foner, Reconstruction: America's Unfinished Revolution 1863-1877, at 259 (1988).
[21] See Butler, 2 Bart. El. Cas. 461 (1868).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disability notwithstanding the Constitution's clear and exclusive reservation and delegation of that power solely to Congress.[22]

Scope of Amendment XIV

47. The disqualification applies to both civil and military positions at both the federal and state level, which has been judicially determined to even include a local constable position.[23]

48. "There can be no office which is not either legislative, judicial, or executive [covered by Section 3 of the 14th Amendment because]… it embraces every office… [and] it was passed to punish those high in authority… for their bad faith toward the government they had sworn [in their oath of office] to support."[24]

49. "The amendment applies to all the states of the Union, to all offices under the United States or under any state, and to all persons in the category of prohibition, and for all time present and future."[25] It is a lifetime ban from public office.

50. As mentioned before, Section 3 of the 14th Amendment is merely an Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause. It was not intended to be a punishment for someone who engaged in an insurrection or gave aid or comfort to insurrectionists any more than the Natural Born Citizen qualification clause is punitive. If you are not a natural born citizen of the United States, you cannot hold the Office of the Presidency. If you violated your oath of office by engaging in an insurrection, you cannot hold the Office of the Presidency. It's a mere qualification for the office.

Enforcement of Amendment XIV

[22] See Lawton's Case, 18 Op.Atty.Gen. 149 (1885).
[23] See U.S. v. Powell, 65 N.C. 709 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871).
[24] Id.
[25] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

51. In an attempt to neutralize Section 3 of the 14th Amendment, some commentators dating as far back as 1868 developed the legal theory that this provision of the United States Constitution was unenforceable without enabling legislation. Such a suggestion is legally baseless, patently frivolous, and wholly without merit.

52. In fact, it was the President of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, who, in 1868, contended that Section 3 was self-executing and, therefore, barred his criminal trial for treason. See Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment. 87 (2021). Moreover, it was Judge Chase who agreed in Jefferson Davis' criminal trial that Section 3 was self-executing; thereby implicating the prohibition against Double Jeopardy.[26] Shortly thereafter, however, Justice Chase reversed his position and declared that Section 3 was not self-executing when a black criminal defendant challenged his conviction on the grounds that the judge presiding over his trial fought for the Confederacy and was, therefore, ineligible to preside over his trial rendering his guilty verdict null and void.[27] Following these irreconcilable rulings from a clearly biased Justice Chase who could not make up his mind, Congress decided to act on its own by enacting Section 3 enforcement statutes and, shortly thereafter, federal prosecutors began bringing actions to oust ineligible officials, including half of the Tennessee Supreme Court.[28] Congress' enactment of legislation was not an admission that Section 3 was not self-executing; it was to avoid the lunacy of a clearly biased, conflicted, and politically active Chief Justice that could not perform the functions of his office in a neutral, intellectual, fair, and impartial manner.

---

[26] See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 90, 92-94, (C.C.D. Va. 1867) (No. 3,621a) (describing Davis' argument and the Government's response); Id. at 102 (noting the Chief Justice's view).
[27] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).
[28] See Act of May 31, 1870 (First Ku Klux Klan Act), ch. 114, § 14, 16 Stat. 140, 143; id. at § 15 (imposing criminal penalties for knowing Section Three violations); Sam D. Elliott, When the United States Attorney Sued to Remove Half the Tennessee Supreme Court: The Quo Warranto Cases of 1870, 49 Tenn B.J. 20 (2013).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

53. In 1871, Amos Powell was indicted, via an enabling statute making it a crime to knowingly violate Section 3 of the 14th Amendment, "for accepting the office of sheriff when disqualified from holding office by the 14th Amendment… [and the] indictment charged that the defendant knowingly accepted office under the state of North Carolina, to which he was ineligible under the provisions of the 3d section of the 14th Amendment."[29] In other words, to attach criminal penalties, enabling legislation is absolutely required since Section 3 of the 14th Amendment makes no reference to criminal penalties.

54. Congress has jurisdiction to expel or exclude its own members that it determines have violated Section 3 of the 14th Amendment.[30] However, it is unclear whether Congress can unilaterally impose said disability on the Executive Branch since that could be deemed an encroachment on a separate branch of the federal government. Nevertheless, a Congressional finding of liability would certainly aid the judiciary's fact-finding mission.

55. Historically, the neutral finder of fact and arbiter of law has been the judiciary. Consistent with our principles of federalism and separation of powers, it is more likely that the judiciary and, in particular, the United States Supreme Court would be the only authority that the drafters of Section 3 could have possibly envisioned as being the most competent and legitimate body to determine whether an individual is ineligible under the Anti-Insurrection Qualification Clause.

[29] See U.S. v. Powell, 65 N.C. 709 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871).
[30] See Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Respectfully submitted

August 31, 2023.

By /s/John Anthony Castro

JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO
12 Park Place
Mansfield, TX 76063
Tel. (202) 594 - 4344
J.Castro@JohnCastro.com
PLAINTIFF PRO SE

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

VERIFICATION

I, John Anthony Castro, declare as follows:

1. I am the plaintiff in the present case, a U.S. citizen, and an FEC-registered Republican primary presidential candidate (Candidate FEC ID Number P40007320) for the 2024 Presidential Election.

2. I intend to appear on the 2024 Republican primary ballot in this state.

3. I have personal first-hand knowledge of all of the factual matters set forth in this document, and, if called upon to testify or give oral arguments, I would competently do so.

4. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746 and state, I verify under penalty of perjury that the entirety of the foregoing document is true and correct.

Executed on August 31, 2023.

/s/ John Anthony Castro
John Anthony Castro

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TrueFiling Case Initiation - Summons and Complaint

Case Title: JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO V. SECRETARY

Case Type: MZ

Case Description: Other Damage Suits: All other claims not otherwise coded

Party 1 (Plaintiff)

Name: John Anthony Castro Phone: (202) 594-4344

Address: 12 Park Place

City: Mansfield State: Texas Zip: 76063

Party is Pro Se

Party 2 (Defendant)

Business: Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson Phone: (888) 767-6424

Address: 430 W. Allegan Street Richard H. Austin Building - 4th Floor

City: Lansing State: Michigan Zip: 48918

Party is Pro Se

Party 3 (Defendant)

Name: Donald John Trump Phone:

Address: 1100 South Ocean Boulevard

City: Palm Beach State: Florida Zip: 33480

Party is Pro Se

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

Bundle Cover Sheet

Lower Court:	L Ct No.:	COC No.:
		TEMP-C8QJ3H9S

Case Title:
JOHN ANTHONY CASTRO v. SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON

Priority:	Filing Option:
NONE	File Only

Filer Information

Filer	Attorney
John Anthony Castro 12 Park Place Mansfield, TX 76063 J.Castro@JohnCastro.com	John Anthony Castro, PRO PER() 12 Park Place Mansfield, TX 76063 J.Castro@JohnCastro.com

Filing Summary

Filing Type	Filing Name		Fee
Summons and Complaint	Complaint for Injunctive Relief		$150.00
		eFiling System Fee:	$25.00
		NON-REFUNDABLE Automated Payment Service Fee:	$5.25
		Total:	$180.25

Alternate Payment Reason: None

RECEIVED by MCOC 8/31/2023 1:03:51 PM

The document(s) listed above were electronically filed with the Michigan Court of Claims.

TEMP-C8QJ3H9S-35902702

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/19/2023 6:44:07 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) PRIVILEGED

Jonathan, the memo refers to a 9/15/23 memo. Do I have that somewhere already?

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 15, 2023 3:30 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h) -- PRIVILEGED

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Please let me know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/25/2023 7:29:37 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Castro v Benson & Trump - pro se complaint filed 8/31

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, September 25, 2023 3:23 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, September 25, 2023 at 2:47 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: FW: Castro v Benson & Trump - pro se complaint filed 8/31

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:56 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>; Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) <BraterJ@michigan.gov>; Fracassi, Adam (MDOS) <FracassiA@michigan.gov>; McInerney, Jenny (MDOS) <McInerneyJ1@michigan.gov>; Bourbonais, Lori (MDOS) <bourbonaisl@michigan.gov>; Schaar, Meghan (MDOS) <SchaarM1@michigan.gov>; Lillie, Erin (MDOS) <LillieE@michigan.gov>
Cc: Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>; Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Castro v Benson & Trump - pro se complaint filed 8/31
Importance: High

Hi All,

Attached is a pro se complaint filed by a Texas resident, purportedly a GOP presidential candidate, seeking to bar the Secretary from placing Trump on the ballot. This was filed awhile ago so it does not seem like he intends or understands that it needs to be served, but perhaps its still in the mail. The Court of Claims provided us the attached copy.

Heather

From: AG-NOI <AG-NOI@michigan.gov>
Sent: Tuesday, September 19, 2023 4:20 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Albro, Lisa (AG) <AlbroL@michigan.gov>
Subject: FW: Copies of Complaints per MCL 600.6434 (case 23-000114-MZ through 23-000123-MP)

From: Angela Davis <ADavis@courts.mi.gov>
Sent: Thursday, September 7, 2023 11:07 AM
To: AG-NOI <AG-NOI@michigan.gov>
Subject: Copies of Complaints per MCL 600.6434 (case 23-000114-MZ through 23-000123-MP)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good Afternoon,

Attached are recently processed complaints that were filed in the Court of Claims.

Please note that case #23-000117-MZ is purposefully omitted as the complaint was never filed in this matter. Also, cases #23-000118-MK and #23-000121-MZ are transfer cases. A copy of the complaint in each case when they are received by the Court of Claims.

Have a nice day,

Angela

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/28/2023 2:22:51 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: FW: Detroit News article

fyi

From: Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 10:05 AM
To: Sherman, Ann (AG) <ShermanA@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: Fwd: Detroit News article

I believe we haven't been served yet, but can you confirm?

Thx!

From: LeBlanc, Elizabeth <eleblanc@detroitnews.com>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 10:03 AM
To: Wimmer, Daniel (AG) <WimmerD2@michigan.gov>; Bush, Kimberly (AG) <BushK2@michigan.gov>
Subject: Detroit News article

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi, Danny and Kim.
Eleven state lawmakers are filing suit today in federal district court challenging the voting rights petition initiatives that were approved by voters in 2018 and 2022. They're arguing the citizen-led initiative infringes on state and U.S. constitutional language that gives the Legislature the sole authority to create election law. Would the AG's office like to respond at all?
Thanks for any help you're able to provide,
Beth

Beth LeBlanc
Detroit News Lansing Bureau
eleblanc@detroitnews.com
810.730.9781

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/29/2023 10:45:46 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Free Speech for People 14.3 complaint

We were served today as well.

Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, September 29, 2023 3:38 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Free Speech for People 14.3 complaint

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Free Speech for People, which has filed lawsuits to disqualify Trump in several states, sued Secretary Benson today in the Court of Claims. Complaint attached. According to paragraph 313, Benson "has both the authority and responsibility to determine whether a candidate for office is ineligible to appear on the ballot for the presidential nomination primary or the general election" under MCL 614a(1). That provision is the one requiring the Secretary to "issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a."

Please let me know if we can be of any assistance (beyond the memos we provided) or if you'd like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/28/2023 7:14:12 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Complaint

I just checked a bit ago, thanks.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 3:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Complaint

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

We just got the complaint, if you don't have it yet.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/4/2023 8:34:39 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Update
Attachments: response01 pl mtn expedite.pdf

Jonathan, I filed a response opposing Davis's motion to expedite at least until a reasonable time.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 5:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Update

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

Please find attached a litigation tracker which provides descriptions and status updates of cases filed around the country involving the Disqualification Clause of the 14th Amendment. We will endeavor to send an updated tracker weekly and will indicate changes from the previous week on the tracker. Please let us know if you are aware of any updates that we are missing!

Below is a summary of relevant cases/filings from the past week:

Colorado:

- On Friday, September 22, in Anderson v. Griswold, state district court Judge Sarah Wallace issued a Protective Order banning threats and intimidation on all parties, the lawyers, the judge and her staff.
- On the same day, President Trump filed two Motions to Dismiss: One First Amendment Motion based on the Colorado Anti-SLAPP statute and one based on standing and the Colorado statutory scheme. President Trump indicated he would file an additional Motion to Dismiss on September 28 addressing 14.3 structural arguments.
- The Colorado Republican Committee also filed a Motion to Dismiss raising First Amendment arguments, statutory arguments, and arguments related to 14.3.

Michigan:

- On September 15, activist Robert Davis filed a pro se civil action to require Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson to exclude Trump from the Michigan primary ballot.
- On September 19, Davis filed an Emergency Motion for an Expedited Hearing and Expedited Briefing.
- Secretary Benson was served on September 22.

Minnesota:

- In Growe v. Simon, on September 27, 2023, Secretary Simon filed a responsive pleading indicating he takes no position on the merits but agrees with the Petitioners that the current proceeding is the proper process to determine Trump's eligibility. Secretary Simon requested that the issue be decided no later than January 5, 2024.
- Several groups and individuals filed motions for leave to file amicus briefs including CREW, Bruce Ackerman, Derek Muller, the Constitutional Accountability Center, and the RNC.
- Oral Arguments are scheduled for November 2.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as the duly elected Secretary of State,

Defendant.

No. 22-000128-MM

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Robert Davis, In Pro Per
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1)(
313.523.PII MCL 15.243
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)t@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

/

DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S RESPONSE IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S EMERGENCY MOTION FOR EXPEDITED HEARING AND EXPEDITED BRIEFING SCHEDULE

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: September 29, 2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Index of Authorities ii

Introduction 1

Counter-Statement of Facts 1

Argument 4

I. This Court should deny Davis's September 19, 2023, emergency motion for an expedited hearing and briefing schedule to the extent it seeks relief by October 3, 2023. 4

Conclusion and Relief Requested 6

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Statutes

MCL 168.613a 1, 2

MCL 168.613a(1) 1

MCL 168.614a(1) 3

MCL 168.614a(2) 3

MCL 168.615a 3

Rules

MCR 2.605 4

MCR 2.605(D) 4

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 4, § 27 2

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

This Court should deny Plaintiff Robert Davis's emergency motion for expedited relief in this case to the extent he is seeking relief by October 3, 2023. Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson has not had sufficient time to review the pleadings in this case or to respond adequately to Davis's motion. Further, Davis's claims suffer from ripeness issues that do not support the current request for expedited relief. While the Secretary does not necessarily oppose a reasonably expedited schedule in this matter, the current request for relief by October 3 should be denied.

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF FACTS

In his complaint for declaratory relief, Plaintiff Robert Davis seeks relief on multiple counts, but only Counts I through IV are the subject of his motion to expedite.

In Count I, Davis seeks a declaration that Secretary Benson must schedule and hold the 2024 presidential primary election on March 12, 2024, rather than on February 27, 2024, as required by MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023. (Comp, ¶¶ 7-41.)[1] Public Act 2 amended MCL 168.613a to change the date for holding the presidential primary to the fourth Tuesday in February, rather than the second Tuesday in March. See 2023 PA 2[2]; MCL 168.613a, as amended. As

---

[1] Davis has made a similar claim against the Secretary in Court of Claims Case No. 28-000128-MB, which remains pending.

[2] The legislative history for Public Act 2 is available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0013 (2023).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Davis notes in his brief, the Act did not receive immediate effect.[3] Under article 4, § 27 of the Michigan Constitution, unless immediate effect is given an act, it shall not take effect until 90 days from the end of session, often referred to as sine die. Const 1963, art 4, § 27. This means that Public Act 2 will take effect 90 days from when the Legislature ends its regular session. But when the Legislature will end its current session is unknown. Typically, the Legislature adjourns sometime in December making sine die sometime in March. If the Legislature adjourns earlier, then sine die is earlier as well. So, at this point the effective date of Public Act 2 is unknown. Obviously, if the Legislature does not adjourn in time to make Public Act 2 effective in time to hold a February presidential primary, the primary will be conducted in March as required by the existing version of MCL 168.613a.

But given the fact that Public Act 2 could become effective, the Secretary has prepared for that eventuality by computing deadlines for the presidential primary based on the amendment but noting that these deadlines could be adjusted if Public Act 2 does not become effective in time to conduct the primary.[4]

In Count II, Davis seeks mandamus relief to compel the Secretary to hold the presidential primary in March consistent with the declaration he seeks in Count I. (Compl, ¶¶ 42-55.)

---

[3] Id.

[4] See Calendar of election dates available at Election Calendar of Dates (michigan.gov), and guidance for presidential candidates for 2024 at Ballot-Access-Information-for-Presidential-Candidates.pdf (michigan.gov).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Count III, Davis seeks a declaration that Secretary Benson has a legal duty under article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution and case law to determine whether a presidential candidate meets eligibility requirements to run for the office of U.S. President. (Compl, ¶¶ 56-90.) Specifically, Davis alleges that the Secretary has the authority to make a determination that former President Donald Trump is ineligible to run as candidate for President in 2024 pursuant to the insurrection clause in the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. (Id.)[5]

As noted in Davis's complaint, the Secretary is required to issue a "list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential candidates" for each major political party's nomination by 4:00 p.m. on November 10, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(1). Thereafter, the state chairperson of each major political party must file a "list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party" with the Secretary of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(2). All names of the candidates will then be placed on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. MCL 168.615a.

In Count IV, Davis seeks mandamus relief to compel the Secretary to issue the declaratory ruling previously requested by Davis declaring that former

---

[5] Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides, in part that "[n]o person shall be a[n] . . . elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States. . . who, having previously taken an oath, . . . as an officer of the United States . . . to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President Trump is ineligible to run as a candidate for U.S. President in Michigan. (Compl, ¶¶ 91-104.)

Davis filed his complaint against Secretary Benson on September 15, 2023, and emergency motion for declaratory relief on September 18, 2023.[6] He then filed an emergency motion for an expedited hearing and briefing schedule on September 19, 2023.[7] But Plaintiff did not serve his complaint and motions until September 22, 2023.[8] In his "emergency motion for expedited hearing and expedited briefing schedule for plaintiff's 9/18/2023 emergency motion for declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause for Counts I-IV of verified complaint", filed September 19, Davis requests that this Court decide his motions "within the next 14 days," which would be by October 3, 2023. (9/19/23 Motion, p 3.)

ARGUMENT

I. This Court should deny Davis's September 19, 2023, emergency motion for an expedited hearing and briefing schedule to the extent it seeks relief by October 3, 2023.

Davis purportedly seeks declaratory relief under MCR 2.605, which permits this Court to "order a speedy hearing of an action for declaratory relief." MCR 2.605(D). Secretary Benson does not oppose a reasonably expedited determination of this action, but she does object to any request for relief by October 3, 2023.

---

[6] See register of actions for Case No. 23-000128-MB, available at RegisterOfActions (michigan.gov)

[7] Id.

[8] Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Defendant Benson was only served with the pleadings in this case on September 22, 2023. Neither she, nor her staff, nor the undesigned counsel have had sufficient time to thoroughly review Davis's filings and requests for relief. Further, the undersigned counsel already had and have deadlines to comply with in other cases, including other election-related cases, that make responding before or by October 3, 2023, impossible.

Further, while it is true that election cases are generally accorded expedited treatment as Davis states, (9/19/23 Motion, PDF p 4), Davis's claim that a decision in this matter is somehow needed by October 3 is entirely overstated.

First, as noted above with respect to Counts I and II, the effective date of Public Act 2 is controlled by the Constitution, and at this time it is unknown when the Act will become effective since it is unclear when the Legislature will adjourn. Thus, Davis's claim does not appear ripe. Indeed, without that information, expedited relief could not be granted anyway.

Second, with respect to Counts III and IV, candidates for the 2024 presidential primary will not even be formally identified by the Secretary and major political parties until November 10 and November 14, respectively. While it seems likely that former President Trump will be identified as a candidate, and if listed as a candidate would not withdraw, that cannot be known for certain yet. So, Davis's claims again suffer from ripeness issues. And regardless, ballot printing for the presidential primary would not begin until sometime in early January 2024 (if the primary is actually held on February 27, 2024, which it may or may not be.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Again, the Secretary does not oppose a reasonably expedited briefing and hearing schedule in this matter (setting aside the ripeness issues), but relief by October 3, 2023, is not necessary or warranted under the facts of this case to date.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For these reasons, Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson respectfully requests that this Honorable Court enter an order denying Plaintiff's September 19, 2023, "emergency motion for expedited hearing and expedited briefing schedule for plaintiff's 9/18/2023 emergency motion for declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause for Counts I-IV of verified complaint," together with any other relief that the Court determines to be appropriate under the circumstances.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: September 29, 2023

PROOF OF SERVICE

Heather S. Meingast certifies that on September 29, 2023, she served a copy of the above document in this matter on all counsel of record and parties in pro per via MiFILE.

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/2/2023 5:48:21 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Sample FOIA lawsuits
Attachments: 2023-002835-CZ - COMPLAINT-PETITION FILED - CIVIL - 8-24-2023.pdf; 2023-002837-CZ - COMPLAINT-PETITION FILED - CIVIL - 8-24-2023.pdf

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

FILED by Macomb County Circuit Court
8/23/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE COUNTY OF MACOMB

Michael Lewis Butz

Plaintiff,

vs.

Case No.: 2023-002835-CZ
James M. Maceroni

Cathy LaFontaine, Clerk, Township of Richmond and Township of Richmond, a Michigan Municipal Corporation.

Defendants.

Michael Lewis Butz - Plaintiff
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1
586-596-PII MCL 15.2

COMPLAINT-VIOLATION OF FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT AND VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL AND STATE LAW(S)

NOW COMES Michael Lewis Butz and states the following by way of complaint:

1. Michael Lewis Butz as plaintiff and a resident of the County of Macomb files this complaint pursuant to the Michigan Freedom of Information Act (MCLA 15.231, et. seq.).
2. The Township of Richmond is a Michigan municipal corporation and Defendant Cathy LaFontaine is the Clerk for said Township. Ms. LaFontaine is sued in her official capacity as Clerk of Defendant Township.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. At all times relevant hereto, Defendant Lafontaine was acting on behalf of the State of Michigan and the Township of Richmond and in her official capacity.

4. This action is specifically authorized by statute, MCLA 15.235 and MCLA 15.240.

5. On May 2, 2003, Plaintiff filed a written request with Defendant Township and Defendant LaFontaine. The request was filed pursuant to the Michigan Freedom of Information Act and the purpose of filing the request was to obtain public records. Plaintiff sought extract files from the electronic poll books for all registrants for all voting precincts for elections on November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023. Plaintiff agreed that some of the information contained in the poll books were exempt from disclosure and asked that this information be redacted prior to disclosure. [1]

6. On May 15, 2023, Defendants responded to the request, denying same. Defendants cited exemptions under MCLA 15.243(1)(y) and MCLA 15.243(1)(z), specifically security and safety of persons and systems, including the electoral process.

7. The specific information sought by Plaintiff, including election returns and the poll lists, are required to be delivered to the clerk of the township or city, as the case may be, and shall be by him filed in his office, MCLA 168.810. The electronic poll book poll list must be carefully preserved and may be destroyed after the expiration of 2

[1] . A copy of the freedom of information request is attached.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

years following the primary or election at which the same were used, MCLA 168.811.

8. The information sought including registration records, must be open for public inspection, MCLA 168.516.

9. In addition to the provisions of the Michigan Freedom of Information Act. (MCLA 15.231, et. seq., MCLA 750.492 requires public officials, after request to permit inspection of the official records of said public office. Failure to do so is a violation of Michigan Law.

10. The public election records and information sought for any election with a federal candidate on the ballot are required by Federal Law to be maintained and preserved for a period of twenty-two (22) months, 52 USC 20701 and destruction or concealment of election records is a crime, 52 USC 20702.

11. The Defendants have failed to comply with the freedom of information act and Plaintiff's request by failing to separate the (alleged) exempt materials from the nonexempt materials and failed to describe the materials exempted, MCLA 15.244.

12. Plaintiff is entitled to production of the item(s) requested and none of the material(s), document(s) and things requested are exempt from disclosure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

13. Plaintiff seeks prompt judicial review of the denial(s), MCLA 15.235(8), here the burden is on the Defendants to sustain the denial(s), MCLA 15.240(4).

14. Defendants did not comply with Michigan Statute, specifically, MCLA 5.235(2)(d) and the time requirements imposed thereunder.

15. Defendants violated the provisions of the Michigan Freedom of Information ct, subjecting Defendants to the sanctions imposed under the act.

Wherefore, Plaintiff requests a hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way, MCL 15.240(5) Plaintiff also requests an order issued from this court providing for immediate production of the requested items, things and documents. Plaintiff also requests court costs, fees and punitive damages for the wrongful failure to disclose that which has been requested.

Michael Lewis Butz, Plaintiff

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

PII MCL 15.243(1) [redacted], MI PII MCL 15.243(1)

586/596 PII MCL 15.243(1)

Dated: 8/23/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit 1:

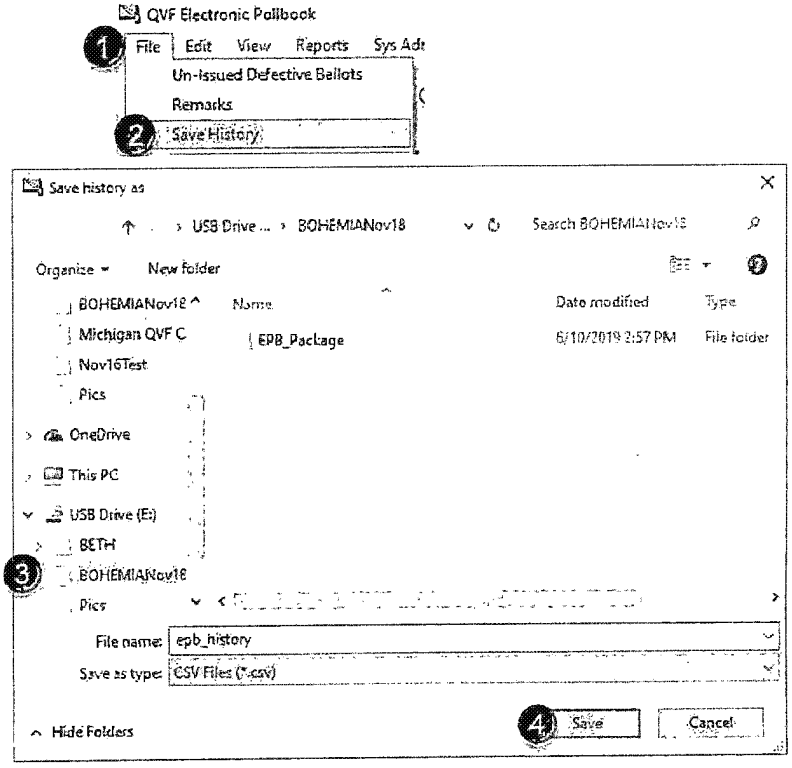
Save Voter History: Redirection Action Required!

After all other reports are saved, save the voter history to the flash drive. The clerk needs to use this file to update the voter registration files in the Qualified Voter File (QVF) recording who voted on Election Day.

To save Voter History:

1. Click File
2. Click Save History
3. Redirect the file by clicking on the flash drive under This PC, then double-click on the Election Date folder. The file name should say epb_history with no preceding d:\

   If d:\ is still in the File name, click the cursor at the beginning of the File name field and use the Delete key to delete the d:\
4. Click Save

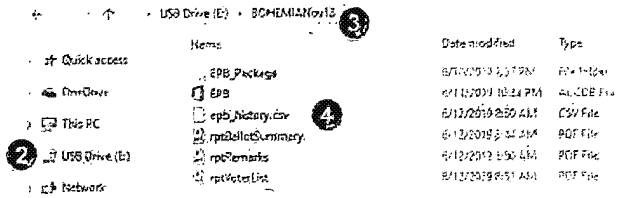


Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ensure Files are on Flash Drive

To verify files have been saved on the encrypted flash drive:

1. Click on the file folder icon to open Windows File Explorer
2. Click Removable Disk (E:) Drive letters may vary
3. Double Click the [ElectionDate] folder



4. You must have the following files:

File Name	File Type
EPB_Package	Compressed (zipped)
EPB_History	CSV file
rptBallotSummary	PDF file
rptRemarks	PDF file
rptVoterList	PDF file

The EPB_History.CSV file is what is being requested

You may also see the following files in your folder:

File Name	File Type
EPB_Package	Compressed (zipped)

Once all reports have been saved, close all programs and shut down the laptop. Return all items to the case except the encrypted flash drive. The encrypted flash drive must be placed into the container the Clerk recommends, sealed (either an envelope with a red paper seal or an approved container and the appropriate seal), and returned to the Clerk on election night.

FILED by Macomb County Circuit Court
8/24/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE COUNTY OF MACOMB

Michael Lewis Butz

Plaintiff,

vs.

Case No.: 2023-002837-CZ

Kristi Pozzi, Clerk, Township of Macomb and Township of Macomb, a Michigan Municipal Corporation.

RICHARD L. CARETTI

Defendants.

Michael Lewis Butz - Plaintiff
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
586-596 PII MCL 15.24

COMPLAINT-VIOLATION OF FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT AND VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL AND STATE LAW(S)

NOW COMES Michael Lewis Butz and states the following by way of complaint:

1. Michael Lewis Butz as plaintiff and a resident of the County of Macomb files this complaint pursuant to the Michigan Freedom of Information Act (MCLA 15.231, et. seq.).
2. The Township of Macomb is a Michigan municipal corporation and Defendant Kristi Pozzi is the Clerk for said Township. Ms. Pozzi is sued in her official capacity as Clerk of Defendant Township.
3. At all times relevant hereto, Defendant Pozzi was acting on behalf of the State of Michigan and the Township of Macomb and in her official capacity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

4. This action is specifically authorized by statute, MCLA 15.235 and MCLA 15.240.

5. On May 2, 2003, Plaintiff filed a written request with Defendant Township and Defendant Pozzi. The request was filed pursuant to the Michigan Freedom of Information Act and the purpose of filing the request was to obtain public records. Plaintiff sought extract files from the electronic poll books for all registrants for all voting precincts for elections on November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023. Plaintiff agreed that some of the information contained in the poll books were exempt from disclosure and asked that this information be redacted prior to disclosure. [1]

6. On June 6, 2023, Defendants responded to the request, denying same. Defendants cited exemptions under MCLA 15.243(1)(y) and MCLA 15.243(1)(z), specifically disclosure would constitute information relating to cybersecurity plans, assessments or vulnerabilities and a general threat to Michigan's electoral process. Defendants specifically cited MCLA 15.243(1)(y) and MCLA 15.243(1)(z).

7. The specific information sought by Plaintiff, including election returns and the poll lists, are required to be delivered to the clerk of the township or city, as the case may be, and shall be by him filed in his office, MCLA 168.810. The electronic poll book poll list must be carefully preserved and may be destroyed after the expiration of 2 years following the primary or election at which the same were used, MCLA 168.811.

[1]. A copy of the freedom of information request is attached.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

8. The information sought including registration records, must be open for public inspection, MCLA 168.516.

9. In addition to the provisions of the Michigan Freedom of Information Act. (MCLA 15.231, et. seq., MCLA 750.492 requires public officials, after request to permit inspection of the official records of said public office. Failure to do so is a violation of Michigan Law.

10. The public election records and information sought for any election with a federal candidate on the ballot are required by Federal Law to be maintained and preserved for a period of twenty-two (22) months, 52 USC 20701 and destruction or concealment of election records is a crime, 52 USC 20702.

11. The Defendants have failed to comply with the freedom of information act and Plaintiff's request by failing to separate the (alleged) exempt materials from the nonexempt materials and failed to describe the materials exempted, MCLA 15.244.

12. Plaintiff is entitled to production of the item(s) requested and none of the material(s), document(s) and things requested are exempt from disclosure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

13. Plaintiff seeks prompt judicial review of the denial(s), MCLA 15.235(8), here the burden is on the Defendants to sustain the denial(s), MCLA 15.240(4).

14. Defendants did not comply with Michigan Statute, specifically, MCLA 5.235(2)(d) and the time requirements imposed thereunder.

15. Defendants violated the provisions of the Michigan Freedom of Information ct, subjecting Defendants to the sanctions imposed under the act.

Wherefore, Plaintiff requests a hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way, MCL 15.240(5) Plaintiff also requests an order issued from this court providing for immediate production of the requested items, things and documents. Plaintiff also requests court costs, fees and punitive damages for the wrongful failure to disclose that which has been requested.

Michael Lewis Butz, Plaintiff

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1) [redacted], MI PII MCL 15.243(1)
586/596-PII MCL 15.24

Dated: 8/23/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Gmail Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>

Michael Butz FOIA Request - Electronic Poll Book raw data files (EPB_History.CSV)

1 message

Michael Butz <[redacted]@gmail.com> Tue, May 2, 2023 at 3:10 PM
To: elections@macomb-mi.gov
Bcc: Mercede Scargall <mercede.scargall@gmail.com>, Michelle Franzen <mfranzen86@yahoo.com>, Melissa Pehlis <mptorch@gmail.com>, Brian <brian_c1959@yahoo.com>, Scott Aughney <seaof7@gmail.com>, Joanne Bakale <Joanne.electioninfo@gmail.com>, Sue Vandeberghe <lacybell1958@gmail.com>

Good morning,

Attached is a FOIA request for your jurisdiction's Electronic Poll Book raw data files for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 along with relevant supporting documents:

- MCL 168.509gg
- MCL 168.813
- 52 USC Chapter 207

Please don't hesitate to contact me with any questions or concerns.

Sincerely,

Michael Butz

4 attachments

52 USC Chapter 207.pdf
96K

mcl-168-811.pdf
7K

mcl-168-509gg.pdf
8K

(Macomb) Butz Michael Lewis - Clerk Letter - EPB-FOIA Request - 20230502r.pdf
270K

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

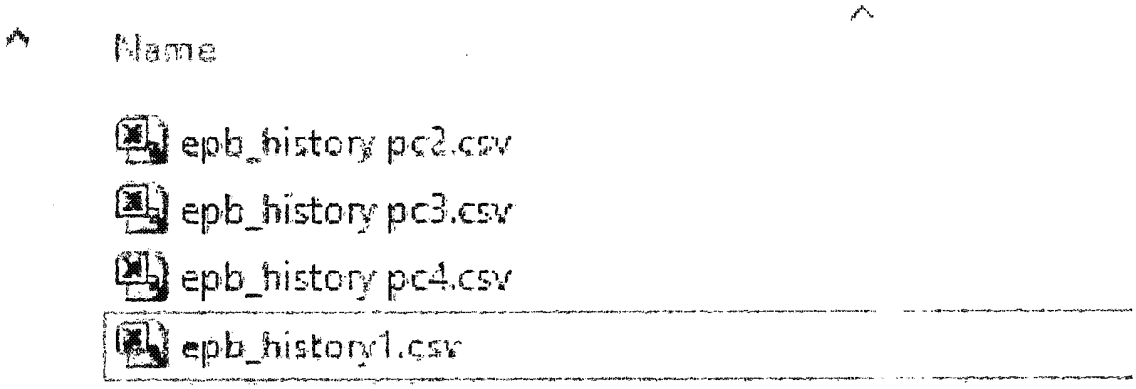
May 2, 2023

Macomb Township Clerk's Office
Attn: Kristi Pozzi

Re: Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") Request

Dear Kristi Pozzi:

Per the Freedom of Information Act, please provide a copy of the extract files from the electronic poll books (EPBs) for all registrants at all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023. These files should be in .CSV or .XLS format and typically have a file name beginning with "EPB_History" (see below screenshot).



Please note that these files likely contain the full birthdate (month, day and year) and driver's license number of the registrants in your jurisdiction, which is exempt from FOIA release (MCL 168.509gg). Therefore, please open the copy of the digital file(s), remove or redact the birth month, birth day and drivers license number information, and save your changes before sending the file(s) to me. If you are able to retain the year of birth for the registrants as is permissible per MCL 168.509gg, it will be greatly appreciated.

Instructions on how to locate the requested information is available on pages 40-41 of the Electronic Poll Book Refresh Manual provided by the Michigan Board of Elections. These pages are included in Exhibit 1 below for your convenience.

Once the above redactions have been made, there should be no other FOIA exempt information in the EPB digital records requested. I am not requesting any software or information which would somehow be deemed proprietary. I am only requesting public record information as is my right.

Please note that the EPB .CSV files are an original record and a component of the electronic voting system audit trail. As such, these digital records should be retained by your office for a federal minimum of 22 months (52 USC 207) and a state minimum of 24 months (MCL 168.811).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I prefer to receive the requested information via email as a file attachment. If email is unavailable, please contact me to coordinate an alternative method to fulfill my FOIA request since I would be happy to bring a USB drive to your office so that you or your staff can copy the file(s) to.

Please don't hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Michael Lewis Butz
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.243
586.596.4945
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit 1:

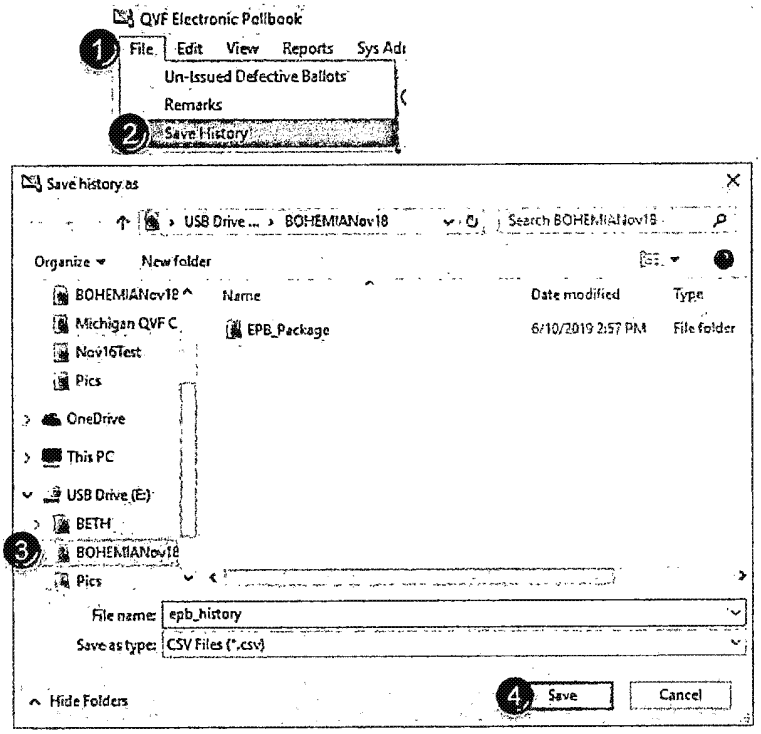
Save Voter History: Redirection Action Required!

After all other reports are saved, save the voter history to the flash drive. The clerk needs to use this file to update the voter registration files in the Qualified Voter File (QVF) recording who voted on Election Day.

To save Voter History:

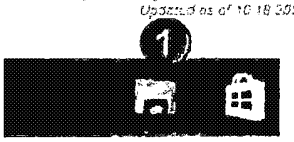
1. Click File
2. Click Save History
3. Redirect the file by clicking on the flash drive under This PC, then double-click on the Election Date folder. The file name should say epb_history with no preceding d:\

   If d:\ is still in the File name, click the cursor at the beginning of the File name field and use the Delete key to delete the d:\
4. Click Save



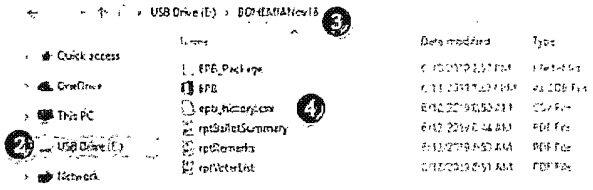
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ensure Files are on Flash Drive



To verify files have been saved on the encrypted flash drive:

1. Click on the file folder icon to open Windows File Explorer
2. Click Removable Disk (E:) Drive letters may vary
3. Double Click the [ElectionDate] folder



4. You must have the following files:

File Name	File Type
EPB Back Up	ACCDB file
EPB_History	CSV file
rptBallot Summary	PDF file
rptRemarks	PDF file
rptVoter List	PDF file

The EPB_History.CSV file is what is being requested

You may also see the following files in your folder:

File Name	File Type
EPB_Package	File Folder
EPB_Package	Compressed (zipped)

Once all reports have been saved, close all programs and shut down the laptop. Return all items to the case except the encrypted flash drive. The encrypted flash drive must be placed into the container the Clerk recommends, sealed (either an envelope with a red paper seal or an approved container and the appropriate seal), and returned to the Clerk on election night.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Gmail Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>

RE: Michael Butz FOIA Request - Electronic Poll Book raw data files (EPB_History.CSV)

1 message

Elections <elections@macomb-mi.gov> Wed, May 10, 2023 at 4:30 PM
To: Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>

Attached please find an update regarding your request.

Roger W. Cardamone, MiPMC, CMC

Macomb Township Deputy Clerk

(586) 992-0710

cardamoner@macomb-mi.gov

www.macomb-mi.gov

MACOMB TOWNSHIP

The information contained in this e-mail, including any attachment(s), is intended only for the named recipient(s). If you are not the intended recipient, please delete the e-mail and any attachments, destroy any printouts you may have made, and notify us immediately by return e-mail. Thank you.

From: Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>
Sent: Tuesday, May 2, 2023 3:11 PM
To: Elections <elections@macomb-mi.gov>
Subject: Michael Butz FOIA Request - Electronic Poll Book raw data files (EPB_History.CSV)

Good morning,

Attached is a FOIA request for your jurisdiction's Electronic Poll Book raw data files for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 along with relevant supporting documents:

- MCL 168.509gg
- MCL 168.813
- 52 USC Chapter 207

Please don't hesitate to contact me with any questions or concerns.

Sincerely,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michael Butz

2023-066 Notice to Extend Response Time.pdf
1405K

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Township: Keep original and provide copy, along with Public Summary, to requestor at no charge.

Macomb Township, Michigan
54111 Broughton Road
Macomb, MI 48042
586-992-0710

Extension Form

Notice to Extend Response Time for FOIA Request

Michigan Freedom of Information Act, Public Act 442 of 1976, MCL 15.231, et seq.

Request No.: 2023-066 Date Received: 5/3/2023
Date of This Notice: 5/10/2023
(Please Print or Type)

Check if received via: ☒ Email ☐ Fax ☐ Other Electronic Method
Date delivered to junk/spam folder: _____
Date discovered in junk/spam folder: _____

Name	Michael Lewis Butz	Phone	586.596 [redacted]
Firm/Organization		Fax
Street	[redacted]	Email	[redacted]@gmail.com
City	[redacted]	State MI	Zip [redacted]

Request for: ☒ Copy ☐ Certified copy ☐ Record inspection ☐ Subscription to record issued on regular basis
Delivery Method: ☐ Will pick up ☐ Will make own copies onsite ☐ Mail to address above ☒ Email to address above
☐ Deliver on digital media provided by the township: _____

Record(s) You Requested: (Listed here or see attached copy of original request) Request attached.

We are extending the date to respond to your FOIA request for no more than 10 business days, until 5/24/2023 (month, day, year). Only one extension may be taken per FOIA request. If you have any questions regarding this extension, contact FOIA Coordinator at foia@macomb-mi.gov

Estimated Time Frame to Provide Records: 5/24/2023 (days or date)
The time frame estimate is nonbinding upon the township, but the township is providing the estimate in good faith. Providing an estimated time frame does not relieve a public body from any of the other requirements of this act.

Reason for Extension:

☐ 1. The township needs to search for, collect, or appropriately examine or review a voluminous amount of separate and distinct public records pursuant to your request. Specifically, the township must:

☐ 2. The township needs to collect the requested public records from numerous field offices, facilities, or other establishments that are located apart from the township office. Specifically, the township must coordinate documents from the following locations:

☒ 3. Other (describe): Due to the complexity of your request, a 10 business day extension is necessary. We are continuing to investigate and research issues involving whether a request would create an exposure to the operating system resulting in injury. We are also reviewing our methods and capabilities in responding, including likely time involved.

Signature of FOIA Coordinator: [signature] Date: 5/10/2023

(Created by Michigan Townships Association, April 2015)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2023-066 May 3, 2023

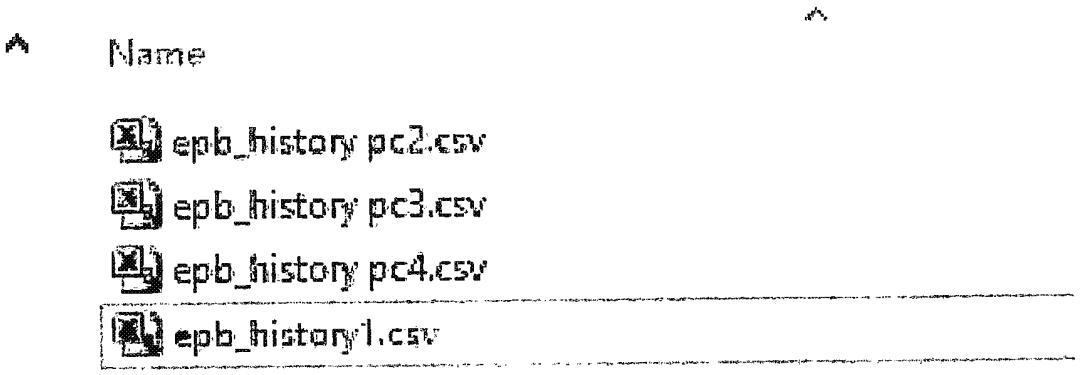
May 2, 2023

Macomb Township Clerk's Office
Attn: Kristi Pozzi

Re: Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") Request

Dear Kristi Pozzi:

Per the Freedom of Information Act, please provide a copy of the extract files from the electronic poll books (EPBs) for all registrants at all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023. These files should be in .CSV or .XLS format and typically have a file name beginning with "EPB_History" (see below screenshot).



Please note that these files likely contain the full birthdate (month, day and year) and driver's license number of the registrants in your jurisdiction, which is exempt from FOIA release (MCL 168.509gg). Therefore, please open the copy of the digital file(s), remove or redact the birth month, birth day and drivers license number information, and save your changes before sending the file(s) to me. If you are able to retain the year of birth for the registrants as is permissible per MCL 168.509gg, it will be greatly appreciated.

Instructions on how to locate the requested information is available on pages 40-41 of the Electronic Poll Book Refresh Manual provided by the Michigan Board of Elections. These pages are included in Exhibit 1 below for your convenience.

Once the above redactions have been made, there should be no other FOIA exempt information in the EPB digital records requested. I am not requesting any software or information which would somehow be deemed proprietary. I am only requesting public record information as is my right.

Please note that the EPB .CSV files are an original record and a component of the electronic voting system audit trail. As such, these digital records should be retained by your office for a federal minimum of 22 months (52 USC 207) and a state minimum of 24 months (MCL 168.811).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I prefer to receive the requested information via email as a file attachment. If email is unavailable, please contact me to coordinate an alternative method to fulfill my FOIA request since I would be happy to bring a USB drive to your office so that you or your staff can copy the file(s) to.

Please don't hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Michael Lewis Butz
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a),
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.24
586.596 PII MCL 15
PII MCL 15.243(1) @gmail.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Exhibit 1:

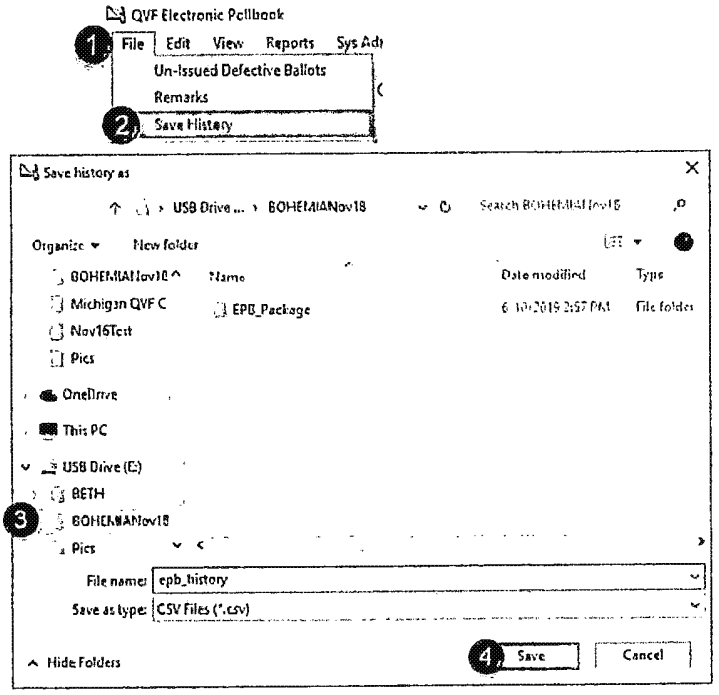
Save Voter History: Redirection Action Required!

After all other reports are saved, save the voter history to the flash drive. The clerk needs to use this file to update the voter registration files in the Qualified Voter File (QVF) recording who voted on Election Day.

To save Voter History:

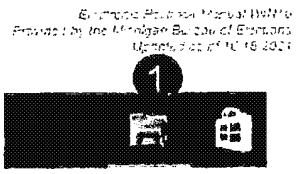
1. Click File
2. Click Save History
3. Redirect the file by clicking on the flash drive under This PC, then double-click on the Election Date folder. The file name should say epb_history with no preceding d:\

   If d:\ is still in the File name, click the cursor at the beginning of the File name field and use the Delete key to delete the d:\
4. Click Save



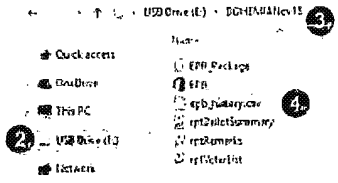
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ensure Files are on Flash Drive



To verify files have been saved on the encrypted flash drive:

1. Click on the file folder icon to open Windows File Explorer
2. Click Removable Disk (E:) Drive letters may vary
3. Double Click the [ElectionDate] folder



4. You must have the following files:

File Name	File Type
EPB_History	CSV file
rptBallotSummary	PDF file
rptRemarks	PDF file
rptVoterList	PDF file

The EPB_History.CSV file is what is being requested

You may also see the following files in your folder:

File Name	File Type
EPB_Package	File Folder
EPB_Package	Compressed (zipped)

Once all reports have been saved, close all programs and shut down the laptop. Return all items to the case except the encrypted flash drive. The encrypted flash drive must be placed into the container the Clerk recommends, sealed (either an envelope with a red paper seal or an approved container and the appropriate seal), and returned to the Clerk on election night.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Gmail Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>

RE: FOIA Request for Electronic Poll Book public records for 11/8/2022 and 5/2/2023

1 message

Elections <elections@macomb-mi.gov> Tue, Jun 6, 2023 at 4:23 PM
To: Michael Butz [redacted]@gmail.com>

Attached please find the Township's response to your request for records.

Roger W. Cardamone, MiPMC, CMC

Macomb Township Deputy Clerk

(586) 992-0710 ext. 3

cardamoner@macomb-mi.gov

www.macomb-mi.gov

MACOMB TOWNSHIP

The information contained in this e-mail, including any attachment(s), is intended only for the named recipient(s). If you are not the intended recipient, please delete the e-mail and any attachments, destroy any printouts you may have made, and notify us immediately by return e-mail. Thank you.

From: Michael Butz [redacted]r@gmail.com>
Sent: Saturday, May 13, 2023 5:58 PM
To: Elections <elections@macomb-mi.gov>
Subject: FOIA Request for Electronic Poll Book public records for 11/8/2022 and 5/2/2023

Greetings,

I hereby request a comma separated electronic version (CSV) or Microsoft Excel workbook file version (XLS) of the information recorded in the Electronic Poll Book for your jurisdiction for the November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 elections. As stated in USC 52, 20701, the federal retention period for election materials is 22 months following the final canvass, and the State of Michigan retention period is 24 months following final canvass as stated in MCL 168.811.

Below are the specific data elements requested:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Voter full name (First, Middle, Last, Suffix)
2. Voter ID
3. Voter number
4. Voter ballot number
5. Date/time of poll book record entry
6. Voter ballot type
7. Voter school district code
8. Voter birth year
9. Precinct
10. Action Description
    a. Issue Regular ballot
    b. Record AV Ballot
    c. UNDO: Issue Regular Ballot
    d. Spoil Ballot
    e. Add standalone remark
    f. Other?
11. Is Undone (True or False)
12. Unlisted voter name (if applicable)

This request includes absentee voter counting boards within your jurisdiction.

I recognize that the Electronic Pollbook contains personal information that is exempt from disclosure per MCL168.509gg such as driver's license number, day of birth and month of birth. Please redact this information as is required in fulfilling this request.

Please understand that I have no desire to obtain any details relating to cybersecurity plans, cyber security methods, voting software coding, voting software infrastructure, voting software configuration or anything else specific to voting software in use for these elections with this specific FOIA request. I seek only the information contained within the Electronic Poll Book related to the elections for November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023.

Don't hesitate to contact me if it is necessary to refine or clarify this request any further.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Please be advised that I have carbon copied additional persons on this request.

Sincerely,

Michael Lewis Butz

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.243(1)

(586) 596-PII MCL 15.24

PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

M ReplyForward

2023-075 Response.pdf
1486K

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Township: Keep original and provide copy of both sides, along with Public Summary, to requestor at no charge.

Macomb Township, Michigan
54111 Broughton Road
Macomb, MI 48042
Phone: (586) 992-0710

Denial Form

Notice of Denial of FOIA Request

Michigan Freedom of Information Act, Public Act 442 of 1976, MCL 15.231, et seq.

Request No.: 2023-075 Date Received: 5/15/2023
Date of This Notice: 6/6/2023
(Please Print or Type)

Check if received via: ☒ Email ☐ Fax ☐ Other Electronic Method
Date delivered to junk/spam folder: _____
Date discovered in junk/spam folder: _____

Name	Michael Lewis Butz	Phone	586.596.[redacted]
Firm/Organization		Fax
Street	[redacted]	Email	[redacted]@gmail.com
City	[redacted]	State MI	Zip [redacted]

Request for: ☒ Copy ☐ Certified copy ☐ Record inspection ☐ Subscription to record issued on regular basis

Delivery Method: ☐ Will pick up ☐ Will make own copies onsite ☐ Mail to address above ☒ Email to address above
☐ Deliver on digital media provided by the township: _____

Record(s) You Requested: (Listed here or see attached copy of original request) See attached.

☒ All OR ☐ Part of your request for records has been denied. Please refer to this form for an explanation. If you have any questions regarding this denial, contact FOIA Coordinator at foia@macomb-mi.gov

Reason for Denial:

☒ 1. Exempt from Disclosure: This item is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Section 13, Subsection 15.249(y) & 15.243(z) (insert number), because: See attached.

☐ 2. Record Does Not Exist: This item does not exist under the name provided in your request or by another name reasonably known to the township. A certificate that the public record does not exist under the name given is attached. If you believe this record does exist, provide a description that will enable us to locate the record: _____

☐ 3. Redaction: A portion of the requested record had to be separated or deleted (redacted) as it is exempt under FOIA Section 13, Subsection _____ (insert number), because: _____

A brief description of the information that had to be separated or deleted: _____

Notice of Requestor's Right to Seek Judicial Review

You are entitled under Section 10 of the Michigan Freedom of Information Act, MCL 15.240, to appeal this denial to the township board or to commence an action in the Circuit Court to compel disclosure of the requested records if you believe they were wrongfully withheld from disclosure. If, after judicial review, the court determines that the township has not complied with MCL 15.235 in making this denial and orders disclosure of all or a portion of a public record, you have the right to receive attorneys' fees and damages as provided in MCL 15.240. (See back of this form for additional information on your rights.)

Signature of FOIA Coordinator: [signature] Date: 6/6/2023

(Created by Michigan Townships Association, April 2015)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT (EXCERPT)
Act 442 of 1976

15.240.amended Options by requesting person; appeal; actions by public body; receipt of written appeal; judicial review; civil action; venue; de novo proceeding; burden of proof; private view of public record; contempt; assignment of action or appeal for hearing, trial, or argument; attorneys' fees, costs, and disbursements; assessment of award; damages.

Sec. 10.

(1) If a public body makes a final determination to deny all or a portion of a request, the requesting person may do 1 of the following at his or her option:

(a) Submit to the head of the public body a written appeal that specifically states the word "appeal" and identifies the reason or reasons for reversal of the denial.

(b) Commence a civil action in the circuit court, or if the decision of a state public body is at issue, the court of claims, to compel the public body's disclosure of the public records within 180 days after a public body's final determination to deny a request.

(2) Within 10 business days after receiving a written appeal pursuant to subsection (1)(a), the head of a public body shall do 1 of the following:

(a) Reverse the disclosure denial.

(b) Issue a written notice to the requesting person upholding the disclosure denial.

(c) Reverse the disclosure denial in part and issue a written notice to the requesting person upholding the disclosure denial in part.

(d) Under unusual circumstances, issue a notice extending for not more than 10 business days the period during which the head of the public body shall respond to the written appeal. The head of a public body shall not issue more than 1 notice of extension for a particular written appeal.

(3) A board or commission that is the head of a public body is not considered to have received a written appeal under subsection (2) until the first regularly scheduled meeting of that board or commission following submission of the written appeal under subsection (1)(a). If the head of the public body fails to respond to a written appeal pursuant to subsection (2), or if the head of the public body upholds all or a portion of the disclosure denial that is the subject of the written appeal, the requesting person may seek judicial review of the nondisclosure by commencing a civil action under subsection (1)(b).

(4) In an action commenced under subsection (1)(b), a court that determines a public record is not exempt from disclosure shall order the public body to cease withholding or to produce all or a portion of a public record wrongfully withheld, regardless of the location of the public record. Venue for an action against a local public body is proper in the circuit court for the county in which the public record or an office of the public body is located has venue over the action. The court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the public body to sustain its denial. The court, on its own motion, may view the public record in controversy in private before reaching a decision. Failure to comply with an order of the court may be punished as contempt of court.

(5) An action commenced under this section and an appeal from an action commenced under this section shall be assigned for hearing and trial or for argument at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way.

(6) If a person asserting the right to inspect, copy, or receive a copy of all or a portion of a public record prevails in an action commenced under this section, the court shall award reasonable attorneys' fees, costs, and disbursements. If the person or public body prevails in part, the court may, in its discretion, award all or an appropriate portion of reasonable attorneys' fees, costs, and disbursements. The award shall be assessed against the public body liable for damages under subsection (7).

(7) If the court determines in an action commenced under this section that the public body has arbitrarily and capriciously violated this act by refusal or delay in disclosing or providing copies of a public record, the court shall order the public body to pay a civil fine of $1,000.00, which shall be deposited into the general fund of the state treasury. The court shall award, in addition to any actual or compensatory damages, punitive damages in the amount of $1,000.00 to the person seeking the right to inspect or receive a copy of a public record. The damages shall not be assessed against an individual, but shall be assessed against the next succeeding public body that is not an individual and that kept or maintained the public record as part of its public function.

History: 1976, Act 442, Eff. Apr. 13, 1977;-- Am. 1978, Act 329, Imd. Eff. July 11, 1978 ;-- Am. 1996, Act 553, Eff. Mar. 31, 1997 ;-- Am. 2014, Act 563, Eff. July 1, 2015

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Notice of Denial
FOIA 2023-075
Michael Lewis Butz

On November 14, 2022, Lori Bourbonais circulated an email to clerks advising, "Clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the electronic poll book, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss, or destruction." She also advised that previous requests for electronic poll books (EPB) data were not disclosed on the basis that they constituted, "cyber security plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities," exempt from disclosure.

Additionally, Ms. Bourbonais sent further communication to clerks and election directors on May 10, 2023 with the following directive, "We are aware that clerks have recently received additional requests for epollbook (epb) data. Requests for epb data must be directed to the Bureau, to ensure that sensitive information related to both individual voters and the epb are removed before public disclosure of otherwise available information. As stated in our November 14, 2022 email, clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the epb, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. The requested file contains proprietary software information, security feature information, and personal identifiable information for voters."

"The disclosure of security and technical information is exempt from FOIA and may not be properly redacted if the file is produced by an individual clerk instead of the Bureau. Additionally, the file contains sensitive information regarding your epb laptop(s) that might require you to purchase a new laptop for each precinct if you disclose this information to a 3rd party. The disclosure of sensitive information compromises the integrity of Michigan's elections and may warrant referral for investigation."

If you receive a FOIA request for epb data, the requestor can be directed to the county clerk for paper pollbook copies or to BOE for the log file or voter history."

Your request insists that the extract files as you describe be furnished. It is the opinion of the State that disclosing the extract files even with the redaction of certain personal information as required by statute involves disclosure of records or information of measures designed to protect the security or safety of persons or property or the confidentiality, integrity, or availability of information systems as described under MCL 15.243(y). Additionally, the State has advised, which we cannot dispute, that such data revelation could result in a person becoming a victim of a cyber security incident, or the disclosure of cyber security related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information, system infrastructure, hardware or software as described in exemption MCL 15.243(z).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2023-075 May 15, 2023

Roger Cardamone

From: Michael Butz <[redacted]@gmail.com>
Sent: Saturday, May 13, 2023 5:58 PM
To: Elections
Subject: FOIA Request for Electronic Poll Book public records for 11/8/2022 and 5/2/2023

Greetings,

I hereby request a comma separated electronic version (CSV) or Microsoft Excel workbook file version (XLS) of the information recorded in the Electronic Poll Book for your jurisdiction for the November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 elections. As stated in USC 52, 20701, the federal retention period for election materials is 22 months following the final canvass, and the State of Michigan retention period is 24 months following final canvass as stated in MCL 168.811.

Below are the specific data elements requested:

1. Voter full name (First, Middle, Last, Suffix)
2. Voter ID
3. Voter number
4. Voter ballot number
5. Date/time of poll book record entry
6. Voter ballot type
7. Voter school district code
8. Voter birth year
9. Precinct
10. Action Description
    a. Issue Regular ballot
    b. Record AV Ballot
    c. UNDO: Issue Regular Ballot
    d. Spoil Ballot
    e. Add standalone remark
    f. Other?
11. Is Undone (True or False)
12. Unlisted voter name (if applicable)

This request includes absentee voter counting boards within your jurisdiction.

I recognize that the Electronic Pollbook contains personal information that is exempt from disclosure per MCL168.509gg such as driver's license number, day of birth and month of birth. Please redact this information as is required in fulfilling this request.

Please understand that I have no desire to obtain any details relating to cybersecurity plans, cyber security methods, voting software coding, voting software infrastructure, voting software configuration or anything else specific to voting software in use for these elections with this specific FOIA request. I seek only the information contained within the Electronic Poll Book related to the elections for November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023.

Don't hesitate to contact me if it is necessary to refine or clarify this request any further.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Please be advised that I have carbon copied additional persons on this request.

Sincerely,

Michael Lewis Butz
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.243(1
(586) 596-PII MCL 15.24
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

M ReplyForward

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Township: Keep original and provide copy, along with Public Summary, to requestor at no charge.

Macomb Township, Michigan
54111 Broughton Road
Macomb, MI 48042
586-992-0710

Extension Form

Notice to Extend Response Time for FOIA Request

Michigan Freedom of Information Act, Public Act 442 of 1976, MCL 15.231, et seq.

Request No.: 2023-075 Date Received: 5/15/2023
Date of This Notice: 5/22/2023

Check if received via: ☒ Email ☐ Fax ☐ Other Electronic Method
Date delivered to junk/spam folder: _____

Name	Michael Lewis Butz	Phone	586.596.[redacted]
Firm/Organization		Fax
Street	[redacted]	Email	[redacted]@gmail.com
City	[redacted]	State MI	Zip [redacted]

(Please Print or Type)

Date discovered in junk/spam folder: _____

Request for: ☒ Copy ☐ Certified copy ☐ Record inspection ☐ Subscription to record issued on regular basis
Delivery Method: ☐ Will pick up ☐ Will make own copies onsite ☐ Mail to address above ☒ Email to address above
☐ Deliver on digital media provided by the township: _____

Record(s) You Requested: (Listed here or see attached copy of original request) See attached.

We are extending the date to respond to your FOIA request for no more than 10 business days, until 6/6/2023 (month, day, year).
Only one extension may be taken per FOIA request. If you have any questions regarding this extension, contact FOIA Coordinator at foia@macomb-mi.gov

Estimated Time Frame to Provide Records: June 6, 2023 (days or date)
The time frame estimate is nonbinding upon the township, but the township is providing the estimate in good faith. Providing an estimated time frame does not relieve a public body from any of the other requirements of this act.

Reason for Extension:

☐ 1. The township needs to search for, collect, or appropriately examine or review a voluminous amount of separate and distinct public records pursuant to your request. Specifically, the township must:

☐ 2. The township needs to collect the requested public records from numerous field offices, facilities, or other establishments that are located apart from the township office. Specifically, the township must coordinate documents from the following locations:

☒ 3. Other (describe): Due to the complexity of your request, a 10 business day extension is necessary. We are continuing to investigate and research issues involving whether a request would create an exposure to the operating system resulting in injury. We are also reviewing our methods and capabilities in responding, including likely time involved.

Signature of FOIA Coordinator: [signature] Date: 5/22/2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/5/2023 3:57:12 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Update

I do not have Davis's suit against Wayne County at this time. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 5, 2023 10:24 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: 14.3 Litigation Update

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Makes good sense to me. Thanks for keeping us updated so we can keep our tracker up to date.

Do you happen to have a copy of Robert Davis's lawsuit against the Wayne County Election Commission?

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, October 4, 2023 at 4:36 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Update

Jonathan, I filed a response opposing Davis's motion to expedite at least until a reasonable time.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 28, 2023 5:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Update

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

Please find attached a litigation tracker which provides descriptions and status updates of cases filed around the country involving the Disqualification Clause of the 14th Amendment. We will endeavor to send an updated tracker weekly and will indicate changes from the previous week on the tracker. Please let us know if you are aware of any updates that we are missing!

Below is a summary of relevant cases/filings from the past week:

Colorado:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- On Friday, September 22, in Anderson v. Griswold, state district court Judge Sarah Wallace issued a Protective Order banning threats and intimidation on all parties, the lawyers, the judge and her staff.
- On the same day, President Trump filed two Motions to Dismiss: One First Amendment Motion based on the Colorado Anti-SLAPP statute and one based on standing and the Colorado statutory scheme. President Trump indicated he would file an additional Motion to Dismiss on September 28 addressing 14.3 structural arguments.
- The Colorado Republican Committee also filed a Motion to Dismiss raising First Amendment arguments, statutory arguments, and arguments related to 14.3.

Michigan:

- On September 15, activist Robert Davis filed a pro se civil action to require Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson to exclude Trump from the Michigan primary ballot.
- On September 19, Davis filed an Emergency Motion for an Expedited Hearing and Expedited Briefing.
- Secretary Benson was served on September 22.

Minnesota:

- In Growe v. Simon, on September 27, 2023, Secretary Simon filed a responsive pleading indicating he takes no position on the merits but agrees with the Petitioners that the current proceeding is the proper process to determine Trump's eligibility. Secretary Simon requested that the issue be decided no later than January 5, 2024.
- Several groups and individuals filed motions for leave to file amicus briefs including CREW, Bruce Ackerman, Derek Muller, the Constitutional Accountability Center, and the RNC.
- Oral Arguments are scheduled for November 2.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/11/2023 4:21:55 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: RE: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, October 11, 2023 12:09 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will get these to you today.

Separately, Elias Law Group just moved to intervene in Lindsey v. Whitmer on behalf of various clients and submitted this proposed motion to dismiss, which generally tracks the issues identified in last week's memo. Not sure if you're getting these filings since the complaint doesn't appear to have been served yet.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 2:51 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 2:46 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Tuesday, October 10, 2023 at 1:33 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order

Gearing up, see attached.

H

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/10/2023 5:33:08 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Davis & LaBrant 14th amendment cases - scheduling order
Attachments: 2023100923 Expedited Sch Ord.pdf

Gearing up, see attached.

H

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

v

Case No. 23-000128-MB

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as the duly elected Secretary of State,

Hon. James Robert Redford

Defendant.
_____/

EXPEDITED SCHEDULING ORDER

In this matter, 23-000128-MB, plaintiff Robert Davis has filed a complaint and moves on an emergency basis for a declaratory judgment, a writ of mandamus, and an order to show cause on Counts I through IV of the verified complaint. Counts I through IV of the complaint relate, specifically, to Davis's claims that (1) defendant cannot enforce 2023 PA 2 by changing the 2024 presidential primary date from March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024; and (2) defendant has a legal duty under Article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution and MCL 24.263 to determine whether potential presidential candidate Donald J. Trump is ineligible to run for the office of president of the United States under § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Davis has moved for an expedited hearing schedule and requests a decision on the motion for a declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause by October 3, 2023. Defendant responds that relief is not required by that date, but indicates her willingness to agree to a reasonably expedited scheduling order.

In 23-000137-MZ, plaintiffs Robert LaBrant, et al. have filed and served on defendant a complaint that also relates to Donald J. Trump's eligibility for the office of President of the United States.

IT IS ORDERED:

1. Davis's motion for an expedited hearing and decision by October 3, 2023 is DENIED. However, the parties are on notice that the Court will expedite this matter and this case together with LaBrandt, et al. v Jocelyn Benson, 23-000137-MZ, a case in which plaintiffs have filed and served on defendant a complaint that also relates to Donald J. Trump's eligibility for the office of President of the United States will take priority on the Court's docket.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. In this matter, 23-000128-MB, defendant shall respond to the motion for a declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause by 5:00 p.m. on October 16, 2023. In addition to any other issues to be discussed, defendant's response shall address:

a. Whether defendant has an affirmative duty and the authority to decide whether a candidate may be placed on a ballot prior to a court's review of the issue;

b. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution applies to the offices of President and Vice President and to candidates for those offices;

c. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution precludes a person from serving in an office covered by § 3, seeking election to an office covered by § 3 or both;

d. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution is self-executing;

e. Any state or federal cases interpreting or applying § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution to candidates for office or persons serving in an office, including any cases currently involving potential presidential candidate Donald J. Trump;

f. The possible application of the 1872 Amnesty Act to the instant case.

3. If defendant's response to the complaint includes a motion, then plaintiff shall file any response to the motion by October 23, 2023.

4. All reply briefs are due by 5:00 p.m. on October 30, 2023.

5. Plaintiff shall provide courtesy copies of the complaint and all other documents filed to date in the case including this order on Donald J. Trump or his current campaign committee by 5:00 p.m. on October 10, 2023. Plaintiffs shall confirm by affidavit the timely provision of these courtesy copies no later than 5:00 p.m. on October 11, 2023.

6. Donald J. Trump and/or his presidential campaign is invited to seek amicus curiae involvement in this matter and LaBrandt, et al. v Jocelyn Benson, 23-000137-MZ. If he does so, then his brief is due by 5:00 p.m. on October 23, 2023.

7. After review of the briefing, the Court will determine whether a hearing is necessary and will inform the parties if a hearing is to be scheduled.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Date: October 9, 2023

James Robert Redford
Judge, Court of Claims

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/12/2023 9:35:21 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

Do you have time for a quick call right now?

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 12, 2023 5:32 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Been there!

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Thursday, October 12, 2023 5:31:06 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

I'm sure you did, I just keep misplacing emails 😊

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 12, 2023 5:03 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Let me know if you have any trouble with the attachment. It should have been on the previous email.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, October 12, 2023 at 4:53 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

Thanks, do you have a PDF of the Baude article? My computer is not letting me download it.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, October 12, 2023 4:32 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: 14.3 Litigation Tracker

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

Heather,

Please find attached the 14.3 Litigation Tracker for this week with updates highlighted.

Some things of note:

Colorado:

- In Anderson v. Griswold, briefing continues on the motions to dismiss ahead of the 5-day hearing scheduled October 30.

Michigan

- In Davis v. Benson and La Brant v. Benson, the Michigan Court of Claims issued a scheduling order expediting the cases and requiring Secretary Benson to respond by 5 p.m. on 10/16 addressing both her authority and whether 14.3 applies to Trump. Trump is invited to file an amicus brief by 10/23.

Minnesota

- In Growe v. Simon, briefing continues ahead of the November 2 oral argument

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 9/8/2022 4:44:50 PM
To: Caroline Chambers [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: ISD report

Thanks!

Heather

From: Caroline Chambers <caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, September 8, 2022 12:34 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: ISD report

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather -
Attached is the ISD report we discussed.

Caroline Chambers | Senior Advisor
States United Democracy Center
202-365-2521 | @statesunited
caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/15/2023 11:12:24 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief
Attachments: Davis 23-128 Resp to Show Cause.docx

Importance: High

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/15/2023 11:16:57 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:16 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will take a look this evening.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:12:24 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/15/2023 11:24:49 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DRAFT Davis brief
Attachments: Litigation Tracker Exhibit (002).docx

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:16 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will take a look this evening.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 7:12:24 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/16/2023 11:38:21 AM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DRAFT Davis brief

Ok sounds good.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Sunday, October 15, 2023 11:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Copying Vic this time.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 11:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 7:12 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/16/2023 4:04:26 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Thanks a bunch.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, October 16, 2023 11:31 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: FW: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Marina Eisner <Marina@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Monday, October 16, 2023 at 10:37 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Marina Eisner (she/her) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
301.580.4000 | @statesunited
marina@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Monday, October 16, 2023 at 9:32 AM
To: Marina Eisner <Marina@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/16/2023 4:06:44 PM
To: Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: RE: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

From: Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, October 16, 2023 10:16 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

-- Victoria

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 11:06 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>, Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

Copying Vic this time.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 11:06 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: DRAFT Davis brief

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Sunday, October 15, 2023 at 7:12 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DRAFT Davis brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/19/2023 5:18:38 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Subpoena
Attachments: Jocelyn Benson TRIAL_subpoena_witness_.pdf

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF GEORGIA, FULTON COUNTY

SUBPOENA FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF WITNESS

PURSUANT TO O.C.G.A. § 24-13-21

TO: Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson

YOU ARE HEREBY COMMANDED, that laying all other business aside, you be and appear before the Superior Court of Fulton County, Fulton County Courthouse, 136 Pryor Street SW, Atlanta, Georgia 30303, to be held on October 23, 2023, at 9:00 A.M. in Courtroom 5A, to be sworn as a witness for the State of Georgia and to give testimony in the case of State of Georgia vs. Donald John Trump et al., Fulton County Superior Court Case No. 23SC188947.

You are placed on "on call" status until you are released from this subpoena by the Court, and you will receive at least 48 hours' notice before your presence is required under the terms of this subpoena.

HEREIN FAIL NOT, under the penalty of law by authority of the Hon. Scott McAfee, Judge, Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia, this 16th day of October 2023.

Ché Alexander
Clerk of Superior Court
(404) 613-5313

Subpoena issued by:

/s/ Grant Rood
Grant Rood
GA Bar No. 955552
Deputy District Attorney
Fulton County District Attorney's Office
136 Pryor Street, 3rd Floor
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(404) 612-4981

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/19/2023 4:15:38 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Challenger case - resounding loss in O'Halloran & DeVisser
Attachments: O'Halloran & DeVisser opinion.pdf

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If this opinion indicates that it is "FOR PUBLICATION," it is subject to revision until final publication in the Michigan Appeals Reports.

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF APPEALS

PHILIP M. O'HALLORAN, M.D., BRADEN GIACOBAZZI, ROBERT CUSHMAN, PENNY CRIDER, and KENNETH CRIDER, Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v

SECRETARY OF STATE and DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF ELECTIONS,

Defendants-Appellants

FOR PUBLICATION
October 19, 2023
9:15 a.m.

No. 363503
Court of Claims
LC No. 22-000162-MZ

RICHARD DEVISSER, MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN PARTY, and REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE,

Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v

SECRETARY OF STATE and DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF ELECTIONS, Defendants-Appellants.

No. 363505
Court of Claims
LC No. 22-000164-MZ

Before: BOONSTRA, P.J., and BORRELLO and FEENEY, JJ.

PER CURIAM.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This consolidated appeal concerns various challenges by plaintiffs[1] to a manual defendants published in May 2022 providing instructions to election challengers and poll challengers. The manual was not published as a formal administrative rule under the Administrative Procedures Act (APA), MCL 24.201 et seq. As the trial court, the Court of Claims observed at the opening of its opinion, "[a]n executive branch department cannot do by instructional guidance what it must do by promulgated rule. This straightforward legal maxim does most of the work in resolving these two consolidated cases." Not only do we agree with this observation, we also agree with the trial court's resolution on the issues now challenged on appeal. Accordingly, we affirm.

The May 2022 manual, titled "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers," is the latest version of a manual that defendants have published for the past 20 years, with the most recent version having been published in October 2020. The manual provides instructions[2] for election challengers and poll watchers. Plaintiffs filed these cases challenging various provisions in the manual. Plaintiffs include elections challengers for the November 2022 general election, two candidates for the Legislature, the Michigan Republican Party, and the Republican National Committee.

The trial court summarized the facts underlying this case as follows:

> Plaintiffs include several election challengers for the November 2022 general election; two candidates for the Michigan Legislature; the Michigan Republican Party; and the Republican National Committee. Section 730 of the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.1 et seq., permits political parties to designate challengers to be present in the room where the ballot box is kept during the election. MCL 168.730. These consolidated cases relate to a manual that the Michigan Bureau of Elections regularly issues relating to election challengers and poll watchers. By all accounts, the Bureau has issued several iterations of the manual since at least 2003; the one just prior to the current one was issued in October 2020. In May 2022, defendants drafted and published the current version titled, "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers" ("May 2022 Manual"). . . .

---

[1] As did the trial court, when necessary to distinguish between the two sets of plaintiffs, we shall refer to the plaintiffs in Docket No. 363503 as the "O'Halloran plaintiffs" and those in Docket No. 363505 as the "DeVisser plaintiffs." When no such distinction is necessary, they shall collectively be referred to simply as "plaintiffs."

[2] The introductory paragraph of the manual describes its purpose as follows:

> This publication is designed to familiarize election challengers, poll watchers, election inspectors, and members of the public with the rights and duties of election challengers and poll watchers in Michigan. Election challengers and poll watchers play a constructive role in ensuring elections are conducted in an open, fair, and orderly manner by following these instructions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On September 28, 2022, plaintiffs Philip O'Halloran, Braden Giacobazzi, Robert Cushman, Penny Crider, and Kenneth Crider (collectively, "O'Halloran Plaintiffs"), sued defendants in this Court in Docket No. 22-000162-MZ. O'Halloran, Giacobazzi, and Cushman are designated election challengers for the November 2022 general election. Penny Crider is a candidate for the Michigan House of Representatives, and Kenneth Crider is a candidate for the Michigan Senate. The O'Halloran Complaint raises two claims. In Count I, the O'Halloran Plaintiffs allege that the May 2022 Manual violates Section 733 of the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.733. In Count II, the O'Halloran Plaintiffs assert that the May 2022 Manual was promulgated without the proper notice-and-comment requirements outlined in the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"), MCL 24.201 et seq.

Two days later, plaintiffs Richard DeVisser (another election challenger), the Michigan Republican Party, and the Republican National Committee (collectively, "DeVisser Plaintiffs") sued defendants separately in Docket No. 22-000164-MM. In Count I, the DeVisser Plaintiffs allege that certain provisions of the May 2022 Manual violate the Michigan Election Law. Like the O'Halloran Plaintiffs, the DeVisser Plaintiffs also allege that the May 2022 Manual is a rule promulgated without the required notice-and-comment procedures outlined in the APA.

Both sets of plaintiffs request . . . a declaration that the publication is void in toto, or alternatively, that certain passages must be removed before the November 2022 general election. The O'Halloran Plaintiffs have moved for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and preliminary injunction; similarly, the DeVisser Plaintiffs have sought expedited declaratory relief under MCR 2.605(O).

. . . [T]his Court consolidated the cases on October 3, 2022, and ordered defendants to show cause why the relief requested in the complaints should not be granted. Defendants responded and moved for summary disposition . . . .

. . . Defendants . . . assert that the May 2022 Manual did not need to be promulgated through notice-and-comment rulemaking because the Michigan Election Law grants the Secretary of State broad authority to issue instructions, advice, and directives, and the May 2022 Manual fits within these categories. . . .

Both sets of plaintiffs responded to defendants' motion for summary disposition. They reiterate that the May 2022 Manual's language extends beyond the Michigan Election Law and should have been promulgated as a rule in accordance with the APA.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The trial court issued its extensive opinion and order on October 20, 2022.[3] Ultimately, the trial court granted some but not all of the relief plaintiffs requested. Plaintiffs have not appealed and challenged the denial of that relief. While the trial court rejected some of what it described as "broad, sweeping" requests for relief, it did identify five specific areas where plaintiffs were entitled to relief: (1) the credential-form requirement, (2), communication with election inspectors other than the "challenger liaison," (3) the prohibition on recording "impermissible challenges," (4) the prohibition on electronic devices in the Absent Voter Counting Board (ACVB) facilities, and (5) appointment of challengers on election day. On appeal, defendants do not challenge the last category. Accordingly, we consider the first four and, like the trial court, shall look to each in turn.

There are two primary issues present in this case. First, whether the challenged provisions in the manual are consistent with Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.1 et seq., or are in conflict with the statute. And, second, whether defendants needed to promulgate those provisions, even if authorized by statute, by a formal rule as required by the Administrative Procedures Act (APA), MCL 24.201 et seq., which the manual was not. While a rule promulgated in accordance with the APA has the force of law, Slis v Michigan, 332 Mich App 312, 346; 956 NW2d 569 (2020), other pronouncements do not, Twp of Hopkins v State Boundary Comm'n, 340 Mich App 669, 689; 988 NW2d 1 (2022). As explained in Hopkins:

> The APA "applies to all agencies and agency proceedings not expressly exempted." MCL 24.313. An "agency" is defined as a "state department, bureau, division, section, board, commission, trustee, authority or officer, created by the constitution, statute, or agency action." MCL 24.203(2). There is no dispute that the Commission is a state agency. The APA defines a "rule" to include "an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency ...." MCL 24.207. A "rule" does not include a "guideline" "that in itself does not have the force and effect of law but is merely explanatory." MCL 24.207(h). The APA defines "guideline" as "an agency statement or declaration of policy that the agency intends to follow, that does not have the force or effect of law, and that binds the agency but does not bind any other person." MCL 24.203(7). The APA prescribes how [3] On November 3, 2022, the Supreme Court ordered that "the October 20, 2022 opinion and order of the Court of Claims, and any decision of the Court of Appeals in this matter, is stayed pending the appeal period for the filing of an application for leave to appeal in this Court, and if an application for leave to appeal is filed from the Court of Appeals decision, until further order of this Court." DeVisser v Secretary of State, 510 Mich 994; 981 NW2d 30 (2022); O'Halloran v Secretary of State, 510 Mich 970; 981 NW2d 149 (2022). Two Justices separately concurred, and two dissented, in lengthy separate statements. DeVisser, 510 Mich at 994-1018; O'Halloran, 510 Mich at 970-994.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> agencies adopt guidelines, MCL 24.224 and MCL 24.225 and specifies that "[a]n agency shall not adopt a guideline in lieu of a rule," MCL 24.226. [340 Mich App at 689.]

Moreover, an administrative rule cannot conflict with a statute. Brightmoore Gardens, LLC v Marijuana Regulatory Agency, 337 Mich App 149, 161; 975 NW2d 52 (2021) ("an administrative agency is not empowered to change law enactive by the Legislature. . . .When an administrative rule conflicts with a statute, the statute controls"). Because this case involves an interpretation of a statute, we review the trial court's decision de novo. Slis, 332 Mich App at 335.

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) continues to provide[4] as follows:

> Except as otherwise provided in this constitution or in the constitution or laws of the United States the legislature shall enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all nominations and elections, to preserve the purity of elections, to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting. . . .

According to MCL 168.21, "[t]he secretary of state shall be the chief election officer of the state and shall have supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of this act." Further, under MCL 168.31(1), the Secretary "shall do all of the following":

> (a) Subject to subsection (2),[5] issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act . . . for the conduct of elections and registrations in accordance with the laws of this state.
>
> (b) Advise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections.
>
> (c) Publish and furnish for the use in each election precinct before each state primary and election a manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on assisting voters in casting their ballots, directions on the location of voting stations

---

[4] The recent amendment of Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1) only expressly recognizes that the right to vote includes the right to be free from impositions of unreasonable burdens in doing so. The new provisions neither added anything to existing authority as concerns the extent to which the Secretary of State may issue binding authority without recourse to APA rulemaking, nor otherwise call for reading the pertinent provisions of the Election Law in a different light. Accordingly, the constitutional amendment of which the amicus curiae makes issue does not obviate the need to review the decision below on its merits under then-existing law.

[5] Subsection (2) requires the Secretary of State to "promulgate rules establishing uniform standards for state and local nominating, recall, and ballot question petition signatures."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

in polling places, procedures and forms for processing challenges, and procedures on prohibiting campaigning in the polling places as prescribed in this act.

* * *

(e) Prescribe and require uniform forms, notices, and supplies the secretary of state considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections and registrations.

* * *

(h) Investigate, or cause to be investigated by local authorities, the administration of election laws, and report violations of the election laws and regulations to the attorney general or prosecuting attorney, or both, for prosecution.

* * *

(n) Create an election day dispute resolution team that has regional representatives of the department of state, which team shall appear on site, if necessary.

Nondelegation Doctrine

Although neither the trial court nor the parties have framed their positions in terms of nondelegation doctrine, to the extent that defendants suggest that their prerogative to issue "instructions . . . for the conduct of elections" under MCL 168.31(1)(a) authorizes them to issue any new requirement without following APA rule procedures simply by calling it an instruction, that doctrine is implicated.

Our state Constitution includes the following provision: "The powers of government are divided into three branches: legislative, executive and judicial. No person exercising powers of one branch shall exercise powers properly belonging to another branch except as expressly provided in this constitution." Const 1963, art 3, § 2. Thus, our Constitution prohibits the Legislature from delegating its lawmaking powers to the executive branch. The "essential purpose" of the doctrine is "to protect the public from misuses of the delegated power." Blue Cross & Blue Shield v Governor, 422 Mich 1, 51; 367 NW2d 1 (1985). The Legislature may, however, authorize an administrative agency to exercise certain powers when fulfilling its legislatively created duties and responsibilities. See, e.g., Mich Central R Co v Mich R Comm, 160 Mich 355, 361-368; 125 NW 549 (1910); G F Redmond & Co v Mich Securities Comm, 222 Mich 1, 192 NW 688 (1923). The test for determining whether the Legislature has properly authorized such agency action is whether the Legislature has prescribed "standards . . . as reasonably precise as the subject matter requires or permits" when granting regulatory or rulemaking authority to an administrative agency. Osius v St Clair Shores, 344 Mich 693, 698; 75 NW2d 25, 27 (1956).

One legal commentator has concluded that "Michigan decisions" provide "no clear rule as to when a legislative rule must be promulgated or, for that matter, whether a rule is legislative or interpretative." McKim, III, The Sometimes Dubious Efficacy of Michigan Department of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Treasury "Rules," "Revenue Administrative Bulletins," "Letter Rulings," "Questions and Answers" and Other Publications, 60 Tax Law 1019, 1048 (2007).

Although we are aware of no authority that stands for the proposition that the Legislature may not delegate to the executive branch the authority to issue a rule, as defined by MCL 24.207, without requiring the APA's rulemaking procedures, we proceed in our review while keenly mindful of the nondelegation doctrine and the caselaw calling for adherence to APA procedures in particular.

Rulemaking

The APA defines a "rule" as "an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency, including the amendment, suspension, or rescission of the law enforced or administered by the agency." MCL 24.207. The APA further states that "[a]n agency shall not adopt a guideline in lieu of a rule." MCL 24.226. "An agency's failure to follow the process outlined in the APA renders a rule invalid." Mich Charitable Gaming Ass'n v Michigan, 310 Mich App 584, 594; 873 NW2d 827 (2015), lv den 499 Mich 887 (2016). "In order for an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability to have the force of law, it must fall under the definition of a properly promulgated rule. If it does not, it is merely explanatory." Danse Corp v Madison Hts, 466 Mich 175, 181; 644 NW2d 721 (2002).

After setting forth the general definition of an administrative "rule," MCL 24.207 sets forth a list of things that do not constitute such rules, including the following:

> (g) An intergovernmental, interagency, or intra-agency memorandum, directive, or communication that does not affect the rights of, or procedures and practices available to, the public.
>
> * * *
>
> (j) A decision by an agency to exercise or not to exercise a permissive statutory power, although private rights or interests are affected.

"[I]n order to reflect the APA's preference for policy determinations pursuant to rules, the definition of 'rule' is to be broadly construed, while the exceptions are to be narrowly construed." American Federation of State, Co & Mun Employees v Dep't of Mental Health, 452 Mich 1, 10; 550 NW2d 190 (1996).

Defendants argue that the challenged instructions fall under the "permissive statutory power" exception to the definition of "rule" set forth in MCL 24.207(j). In support, defendants cite By Lo Oil Co v Dep't of Treasury, 267 Mich App 19; 703 NW2d 822 (2005), and Hinderer v Dep't of Social Servs, 95 Mich App 716, 727; 291 NW2d 672 (1980).

In By Lo Oil, 267 Mich App at 47, this Court recited that "Subsection 7(j) excepts administrative action from the APA's definition of 'rule' when the Legislature has either explicitly or implicitly authorized the action in question," and concluded that the agency's use of an administrative bulletin to determine certain tax liability came under that exception because the pertinent statute "explicitly required the department to 'prescribe' the invoice required . . . and did not mandate the department to do so pursuant to the procedural requirements of the APA."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Hinderer, 95 Mich App at 727, this Court approved an agency's use of a "lag budgeting system" for reducing benefits for a recipient of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, which was not promulgated as an APA rule, on the ground that the agency was statutorily empowered to "adopt . . . a budgetary method of the director's own choosing."

Defendants assert that the Secretary of State's duty under MCL 168.31(1)(a) to "issue instructions and promulgate rules . . . for the conduct of elections" includes the legislative authority "to issue instructions rather than rules" as an exception to the requirement that administrative rules be promulgated in accord with the APA. The trial court held that "the Secretary's responsibility for issuing instructions is distinct from the authority to promulgate rules, where the latter has the force and effect of law, but the former does not." In fact, defendants' position would leave them at liberty to issue binding regulations at will, without ever having to adhere to the notice-and-hearing requirements of the APA. MCL 168.31(1)(a) preserves the distinction between mere instructions and APA rules, thus calling on the defendants to respect that distinction and issue each kind of regulation with the degree of formality that is required.

The question, then, for each of the four contested facets of the May 2022 Manual at issue is whether the challenged regulation comports with the Election Law, and, if so, whether it constitutes a sufficient extension of that enabling law that its validity depends on promulgation as an APA rule.

The credential form requirement.

MCL 168.732 requires that election challenges possess written credentials:

> Authority signed by the recognized chairman or presiding officer of the chief managing committee of any organization or committee of citizens interested in the adoption or defeat of any measure to be voted for or upon at any election, or interested in preserving the purity of elections and in guarding against the abuse of the elective franchise, or of any political party in such county, township, city, ward or village, shall be sufficient evidence of the right of such challengers to be present inside the room where the ballot box is kept, provided the provisions of the preceding sections have been complied with. The authority shall have written or printed thereon the name of the challenger to whom it is issued and the number of the precinct to which the challenger has been assigned.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Defendants have created a form that challengers are purportedly required to use to establish their credentials. Specifically, on pages 4-5 of the manual,[6] it states:

> This authority, also known as the Michigan Challenger Credential Card, must be on a form promulgated by the Secretary of State. The blank template credential form is available on the Secretary of State's website. The entire credential form, including the challenger's name, the date of the election at which the challenger is credentialed to serve, and the signature of the chairman or presiding officer of the organization appointing the challenger, must be completed. If the entire form is not completed, the credential is invalid and the individual presenting the form cannot serve as a challenger.

The trial court noted that this appears to be a new requirement and that in the past the political parties issued their own credential forms to challengers. The trial court further stated that it did not take issue with having a uniform credential form, but ultimately concluded that the Secretary lacks the authority to require that challengers use defendants' form:

> [O]ur Legislature expressly set out the "evidence" needed to show that a person was properly credentialed as a challenger. In MCL 168. 732, a section entitled, "Presence of challenger in room containing ballot box; evidence of right to be present," (emphasis added), our Legislature set forth the following three items that evidence a valid challenger: (a) "[a]uthority signed by the recognized chairman or presiding officer" of the organization or committee (here, major political party); (b) the written or printed name of the challenger; and (c) the precinct number for the challenger's assigned precinct. Because our Legislature set forth three specific requirements that a person must satisfy to evidence that the person is a valid challenger, defendants cannot, in the absence of a promulgated rule, add a fourth, i.e., the mandatory use of a particular form issued by the Secretary of State.

The trial court did acknowledge that the Secretary of State can certainly create a form for the challengers' convenience. As the trial court observed, > our Legislature has set forth the exhaustive list of evidence for validating a credential, and if a purported credential includes the three items in MCL 168.732, then that purported credential fully complies with the Michigan Election Law—nothing more is required. The provision in the May 2022 Manual requiring the use of the uniform challenger-credential form violates the Michigan Election Law and APA.

[6] All references to the manual are from the version appended as an exhibit to the trial court's October 20, 2022 opinion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We agree with the trial court. The Legislature has neither required nor authorized the creation of a mandatory form. Indeed, given that the Legislature has set forth the requirements for challenger credentialing, nothing more may be added.[7]

The requirement that communication only be with the "Challenger Liaison."

On page five of the manual, defendants create the position of "Challenger Liaison," who is one of the election inspectors. On the top of page six, the manual it states in bold print: "Challengers must not communicate with election inspectors other than the challenger liaison or the challenger liaison's designee unless otherwise instructed by the challenger liaison or a member of the clerk's staff." This directive is reinforced later on the page with this statement: "Challengers must communicate only with the challenger liaison unless otherwise instructed by the challenger liaison or a member of the clerk's staff. Challengers must not communicate with election inspectors who are not the challenger liaison unless otherwise instructed by the challenger liaison or a member of the clerk's staff." The restriction is again repeated on page 21. According to the manual, a violation of this or any other instruction or a direction given by an election inspector results in a warning being issued and a repeat violation may result in the challenger's ejection.

The trial court concluded that this requirement was inconsistent with the statute:

> Plaintiffs argue that the manual's limitation on which inspectors the challengers may interact with violates MCL 168.733(1)(e), which provides that a challenger may bring certain issues to "an election inspector's attention" without restriction to a particular inspector.
>
> The authority to designate a "challenger liaison" is absent from the Michigan Election Law—in fact, the very label appears nowhere in statute. Defendants have not presented this Court with any statute, common law, case law, or promulgated rule that gives them the authority to restrict with which election inspector a challenger can communicate. Our Legislature provided a challenger the right to communicate to "an" election inspector, and defendants cannot artificially restrict that to a designated inspector. Whether it makes sense to have such a liaison is one thing; it is another thing entirely to require, at the risk of being ejected, a challenger to speak to only the designated liaison. This provision of the May 2022 Manual goes well beyond what is provided in law and impermissibly restricts a challenger's ability to bring certain issues to any inspector's attention. Accordingly, [7] We do note some apparent contradiction in the trial court's opinion. It states that "defendants cannot, in the absence of a promulgated rule, add a fourth" requirement. [10/20/20 Opinion and Order, p 15.] This would imply that defendants could, if it had promulgated a rule, establish the requirement. It later states that mandatory use of defendants' uniform challenger credential form "violates the Michigan Election Law and APA." But if it would violate the election statute, then it would seem to follow that defendants could not require the use of the form even if it did promulgate a rule. In any event, at this point we need not engage in an extensive analysis of this point as defendants have not promulgated this as a rule.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the manual must be revised to make clear that a challenger need not bring an issue to the attention of only a liaison challenger, but instead can bring such issue to the attention of any election inspector at the applicable location. [Emphasis in original.]

MCL 168.733(1) provides in pertinent part:

> The board of election inspectors shall provide space for the challengers within the polling place that enables the challengers to observe the election procedure and each person applying to vote. A challenger may do 1 or more of the following:
>
> * * *
>
> (e) Bring to an election inspector's attention any of the following . . . .

As the trial court stated, the statute itself authorizes a challenger to bring a matter to the attention of "an election inspector," not a "challenger liaison." We agree with the trial court that it may be beneficial to designate one of the election inspectors as the challenger liaison to serve as a central point of contact for the challengers. But the statute does not grant defendants the authority to require that a challenger only bring matters to such a liaison and, perhaps more importantly, the statute explicitly authorizes challengers to communicate with any election inspector. Defendants' attempt to restrict that right is a violation of the statute.

The prohibition on recording "impermissible challenges."

This issue involves a restriction in the manual on what challenges may be made. The manual explains the process for making a challenge:

> A challenge must be made to a challenger liaison. The challenger liaison will determine if the challenge is permissible as explained below. Assuming the challenge is permissible, the substance of the challenge, the time of the challenge, the name of the challenger, and the resolution of the challenge must be recorded in the poll book. If the challenge is rejected, the reason for that determination must be recorded in the poll book.
>
> An impermissible challenge, as explained below, need not be noted in the poll book.

The manual defines an "impermissible challenge" as:

> Impermissible challenges are challenges that are made on improper grounds. Because the challenge is impermissible, the challenger liaison does not evaluate the challenge to accept it or reject it. Impermissible challenges are:
>
> • Challenges made to something other than a voter's eligibility or an election process;
>
> • Challenges made without a sufficient basis, as explained below; and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

• Challenges made for a prohibited reason.

The manual then states that while an election inspector is not required to note an impermissible challenge in the poll books, they may do so. In fact, it "encourages" an inspector to note the content of the impermissible challenge and any warning given to the challenger. If a challenger makes multiple impermissible challenges, the inspector is encouraged to note the content and number of such challenges. The manual then states in bold type: "Repeated impermissible challenges may result in a challenger's removal from the polling place or absent voter ballot processing facility."

MCL 168.727(2) outlines the duties of an election inspector when a challenge is made:

> (2) Upon a challenge being made under subsection (1), an election inspector shall immediately do all of the following:
>
> (a) Identify as provided in sections 745 and 746 a ballot voted by the challenged individual, if any.
>
> (b) Make a written report including all of the following information:
>
> (i) All election disparities or infractions complained of or believed to have occurred.
>
> (ii) The name of the individual making the challenge.
>
> (iii) The time of the challenge.
>
> (iv) The name, telephone number, and address of the challenged individual.
>
> (v) Other information considered appropriate by the election inspector.
>
> (c) Retain the written report created under subdivision (b) and make it a part of the election record.
>
> (d) Inform a challenged elector of his or her rights under section 729.

As the trial court noted, the statute does not use the terms "permissible" and "impermissible" in describing challenges.[8] Nor does it require the documentation of only "permissible" challenges. It requires the documentation of all challenges, permissible or impermissible. Accordingly, the trial court concluded that > to the extent that the May 2022 Manual permits an election inspector not to record a challenger's challenge to a person's voting rights because, in the election

[8] MCL 168.727(3) does state that a "challenger shall not make a challenge indiscriminately and without good cause." And it also provides that an "individual who challenges a qualified and registered elector of a voting precinct for the purpose of annoying or delaying voters is guilty of a misdemeanor." But it does not excuse such improper challenges from being documented.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> inspector's view, such challenge does not have a sufficient basis, this is directly contrary to our Legislature's requirement in MCL 168.727(2) that a record of the challenge be made. Even if the challenge is determined to be without basis in law or fact, if the challenge is made, it must be recorded. Id.

The trial court did conclude the statutory documentation requirement only extends to challenges regarding voter qualification and that defendants have the discretion to adopt a recordkeeping system regarding challenges not involving voter rights, i.e., for a reason other than those listed in MCL 168.727(1) or MCL 168.733(1)(c).

The trial court also addressed the prohibition on making repeated impermissible challenges and it resulting in the challenger's removal. MCL 168.733(3) provides a basis for expulsion of a challenger: "Any evidence of drinking of alcoholic beverages or disorderly conduct is sufficient cause for the expulsion of a challenger from the polling place or the counting board." The statute does not authorize defendants to adopt a rule providing other reasons for expulsion. Accordingly, unless the repeated "impermissible" challenges rise to the level of disorderly conduct, we agree with the trial court that there is no basis in law for the challenger's expulsion.

The prohibition on electronic devices in the Absent Voter Counting Board (ACVB) facilities.

The final provision of the manual that the trial court found problematic is the restriction on electronic devices in the ACVB: "No electronic devices capable of sending or receiving information, including phones, laptops, tablets, or smartwatches, are permitted in an absent voter ballot processing facility while absent voter ballots are being processed until the close of polls on Election Day."[9] A challenger in violation of this rule may be ejected from the AVCB facility.

The trial court found statutory authority regarding restrictions on communicating certain information, but not on a ban of the possession of electronic devises:

> Thus, MCL 168.765a(9) and (10), collectively, prohibit a challenger from disclosing information relating to the processing of absentee ballots before the polls close, the disclosure of which is a felony. But MCL 168.765a does not categorically prohibit the possession of electronic devices in the AVCB facility or otherwise suggest that physical sequestration includes (or equates to) a prohibition on the possession of electronic devices.

The trial court then noted that the Legislature had plenty of opportunity in recent amendments to the election statute to include such a restriction, but did not do so:

> MCL 168.765a was enacted four years ago as a provision in a 2018 update to the Michigan Election Law. See 2018 PA 123. Our Legislature amended the same statute twice in 2020. See 2020 PA 95 and 2020 PA 177. Cell phones and [9] The manual does permit challengers at polling places to possess electronic devices, with some restriction on their use. The prohibition on possessing one only applies to an ACVB.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> other electronic devices have been prevalent for decades and have long had the capability to record. In the face of the existence of these devices, our Legislature did not see fit to ban them in AVCB facilities when it added section 765a to the Michigan Election Law in 2018 or when it amended the statute twice in 2020. Rather, our Legislature enacted two different prophylactic measures to guard against the communication of election-related information—I.e., first, the taking of an oath, and second, physical sequestration at the AVCB facility—and, for violating either measure or otherwise communicating election-related information, our Legislature imposed the penalty of a felony conviction. See MCL 168. 765a(9) and (10). Our Legislature could have added a third prophylactic measure, maybe even the one favored by defendants, but it chose not to do so. When our Legislature enacts a public policy in one particular way but not another, its choice must be respected and enforced by the other two branches. Spalding v Swiacki, 338 Mich App 126, 138; 979 NW2d 338 (2021) ("When the Legislature expressly sets a particular standard in one section of a statute but not in another, we presume that the Legislature intended for different standards to apply to the different sections—i.e., the Legislature's word choice was intentional.").

In sum, use of an electronic device to communicate information regarding the processing or tallying of votes is prohibited, under pain of a felony conviction, but the mere possession of an electronic device is not permitted under Michigan's election law. While the cautious approach is, as the trial court points out, for a challenger or poll watcher to simply leave their electronic device outside the room, the statute simply does not require it. As the trial court stated, "[p]rohibiting electronic devices in the AVCB facility might be a good idea, but before a good idea can become law or have legal force and effect, that idea must be embodied within an enacted statute or promulgated rule. The Court declines to read a prophylactic measure into a statute that does not appear in its plain language." We agree.

Defendants have broad authority to issue binding non-rule instructions on election workers, but not on challengers or other outside observers. Election workers, including inspectors, conduct operations that come under the authority of the Secretary of State, and thus while doing so are effectively the Secretary's subordinates. Accordingly, instructions directed at such subordinates are not directives of "general applicability" for purposes of the definition of "rule" under MCL 24.207. Defendants are thus free to issue binding instructions applicable to election workers without resort to the APA's formal rulemaking procedures. In contrast, election challengers, by the nature of the office, are outsiders standing ready to raise objections to how elections are conducted. Instructions directed at the latter thus go beyond defendants' immediate scope of inherent supervisory authority and instead function as regulations of general applicability, which for that reason must be issued as properly promulgated APA rules. Defendants may issue mere instructions that are binding on election workers who operate as defendants' employees and subordinates, but regulations targeting election challengers or poll watchers reach beyond defendants' general supervisory scope and must be promulgated as APA rules.

In conclusion, the relief that the trial court granted with respect to these issues is "that defendants shall have the discretion either to (1) rescind the May 2022 Manual in its entirety; (2) revise the May 2022 Manual to comply with this Opinion and Order; or (3) revise an earlier iteration of the manual to comply with this Opinion and Order." For the reasons stated above, we are not persuaded that the trial court erred in granting this relief, and defendants shall comply with the trial court's decree.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Affirmed. Plaintiffs may tax costs.

/s/ Mark T. Boonstra
/s/ Stephen L. Borrello
/s/ Kathleen A. Feeney

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/17/2023 7:14:54 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Davis filings from yesterday
Attachments: answer01 complaint Davis 23-128.pdf; brief01 exhibits.pdf; brief01 resp & part MSD Davis 23-128.pdf; Brief, MSD Davis, Trump, Final.pdf; Motion for Summary, Davis, Trump.pdf; Motion to Intervene, Davis, Trump.pdf

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

v

No. 23-000128-MM

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as the duly elected Secretary of State,

Defendant.

Robert Davis, In Pro Per
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1
313.523 PII MCL 15.243
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S ANSWER TO VERIFIED COMPLAINT

Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson, through her attorneys, answers Plaintiff's Verified Complaint as follows:

I. PARTIES

1. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Admitted.

3. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

II. JURISDICTION

4. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

5. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

6. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

III. CAUSES OF ACTION

COUNT I

Declaratory Judgment Declaring That Defendant Secretary of State Cannot Enforce Public Act 2 of 2023, Which Changed The Date of The 2024 Presidential Primary From March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024, And Further Declare That the Current Version of MCL 168.613a Controls And Thus, The 2024 Presidential Primary Election Must Be Held On March 12, 2024.

7. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

8. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the complaint for the reason that it speaks for itself.

9. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

10. Admitted.

11. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

12. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

13. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

14. Admitted.

15. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the website for the reason that it speaks for itself.

16. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the website for the reason that it speaks for itself.

17. Denied.

18. Defendant admits that the publication referenced was published and that it identifies the primary date as February 27, 2024. In further answer, Defendant notes that the publication advises that "these procedures are subject to change by the State Legislature, presidential candidates interested in participating in Michigan's February 27, 2024 primary election or November 5, 2024 general election are encouraged to consults our website, Michigan.gov/Elections, for updates."

19. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

20. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

21. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the email for the reason that it speaks for itself.

22. Admitted.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

23. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

24. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

25. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

26. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

27. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

28. Admitted.

29. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

30. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

31. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

32. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

33. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

34. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

35. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

36. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

37. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

38. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

39. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

40. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

41. Denied.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

COUNT II

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Enforce The Current Version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and Compel Defendant Secretary of State To Hold The 2024 Presidential Primary Election On March 12, 2024.

42. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

43. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

44. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

45. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

46. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

47. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

48. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

49. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

50. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

51. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

52. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

53. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

54. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

55. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

COUNT III

Declaratory Judgment Declaring The Defendant Secretary of State Has A Legal Duty Under Mich. Const. 1963, art. 11, §1 and Michigan Case Law To Determine Whether A Presidential Candidate Satisfies The Eligibility Requirements To Run For President of the United States As Set Forth Under The United States Constitution.

56. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

57. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

58. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

59. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the email for the reason that it speaks for itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

60. Admitted.

61. Defendant denies that Plaintiff's declaratory ruling request was "meritorious." In further, answer Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the letter for the reason that it speaks for itself.

62. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the email for the reason that it speaks for itself.

63. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

64. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

65. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

66. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

67. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

68. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

69. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

70. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

71. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

72. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

73. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

74. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

75. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

76. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

77. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the constitutional provision for the reason that it speaks for itself.

78. Admitted.

79. Defendant admits that she was administered the oath of office on January 1, 2023.

80. Admitted.

81. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

82. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

83. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

84. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

85. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

86. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

87. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

88. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

89. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

90. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

COUNT IV

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Decide The Merits and Issue A Decision On Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request For Declaratory Ruling Concerning Former President Trump's Possible Disqualification Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

91. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

92. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

93. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

94. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

95. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

96. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

97. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

98. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

99. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

100. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

101. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

102. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

103. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

104. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

COUNT V

Declaratory Judgment Declaring Defendant Secretary of State Was Required To Compel With MCL 15.51, Which Required The Defendant Secretary of State To File A $25,000 Bond Within 20 Days of Assuming Office.

105. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

106. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

107. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

108. Admitted.

109. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

110. Defendant admits that she was administered the oath of office on January 1, 2023.

111. Denied.

112. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

113. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the FOIA request for the reason that it speaks for itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

114. Admitted.

115. Admitted.

116. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the application for quo warranto for the reason that it speaks for itself.

117. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the letter denying the application for quo warranto for the reason that it speaks for itself.

118. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

119. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

120. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

121. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

122. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

123. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

124. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

125. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

COUNT VI

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Promulgate Rules In Accordance With APA By January 1, 2024 To Implement The Provisions of MCL 168,759a(17).

126. Defendant incorporates by reference her responses to the previous paragraphs.

127. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

128. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations in this paragraph concerning the statute for the reason that it speaks for itself.

129. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

130. Denied.

131. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

132. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

133. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

134. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

135. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

136. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

137. Defendant neither admits nor denies the allegations contained in this paragraph for lack of sufficient information or knowledge to form a belief about the truth of the allegations asserted and thus leaves Plaintiff to his proofs. In further answer, Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

138. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

139. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

140. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

141. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

142. Defendant neither admits nor denies Plaintiff's allegations in this paragraph as they are legal conclusions which require no response.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

1. The Michigan Election Law does not empower the Secretary of State to unilaterally determine a presidential candidate ineligible for the presidential primary or general election under the circumstances alleged in this complaint.

2. Defendant reserves the right to raise defenses or assert other matters revealed by its continuing investigation and discovery, including all defenses available under MCR 2.111, 2.112, 2.113, 2.114, 2.115, and 2.116.

3. Plaintiff's claims are moot where the Secretary has already undertaken the action sought to be compelled through mandamus.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: October 16, 2023

PROOF OF SERVICE

Heather S. Meingast certifies that on October 16, 2023, she served a copy of the above document in this matter on all counsel of record and parties in pro per via MiFILE.

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 1

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2023 Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification Cases

Active Cases

(As of 10/11/2023)

Alaska

Case	Description
Castro vs. Dahlstrom 23-cv-00011 U.S. District Court, District of Alaska	On September 29, 2023, John A. Castro, a Republican presidential candidate, filed a pro se civil action against Alaska Lieutenant Governor Nancy Dahlstrom and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Alaska according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Arizona

Case	Description
Castro v. Fontes 2:23-cv-01865 U.S. District Court, District of Arizona	On September 5, 2023, Castro filed a pro se civil action against Arizona Secretary of State Adrian Fontes and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Arizona according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro filed a TRO that the court converted to a preliminary injunction. A preliminary injunction hearing is scheduled for October 31, 2023.

California

Case	Description
Clark v. Weber 2:23-cv-07489 U.S. District Court, Central	On September 9, 2023, a Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief was filed on behalf of a California voter, identified as A.W. Clark, against California Secretary of State Shirley Weber. The complaint seeks declaratory relief that Donald J. Trump is "disqualified, prohibited, and barred from the office of president of the United States" and injunctive relief to bar Weber from placing Trump's name on any ballot in California

by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

District of California	under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Yagman argues that Trump "engaged in insurrection and/or rebellion," citing his role in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the U.S. Capitol. Plaintiff filed a preliminary injunction motion on September 22, 2023. On October 2, 2023 the court issued an order to show cause as to why the complaint shouldn't be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.
Castro v. Weber 2:23-cv-02172 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of California	On October 2, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Shirley Weber and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in California according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Colorado

Case	Description
Anderson v. Griswold District Court, City and County of Denver 2023CV32577 U.S. District Court, District of Colorado 1:23-cv-02291	On September 6, 2023, Colorado voters filed suit against Secretary of State Jena Griswold and Donald J. Trump, alleging that Trump's involvement in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the capitol qualifies as an insurrection and consequently disqualifies him as a candidate for the office of president under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The petitioners further assert that C.R.S. § 1-4-1204(4), § 1-1-113(1), § 13-51-105, and C.R.C.P. 57(a) enjoin the Colorado Secretary of State from granting Trump access to the ballot for any election in the state. The petition was filed by Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), a government ethics watchdog. The Colorado Republican Committee has intervened in the lawsuit. Trump removed the case to federal court, but the case was quickly remanded and is now in state court in Colorado. The parties are briefing several motions to dismiss and a five-day hearing is scheduled on October 30, 2023. The court denied President Trump's anti-SLAPP motion to dismiss.

Connecticut

Case	Description
Castro v. Thomas 3:23-cv-01238	On September 21, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Stephanie Thomas and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of Connecticut	Connecticut according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro also filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Motion for Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits.

Delaware

Case	Description
Castro v. Albence et al. 1:23-cv-01068 U.S. District Court, District of Delaware	On September 28, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against State Election Commissioner Anthony Albence and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Delaware according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Florida

Case	Description
Castro v. Trump U.S. District Court, Southern District of Florida 9:23-cv-80015-AMC U.S. Court of Appeals, 11th Circuit 23-12111	On January 6, 2023, Castro filed a civil action against Donald J. Trump in the Southern District of Florida. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Florida according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On February 16, 2023, Trump filed a motion to dismiss. On June 26, 2023, U.S. District Judge Aileen Cannon dismissed the case based on standing and ripeness. Castro filed an appeal, which is pending before the 11th Circuit. Castro also filed a petition for cert before judgment with the U.S. Supreme Court that seeks a ruling on the standing issue. On October 2, 2023, the Supreme Court denied Castro's petition for a writ of certiorari.

Kansas

Case	Description
Castro v. Schwab 6:23-cv-01184	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Scott Schwab and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of Kansas	insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Kansas according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Massachusetts

Case	Description
Castro v. Galvin 1:23-cv-12121 U.S. District Court, District of Massachusetts	On September 18, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State William Francis Galvin and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Massachusetts according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 25, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on The Merits.

Michigan

Case	Description
Castro v. Benson 23-000122-MZ Michigan Court of Claims	On August 31, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Michigan according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.
Davis v. Benson 23-000128-MB Michigan Court of Claims	On September 15, 2023, activist Robert Davis filed a civil action to require Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson to exclude Donald J. Trump from the Michigan primary ballot. In his complaint, Davis acknowledges that state statutes do not grant her such authority, instead arguing that her obligation to "support the Constitution of the United States" requires her to exclude unqualified candidates from the primary ballots. On September 19, Davis filed an Emergency Motion for Expedited Hearing & Briefing.
Davis v. Wayne County Election Commission 23-012484-AW	On September 27, 2023, Robert Davis filed a civil action against the Wayne County Election Commission, which is responsible for printing ballots for the county. Davis argues that the commission has the "legal duty" to remove Donald J. Trump from the ballot under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. The commission, which includes the treasurer, clerk, and chief probate judge for Wayne County, has already stated that it does not plan to make any decisions on this matter.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wayne County Circuit Court
LaBrant vs. Benson 23-000137-MZ Michigan Court of Claims	On September 29, 2023, Free Speech for People filed a complaint on behalf of four Michigan voters for a Declaratory Judgment and a Permanent Injunction asking that the Michigan Court of Claims enjoin Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson from including Donald J. Trump on the primary and general ballots in 2024. The complaint states that the events of January 6, 2021, qualify as an insurrection and that Trump's actions and lack of intervention in the matter satisfy the provisions of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which would disqualify Trump from holding the office in the future.

Minnesota

Case	Description
Growe v. Simon A23-1354 Minnesota Supreme Court	On September 12, 2023, Free Speech for People filed a petition on behalf of Minnesota voters against Secretary of State Steve Simon arguing that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding public office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The case was filed directly with the Minnesota Supreme Court under a state law that allows voters to directly petition to the state supreme court to disqualify a candidate. The petition argues that the events of January 6, 2021 qualify as an insurrection, that the effort to unlawfully overthrow the results of the 2020 election constitute a rebellion, and that Trump was "engaged" in both efforts despite not personally participating in storming the Capitol. The Republican Party of Minnesota has intervened in the case. The parties are briefing the issues ahead of oral argument scheduled on November 2, 2023.

Montana

Case	Description
Castro v. Jacobsen 6:2023-cv-00062 U.S. District Court, District of Montana	On September 11, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Montana Secretary of State Christi Jacobsen and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Montana according to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 18, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Application for a TRO and an Expedited PI Hearing, which the court denied for failure to serve. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New Hampshire

Case	Description
Castro v. Scanlan 1:23-cv-00416 U.S. District Court, District of New Hampshire	On September 5, 2023, Castro, filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Hampshire Secretary of State David Scanlan and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Hampshire according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro filed an Emergency Application for a Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss. The court will hold a hearing on jurisdictional issues on October 20, 2023.

New Jersey

Case	Description
Castro v. Way 3:23-20929-GC U.S. District Court, District of New Jersey	On October 3rd, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Jersey Secretary of State Tahesha Way and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Jersey according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

New Mexico

Case	Description
Castro v. Toulouse Oliver 1:2023-cv-00766 U.S. District Court, District of New Mexico	On September 8, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Mexico Secretary of State Maggie Toulouse Oliver and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Mexico according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The court issued an order to show cause why the claims should not be dismissed for jurisdictional issues.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New York

Case	Description
Castro v. New York State Board of Elections 23-cv-01223 U.S. District Court, Northern District of New York	On October 2nd, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against the New York State Board of Elections and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New York according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Nevada

Case	Description
Castro v. Aguilar 2:23-cv-01387 U.S. District Court, District of Nevada	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Nevada Secretary of State Francisco V. Aguilar and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Nevada according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss which is in the briefing stage.

Pennsylvania

Case	Description
Castro v. Schmidt Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania Supreme Court of Pennsylvania	On August 30, 2023, Castro filed a Complaint against Pennsylvania Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt and Donald J. Trump in Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court seeking an injunction to prevent Schmidt from accepting ballot access documents for Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Pennsylvania according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Complaint in the Middle District of PA. He voluntarily dismissed the federal case on September 27, 2023.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania 1:23-cv-01468
Stilp v. Trump 1:23-cv-1489 U.S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania	On September 7, 2023, Pennsylvania resident Gene Stilp filed a pro se Complaint and Request for Declaratory Relief against Donald J. Trump. The complaint raises the question of whether Trump should be barred from running and removed from the Pennsylvania primary ballot under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Stilp argues that Trump need not have committed violence for his actions to be considered taking part in "insurrection" and notes that participants in the events of January 6, 2021 have testified that they "acted at the direction of Donald Trump."

Rhode Island

Case	Description
Castro v. Amore et al. 1:23-cv-00405 U.S. District Court, District of Rhode Island	On October 3, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Rhode Island Secretary of State Gregg Amore and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Rhode Island according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

South Carolina

Case	Description
Castro v. SC Election Commission, 3:23-cv-04501	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against the South Carolina Election Commission and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in South Carolina according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 19, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with A Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits. The Magistrate Judge issued a Report and Recommendation recommending the court deny the motion based on failure to show

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of South Carolina	immediate irreparable injury. The South Carolina Election Commission and President Trump filed motions to dismiss which are in the briefing stage.

Vermont

Case	Description
Castro v. Copeland-Hanzas et al. 2:23-cv-00453 U.S. District Court, District of Vermont	On October 2, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Vermont Secretary of State Sarah Copeland-Hanzas and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Vermont according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On October 11, 2023, the court denied Castro's motion for a TRO and noted it would still consider the request for a preliminary injunction.

Virginia

Case	Description
Perry-Bey v. Trump 1:23-cv-1165 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of Virginia	On August 31, 2023, Virginia citizens and civil rights activists Roy L. Perry-Bey and Carlos A. Howard filed a Complaint for Declaratory Relief to determine whether Donald J. Trump is eligible to participate as a presidential candidate in the Virginia Republican Party Primary election or the general election. The complaint argues that Trump's actions with regard to the January 6, 2021 breach of the U.S. Capitol disqualify him as a viable candidate under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. Plaintiff Howard filed a Motion for Judgment which the court denied.

West Virginia

Case	Description
Castro v. Warner 2:23-cv-00598	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against West Virginia Secretary of State Andrew Warner and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in West Virginia according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, Southern District of West Virginia	Castro filed an emergency application for a TRO and expedited preliminary injunction hearing. Motions to dismiss have been filed by President Trump and Defendant-Intervenor the West Virginia Republican Party.

Wisconsin

Case	Description
Castro v. WEC 2023-cv-002288 Wisconsin Circuit Court, Dane County	On August 31, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Injunctive Relief against the Wisconsin Elections Commission and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Wisconsin according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Wyoming

Case	Description
Castro	No record of a filing for this case so far but referenced in the press.

Dismissed Cases

District of Columbia

Case	Description
Castro v. Federal Election Commission U.S. District Court, District of Columbia 22-2176 D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals	On July 25, 2022, Castro filed a pro se civil action for declaratory and injunctive relief against the FEC. The complaint cites the Federal Election Campaign Act, 52 U.S.C. § 30109, and the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, for "unlawful agency delay" to argue that the FEC must enforce Donald J. Trump completing official filing as a candidate with the FEC (now moot), and that, once submitted, the FEC should deny Trump's candidacy form pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The court dismissed the complaint on December 6, 2022 for lack of standing, finding the FEC has no jurisdiction to reject candidacy filings, among other reasons. On December 7, 2022, Castro appealed. On April 10, 2023, the court granted the FEC's motion for summary affirmance.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

22-5323

Florida

Caplan v. Trump 0:23-cv-61628-RLR U.S. District Court, Southern District of Florida	On August 24, 2023, Lawrence A. Caplan, a Florida lawyer, filed a civil action against Donald J. Trump in the Southern District of Florida. Caplan argues that Trump's candidacy violates Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment due to the "aid or comfort" he provided to January 6th insurrectionists. On August 31, 2023, the court issued a sua sponte order dismissing the lawsuit due to lack of standing.

Idaho

Case	Description
Castro v. McGrane 1:23-cv-00393 U.S. District Court, District of Idaho	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Phil McGrane and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Idaho according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/03/23 - Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff 10/04/23 - Order of Dismissal

Maine

Case	Description
Castro v. Bellows 1:23-cv-00335 U.S. District Court, District of Maine	On September 5, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Shenna Bellows and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Maine according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/03/23- Notice of Dismissal Filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New Hampshire

Castro v. Trump 217-2023-cv-00462 Merrimack County Superior Court	On August 27, 2023, Castro filed a civil action against Secretary of State David Scanlan and Donald J. Trump, seeking an injunction against Scanlan. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the 2024 primary ballot in New Hampshire according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Secretary Scanlan held a press conference on September 13, 2023 stating that the Secretary of State does not have the power to withhold a candidate based on 14.3. 9/24/23: Motion for Voluntary Non-Suit 10/5/23: Case dismissed

North Carolina

Case	Description
Castro v. Bell 5:23-cv-00496 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of North Carolina	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Karen Brinson Bell, the executive director of the North Carolina State Board of Elections, and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in North Carolina according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/2/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

Oklahoma

Case	Description
Castro v. Ziriax 5:2023-cv-00781 U.S. District Court, Western District of Oklahoma	On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Paul Ziriax, Secretary of the Oklahoma State Election Board, and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Oklahoma according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 9/29/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Utah

Case	Description
Castro v. Henderson 2:23-cv-00617 U.S. District Court, District of Utah	On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Utah Lt. Gov. Deirdre Henderson and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Utah according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 9/27/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 2

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
JOURNAL OF LAW & LIBERTY

IS THE PRESIDENT AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT?

Josh Blackman* & Seth Barrett Tillman*

INTRODUCTION

On January 13, 2021, the House of Representatives voted to impeach then-President Donald J. Trump for inciting an insurrection.[1] The sole impeachment article invoked Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[2] But the House's impeachment article

---

* Professor, South Texas College of Law Houston.
 Associate Professor, Maynooth University Department of Law, Ireland. Roinn Dlí Ollscoil Mhá Nuad.

[1] H.R. Res. 24, 117th Cong. (2021) (as introduced in the House on Jan. 1, 2021) [https://perma.cc/DS5F-SCQD].

[2] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

elided over a critical threshold question: Was Trump covered by Section 3? The structure of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is a bit complicated. To assist our analysis, we distinguish the four elements with different typefaces (underline, bold, italics, and SMALL CAPS), and number them out of order:

> [3] No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state, who, [1] having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States, [2] shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. [4] BUT CONGRESS MAY BY A VOTE OF TWO-THIRDS OF EACH HOUSE, REMOVE SUCH DISABILITY.[3]

First, the jurisdictional element, [1], specifies which positions are subject to Section 3: a "person . . . who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States."[4]

Second, the offense element, [2], defines the conduct prohibited by Section 3. It regulates the conduct of a person satisfying the jurisdictional element who "shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same [the United States], or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof."[5]

Third, the disqualification element, [3], defines the legal consequences or punishment that Section 3 provides. A person who

---

[3] U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3.
[4] Id.
[5] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

satisfies the jurisdictional and offense elements of Section 3 shall not be "a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state."[6] The phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element is distinguishable from the phrase "officer of the united States" in the jurisdictional element.

FOURTH, the amnesty element, [4], allows Congress to terminate the disqualification or disability: "Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[7]

This article does not focus on the offense element [2] and the amnesty element [4]. Rather, to determine whether former-President Trump was disqualified pursuant to Section 3, we will focus on the jurisdictional element [1] and the disqualification element [3].

Section 3's jurisdictional element applies to exactly four defined categories of state and federal positions. President Trump clearly does not fit into three of these categories. Trump never swore an oath as a "member of Congress," "a member of any state legislature," or an "executive or judicial officer of any state."[8] Indeed, Trump was the only President in American history to have never held prior state or federal, civilian or military, public office. Therefore, the only way for Section 3's jurisdictional element to cover President Trump would be if he falls into the fourth category: he took an oath to support the Constitution as an "officer of the United States." Trump only swore one constitutional oath: as President of the United States.[9] In short, for President Trump to be subject to Section 3 disqualification, he must have violated the offense element and fit within the jurisdictional element. And in order to fit within the

---

[6] Id.

[7] Id.

[8] Donald Trump, THE WHITE HOUSE [https://perma.cc/BHR3-DZ3M].

[9] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (the presidential oath). See, e.g., Brian Duignan, Donald Trump/president of the United States, ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA (Aug. 17, 2021) [https://perma.cc/2X7V-K8RN].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

jurisdictional element, the President must be an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3.

The House's impeachment article, however, did not address this threshold issue. It stated:

> [S]ection 3 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution prohibits any person who has "engaged in insurrection or rebellion against" the United States from "hold[ing] any office . . . under the United States."[10]

In fact, Section 3 does not apply to "any person" or even "any person" who committed the conduct provided for in the offense element. Here, the House seemed to assume that the phrase "officer of the United States" was equivalent to the phrase "any person." Perhaps the House assumed that a President is an "officer of the United States." Still, the House's position was not entirely clear.

After the Senate trial, Trump was not convicted. Therefore, he could not be disqualified from holding future office pursuant to the Impeachment Disqualification Clause.[11] But even after Trump's acquittal, efforts to disqualify the former President based on Section 3 continue. For example, there is a pending concurrent resolution that would find "President Donald J. Trump 'as an officer of the United States . . . engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the [United States], or g[ave] aid or comfort to the enemies thereof,' making him ineligible for future office . . . ."[12] This resolution assumed that the President is an "officer of the United States."

---

[10] See H.R. Res. 24, supra note 1, at 3:2-6 (emphasis added).

[11] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 7 ("Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States . . . .").

[12] H.R. Con. Res. 3, 117th Cong. (2021) (emphasis added), https://www.congress.gov/bill/117th-congress/house-concurrent-resolution/3/text [https://perma.cc/7JZP-E23D] ("Censuring President Donald J. Trump for attempting to overturn the results of the 2020 Presidential election through unlawful means and for inciting insurrection").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We disagree. There is some good reason to think the President is not an "officer of the United States." President Trump, who swore only one constitutional oath, does not fall within Section 3's jurisdictional element. Therefore, he cannot be disqualified pursuant to this provision.

This article will proceed in six parts. Part I will contend that the phrases "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3 refer to different categories of positions. Part II will analyze the phrase "officer of the United States," which is used in the Constitution of 1788 and in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Part III will show that the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" did not drift from 1788 through 1868. In both eras, there is substantial evidence that the President was not considered an "officer of the United States." Part IV will recount longstanding Executive Branch opinions, which affirmed that elected officials like the President are not "officers of the United States." Part V will respond to recent arguments suggesting that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3. Part VI will chart how the courts, and not Congress, will likely have the final say about whether President Trump is subject to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

I. THE PHRASES "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" AND "OFFICE ... UNDER THE UNITED STATES" IN SECTION 3 REFER TO DIFFERENT CATEGORIES OF POSITIONS

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment refers to two textually distinct groups of officers and offices: an "officer of the United States" and an "Office . . . under the United States." These phrases also appear in the Constitution of 1788. The Oath or Affirmation Clause refers to "officers of the United States." And the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" appears in the Elector Incompatibility Clause and Impeachment Disqualification Clause. We have long argued that these two phrases, which appear in the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution of 1788, have distinct, albeit related meanings.[13] We also think these two phrases, as used in Section 3, have different meanings. Indeed, the very fact that Section 3's text uses both of these phrases, and does so in the very same sentence, provides some substantial evidence that the two phrases do not have identical meanings. Moreover, there is some textual overlap between the Constitution of 1788 and Section 3. We draw three inferences from this textual overlap. First, we think the better view is that the jurisdictional element of Section 3 was modeled after the structure and language of the Oath or Affirmation Clause. Second, we think the better view is that the disqualification element of Section 3 was modeled after the structure and language of the Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, and the Impeachment Disqualification Clause. Third, we think the better view is that the Framers imported the meaning of "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" from the Constitution of 1788 to Section 3's jurisdictional element and disqualification element, respectively.

A. WE SHOULD PRESUME THAT THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF OFFICES REFERENCED IN THE SAME SENTENCE OF SECTION 3 HAVE DIFFERENT MEANINGS

The scope of Section 3 is complicated. Specifically, the jurisdictional element and the disqualification element, which appear in the same sentence, refer to different types of officers and offices. First, the jurisdictional element applies to a person who took an oath as an "officer of the United States." Second, the

---

[13] See Seth Barrett Tillman & Josh Blackman, Offices and Officers of the Constitution, Part I: An Introduction, 61 S. TEX. L. REV. (forthcoming 2021) [hereinafter Tillman & Blackman, Offices] [https://perma.cc/B7AM-E83B] (discussing taxonomy); Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, The Emoluments Clauses litigation, Part 1: The Constitution's taxonomy of officers and offices, WASH. POST (Sept. 25, 2017) [hereinafter Blackman & Tillman, Emoluments] [https://perma.cc/7K3C-ANSM].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disqualification element mandates that disqualification extends to "any office . . . under the United States."[14] Had the framers used the same phrase twice in the same sentence—for example, both elements applied to "officer[s] of the United States"—we would reasonably conclude that those phrases have the same meaning. This reasoning follows from the presumption of intrasentence uniformity: where the same language is used in the same sentence, we presume that language is used uniformly.[15]

However, Section 3 uses different phrases in the same sentence. Here, the presumption should be the converse. The better conclusion is that when the same sentence in the Constitution uses two different phrases—here, referring to different categories of offices and officers—we should presume that the Framers intended to convey two different meanings.[16] This latter principle can be called the presumption of intrasentence non-uniformity: where different language is used in the same sentence, we presume that the language is not used uniformly. Given this presumption, the phrases "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" would have different meanings.

The Constitution of 1788 also juxtaposes these same two categories of officers in the same sentence. Consider the third paragraph of Article VI:

> [1] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of

---

[14] The ellipses refer to three words the Framers placed after office but before under: "civil or military."

[15] See, e.g., Saikrishna Prakash, Our Three Commerce Clauses and the Presumption of Intrasentence Uniformity, 55 ARK. L. REV. 1149, 1150 (2002) (defending "a presumption of intrasentence uniformity in constitutional, statutory, and regulatory interpretation").

[16] See, e.g., id. at 1172 ("It is far better to use two different words in a sentence when we mean to convey two different meanings."); see also Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. (1 Wheat.) 304 (1816) ("It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the [Constitution's] language could have been accidental.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; [2] but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.[17]

First, the Oath or Affirmation Clause, which appears before the semicolon, applies to "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States." Second, the Religious Test Clause, which appears after the semicolon, refers to "any Office . . . under the United States." [18] The same sentence references two textually distinct categories of officers and offices.

There is some evidence that the two types of "officers" and "offices" in Article VI refer to different categories of positions. During the drafting process, the Framers revised the Religious Test Clause to clarify what type of offices it applied to. Earlier, a draft provision referred to "any office or public trust under the authority of the United States."[19] Later, the Committee of Style revised that draft to "any office or public trust under the United States." [20] The committee removed the phrase "the authority of." [21] This revision provides some evidence that the Framers in 1787 paid reasonably careful attention to the way the Constitution used "office"- and

---

[17] U.S. CONST. art. VI (emphasis added).

[18] The Religious Test Clause also applies to a "public trust under the United States." U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 3. See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13, at 1 (finding that the phrase "public trust under the United States" includes "federal officials who are not subject to direction or supervision by a higher federal authority in the normal course of their duties"—a category that would include presidential electors).

[19] PETER K. ROFES, THE RELIGION GUARANTEES: A REFERENCE GUIDE TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION 12 (2005) (noting that "[t]he Committee of Style rephrased the language by eliminating the words 'the authority of'" from the draft Religious Test Clause).

[20] Id. See generally William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Gouverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 MICH. L. REV. 1, 47 n.275, 87 n.492 (2021) (discussing revisions made to "office"- and "officer"-language in the Succession Clause, Impeachment Clause, and Religious Test Clause).

[21] See ROFES, supra note 19.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"officer"-language. One cannot presume that the various phrases using "office" and "officer" were used indiscriminately. There is no record of commensurate efforts by the Committee of Style or the Committee of Detail to textually align or harmonize the phrases "Officer[] . . . of the United States" and "Office . . . under the United State" which both appear in the same sentence of Article VI. Given the Framers' careful attention to such details, we conclude that the two different phrases were used to refer to different types of offices.[22]

We think the same presumption of intrasentence non-uniformity should likewise extend to Section 3. The phrase "officer of the United States" in the jurisdictional element has a different meaning from the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element. Our position regarding Section 3 is supported by the similar usage in Article VI. Both the text of Section 3 and Article VI use textually distinct language: "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States." And we should presume these phrases referred to different positions.

The Framers of the Constitution of 1788 made many other changes to "office"- and "officer"-language in provisions of the draft constitution. For example, in the Succession Clause, the phrase "officer of the United States" was changed to "officer."[23] In the Impeachment Clause, the phrase "[President, Vice President,] and other Civil officers of the U.S." was changed to "President, Vice President, and Civil Officers of the U.S."[24] And in its final form, the Impeachment Clause became: "President, Vice President, and all civil Officers of the United States." The Framers changed the word that preceded "Civil Officers of the United States" from "other" to "all." This and other similar alterations to the draft constitution's "office"- and "officer"-language were significant. First, these revisions show

---

[22] Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

[23] Compare 2 THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 532 and 535 (Max Farrand ed., 1911) [hereinafter FARRAND'S RECORDS], with id. at 573 and 599. See generally Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 STAN. L. REV. 113, 116 nn.16–18 (1995).

[24] Compare 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 545 & 552, with id. at 600.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that this language was not modified indiscriminately. The Framers paid careful attention to the words they chose. Second, the use of "other" in the draft constitution shows that at a preliminary stage, the Framers used language affirmatively stating that the President and Vice President were "Officers of the United States." But the draft constitution's use of "other" was, in fact, rejected in favor of "all." The better inference, arising in connection with the actual Constitution of 1788, is that the President and Vice President are not "Officers of the United States." Joseph Story stated this position in his Commentaries on the Constitution.[25] The Framers also made complex changes to the "officer"-language in the Appointments Clause.[26]

These precise, surgical textual changes cannot be described as random. All available evidence suggests that the Framers were deliberate. The ratifiers and their contemporaries would have understood how these alterations modified the meaning of these provisions. The different "office"- and "officer"-language presumptively had different meanings. And, we think, the Framers of 1868 also took reasonable care when using the coordinate phrases "officers of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

---

[25] 2 JOSEPH STORY, COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 791, at 260 (Boston, Hilliard, Gray, and Co. 1833) ("[The Impeachment Clause] says, 'the president, vice-president, and all civil officers (not all other civil officers) shall be removed,' &c. The language of the clause, therefore, would rather lead to the conclusion, that the[] [President and Vice President] were enumerated, as contradistinguished from, rather than as included in the description of, civil officers of the United States." (latter two emphases added)).

[26] 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 177, 181–82; Jennifer L. Mascott, Who are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 STAN. L. REV. 443, 472 (2018) (citing 1 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 20–22, 20 n.10); 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 614.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. THERE IS SOME TEXTUAL OVERLAP BETWEEN THE JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENT OF SECTION 3 AND THE OATH OR AFFIRMATION CLAUSE

We do not think that the language used in Section 3 was drafted from a blank slate. Indeed, there is some overlap between Section 3 and provisions from the Constitution of 1788. The Framers of Section 3's jurisdictional element likely drew its language from the text of the 1788 Oath or Affirmation Clause in Article VI. Therefore, the meaning of the phrase "Officers of the United States" in Article VI should inform the meaning of "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Compare these two provisions, which each refer to four types of positions. Once again, we have used different typefaces (underline, bold, italics, and SMALL CAPS) to distinguish the four categories.

Oath or Affirmation Clause (1788)	Jurisdictional Element of Section 3 (1868)
"[1] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the [2] Members of the several State Legislatures, and [3] all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and [4] OF THE SEVERAL STATES, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution"	"No person . . . who having previously taken an oath, [1] as a member of Congress, or as [3] an officer of the United States, or as a [2] member of any state legislature, or as [4] AN EXECUTIVE OR JUDICIAL OFFICER OF ANY STATE, to support the Constitution of the United States. . . . "

Both provisions reference the same four categories of office holders who swore an oath to support the Constitution: [1] Senators and Representatives, [2] members of the state legislatures, [3] executive and judicial officers of the United States, and [4] EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL OFFICERS OF THE STATES.

There are substantial similarities between the Oath or Affirmation Clause and Section 3's jurisdictional element. This overlap is not surprising. Article VI already imposed an oath on

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

many positions in the federal and state governments. It would make sense for the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment to use that same grouping of people to identify those subject to disqualification. We think it reasonable to infer that the jurisdictional element of Section 3 was modeled after the Oath or Affirmation Clause of Article VI.

There are slight variations between the Oath or Affirmation Clause and Section 3's jurisdictional element. And these alterations support our position that the Framers took care when writing "office"- and "officer"-language. They did not simply copy the language in its entirety, but instead made careful revisions.

The first category was changed from "the Senators and Representatives before mentioned" to "member of Congress." These phrases are not identical. The category of "member[s] of Congress" is narrower than the category of "Senators and Representatives." Not all Senators and Representatives become members. Senators and Representatives begin their terms as members-elect from the date of the start of their two-year or six-year constitutional terms. Customarily, prior to the start of their terms, a Senator or Representative—that is, a member-elect—travels to the Capitol and presents bona fide credentials or a certificate of election. But such a member-elect does not become a member until his house organizes and accepts him as a member.[27]

The distinction between a member-elect and a member affects the timing of when officer-holders in the Executive Branch or Judicial Branch transition to Congress. For example, the Incompatibility Clause bars "a member of either House" from holding "any Office under the United States." But this restriction only applies to actual members, and not members-elect. Therefore, when a member-elect begins the two-year or six-year constitutional term to which he was [27] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 1 ("Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members . . . ."); id. art. I, § 6, cl. 2 ("[N]o Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.").

---

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

elected, but before he is accepted as a member, he could still hold a position in the Executive Branch or Judicial Branch. But in order to be accepted as a member, the member-elect must resign his executive-branch or judicial-branch office. These sorts of disputes are not hypothetical. In 1818, the House of Representatives drew this distinction when it accepted the credentials of a federal-office holder who simultaneously served as member-elect, but had not yet become a member.[28] In 1788, 1818, and 1868, and today, the Constitution's "office"- and "officer"-language mattered and continues to matter.

The second category was tweaked from "Members of the several State Legislatures" to "member of any state legislature." Here, we do not see any material change. There may have been some linguistic preference for the phrase "any state" over the phrase "several states" followed by a plural noun. The Framers of Section 3 likewise changed the phrase "executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several states" to "an executive or judicial officer of any state." The Constitution of 1788 used the phrase "several states" in seven clauses,[29] and the phrase

---

[28] See, e.g., 1 ASHER C. HINDS, HINDS' PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES § 499, at 624–27 (1907) [https://perma.cc/B5V8-XFD6] ("After a careful consideration of the status of a Member-elect the House decided that such an one was not affected by the constitutional requirement that an officer . . . shall not be a Member.").

[29] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 1 ("The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 2, cl. 3 ("Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 8, cl. 3 ("To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes" (emphasis added)); id. art. 2, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 ("The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." (emphasis added)); id. art. V ("The Congress . . . on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. VI, cl. 3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"any state" in six provisions.[30] It may be that the phrase "any state" referred to specific conduct that occurred in only one state. And the phrase "several states" referred to general conduct that could recur in multiple states. The Framers also used the phrase "each state" in eight provisions to similar effect as "any state."[31] The Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article VI, which refers to both "each state" and "several states," illustrates this usage: "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the

---

[30] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 4 ("When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 9, cl. 5 ("No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 10, cl. 2 ("[T]he net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States . . . . " (emphasis added)); id. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 ("[B]ut when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 2, cl. 3 ("A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 3, cl. 1 ("[N]or any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." (emphasis added)).

[31] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 1 ("[T]he Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 2, cl. 3 ("The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 3, cl. 1 ("The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years."); id. art. I, § 4, cl. 1 ("The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." (emphasis added)); id. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 ("Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors . . . ."); id. art. II, § 1, cl. 3 ("But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 1, ("Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State."); id. art. IV, § 2 ("The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

several States."[32] It appears that the Fourteenth Amendment used "any state" and "several states" to the same effect.[33]

The third category was changed from "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States" to "an officer of the United States."

The FOURTH ELEMENT was changed from "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several States" to "an executive or judicial officer of any state."

These third and fourth revisions show the care with which the Framers approached the "officer"-language in Section 3. Article VI of the 1788 Constitution refers broadly to "all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States." In a single clause, the Framers lumped together a wide variety of federal and state offices. This clause applied to "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States" and "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several states."

In our view, it was unnecessary to specify that the "Officers of the United States" had to be "executive and judicial" officers. In light of the Appointments Clause, "Officers of the United States" could only be appointed to the executive and judicial branches. Appointed positions in the legislative branch—such as the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate—are not appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. They are not "Officers of the United States." And they do not take an oath pursuant to Article VI.[34] However, Article VI also provided the oath for state officeholders. And each state had different governmental structures, which could change. It would have been arduous to draft a single federal constitutional provision that could reflect the varied state

---

[32] U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis added).

[33] Compare U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 ("[N]or shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . ." (emphasis added)), with id. § 2 ("Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers . . . .").

[34] See also Steven G. Calabresi, The Political Question of Presidential Succession, 48 STAN. L. REV. 155, 162 (1995) ("No constitutional oath is required of legislative officers, like the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate . . . .").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

constitutional structures regarding offices and officers. To provide some guidance to the state, Article VI clarified which types of state officers were covered: executive officers and judicial officers. Members of state legislatures are expressly covered by the Article VI oath requirement, but appointed positions in state legislatures are not covered.

In 1868, the Framers of Section 3's jurisdictional element departed from the structure of Article VI: they decoupled the state officers from the federal officers. Section 3 still specifies the types of state officers covered: "an executive or judicial officer of any state." Again, this provision accounts for the wide range of state government officeholders. And, now that state and federal provisions were textually decoupled, there was no need to specify that "Officers of the United States" had to be in the executive and judicial branches. Rather, the Appointments Clause defines the scope of the "Officers of the United States": appointed positions in the executive and judicial branches.[35]

This history supports a reasonable inference: the 1788 and 1868 Framers took some care when drafting "office"- and "officer"-language. These phrases were not used indiscriminately. Rather, in 1868, there was some deliberate effort to modify the extant 1788 language.

C. THERE IS SOME TEXTUAL OVERLAP BETWEEN THE DISQUALIFICATION ELEMENT OF SECTION 3 AND THE ELECTOR INCOMPATIBILITY CLAUSE, THE INCOMPATIBILITY CLAUSE, AND THE IMPEACHMENT DISQUALIFICATION CLAUSE

In the Constitution of 1788, the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" is used in four provisions: the Elector Incompatibility

---

[35] See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, and the Foreign Emoluments Clause. In our view, the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" in each of these four provisions refers to appointed positions in the Executive and Judicial Branches, as well as non-apex appointed positions in the Legislative Branch.[36] The phrase "office . . . under the United States" also appears in Section 3's disqualification element. In this Article, we take no position as to the meaning or scope of "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3, or whether that phrase in Section 3 included the President and Vice President. Instead, we use the Constitution of 1788 for a different purpose. The 1868 Framers of Section 3's disqualification element, who used the phrase "office . . . under the United States," were likely to have drawn that language from the similar language in the 1788 Constitution. Specifically, three of the four 1788 provisions share a similar structure with Section 3's disqualification element: holders of an "office . . . under the United States" are barred from some other position. The fourth provision, the Foreign Emoluments Clause, is structurally different; it does not impose any disqualifications.

---

[36] See id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Compare the disqualification element of Section 3 with the Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, and the Impeachment Disqualification Clause:

Elector Incompatibility Clause (1788)	Incompatibility Clause (1788)	Impeachment Disqualification Clause (1788)	Disqualification Element of Section 3 (1868)
"no [1] Senator or Representative, or [2] Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector."	"no [2] Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office."	"Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to [2] hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States"	"No person shall be a [1] Senator or Representative in Congress, or [3] elector of President and Vice President, or [2] hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or [4] UNDER ANY STATE . . . ."

The disqualification element of Section 3, like the Elector Incompatibility clause, applies to Senators and Representatives. To be precise, Section 3 extends disqualification to "a Senator or Representative in Congress." The phrase "in Congress" may have been added to clarify that disqualification did not extend to state legislators, who may have the same formal title: senators and representatives. In 1878, a prominent commentator observed, without equivocation, that members of state legislatures are not "officers under any State" for purposes of Section 3's disqualification element.[37] This subtle addition, "in Congress," demonstrates that the [37] See John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 106 N. AM. REV. 53, 55 (1878) ("[I]t is clear that a member of a State Legislature is not a civil or military officer under any State, any more than a member of Congress is a civil or military officer under the United States . . . .") [https://perma.cc/JJM6-PBQG].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Framers of Section 3 took care with respect to "office"-language. They did not use these terms indiscriminately.

The Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, and the disqualification element of Section 3 all apply to any "office . . . under the United States."[38] The Impeachment Disqualification Clause empowered the Senate to disqualify a person from "hold[ing] and enjoy[ing] any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." The Incompatibility Clause bars a "person holding any Office under the United States" from serving as a member of Congress. And the Elector Incompatibility Clause bars members of Congress, as well as a "Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States" from serving as presidential electors. In light of these textual overlaps, it is reasonable to infer that the Framers of Section 3's disqualification element may have relied on the three provisions of the 1788 Constitution that barred certain officials from holding certain positions. And it is also reasonable to infer that the Framers of Section 3 used the phrase "office . . . under the United States" to have a different meaning than the phrase "officers of the United States."

The disqualification element of Section 3 departs from the provisions of the 1788 Constitution that use the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in two regards. First, the disqualification element of section 3 refers to an "elector of President and Vice President." This category of position does not appear in the Elector Incompatibility Clause—with good reason. It would be nonsensical to bar an elector from serving as an elector. But it would make sense to disqualify former confederates from serving as presidential electors. The Incompatibility Clause, which governs members of

---

[38] Here, the ellipses refer to different words placed after office but before under: i.e., "of Trust or Profit" in the Elector Incompatibility Clause; "of honor, Trust or Profit" in the Impeachment Disqualification Clause; and "civil or military" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. By contrast, no ellipsis is necessary for the Incompatibility Clause, which simply uses "office under the United States."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress, also does not refer to electors. There was no need to list electors in the Incompatibility Clause because the Elector Incompatibility Clause already expressly barred Senators and Representatives from serving as electors. We think that a person disqualified under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause could serve as an elector. In our view, an elector is a "public trust under the United States," as that phrase is used in the Religious Test Clause, but does not hold an "Office . . . under the United States."[39]

Second, Section 3's disqualification element extends to "any office . . . under any state." The Elector Incompatibility Clause does not bar state officeholders from serving as electors. Indeed, to this day, it is common for state officeholders to serve as electors. Likewise, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause does not bar a disqualified person from holding state office. And the text of the Incompatibility Clause does not expressly bar a person who holds a state position from also serving in Congress. Indeed, a Governor could appoint himself to fill a Senate vacancy, and concurrently serve as both Governor and Senator without violating the plain text of the Incompatibility Clause.[40] The Fourteenth Amendment was novel in that the national constitution disqualified former confederates from serving in state governments. However, the disqualification element does not specify whether Section 3 disqualification extends to state legislative, executive, or judicial positions. Nonetheless, in 1878 John Randolph Tucker stated that members of the state legislature are not

---

[39] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, What are Presidential Electors?, REASON—VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (May 21, 2020) [https://perma.cc/66HF-YBBM].

[40] Several Governors appointed themselves to fill Senate vacancies, but they resigned their state positions. Ken Rudin, When Governors Appoint Themselves To The Senate, POLITICAL JUNKIE (Sept. 8, 2009) [https://perma.cc/H4YL-3S2A]. See generally Josh Chafetz, Leaving the House: The Constitutional Status of Resignation from the House of Representatives, 58 DUKE L.J. 177, 219 & n.277 (2008) (affirming that joint member of congress and state officeholding is not regulated by the Constitution's Incompatibility Clause).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

covered by Section 3's disqualification element.[41] By contrast, the jurisdictional element, like the Oath or Affirmation Clause, does provide such specificity: both provisions refer to "executive or judicial officer of any state" as well as "a member of any state legislature." The disqualification element simply refers to "any office . . . under any state."

We are not aware of any legislative debates that explain why the Framers chose the precise words they did for the jurisdictional and disqualification elements of Section 3. But we can reasonably presume that these two elements were drawn from very similarly-worded provisions from the Constitution of 1788. And if the phrases "Officers of the United States" and "Office . . . under the United States" had different meanings in the Constitution of 1788, we can reasonably presume that the Framers of Section 3 also understood these phrases to have different meanings. Here, we take no position on what the phrase "office . . . under the United States" meant in the disqualification element of Section 3, and whether that phrase as used in Section 3 includes the President and Vice President. Rather, we focus on the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element.

II. THE PRESIDENT IS NOT AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF THE 1788 CONSTITUTION OR FOR SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

The phrase "Officers of the United States" is used in four provisions of the Constitution of 1788: the Appointments Clause, the Impeachment Clause, the Commissions Clause, and the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[42] (We discussed the fourth provision in Part I). In our view, the President is not an "officer of the United States" for

---

[41] See Tucker, supra note 37.

[42] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. II, § 3; id. art. II, § 4; id. art. VI, cl. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

purposes of these four provisions.[43] We discussed this taxonomy in September 2017:

> First, the Appointments Clause spells out with clarity that the president can nominate "Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States." . . . Second, the Impeachment Clause expressly provides that "[t]he President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment. …" Story explained that the president and vice president's [express] enumeration in the Impeachment Clause in addition to "all civil Officers of the United States" shows that the president and vice president are not deemed "officers of the United States" themselves. Otherwise, the Framers would have stated that "all other civil officers" were subject to impeachment. [Third], the oaths clause specifically enumerates that "Senators and Representatives, and the Members of the several State Legislatures," as well as "all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States of the United States" were required to be "bound by Oath or Affirmation to, support this Constitution." . . . [Fourth], the commission clause provides that "all the officers of the United States" receive presidential commissions. All means all. This structure explains why appointed executive-branch and judicial-branch officers receive commissions, but there is no record of any elected official, whether a president, vice president or a member of Congress, ever receiving a [presidential] commission. The [43] See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reason is simple: Elected officials like the president are not "Officers of the United States."[44]

Our position is consistent with recent Supreme Court precedent. In Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., Chief Justice Roberts observed that "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[45] Rather, "Officers of the United States" are appointed exclusively pursuant to Article II, Section 2 procedures.[46] It follows from these premises that the President, who is an elected official, is not an "officer of the United States."

Of these four provisions, only the Impeachment Clause expressly applies to the President. However, by contrast, the jurisdictional element of Section 3 does not specifically mention the presidency. Instead of using express language akin to the Impeachment Clause, the jurisdictional element of Section 3 applies to: A "person . . . who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States."[47]

We think Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language was imported from the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[48] By using this phrasing, the Framers of Section 3 likely intended to import or adopt the settled meanings from that provision, whether or not they had given concrete thought to what that meaning was. "[W]hen 'a word is obviously transplanted from another legal source, whether the common law or other legislation, it brings the old soil with it.'"[49] Here, Section 3's jurisdictional element was "quite obviously

---

[44] See Blackman & Tillman, Emoluments, supra note 13.

[45] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497–98 (2010).

[46] Id. at 497.

[47] U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3 (emphasis added).

[48] See supra Part I.B.

[49] United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 176–77 (2014) (Scalia, J., concurring) (quoting Felix Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 COLUM. L. REV. 527, 537 (1947)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

modeled" on the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[50] The soil was transplanted, along with the tree's roots and branches.

The President is not expressly listed in the Oath or Affirmation Clause. Why? Because the President does not recite an oath pursuant to Article VI. Rather, the President recites an oath pursuant to the Presidential Oath Clause in Article II.[51] The fact that the President does not take his oath pursuant to Article VI provides further evidence that he is not an "officer[] . . . of the United States" as that phrase is used in the Oath or Affirmation Clause. And if the President is not covered by the Oath or Affirmation Clause of 1788, then the presumption should be that he is not covered by the substantially similar phrase "officer of the United States" used in the jurisdictional element of Section 3.

In 1788, the President was not an "officer of the United States." We contend that the phrase "officer of the United States" has the same meaning in Section 3 as it does in the Constitution of 1788: the elected President is not an "officer of the United States." And we have seen no substantial evidence showing that the meaning of "officer of the United States" drifted from 1788 to 1868.

III. THERE IS NO DIRECT, CLEAR, OR COMPELLING EVIDENCE THAT THE MEANING OF "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" DRIFTED FROM 1788 TO 1868

Critics may argue that the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3 is different from the meaning of the phrase "Officers of the United States" in the Constitution's original seven articles. In other words, there was some linguistic drift or slippage between the 1788 ratification of the Constitution and the 1868 ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. Let's assume that the President is not an "officer[] of the United States" for purposes of the

---

[50] Id.

[51] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (the presidential oath).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1788 Constitution. Under that assumption, it is still possible that the President might be an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3. Thus, a reader might take the limited position that the President is an "officer of the United States" for the purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

This position is conceivable. Indeed, more than a decade ago, Tillman suggested that linguistic drift may have occurred with respect to this phrase between 1788 and 1868.[52] He wrote that "[t]he stretch of time between the two events [1788 and 1868] was more than half a century. . . . It is hardly surprising that in the post-bellum epoch new meanings might have accrued to older language. Such linguistic slippage is common."[53] Again, in this Article, we take no position on whether the President and Vice President hold an "office . . . under the United States" for the purposes of the disqualification element of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. But we do not think linguistic drift occurred with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States."[54]

Absent contrary evidence, the default presumption should be one of linguistic continuity, rather than a presumption of linguistic drift. In other words, the proponents of the view that Section 3's jurisdictional element applies to the presidency have the burden to prove two propositions. First, proponents must show that the particular linguistic drift involving the Constitution's "officer of the United States"-language had actually occurred. And second, proponents must show that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language, in fact, drifted to include the presidency. In other words, even if the meaning shifted over time, it is not self-evident that the

---

[52] See Thomas R. Lee & James C. Phillips, Data-Driven Originalism, 167 U. PA. L. REV. 261, 265 (2019) (discussing linguistic drift); see also James C. Phillips & Josh Blackman, Corpus Linguistics & Heller, 56 WAKE FOREST L. REV. 609, 622 (2021).

[53] Seth Barrett Tillman, Either/Or: Professors Zephyr Rain Teachout and Akhil Reed Amar—Contradictions and Suggested Reconciliation 70 n.119 (Feb. 1, 2012) [https://perma.cc/5CSU-66A2] (unpublished manuscript) (emphasis added) (citing Jack Tsen-Ta Lee, The Text Through Time, 31 STATUTE L. REV. 217 (2010)).

[54] See infra Part III.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

shift would embrace the presidency. Both propositions must be proven.

We do not think either proposition can be proven. Rather, there is some good authority to reject the position that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language extends to the presidency. First, United States v. Mouat (1888) strongly suggested that officers are appointed, and not elected. Second, United States v. Hartwell (1867) strongly suggested that officers are appointed, and not elected. Third, other contemporary sources—such as a treatise on election law and proceedings from an 1867 impeachment trial—further rebut arguments in favor of linguistic drift. In light of this evidence, the strongest position is that the meaning of "officer of the United States" did not drift between 1788 and 1868. The President was not an "officer of the United States" in 1788, and the President was not an "officer of the United States" in 1868.

A. United States v. Mouat rebuts arguments in favor of linguistic drift

The Supreme Court decided United States v. Mouat in 1888, two decades after the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.[55] Mouat interpreted a statute that used the phrase "officers of the United States."[56] It provided, in part, that "no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision."[57] This statute was enacted in June 1873, five years after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in 1868.

Justice Samuel Miller, who served on the Supreme Court during the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, wrote the majority opinion in Mouat. He grounded his understanding of the statutory

---

[55] United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303 (1888).
[56] Id. at 307.
[57] Id. at 305 (citing 18 Stat. 72) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

phrase "Officers of the United States" in the Appointments Clause. Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution provides:

> The President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments."[58]

Justice Miller concluded, "[u]nless a person in the service of the government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the president, or of one of the courts of justice or heads of departments authorized by law to make such an appointment, he is not strictly speaking, an officer of the United States."[59] In other words, if a person was not appointed pursuant to the paths identified in Article II, Section 2, then he is likely not an "officer of the United States." Moreover, the discussion in Mouat was not limited to appointed officers. Rather, the Mouat test governs all persons in "the service of the government." The President is in "the service of the government," but he is not appointed by a President, a court of law, or a department head; indeed, he is not appointed at all. Notwithstanding the process followed by presidential electors, the Constitution expressly states that the President "shall . . . be elected."[60] Under the rule in Mouat, the President is not "strictly speaking" an "officer of the United States." Here, Mouat strongly

---

[58] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

[59] Mouat, 124 U.S. at 307 (emphasis added).

[60] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1; see also id. art. II, § 1, cl. 7 ("The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

suggests that the meaning of the phrase "officers of the United States" remained stable from 1788 through 1868.

Mouat provides some probative evidence of the original public meaning of Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language. Justice Miller's opinion also provides some evidence rebutting any presumption of post-1788 linguistic drift with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States." Finally, Mouat rebuts the position that, circa 1868, the president was obviously, plainly, or clearly an "officer of the United States."

In short, Mouat makes the linguistic drift view very difficult to defend. For this argument to work, the meaning of "officer of the United States" must have drifted back and forth: (1) in 1788, the phrase did not include the presidency; (2) in 1868, the phrase did include the presidency; (3) but during the five year span between 1868 and 1873, the meaning of that phrase drifted back to its original 1788 meaning, such that the President was not an "officer of the United States." We find that proposed chronology implausible.

B. United State v. Hartwell rebuts arguments in favor of linguistic drift

United States v. Hartwell was decided contemporaneously with the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.[61] This case further refutes the possibility of linguistic drift. In Hartwell, a clerk in the Treasury Department was charged with embezzlement. The relevant 1846 statute applied to an "officer" who was "charged with the safe-keeping of the public money."[62] The defendant claimed that because he was not an "officer," the indictment was defective. The Supreme Court disagreed and found that he was an "officer." Justice Noah Swayne wrote the majority opinion. He offered a two-part definition of an office. First, "[a]n office is a public station, or employment,

---

[61] United States v. Hartwell, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 385 (1867).
[62] Id. at 392 (citing 9 Stat. 59).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conferred by the appointment of government."[63] Second, "[t]he term [office] embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties."[64]

In Hartwell, the clerk "was appointed by the head of a department within the meaning of the constitutional provision upon the subject of the appointing power."[65] The court did not expressly connect the term "officer" in the embezzlement statute with the phrase "officer of the United States" in the Appointments Clause. However, the court's discussion of the appointment being made by the head of the department suggests the two concepts were closely related—rightly so, in our view. Hartwell, like Mouat, understood officers to be appointed, and not elected. Eleven years later, the Court decided United States v. Germaine.[66] And the Germaine Court repeated Hartwell's four-factor test.[67]

In the modern era, the Supreme Court has cited the second part of Hartwell's test, as repeated in Germaine, to determine whether a position is a principal or inferior "officer of the United States."[68] But this second part of Hartwell was premised on the first part: an officer is "conferred by the appointment of government." Presidents are not

---

[63] Id. at 393 (emphasis added).

[64] Id.

[65] Id. at 393–94.

[66] United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1878).

[67] Id.

[68] Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 672 (1988) ("In our view, these factors relating to the 'ideas of tenure, duration . . . and duties' of the independent counsel, are sufficient to establish that appellant is an 'inferior' officer in the constitutional sense." (citing Germaine, 99 U.S. at 511–12)); cf. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 718 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (noting that the four-factor test from Germaine "was dictum in a case where the distinguishing characteristics of inferior officers versus superior officers were in no way relevant, but rather only the distinguishing characteristics of an 'officer of the United States' (to which the criminal statute at issue applied) as opposed to a mere employee."). We agree with Justice Scalia. See also Seth Barrett Tillman & Josh Blackman, Is Robert Mueller an 'Officer of the United States' or an 'Employee of the United States'?, LAWFARE (July 23, 2018), [hereinafter Tillman & Blackman, Mueller] [https://perma.cc/XK32-Q3JW] ("Germaine's four-factor test had nothing to do with whether a position was held by an . . . 'inferior' or 'principal' officer. Germaine concerned the distinction between an 'officer of the United States' and an 'employee of the United States.'").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"appointed" by the "government." Presidents are "elected" by the people.[69] Chief Justice Roberts announced the same view in Free Enterprise Fund: "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[70]

From Hartwell to the present, the Supreme Court has consistently understood that "offices" and "officers" refer to appointed positions. These authorities place the President outside the scope of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3.

C. OTHER CONTEMPORARY AUTHORITIES FURTHER REBUT ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF LINGUISTIC DRIFT

There is additional evidence that the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3 does not extend to the presidency. Furthermore, this evidence is roughly contemporaneous with the 1868 ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In 1876, the House of Representatives impeached Secretary of War William Belknap. During the trial, Senator Newton Booth from California observed, "the President is not an officer of the United States."[71] Instead, Booth stated, the President is "part of the Government."[72]

Two years later, David McKnight wrote an influential treatise on the American electoral system. He reached a similar conclusion. McKnight wrote that "[i]t is obvious that . . . the President is not regarded as 'an officer of, or under, the United States,' but as one

---

[69] See supra note 51 and accompany text (discussing the elected President).

[70] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497 (2010).

[71] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD CONTAINING THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE SITTING FOR THE TRIAL OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP, LATE SECRETARY OF WAR, ON THE ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT EXHIBITED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES 145 (Washington, Government Printing Office 1876) (reproducing May 27, 1876 statement of Newton Booth, Senator from California); see also id. at 130 (reproducing May 25, 1876 statement of George Sewell Boutwell, Senator from Massachusetts, who stated: "[F]or according to the Constitution, as well as upon the judgment of eminent commentators, the President and Vice-President are not civil officers.").

[72] Id. at 145.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

branch of 'the Government.'"[73] In 1866, the Supreme Court observed that "the President is the executive department."[74] And more recently, the Supreme Court described the presidency in the same fashion: "The President is the only person who alone composes a branch of government."[75]

These sources tend to rebut any argument in favor of post-1788 linguistic drift with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States." Likewise, these sources provide some evidence that in the period following the Civil War, the phrase "officer of the United States" did not extend to elected positions, including the presidency. We do not suggest that there is no counter-authority. But until proponents of the view that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language includes the presidency put forward evidence as probative as Mouat and Hartwell, we will maintain that the original public meaning did not shift between 1788 and 1868. The President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

IV. CONSISTENT WITH SUPREME COURT PRECEDENT, THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH HAS LONG CONTENDED THAT ELECTED OFFICIALS, LIKE THE PRESIDENT, ARE NOT "OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES"

The Executive Branch has long relied on Justice Miller's discussion of "Officers of the United States" in Mouat. In 1918, Attorney General Thomas Watt Gregory concluded that "[a]n assistant United States district attorney is not an employee of the United States within the meaning of the Federal Employees'

---

[73] DAVID A. MCKNIGHT, THE ELECTORAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES: A CRITICAL AND HISTORICAL EXPOSITION OF ITS FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES IN THE CONSTITUTION, AND OF THE ACTS AND PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS ENFORCING IT 346 (Philadelphia, J.B. Lippincott & Co. 1878).

[74] Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 500 (1866).

[75] Trump v. Mazars USA, LLP, 140 S. Ct. 2019, 2034 (2020).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Compensation Act."[76] Citing Mouat, he assumed that if a "person in the service of the Government [is] not appointed by the President, a court, or a head of a department, and not elect[ed]," then he is not an officer, but "is an employee."[77] The Executive Branch has long taken the position that the phrase "Officers of the United States" does not extend beyond persons appointed pursuant to Article II, Section 2 procedures.

In 1943, Attorney General Francis Biddle cited Mouat for the proposition that "under the Constitution of the United States, all its officers were appointed by the President . . . or by a court of law, or the head of a department."[78] Biddle's reading of Mouat did not distinguish "officers of the United States" as used in the statute from "Officers of the United States" as used in the Constitution. And, Biddle reasoned that "all" officers must be appointed—not elected.

In 2007, an Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) memorandum echoed this position. Citing Mouat, the memorandum stated, "[i]t is true that an individual not properly appointed under the Appointments Clause cannot technically be an officer of the United States."[79] The modifier "technically" is significant. Here, OLC suggests that the Constitution uses the phrase "officer of the United States" in a technical sense. The Constitution does not use the phrase "officer of the United States" as a colloquialism. In other words, the Framers did not use the phrase "officer of the United States" as it is used in [76] Employee Compensation Act—Assistant United States Attorney, 31 U.S. Op. Atty. Gen. 201, 202 (1918) (citing United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 307 (1888)) (emphasis added).

---

[77] Id. (emphasis added). Buckley v. Valeo also distinguished between an "officer of the United States" and an "employee of the United States." See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126 n.162 (1976). See also Tillman & Blackman, Mueller, supra note 68 (concluding that under Buckley v. Valeo, Special Counsel Mueller was not an "officer of the United States," but a mere "employee of the United States").

[78] Prosecution of Claims by Members of War Price and Rationing Boards, 40 U.S. Op. Atty. Gen. 294, 296 (1943) (Biddle, A.G.) (emphasis added).

[79] Officers of the United States Within the Meaning of the Appointments Clause, 31 Op. O.L.C. 73 (2007) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

common parlance—a position that performs services for the United States of America. Rather, the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in a technical fashion to refer to specific positions.

Indeed, Mouat recognized that the phrase "officer of the United States" was a technical term. The Mouat Court found that a "person in the service of the Government" "is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States" unless he "holds his place by virtue of an appointment. . . ."[80] This 2007 OLC opinion strongly supports our position: the President, who is elected and not appointed, cannot be an officer of the United States.

Other executive-branch opinions have reached a similar conclusion when interpreting "officer"-language in statutes or regulations. Future-Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist observed that federal courts do not extend general "officer"-language in statutes to the President, "unless there is a specific indication that Congress intended to cover the Chief Executive."[81] Future-Justice Antonin Scalia also embraced this position in an OLC opinion. He wrote, "when the word 'officer' is used in the Constitution, it invariably refers to someone other than the President or Vice President."[82] These authorities, which are consistent with Mouat, Hartwell, and Free Enterprise Fund, provide further support for our position: the elected President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

V. ADVOCATES WHO ARGUE THAT THE PRESIDENT IS AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF

---

[80] Mouat, 124 U.S. at 307 (emphasis added).

[81] Memorandum from William H. Rehnquist, Asst. Att'y Gen., to the Honorable Egil Krogh, Re: Closing of Government Offices in Memory of Former President Eisenhower, OLC, at 3 (Apr. 1, 1969) [https://perma.cc/P229-BAKL].

[82] Memorandum from Antonin Scalia, Asst. Att'y Gen, to Honorable Kenneth A. Lazarus, Re: Applicability of 3 C.F.R. Part 100 to the Pres. and V.P., OLC, at 2 (Dec. 19, 1974) [https://perma.cc/GQA4-PJNN].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SECTION 3 HAVE FAILED TO MEET THEIR BURDEN OF PERSUASION

Professor Gerard Magliocca wrote an analysis of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[83] He cited our prior work suggesting that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.[84] Magliocca did not reach a firm position on this issue. But he acknowledged that "[i]f there is an attempt to apply Section Three to former President Trump for his role in the events of January 6, 2021, the issue of whether Section Three applies to him or to the presidency itself will surely be part of any ensuing litigation."[85]

Magliocca cited congressional debates about draft versions of the Fourteenth Amendment. These records suggest that some members of Congress thought the presidency was an "office . . . under the United States" for purposes of Section 3's disqualification element.[86] Other scholars reached similar conclusions.[87] This evidence, however, does not clearly control the threshold question presented by the jurisdictional element: is the President an "officer of the United States."

---

[83] Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 CONST. COMM. 87, 93 n.29 (2021).

[84] Id. (citing Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an 'Officer of the United States' for Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, REASON-VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (Jan. 20, 2021) [https://perma.cc/A45G-PCQJ]).

[85] Id.

[86] Id. at 93–94 (discussing, for example, statements of Rep. Morrill and Rep. Bingham).

[87] See Mark Graber, Their Fourteenth Amendment, Section 3 and Ours, JUST SECURITY (Feb. 16, 2021) [https://perma.cc/26BG-W7Q7] ("In the absence of any statement even hinting the contrary, no Republican could have believed that traitors should not become members of Congress, but ought to be allowed to be President of the United States."); Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-To Guide, LAWFARE (Jan. 19, 2021) [https://perma.cc/FBS4-HFYN] ("But the framers of the 14th Amendment clearly thought that Section 3 covered the president."). Hemel seems to have conflated Section 3's jurisdictional and disqualification elements.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Magliocca also made a purposivist argument. He wrote that "Congress did not intend (nor would the public have understood) that Jefferson Davis could not be a Representative or a Senator but could be President."[88] In 2009, Professor Saikrishna Prakash made this same argument in response to an article by Tillman.[89] But these intuitions also concern the scope of Section 3's disqualification element. These intuitions do not squarely resolve the issue of whether a President was an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Advocates who argue that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of the jurisdictional element have presented three broad arguments. First, advocates cite scattered sources that refer to the President as an "officer" or an "officer of the United States." Second, advocates hypothesize that the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment may have feared a former President, who took one constitutional oath and later supported the Confederacy, being re-elected to the presidency. Third, advocates argue that Section 3's jurisdictional element should be read to cover as many positions as possible, and not exclude the presidency. In our view, these arguments fail to meet the burden of persuasion. Finally, if any doubt remains, the democracy canon supports excluding the president from the scope of Section 3's jurisdictional element. Let the people, and not partisan state election boards decide who can be the next President.

---

[88] Magliocca, supra note 83, at 93–94.

[89] Saikrishna B. Prakash, Why the Incompatibility Clause Applies to the Office of President, 4 DUKE J. CONST. L. & PUB. POL'Y 143, 161 (2009) ("Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee could have served as President of the United States without a congressional waiver of the bar against oath-breaking confederates. Reading this Amendment to require a congressional waiver for former confederates serving as postmasters or corporals but to not require such a waiver when a turncoat wished to serve as President would be rather strange."). Prakash was responding to Tillman's argument that a sitting President could serve in the Senate. See Seth Barrett Tillman, Why Our Next President May Keep His or her Senate Seat: A Conjecture on the Constitution's Incompatibility Clause, 4 DUKE J. CONST. L. & PUB. POL'Y 107 (2009).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. SCATTERED REFERENCES TO THE PRESIDENT AS AN "OFFICER" ARE NOT SUFFICIENT TO OVERCOME THE EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT OF OUR READING OF SECTION 3'S JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENT

Myles S. Lynch wrote an article about Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. He rejected the distinction we draw between an "office . . . under the United States" and an "officer of the United States."[90] And he contended that the President is both an "office . . . under the United States" and an "officer of the United States."[91] To support his thesis, Lynch cites three categories of evidence. First, he looks to language used in the 1862 loyalty oath statute. Second, he cited a circuit court decision from 1837. Third, he cites scattered references that the President is an "officer of the United States." These sources provide only minimal support for Lynch's position, and are not sufficient to overcome the evidence in support of our reading of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

1. The 1862 Loyalty Oath statute does not support the argument that the Presidency holds an "Office … under the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element

Lynch cited the 1862 loyalty oath statute to support his reading of Section 3.[92] The law required certain federal positions to swear they did not support people "engaged in armed hostility" against the

---

[90] Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 WM. & MARY BILL OF RTS. J. (forthcoming 2021) (manuscript at 11) [https://perma.cc/6EYJ-TMQ2]. At present, Lynch has only posted a draft of his article to the Social Science Research Network. In this Article, we respond to what Lynch has posted online and to other materials he has cooperatively made available to us.

[91] Id. at 7.

[92] Act to Prescribe an Oath of Office, and for other Purposes, ch. 127, Pub. L. No. 37-127, 12 Stat. 502 (1862) (repealed 1868).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

United States.[93] Specifically, the law imposed an additional oath requirement on "every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the government of the United States, either in the civil, military or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States."[94] The statute used the phrase "office . . . under the government of the United States," which is similar, but not identical to the phrase "office . . . under the United States." Lynch drew an inference from this statute: if the President did not hold an "office . . . under the United States," then there would be no need to expressly exempt him. Therefore, Lynch reasoned, the presidency would be considered an "office . . . under the United States."

This inference might have some bearing on Section 3's disqualification element, which uses the phrase "office . . . under the United States." But this inference does not plainly affect the meaning of Article 3's jurisdictional element, which refers to an "officer of the United States." If "officer of the United States" has a different meaning than "office . . . under the United States"—the central thesis of this Article—then the 1862 oath statute does not shed much light on Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Even if you disagree with our thesis, there are other reasons to express caution about relying on the 1862 loyalty statute. This bill was very controversial. There was a vigorous congressional debate about the scope of the law's statutory language. In 1863, Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts put forward a resolution requiring all Senators to take the newly-prescribed loyalty oath.[95] Senator James Asheton Bayard, Jr. of Delaware, however, objected to the constitutionality of this resolution. Bayard, a former United States Attorney for Delaware, had authored an antebellum treatise on the

---

[93] Id.

[94] Id. (emphasis added).

[95] CONG. GLOBE, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 31, 37 (1864) (statement of Sen. Bayard) [https://perma.cc/UD62-KPJ4]; Seth Barrett Tillman, The Foreign Emoluments Clause – Where the Bodies are Buried: "Idiosyncratic" Legal Positions, 59 S. TEX. L. REV. 237, 260 (2017) [hereinafter Tillman, Bodies].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution,[96] and chaired the Judiciary Committee in the 35th and 36th Congresses.[97] He questioned whether the statute's "office . . . under the United States"-language could reach members of Congress. Congress can mandate that appointed officers take an additional oath, beyond the ordinary oath prescribed by the Article VI Oath or Affirmation Clause, because Congress created those positions by statute. But in Bayard's view, Congress should not be able to add additional qualifications for elected positions that are created by the Constitution, such as members of Congress.[98] Bayard concluded that members of Congress did not hold an "Office . . . under the United States."[99] Bayard based his conclusion, in part, on a report prepared in 1793 by Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton.[100] After the debate, a majority of Senators disagreed with Bayard. Senator Sumner's resolution passed.[101] And Bayard, a three-term Senator, resigned in protest on a point of principle.[102] The loyalty oath would not last long. Congress repealed the statute in 1868, the same year the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified.[103]

---

[96] See JAMES BAYARD, A BRIEF EXPOSITION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES (Philadelphia, Hogan & Thompson 1833). Bayard's treatise continues to be cited by the Supreme Court and in modern scholarship. See, e.g., Harmelin v. Michigan, 501 U.S. 957, 981 (1991) (quoting BAYARD); John F. Stinneford, The Original Meaning of "Cruel," 105 GEO. L.J. 441, 486 & n.263 (2017) (quoting BAYARD).

[97] See Bayard, James Asheton, Jr. (1799–1880), BIOGRAPHICAL DIRECTORY OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS, 1774–PRESENT [https://perma.cc/NW8G-FYMR]; History of the District of Delaware, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE [https://perma.cc/NC5W-UZJZ].

[98] CONG. GLOBE, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 31, 37 (1864) (statement of Sen. Bayard) [https://perma.cc/UD62-KPJ4].

[99] Id.

[100] For the relevance of Bayard's speech and Hamilton's report, see Tillman, Bodies, supra note 95, at 259. Bayard was relying on an edited reproduction of Hamilton's original document—the reproduction was prepared in the 1830s.

[101] Tillman, Bodies, supra note 95, at 261.

[102] Id.

[103] See generally The Senate's First Act—The Oath Act, UNITED STATES SENATE [https://perma.cc/V9B7-A6VY] (discussing 1862 Ironclad Oath, and 1868 and 1884 repeal of that oath).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There is one final reason why the loyalty oath poses special difficulties for Lynch. In his view, members of Congress do not hold "office[s] . . . under the United States."[104] But the 1862 statute, as understood by Senator Sumner, applied to members of Congress. In other words, Sumner viewed members of Congress as "office[s] . . . under the United States." This understanding of the statute undermines Lynch's position in regard to Section 3's jurisdictional element. Ultimately, Lynch may find himself in agreement with Bayard, who argued that members of Congress do not hold "office . . . under the United States." We think the better position is to look to other, and more on-point, sources to understand Section 3's jurisdictional element.[105]

2. Stokes v. Kendall does not shed light on the meaning of Section 3's jurisdictional element

Lynch cited a second source of authority to support his position that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element: United States ex rel. Stokes v. Kendall, a circuit court decision from 1837.[106] This dispute led to the Supreme Court's definitive statement of the president's duty to oversee his principal officers.[107]

During the John Quincy Adams administration, Stockton & Stokes received important carrier contracts to assist the Postal Service. That firm was loyal to Adams. Upon taking office in 1829, President Jackson refused any service from the firm. Amos Kendall was appointed postmaster general in 1835. He found that the Adams administration overpaid Stockton & Stokes in credits. Kendall sought to correct that error by eliminating the credits. Kendall wrote in his autobiography that when he raised the issue with President Jackson,

---

[104] Lynch, supra note 90.

[105] See supra Parts II, III, and IV.

[106] United States ex rel. Stokes v. Kendall, 26 F. Cas. 702, 752 (C.C.D.C. 1837) (No. 15,517).

[107] Kendall v. United States, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 524 (1838).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Old Hickory "remitted the matter to [his] discretion."[108] Kendall knew what had to be done, and removed the credits from the ledgers.

Congress did not approve of the nonpayment. Rather, Congress passed a law requiring the solicitor of the Treasury Department to review the accounts, settle the differences, and order the postmaster general to apply the credits. After receiving the solicitor's judgment, Kendall paid out most of the credits, but withheld some that he believed to be outside the congressional edict. This act of defiance was purportedly done "by President Jackson's order."[109]

Stockton & Stokes continued to press its claims after President Martin Van Buren succeeded Jackson in 1837. The firm "called on the President, under his constitutional power to take care that the laws were faithfully executed, to require the postmaster general to execute this law, by giving them the further credit" to which they claimed entitlement.[110] The circuit court, per Chief Judge Cranch, issued a writ of mandamus compelling the postmaster general to apply the credits in full.[111] On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, and held that the postmaster general must comply with positive congressional edicts, lest the duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed become a "dispensing power."[112] On appeal, Chief Justice Taney wrote the majority opinion. The Court stated, "[t]o contend that the obligation imposed on the President to see the laws faithfully executed, implies a power to forbid their execution, is a novel construction of the constitution."[113] The Supreme Court has reiterated Kendall's reasoning. The principles from that case are

---

[108] AMOS KENDALL, AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AMOS KENDALL 350 (William Sitckney, ed., Boston, Lee & Shepard Publishers 1872).

[109] 2 CHARLES WARREN, THE SUPREME COURT IN UNITED STATES HISTORY: 1836–1918, at 44 (1926).

[110] Kendall, 37 U.S. at 538.

[111] United States ex rel. Stokes, 26 F. Cas. at 702.

[112] Kendall, 37 U.S. at 608 (citing the Take Care Clause).

[113] Id. at 613.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"fundamental and essential," and without them, "the administration of the government would be impracticable."[114]

Lynch cited a single sentence from Chief Judge Cranch's circuit court decision that used the phrase "officer of the United States." Lynch used that sentence to interpret the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element. But we think Lynch read Kendall out of context.

In his opinion, Cranch described the nature of the Postmaster General's role. He explained that the Postmaster General does not work at the President's absolute command. Rather, the Postmaster General "is responsible to the United States, and not to the president." [115] The President can only command the Postmaster General when, "express law, authorized to assign [to the President] duties over and above those specially prescribed by the legislature." [116] The Postmaster General is not an officer of the President. Rather, he is "the officer of the United States, and so called in the constitution, and in all the acts of congress which relate to such officers."[117]

Here, Cranch was not interpreting the phrase "officer of the United States" as used in the Appointments Clause or in any other constitutional provision. Cranch also was not interpreting how the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in any statute or other positive law. Rather, Cranch was making a broader point about our system of government: officers are responsible to the nation and its laws, and not to the President. Cranch explained, "the postmaster-general must judge for himself, and upon his own responsibility, not

---

[114] United States ex rel. Goodrich v. Guthrie, 58 U.S. (17 How.) 284, 304 (1854). See also United States v. Midwest Oil Co., 236 U.S. 459, 505 (1915); Texas v. United States, No. 6:21-CV-00016, 2021 WL 3683913, at *37 (S.D. Tex. Aug. 19, 2021) (citing Brief for the Cato Institute, Professor Randy E. Barnett & Professor Jeremy Rabkin as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents at 5–6, United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (No. 15-674) [https://perma.cc/DXM2-VHJH]).

[115] United States ex rel. Stokes, 26 F. Cas. at 752.

[116] Id.

[117] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to the president, but to the United States, whose officer he is."[118] The Constitution "does not authorize the president to direct [the Postmaster] how he shall discharge"[119] his duties. In the very next sentence, Cranch wrote:

> The president himself, although called by the postmaster-general, in his answer, 'the highest representative of the majesty of the people, in this government,' is but an officer of the United States, the head of one of the departments into which the sovereign power of the nation is divided; and, as that is the executive department, he may, with propriety, be called the chief magistrate of the United States.[120]

Lynch cited this sentence as evidence that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element. We disagree. Cranch used the phrase "of the United States" here in the same way that he did with respect to the Postmaster General: The President is responsible to the nation and its laws. In using "officer of the United States"-language, Cranch was not interpreting either a statute or a constitutional provision. He was using this same language in a more colloquial, or even a philosophical sense.

Cranch was not making a precise statement about what constitutional language governs or includes the President. Rather, he juxtaposed "officer of the United States" and "chief magistrate of the United States." Cranch made a broader point about constitutional governance—with some well-positioned jabs at President Jackson.

---

[118] Id.
[119] Id.
[120] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(Cranch, a Federalist, was the nephew of President John Adams, and was also President John Quincy Adams's cousin.[121])

This brief aside from a circuit court decision is a very thin reed on which to place the construction of Section 3, which was ratified three decades later. Indeed, no comparable language appears in Chief Justice Taney's Supreme Court decision. By contrast, Free Enterprise Fund was an Appointments Clause case where the scope of the Constitution's "Officers of the United States"-language was a live issue. Chief Justice Roberts wrote, "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[122] Moreover, Mouat and Hartwell provide far more authoritative support for the proposition that the President is not an "officer of the United States." We do not put much weight on this aside from Kendall.

3. Scattered references that suggest the President is an "officer of the United States" or an "officer" cannot establish the precise meaning of a phrase used in Section 3's jurisdictional element

Finally, Lynch cited scattered sources in which the President was referred to as an "officer of the United States." For example, in 1824, President James Monroe sent a communication to the Senate and House.[123] Monroe recounted an incident in which the Massachusetts Governor refused to call forth the state militia. The state executive argued that the state executive must consent to that request. Moreover, according to Monroe, the Governor argued that the militia

---

[121] See John Quincy Adams to Lucy Cranch, June 1, 1778, FOUNDERS ONLINE (last visited Dec. 8, 2021) [https://perma.cc/E83G-8N6] ("Late in 1800 President John Adams, the husband of Cranch's aunt Abigail Smith Adams, appointed [William Cranch] a commissioner of the federal district, and early the next year he made him an assistant judge for the United States Circuit Court for the District of Columbia. . . . Despite Cranch's Federalist views, [Thomas Jefferson] named him chief justice for the circuit court, in which capacity he served until his death."); id. ("Only the immediately preceding letter from [John Quincy Adams] to his cousin William Cranch, Lucy's brother, has been found.").

[122] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497–98 (2010).

[123] S. JOURNAL, 24th Cong., 1st Sess. 190 (1824) [https://perma.cc/CYY9-3WYC].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"could not be commanded by a regular officer of the United States, or other officer than of the militia, except by the President, in person." In the very next sentence, Monroe wrote "this decision of the Executive of Massachusetts was repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and of dangerous tendency."

Lynch read this correspondence to suggest that the President is an "officer of the United States." That conclusion is not obvious, particularly because Monroe's statement was awkward. The construction of the sentence can be read in two different ways. First, that the President is an officer of the United States who can command the militia. Second, that the militia could be commanded by militia officers who are not "regular officers of the United States," but the President is a militia officer and not an "officer of the United States." This second reading is consistent with the Constitution's militia clause, which puts the state militias under presidential control in certain circumstances.[124]

We are not sure which reading is correct. We should be hesitant to put much weight on a poorly-crafted comment from President Monroe, which he used to assail the allegedly unconstitutional viewpoint of the Massachusetts Governor. And even if Lynch's reading were correct, Monroe was not interpreting how the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in Section 3 or any then-extant constitutional provision.

Lynch also cited an 1865 proclamation by President Andrew Johnson. It stated, "the President of the United States is, by the constitution, made commander-in-chief of the army and navy, as well as the chief civil officer."[125] Here, the phrase "chief civil officer"

---

[124] U.S. CONST. art. 2, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States.").

[125] After Slavery: Educator Resources, 3. President Andrew Johnson Appoints William W. Holden Provisional Governor of North Carolina, LOWCOUNTRY DIGIT. HIST. INITIATIVE [https://perma.cc/9Z63-9K8B].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

is distinct from the language used in Section 3's jurisdictional element: "officer of the United States."

There may be other scattered statements in records of congressional debates that refer to the President as an "officer of the United States." We don't doubt it. People in government and academics may use imprecise language to describe different types of offices and officers. And in everyday parlance, the President is an officer of the United States of America.[126] We have never said otherwise. We have never suggested that authority is not divided. However, these scattered references cannot establish the precise meaning of a phrase used in Section 3 and elsewhere in the Constitution.

B. FEARS OF A FORMER CONFEDERATE BECOMING PRESIDENT WOULD NOT CONTROL WHETHER A FORMER PRESIDENT, WHO TOOK ONLY THE PRESIDENTIAL OATH, COULD BE DISQUALIFIED

We acknowledge that there is a purposivist argument supporting the view that the President is an "officer of the United States" with respect to Section 3's jurisdictional element. Could it really be, the argument goes, that virtually every elected and appointed position in the federal and state governments would be encompassed by Section 3's jurisdictional element, but not the presidency? After all, a former President of the United States—John Tyler—actually was elected to the Confederate congress![127] Would the Framers really have exempted Tyler (or men like him) from disqualification? Professor Magliocca, citing the Tyler hypothetical, suggested that "the idea of an insurrectionist President was real, not

---

[126] See supra Part IV (discussing Officers of the United States Within the Meaning of the Appointments Clause, 31 Op. O.L.C. 73 (2007)).

[127] Tyler, John, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/Y6F5-SWCE].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a far-fetched hypothetical."[128] And John Breckinridge, who had served as Vice President of the United States under President Buchanan, later served as a general in the Confederate army.[129]

There is a pragmatic rationale that explains why the presidency was excluded from the jurisdictional element of Section 3. By the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in 1868, there were no living Presidents that had supported the Confederacy. Tyler died in 1862.[130] Moreover, Tyler had served as Senator from Virginia. Had Tyler still been alive, he was unquestionably covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element.

The other four living former Presidents—Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, and Johnson—had not supported the Confederacy. And each of those four officials had previously served in Congress, so they were unquestionably covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element. Moreover, Breckinridge, the former Vice President of the United States who joined the Confederacy, had previously served as a U.S. Senator.[131] Therefore, he was already expressly covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element.

At the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, there were zero former living U.S. Presidents and Vice Presidents who supported the Confederacy, and who would not otherwise fit within the express language used in Section 3's jurisdictional element. Thus, the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment—whose focus was on past wrongdoing during the Civil War—had no pressing reason to draft Section 3's jurisdictional element to cover presidents. And we are not aware of any evidence that Section 3 was forward-looking,

---

[128] Gerard N. Magliocca, Section Three Questions Answered, BALKINIZATION (Jan. 17, 2021, 7:19 PM) [https://perma.cc/Z4PE-Q8WJ].

[129] Breckinridge, John Cabell, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/BDK8-JTZ7].

[130] Tyler, John, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/Y6F5-SWCE].

[131] Breckinridge, John Cabell, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/BDK8-JTZ7].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and was drafted to disqualify future presidents who might participate in future insurrections.

We think the democracy canon provides further support for our position.[132] Professor Richard L. Hasen explains that under this canon, a provision of the Constitution that might be read to "limit the citizen in his exercise of [the right of suffrage] should be liberally construed in his favor."[133] This presumption equally applies to the political candidate who wishes to run for an elected position. Given two reasonable readings of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3, the democracy canon favors the reading that expands democratic choice. Under our approach, voters and electors can select the President of their choice. Under Lynch's reading of Section 3, voters and electors nationwide are permanently disenfranchised from selecting a presidential candidate. Indeed, they are disenfranchised from selecting a person who was already elected as President who seeks a second term. We should prefer the former reading, which is consistent with the democracy canon.

Even in the wake of January 6, 2021, we should not read Section 3's text through the lens of the transitory and felt needs of the moment. The original public meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, including Section 3's jurisdictional element, was fixed more than 150 years ago.

Finally, from 1789 through 2016, all of the presidents and vice Presidents had previously taken a constitutional oath in some other government position. We do not think this pattern was coincidental. Historically, a person could only rise to the level of presidency following prior public service in state or federal governments. The only President who never held any other public office, and thus did not take any other constitutional oath prior to his inauguration, was Donald Trump. The question this article seeks to answer—is the President an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's

---

[132] Richard L. Hasen, The Democracy Canon, 62 STAN. L. REV. 69 (2009).
[133] Id. at 71.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

jurisdictional element—is relevant for only one President in American history: Donald Trump.

C. SECTION 3'S JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENTS, WHICH EXCLUDES CERTAIN STATE AND FEDERAL POSITIONS, SHOULD NOT BE VIEWED AS A CATCHALL PROVISION

Section 3's jurisdictional element is not a catchall. It does not cover all state and federal positions. There are gaps in coverage. For example, the jurisdictional element extends to a "member of any state legislature," as well as "an executive or judicial officer of any state." But Section 3's jurisdictional element does not extend to appointed positions in the state legislature. For examples, clerks and secretaries of state legislatures, who later served in the Confederate government, could not be subject to disqualification.

The same analysis would likely extend to appointed congressional positions in the federal government, like the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate. Section 3's jurisdictional element extends to an "officer of the United States." Appointed legislative positions do not fall in this category.

We find support for our position based on the Oath or Affirmation Clause, which in our view served as a model for Section 3's jurisdictional element.[134] The Oath or Affirmation Clause provides the oath for "[t]he Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States."[135] Appointed congressional positions are not expressly referenced in Article VI.

If Section 3's jurisdictional element was modeled after the Oath or Affirmation Clause, we can presume that appointed congressional positions are not covered by Section 3. As a result, a House Clerk or

---

[134] See supra Part I.B.
[135] U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Secretary of the Senate, who took only one constitutional oath, and later joined the Confederate government, could not be disqualified. Section 3's jurisdictional element was not a catchall.

Likewise, Section 3's disqualification element is not a catchall. It did not bar a disqualified person from serving in state legislatures.[136] This omission was significant. After all, state legislators were central players as southern states declared their secession. Moreover, prior to the ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment, members of state legislatures chose their state's U.S. Senators.[137] The state legislatures also "prescribed" the rules for the "Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives."[138] The decision to exclude state legislatures from Section 3's disqualification element had the potential to undermine Reconstruction.

Section 3, as a whole, had other glaring omissions. Disqualified persons could: (1) serve on state or federal juries; (2) serve as elected territorial officers; (3) serve as enlisted federal military or state militia personnel; (4) participate as national or state convention members under Article V; and many other positions. Section 3's jurisdictional and disqualification elements did not universally apply to every person who had supported the Confederacy.

None of the advocates for Section 3 disqualification of President Trump have advanced comprehensive arguments or marshaled systematic evidence that the President is an "officer of the United States." This position cannot simply be asserted or presumed, absent evidence. Advocates for Section 3 disqualification of President Trump have the burden of persuasion. They should rebut the evidence we have put forward in this article, and elsewhere.[139] And they must explain why the arguments and evidence they put forward

---

[136] Tucker, supra note 37, at 54–56.

[137] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 1 ("The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six Years.").

[138] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

[139] See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, What Happens if the Biden Administration Prosecutes and Convicts Donald Trump of Violating 18 U.S.C. § 2383?, 2021 U. ILL. L. REV. ONLINE 190 (2021) (discussing scope of disqualification element).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

carries the burden of persuasion notwithstanding contrary argument and evidence, and notwithstanding the democracy canon. And the evidence should be something more than personal intuitions or citations to the conclusory statements of other modern commentators asserting how the 1868 public must have understood the language of Section 3. Critically, these issues should be resolved before the next presidential election.

VI. THE COURTS, AND NOT CONGRESS, WILL LIKELY HAVE THE FINAL SAY OVER WHETHER PRESIDENT TRUMP CAN BE DISQUALIFIED UNDER SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

In 2021, the Senate did not convict President Trump based on the sole article of impeachment. Therefore, the Senate had no need to squarely face the question of whether a Section 3 disqualification against Trump would bar him from holding the presidency in the future. Similarly, even if the Senate had convicted President Trump in impeachment proceedings, and voted to disqualify him under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, the Senate would not finally resolve the scope of that disqualification. To be sure, had the Senate tried, convicted, and disqualified President Trump, members of Congress could have stated on the record that they were barring Trump from ever serving again as President.

Those statements, however, would not be dispositive of the constitutional issue. Rather, the situation would arise in a different context. Imagine that Trump seeks re-election in the future. Trump would submit a ballot petition to state and territorial boards of election. But that submission could be contested in adversarial proceedings. County-wide, multi-country, and state-wide boards of elections regularly hear challenges to candidates' ballot petitions. These suits are brought by voters or candidates seeking to keep a rival candidate off the ballot. In such circumstances, the candidate seeking his place on the ballot is the defendant.

In certain circumstances, a board of election might strike a candidate's ballot petition sua sponte. However, we think that a board would only do so where the petition is facially defective. For example, where a required document is entirely missing, or where the candidate's signature is missing, or where all required notarizations are absent, or where the petition itself makes admissions establishing that it is defective. We do not think a board sua sponte striking a ballot based on a novel reading of Section 3 would be consistent with established law. Nevertheless, it is also conceivable that a board of election might act sua sponte in making a Section 3 determination.[140]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is also feasible that Congress will pass a concurrent or joint resolution to disqualify Trump under Section 3. At that juncture, boards of election would hear arguments presented through adversarial litigation. And the boards would be in a position to determine the effect (if any) of a Section 3 concurrent or joint resolution against President Trump's holding an "office . . . under the United States." Such a concurrent resolution is currently pending before the House.[141]

All of these determinations by election boards could be appealed to the courts. In all likelihood, it is not Congress, but the courts that would have the final say in resolving the scope—if any—of Section 3 disqualification imposed by the Senate or by both houses of Congress.

The courts may also be asked to resolve an appeal of a decision by an elections board in regard to a ballot-access dispute, which may involve these same issues. Additionally, even in the absence of any disqualification decision by the Senate or by Congress, an elections board might decide a Section 3-related ballot challenge. Specifically,

---

[140] See Gerard Magliocca, State Law and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, PRAWFSBLAWG (Aug. 26, 2021, 2:00 PM) [https://perma.cc/T2W9-5GYT] ("One possible scenario in 2023 goes something like this: Donald Trump declares that he is a candidate for President. Some state election officials rule that he is ineligible to run under Section 3. He sues and the constitutional issue is litigated. . . . . Of course, some states might decide to amend their election law to include Section 3 and thus eliminate the problem I've just described prior to 2023.").

[141] See H.R. Con. Res. 3, supra note 12.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

if a voter or rival candidate brings a ballot access challenge, the board may conclude that President Trump is already disqualified to serve as President. Likewise, in the absence of any disqualification decision by the Senate or by Congress, the courts may be asked to decide, in the first instance, whether President Trump was disqualified for purposes of Section 3.

There are many possible routes through which these issues might be litigated before boards of election, the courts, or both. Still, there is a common thread: If the President is not an "officer of the United States" as that phrase was used in Section 3's jurisdictional element, then President Trump cannot be disqualified pursuant to Section 3.

Finally, it was not clear that the House managers actually sought to disqualify Trump under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, as well as under Section 3. During the 2021 proceedings the sole article of impeachment was opaque on this point. This lack of clarity was perhaps intentional. Or the imprecision could be attributed to the House's rushed drafting. We think the article of impeachment only referenced Section 3, in the context of efforts to define a substantive impeachable offense. We expected that President Trump's counsel would have argued that the text of the House's single article of impeachment did not give him fair notice that he faced Section 3 disqualification. But because Trump was never convicted by the Senate, the disqualification issue was never discussed in any detail.

Conclusion

The issue presented in this Article is not merely a theoretical one. There is a real chance that the fate of the 2024 presidential election could turn on whether President Trump is disqualified under Section 3.

Imagine that Donald Trump runs for re-election. Soon, election boards throughout the country hear ballot challenges. However, the rulings are inconsistent. Some boards may even conclude that Trump is already disqualified based on Section 3 of the Fourteenth

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Amendment, even absent any congressional or Senate resolution so deciding. Candidate Trump would be forced to take urgent appeals to the courts. And, in short order, the judiciary would have to resolve three pivotal questions. First, does President Trump fit within the jurisdictional element of Section 3: was he an "officer of the United States"? Second, does President Trump's conduct fit within the offense element: did he "engage[] in insurrection"? Third, does the disqualification element extend to the presidency: is the presidency an "office . . . under the United States"? And these questions would be promptly appealed to the Supreme Court.

If the Supreme Court agrees with us, and concludes that the President is not an "officer of the United States," then the case is over. Election boards that deemed Trump disqualified would be reversed. Trump could be listed on the ballot. The people, and not partisan election boards would select the next President.

However, if the Supreme Court disagrees with us, it would need to decide several other thorny issues. The Justices would be drawn into the maelstrom of January 6, 2021, and have to decide, as a matter of law, whether the President "engaged in insurrection." Here, abstention would not be a viable option. If the Court dismisses the case as a political question, election boards, and not the people, would decide the next presidency. States would face chaos if local election boards make different decisions. It is possible that within a given state, some counties would list Trump on the ballot and other counties would not. State supreme courts may not enforce uniform ballot procedures. This fragmented patchwork approach would be far more problematic than the selective recounts at issue in Bush v. Gore.

Perhaps the Supreme Court would leapfrog the offense element, and jump right to the disqualification element. If the presidency is not an "office . . . under the United States," then Trump could not be disqualified from the presidency. Thus, there is no need to decide if Trump "engaged in insurrection." In this article, we have made the case that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element. But we have been very careful to avoid resolving the scope of the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element. Suffice to say, in light of the possibility of linguistic drift from 1788 till 1868, we think this issue is contestable. And in the end, the Supreme Court would decide whether President Trump remains on the ballot.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In 2020, the U.S. Supreme Court was able to avoid resolving any of the major election disputes. But 2024 may be different. A Supreme Court ruling on this issue could make Bush v. Gore seem mild by comparison. There are many prudential reasons for the Court to avoid deciding whether Trump engaged in insurrection, or whether Trump can be—or perhaps was already—disqualified. The Court should can stay out of that MAGA thicket. A narrow finding that the President is not an "officer of the United States" ends the case. That opinion would be entirely consistent with Supreme Court authority from Mouat to Free Enterprise Fund. It would track the text of Section 3. It would be consistent with the Constitution of 1788. And, most importantly, it allows the people to elect the next President, and not the courts, much less partisan election boards.

We conclude that the President is not a Section 3 "officer of the United States." Donald Trump is not disqualified by Section 3, and can run for re-election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 3

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Abstract: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids holding office by former office holders who then participate in insurrection or rebellion. Because of a range of misperceptions and mistaken assumptions, Section Three's full legal consequences have not been appreciated or enforced. This article corrects those mistakes by setting forth the full sweep and force of Section Three.

First, Section Three remains an enforceable part of the Constitution, not limited to the Civil War, and not effectively repealed by nineteenth century amnesty legislation. Second, Section Three is self-executing, operating as an immediate disqualification from office, without the need for additional action by Congress. It can and should be enforced by every official, state or federal, who judges qualifications. Third, to the extent of any conflict with prior constitutional rules, Section Three repeals, supersedes, or simply satisfies them. This includes the rules against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws, the Due Process Clause, and even the free speech principles of the First Amendment. Fourth, Section Three covers a broad range of conduct against the authority of the constitutional order, including many instances of indirect participation or support as "aid or comfort." It covers a broad range of former offices, including the Presidency. And in particular, it disqualifies former President Donald Trump, and potentially many others, because of their participation in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 presidential election.

Introduction 3
I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today 7
A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language 7
B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?) 11
II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing 17
A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification 17
B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three? 22
1. Seeking Office 23
a. by election 23
b. by appointment 26
2. Holding Office 27
3. Special Situations 29
C. The Problem of Griffin's Case 35
1. Background 35
2. Chase on Section Three 37
a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" 38
b. The argument from "the intention of the people" 40

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law 42
d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power 44
3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum 45
III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions 49
A. Bills of Attainder 53
B. Ex Post Facto Laws 54
C. Due Process of Law 56
D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment 57
IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping 61
A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies" 63
1. Working definitions 64
2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions 70
3. Intratextualism 72
4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage 74
a. President Lincoln 75
b. Congress 79
i. The Ironclad Oath 80
ii. The Second Confiscation Act 81
c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases 84
5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples 87
a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally) 87
b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates 93
6. Legislative History 99
7. Early Applications of Section Three 100
B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred? 104
C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election 112
1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion 112
2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort" 116
a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation 117
b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office 118
c. Beyond Trump 122
Conclusion 124

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude* & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Introduction

"Section 3 has long since faded into history."
- Eric Foner[1]

Reports of Section Three's demise are greatly exaggerated. It turns out that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment remains of direct and dramatic relevance today—a vital, fully operative rule of constitutional law with potentially far-reaching contemporary real-world consequences. Section Three remains in legal force, and has a broad substantive sweep.

Here is what it says:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.[2]

This section of the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular historical situation and acute problem arising in the aftermath of the Civil War.

---

* Harry Kalven, Jr. Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.
 Distinguished University Chair and Professor of Law, University of St. Thomas Law School. We thank Frank Bowman, Steve Calabresi, Josh Chafetz, John Harrison, Ed Hartnett, Daniel Hemel, Brian Kalt, Myles Lynch, Gerard Magliocca, Michael McConnell, Derek Muller, Farah Peterson, Eric Posner, Micah Quigley, Richard Re, Michael L. Rosin, Stephen Sachs, Greg Sisk, Seth Barrett Tillman, and workshop participants at the University of Chicago Law School and University of St. Thomas Law School for helpful comments on the first draft of this article, T.J. Bowman, Nicole Catlin, Connie Gong, Sarah Leitner, James Marmaduke, Matt Phillips, and Georgios Sarris for valuable research assistance, and countless others for discussions about these issues—though not all of them gave aid or comfort to our conclusions.

[1] Eric Foner, The Second Founding: How the Civil War and Reconstruction Remade the Constitution 85 (2019).

[2] U.S. Const. art. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States in the South had purported (unconstitutionally)[3] to secede from the Union; they had purported to form the (so-called) "Confederate States of America" in rebellion against the authority of the U.S. Constitution; and they had waged a bloody four-year war of rebellion against the United States. Yet even after the rebellion had been defeated, Southern States had audaciously sent to Congress, to serve as U.S. Senators and Representatives, men who had notoriously violated previously sworn oaths to support the U.S. Constitution by subsequently engaging in or supporting secession, rebellion, and civil war against the authority of the United States (to say nothing of those now serving again in their state governments). The former Confederates who arrived in Washington included "four Confederate generals, four colonels, several Confederate congressmen and members of Confederate state legislatures, and even the vice president of the Confederacy, Alexander Stephens."[4]

The Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment rightly regarded the situation as outrageous—not only morally, but practically. If former Confederates held the levers of federal and state government power, effective "reconstruction" of the political order and any hope of extending the full and equal protection of the laws to the newly freed former slaves would be at an end. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment responded to that outrage, enacting a sweeping disqualification from state and federal office of those who had, as legislators or officers in the federal or state government prior to the War, sworn required oaths of loyalty to the United States Constitution and subsequently engaged in "insurrection or rebellion" against the U.S. constitutional authority or given "aid or comfort" to its enemies. Only a two-thirds majority vote of both houses of Congress could remove that sweeping disqualification.

Fast-forward a century and a half. The events surrounding efforts to overturn the result of the presidential election of 2020 have sparked renewed scholarly, judicial, and political interest in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[5] The core events are familiar to all—the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for States' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several States; the efforts of Members of Congress to assert a similar power to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; the fomenting

---

[3] See infra note 231 and sources cited there.

[4] Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 377 (2005); see also Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 176-179 (1960); Allen C. Guelzo, Reconstruction: A Concise History 25 (2018).

[5] The most important scholarly articles (to which we are deeply indebted) are Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment.. 87 (2021); Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty and Disqualification: Reconstructing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 William & Mary Bill of Rights J. 153 (2021), both of which were written before the events of January 6, and Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-to Guide, Lawfare (Jan. 19, 2021), available at https://www.lawfareblog.com/disqualifying-insurrectionists-and-rebels-how-guide.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and immediate incitement of a mob to attempt to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes—all in an attempt to prevent the defeated incumbent President, Donald Trump, from losing power in accordance with the Constitution.

This was undoubtedly a serious assault on the American constitutional order. Not since the Civil War has there been so serious a threat to the foundations of the American constitutional republic. It takes little imagination to describe the efforts to maintain Trump in office, notwithstanding his defeat, as an attempted political coup d'etat. These actions culminated in the incitement and execution of a violent uprising at the Capitol on January 6, 2021—an "insurrection" aimed at preventing Congress and the incumbent Vice President from performing their constitutional responsibilities to count the votes for President and Vice President in the 2020 election. Several of the people involved in these events—most notably the defeated President, Donald Trump—had previously taken oaths to support the Constitution. If they engaged in or gave aid and comfort to an insurrection against the constitutional government, Section Three would appear to bar them from holding office again.

As legal officials and citizens generally have begun to confront the application of Section Three, they have foundered on the most fundamental questions. How does Section Three's disqualification apply—does it apply—to those who planned, supported, encouraged, assisted, incited, or otherwise participated in the events surrounding the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020? Does Section Three's century-and-a-half old disqualification, designed for the aftermath of the Civil War, even remain legally operative in the first place? If so, what must be done to enforce Section Three? Does it require implementing legislation or criminal trials (or impeachments) before its disqualification kicks in? How does Section Three interact with the rest of the constitutional order—are its subjects protected by constitutional principles of attainder, anti-retroactivity, due process and free speech? And if Section Three does apply—to what and to whom? What actions count as having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" against the Constitution of the United States or having "given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof"? Which officials are covered by Section Three's exclusions?

This article attempts to answer these questions. It makes four key points (or clusters of points):

First. Section Three remains legally operative. It is no less part of the Constitution than the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is not a dead letter. The Constitution is a binding, authoritative written text, not a collection of specific historical purposes and intentions. Where the text applies, it applies. Its legal force is not limited to the immediate problem or purpose that prompted its enactment. Section Three is not limited to the circumstances of the Civil War and Reconstruction, even if the meaning of its terms may be illuminated by that experience and history.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor has Section Three somehow been "repealed" by Congress's two major nineteenth-century statutes granting amnesty to those covered by Section Three. This is not because it would be impossible for a constitutional provision to expire by its terms after a period of time, or upon the occurrence of a particular event, or upon action taken by future actors. Article I, Section 9, for example, created a constitutional prohibition of most congressional regulation of the international slave trade for a period of twenty years—but its prohibition then vanished in 1808. Section Three, however, does not work that way. It imposes a general, prospective, rule of disqualification, which Congress may remove by two-thirds vote of both houses only once it has occurred. Section Three is prospective; Congressional amnesty is retrospective.

Second. Section Three is legally self-executing. That is, Section Three's disqualification is constitutionally automatic whenever its terms are satisfied. Section Three requires no legislation or adjudication to be legally effective. It is enacted by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its disqualification, where triggered, just is. It follows that Section Three's disqualification may and should be followed and carried out by all whose duties are affected by it. In many cases, Section Three will give rise to justiciable controversies in the courts. In others it will be enforceable by state and federal officials. But no prior judicial decision, and no implementing legislation, is required for Section Three to be carried out by officials sworn to uphold the Constitution whose duties present the occasion for applying Section Three's commands. Section Three is ready for use.

While Section Three's requirements could be made the subject of enforcement legislation by Congress, under its general power under Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce" the provisions of the amendment, no such legislation is constitutionally required as a prerequisite to Section Three doing what Section Three itself does. Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase's circuit court opinion to the contrary, In re Griffin,[6] is simply wrong on this point—full of sleight of hand, motivated reasoning, and self-defeating maneuvers—as we will explain at length. In re Griffin should be hooted down the pages of history, purged from our constitutional understanding of Section Three.

Third. Section Three supersedes (or satisfies) earlier-enacted constitutional provisions to the extent of any supposed conflict between them. Section Three, at the time it was adopted as part of the Constitution, imposed a disqualification from office based on an individual's past conduct. Even if imposition of such a disability might otherwise, if done by statute, have been a forbidden Ex Post Facto law or Bill of Attainder, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment constitutionally supersedes any prior provision conflicting with its terms.

[6] 11 F. Cas. 7, 22-27 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This principle extends to a more unsettling point. To the extent Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" or giving "aid or comfort" to "the enemies" might turn out to be in tension with the First Amendment's protection of freedom of speech, Section Three supersedes the First Amendment to the extent of any true conflict. To be sure, the proper construction of Section Three's terms ("insurrection," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "enemies") will leave much speech and advocacy completely free. But in the cases where it does not, the terms of Section Three, not the constructions of the First Amendment, decide where the line is.

This leads to the article's fourth and final group of points:

Fourth. Section Three's disqualification is sweeping in its terms. It disqualifies from future office-holding persons who "engaged in"—an expansive and encompassing term connoting many forms of participation in or active support of—a broad swath of activity covered by the terms "insurrection or rebellion" or the giving of "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of the nation or its constitutional order. It applies to a broad swath of civilian, military, and legislative office holders who swore oaths of fidelity to the Constitution, and it disqualifies such persons from holding in the future any of an extraordinarily broad swath of public offices. Taking Section Three seriously, on its own terms, means taking seriously the enormous sweep of the disqualification it creates. And, we will argue, taking Section Three seriously means that its constitutional disqualifications from future state and federal officeholding extend to participants in the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020, including former President Donald Trump and others. The substantive terms of Section Three's prohibition are not themselves difficult or inscrutable (even if there might be questions of application at the outer edges of the text's meaning). But they are potentially breathtaking in their straightforward consequences.

In what follows, we develop each of these four core points at length.

Section Three remains a valid, prospective, enforceable, self-executing, broad, and relevant part of our Constitution. It falls to us to fulfill our duties to it. These include the duties of legislative bodies, state and federal election officials, executive officers, and perhaps others to take up the Constitution, including Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and wield it faithfully and forcefully against its enemies. Taking Section Three seriously means excluding from present or future office those who sought to subvert lawful government authority under the Constitution in the aftermath of the 2020 election by engaging in insurrection or rebellion or giving aid or comfort to enemies of the lawful constitutional order.

I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today

A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The first step in our argument is an easy one, but perhaps not immediately obvious to everyone: Section Three's disqualification remains an operative rule of the Constitution. The reason this might not be obvious, at least to the uninitiated, is that Section Three plainly was designed for a specific historical situation—the circumstances of Reconstruction following the end of the Civil War. The implication, in the eyes of some, might be that that historical situation limits the scope of the provision's operation. We think any such inference badly mistaken. Section Three was prompted by historical circumstances, but that does not in any way detract from its enduring force.

To be sure, Section Three clearly bears the hallmarks of its historical context. It is, for one thing, a radical rule. The sheer sweep of the disqualification from offices that it imposed on former Southern officeholders-turned-rebels was dramatic. Its operation was hugely disruptive of antebellum patterns of elite political leadership, apparently indifferent to inconvenience, and seemingly rather punitive in its consequences. Section Three is harsh. It is categorical. It is insistent. It seems to have been deliberately designed to turn the prior Southern political order upside down. As Eric Foner puts it, "Section 3 aimed to promote a sweeping transformation of Southern public life."[7]

In these respects, the disqualification reflects and embodies the distinctive political impulses of the so-called Radical Republican Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866. If its disqualification had radical policy consequences for the South, so be it.[8] It was more important to strip insurrectionists and rebels of governing power completely, to remake Southern political society thoroughly, and to prevent Southern backsliding from the full consequences of Union victory entirely, than to be concerned about such things as seeming harshness, impracticality, or disruptiveness. Section Three is very much a creation and creature of its day.

Yet it is (or should be) basic constitutional law that it is the enduring text of the Constitution that supplies the governing rule, not the ostensible "purpose" or specific historical situation for which the text was written. Constitutional provisions, written into our fundamental law, live beyond the circumstances that prompted their adoption. And many such constitutional provisions are written in broad, or general, terms that obviously extend beyond the specific situation or situations that led to their enactment. Sometimes this is by design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule, applicable to a broad class of circumstances, as a more general, "neutral," way of addressing a class of situations of which the specific problem motivating the writing of the text might be just one instance. The thinking might be that if the principle giving rise to the text is a correct one, it should be correct in like circumstances, not just the one situation that provoked the rule's adoption. And sometimes a text's breadth and [7] Eric Foner, Reconstruction, 1863-1877, at 260 (1988).

[8] Mark Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 1 (2023, University Press of Kansas).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

generality might not reflect conscious design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule that unintentionally went further than the problem they had in mind. Put colloquially, the text sometimes "overshoots" its drafters' intended purposes. (A text might undershoot the problem its framers had in mind to address, too—or achieve only part of its intended purpose, perhaps because of political compromise.)

The reason does not really matter. It is the rule as drafted and enacted in the written text that counts, whether it goes further than the purposes supposed to have inspired its adoption, or even whether it falls short of fully achieving those purposes. While evidence of intention, usage, purpose, and political context can assist in ascertaining the meaning of the enactment, it is that objective meaning that constitutes the law, not the ostensible purposes or motivations that supposedly lay behind it. This is "originalism," our system's basic method for interpreting the Constitution and its amendments.[9]

Consider, for example, Section One of the same Fourteenth Amendment. As a matter of historical purpose, the specific mischief the framers of Section One had in mind was the enactment of "Black Codes" in Southern States that discriminated against the newly freed former slaves. But the words chosen by the drafters to enact the rule embodied in the text command, in general terms, that no state shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" nor deny to any "person" within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws"—rules not cast in racial terms at all, let alone limited to the immediate situation of former enslaved persons. The rules enacted apply to all persons irrespective of race. So it was entirely plausible for lawyers to argue that Section One also barred the same kind of discrimination against women citizens that it barred against black citizens. It doesn't matter that the drafts*men* of the amendment might not have had women "in mind" if women are covered by the meaning of the words they actually wrote and ratified.[10] Similarly, it was entirely plausible to argue that Section One went so far as to ban racially segregated schools.[11] The answers to each of these questions turn on the objective, original

---

[9] See Vasan Kesavan & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Interpretive Force of the Constitution's Secret Drafting History, 91 Geo. L. J. 1113, 1124-1148 (2004); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Does the Constitution Prescribe Rules for Its Own Interpretation? 103 Nw. U. L. Rev. 857, 872-883 (2009); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Misunderstood Eleventh Amendment, 169 U Pa. L. Rev. 609, 624-625 (2021); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, Grounding Originalism, 113 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1455, 1456-1460 (2019). For purposes of this article, we can bracket any differences in emphasis between Paulsen's objective-original-meaning originalism and Baude's original-law originalism.

[10] We have used such examples before. Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 901-902; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Text, the Whole Text, and Nothing but the Text, So Help Me God: Un-Writing Amar's Unwritten Constitution, 81 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1385, 1421 n. 68 (2014); William Baude, Jud Campbell, & Stephen Sachs, General Law and the Fourteenth Amendment , 76 Stan. L. Rev. at 67-68 (forthcoming 2024).

[11] We have used this example before, too. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839-840 (1993); William Baude, Is Originalism Our Law?, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2349, 2380-2381 (2015). See also Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 66.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

meaning of "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and "equal protection of the laws," not whether the 1866 Congress and subsequent ratifiers had thought through the possible radical implications of their own work. If the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment's terms forbade racially discriminatory classifications of any and all kinds, as a matter of the rules of late-1860s language and usage, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether it was intended or expected that governments could enforce certain types of racial discrimination, like enforced racial segregation. The rule as adopted might overshoot the purposes, expectations, or desires of those who voted for it. But the rule is the rule; the text's meaning is the text's meaning.

Thus, if the framers and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment enacted a general rule in Section Three—a disqualification from future officeholding keyed to having taken an oath to the Constitution and subsequently engaging in insurrection or rebellion against the United States—rather than a provision that by its terms applied only to the case of former Civil War secessionists and Confederate officials and officers,[12] it is the general rule that matters. That the rule had a particular political purpose behind it as a matter of history might be an aid to correct interpretation of the language supplying that rule. (We will make such an argument below, concerning the meaning, in context, of the phrase "insurrection or rebellion.")[13] But in the end the question is what rule was enacted. If Section Three's rule fell short somehow, missing some folks its drafters might have meant to ensnare, those persons are not ensnared. The text might (or might not) be thought deficient in this regard—as having failed to fulfill its full purpose. But the text means what it says. Similarly, if the rule supplied by the objective meaning of the text runs right on past the specific historical purpose for which it was enacted and embraces as well other insurrectionists, rebels, and aiders and comforters of enemies, that rule must be given full legal effect as part of the Constitution. The rule's overbreadth in terms of its perceived purpose, and even its inconvenience as a consequence of such overbreadth, are beside the point.[14]

---

[12] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history of Section Three confirms that this is what the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment did. Earlier drafts had limited the Section's application to the "late insurrection." Later versions dropped this limitation and generalized Section Three's application to "insurrection" and "rebellion." See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2767-68, 2770 2869, 2921; see also Mark A. Graber, Rewarding Loyalty (?) and Punishing Treason Through Disenfranchisement and Bans on Officeholding: Section 3, at 3-4 (unpublished chapter, forthcoming in The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 2, University Press of Kansas) (documenting this development).

[13] Infra Part IV.A.

[14] See, e.g., Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 908-909 (1994) (making this point about the disqualification of some senators and representatives from eligibility for certain appointed offices posed by the Emoluments Clause of Article I, § 6, cl. 2); William Baude, The 2023 Scalia Lecture: Beyond Textualism?, 46 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y (forthcoming 2023) ("Sometimes rules go beyond their reasons; a rule can be overbroad compared to the reasons for enacting it. And sometimes rules are underbroad; a rule cannot quite do all the things that you might want to do given the reasons for enacting the rule. Textualism recognizes that when the judge enforces the law, the law's rule might sometimes be different from what the people who enacted the law would have wanted had they thought about the situation."). For an extended discussion of the abuse of arguments

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, we take it as almost too obvious to require stating that constitutional provisions have indefinite life unless and until repealed or amended by subsequent constitutional enactments. The fact that an unrepealed, unamended provision of law is "old" does not in any way weaken its legal force. The First Amendment is old too, as is the entire original Constitution. But both remain in force. This is true even if the purpose for which a constitutional provision was originally written has ceased to be relevant, or even if the constitutional provision at issue might be thought in today's society to be something of an anachronism.[15] There are, of course, some self-identified living constitutionalists who deny this point—who think that old texts have a legal shelf life and lose their potency over time, as "the interest in sovereignty fades."[16] But in our view, this just shows what is wrong with such living constitutionalism.[17] The Constitution is not a spice cabinet.

All of this might seem to belabor the obvious. Few interpreters of Section Three explicitly deny that it continues to govern new insurrections and rebellions.[18] But sometimes we wonder if this kind of denial is sneaking in to people's intuitions—subtly infecting and distorting the actual interpretation of Section Three. So let us start from the right first principles: Section Three remains constitutionally fully in force, as alive as the day it was enacted.

B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?)

But what about this? The second sentence of Section Three provides that Congress "may by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[19] Just as the first sentence's disqualification is not limited specifically to the Civil War, neither is Congress's power to grant amnesty. Thus, Congress can, by the requisite vote, remove any disqualification that exists by virtue of the operation of Section Three. But just exactly how far does that power reach? Could Congress, by two-thirds majorities, essentially extinguish the legally operative effect of Section Three entirely, by removing the disability imposed by Section Three generally, prospectively, and universally? Put from inconvenience, see infra Part II.C.2.a (discussing Chief Justice Chase's appalling opinion in Griffin's Case).

---

[15] Michael Stokes Paulsen, Dirty Harry and the Real Constitution, 64 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1457, 1486-1490 (1997) (discussing privilege against self-incrimination).

[16] David A. Strauss, The Supreme Court, 2014 Term—Foreword: Does the Constitution Mean What It Says?, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (2015); see also Adam M. Samaha, Originalism's Expiration Date, 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1295 (2008).

[17] See Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1487 (responding to Strauss).

[18] For a rare example, see an argument made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935) ("It was also seriously contended by counsel that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment was an outgrowth of the Civil War and that such a provision cannot possibly apply to the present case").

[19] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

more vividly: Can Congress, by two-thirds vote of each house, essentially "explode" Section Three—render it inoperative in the future, for all time?

These questions turn out not to be completely hypothetical. In two statutes enacted in the late nineteenth century, Congress might arguably have done this. One statute (from 1872) removed "from all persons whomsoever"—except designated categories of individuals—all "political disabilities imposed" by Section Three.[20] Another (from 1898) further removed "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred."[21] And indeed, in a recent case (brought by then-Representative Madison Cawthorn) a federal judge relied on these statutes to conclude that Section Three was now legally dead.[22] Is that right? Do these statutes—can these statutes—grant amnesty to all insurrectionists, past, present and future?[23]

No. While the argument is not entirely bonkers, it does not withstand more serious scrutiny. It is wrong on both statutory and constitutional grounds. Consider the statutes first. Neither one purports to rescind Section Three's operative rule for all time. They do not pretend to explode the first sentence of the constitutional provision.

Begin with the 1872 act. In 1872, after a period of case-by-case consideration of amnesty requests, Congress, as mentioned above, enacted a general statute removing disqualification from a broad description of persons embraced by Section Three's prohibition. As Professor Magliocca recounts, the statute reflected a mixture of motives: genuine mercy and magnanimity; the practical consequences of Section Three in the South; the burdens and biases of case-by-case consideration of private bills; the politics of a presidential election year; and the general but regrettable retreat from aggressive Congressional Reconstruction.[24] But what is most important is what it says. The statute reads, in full:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-

[20] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[21] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.
[22] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 889-892 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022). This argument, too, was made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55.
[23] The power in general of Congress by two-thirds vote of each House to remove Section Three's disability and the history of its exercise are the central themes of Professor Gerard Magliocca's excellent article, cited supra note 5.
[24] See generally Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 112-120.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States.[25]

The key words are "imposed" and "[hereby] removed." The words of the 1872 statute are used in the past tense: the statute removed disqualifications imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment—that is, disabilities that had already become legally effective. That is simply the natural reading, and the natural implication, of the language employed.

Indeed, this is almost exactly what the Fourth Circuit recently said in reversing the district court's decision in the Cawthorn case: Congress in 1872 employed "the past-tense version" of the verb "impose," thus "indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'"[26] Moreover, the Fourth Circuit continued: "[t]he operative clause's principal verb—'removed'—reinforces this conclusion. In the mid-nineteenth century, as today, that word generally connoted taking away something that already exists rather than forestalling something yet to come."[27]

By contrast, the district court had faulted Congress for not being more explicit: Congress "could have limited the Act to remove Section 3's disabilities from 'persons currently subject to the disabilities' or 'persons against whom the disabilities were lodged' at the time (i.e., the 'Confederates') but did not do so."[28] Therefore, the district court concluded, by the "plain language of Section 3 and the 1872 Act, Congress removed all of Section 3's disabilities from all persons whomsoever who were not explicitly excepted."[29] With all due respect, the district court appears to have been simply hoodwinked by the (for lack of a better word) feel of the "all persons whomsoever" language and completely missed the other language that made clear the statute's past tense.

What about the 1898 statute? Does it yield a different result? On the cusp of the Spanish-American War, at a moment of seeming national unity and perhaps a desire to put aside old sectional grievances (and, one might add more cynically, at a time of rising Jim Crow sentiment)[30]—Congress enacted another general disqualification-removal statute. This one removed the disqualification for everybody, without exception. Its language is even more laconic:

---

[25] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[26] Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022).
[27] Id.
[28] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 891 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Carthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022).
[29] Id.
[30] See, e.g., Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896); Cummings v. Richmond County Bd. of Ed. 175 U.S. 528 (1899). See also Michael Stokes Paulsen & Luke Paulsen, The Constitution: An Introduction 195-201 (2015).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed.[31]

In one sense, that's about as categorical, across-the-board a disqualification-removal as one can imagine: the disability imposed by section three is hereby removed. Period. No exceptions. But here it is also even clearer that the 1898 act is backward-looking. Like the 1872 act, the 1898 act uses past-tense language: a disability (already) "imposed" is now being "removed" from its prior legal existence. What's more, the 1898 act says that the Section Three disqualification being removed was one "heretofore incurred." That is unmistakably backward-looking, past-occurrence language.

What might otherwise—that is, but for the clarity of the "heretofore incurred" language—give the 1898 act the feel of a now-and-ever-shalt-be removal, eliminating all future Section Three disqualification as well as any and all extant ones, is the Act's reference to "the disability" imposed by Section Three. This singular reference might be taken to suggest that Section Three's disqualification was thought a one-time-only, single-shot, Civil War era occurrence.[32] If Section Three was good for one rebellion only, then repealing it in the past tense repeals all that there is. But of course, as we have argued, Section Three is not limited to one rebellion only, and so far as we can tell even the Fifty-fifth Congress did not think that it was[33] (nor would it matter if they did).

In any event, though these statutes do not even purport to sunset Section Three for the future, they do prompt us to consider the interesting question of Congress's constitutional power: What if they did purport to sunset Section Three for the future? Is Congress's constitutional power to remove Section Three's disqualification general and prospective, letting it remove Section Three's disqualification once and for all, including for future situations? We think not.

To be clear, we don't think there's anything inherently unthinkable or absurd about the idea of an "exploding" or otherwise defeasible constitutional provision. Legal drafters might sometimes want to provide for an expiration event or expiration

---

[31] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

[32] For instance, the D.C. Circuit's recess-appointments opinion in Noel Canning v. NLRB, 705 F.3d 490, 500 (D.C. Cir. 2013) aff'd only on alternate grounds, 134 S.Ct. 2550 (2014), leaned heavily on "this difference between the word choice 'recess' and 'the Recess'," arguing that "[a]s a matter of cold, unadorned logic, it makes no sense to [say] that when the Framers said 'the Recess,' what they really meant was 'a recess.' This is not an insignificant distinction. In the end it makes all the difference." Id. But a majority of the Supreme Court did not share this view of the text. NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S.Ct. 2550, 2561 (2014).

[33] For the brief legislative history of the 1898 act, see 31 Cong. Rec. 5367-5419 (1898).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

date, even in an enduring Constitution. Article I's Slave Importation Clause, protecting the international slave trade, exploded after twenty years.[34] So too the initial allocation of representatives to states is written in to the text of the Constitution, even though it was then exploded by the subsequent census.[35] Other provisions of the Constitution set baseline rules that Congress has power to modify. Article I, section 4 does that with respect to state legislative power over congressional elections: "Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations."[36] Article III, section 2 does that with respect to the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction, setting a default rule subject to "such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."[37] The Twentieth Amendment, in Section 2, sets a default date of Congress's annual meeting.[38]

There's no reason why the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment could not have similarly drafted Section Three to provide for the provision's own extinction after a supermajority vote of Congress.[39] But that is simply not what Section Three says. The second sentence of Section Three is not a grant of power to explode, or amend, the content of the rule stated in the first sentence. It is a grant of power to remove the consequences of the rule's operation.

To see this, break down Section Three into its component parts: Section Three has two sentences. The first one describes at length the disqualification for those who have taken a covered oath and engaged in insurrection or related conduct. Of course, those two things must actually have happened for the rule of Section Three's first sentence to be triggered—for a disqualification to have come into legal effect.

---

[34] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 1. ("The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.") For a scathing critique of the substance and purpose of this proviso, see, e.g., Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 81-83.

[35] U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl.3.

[36] U.S. Const. art. I, § 4.

[37] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2.

[38] U.S. Const. amend. XX, §2.

[39] We thus part ways with Professor Magliocca here. Magliocca argues (in addition to versions of the points we make above) that Section Three's second sentence cannot be read as authorizing Congress to remove future disabilities because this "would mean that Congress basically repealed Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1872. But Congress cannot repeal a part of the Constitution by itself: only a constitutional amendment can do that." Gerard N. Magliocca, The January 6th Insurrectionists Do Not Have Amnesty, JURIST – Academic Commentary, April 13, 2022, https://www.jurist.org/commentary/2022/04/gerard-magliocca-january-6-insurrectionists/. See also Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1314 (N.D. Ga. 2022) ("'Congress has no power whatever to repeal a provision of the Constitution by a mere statute'") (quoting 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55).

This strikes us as not quite right: If Section Three in fact authorized prospective removal of disqualifications arising from future acts of insurrection, a statute doing so would not be repealing a constitutional provision but exercising a power conferred by that constitutional provision—a power to terminate the provision's ongoing legal effect.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second sentence (the "But" sentence) then gives Congress the power to "remove such disability." ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.") The "But" sentence explicitly cross-references the first. Thus, the most natural reading of the two sentences in relation to each other is that the second sentence confers an exceptions power that only comes into existence when the conditions specified in the first sentence have occurred. And to belabor the point a moment further, the word "Remove" means (and meant at the time, according to 1864 dictionaries) to displace or take away something that already exists.[40] This confirms that Congress's removal power therefore only comes into being when a legal disqualification has vested by virtue of the operation of Section Three's first sentence.

Section Three's first sentence is written as a general and prospective rule, not limited to the specific instance of the Civil War. Section Three's second sentence is written as a continuing power to grant relief from disabilities already imposed by the operation of the first sentence. The power to remove an extant legal disability is not a power to rescind the legal rule that creates that disability. Thus, not only has Congress never purported to sunset Section Three, it lacks the power to do so by Section Three's own terms.

* * *

All of this is, we submit, basic. But it is also foundational. Section Three remains legally operative as part of the U.S. Constitution. Its rule of disqualification is general, not limited to the Civil War era. It states a rule of law embodied in the written constitutional text as permanent fundamental law. It possesses prospective force and applies to new situations: wherever the rule applies, the rule applies. And while Congress comprehensively relieved insurrectionists of the disability of disqualifications incurred prior to 1898, it did not (and could not) erase Section Three from the Constitution. Section Three remains in force.

Is anything more required, then, before this provision of the Constitution can (and must) be given effect by U.S. political actors whose powers and duties are such as to call for application of Section Three as a rule of law? Put somewhat differently: Is Section Three a self-executing rule of constitutional law, complete in itself? Or does Section Three require implementing legislation by Congress or some other further legal or administrative action before it has legal force? We take up that question next.

---

[40] Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 1116 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (defining "remove" as "To cause to change place; to move away from the position occupied; to displace") (quoted in Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing

Our second point is colossally important—a major sticking point for some. But it is a point we think should be obvious: Section Three is self-executing. That is, its disqualifications from office are constitutionally automatic whenever its conditions for disqualification are met. Nothing more needs to be done in order for Section Three's prohibitions to be legally effective. Section Three requires no implementing legislation by Congress. Its commands are enacted into law by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Where Section Three's legal rule of constitutional disqualification is satisfied, an affected prospective officeholder is disqualified. Automatically. Legally.

In the years immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted this seemingly obvious reading of Section Three was deemed inconvenient, rejected in the highest quarters, and has since faded from view. We thus give the point considerable attention here. Our analysis here is organized in three steps. First, we take Section Three itself, and explain why it has direct legal effect. Second, we discuss how this legal effect can and must be recognized by all persons and institutions who have the occasion to apply it in the performance of their duties—election officials, state and federal administrators, legislatures, courts. Third, we consider at some length the leading counterargument to our view: the 1869 opinion written by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase as a circuit court judge in Griffin's Case. Even if the result in that case is defensible—which is far from clear, and raises grave separation-of-powers problems of its own—its argument against self-execution is so wrong as to prove our case. Section Three is legally self-executing as operative constitutional law.

A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification

Before we consider Section Three itself, consider the Constitution as a whole. Though too many constitutional law teachers and casebooks begin their study of the Constitution with questions of judicial review, and cases like Marbury,[41] in doing so they put the cart before the horse. The horse is the Constitution, which is itself the "supreme law of the land."[42] Our system is one of constitutional supremacy, not judicial supremacy or legislative supremacy. As a general matter, this means that it is the Constitution which states the law, and it is the job of government officials to apply it, not the other way around.

This general truth is no less true of Section Three. Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: "No person shall be" directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall [41] But not ours! See Paulsen, McConnell, Bray and Baude, The Constitution of the United States (5th ed. 2022).

[42] U.S. Const. art. VI.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

be.[43] It does not grant a power to Congress (or any other body) to enact or effectuate a rule of disqualification. It enacts the rule itself. Section Three directly adopts a constitutional rule of disqualification from office.

This should be no surprise, as the same thing is true of the Constitution's other rules of disqualification from office. A person who has not attained to the age of thirty-five is not qualified to be President of the United States. This disqualification is automatic. The Constitution's rule is self-executing. "No person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not satisfy the age requirement.[44] The disqualification requires no further legislation or other action, by anybody, to be operative. The disqualification simply is. So too for Article II's citizenship and length-of-residency eligibility prerequisites for the office of President. And so too for the constitutional qualifications—age, citizenship, state inhabitancy—for members of the House and Senate: "No Person shall be" a Representative who does not meet Article I, section 2's requirements.[45] "No Person shall be" a U.S. Senator who does not meet Article I, section 3's requirements.[46] These restrictions on eligibility are legally binding simply by virtue of their presence in the Constitution.

The language of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment parallels, even duplicates, the language used in these other provisions to express other constitutional disqualifications from officeholding.[47] None of these disqualifications requires any further legal action or legislation to be operative. Where a constitutional legal disqualification exists, it simply exists. It is a binding rule of constitutional law.

Again, this kind of binding rule should be no surprise. The Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery, enacted a few years earlier, works the same way. Immediately upon adoption of the amendment, slavery was legally extinguished as a matter of constitutional law. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist ...," the Thirteenth Amendment provides.[48] The institution of slavery was immediately, legally, constitutionally gone.[49] The Thirteenth Amendment contains a separate section granting Congress the power to enforce the prohibition of slavery.[50] But that enforcement power scarcely means that the ban on slavery contained in Section One was inoperative unless and until Congress passed legislation making it operative. Such a

---

[43] We have borrowed this felicitous phrasing from John Harrison. Cf. John Harrison, The Power of Congress to Limit the Jurisdiction of the Federal Courts and the Text of Article III, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 203, 211 (1997) ("The Vesting Clause is a self-executing enactment; it lays down rules by saying what shall be.")

[44] U.S. Const. art. II, §2, cl. 5 (emphasis added).

[45] U.S. Const. art. I, §2, cl. 2(emphasis added).

[46] U.S. Const. art. I, §3, cl. 3 (emphasis added).

[47] See Josh Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few 168 (2007).

[48] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §1 (emphasis added).

[49] See Alexander Tsesis, The Thirteenth Amendment and American Freedom: A Legal History 48–53 (2004) (documenting reactions of persons learning of their freedom immediately after ratification).

[50] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

position would be ridiculous. The power to enforce adds to the substantive prohibition—it is not a subtraction from or suspension of it.

And of course, the same is true elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment too. We take it as obvious that Section One is self-executing. Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment, like Section Three states directly operative rules of constitutional law: "No state shall," in Section One, and "No person shall" in Section Three.[51] Both of these provisions are subject to additional enforcement legislation by Congress under Section Five. Yet it is common ground that Section One is self-executing. Nobody thinks (for example) that the prohibitions of Section One are inoperative unless and until Congress enacts legislation pursuant to its Section Five legislative power to bring them to life.

In each instance, Congress certainly can enact legislation "to enforce" the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments' commands, pursuant to their grants of legislative power.[52] Doing so can unlock additional procedural mechanisms, additional deference by courts to Congress's view of the law, and so on. The Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and more were designed to enforce Section One of the Thirteenth and Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment. But, to repeat, the existence of an enforcement power does not mean that the Amendment's specific legal commands lack any independent, self-executing force.[53]

So too, Congress in fact enacted implementing legislation in 1870 to enforce Section Three, authorizing quo warranto civil suits brought by the United States to remove state officials unconstitutionally holding office in violation of Section Three and imposing criminal penalties for knowing violations of Section Three.[54] But Congress's choice to trigger additional procedural mechanisms and federal jurisdiction

---

[51] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 1, 3. Nothing here turns on it, but Section Four of the Fourteenth Amendment, which repudiates rebel and slave debts while guaranteeing the legal obligation of the national debt, also seems to be self-executing. Section Two, which alters Article I, section 2's rule for how Representatives "shall be apportioned," presents a more complicated case. Its rule is immediately operative, like the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, but its rule operates by changing an apportionment process undertaken by Congress. In practice, Congress has ignored it, see Michael Rosin, The Five-Fifths Rule and the Unconstitutional Presidential Election of 1916, 46 Hist. Meth. 57 (2013); Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 395; see also email from John Harrison to Akhil Reed Amar, quoted in id. at 611 n. 96, and it is hard to see how anybody else can realistically enforce it.

[52] U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2; amdt. XIV, sec. 5.

[53] Indeed, Section One was added to an early draft of the Fourteenth Amendment precisely to ensure that state Black Codes would be unenforceable even if there were no federal legislation saying so. Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 30-31, 63-64.

[54] Act of May 31, 1870 (First Ku Klux Klan Act), ch. 114 §§14, 15, 16 Stat. 140, 143. The criminal prohibition in Section 15 of the Act was repealed in the 1909 codification of the penal code, 35 Stat. 1088, 1153, § 341 (1909), and the quo warranto provision in Section 14 was repealed during the 1948 positive law codifications of Title 28 of the U.S. Code, see Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, § 39; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 206 n. 365. Neither of these codifications was thought to make a substantive change by repealing these provisions, see generally William W. Barron, The Judicial Code, 8 F.R.D. 439 (1949); see also The United States Compiled Statutes, Title XIX, page 4459 (1916), which were

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

for Section Three cases does not mean that there was no constitutional prohibition before Congress acted.[55] Congress enforced Section Three's prohibition. Congress was not the one to give it legal effect. Section Three was effective law all along.

Section Three is also noticeably different from other constitutional provisions that deal with misbehavior—provisions that are not self-executing in the same way. Article III, for instance, describes the offense of treason:

> Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.
>
> The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.[56]

Note the contrast. The Treason Clause defines an offense ("Treason . . . shall consist") but it does not itself convict anybody of treason. Section Three, by contrast, enacts its own disqualification ("No person shall be"). It acts on persons, not offenses. This is driven home by the Treason Clause's specific procedures and powers: "[C]onvict[ions] of treason" require two witnesses or a public confession; and "Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason." Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, by contrast enacts its standard and imposes its consequences all at once.

Similarly, the Constitution's impeachment provisions say that those who are impeached "shall be removed from Office."[57] But the Constitution does not itself impeach anybody. Instead, it specifies that somebody else—the House and Senate—must do the impeaching.[58] Again, Section Three's contrast is glaring. The framers of Section Three had the treason clause and impeachment clauses at hand and chose a thought obsolete by then. The repeals therefore certainly did not reflect a decision to preempt or preclude any other existing remedies for Section Three.

---

[55] Professor Magliocca concurs. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 106 & n.101 (noting that "enacting enforcement legislation does not imply that legislation is required" and that the existence of Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment does not imply that the other sections are not self-executing). Indeed, this is especially so because Congress may have been responding to the decision in Griffin's Case (wrongly) holding that such legislation was required for Section Three to have operative legal effect. See infra Part II.C.

[56] U. S. Const. art. III, sec. 3.

[57] U.S. Const. art. II, sec. 4.

[58] U.S. Const. art I, sec. 3 & sec. 4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

noticeably different path.[59] Section Three does not call for treason trials or the impeachment of insurrections and rebels. It directly imposes an across-the-board disqualification and involves Congress only if Congress wishes to end it.

Section Three's constitutional disqualification, where applicable, just is. It stands on its own as a constitutional rule of law, having come into legal force "as Part of this Constitution," along with the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, "when ratified" as a constitutional amendment.[60] It immediately became "supreme Law of the Land." [61] Its rule took immediate effect. Section Three is, in that sense, legally self-executing.

Is there any serious textual argument to the contrary? We will address Chief Justice Chase's conclusion in Griffin's Case in a moment. But we suspect that resistance to this point often comes instead from some misdirected intuitions. One is the problem of supposed difficulty. It seems easy, perhaps, to apply the constitutional qualifications of age and citizenship.[62] It is pretty obvious what these are and obvious what they demand that we do. But who exactly is disqualified by Section Three is, at least to initial appearances, a more difficult, complicated, and fact-specific question. It is a more difficult question of law because we must plumb the meanings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and so on—and these meanings are not quite as self-evident as "thirty-five years of age" (at least until this article is widely read and accepted). And it is more difficult in practice, because even once we know what the terms of Section Three mean, we must know what exactly every prior-oath-sworn official did.

---

[59] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this understanding. Section Three's opponents criticized the proposal for its immediate consequences on former Confederates, and its proponents seemed to share the same understanding. For opponents, see Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2900 (Senator Doolittle) (amendment "will have the effect of putting a new punishment, not prescribed by the laws, upon all those persons who are embraced within its provisions"); id. at 2916 (Senator Doolittle); id. at 2940 (Senator Hendricks) (complaining about immediate consequences); for proponents, see id. at 2919 (Senator Willey) (defending the amendment's immediate effect because those affected had already "forfeited" their claim to participate in government "by their past conduct'); id. (they lost their "citizenship rights when they committed treason"); Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., App., at 228 (Senator Defrees); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. at 3036 (Senator Henderson) (defending the immediate effect of Section Three against the charge that it is a bill of attainder or ex post facto law); see generally infra Part III.A-B. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-27, 35-37 (documenting all of these discussions) .

[60] U.S. Const. art. V.

[61] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[62] See Gerard N. Magliocca, Background as Foreground: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and January 6th, at 14 n.42 (Mar. 2, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4306094 ("Section Three was unprecedented in the sense that prior restrictions on serving in office were bright-line rules (age and citizenship, for example) instead of standards"). On the other hand, the Constitution's inhabitancy requirement, has proved far from simple in practice. See Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Qualifications of Members of Congress (Jan 15, 2015) at 13-18, https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/R41946.pdf. And there has been recent litigation about the requirement that the President be a "natural born citizen" as well. See Derek T. Muller, "Natural Born" Disputes in the 2016 Election, 85 Fordham L. Rev. 1097 (2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Not all participation in insurrection or rebellion is open and notorious. More difficult it may be, to interpret and apply the disqualification of Section Three than the disqualifications of age, citizenship, and residency. But the fact of difficulty is a non sequitur. The fact that it might be hard for us to know today what a legal rule means (or how it applies) does not mean that it is not the legal rule.[63] The Constitution says what it says and we must try to apply it as best we can. To start by asking what is easy for us, and then to assume that the Constitution must mean something that makes our lives easy, is as fallacious as drawing the curve before gathering the data points.[64]

Resistance might also come from the problem of enforcement. The Constitution is generally self-executing law, but still, somebody has to enforce it. Somebody has to read it, understand it, and ensure that our practices conform to its commands. (Many somebodies, actually, as we discuss shortly.) This is true, but again it is a non-sequitur. It is true that government officials must enforce the Constitution, and who does this and how they do it are important questions, maybe the central questions of constitutional law. But the meaning of the Constitution comes first. Officials must enforce the Constitution because it is law; it is wrong to think that it only becomes law if they decide to enforce it. Section Three has legal force already.

B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three?

As we just said, even though Section Three is a self-executing, immediately applicable constitutional legal rule, someone needs to do the actual applying of that rule to particular situations where its application is called for. Section Three's constitutional disqualification exists of its own force as an abstract matter. But someone needs to bring that legal rule to bear in a concrete situation as a practical matter.

Who has the power and duty to do this? We think the answer is: anybody who possesses legal authority (under relevant state or federal law) to decide whether somebody is eligible for office. This might mean different political or judicial actors, depending on the office involved, and depending on the relevant state or federal law. But in principle: Section Three's disqualification rule may and must be followed—applied, honored, obeyed, enforced, carried out—by anyone whose job it is to figure out whether someone is legally qualified to office, just as with any of the Constitution's other qualifications.

---

[63] Christopher R. Green, Constitutional Truthmakers, 32 Notre Dame J. L. Ethics & Pub Pol'y 497, 511-512 (2018).

[64] Cf. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839 (1993) (mocking constitutional interpretation that engages in "the legal equivalent of the method my lab partner and I used in high school chemistry: first draw the desired curve; then plot the data; if time permits, do the experiment"); Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism: Standard and Procedure, 135 Harv. L. Rev. 777 (2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These actors might include (for example): state election officials; other state executive or administrative officials; state legislatures and governors; the two houses of Congress; the President and subordinate executive branch officers; state and federal judges deciding cases where such legal rules apply; even electors for the offices of president and vice president. We will discuss in detail some of these examples presently. But two points are important to keep clear at the outset: First, all of these bodies or entities may possess, within their sphere, the power and duty to apply Section Three as governing law. Second, their authority to do so exists as a function of the powers they otherwise possess. No action is necessary to "activate" Section Three as a prerequisite to its application as law by bodies or persons whose responsibilities call for its application. The Constitution's qualification and disqualification rules exist and possess legal force in their own right, which is what makes them applicable and enforceable by a variety of officials in a variety of contexts.

Consider some illustrations:

1. Seeking Office

a. by election

Anybody who seeks office will at some point need to show that they are entitled to hold that office. At every point that this occurs, Section Three governs. So, for instance, state or local election boards, and state Secretaries of State, may possess state-law authority to make at least initial determinations as to eligibility of candidates for elected office in that state or representing that state in Congress (as authorized by Article I, section 4 of the Constitution)—and, thus, whether or not such candidates shall be placed on a primary or general election ballot.[65] Those state bodies or officers are obliged, often by oath—sometimes by oath mandated by the U.S. Constitution—to act consistently with the requirements of the Constitution in the discharge of their duties.[66] Accordingly, such state actors can and must apply Section Three's disquali-

[65] To be sure, the centralized, government-administered ballot did not come to American until the late Nineteenth Century and so of course states are not constitutionally required to run elections in this way. But if they do, Section Three governs how they carry out their duties.

[66] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.2 ("This Constitution … shall be the supreme Law of the Land"). See also U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."). The nature of the Constitution as supreme, binding law is of course fundamental to the argument for "judicial review," as it is likewise fundamental to the argument for the obligation of all government officials to adhere to the law supplied by the Constitution and give its commands priority over any other source of law or legal duty. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Irrepressible Myth of Marbury, 101 Mich. L. Rev. 2706 (2003); see also William Baude, Severability First Principles, 109 Va. L. Rev. 1, 5-9 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fication in carrying out their state-law responsibilities—just as they possess the authority and duty to comply with and enforce the Constitution's other qualification-for-office requirements.[67]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work, consider how the state of Georgia entertained a Section Three challenge to the qualifications of Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene under Georgia law. A state administrative law judge took evidence about Representative Greene's involvement in the events of January 6, 2021.[68] The judge proceeded under the theory that if January 6 was a constitutional "insurrection," and if Representative Greene had been part of it, she would be barred from office.[69] But it concluded that the challengers had failed to meet their burden of proof under state law: "In short, even assuming, arguendo, that the Invasion was an insurrection, Challengers presented no persuasive evidence Rep. Greene took any action—direct physical efforts, contribution of personal services or capital, issuance of directives or marching orders, transmissions of intelligence, or even statements of encouragement—in furtherance thereof on or after January 3, 2021."[70] Secretary of State Brad Raffensberger issued a final decision ratifying the hearing officer's proposed findings that day.[71]

Such determinations about ballot eligibility may also be subject to further judicial review. In state courts, these procedures will of course depend on what review is available under state law. Similarly, federal courts might well possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual federal jurisdiction doctrines (such as standing, ripeness, mootness, and abstention), to decide cases of candidate eligibility. Continuing the example, Representative Greene did file a federal lawsuit attempting to enjoin the then-pending state proceedings (mentioned above), and the district court concluded that the case was justiciable and that Younger abstention did not apply, but that Greene's claims failed on the merits.[72] While Greene's appeal to the Eleventh Circuit was pending, she prevailed in the state proceedings, so the case was dismissed as moot.[73] The [67] We note that the determination by state officials that a candidate for election to the U.S. Congress is not disqualified—and may be elected—does not bind the respective houses of Congress, in the exercise of their independent Article I, section 5, powers to act as "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members" and refuse to seat prospective members it judges to be constitutionally disqualified by Section Three or other constitutional limitation. See also infra n. 96 and accompanying text.

---

[68] Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022).

[69] Id. at 5-6.

[70] Id. at 15. The January 3, 2021 cut-off is because that is the date that Representative Greene first took a constitutional oath. The Court also specifically rejected the argument that a Newsmax appearance on January 5, 2021, should be interpreted as a "coded message from Rep. Greene to her co-conspirators to go forward with a previously planned incursion into the Capitol." Id. at 16.

[71] Final Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022).

[72] Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1320 (N.D. Ga. 2022).

[73] Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 909-910 (11th Cir. 2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

details, of course, will vary from case to case. But where any of these tribunals has jurisdiction they too obviously have the power and duty to apply Section Three as the supreme law of the land.

This is not to say that states must provide any particular procedure for bringing a challenge to ballot eligibility qualification or grant a cause of action to particular private individuals to bring such challenges. For instance, in a recent suit seeking to disqualify Arizona Representative Mark Finchem and U.S. Representatives Paul Gosar and Andy Biggs from the 2022 primary ballot, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded that state law did not provide a private cause of action for a disqualification challenge.[74] In principle, that could well be right. Whether to provide a cause of action in such cases is largely a question of state law. Section Three slots in to existing powers and procedures without mandating or micromanaging them.

That said, the Arizona Supreme Court's muddied reasoning in the Finchem-Gosar-Biggs case necessitates a few clarifying points. First, state law can enforce Section Three, and the Fourteenth Amendment does not place any particular presumption against doing so. Unfortunately, the Arizona Supreme Court suggested otherwise, writing that "Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause . . . which suggests that A.R.S. 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates."[75] This inference is mistaken—Congress's power to enforce federal law, including constitutional law, is not exclusive of the states, and states regularly enforce federal law including constitutional law in their own courts.[76]

Second, in some circumstances state law not only can but must enforce Section Three. Under the rule of Testa v. Katt,[77] where a state does open its courts to a cause of action, it must apply federal law evenhandedly to that cause of action. As the unanimous Court put it: "[T]he Constitution and the laws passed pursuant to it are the supreme laws of the land, binding alike upon states, courts, and the people, 'any-thing

---

[74] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[75] Id. at *1. The court did not cite any authority for this interpretation, but its argument does echo a fallacious argument made by Chief Justice Chase in Griffin's Case, which we discuss at greater length presently. See infra Part II.C.2.d. The Arizona Supreme Court also made the additional suggestion that Article I, Section 5 gave Congress "exclusive authority to determine whether to enforce the Disqualification Clause against its prospective members," id. We are skeptical of this point as well, see infra n. 96 and accompanying text, but in any event it would have only applied to federal representatives Gosar and Biggs, not the lead defendant, state representative Finchem. The individual houses of Congress of course have no Article I, Section 5 power, exclusive or otherwise, to determine the membership of state legislatures.

[76] See, e.g., Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458-460 (1990); id. at 469- 470 (Scalia, J., concurring); see also Thomas Koenig & Christopher D. Moore, Of State Remedies and Federal Rights (May 29, 2023) https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4462807.

[77] 330 U.S. 386 (1947).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."[78] And thus "the policy of the federal Act is the prevailing policy in every state."[79] A state cannot treat federal obligations the way it can treat foreign ones.

The Arizona Supreme Court's decision unfortunately can be read to suggest otherwise. The court cryptically wrote that the state "statute's scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law,' and does not include the Disqualification Clause, a legal proscription from holding office."[80] If the court meant to distinguish federal constitutional qualifications from state statutes, it seems to have violated Testa. If the court meant that Section Three's dis-qualification is not a "qualification," that seems nonsensical. And if it meant something else, it is hard to figure out what.

In any event, the real question is what procedure is available for determining whether a candidate is qualified to office. That is basically a question of state law, and the correct procedures will likely vary from state to state. But the courts owe state law a full and fair reading, not one slanted by reticence to acknowledge the life in Section Three.

b. by appointment

Now let us turn to appointments. Just as with elected office, anybody who must decide whether an appointee is qualified must comply with Section Three. Traditionally this includes at a minimum whoever nominated the officer.[81] Thus governors, presidents, and other nominating authorities can and should—indeed, constitutionally must—decline to nominate and appoint to state or federal offices persons who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. And likewise, where nominating authority is subject to additional confirmation—by a state senate, the U.S. Senate, or any other body—that body presumably can and should, constitutionally must, decline to consent to the appointment of such constitutionally disqualified nominees.[82]

---

[78] Id. at 391 (quoting U.S. Const. Art VI, sec. 2).

[79] Id. at 393. To be sure, Testa and especially subsequent cases expanding it have been subject to powerful criticisms as a matter of original meaning, see Ann Woolhandler & Michael G. Collins, State Jurisdictional Independence and Federal Supremacy, 72 Fla. L. Rev. 73, 78-83, 97-105 (2020); Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 742-67 (2009) (Thomas, J., dissenting). We bracket those criticisms here.

[80] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[81] For instance, both President George Washington and President Franklin Roosevelt felt obligated to consider whether their Supreme Court nominees (Patterson and Black, respectively) were constitutionally disqualified by Article I, sec. 6. See William Baude, The Unconstitutionality of Justice Black, 98 Tex. L. Rev. 327, 330, 333-334, 355-356 (2019).

[82] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 914-918 (1994) (discussing constitutional responsibility of political branches to enforce constitutional disqualifications from office irrespective of whether they give rise to a judicial case or controversy, and bemoaning the failure of all to enforce the Emoluments Clause); see also Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 355-356 (similar); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, Straightening Out The Confirmation Mess, 105

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In other words, the election and appointment systems, from top to bottom, frequently make decisions about a candidate's eligibility for office. All of those decisions are legally bound by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment; and all persons making such decisions are correspondingly bound to faithfully interpret, enforce, and apply Section Three.

2. Holding Office

What about those who already hold office—either because Section Three was not attended to before they gained office, or because their disqualifying conduct happened later?[83]

Once again, the answer turns in part on what procedures are available under other law. State officials can be subject to a variety of remedies for unlawfully holding office. They might (or might not) be subject to removal, as a matter of state law, by a private suit quo warranto, by the authority of another executive or judicial officer or administrative board, or perhaps even by the state legislature exercising powers of impeachment or recall. In addition, it is possible that the salaries of such rightfully-disqualified officials—and the legal eligibility of such persons for those salaries—might be subject to the authority and determination of some other state official.

We submit that all such officials—administrators, executives, legislatures—possessing legal authority concerning such matters likewise possess the authority (and duty) to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three's disqualification in the course of exercising that legal authority. And once again: if such determinations are judicially reviewable under state law, the courts likewise possess the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.[84]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work consider how the state of New Mexico removed commissioner Couy Griffin from state office.[85] Griffin was an elected commissioner for Otero County, New Mexico, who promoted, assisted, and

---

Yale L.J. 549, 562-570 (1995) (noting parallel constitutional structural argument for obligation of both the President and the Senate to exercise independent faithful constitutional interpretive judgment in the course of carrying out their respective powers with respect to appointment); Charles L. Black, Jr., A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees, 79 Yale L.J. 657, 658-660 (1970) (similar).

[83] Or because Section Three was not yet adopted as law when they were appointed to office but became operative and disqualified them subsequently. This was the situation presented in Griffin's Case, discussed presently. See infra at II.C.

[84] Of course, federal courts, too, might possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual rules and conditions, to decide such lawsuits just as they will for state determinations of election candidate eligibility. See supra notes 72-73 and accompanying text. And when doing so, they have the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.

[85] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ultimately joined in the January 6 insurrection against the Capitol. A group of New Mexico citizens filed a quo warranto action against Griffin under New Mexico law, seeking his removal from office. The New Mexico district court took evidence, received legal arguments, and then concluded that Griffin was disqualified under Section Three. More precisely, and quite correctly, it held that Griffin had been disqualified since the day of the January 6 insurrection, and ordered his immediate ejection from office, and permanently enjoined him from seeking or holding any other covered position.[86]

As a matter of state procedure, the court concluded that the New Mexico quo warranto statute was a remedy for ejecting unlawful office holders.[87] It also concluded that quo warranto could be sought by any citizen of New Mexico, without any further showing of injury, because the New Mexico courts are not bound by the same "standing" limitations as the federal courts are. As a matter of federal law, the court had no trouble concluding that the events of January 6. 2021 were a constitutional "insurrection." And it had no trouble concluding that Griffin had engaged in that insurrection, both by "voluntarily aid[ing] the insurrectionists' cause by helping to mobilize and incite" the crowd, and by joining in the invasion of the Capitol itself, even though Griffin himself did not commit a violent act.[88] The New Mexico county court correctly recognized both its power and its duty to interpret and apply Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The same general principle applies to the situations of those who hold federal office. Again, anyone who possesses legal power to decide whether such a person can and should hold (or continue to hold) the office in question must apply Section Three's disqualification in doing so.[89] Here, the specific federal constitutional rules for tenure and removal present some interesting complications, which we address shortly.

---

[86] Id. at 46. The New Mexico Supreme Court dismissed Griffin's appeal on procedural grounds. NO. S-1-SC-39571 (N.M. Sup. Ct. Nov. 15, 2022). Meanwhile, the federal courts concluded that they lacked federal jurisdiction over two related claims by Griffin: an attempt to remove the state action to federal court, State ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 1707187 (D.N.M. May 27, 2022) (denying removal because of plaintiffs' lack of Article III standing) and a separate parallel suit attempting to enjoin the state proceedings, Griffin v. White, 2022 WL 2315980 (D.N.M. June 28, 2022) (finding lack of standing, lack of ripeness, and invoking Pullman abstention).

[87] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473, at 24-25 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[88] Id. at 35-38.

[89] The availability of a federal quo warranto action is curiously codified in the D.C. Code, §§ 16-3501-02. Courts have generally construed this statute quite narrowly, holding that only the Attorney General may bring a quo warranto against a public official, and that he has broad discretion not to do so. See Andrade v. Lauer, 729 F.2d 1475, 1498 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 784-785 (9th Cir. 2011); SW Gen., Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 796 F.3d 67, 81 (D.C. Cir. 2015), aff'd, 580 U.S. 288 (2017). The Third Circuit recently dismissed a Section Three quo warranto against former state senator Doug Mastriano on this ground. Hill v. Mastriano, No. 22-2464, 2022 WL 16707073, at *2 (3d Cir. Nov. 4, 2022). See also Hill v. Perry, No. 22-2465, 2023 WL 3336648, at *1 (3d Cir. May 10, 2023) (dismissing similar suits by same plaintiff against Rick Saccone and Scott Perry).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But in general: wherever anyone possesses the constitutional authority or duty to remove others from office for legal reasons, they can and should remove those barred by Section Three. Presidents—and subordinate executive officers acting at the president's direction—should remove from office executive officers, civil and military, who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. Likewise, the House of Representatives should impeach, and the Senate convict and thereby remove from office, civil executive officers who become constitutionally disqualified by Section Three.[90]

Finally and additionally, what happens if all of the above fails? Somebody disqualified by Section Three is given office and nobody removes that person from office. What then? Here too there will often still be additional procedures to enforce Section Three. These procedures mirror those available to enforce the Appointments Clause and other constitutional law of appointments. A litigant can move to disqualify a judge whose appointment is improper.[91] A regulated entity can challenge the actions of an executive official who holds office improperly.[92] Those who cannot constitutionally hold office cannot constitutionally exercise government power, so the subjects of that power can challenge their acts as ultra vires. While there may be some limits to the available relief in some kinds of suits under the "de facto officer doctrine," (more on which shortly), in many cases the courts will be called on to decide if an action is ultra vires. Section Three governs those cases.

3. Special Situations

A few federal constitutional offices raise special cases, where the Constitution itself speaks to official tenure or qualifications.

First consider Congress. Each house of Congress has two specific powers with respect to its own membership in which Section Three might come into play. First, each house has power to "Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of "its own Members."[93] Since one of those qualifications is non-disqualification under Section Three, each house can and must judge whether Section Three forbids the seating of a member. This judgment is conclusive, and it operates as a crucial constitutional [90] An officeholder who has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to enemies of the United States has surely committed a "high Crime or Misdemeanor" within the meaning of Article II, section 4's description of the scope of the impeachment and removal power. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, To End a (Republican) Presidency, 132 Harv. L. Rev. 689, 698-702 (2018). Note that military officers are not subject to impeachment; they are subject instead to the President's removal authority as Commander in Chief. Whether Congress could supplement that authority through appropriate legislation is an interesting question. See Zachary Price, Congress's Power Over Military Offices, 99 Tex. L. Rev. 291 (2021).

---

[91] Nguyen v. United States, 539 U.S. 69, 77–79, 81–82 (2003); Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 346-47.

[92] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 8–9 (1976) (per curiam); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 668 (1988); Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 487–88 (2010); NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550, 2557 (2014); see also Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 36-37.

[93] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 1.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

backstop for each house. No state or group of voters can force upon the House or Senate a Member it judges to be constitutionally disqualified. Indeed, even federal courts could not properly do so. While the Supreme Court has held, in Powell v. McCormack,[94] that Congress cannot create new "Qualifications" and that the federal courts have the power to stop it from doing so, neither Powell nor first principles allow a federal court to second-guess each house's judgment about whether the existing, constitutional, qualifications have been satisfied.[95]

Some have argued that each house's judging power also preempts other early stages of the election process. The argument is that states and state election law have no power to exclude a candidate for Congress because they are constitutionally ineligible to office—that instead the state must allow the voters to send up the ineligible candidate, so as not to prejudge the possibility that the House or Senate will find them eligible.[96] With respect, we do not agree with this argument. As a logical matter, each house's right to judge whether an elected candidate can hold office does not give it the power to force states to elect that candidate (or allow them to be elected) in the first place. And as a textual matter, state legislatures have the power to regulate the "manner" of elections, which includes ballot eligibility.[97] In our view, the better interpretation is that Section Three can be relevant to both the state's power to regulate the manner of elections and each house's power to judge the results of those elections.

---

[94] 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

[95] See Powell, 395 U.S. at 520 n. 41 (reserving the possibility that Section Three disqualification is a qualification); see also P. Allan Dionisopoulos, A Commentary on the Constitutional Issues in the Powell and Related Cases, 17 J. Pub. L. 103, 114-115 (1968) (cited in id. at n.41) (arguing that it is); Powell, 395 U.S. at 521 n.42 (noting that "federal courts might still be barred by the political question doctrine from reviewing the House's factual determination that a member did not meet one of the standing qualifications"). We emphasize that questions of interpretation and application of Section Three are not in general "political questions" that cannot be decided by federal courts, simply because they have political consequences. Where the Constitution supplies a rule, and the rule's application is not committed by the text of the Constitution to the judgment of one of the political branches, the courts are not disabled from deciding a case based on that rule. We simply think that the provision committing to each house the power to be the "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of its own Members does not permit judicial review of determinations of each house that properly fall within these constitutional categories.

[96] See Derek T. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind. L.J. 559, 594-598 (2015); see also Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245, 267-273, 282-284 (4th Cir. 2022) (Richardson, J., concurring); Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 912-916 (11th Cir. 2022) (Branch, J., concurring).

[97] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 4. The same Clause also gives Congress the power to "make or alter" such regulations by legislation if it wishes. Two relatively recent Supreme Court cases have invalidated state ballot eligibility rules for members of Congress that attempted to impose congressional term limits, U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995); Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510 (2001), and Judge Richardson relies on these cases to argue that states cannot judge the qualifications of congressional candidates, Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 273-275 (Richardson, J., concurring). Putting aside whether these cases are correct as an original matter, we think they further support our view. The Court rejected term-limit-ballot-access restrictions because they were an attempt to impose a qualification not contained in the Constitution. E.g., U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 784, 787-788, 806-815. It

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second relevant power each house possesses with respect to its own Members concerns Members already sitting in Congress. Each house also has power to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member."[98] So in addition to the initial power to exclude under Section Three, each house could potentially proceed through the expulsion power instead, by two-thirds vote.[99] As with the power to exclude, the power to expel, where exercised within the scope of the power conferred exclusively on each house, is committed to that house's discretion.

Additionally, Article I's Speech and Debate Clause provides that "for any Speech or Debate in either House," members of Congress "shall not be questioned in any other Place."[100] This means that to the extent that the conduct that violates Section Three was a member of Congress's official statements or legislative actions,[101] each house's powers of exclusion and expulsion are necessarily the sole mechanism for enforcing Section Three.

Federal judges hold their offices during "good Behaviour."[102] What if a sitting federal judge or even a Supreme Court justice has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to the nation's enemies?[103] As a matter of substance this is easy. Whether regarded as simply a violation of the Article III tenure condition of "good Behaviour" or as satisfying the impeachment standard of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors,"[104] conduct meeting Section Three's standard disqualifies a federal judge from office.

As a matter of procedure the question is trickier. The conventional wisdom is that Article III allows good behavior to be judged only through the procedure of impeachment by Congress. An alternative view, with some support in the history, is follows that ballot access rules that follow the qualifications contained in the Constitution could be treated differently.

---

[98] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 2.

[99] There is some debate whether Congress can expel a member for conduct that occurred before being elected. See Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few, supra note 47, at 210-212 (recounting arguments on both sides but arguing that it can); Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Expulsion, Censure, Reprimand, and Fine: Legislative Discipline in the House of Representatives 4-7 (2016) https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/RL31382.pdf (same). At all events, however, continuing to hold office when forbidden to do so by Section Three is ongoing conduct that would seem independently to justify expulsion in the here-and-now.

[100] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 6, cl. 1.

[101] As we elaborate later, we think it is quite rare that such conduct could violate Section Three, even on its own terms.

[102] U.S. Const. art. III.

[103] Cf. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 2, 141 (1866) (Chase, C.J., concurring in the judgment) ("In Indiana, the judges and officers of the courts were loyal to the government. But it might have been otherwise. In times of rebellion and civil war, it may often happen, indeed, that judges and marshals will be in active sympathy with the rebels, and courts their most efficient allies.").

[104] See supra note 90.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that Congress could provide other procedures for adjudicating misbehavior (as for instance in the 1791 Crimes Act, which purported to require the immediate removal of any federal official convicted of bribery or other crimes).[105] Whichever is the answer, the procedures and criteria for judging judges can and must apply Section Three.

Finally, what about the top of the ticket? What if the President or a presidential candidate (or likewise for Vice President) is constitutionally disqualified?[106] Who has the power and duty to enforce Section Three's legal prohibition? Again, the answer depends on whether the supposedly disqualified individual is seeking election to office or already holds it. In the case of a candidate, state election officials and state election law will frequently judge that candidate's ballot eligibility, applying Section Three as described above, and subject to the usual avenues of judicial review. That eligibility question can be a part of a state's Article II election for electors just as much as any other state election.[107] Put simply: a state secretary of state (for example) might well possess state-law authority to determine candidate eligibility for federal elective offices—President and Vice President, U.S. Representatives, U.S. Senators—selected directly or indirectly via state elections; and among those relevant eligibility criteria is whether a candidate is disqualified from the office he or she seeks by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Additionally, presidential electors have the power (and therefore perhaps the responsibility as well) to enforce Section Three.[108] In perhaps half the states, the question is more complicated, because state laws purport to bind the electors in various ways to vote for their party's candidate rather than making their own determination, and the Supreme Court has recently upheld such laws.[109] But even working

---

[105] Saikrishna Prakash & Steven D. Smith, How to Remove A Federal Judge, 116 Yale L.J. 72 (2006). In the interests of full disclosure, one of us was the student lead editor when this piece was published, and continues to think it is probably right, notwithstanding the counterarguments in James E. Pfander, Removing Federal Judges, 74 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1227 (2007). The other of us adheres to the traditional view. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Checking the Court, 10 NYU J. L. & Liberty 18, 76-77 (2016).

[106] We are assuming for now that the Presidency and Vice Presidency are covered by Section Three's language as an "office, civil or military, under the United States." We think that assumption is correct, and we will return to it in Part IV.B.

[107] See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) (upholding state exclusion from presidential primary ballot of twenty-seven-year-old candidate constitutionally disqualified on grounds of age); Hassan v. Colorado, 495 Fed. App'x 947, 948 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J.) (upholding state exclusion from presidential election ballot of naturalized citizen constitutionally disqualified from office by Natural Born Citizen Clause of Article II); see also Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 599-608; see also Muller, Natural Born, supra note 62, at 1100-1106. This is standard practice and law even though the President and Vice President are only indirect candidates, with their electors as direct candidates.

[108] See Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 579-580.

[109] Chiafolo v. Washington, 591 U.S. ___ (2020); see also Muller, supra note 96, at 580. We bracket the serious possibility that Chiafolo was wrongly decided. See, e.g., Mike Rappaport, The Originalist Disaster in Chiafolo, Law & Liberty (Aug. 7, 2020), https://lawliberty.org/the-originalist-disaster-in-

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

within that paradigm, states and their legislatures have their own duties to uphold the Constitution. That means they have a responsibility to arrange that their electors do not elect a constitutionally disqualified candidate, which should be reflected in their laws.

If the voters and presidential electors do select a disqualified candidate for the Presidency, we do not believe that Congress (or the Vice President) have the power to reject that candidate when the votes are counted in joint session. Whatever the extent of Congress's and the Vice President's authority to count the electoral votes, or determine the authenticity of submitted votes—i.e., was this the act of the electors of the state?—we do not believe that they have the authority to evaluate the decisions or actions of the electors themselves.[110] So if a properly selected elector submits a vote for a constitutionally disqualified individual it should still be counted.

Still, once those votes are counted, a disqualified candidate does not become president, even if he has the most votes. This is made explicit by the (self-executing) command of Section Three of the Twentieth Amendment, which sets the constitutional terms of a President's term. It states that at "the time fixed for the beginning of [the President's] term," "if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified."[111] The language thus specifically confirms the possibility of a failure to qualify, and specifies the consequences of that failure. If the President-elect is covered by Section Three, he cannot become President—unless Congress chooses (by supermajority votes) to remove Section Three's disability.

Once the President has taken office, the Constitution provides two paths for involuntary removal from office: impeachment for "high Crimes and Misdemeanors" and removal for being "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" under the procedure of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. The impeachment route is straightforward. As we have discussed, an insurrection against the United States is a paradigm example of a high crime or misdemeanor. On the other hand, it is less clear whether being legally disqualified from holding office makes the would-be President "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" within the meaning of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. (Structurally, the Twenty-fifth Amendment appears to relate to Article II, Section 1, paragraph 6, which deals with Presidential succession, rather than Article II, Section 1, paragraph 5, which deals with eligibility.) But in chiafalo/; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitutional Power of the Electoral College, Public Discourse (Nov. 21, 2016), https://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2016/11/18283/.

---

[110] We take no position on many further details of this issue, including the relative interplay of the Electoral Count Reform Act, Pub.L. 117-328, Div. P, Title I, § 109(a) (Dec. 29, 2022) 136 Stat. 5238-5239, codified in relevant part at 3 U.S.C. 15(b) & (d)(2)(B)(ii), possible constitutional challenges to it, see Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1805 (2002); see also John Harrison, Nobody for President, 16 J.L & Pol. 699 (2000), interpretations of it, but see Derek T. Muller, Electoral Votes Regularly Given, 55 Ga. L. Rev. 1529, 1538 (2021), or the like.

[111] U.S. Const. amdt. XX, sec. 3. Cf, Muller, Regularly Given, supra note 110, at 1538 n.42.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

any event the Twenty-fifth Amendment question will usually be unimportant in practice, because it requires a two thirds vote of both houses, and the Vice President and many cabinet officials, and so it will usually be significantly easier to use the impeachment process instead.[112]

* * *

Tying together all of these different procedures and possibilities: consider briefly (and not-so-hypothetically) a violent insurrection on the seat of government, by a mob joined or given aid or comfort by various government officials, from a state representative or commissioner to a U.S. Senator to the President himself.[113] From the moment of their participation in the insurrection, those officials would be legally ineligible to hold their offices, thanks to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. How this would play out practically might vary across them. As the state official returned home, he would immediately be subject to state law procedures such as a quo warranto suit.[114] He might be removed by such a suit,[115] or might well choose to resign instead.[116] The Senator might choose to brazen it out, counting on the difficulty in getting together a two-thirds vote to expel him. But if he sought re-election the Senate could and should exclude him by a mere majority vote. As for the hypothetical President, by right he ought to be immediately subject to impeachment and conviction by Congress, and perhaps also a Twenty-fifth Amendment declaration by the Vice President and supported by the cabinet. Even if those things did not happen, if he sought re-election, state election officials around the country would be bound by Section Three in deciding whether to put him on the ballot, even in the primary.

And of course, some of these matters would no doubt promptly find their way into the courts as well. Continuing the example of the presidential candidate, if state officials excluded him from ballot eligibility, he would likely be able to sue in state or federal court to challenge state officials' determination of ineligibility. And if he was not excluded by state officials, voters (at least in some states) might possess the legal right to challenge his eligibility. Either way, such a challenge would present a classic legal case or controversy. It is not difficult to imagine such suit being resolved by courts. Indeed, given the magnitude of the question and its consequences, it is not

---

[112] Brian Kalt, Unable: The Law, Politics, and Limits of Section 4 of the Twenty-Fifth Amendment (2019).

[113] See infra Part IV.C. for further discussion.

[114] For two relevant examples, see NMSA. 1978, sec. 44-3; W.V. Code sec. 53-2-1. In West Virginia, such a claim may be brought "[w]henever the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of any county is satisfied that a cause exists therefor he may, at his own instance, or at the relation of any person interested." Id. 53-2-2. For illustrative applications, see State ex rel. Zickefoose v. West, 145 W. Va. 498, 545 (1960); Wells v. Miller, 237 W. Va. 731 (2016).

[115] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[116] Resignation letter from West Virginia Delegate Derrick Evans to Governor Jim Justice (Jan. 9, 2021), available at https://s3.documentcloud.org/documents/20447012/derrick-evans-resignation-letter.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

difficult to imagine such an important case making its way quickly to the U.S. Supreme Court. It would then become the province and duty of the Court to determine and apply the meaning of Section Three.

Section Three thus functions as a sort of constitutional immune system, mobilizing every official charged with constitutional application to keep those who have fundamentally betrayed the constitutional order from keeping or reassuming power.

C. The Problem of Griffin's Case

A small problem with our view that Section Three is self-executing and immediately operative is that the Chief Justice of the United States said the opposite, almost immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. This was the opinion in Griffin's Case by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, sitting as Circuit Justice in 1869, in one of the first cases to interpret any part of the Amendment. In Griffin's Case, Chief Justice Chase concluded that Section Three is inoperative unless and until Congress passes implementing legislation to carry it into effect.[117] This precedent continues to cast a shadow over Section Three today.[118]

But there is a simple response to this small problem. Griffin's Case is just wrong. It is possible—possible—that its result is correct on an alternate ground, under the so-called de facto officer doctrine, which we will discuss. But Chase's legal reasoning that the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing is unsustainable. Indeed, the more one pulls at his opinion, the more it unravels. We examine it in some detail.[119]

1. Background

Caesar Griffin, a black man, was charged in a Virginia state court with the crime of shooting with the intent to kill. Griffin was tried, convicted, and sentenced to prison. He made no claim that the statute under which he was tried was unconstitutional; nor that he had been subjected to discrimination because of his race; nor that the composition of the jury was improper. As Chase put it: Griffin made "no allegation that the trial was not fairly conducted, or that any discrimination was made against him, either in indictment, trial, or sentence, on account of his color."[120] Nor did Griffin allege that the presiding judge—Judge Hugh W. Sheffey—"did not

---

[117] In re Griffin ("Griffin's Case"), 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D.Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) (Chase 364).

[118] See, e.g., Josh Blackman and S. B. Tillman, Opinion, "Only the Feds Could Disqualify Madison Cawthorn and Marjorie Taylor Greene," The New York Times, (Apr. 20, 2022); Tom Ginsburg, Aziz Huq, & David Landau, The Law of Democratic Disqualification, 111 Calif. L. Rev. at 16, 51 (forthcoming 2023) at https://ssrn.com/abstract=3938600.

[119] For other criticism of Griffin's Case, insightful as always, see Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 102-108; Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 9-14.

[120] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct the trial with fairness and uprightness."[121] Griffin raised just one challenge to the validity of his conviction: that Judge Sheffey (or, one might say, so-called Judge Sheffey)[122] was legally disqualified by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment from serving.

The facts relevant to Judge Sheffey were not disputed either. He had taken the oath: Before the Civil War, Hugh Sheffey had been a member of the Virginia state legislature, as far back as 1849. And he had "engaged in" rebellion: After Virginia purported to secede from the Union, Sheffey continued to serve as a member of Virginia's secessionist legislature. In that role, in 1862, he "voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[123] Thus "it is admitted," wrote Chase, that Judge Sheffey "was one of the persons to whom the prohibition to hold office pronounced by the amendment applied."[124]

Griffin had petitioned the U.S. district judge, Judge John Underwood, for a writ of habeas corpus challenging the lawfulness of his custody, which Judge Underwood granted.[125] The sheriff appealed to the circuit court, which was held by Chase as circuit justice.[126]

---

[121] Id. at 22.

[122] Cf. Will Baude, The deadly serious accusation of being a "so-called judge," Volokh Conspiracy, Wash. Post. (Feb. 4, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2017/02/04/the-deadly-serious-accusation-of-being-a-so-called-judge/ ("[T]o call him a 'so-called' judge is to hint that he is not really a judge, that he lacks judicial power. It is just a hint, but it flirts with a deadly serious issue").

[123] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

[124] Id. at 23.

[125] See Opinion of Judge Underwood in Edward McPherson, The Political History of the United States of America During the Period of Reconstruction (from April 15, 1865, to July 15, 1870), at 462-466 (1875). We are indebted to Myles Lynch for locating this source.

[126] The procedural posture of this and several related cases are extremely confusing and reflect background machinations by both Judge Underwood and Chief Justice Chase: At the time, habeas was apparently available from the district court, or "at chambers," or from the circuit court. If Judge Underwood issued the writ from the district court or at chambers, he could be reviewed by the circuit court, which would include Chief Justice Chase. But if Chief Justice Chase was not present, Judge Underwood could also sit alone as the circuit court. And thanks to a recent statute designed to strip jurisdiction over the anti-Reconstruction suit of Ex parte McCardle, there would be no appeal if Judge Underwood sat as the circuit court. Underwood took this, the unreviewable route, in another habeas case like Griffin's brought by Sally Anderson. Chief Justice Chase then wrote to Underwood with a veiled threat, floating the possibility that a recent statute could be interpreted to deprive Underwood of his ability to hold the circuit court at that time, and encouraging Underwood to hear the cases in the district court or at chambers so that Chase could review him. Underwood obliged. Meanwhile, Virginia also sought an original writ in the Supreme Court to put a stop to Underwood's Section Three docket. The Supreme Court ordered all of the proceedings stayed, and then let Chase go down to the circuit to clean things up, taking no action on the writ. See Charles Fairman, Reconstruction and Reunion at 601-607; Letter from Chase to Underwood (Nov. 19, 1868) in 5 The Salmon P. Chase Papers 285-286 (1998); Letter from Chase to Underwood (Jan. 14, 1869) in id. at 292-293.

This background is briefly alluded to in the synopsis in Griffin's Case which explains that "[a] motion was then made by James Lyons, Esq. in the supreme court of the United States for a writ of prohibition against the district judge, to restrain him from further exercise of such power. The supreme

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Chase on Section Three

Chase reversed. Here is how he framed the problem: Everybody agreed that Sheffey had been lawfully appointed as a state judge in February 1866, while Virginia was controlled by military reconstruction and the Fourteenth Amendment did not exist.[127] The question was whether ratification of Section Three kicked him out. As Chase put it: "whether upon a sound construction of the amendment, it must be regarded as operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power."[128]

Chase said no, rejecting this as a "literal construction" [129] of Section Three. There is a lot going on in this opinion. Chase included a number of makeweight arguments and asides on topics such as the legal history of West Virginia.[130] But his core argument was that surely Section Three cannot mean what it says: It would have bad consequences, can't possibly have been intended by the ratifiers, and would violate the spirit of the Constitution. As we will explain, these arguments are bad ones. Chase then supplemented them with a shocking claim of a secret Supreme Court ruling in favor of an alternative approach—which was both generally improper, but also further impeached Chase's interpretation of Section Three. All in all, Griffin's Case is a case study in how not to go about the enterprise of faithful constitutional interpretation.

---

court advised on the motion, and never announced any conclusion, but shortly afterward the chief justice opened the circuit court at Richmond, and immediately called up the appeal in Griffin's Case. This statement is necessary for a full understanding of the pregnancy of the chief justice's statement that the supreme court agreed with him as to the decision he rendered in this case." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 7-8. But really, these circumstances are extraordinary. We take them up again below.

[127] Id. at 23.

[128] Id. at 18.

[129] Id. at 24.

[130] Chase summarized the intriguing legal history of this Virginia government: When Virginia, by act of its legislature in 1861, purported to secede from the Union, loyal Unionists assembled in convention in Wheeling to organize a new state government. Congress and the Lincoln administration recognized the Wheeling government as the lawful government of Virginia. The Wheeling Virginia government then gave its consent to the creation of a new Wheeling-based state of West Virginia, after which the (Wheeling) Virginia government-in-exile relocated to Alexandria, just across the river from Washington, to serve as the loyal, Union-recognized government of all of what remained as "Virginia." After Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Chase's opinion notes, the "government recognized by the United States was transferred from Alexandria to Richmond" and "became in fact what it was before in law, the government of the whole state." Id. at 18. Judge Sheffey was appointed under the authority of this government. (For the full story – and full formalist legal defense – of the validity of the legal fiction of "Virginia" giving its consent to the creation of a breakaway state of West Virginia, see Vasan Kesavan and Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is West Virginia Unconstitutional? 90 Calif. L. Rev. 291 (2002) For an argument that this aside was actually relevant to Chase's argument, see Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30, discussed infra note 157.)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these"

The core of Chase's argument was that if Section Three were an immediately operative, self-executing constitutional rule of disqualification, it would have inconvenient consequences in the Reconstruction South. "In the examination of questions of this sort," Chase wrote, "great attention is properly paid to the argument from inconvenience."[131] And here "the argument from inconveniences" was "great" in Chase's estimation— it was "of no light weight."[132]

In several incompletely reconstructed Southern governments, many offices were in fact held by former oath-breaking rebels.[133] If Section Three were automatically operative, it would have immediately barred all such men from office. (Indeed.) Yet, Chase argued, many such disqualified persons in fact had not vacated their offices but instead continued to exercise authority under those offices notwithstanding the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. To give Section Three immediate effect would thus upset the apple cart in a fairly major way. "No sentence, no judgment, no decree, no acknowledgement of a deed, no record of a deed, no sheriff's or commissioner's sale—in short no official act—is of the least validity."[134] Chase found this unthinkable: "It is impossible to measure the evils which such a construction would add to the calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these [Southern] states."[135]

Chase went on: not only did Section Three impose great "inconveniences" and "calamities," it was unfairly punitive—ungraciously ousting once-lawfully-appointed officers from their offices—and ostensibly inconsistent with the "spirit" of prior constitutional principles, concerning due process, bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.[136] And besides, the specific remedy sought—vacating Griffin's conviction—only worked mischief, because it did not even seek the literal removal of Judge Sheffey from office. Put these things together and you have Chase's interpretive driver: "Surely," Chase continued, "a construction which fails to accomplish the main purpose of the amendment, and yet necessarily works the mischief and inconveniences which have been described, and is repugnant to the first principles of justice and right embodied in other provisions of the constitution, is not to be favored, if any other reasonable construction can be found."[137]

---

[131] 11 F. Cas. at 24.
[132] Id. at 25.
[133] Chase also suggested that the problem was not completely limited to the Southern governments. Id. at 25 (observing that "[i]t is well known that many persons, engaged in the late Rebellion, have emigrated to states which adhered to the national government . . ." and that "it is not to be doubted that not a few among them" had previously taken a covered oath, and that "[p]robably some of these persons" had subsequently been elected to office).
[134] Id. at 25. Of course, Chase would undercut this conclusion later in the opinion. See infra Part II.C.
[135] 11 F. Cas. at 25.
[136] More on this point presently, Part II.C.2.c, and again Part III.
[137] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chase tried to funnel these policy arguments into a rule of constitutional construction: "the argument from inconvenience."[138] This argument "it is true, can not prevail over plain words or clear reason," Chase acknowledged.[139] "But, on the other hand," he wrote, "a construction which must necessarily occasion great public and private mischief, must never be preferred to a construction which will occasion neither, or neither in so great a degree, unless the terms of the instrument absolutely require such preference."[140]

This is not an unreasonable principle, as interpretive canons go. When confronted with two plausible interpretations of genuinely ambiguous, unclear text, one of which would produce manifestly jarring results, the less jarring interpretation is more likely the correct one. As James Madison said in his famous speech against the national bank: "Where a meaning is clear, the consequences, whatever they may be, are to be admitted—where doubtful, it is fairly triable by its consequences."[141] Or as Chief Justice Marshall said in United States v. Fisher: "where great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain; in which case it must be obeyed."[142] But Chase's canon was noticeably more aggressive: The supposedly more disruptive reading must "never be preferred" unless the text's terms "absolutely require" such preference.[143] That is putting not just a thumb on the scale, but a whole hand.

But that is not the real problem with Chase's analysis. The real problem was how Chase applied these principles to Section Three.

First, Chase was too quick—far too quick—to dismiss the "literal" reading of the "terms of the instrument" as meaning exactly what they seem to say. As discussed above, the language of Section Three's prohibition on office holding is clear and direct; it is hardly doubtful at all. It takes considerable effort to impute any ambiguity to the text and Chase's opinion does not even undertake that effort. Instead, the opinion assumes its own conclusion—that the text's language is somehow insufficiently clear to justify applying the "literal" meaning of its words. Indeed, even on Chase's own hyper-strict standard, the words of Section Three do "absolutely require" the conclusion that it, on its own, disqualifies covered rebels from office.

Second, Chase was too ready—far too ready—to find that following the ("literal") language of the document would produce (what Chase considered to be) great "inconveniences" or "mischief"— indeed, increase "calamities" already visited upon

---

[138] Id. at 24.
[139] Id. at 24.
[140] Id. at 24.
[141] James Madison, Speech on Feb. 2, 1791, reprinted in Legislative and Documentary History of the Bank of the United States 39, 40 (photo. reprint 2008)
[142] United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch (6 U.S.) 358, 386 (1805)
[143] 11 F. Cas. at 24 (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the South. Chase emphasized the breadth of Section Three's language: it applied in all the states, not just the former Confederacy (so?); it applied beyond the context of Civil War but included aiding enemies in a foreign war (so?); it would apply in terms to immediately disqualify men for acts done long ago, for example in the Mexican War (so?); it would apply "to all persons in the category" and "for all time, present and future" (so?). And, taken seriously, this broad rule would, as noted, "annul all official acts" performed by disqualified officers, including judges. (Would it?)

For Chase, all this seemed to border on the shocking—a parade of horribles demanding the search for an alternative construction of Section Three. But why? Because it might have a broad effect? Because it adopted a new rule of constitutional law superseding prior law? Because it would have removed immediately a substantial number of former-oath-swearing-officeholders-turned-rebels from positions of power? Because it could have the effect of invalidating their unauthorized, lawless actions? Chase's parade of horribles assumes, without argument, the correctness of his own apparent policy prejudices.[144]

Now Chase did attempt to groom these prejudices into more plausible legal arguments, which we will get to in a moment. But because these arguments from inconvenience are the heart of Chase's opinion, and because we still see these kinds of arguments repeated today, we pause to emphasize that this is not how judging is supposed to work, even if it too often does.

Chase's construe-to-avoid-the-force-of-constitutional-language-whose-policy-consequences-you-dislike approach to constitutional interpretation is simply wrong. Judges do not get to rewrite constitutional provisions they find objectionable on policy grounds. Relatedly, judges do not get to make up new provisions of law in order to devise policy "solutions" to texts they don't like. Chase's opinion imposed, as a solution to textual literalism and its real and imagined policy inconveniences, a different kind of constitutional provision, one more like the Impeachment Clause and the Treason Clause. Put bluntly, Chase made up law that was not there in order to change law that was there but that he did not like.

b. The argument from "the intention of the people"

In places, Chase raises the inconvenience argument as an inquiry into the "intent" of the Framers: "What was the intention of the people of the United States in adopting the fourteenth amendment? What is the true scope and purpose of the prohibition to hold office contained in the third section?"[145] This at least sounds kind of [144] As Judge Underwood had put it: "Whatever inconvenience may result from the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws, I think the experience of the last few years shows that much greater inconvenience comes from attempting their overthrow." Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 465.

[145] 11 F.Cas. at 24.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

like the question a judge should be asking—the original meaning of the constitutional provision adopted by We The People and binding on those who interpret it. But in fact it conceals still more sleight of hand.

First and foremost, Chase's framing of the interpretive question commits a classic blunder: swapping in original intent for original meaning. In our constitutional system, law is made by enacting texts, not by searching for the unenacted wishes of lawmakers.[146] And whatever evidence Chase might have that the consequences of Section Three were unintended by some of those who voted for it, he had no evidence that these consequences were not entailed by what they voted for.

Second, however dubious it is to look to original intent over original meaning generally, it is especially dicey to do so in the case of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in unusual, exigent circumstances. In Congress, the Amendment represented a compromise between different Republican factions, some much more radical than the others. And in the states, where ratification made it law, the Amendment depended on the ratification votes of the southern states, who were pressured—some might say "coerced"—to ratify the Amendment as the price of regaining their representation in Congress.[147] Even if one accepts this process as lawful (which we do) it is obvious that it means one must cast a skeptical eye on stories about the supposed "intent" of those who ratified it, especially in the South. It may well be that some of the ratifiers had their fingers crossed behind their backs and intended to give the Amendment as little effect and as little quarter as they could get away with. But so what? What matters is what they did, in one of the highest-stakes moments of constitutional law making in American history. By diminishing the plain scope of the Amendment's text, Chase was succumbing to this kind of anti-constitutional subversion.

Third and finally, all of Chase's evidence of this supposed intent just boils down to the inconvenience argument we have just discussed. And as discussed above, this is why one must be especially careful with judges who invoke the supposed "intent" of a written text. When meaning is uncertain, it is permissible to give a slight edge to the interpretation that is more likely to match what its authors were trying to do.

---

[146] See supra notes 9-14, sources cited there, and accompanying text.

[147] See generally, John Harrison, The Lawfulness of the Reconstruction Amendments, 68 U. Chi. L. Rev. 375, 461 (2001). For arguments that Congress's requiring states' ratification as condition of restored representation was entirely lawful and appropriate, see id; Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 329; Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 364-380, see especially id. at 376-378. There is a different argument for ratification, the "loyal denominator" theory, in which the southern states were unnecessary for ratification. See Christopher R. Green, Loyal Denominatorism and the Fourteenth Amendment: Normative Defense and Implications, 13 Duke J. Const. L. & Pub. Pol'y 167, 168 (2017); Christopher R. Green, The History of the Loyal Denominator, 79 La. L. Rev. 47, 48 (2018). One of us has rejected this theory in prior writing, Michael Stokes Paulsen, A General Theory of Article V: The Constitutional Lessons of the Twenty-Seventh Amendment, 103 Yale L.J. 677, 709 (1993); see also Amar, supra note 4, at 378-380, and the other of us is inclined in the same direction.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But it is easy for a judge to use this principle as an excuse for reading into the text his own views of what the law should be. After all, the authors of the provision were reasonable people, trying to do reasonable things, and, I, the judge, am also reasonable, so surely if I don't like this result, they wouldn't have liked this result, and therefore it must not be the result. To write it down this way would give up the game, but it is too easy to think it. Chase's use of original intent is makeweight at best, and a trick at worst.

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law

The "inconveniences" and "calamities" that, surely, were not intended by the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment were Chase's main arguments. But he had a bit more to say. There was "another principle, which in determining the construction of this amendment, is entitled to equal consideration."

> Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of an amendment of a public act, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general terms and spirit of the act amended. This principle forbids a construction of the amendment, not clearly required by its terms, which will bring it into conflict or disaccord with the other provisions of the constitution.[148]

What was the supposed conflict between Section Three and the rest of the Constitution? Chase fretted that Section Three was a penal enactment, imposing punishment without trial on secessionists, and thus in tension with the spirit of earlier provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process:

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once and without trial, deprives a whole class of persons of offices held by them, for cause, however grave. It is true that no limit can be imposed on the people when exercising their sovereign power in amending their own constitution of government. But it is a necessary presumption that the people in the exercise of that power, seek to confirm and improve, rather than to weaken and impair the general spirit of the constitution.[149]

Thus, Chase concluded, Section Three should not be read as accomplishing disqualification of its own force.

---

[148] 11 F.Cas. at 25.
[149] Id. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Now once again, the interpretive rule Chase is formulating here is not totally crazy. But it is a warped version of the real thing. As we discuss at length in the next part: It is true that repeals by implication are disfavored, and this principle applies to constitutional law. But at the same time, constitutional amendments change things, and when an amendment is inconsistent with prior constitutional rules, ultimately it is the amendment that controls. If a new provision fairly can be harmonized with prior law—where there is no true conflict—the provisions should be read harmoniously.[150] But where new language in fact changes old law, by clear terms or necessary logical effect, the greater error is to deny such change out of undue attachment to the former legal regime.

This greater error is exactly what Chase did. Chase leaned very heavily—too heavily—on the rule against implied repeals, ratcheting it up to "forbid[]" readings of a text "not clearly required" by its terms, that would "bring it into conflict or disaccord" with other provisions of the Constitution.[151] Each leaning is wrong. Repeals by implication may be disfavored; but repeals, made in terms or by necessary logical implication, are not presumptively forbidden. Nor does new language changing old provisions require such extraordinary clarity as Chase would have it. The true question is whether the language and logic of a new provision really does present a conflict with prior law. And the idea that constitutional amendments should presumptively be read so as not to change the Constitution (!)—that they should be construed to avoid conflict or even mere disaccord with prior constitutional law—is indefensible. Of course constitutional amendments change prior constitutional law. That is their purpose and function. Now, that doesn't warrant reading them to change more than they really do. But a presumption that constitutional amendments should be read to change as little as possible makes no sense.

Finally, this part of Chase's argument took a puzzling turn that is worth noting. In one of many strange asides, Chase noted the possibility that Section Three had implicitly repealed the Treason Clause: "in the judgment of some enlightened jurists, the legal effect" of Section Three's imposition of a new prohibition on officeholding for rebels and insurrectionists "was to remit all other punishments" for treason.[152] If anything this seemed to hurt Chase's argument against self-execution, because it emphasized that Section Three could change the pre-existing constitutional rules. And at the same time this supposedly enlightened argument was also bonkers. The enactment of a constitutional rule of disqualification from office does not remotely suggest a supersession or repeal of criminal-law punishment for treason. And if it did it would have the perverse effect of leaving Confederates who had not previously

[150] See infra, Part III.
[151] 11 F. Cas. at 25 (emphasis added).
[152] Id. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

taken a constitutional oath subject to the death penalty, while previous office holders avoided all criminal punishment except the officeholding ban.[153]

So why did Chase bring it up? Who were these "enlightened jurists" who imagined such a thing? The answer is . . . Chase himself! He had asserted precisely this wacky construction of Section Three's effect on the criminal penalty for treason—and quietly suggested the argument to defense counsel—in the federal criminal treason prosecution of Jefferson Davis just two years earlier.[154] Even Davis's lawyers had been puzzled by the argument, and wondered if it was some sort of trick, and it seems likely that Chase had complex political motivations in proposing it at the time.[155] This argument was tendentious then, and weirdly irrelevant in Griffin's Case. But it is a helpful reminder that Chief Justice Chase was not shooting straight in his applications of Section Three.

d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power

Having flailed to avoid the natural reading of Section Three, Chase finally offered his alternative, "reasonable construction":

> For in the very nature of things, it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate. To accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcement of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable; and these can only be provided by Congress. Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.' [sic] … The fifth section qualifies the third to the same extent as it would if the whole amendment consisted of these two sections.[156]

Section Five "qualifies" Section Three. Of course, this proves too much. Taken seriously, it would suggest that Section Five likewise "qualifies" Section One and renders its commands—birthright citizenship, privileges or immunities, due process, and equal protection—inoperative until enforced by congressional legislation. It would imply that Section One had no self-executing legal effect, which has never been the law. It also proves too little. It is true, perhaps, that carrying a legal prohibition into

---

[153] See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 92, 95 (C.C.D. Va. 1867).
[154] Id. See Magliocca. Amnesty, supra note 5, at 100-102; Cynthia Nicoletti, Secession on Trial: The Treason Prosecution of Jefferson Davis 293-300 (2017).
[155] Nicoletti suggests—and she is not making this up—that either Chase was gunning for the Democratic nomination for President, or that this was a bank shot to get southern whites to accept the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, by arranging for the Amendment to benefit them. Id. at 293-296.
[156] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

practical effect in actual situations frequently will involve, necessarily, actions by persons and institutions charged with applying that prohibition as law in the course of performing their assigned duties. But as noted above there is no reason why "proceedings" and "decisions" and "enforcement" with respect to Section Three's commands may not be conducted and carried out by these various state and federal actors, exercising their usual authority with respect to such matters.[157] It is simply not true that "these can only be provided by Congress." Congress can provide them. But so can many others. Indeed, that is just what Judge Underwood was trying to accomplish in Griffin's Case, until Chase stopped him.

Chase's tendentious construction of Section Three has gone on to a surprisingly serious career as a precedent. But it simply does not hold up as an original matter. But that is not even the weirdest thing about Griffin's Case.

3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum

Chase concluded his discussion of Section Three this way: "After the most careful consideration, therefore, I find myself constrained to the conclusion that Hugh W. Sheffey had not been removed from the office of judge at the time of the trial and sentence of the petitioner; and that the sentence of the circuit court of Rockbridge county was lawful."[158]

By Chase's logic, such as it was, that should have been the final line of his opinion. But strangely, Chase was not actually done. He then launched into the weirdest part of his opinion, a sort of half-dictum, half-advisory opinion that cast further doubt on all that had come before:

> In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine the question relating to the effect of the sentence of a judge de facto, exercising the office with the color, but without the substance of right. It is proper to say, however, that I should have no difficulty in sustaining the custody of the sheriff under sentence of a court held by such a judge. . . .
>
> This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term, with reference to this and kindred cases in this district, and I am authorized to say that they unanimously concur in [157] Magliocca also suggests that in the specific situation in Griffin's Case, state law may have been "unavailable for enforcement" of Section Three because "Virginia was an unreconstructed state and thus lacked the ordinary powers of a state" and "because Virginia did not yet recognize the Fourteenth Amendment's legitimacy" – in contrast with states such as North Carolina. Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30. We are not sure whether this is giving Chase too much credit or not, but regardless, these points would obviously not hold today, where state law is fully available in every state of the union.

[158] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the opinion that a person convicted by a judge de facto acting under color of office, though not de jure, and detained in custody in pursuance of his sentence, can not be properly discharged upon habeas corpus.[159]

What is going on here? Chase describes an alternate ground for the case—"a judge de facto acting under color of office," which we would now call the "de facto officer doctrine"—explains that it is unnecessary to decide it, but then also explains that he would "have no difficulty" resolving the case on that alternate ground, and also that the rest of the Supreme Court agrees with him. It is hard to make sense of this part of Chase's opinion, but the more one digs in to it the more dubious the whole opinion becomes.

First of all, notice that what Chase says here fatally undercuts his earlier arguments about Section Three. The heart of Chase's argument was that a self-executing Section Three would have calamitous consequences that could not possibly have been intended. But here Chase says that even an illegally appointed officer can be a "de facto" officer whose acts are treated as valid for purposes of a habeas claim. If Chase believed this claim about the de facto officer doctrine, then his earlier claim about the consequences was overblown. The de facto officer doctrine would limit or eliminate the supposedly calamitous consequences and allow Section Three to be given its more natural interpretation in other situations. On its own terms, then, this dictum is colossally self-defeating.[160]

Indeed, if Chase's extensive dictum about Section Three made it "unnecessary" to resolve the de facto officer doctrine, the same was equally true in reverse. Accepting Chase's conclusion about the de facto officer doctrine would have made his erroneous disquisition on Section Three completely unnecessary. The criticisms sometimes levelled against the chief justices who wrote the famous (or infamous) opinions in Marbury v. Madison, and Dred Scott v. Sandford, for having reached out to decide, gratuitously, unnecessarily, and improperly, grand questions of constitutional law,[161] fall far more heavily upon the head of Chief Justice Chase for his opinion in Griffin's Case.

Even stranger, Chase represented that the full Supreme Court unanimously agreed with him that on the de facto officer question. "This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term," Chase asserted, "with

---

[159] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[160] Accord, Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 11 n.25.

[161] See, e.g., Letter from Thomas Jefferson to William Johnson (June 12, 1823) ("This practice of Judge Marshall, of travelling out of his case to prescribe what the law would be in a moot case not before the court, is very irregular and very censurable.") https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Jefferson/98-01-02-3562; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Worst Constitutional Decision of All Time, 78 Notre Dame L. Rev. 995, 1011-12 & n.39 (2003); Baude, Judgment Power, 96 Geo. L.J. 1807, 1823-24 (2008).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reference to this and kindred cases in this district."[162] The full Court had apparently decided the de facto officer question, in secret, without having announced the fact in any case decision or written opinion,[163] in some form of advisory preemptive appellate jurisdiction!?

To be sure, judicial norms were looser back then, but the whole thing was highly irregular even by the standards of the day. Charles Fairman, whose account defends the whole affair as an urgent workaround to stop Judge Underwood, nonetheless acknowledges that "[i]t was most unusual to hear a Justice on circuit declare that he was authorized to announce the opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court on a matter pending in the Circuit Court."[164] Fairman further acknowledges technical problems with this maneuver, because the only issue in front of the full Court was an original writ of prohibition in Ex Parte State of Virginia, where the Court had granted a stay despite manifest procedural flaws.[165] Somehow the Court's non-ruling in a dubious vehicle became a second-hand advisory opinion on a legal question of great importance. The criticisms levelled today at the shenanigans allegedly perpetrated on the Supreme Court's "shadow docket,"[166] fall much more heavily and justifiably on the heads of the Reconstruction justices.

And to return to this point once more, even if we accept this whole problematic advisory opinion, it simultaneously undermines the other part of Chase's decision—his interpretation of Section Three. As Chase described it, there were two alternative ways to resolve the case—one massive constitutional question, and the other a more modest procedural question. Chase claimed that the whole Supreme Court had authorized him to issue a secondhand advisory opinion on the procedural question, an opinion adequate to resolve the Judge Underwood situation. But Chase ignored his colleagues' apparent preference and resolved the case on massive constitutional grounds instead—grounds that he did not claim were endorsed by the rest of the Court. Is there any justification for his doing so other than a personal power grab?

All of this is without taking a view on the merits of the de facto officer question. This, we think, is not as obvious as Chase (and apparently his colleagues) made it out

---

[162] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[163] The Court's one recorded public statement on the matter was a statement from Justice Nelson in the original writ of prohibition case, Ex Parte State of Virginia, that Chief Justice Chase had "informed the court that before the pending motion for prohibition was made, he signified to the district judge his dissent" and that Chase was going to "direct that this division of opinion . . . be certified to this court." Ex parte State of Virginia No. 11, 1868 WL 10951, 19 L. Ed. 153 (1868); Fairman, supra note 126, at 606. That statement did not state the Court's view on the division, and seemed to anticipate that the Justices would deliberate on the issue later in the more ordinary course – not deputize the Chief Justice to go deliver some secret verdict in their stead.

[164] Fairman, supra note 126, at 607.

[165] Id.

[166] Stephen Vladeck, The Shadow Docket: How the Supreme Court Uses Stealth Rulings to Amass Power and Undermine the Republic (2023); William Baude, Foreword: The Supreme Court's Shadow Docket, 9 N.Y.U. J. L. & Lib. 1 (2015).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to be. True, American and English history was full of many statements about the valid acts of "de facto" officers and even specifically judges.[167] But many of these statements could not be taken to their logical extreme in our constitutional system, and indeed, at the founding the Supreme Court had refused to accept the actions of several de facto judges in the saga surrounding Hayburn's Case.[168]

How to reconcile these principles is a difficult question. One possibility, stated in some of the cases, is that an unlawful, but de facto, officer's acts can be questioned directly, and on direct review, but not "collaterally."[169] On this possibility, maybe the de facto officer doctrine was a defense to claims like habeas—the procedural vehicle in Griffin's Case—because habeas was a collateral attack.[170] Habeas could not be used as a substitute for a writ of error, where the challenge would have been properly raised.

But another possibility is that the de facto officer doctrine protects only technical and ordinary legal defects in an officer's appointment, not fundamental inability to exercise power, as when that power is forbidden by the Constitution.[171] On this possibility, Judge Sheffey's acts were inherently void, and thus everything he did fell outside of his court's jurisdiction.[172] The de facto officer arguments in Griffin's Case—and thus the correct legal fate of Caesar Griffin—turn on these technicalities.[173] Indeed, these technicalities were argued by the parties and they were the main subject

---

[167] For many citations, see Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 18-21 (argument of counsel). For more, see also Reply and Response Brief for the United States, Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius (Nos. 18-1334, 18-1475, 18-1496, 18-1514, 18-15121) at 27-47; and Calcutt v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 37 F.4th 293, 342-45 (6th Cir. 2022) (Murphy, J., dissenting).

[168] Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 12 (discussing Yale Todd).

[169] For statements like this, see Ball v. United States, 140 U.S. 118, 128-129 (1891) ("was judge de facto if not de jure, and his acts as such are not open to collateral attack."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 909, 910, 919 (1963); but see id. at 910 & n. 9 (suggesting that a suit is collateral whenever the officer "is not a party," including on "writ of error").

[170] All three cases cited by Chase in Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 27, can be characterized this way. Taylor v. Skrine, 5 S.C.L. 516, 3 Brev. 516 (1815) deals with a writ of execution and observes that "no objections were made to his authority at the time the decree was given." State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521 (1863) relies entirely on In re Boyle 9 Wis. 264 (1859) which is a habeas case holding that the "right to hold the offices cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding of this kind," id. at 267. And People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184., 187 (1860) distinguishes a "direct proceeding" from one where the doctrine applied.

[171] For statements like this, see McDowell v. United States, 159 U.S. 596, 598 (1895) ("presents a mere matter of statutory construction . . . . It involves no trespass upon the executive power of appointment."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, at 918 (discussing Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962)).

[172] But see In re Boyle, cited supra note 170 (distinguishing "the jurisdiction of the court, which may always be inquired into; it is an inquiry into the right of the judge to hold his office, which is a question entirely distinct from that of the jurisdiction of the court over the offence").

[173] In the Supreme Court's most recent de facto officer doctrine case, Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177 (1995), it split the difference, holding the doctrine inapplicable because the case was on direct

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Judge Underwood's opinion below.[174] Chief Justice Chase could have turned his considerable powers to them, had he not been busy knee-capping the Fourteenth Amendment instead.

* * *

There is little to be said in defense of Griffin's Case, but much to be learned from it. The very weakness of its arguments; the obviously result-oriented nature of its legal analysis; and the inconsistency of its conclusion with Section Three's language, end up confirming the core conclusion in this section: Section Three's disqualification of designated persons from office is a self-executing constitutional command that requires nothing more to have immediate legal force.

III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions

Our third proposition is logically and methodologically straightforward but perhaps unsettling in some of its implications: Section Three trumps the earlier parts of the Constitution—to the extent there is a true conflict between them.

As noted above, one of Chief Justice Chase's arguments against enforcing Section Three was that it conflicted (he thought) with prior constitutional norms—of due process, prospectivity, fairness, and so on.[175] Even for those who do not put the claim in so many words, we suspect that they might share a similar intuition—there is something about Section Three, taken seriously, that seems harsh, unforgiving, undemocratic, unAmerican (?), even . . . unconstitutional(!?). If so, it might seem to follow that somebody (judges?) should tame Section Three.

This is an understandable instinct. But it is wrong: dead wrong. We think the conflict with prior constitutional rules is overstated—more feel than real. But to the extent the conflict is real, Section Three wins the face-off.

Constitutional amendments change the Constitution. It thus should be unsurprising—indeed, it is in the very nature of constitutional amendments—that such new provisions, when added to the Constitution, supersede, displace, qualify, adjust, correct, or simply must be considered to satisfy earlier constitutional rules, to the extent of any actual conflict between them. Simply put: a constitutional amendment review and the challenge was constitutional. In the more recent case of Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius, 140 S. Ct. 1649, 1666 (2020), it avoided the issue because it found the appointments lawful.

---

[174] See Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 463-466.

[175] See supra Part III.C.2.c.; see also Ginsburg, Huq, & Landau, supra note 118, at 18 (suggesting that a self-executing interpretation, "while in harmony with the original operation of Section 3, raises due process and perhaps bill of attainder concerns" and for that reason an "alternative, more plausible construction gives Congress authority to determine how Section 3 is enforced").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

supersedes prior law precisely to the extent that it departs from the prior rules. This general maxim of interpretation applies to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment the same as it applies to any other constitutional amendment provision. If the original textual meaning of Section Three's terms, understood in their natural sense and accounting for any terms of art or specialized usages of words, departs from or alters prior constitutional understandings, that new constitutional language must be given full effect and priority over earlier provisions.

These basic principles of conflicting legal provisions were astutely captured by Alexander Hamilton, writing as Publius in The Federalist Number 78. "It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression," Hamilton wrote. When this occurs, the courts must determine the "meaning and operation" of the two provisions.

Hamilton articulated two principles for doing so, which work as a complementary pair. "So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done"—there's the first of the pair, but Hamilton's sentence does not end there, but instead pauses only ever-so-briefly, with a semi-colon, before proceeding to the second rule of the pair: "where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first." This was, Hamilton continued, "a mere rule of construction," but it was an appropriate one, "consonant to truth and propriety," consistently recognized by courts as interpreters of law: that, as "between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference."[176]

Hamilton went on, more famously, to explain that a different interpretive principle governed the interfering acts of a superior and a subordinate authority—and proceeded to derive the proposition customarily called "judicial review."[177] But that is not the interpretive question here. Here, the key point is precisely Hamilton's lead-in proposition: that, as between "interfering" acts of equal legal stature—the paradigm being two statutes, adopted by the same legislature, at different times—the last in time prevails to the extent of any true, irreconcilable conflict. As with statutes adopted by the same legislative authority at different times, so with constitutional provisions adopted by the same authority at different times and possessing the same

---

[176] See The Federalist No. 78 (I. Kramnick ed. 1987) at 439 (Hamilton). These rules were well-established in American and English law. Caleb Nelson, Preemption, 86 Va. L. Rev. 225, 235-244 (2000)

[177] See The Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439-440 (Hamilton) ("But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal status: By the terms of Article V, constitutional amendments are "valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution," when adopted.[178] Thus, where We, the People, have adopted a new constitutional text "interfering" with or departing from prior constitutional provisions, the last-in-time enacted prevails to the extent of any conflict. That is the interpretive principle that governs the relationship between new constitutional language and old language from which it departs.

Actual constitutional examples of these principles abound. The entire Bill of Rights in a sense qualifies, or limits, the original Constitution's grant of enumerated powers—to the extent of a conflict between those powers and the subsequently enumerated rights.[179] Likewise, the Eleventh Amendment qualifies Article III's extension of the federal judicial power to various cases and controversies. To the extent the Eleventh Amendment changes what Article III may originally have provided, the amendment supersedes that prior law.[180]

Much of the time, new amendments can be harmonized with what came before them. Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment's grant of "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article"[181] does not preempt, for example, the Due Process Clause or the Cruel or Unusual Punishments Clause. It does not allow Congress to punish civil rights violations through summary tortures without trial. Similarly, Section Five does not preempt the Veto Clause; it can and should be read together with Article I, to require "appropriate legislation" to go through the preexisting lawmaking process.[182] A new amendment does not ignore the legal system that it amends.

On the other hand, other parts of the Reconstruction Amendments did conflict sharply with prior constitutional norms, and they displaced them precisely to that extent. Consider the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery—a dramatic and particularly obvious illustration of the point that new constitutional language supersedes and repudiates old constitutional language, to the extent of any conflict. The Thirteenth Amendment's abolition of slavery implicitly but necessarily overrides and extinguishes the Fugitive Slave Clause and any other provision of the original Constitution that protected the institution of slavery to the full logical extent of inconsistency with the amendment's flat ban. Similarly, Section Two of the Fourteenth Amendment supersedes and displaces the Constitution's original apportionment

---

[178] U.S. Const. art. V.

[179] On the relationship between rights and powers, see William Baude, Rethinking the Federal Eminent Domain Power, 122 Yale L.J. 1738, 1821-1822 (2013); Jud Campbell, The Invention of First Amendment Federalism, 97 Tex. L. Rev. 517, 561-67 (2019).

[180] Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 624-25; cf. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 21 (1890) (Harlan, J., concurring).

[181] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 5.

[182] See William Baude, Sovereign Immunity and the Constitutional Text, 103 Va. L. Rev. 1, 19 (2017) (offering the examples in this paragraph).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

rules including the notorious Three-fifths Clause.[183] Because the two rules conflict in substance, the amendment prevails over the Constitution's original language.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is in the same family. In most respects, Section Three can be easily harmonized with other parts of the Constitution, such as Article I's Speech or Debate Clause, Article I and II's impeachment provisions, Article II's process of presidential selection, Article III's requirement of a case or controversy, and so on. As we have discussed, Section Three's new constitutional qualification for office is enforced in the same way as other constitutional qualifications for office, and is easily reconciled with existing constitutional rules.

But there are a few constitutional provisions that have been alleged to conflict with Section Three. If and when this is the case, just as any later-enacted constitutional provision supersedes or modifies an earlier-enacted constitutional provisions with which the new provision conflicts, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment logically qualifies and, where the language so compels the conclusion, overrides prior constitutional rules.[184]

Thus, we think all this follows: To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides any limitations otherwise imposed by the Bill of Attainder Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three also overrides limitations imposed by the Ex post Facto Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three likewise overrides—or simply satisfies—prior constitutional requirements of due process of law.

Finally—and this example might present more difficult questions—to the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides, supersedes, or satisfies the free speech principles reflected in the First Amendment. That is: Whatever the [183] See U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2; U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 3. By itself, the Thirteenth Amendment also already rendered the Three-fifths Clause a null set. Section Two then dealt with the injustice of letting the South claim a massive increase in political power for its disenfranchised black population.

---

[184] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this conclusion as well. Opponents of Section Three characterized it as directly imposing retroactive punishment, thus contradicting principles of due process and principles against bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. at 2915 (Sen. Doolittle) (complaining that Section Three was an "ex post facto provision, a bill of attainder"); id. at 2890 (Sen. Cowen) (bill of attainder); id. at App 241 (Sen. Davis) (Section Three "is in the nature of both a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law"); id. at 2940 (Sen. Hendricks) (ex post facto); id. at 2916; see also id. at 2467 (Rep. Boyer) (criticizing earlier version of Section Three as "a bill of attainder or ex post facto law"). These charges were generally premised on the view – with which proponents of the amendment evidently agreed, see id. at 3036 (Sen. Henderson) – that Section Three would preempt these earlier rules to the extent of a direct conflict. Though at one point Senator Davis did make the wild suggestion that Section Three might itself exceed Congress's power to propose amendments to the Constitution. Id. at App. 241 ("The framers of the Constitution did not intend to invest, and have not in fact conferred on Congress the power to initiate alterations of it which would revolutionize the Government formed by it"); see also id. at 3146. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-31, 36-37 (documenting this history).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

correct meaning of Section Three as applied to conspiracies, attempts, incitements, and advocacy that meet the description of "engag[ing] in insurrection or rebellion" or of giving of "aid or comfort" to enemies of the constitutional government of the United States, the constitutional meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment modifies or qualifies what otherwise might have been thought the dictates of the First Amendment.

In the end, we think that these various prior provisions can mostly be read harmoniously with Section Three. Reason and common sense suggest they should be read consistently with one another to the extent fairly possible; and it is, for the most part, fairly possible to do so. But to the legitimate extent of any conflict or tension, Section Three controls over the Bill of Attainder Clause, the Ex Post Facto Clause, the Due Process Clause, and the First Amendment.

The first three are easy.

A. Bills of Attainder

A bill of attainder is the legislative infliction of punishment on specific people without a trial.[185] It is a violation of both the separation of powers and individual rights because it short-circuits the normal adjudication of guilt or innocence. But Section Three is neither a bill nor an attainder. It is not a "bill"—that is, an enactment of the legislature. Rather, it is an enactment of The People as supreme constitutional law. And it is not an "attainder" either—in that it is not at all clear that it inflicts punishment, because disqualification from office is not necessarily or exclusively a form of punishment. For instance, the Twenty-second Amendment is surely not inflicting a "punishment" when it precludes the President from running for a third term.[186] Moreover, Section Three does not inflict it on specified persons or groups, but rather on anybody who has committed a described course of conduct.

To be sure, Supreme Court precedent has read the Bill of Attainder Clauses more broadly, both in a pair of 20th-century "red scare" cases[187] and perhaps more relevantly in a pair of immediate post-Civil War-era loyalty cases: In Cummings v. Missouri[188] and Ex Parte Garland,[189] the Supreme Court invalidated state and federal oath requirements that required an "Ironclad Oath" from anybody holding a range of positions, both public and private. That oath was really a past-loyalty-requirement, requiring people to swear that they had not supported the confederacy or [185] See generally Anthony Dick, The Substance of Punishment Under the Bill of Attainder Clause, 63 Stan. L. Rev. 1177 (2011).

[186] U.S. Const. amdt. XXII. But see Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. 277, 320 (1866) ("Disqualification from office many be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment.").
[187] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437 (1965); United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946).
[188] 71 U.S. 277 (1866).
[189] 71 U.S. 333 (1866).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the like.[190] The Court concluded that these requirements were effectively bills of attainder—and also ex post facto laws—and held them unconstitutional.

Even if one takes these precedents at face value it does not follow that Section Three would similarly be a bill of attainder. First, the "Ironclad Oath" laws had a broader scope than Section Three: Garland dealt with bar membership, and concluded that "exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct."[191] Similarly, the plaintiff in Cummings was a Catholic priest forbidden from preaching.[192] Neither case dealt with a more focused exclusion from constitutional office. Indeed, the majority opinion emphasized this fact, explicitly noting that neither case involved qualifications for public office.[193] Second, because both cases focused on the retroactive effect of the laws,[194] neither case's reasoning would seem applicable to Section Three in post-Civil-War insurrections and rebellions—which of course are the only insurrections and rebellions to which Section Three still applies.[195]

And in any event we doubt that one should take these precedents at face value. First of all, if we had to take sides, we might well be inclined to say that Garland at least may have been wrong, for reasons stated in dissent by Justice Miller (joined by three other justices, including, perhaps somewhat ironically given his later position in Griffin, Chief Justice Chase).[196] Second, and more fundamentally, if constitutional amendments can change the Constitution, a fortiori they can change judicial interpretations (and misinterpretations) of the Constitution. That is of course what Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment famously did with respect to Dred Scott, what the Eleventh Amendment did with respect to Chisholm, and so on.[197] In short, the Court's interpretation of the Bill of Attainder Clause was a stretch, and regardless, it does not stretch far enough to change or limit the meaning of Section Three.

B. Ex Post Facto Laws

---

[190] For much more detailed discussion of the federal "Ironclad Oath" see infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[191] Garland, 71 U.S. at 377.
[192] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 319.
[193] Garland, 71 U.S. at 378.
[194] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 327 ("They are aimed at past acts, and not future acts."); Garland, at 377 ("In the exclusion which the statute adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed").
[195] See supra Part I.B.
[196] Garland, 71 U.S. at 382. Cummings presents a trickier case, as it might involve complicating questions of state power to interfere with religious liberty and church autonomy (albeit before ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment) and an especially weak case for the relevance of past loyalty to engaging in religious occupation.
[197] For a somewhat lighthearted explication of this principle – and a serious treatment of certain of its implications, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, Can a Constitutional Amendment Overrule a Supreme Court Decision? 24 Const. Comm. 285 (2007).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Article I also forbids both the state and federal governments from enacting an "Ex Post Facto" law.[198] An ex post facto law is generally thought to mean a legislative enactment that makes a past act criminal even though it was lawful at the time it was done. Once again, Section Three does not meet this description, being neither a legislative enactment (but rather a new constitutional provision) nor a legislative enactment defining a criminal offense.[199] True, as applied to actions done before 1868, Section Three has retroactive (non-criminal) constitutional legal effect. But as applied to actions done after 1868, the idea that Section Three might depart even from the "spirit" of the ban on ex post facto laws makes precious little sense.

So Section Three no longer produces any conflict—if it ever did—with the Ex Post Facto Clauses or with any Ex Post Facto Spirit that might be supposed to lurk behind them. And even if it did, Section Three would supersede both prior law and lurking spirit.

Indeed, we have this on especially good authority, as this very question has been asked and answered in the past. The Eleventh Amendment, as noted above, had the effect of cutting off jurisdiction previously recognized by Chisholm v. Georgia's interpretation of Article III. In Hollingsworth v. Virginia, the Court then confronted the question whether the Amendment was retroactive, cutting off suits pending when the Amendment became law. The plaintiffs argued in the U.S. Supreme Court against retroactivity, because "[t]he spirit of the constitution," forbade "the mischief of an ex post facto Constitution."[200] Indeed, this argument mirrored precisely the arguments for narrow construction we have seen above: "It is true, that an amendment to the Constitution cannot be controuled by those provisions; and if the words were explicit and positive, to produce the retrospective effect contended for, they must prevail. But the words are doubtful; and, therefore, they ought to be so construed, as to conform to the general principle of the Constitution."[201] But the Supreme Court disagreed emphatically—unanimously ruling the very next day that the Amendment applied retroactively, by necessary implication.[202] As with the Eleventh, so too for the Fourteenth: Had the Supreme Court ever been called upon to consider the question, the right answer surely is that the Fourteenth Amendment's rules immediately governed upon ratification and applied "retroactively" to prior actions covered by the revised constitutional rules.

---

[198] U.S. Const. art. I, §§9 & 10.

[199] To be sure, there are revisionist arguments that the Ex Post Facto clause itself extends to retroactive civil laws too. See Eastern Enterprises v. Apfel, 524 U.S. 498, 538-39 (1998) (Thomas, J., concurring). And as with bills of attainder, in the wake of the Civil War the Supreme Court held that Ironclad Oath requirements were ex post facto laws as well. Cummings, 71 U.S. at 326-332; Garland, 71 U.S. at 377-368. But as discussed in the text, even these principles do not ensnare Section Three going forward, on a non-ex-post-facto basis

[200] 3 U.S. at 378-80 (arguments of counsel).

[201] Id.

[202] Id. at 382. See Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 626-627.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. Due Process of Law

The Constitution also forbids the deprivation of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law," which in many circumstances requires judicial process. Does Section Three's self-executing legal disqualification from office present any incompatibility with this requirement? Again, we think the two sets of provisions readily reconciled by giving the Due Process Clause no more than its due.

First of all, it is far from clear that the right to hold public office is a form of life, liberty, or property. It is a public privilege, a public trust, to be vested with the power of the people. And though it is a closer case, the same thing may be true even for those who already hold office at the moment that Section Three disqualifies them. Due process protects private vested rights from public deprivation. It does not protect public rights.[203] It has been argued that in England, offices were understood as vested rights of property, and occasionally early American courts said so as well.[204] But that was not the better rule in America. Treating offices as property did not fit well with republican principles,[205] and by 1900 the Supreme Court could rightly state: "The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property as such."[206]

In any event, even if it were otherwise, and those who held offices were deprived of property by Section Three, what would follow? Nothing. Section Three would prevail. Consider once again the Thirteenth Amendment, which did directly interfere with private property rights—the right recognized in southern states to hold other humans in bondage. The Thirteenth Amendment instantly, self-executingly, eliminated those property rights, due process notwithstanding.[207] So too would Section Three.

Principles of due process might also animate a different objection—that imposing such harsh consequences on individual wrongdoing simply ought to involve fair notice and an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps this instinct motivates the argument against self-execution, as in Griffin's Case. But in our view this objection is sufficiently answered by the terms of Section Three itself. Perhaps the reason that Section

---

[203] Caleb Nelson, Adjudication in the Political Branches, 107 Colum. L. Rev. 559, 565-593 (2007); William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III, 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1540-1547 (2020).

[204] Jed Shugerman, Freehold Offices vs. "Despotic Displacement": Why "Executive Power" Did Not Include Removal (July 25, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4521119; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 NC 1 (1833).

[205] See Jane Manners & Lev Menand, The Three Permissions, 121 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 20 (2021) ("In revolutionary America, the idea of offices as property was roundly rejected"); Saikrishna Prakash, Removal and Tenure in Office, 92 Va. L. Rev. 1779, 1824 n. 157 (2006) ("A more republican conception of government meant a more republican conception of offices.").

[206] Taylor & Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548 (1900).

[207] See supra notes 48-50 and accompanying text.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three only applies to holding office and not voting, and only applies to prior office-holders, who have previously sworn a constitutional oath—indeed, these limitations are the only ways in which Section Three's scope was appreciably narrowed during the drafting process—is that we can expect once and future officials and oath-takers to be on particularly strong notice about the basic rules of the constitutional order. Section Three does not ensnare garden-variety crime or miscreance. It ensnares offenses against the authority of the system by those who have been and seek to be part of that system.

Similarly, so long as Section Three is applied through the established and customary procedures for determining qualifications for office, many due process objections would seem to disappear. As discussed above, in many scenarios, Section Three's disqualification would be enforced through administrative hearings, quo warranto suits, state and federal judicial review, congressional adjudications, and so on. Anybody who wishes to argue that his conduct is not covered by the substantive sweep of Section Three is free to litigate that point through all relevant channels.[208] Section Three is therefore not in conflict with any requirements of fair notice or an opportunity to be heard.

D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment

With respect to the Constitution's provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process, the harmonization of Section Three with prior constitutional law is easy and relatively unproblematic. There is little conflict between the two provisions, and to the extent there is, Section Three is plain enough that it must prevail. The interaction of Section Three with the First Amendment presents a more interesting, even troubling, question. Does Section Three partially revoke the right to political dissent?

This question begets more questions: What exactly is the relationship between Section Three's language imposing disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" and the First Amendment's protections of the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and petition? Likewise, what is the relationship between the disqualification for having given "aid or comfort" to enemies of the United States and the First Amendment? As we have argued, Section Three in principle can supersede, qualify, or modify (or be deemed to "satisfy") prior constitutional requirements, rendering the provisions of the First Amendment essentially without independent constitutional force as limitations on the scope of Section Three. But how might the prior and important constitutional principles of the First Amendment affect the proper understanding of Section Three's meaning and scope? What exactly does Section Three effectuate, in relation to the First Amendment? Where do the usual protections of the First Amendment leave off and the legal disabilities imposed by Section Three take over, as a matter of the proper understanding of Section Three?

---

[208] See generally supra Part II.B.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There are, crudely, three possible ways of describing the relationship. The first is to find Section Three (implicitly) limited by the First Amendment. The second is, in contrast, to view Section Three as properly understood as carving out a zone of exception to, supersession of, or satisfaction of First Amendment principles. The third, which we believe correct, lies somewhere in the middle: Section Three should be construed, to the extent fairly possible, consistently with the free speech principles memorialized in the First Amendment. But to the extent of a true conflict between them, Section Three must control.

To consider a not-so-hypothetical example, suppose that an officeholder covered by Section Three gives a speech to an assembled crowd encouraging them to engage in rebellious or insurrectionary conduct. (And suppose further that the crowd accepts the encouragement, rebelling against members of Congress carrying out a constitutional duty at the seat of government.) We will return to this example[209] but for now we consider: how do we judge such an example? Is this only a question of the constitutional definition of "engage in insurrection" and "aid or comfort"—of whether an encouraging speech to an insurrectionary crowd is covered by those terms? Or is it also a question of whether that speech is protected by freedom of speech, and under modern doctrine, that would mean the very stringent test of Brandenburg v. Ohio?[210] Or is it somehow both?

To a large extent, we think the conflicts between Section Three and free speech can be minimized—as Hamilton would counsel.[211] First, even under modern doctrine, free speech does not protect several categories of speech that overlap with Section Three. Second, Section Three's terms will not often reach pure speech.

To elaborate on the first point: Modern First Amendment doctrine leaves the government free to punish actual conspiracy and solicitation, direct incitement, and material support of unlawful activities such as insurrection, rebellion, and treason. (There are serious questions about how much modern First Amendment doctrine has exceeded the original protections of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, which we will largely put aside, but the point is that these exceptions are recognized even on today's liberal understandings.[212])

---

[209] See infra Part IV.C.2.

[210] 395 U.S. 444 (1969).

[211] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176 ("So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done.").

[212] For what it is worth, we do not in general dispute many aspects of modern First Amendment doctrine, which we believe often captures the original meaning of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, as applied to modern circumstances. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, Scouts, Families, and Schools, 85 Minn. L. Rev. 1917, 1919-1922 (2001). To get a sense of how one might construct a truly marvelous proof of this, which this margin is too narrow to contain, see for starters, Adam Griffin, First Amendment Originalism: The Original Law and A Theory of Legal Change as Applied to The Freedom of Speech and of The Press, 17 First Amend. L. Rev. 91 (2019); Jud Campbell, Natural Rights

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The First Amendment has long been held not to protect conspiracy to commit a crime or direct solicitation of unlawful activity, because this is "speech integral to criminal conduct."[213] And while one must use some caution about unduly expanding this category, conspiracy and solicitation are at its core.[214] Thus, efforts to steal elections, to pressure state officials to manufacture votes, to pressure other officials (like the Vice President) to violate their constitutional duties in service of a constitutional coup—would all be unprotected by the First Amendment. To the extent those efforts are swept up by Section Three, there would be no conflict.

More familiar may be the modern line of cases concerning "incitement." Over the course of the twentieth century, judicial doctrine increasingly gave greater protection to speech that could be seen as generally inciting unlawful activity, recognizing that earlier doctrine (such as the famous "clear and present danger" test) had too readily permitted suppression of disfavored political views. The modern rule, stated in Brandenburg v. Ohio in 1969, excludes from First Amendment protection only advocacy or expressive conduct (i) "directed to" (ii) triggering or inciting (iii) "imminent" lawless action (presumably including acts of insurrection or rebellion) and (iv) "likely" to produce such action.[215] That is a fairly strict standard, but not one that is impossible to satisfy. Importantly, it does leave open—even under the generous terms of modern First Amendment law—the prospect that some acts of advocacy and expression supporting insurrection or rebellion are simply unprotected by the First Amendment in any event, so that Section Three does not even need to have amended or superseded the First Amendment in order for its terms to be given their full legal effect.

The Supreme Court's relatively recent decision in Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project[216] recognized a further and more controversial limitation on subversive speech: it can be forbidden where it provides "material support" to a foreign organization engaged in or committed to terrorist violence against the nation. The Court concluded that because the "interest in combating terrorism is an urgent objective of the highest order," the Congress could forbid even speech—such as teaching and training—assisting such organizations, and even though the speech did not directly and the First Amendment, 117 Yale L. J. 246 (2017); Jud Campbell, The Emergence of Neutrality, 131 Yale L. J. 861 (2022). (We will cease further digression on this point.)

---

[213] United States v. Hansen, 599 U.S. __, at 18-19 (2023); United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 297 (2008); Giboney v. New Ice Storage, 336 U.S. 490 (1949); Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 989-993, 1007-1008 (2016).

[214] Volokh, supra note 213, at 1011-1015.

[215] 395 U.S. at 447. This standard is elaborated in Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 108-109 (1973); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. 886 (1982). Additionally, Bond v. Floyd, 385 U.S. 116 (1966) rejected the idea that there is a lower First Amendment standard of incitement when a state legislature is excluding an elected member under state law, id. at 132-135; see also Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 449 (1974) (same principle applies to ballot access).

[216] 561 U.S. 1 (2010).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

further terrorist conduct. While this decision is hedged by multiple limiting principles,[217] it illustrates another set of circumstances where the First Amendment would create no conflict with potential applications of Section Three.

In sum, while modern First Amendment doctrine is quite generous in its protection of speech, in many cases it would produce no conflict with the coverage of Section Three. We will elaborate on the second point—the scope of Section Three itself—more fully in Part IV, but for now suffice it to say that the occasions will be rare where speech alone is what qualifies one as having "engaged in insurrection" or provided "aid or comfort" to enemies.

That said, we will concede that the conflict between free speech and Section Three cannot be denied entirely. Consider the Civil War example of Clement Vallandigham, who was arrested and imprisoned by the military on the theory that "he was laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops; to encourage desertions from the army; and to leave the Rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it,"— that he was "warring upon the Military."[218] It is conceivable (though we do not prejudge the point) that Vallandigham's anti-military efforts could be covered by Section Three. And yet it is also quite plausible that his efforts would be protected by free speech.

Or for a sharper example, even more on point, consider the case of Representative-elect John Y. Brown, who was excluded from the Fortieth Congress on the grounds that he had given aid and comfort to the Confederacy by writing to the Louisville Courier promising to resist the Union army "unto the death" and stating that anybody who volunteered for the Union army "ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."[219] This exclusion was part of the backdrop of Section Three's enactment and likely the kind of thing Section Three was intended to cover. But, argues one scholar of the incident, this pre-Section Three exclusion "was entirely unconstitutional" and "plainly violative of the First Amendment."[220] If that was so before Section Three's enactment, does Section Three make it otherwise?[221]

Finally and perhaps most explosively, consider the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. Berger was denounced by members of the House for having given "aid and comfort to the enemies of this country during [217] The Court emphasized that "only material support coordinated with or under the direction of a designated foreign terrorist organization" was banned; "independent advocacy" was "not covered." Id. at 31-32. Additionally, the law only applied to foreign organizations.

---

[218] President Abraham Lincoln to Erastus Corning and others (June 12, 1863), in Abraham Lincoln, Speeches and Writings, 1859-1965, at 454, 459 (Don Fehrenbacher, ed. 1989). See infra notes 269-277 and accompanying text.

[219] See infra notes 270-278, and 343-348 and accompanying text.

[220] Lynch, supra note 5, at 197-198.

[221] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 198 ("Had Section 3 been ratified by this point, these concerns would be assuaged.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

this Great War," and excluded in part on that basis.[222] (Indeed, Berger had also been convicted and sentenced under the Espionage Act, though the charges were overturned by the Supreme Court on grounds of judicial bias.)[223] Another scholar of the incident writes that "Under a good reading of the First Amendment, Berger's speeches and writings could not have been seditious; however under the interpretation prevailing at the time, they probably were."[224] What should we make of such an incident?

In the end, in a case where free speech principles conflict with the best original understanding of "engaged in insurrection" or "aid or comfort," we think that free speech principles must give way. We stress that we do not think that all or even most disloyal speech will rise to the level of triggering Section Three's disqualifications.[225] But where it does, where "it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other," it is the more recent Fourteenth Amendment that "shall be preferred" to the earlier rule.[226]

For those (like us) who value First Amendment liberties of speech, press, assembly, religion, and the right to dissent generally, might Section Three therefore be thought a little dangerous? Might Section Three, in the wrong hands or applied improperly, be used to suppress dissent in the name of excluding insurrectionists from office? Perhaps. We do not shy away from the point. But the supposed danger of a constitutional provision is not really an argument against its meaning. And the potential abuse of a constitutional power, privilege, or disqualification is not really a good legal argument against its existence. Section Three's exclusion could be thought to pose a danger; but insurrection and rebellion are dangers too—all too real dangers, as recent events have shown. Where exactly that line is drawn by the Constitution, and the extent to which that line changes the prior rules of the First Amendment, are ultimately questions of the meaning of Section Three's general terms triggering disqualification from future office—"insurrection," "rebellion," "engaged in," "given aid or comfort to"—and of who all is included under Section Three's ban. To that set of important questions we turn next.

IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping

---

[222] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 190; Lynch, supra note 5, at 211-213; 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 52-63.
[223] Berger v. United States, 255 U.S. 22 (1921). During the initial exclusion, when Berger's conviction was on appeal, the House Committee announced "that it would not be governed by the action of the judge and jury at the Chicago trial," but would review the evidence and legal questions for itself. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 54. But curiously, after the convictions were reversed the House allowed Berger to sit in the sixty-eighth through seventieth Congresses. Lynch, supra note 5, at 213.
[224] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 191.
[225] In our view, for instance, the exclusion of Victor Berger went too far—not because the First Amendment makes an exception to Section Three, but because Berger's advocacy did not satisfy the original meaning of Section Three. See infra note 359.
[226] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We come at last to the heart of the beast: the substance of Section Three's prohibition. We begin (in Subpart A) with the most interesting and important set of issues—the types of misconduct that trigger Section Three. What deeds (and words?) amount to having "engaged in" "insurrection" or "rebellion" against the lawful authority of the Constitution and the system of government it establishes? What acts (or words?) amount to having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of lawful government under the Constitution?

These terms to some extent bear a range of meaning and fair construction. The events they describe are often exceptional and to some extent unique. Still, some applications will be clear and virtually indisputable, falling within the terms' core meaning—the center of the interpretive bullseye, so to speak. Such scenarios so clearly fall within Section Three that they may be said to be contained within the opposite of a safe harbor—a "sure shipwreck,"[227] to borrow Susan Morse's phrase—of unquestionably disqualifying conduct falling within the core of Section Three's meaning: for example, declaring unilateral secession from lawful constitutional government; or the taking up of arms against government (as in the waging of the Civil War). At the other end of the continuum, there will be situations that clearly lie in a safe harbor outside the legitimate range of meaning of Section Three's terms—ordinary expression of political dissent as well as even ordinary law violations. In between these markers, there is a zone of reasonable, fair construction of allowable interpretation and application in which government officials may make judgments that must be conceded to be within the range of what the Constitution permits—and where the decisions and actions of government officials exercising their constitutional powers consequently cannot be considered unlawful and thereby subject to judicial invalidation. Within that fair range of meaning, different interpreters legitimately can reach differing conclusions, all in accordance with the Constitution. We address all of these questions in subpart A.

We then turn more briefly (in subpart B) to the questions of what prior-office-holding, oath-taking categories of persons—persons who then subsequently engaged in insurrection or rebellion—are covered by Section Three's ban and (a similar but distinct question) what future offices are constitutionally barred to such persons. We conclude that Section Three's disqualification is sweeping, both in the substantive conduct that triggers such disqualification and in the office-holders and offices to which it applies. In particular, contrary to one recent revisionist view, we believe it applies to the Presidency.

Finally (in Subpart C) we will consider the attempted overthrow of the 2020 Presidential election. Did the incumbent president's willful, deliberate refusal to accept the outcome of the lawful constitutional election resulting in his defeat for re-election and, instead, his (and others') attempt to overthrow constitutional election results and install or maintain himself in office, by force, by fraud or by attempted de [227] Susan Morse, Safe Harbors, Sure Shipwrecks, 49 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1385 (2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

facto political coup d'etat against the regime of lawful constitutional government, constitute engaging in "insurrection or rebellion against the Constitution of the United States"? We think the answer is yes.

Whether called a "rebellion," an attempted coup d'etat seeking to displace lawful government authority under the Constitution, or an "insurrection," instigating, inciting and encouraging a mob to engage in acts of forcible violence directed against the ability of Congress and the Vice President to carry out their constitutional duties—and then refusing to intervene—such conduct is covered by Section Three, and is disqualifying. If those are indeed the facts concerning Donald Trump's (and others') efforts to overthrow the election—and we think they are—such conduct triggers the disqualification rule of Section Three.

Whether other federal and state officeholders—members of Congress, state legislators, past or present state and federal executive and judicial officers—engaged in conduct constituting "insurrection" or "rebellion" (including meaningful action in deliberate furtherance of an attempted coup against lawful constitutional government), or gave "aid or comfort" (approval, encouragement, support) to enemies might sometimes involve more difficult questions of fact and judgment. But they are the questions Section Three compels us to ask, and to answer. Where such evaluations and judgments have been made by actors exercising legitimate authority to make them (as discussed in Part II) and fall within the fair range of Section Three's meaning, those judgments are entitled to full legal effect.

A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies"

What is the proper, original public meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" as used in Section Three? Of having "engaged in" such conduct? Of having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies"?

Because the terms are capacious and the evidence is sprawling, we will start by proposing our working definitions for these terms. We then show how they are largely consistent with standard sources for discerning the meaning of constitutional text: contemporaneous definitions of these terms; usage elsewhere in the Constitution; and contemporaneous public, political, and legal usage of the terms. This last category, which is especially instructive, includes usages from President Lincoln, legislation adopted by the Civil War Congress (both the 1862 "Ironclad" oath and the Second Confiscation Act), and the significant mid-Civil-War decision of the Supreme Court in The Prize Cases. We also consider, albeit in somewhat more abbreviated fashion, statutes and usages leading up to the Civil War, including the Insurrection Act of 1795 as amended, and an important series of exclusions from Congress itself, as well as the relevant legislative history of Section Three, and a few scattered post-enactment applications of Section Three itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Working definitions

We begin by offering working definitions of the terms insurrection and rebellion and of what might constitute "engaging in" such conduct or giving "aid or comfort" to enemies under Section Three.

Insurrection is best understood as concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect. The term "insurrection" connotes something more than mere ordinary lawbreaking. It suggests an affirmative contest with, and active resistance to, the authority of the government. It is in that sense more than just organized resistance to the laws—more than just a protest, even one involving civil disobedience. Rather, it is organized resistance to the government. Insurrection is also more than mere "protest" in that it implies some element of forcible resistance. It is something more than a mere spontaneous, disorganized "riot."[228] Insurrection suggests at least some degree of coordinated, concerted action. The term also implies something more than acts of solitary individuals: to qualify as an insurrection the acts in question must involve some form of collective action, even if not an advance plan.

At the same time, insurrection may fall short of outright rebellion—even as the terms overlap and might bleed into each other—in that an insurrection might not seek to overturn, overthrow, or displace the government itself, in whole or in part (as a rebellion does). As the Supreme Court put it in The Prize Cases, in 1863: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion."[229]

Rebellion is thus closely related to insurrection, but perhaps not quite identical in meaning. A rebellion is arguably broader in its reach than an insurrection: rebellion implies an effort to overturn or displace lawful government authority by unlawful means. (In the case of secession, or a declaration of independence, the rebellion is an effort to free those engaged in rebellion from the authority of the existing lawful government.) Rebellion is something beyond mere resistance to government authority in a particular instance or set of instances. A rebellion seeks to replace the existing regime, not just resist its law-executing authority. Rebellion involves repudiation, to some degree or another, of the regime's authority, legitimacy, or validity. It is a challenge, direct or indirect, to the regime itself. The South's attempted secession was a species of rebellion—an attempt to overturn the authority of the Constitution and government of the United States by the states asserting the right to secede. Likewise, an attempted coup d'etat is arguably also a species of rebellion—an effort to displace, replace, upend, or overthrow the existing lawful regime and substitute different authority in its stead.

---

[228] 10 Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution 1296 (Statement of Madison) ("A riot did not come within the legal definition of an insurrection").
[229] 2 Black (67 U.S.) 635, 667 (1863).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The term rebellion can also imply a competing claim to legitimacy. "Rebellion" thus seems to carry a stronger political-claim-of-right valence than does "insurrection."[230] Crucially, however, the fact that an insurrection or rebellion claims political or moral legitimacy—as the American Revolution did; indeed, as the South's secession did—does not make it any the less an insurrection or rebellion. The fact that an attempted coup d'etat, or declaration of independence, or secession, is claimed to be a "vindication" or "restoration" of rightful governmental authority—or asserted to be a pre-emptive effort to thwart some other person's or group's alleged wrongful assertion of authority—does not immunize such action from the legal characterization of rebellion against the regime. If somebody in fact participates in an attempt to overthrow the government, it makes no difference that he might think himself in the right for doing so, see himself as an agent for preserving lawful government, or view his acts and intention not as "rebellion" but restoration. Mistake of law is no defense to a coup d'etat. The South offered a variety of constitutional legal theories in defense of the supposed lawfulness of secession as an act for the vindication of its believed rights.[231] That did not make its acts of rebellion any less acts of rebellion.

As to the overlap and distinction between insurrection and rebellion our working definition is more tentative. It is possible that a rebellion is simply a special case of an insurrection, in the way that a square is a special case of a rectangle. But it is also possible that the term rebellion is not necessarily limited to regime change by

---

[230] Though it is possible that this connotation is anachronistic. See infra note 252.

[231] For important accounts and discussion of Southern arguments for the constitutional propriety and validity of secession, on a variety of asserted grounds, see James M. McPherson, Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era 234-236 (1988) (summarizing Southern constitutional and political theories); Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution 57-91 (2003) (emphasizing arguments of states' rights to interposition, nullification, and secession generally); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lincoln and Judicial Authority, 83 Notre Dame. L. Rev. 1227, 1270-1277 (2008) (setting forth Southern leaders' constitutional arguments that Lincoln's stance against the Dred Scott decision, against judicial supremacy, and against extension of slavery violated the judicially settled constitutional rights of slaveholding persons and states); Kenneth M. Stampp, The Concept of a Perpetual Union, 65 J. Am. Hist. 5-53 (June 1978) (providing detailed history of constitutional and political arguments over the nature of Union and the validity of secession); David P. Currie, The Constitution in Congress: Descent into the Maelstrom 1829-1861, at 228-237 (2005) (discussing and evaluating the constitutional arguments for and against the validity of secession). For the case against the constitutionality of secession, see generally 2 Abraham Lincoln, Speeches & Writings, 1859-1865: Speeches, Letters, Miscellaneous Writings, Presidential Messages & Proclamations, at 217-218 (First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861); id. at 254-258, 260-261 (Message to Congress, July 4, 1861); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Civil War as Constitutional Interpretation, 71 U Chi. L. Rev. 691, 703-715 (2004) (reviewing Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution) (distilling and building on Lincoln's arguments); Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 303-311 (same). For further background, see generally William W. Freehling, The Road to Disunion: Secessionists at Bay 1776-1854 (1990), and for a comprehensive exposition of the Southern view, see Alexander M. Stephens, A Constitutional View of the Late War Between the States; Its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results (1867). As a clarification: we use the term "secession" here and throughout this article to refer to unilateral secession without the consent of the federal government, as in the Civil War, and do not discuss ways the federal government might lawfully consent to the independence of a state or territory.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

force—and thus may occupy some ground not covered by the word "insurrection" (which, we have suggested, must be forcible). There are such things as "bloodless coups": actions that effectively displace or upend the prior constitutional order without shots being fired, but that nonetheless are in unlawful defiance or repudiation of the existing legal order.[232]

To illustrate this hypothesized distinction between insurrection and rebellion: Imagine that the Southern attack on Fort Sumter in April 1861 had preceded any declared right to secession. The attack would have been an act of insurrection—an exercise of concerted, forcible defiance of the authority of the Union government—but not necessarily outright rebellion. Conversely, the ordinances of secession adopted by state conventions in the South in 1860 and 1861[233] preceded (mostly) any acts of actual forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws. The secession ordinances might still immediately constitute acts of "rebellion," even before any accompanying violence. In short: Sumter without secession would have still been insurrection. Secession without Sumter was already rebellion. Put the two events together—acts of forcible insurrection and declarations of avowed rebellion frequently travel in pairs (as they obviously did with the Civil War)—and it becomes difficult to distinguish "insurrection" from "rebellion." The overlap of the two terms in theory becomes complete in practice.

In the end, however, we do not wish to make too much of the ways in which the terms differ in shades of color and in their implication. The coverage of the terms overlaps substantially. Sometimes, the terms, occupying much of the same ground, seem capable of being used almost interchangeably. Indeed, the bigger picture point for understanding Section Three is that "insurrection" and "rebellion," in tandem, cover pretty much the entire terrain of large-scale unlawful resistance to government authority.

So much for our working definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion." What does it mean to have "engaged in" such conduct? We believe one has "engaged" in

---

[232] Indeed, one might characterize the process of adoption of the U.S. Constitution, replacing the regime of the Articles of Confederation, as a peaceful political coup d'etat – an act of "rebellion" if judged by the pre-existing law, but morally and politically justified by the failure of the prior regime and Lockean notions of self-governance, and subsequently legalized by its own success. See generally Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 3-8, 17-20; Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism as a Theory of Legal Change, 38 Harv. J. L. & Pub Pol'y 818, 821, 844, 850 (2015). But cf. Akhil Reed Amar, The Words that Made Us: America's Constitutional Conversation 1760-1840, at 164-165 (2021) (emphasizing the states' retention of sovereignty under the Articles and the idea that states might thus properly exit that regime, legally, on the theory that the Articles had become a breached treaty).

[233] The seceding states adopted their secession resolutions by state "conventions," purporting to parallel the process by which the states ratified the Constitution. See McPherson, supra note 231, at 234-284 (describing secession actions of ten states that purported to secede from the Union). The secession ordinances of the South were self-consciously styled after the Declaration of Independence, which was obviously an act of formal legal rebellion.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

insurrection or rebellion when one has been actively involved in the planning or execution of intentional acts of insurrection or rebellion; or when one has knowingly provided active, meaningful, voluntary, direct support for, material assistance to, or specific encouragement of such actions. Such planning, participation, support, assistance, or encouragement may be in the form of either words or deeds, as long as the person who has "engaged in" such activities embraced the objectives of the insurrection or rebellion in question and did things that contributed in a meaningful way to advancing those objectives.[234] (There is obvious overlap here with the closely related concept of having given "aid or comfort" to the nation's enemies, which we discuss presently.)

Of course, there are also important limits to how far the concept of having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion extends. Mere passive acquiescence, resigned acceptance, silence, or inaction is not typically enough to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion. An exception to this limitation might exist where a person possesses an affirmative duty to speak or act. Further, mere abstract advocacy of, or theorizing concerning, the desirability of insurrection or rebellion, without more, is not the same as actually engaging in it. We think this is true even though the First Amendment does not formally constrain Section Three: it is simply the best understanding of Section Three's terms.

Then there is the related question of what constitutes having given "aid or comfort" to "the enemies thereof." This reads as a separate, independent ground for disqualification: Section Three is triggered by having engaged in insurrection or rebellion "or" having given aid or comfort to enemies. This language, of course, closely echoes the earlier constitutional language of the Treason Clause.[235]

In many cases, giving "aid or comfort" to enemies will be similar to the kind of conduct that counts as having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion through intentional, active assistance. If there is a difference, it is that the term "aid or comfort" reinforces and emphasizes Section Three's coverage of indirect but material assistance. Such material assistance—possibly including expression supporting, encouraging, counseling, or promoting the enemy—might more naturally fall into Section

---

[234] This working definition of having "engaged in" wrongful activity resembles familiar common law understandings of accomplice liability in the area of criminal law, which typically resulted from the combination of (1) assistance to unlawful conduct (with "assistance" including uttering words of encouragement to, or agreeing not to interfere with, such conduct) and (2) the intention to further such unlawful conduct). Federal criminal law today is to similar effect. 18 U.S.C. § 2(a) (2012) ("Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal."). We think it is also generally supported by background mens rea principles. See William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Law of Interpretation, 130 Harv. L. Rev. 1079, 1108 (2017). That said, the context of the Civil War also suggests one important limitation: there is no mistake-of-rebellion defense. See text accompanying infra note 425.

[235] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 ("Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three's "aid or comfort" language, even where it might be debatable whether to characterize such conduct as directly "engag[ing] in" insurrection or rebellion.

Additionally, while Section Three uses some language paralleling that contained in the Treason Clause, Section Three is by no means limited to the constitutional crime of treason. "Insurrection" and "rebellion" are their own things, distinct from "treason." While some acts of insurrection and rebellion might also constitute treason they need not do so in order to be encompassed within Section Three. So even if "aid or comfort" in Section Three connotes the same type of assistance-and-embrace principles as "Aid and Comfort" in Article III's Treason Clause,[236] the relevant conduct to which such assistance is given might well differ. (And, as noted earlier, it is plain that Section Three requires no prior criminal-law conviction, for treason or any other defined crime, as a prerequisite for its disqualification to apply.)

Finally, aid or comfort to whom? "[T]he enemies thereof." Before the Civil War, some might have limited the term "enemies" to those owing allegiance to a foreign power,[237] but that is not plausibly true of Section Three. Rather, Section Three covers enemies both foreign and domestic. That now-familiar phrase ("enemies foreign and domestic") comes from the "Ironclad Oath," written into law in 1862, in the midst of the Civil War,[238] and it seems clear from the political context of Section Three that it likewise treats domestic enemies as enemies. Indeed, it is almost unthinkable that Confederate rebels would not have been thought "enemies" in the sense employed by the text.

What is less clear is how to define the foreign and domestic enemies covered by Section Three. The most straightforward option, which strikes us as the more likely one, is that "enemies" essentially cross-references the domestic rebels and insurrectionists just described earlier in the sentence (as well as more traditional foreign enemies, of course). On this straightforward reading, Section Three would cover a domestic officeholder who directly engages in insurrection or rebellion, or who gives aid or comfort to others who do so (or, of course, one who gives aid or comfort to foreign enemies). This straightforward reading is also consistent with the operation of another 1862 statute, the Second Confiscation Act.[239] That said, we cannot rule out another narrower possibility, that "enemies" is limited to those with whom the US are effectively at war, and thus excludes insurrections and rebellions that do not rise to the level of a civil war.[240] This would create a more complicated two-track system

---

[236] See infra note 258.
[237] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 174 (discussing United States v. Greathouse, 26 F. Cas. 18, 22 (C.C.N.D. Cal. 1863) (No. 15,254)).
[238] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[239] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.ii.
[240] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 173-178 for more discussion.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

where Section Three covers all insurrections and rebellions, as well as "aid or comfort" to a more limited set of insurrections and rebellions. While it strikes us as less likely, we cannot definitively rule it out.[241]

Our sense of the whole—of Section Three's substantive terms triggering disqualification for those who have engaged in the conduct described—is that Section Three is quite sweeping, using overlapping terms to cover several different characterizations of major collective resistance to the authority of government under the Constitution. Whether it be called "insurrection" or "rebellion"; and whether a covered individual is thought to have "engaged in" such activity or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies," Section Three's disqualification is triggered. The language is not unlimited, to be sure. But the broad and overlapping terms are not intended to be hospitable to loopholes or artful, narrow, technical evasions.

Finally, let us reiterate one consequence of Section Three's breadth and capaciousness. Because Section Three's terms possess a range of meaning, both a determinate core and a fuzzier periphery, we need a second-order rule concerning the authority of decisionmakers to act on the basis of fair interpretations of indefinite terms. We think that the general rule of our constitutional order is that political officials may take actions premised on fair interpretations of indefinite terms, and that when they do so, their actions cannot rightly be held "unconstitutional" by the courts, precisely because they fit within the fair range afforded by the Constitution. Where the Constitution admits of a range of choice, political authorities may exercise choices within that range.

This is foundational to our constitutional law.[242] It is the premise of judicial review as set forth in Marbury v. Madison, which justifies setting aside the acts of

---

[241] What is the referent of "enemies thereof"? Does "thereof" refer to enemies of the United States or enemies of the Constitution of the United States? We think this replicates the question of what "the same" refers to, earlier in the sentence, and presents the same issue of minor and seemingly inconsequential ambiguity. (Does "insurrection or rebellion against the same" refer to insurrection or rebellion against "the United States"?) On balance, we think that it probably makes little practical difference: rebellion against the United States and rebellion against the Constitution of the United States will often amount to the same thing; either one is capable of being considered an instance of the other. Whatever the answer, it should be the same for both—"against the same" and "thereof" refer to the same thing. Our best guess is that it is "the United States."

[242] See, e.g., Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 858 (arguing that where constitutional language states a general principle, "actions of government that fall within the scope of judgment or discretion admitted by the breadth with which that principle is expressed do not violate the Constitution, and are thus allowable"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, A Government of Adequate Powers, 31 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 991, 995 (2008) (arguing that "textual imprecision or generality often admits of a range of choices" and that the correct constitutional answer in such circumstances "is that the legislature must be permitted to choose from options within that range"; thus, "the more indeterminate or under-determinate the range of a constitutional provision, the broader the duty of the courts to defer to what the legislature has enacted"); Kesavan & Paulsen, Secret Drafting History, supra note 9, at 1129-30 n.54 (2003); Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Most Dangerous Branch: Executive Power to Say What the Law

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

other branches only because, and only to the extent to, they deviate from the Constitution's meaning. It is classically illustrated by the Court's reasoning in M'Culloch v. Maryland,[243] which upheld Congress's power to create the Bank of the United States because a generation of political actors had acted within the fair range of meaning of constitutionally granted powers.

And this principle means, as a practical matter, that the breadth of Section Three's broad terms cannot be ignored, or artificially limited, by judicial construction. Where those charged with responsibilities that involve applying Section Three's terms have given that language its full legitimate sweep, that breadth must be honored.

We now canvass—perhaps too briefly and yet at too great a length—some of the evidence supporting these working definitions.

2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions

As we have said, the task of ascertaining true constitutional meaning consists of seeking out the objective, original meaning of the words and phrases of the text: that is, the meaning Section Three's terms and structure would have had in the legal system at the time. A starting point for such an inquiry—though not the ending point—is to look at contemporaneous dictionary definitions. (We think that evidence of contemporaneous political and legal usage of words and phrases contained in the constitutional text is actually quite often stronger evidence of original, objective linguistic meaning: it can serve as a kind of operational, practical concordance that may "define" terms more precisely in their application than can a cold dictionary definition.)

Nineteenth century dictionaries contain definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion" that substantially corroborate our working definitions. Webster defined "insurrection" as "[a] rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state."[244] Rebellion was "[a]n open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government to which one owes allegiance."[245]

Is, 83 Geo. L.J. 217, 333 (1994); Baude & Sachs, Law of Interpretation, supra note 234, at 1120 (describing "the presumption of constitutionality" as a rule of unwritten law); William Baude, Constitutional Liquidation, 71 Stan. L. Rev. 1, 35-36, 44 (2019). Again, we bracket any differences in emphasis between our respective views of the adjudication of ambiguities.

[243] 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819),

[244] 1 Noah Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language 111 (1828, photoreprint 1993) ("Insurrection"); see also Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 702 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (similar); 1 John Boag, A Popular and Complete English Dictionary 727 (1850) (similar).

[245] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also Webster's (Porter 1864), supra note 244, at 1094 (similar); 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Importantly, Webster also noted several distinctions between these and other terms. In defining rebellion, he distinguished an insurrection as "a rising in opposition to a particular act or law, without a design to renounce wholly all subjection to the government," while a rebellion was a more categorical "attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one or to place the country under another jurisdiction."[246] And in defining insurrection, Webster noted that insurrection is "equivalent to sedition, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens."[247] This suggests a spectrum from sedition (not covered by Section Three) to insurrection to rebellion (both covered).

At the same time, Webster also conceded some overlap in these terms, writing that "[i]nsurrection may be, but is not necessarily, rebellion"[248] and that despite these technical distinctions, "[i]nsurrection is however used with latitude as to comprehend either sedition or rebellion."[249] This suggests a great deal of potential breadth and overlap in these terms.

Along similar lines, a prominent mid-century legal dictionary, John Bouvier's Law Dictionary in its 1868 edition, contains detailed definitions of insurrection, rebellion, and aid and comfort. "INSURRECTION" was defined simply as "[a] rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government."[250] "REBELLION" is correspondingly defined: "The taking up arms traitorously against the government. The forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued."[251] Bouvier's thus treated "insurrection" and "rebellion" as nearly interchangeable terms, both involving some degree of concerted and forcible opposition to the authority of the lawfully constituted government but not clearly distinguishing between them.[252]

---

[246] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 1 Boag, supra note 244, at 727; 2 id. at 319 (similar).

[247] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111 ("Insurrection"). For comparison, Webster defined "Sedition" as: "A factious commotion of the people, or a tumultuous assembly of men rising in opposition to law or the administration of justice, and in disturbance of the public peace. Sedition is a rising or commotion of less extent than an insurrection, and both are less than rebellion . . ." 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 66 ("Sedition").

[248] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

[249] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111. Daniel Hemel argues that "Webster's definition of 'insurrection' seems implausibly broad for Section 3 purposes." See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5.

[250] "Insurrection" in 1 John Bouvier. A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union 729-730 (Philadelphia, G.W. Childs, 12th ed., rev. and enl. 1868).

[251] "Rebellion" in 2 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 415 (emphasis added).

[252] See also Joseph Worcester, A Dictionary of the English Language 764, 1190 (1860) (generally equating insurrection and rebellion). Elsewhere in this edition, Bouvier drew a distinction in connotation between "REBEL" and "INSURGENT," suggesting that "rebel is always understood in a bad sense, as one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bouvier's dictionary also offers an instructive definition of "AID AND COMFORT" as "[h]elp, support, assistance, counsel, encouragement." The entry adds this discussion, noting the lack of U.S. judicial interpretation at the time but a generally accepted English background understanding of the term:

> The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, declares that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial discussion. They import, however, help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. 1, c.14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act …[253]

This tends to confirm our broad construction of "aid or comfort" as encompassing many kinds of intentional support, akin to the common law.

3. Intratextualism

In some cases, the Constitution can also serve as its own internal dictionary. The meaning of a constitutional term in one part of the document can inform its meaning in another, either because of the complete (or near) copying of one constitutional text by another or by virtue of subtle contrast, refinement, or qualification in a term's usage. (Professor Akhil Amar has dubbed this method of interpretation "Intratextualism.")[254] Chief Justice Marshall, for example, famously employed this method in M'Culloch v. Maryland as part of his argument for the constitutionality of Congress's chartering of a Bank of the United States.[255] tyranny of constitute authorities," and thus that "[t]he colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels." "Insurgent" and "Rebel" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 729; 2 id. at 415.

---

In a much later edition, Bouvier's drew a distinction between insurrection and rebellion as two different varieties of "actual and open resistance to [government] authority." Insurrection was "an actual uprising against the government" while rebellion "goes beyond insurrection in aim" and attempts actually to overthrow the government authority in question. "Insurrection" and "Rebellion," in 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary & Concise Encycl. (Rawles Rev., 1897). Lynch misstates the date of this edition as 1867, and thus mistakenly cites it as "contemporarily authoritative." Lynch, supra note 5, at 167 n. 80.

[253] "Aid and Comfort" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 107.

[254] Akhil Reed Amar, Intratextualism, 112 Harv. L. Rev. 747, 748 (1999).

[255] M'Culloch, 17 U.S. at 413-414. In construing the scope of the legislative power conferred by the Necessary and Proper Clause, Marshall noted how the word "necessary" was used differently, and subjected to different qualifications, in other parts of the Constitution and found that those differences were useful in interpreting the clause at hand. For discussion of the prominence of intratextual and structural-logic, whole-text arguments in some of Chief Justice Marshall's most significant Supreme Court opinions, including Marbury and M'Culloch, see Paulsen, Marbury, supra note 66, at 2711; see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Plausibility of Personhood, 74 Ohio St. L. J. 13, 33 n. 72 (2013).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Might the Constitution's other usages of terms that also appear in Section Three serve as such markers of meaning for "insurrection" and "rebellion," and "aid or comfort" to enemies, as those terms are used in Section Three? A quick canvass suggests only limited help.

The word "insurrection" appears in the Militia Clause of Article I, Section 8 of the original Constitution: Congress is given the enumerated power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[256] The word "rebellion" appears in the Writ Suspension Clause of Article I, Section 9: "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or invasion the public Safety may require it."[257] In neither instance, however, does the context suggest any particular definition or explication of the term. They are thus of little direct assistance to the task of unpacking the meaning of Section Three.

As noted, the language in Section Three's alternative trigger—the giving of "aid and comfort" to enemies—borrows the nearly identical language of the Treason Clause of Article III. But once again, the similar language in Article III is not self-defining. Nor was there an established, settled, authoritative judicial interpretation of this language that might have been understood specifically to define "aid and comfort" as a constitutional term-of-art at the time of the framing of the Fourteenth Amendment.[258] Moreover, in the 1860s, the pairing of "aid" and/or "comfort" had be-

---

[256] U.S. Const. art. I, §8 cl. 15.

[257] U.S. Const. art. I, §9 cl. 2.

[258] Perhaps the most notable U.S. treason case to date was Ex parte Bollman, in which Chief Justice Marshall delivered an opinion for the Court granting habeas to two of the co-conspirators in Aaron Burr's plot to seize Spanish territory in the American (then-)southwest and attempt to form his own independent nation. Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75 (1807). The opinion combined a relatively narrow construction of the substantive crime of treason (in part because of Article III's text ("only in levying war") with a relatively broad construction of complicity. Thus on one hand: "However flagitious may be the crime of conspiring to subvert by force the government of our country, such conspiracy is not treason," id. at 126, but on the other hand, "if war be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors." Id. Ex parte Bollman was an early and prominent legal landmark supporting some key propositions that would have been familiar to lawyers during the Civil War era: first, that there are such things as conspiracies and plots to "overturn the government," in whole or in part, that though they might not qualify as treason, remain great and culpable legal wrongs; second, that the crime of treason specifically requires showing the existence of an armed assembly to employ force for a treasonable purpose; third, that one may be said to have engaged in (or provided "aid and comfort" to) treason where one is in league with the conspiracy and done any act, large or small, or played "any part," however remote, to further that plot. Whether or not Bollman's construction was sufficiently established to be read in to Section Three itself, it was cited occasionally in the 1860s Congress. See, e.g., 37th Congress 2nd Session Cong. Globe 414 (1862)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

come ubiquitous in legal and public discourse as a general allegation of improper assistance, making it still less clear that it was perfectly coterminous with the law of the Treason Clause.[259]

Finally, the words "insurrection" and "rebellion" also appear elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment itself, but again in ways that give little external light on Section Three. A person's "participation in rebellion" is specified in Section Two as an allowable ground for denying the right to vote that does not trigger a reduction in a state's representation as a consequence.[260] Section Four of the amendment prohibits payment of debts or obligations "incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion."[261] These neighboring sections use slightly different phrases for the behavior they cover ("participation" and "engaged in"; "aid or comfort" and "in aid of"), but it is difficult to say if the variations are meaningful.

4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage

Perhaps the best evidence of the public meaning of the terms "insurrection," "rebellion," and "engaging in," as they came to be used in Section Three, consists of their common and frequent public, political, and legal usage in the 1860s—the years immediately surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment—by a variety of actors: by President Abraham Lincoln, in prominent speeches, messages, public letters, and proclamations; by Congress, in major acts of legislation; and by the Supreme Court, in the landmark decision in The Prize Cases. The consistent pattern of usage was to treat the actions of the South as being, legally, "insurrection" or "rebellion." A wide range of actions supportive of secession appears to have constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort" to rebellion or insurrection.

This leads us to what we think an obvious "sure shipwreck"[262] for understanding Section Three's terms. Whatever else "insurrection or rebellion" might embrace, they certainly embrace the cluster of actions with which Section Three was, historically, immediately and directly concerned: first, the attempted secession from the authority of the U.S. Constitution—the effort to displace the lawful authority of the United States in favor of the supposedly "seceded" state governments and their confederation into the "Confederate States of America"; and second, engaging in forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws of the United States—armed resistance to the Constitution, specifically in the shape of waging civil war against the nation. Conduct participating in, advancing, supporting, or assisting

---

(statement of Sen. Sumner) (citing Bollman passage quoted above during the proceedings to expel Senator Jesse Bright for writing a letter to Jefferson Davis).

[259] See Harold Holzer, Lincoln and the Power of the Press: The War for Public Opinion 361 (2014) (referring to the phrase "aid and comfort to the enemy" (by the press) as "that catch-basin phrase again.").

[260] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2.

[261] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 4.

[262] Morse, supra note 227.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

either secession or armed resistance to U.S. authority constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort to" the Union's enemies. Section Three encompasses all such actions in support of secession and civil war as included within its substantive trigger.

a. President Lincoln

An extremely important contemporaneous source for understanding the public constitutional meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" in 1860s public discourse is President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln looms large in the public understanding of the day concerning the meaning of those terms. Lincoln consistently characterized secession and the Civil War as acts of insurrection or rebellion, avoiding wherever possible treating "secession" as if it were a separate legal category. Secession, for Lincoln, was a Southern euphemism for rebellion and treason. The Confederacy had no valid legal existence: what was going on with the Civil War was properly called insurrection and rebellion—the lawless attempt to overthrow the constitutional processes of the United States and displace lawful government with unlawful governments.

Lincoln was insistent and relentless—and very public and prominent—on this point, consistently so, across a range of contexts. For instance, the Civil War was emphatically not, in Lincoln's view, a "war" between the United States and another sovereign.[263] It was not subject to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 11 power to "declare War," but was rather an illegal rebellion—a "giant insurrection"—to be suppressed by executive authority pursuant to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 15 power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[264]

Consider just a few prominent and illustrative statements: In his First Inaugural Address, on March 4, 1861, Lincoln, after setting forth arguments that "no State upon its own mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union," concluded that "acts of violence within any State or States against the authority of the United States" are "insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances."[265] Following the attack on Fort Sumter, Lincoln's April 15, 1861 proclamation calling forth the militia

---

[263] On Lincoln's understanding of secession as unconstitutional and his resulting conception of the Civil War as, legally, a situation of insurrection or rebellion (not declared war) see sources cited in note 231. That does not exclude the existence of full constitutional Commander in Chief Clause powers in the situation of actual civil war, however. Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Emancipation Proclamation and the Commander in Chief Power, 40 Georgia L. Rev. 807, 814-823 (2006).

[264] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 11 (Declare War Clause) with U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 15 (power "to provide for calling forth" the Militia for law execution and to suppress insurrections"). Congress's exercise of this power – the Insurrection Acts of 1795 and 1807 – is discussed infra Part IV.A.5.a.

[265] Abraham Lincoln, First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1861), IV Complete Works of Lincoln ("CWL") 262, 265.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

similarly characterized the attack as fitting the statutory definition of insurrection.[266] And in his July 4, 1861 Message to Congress, Lincoln labelled the South's purported secession a "giant insurrection" and, vividly, as "rebellion … sugar coated." The "so-called 'Confederate States'" had formed an "insurrectionary government."[267] In the same July 4 Message, Lincoln used the nature of secession as rebellion to justify suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as authorized by the terms of Article I, section 9, clause 2 of the Constitution, which used exactly that language of "rebellion."[268] Lincoln's use of terms was significant and pulled no punches: efforts to displace lawful government authority with unlawful government—no matter how labelled by their perpetrators, no matter how deluded participants might be as to the lawfulness or propriety of their actions—were insurrectionary; such declarations and actions constituted rebellion.

Two years later, at the height of the war, Lincoln returned to the characterization of the South's actions as "rebellion" (and the constitutional question of power to suspend habeas corpus) in a notable incident testing the limit of Union military suppression of anti-war and disloyal speech. In a June 12, 1863 public letter, nominally addressed to Erastus Corning, Lincoln defended the military arrest of former Ohio Congressman Clement Vallandigham, a notorious racist and prominent "Copperhead" pro-South, anti-Union northerner, who had made a public speech vehemently condemning the Emancipation Proclamation and the propriety of the Union's war effort.

Lincoln distinguished law enforcement arrests from detentions in cases of rebellion. Wrote Lincoln: "Ours is a case of Rebellion—so called by the resolutions before me—in fact, a clear, flagrant, and gigantic case of Rebellion." And that, Lincoln concluded, was what allowed suspension of habeas corpus.[269] In the course of his argument, Lincoln described rebellion as "sudden and extensive uprisings against the government."[270] This is a useful description that supports our working definition: Rebellion is an "uprising." It is something more than mere protest. It is, often, "sudden." It is "extensive." It is directed "against the government." Rebellion is something more than ordinary law violation and that is why it is treated differently by the Constitution.

How did Vallandigham's actions associate him with the rebellion? Lincoln made a forceful case that even pure speech might constitute assistance to rebellion—if it were advocacy producing direct, material effects benefitting the rebel enemy

---

[266] Abraham Lincoln, Proclamation Calling Militia and Convening Congress (April 15, 1861), IV CWL 331, 332.
[267] Abraham Lincoln, Message to Congress in Special Session (July 4, 1861), IV CWL 421, 427-428, 432-437.
[268] Id. at 429-431 (emphasis added).
[269] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 2.
[270] Abraham Lincoln, To Erastus Corning and Others (June 12, 1863), VI CWL 260, 264 (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

cause, by tangibly harming the military authority engaged in trying to suppress that rebellion. In the Corning Letter, Lincoln wrote that, "under cover of 'Liberty of speech,' 'Liberty of the press,' and 'Habeas corpus,'" rebel sympathizers "hoped to keep on foot amongst us a most efficient corps of spies, informers, supplyers, and aiders and abettors of their cause in a thousand ways."[271] Claims of freedom of speech could improperly furnish a shield or cloak for wrongful conduct; they supplied "cover" for, and thus assisted, rebellion and insurrection.

Lincoln expanded these arguments in yet more arresting ways. He suggested that, in some circumstances, a person's refusal to speak out against rebellion might be tacit support for such rebellion: a "man who stands by and says nothing, when the peril of his government is discussed, can not be misunderstood. If not hindered, he is sure to help the enemy." He also hinted at regret that he had not earlier arrested prominent oath-breaking officers now "occupying the very highest places in the rebel war service," such as John Breckinridge, Robert E. Lee, Joseph Johnston, and John Magruder: "I think the time not unlikely to come when I shall be blamed for having made too few arrests rather than too many."[272] Lincoln's position seems clear, if perhaps a bit unsettling: claims of freedom of speech did not invariably prevail over the imperative constitutional necessity of suppressing rebellion; where words fueled insurrection, or thwarted its suppression, or signaled disloyalty, the speaker was aiding the enemy. Such expression was not necessarily privileged.

This is not exactly an expansive conception of First Amendment rights. Lincoln fully recognized the difficulties with his stance. He did not ignore the tension between his conclusions and peacetime free speech principles but argued that the tension could be reconciled.[273] In a colorful metaphor, Lincoln ventured:

> I can no more be persuaded that the Government can constitutionally take no strong measures in time of rebellion, because it can be shown that the same could not be lawfully taken in time of peace, than I can be persuaded that a particular drug is not good medicine for a sick man, because it can be shown not to be good food for a well one. Nor am I able to appreciate the danger apprehended by the meeting that the American people will, by means of military arrests during the Rebellion, lose the

---

[271] Id. at 263.

[272] Id. at 265.

[273] In several respects, Lincoln anticipated later judicial free speech doctrines and decisions, such as those distinguishing pure speech from speech linked to prohibited conduct; recognizing limits on speech posing a danger of inciting to crime or lawlessness; recognizing "compelling interest" overrides in exceptional circumstances, including for reasons of national security or military secrecy; finding that government's motives and purposes for a particular action may matter to its lawfulness; and noting where an incidental limitation on expression leaves open alternative channels for expression of the same message. See Paulsen, Civil War, supra note 231, at 698-702 & n.23 (noting how Lincoln anticipated many of the issues and exceptions contemplated by later judicial doctrine concerning the First Amendment's freedom of speech).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> right of Public Discussion, the Liberty of Speech and the Press, the Law of Evidence, Trial by Jury, and Habeas Corpus, throughout the indefinite peaceful future, which I trust lies before them, any more than I am able to believe that a man could contract so strong an appetite for emetics during temporary illness as to persist in feeding upon them during the remainder of his healthful life.[274]

Lincoln also stressed a distinction between speech directed at criticism of the government's political policy—fully protected by the freedom of speech—and expression more or less directly aimed at harming the military's recruitment and war effort. If Vallandigham had been arrested merely because he was "damaging the political prospects of the administration" or "the personal interests of the general," that would be one thing, Lincoln observed. "[I]f there was no other reason for the arrest, then I concede that the arrest was wrong." But as Lincoln understood it, the arrest "was made for a very different reason"—that Vallandigham was "laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops, to encourage desertions from the army, and to leave the rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it." Vallandigham was, in short, "warring upon the military." He who "dissuades one man from volunteering, or induces one soldier to desert, weakens the Union cause as much as he who kills a union soldier in battle." Desertion was punishable by death, of course. In a famous line, Lincoln asked, rhetorically "Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wiley agitator who induces him to desert?"[275] Lincoln's answer was no: "I think that in such a case, to silence the agitator, and save the boy, is not only constitutional, but, withal a great mercy." [276]

Lincoln continued: "If I be wrong on this question of constitutional power," he added, "my error lies in believing that certain proceedings are constitutional when, in cases of rebellion or Invasion, the public Safety requires them, which would not be constitutional when, in absence of rebellion or invasion, the public Safety does not require them -- in other words, that the constitution is not in it's application in all respects the same, in cases of Rebellion or invasion, involving the public Safety, as it is in times of profound peace and public security."[277]

Lincoln thus embraced the view that material assistance to insurrection or rebellion could in some cases take the form of effective advocacy of unlawful conduct that, if engaged in by substantial numbers, would materially advance the rebel cause or harm the military prospects of the Union. The fact that such assistance to rebellion came in the form of words did not furnish any constitutional privilege to such action.

---

[274] Letter to Corning (June 12, 1863), VI CWL at 267. (Emetics referred to a medicine or substance used to induce vomiting.)
[275] Letter to Corning, VI CWL at 266.
[276] Id. at 266-67.
[277] Id. at 267.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Where rebellion threatens public safety or public security, the Constitution permits restriction on advocacy furthering, supporting, or assisting such rebellion.

To be sure, one might well conclude that Lincoln went too far in his arguments in the Corning Letter or in some of his actions during the war. That is an interesting and difficult question—and not our point here. Our point is that Lincoln's view was a prominently expressed contemporaneous understanding—and on the issues of insurrection, rebellion, and complicity, it was consistent with his longstanding and oft-repeated views. This does not directly answer the question whether or to what extent such thinking specifically informed general public understanding of Section Three. But Lincoln's thinking, articulated in such a public context, may well have informed the potential reach of the terms "insurrection or rebellion," and what constitutes engaging in or aiding such conduct, as those terms came to be employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

At all events, Lincoln made clear and prominent the position that declaring secession, engaging in forcible opposition to the constitutional authority of the Union, and materially assisting others in such conduct, all constituted forms of support for and participation in "insurrection" or "rebellion." And this stance continued throughout the war, even as the nation began to look to the war's conclusion and to questions of the post-war status of persons who had participated in that rebellion—questions at the core of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[278]

b. Congress

President Lincoln was not the only public figure grappling with concepts of insurrection and rebellion during the Civil War. Similar themes can be found in the statements and actions of Congress and the Supreme Court.

Start with Congress: We think two specific enactments of Congress during the Civil War are especially probative of the understandings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and of what conduct was publicly understood to constitute having "engaged in" or given assistance to rebellion. First, there is the so-called "Ironclad Oath," adopted

[278] Lincoln's characterization of Southern secession as rebellion continued throughout the war. His December 8, 1863 Message to Congress referred to the Confederacy as "the rebellion." Annual Message to Congress (Dec. 8, 1863), VII CWL at 51 In his accompanying offer of amnesty and pardon, in the Amnesty Proclamation of December 8, 1863, Lincoln referred, repeatedly, to the "rebellion" that "now exists whereby the loyal State governments of several States have for a long time been subverted" (id. at 53), to "said rebellion and treason" (id. at 54), to "said rebellion" (id.) and to persons who had provided "aid" to the "rebellion" in various forms. Interestingly, Lincoln excepted from his offer of forgiveness – in language that would seem to presage the similar terms of Section Three – "all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion" and "all who resigned commissions in the army or navy in the United States, and afterwards aided the rebellion." Id. at 55. Lincoln also left to the respective houses of Congress the exclusive judgment "whether members sent to Congress from any State shall be admitted to seats."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on July 2, 1862 as the oath one must be able to swear in order to hold federal office.[279] Second, there is the "Second Confiscation Act," adopted that same month, on July 17, 1862, to authorize legal forfeitures of property and slaves, and also to enforce disqualifications from federal office, by persons who had engaged in specified activities constituting "rebellion" or "insurrection."[280] These two enactments, and their implementation to exclude former insurrectionists and rebels from future office, say much about the terms they employed.

i. The Ironclad Oath

Congress adopted The Ironclad Oath in the thick of the Civil War and it was required of most federal officeholders from 1862 to 1884.[281] The text of the Oath sets forth the types of misconduct regarded as disqualifying an individual from eligibility for federal office because he had been engaged in supporting the rebellion—an inquiry very closely parallel to that contained in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, proposed by Congress just a few years later.

The Ironclad Oath required that prospective officeholders swear or affirm that they had not done any of several things. In that sense it did not function like a traditional oath of office—a promise of future behavior—but much more like a disqualification for past misbehavior.[282] It did indirectly what Section Three was soon to do directly. That makes the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers particularly instructive. Here's the oath, with its most-relevant-to-Section-Three features and phrases italicized (and with bracketed numbers inserted):

> I . . . do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never [1] voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have [2] voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have [3] neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have [4] not yielded a [279] 12 Stat. 502.

[280] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). 12 Stat. 627 (1862).

[281] 23 Stat. 21 (1884). There was an important exception. In 1868, Congress provided that anybody who had received amnesty from two-thirds of each house of Congress under Section Three was exempt from the Ironclad Oath and need only swear future loyalty, 15 Stat. 85 (1868), and in 1871 it added that anybody "who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution" yet would otherwise "not be able on account of his participation in the late rebellion to take" the Ironclad Oath, could take the forward-looking oath instead, 16 Stat. 412 (1871). These two provisions effectively equated the Ironclad Oath to Section Three from 1871 on.

[282] For this reason, Lincoln famously wrote: "On principle I dislike an oath which requires a man to swear he has not done wrong. It rejects the Christian principle of forgiveness on terms of repentance. I think it is enough if the man does no wrong hereafter." Endorsement of Abraham Lincoln in Letter from R.M. Edwards to Edwin Stanton, February 5, 1864, 7 Lincoln Papers 169.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto.

While not using the words insurrection or rebellion, the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers would seem strongly suggestive of how Section Three's triggering language likely would have been understood in public usage at the time. The Ironclad Oath is not a definition of Section Three's constitutional terms, of course. But it would appear an apt descriptive specification of the kinds of misconduct included within those terms. Under the oath, disqualifying behavior included: (1) fighting against the United States; (2) aiding or encouraging such armed hostility; (3) accepting office under a hostile authority (or "pretended authority"); and—a highly evocative phrase—(4) "yield[ing]" one's "voluntary support" to "any pretended government, authority, power or constitution . . . hostile or inimical" to the United States.

The content of this oath's requirement establishes a useful, historically prominent marker for the scope of Section Three: What the Ironclad Oath understood to be disqualifying for federal office, Section Three likely embraced as constitutionally disqualifying conduct for the far broader sweep of offices to which it extended.[283]

ii. The Second Confiscation Act

Barely more than two weeks after adopting the Ironclad Oath, the Civil War Congress enacted what is popularly called the "Second Confiscation Act." Its full title spoke explicitly in terms of insurrection and rebellion: "An Act to suppress Insurrection, to punish Treason and Rebellion, to seize and confiscate the Property of Rebels, and for other Purposes."[284]

This Second Confiscation Act was a very prominent piece of legislation. It imposed sweeping penalties, forfeitures, and disqualifications on anybody who had engaged in or assisted the rebellion.[285] The Second Confiscation Act was long and vigorously debated in Congress, much discussed in the press and in public discourse, objected to by many on constitutional grounds, and nearly vetoed by President Lincoln.[286] Enactment of the Second Confiscation Act gave rise to very public pressure

---

[283] The extensive overlap between the meaning of the Ironclad Oath and the Section Three disqualification is confirmed by Congress's own interpretation and application of the oath to its own members, during and after the enactment of Section Three. These applications are detailed infra Part IV.A.5.b.

[284] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). See also 12 Stat. 627 (1862) ("explanatory" joint resolution).

[285] An earlier act had provided for forfeiture more specifically of property or slaves actually used in service of rebellion. 12 Stat. 319 (Aug. 6, 1861).

[286] See generally David P. Currie, The Civil War Congress, 73 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1131, 1185-1195 (2006). Among many noteworthy twists and turns in the road to enactment, President Lincoln came close to vetoing the bill, preparing a veto message with his objections and signing the bill only after Congress passed an "explanatory" joint resolution (which Lincoln signed together with the bill). Lincoln nonetheless appended his original draft veto message setting forth his objections. For discussion of the constitutional objections of Lincoln and others to various aspects of the bill, and his unusual course of

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on President Lincoln to take aggressive action against slavery in rebel states—pressure that helped spur Lincoln to issue his Emancipation Proclamation as an executive military order. The Second Confiscation Act was a big deal. [287]

The Act itself was a complicated and somewhat confusing hodgepodge of distinct provisions, combining property confiscation, emancipation, a new federal crime, and disqualification from office. But the terms it used are especially evocative, visiting legal consequences on persons who "engaged in," "incite[d]," "set on foot," or "assist[ed]" "rebellion" or "insurrection" or who had "given aid or comfort" to rebellion or done acts "aiding and abetting" rebellion. The Act is practically a glossary of the terms used in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment proposed by Congress just four years later.

Specifically: Section 2 made it a new crime, distinct from treason, to "incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof" or to "give aid or comfort thereto" or to "engage in, or give aid and comfort to," any "existing rebellion or insurrection."[288] It is worth pausing to parse the linguistic resemblances to Section Three, and the ways in which like terms are used and explained. Following Lincoln, secession and civil war are equated with "rebellion or insurrection." Those terms are described as involving acts "against action in signing it but nonetheless appending his objections, see id. at 1193-1194; Burrus M. Carnahan, Act of Justice: Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation and the Law of War 105-106 (2007) (noting Lincoln's initial concern that the act would violate Article III's limitations on the punishment for treason and the objections of others that the act was a bill of attainder); Eric Foner, The Fiery Trial: Abraham Lincoln and American Slavery 215-217 (2010). For Lincoln's July 17, 1862 message to Congress, detailing his objections, see V Complete Works of Lincoln 328-331.

---

[287] A month after the Act had been adopted, Horace Greeley published a scathing editorial titled "The Prayer of Twenty Millions," in which he demanded that Lincoln "EXECUTE THE LAWS" faithfully with specific reference to the Second Confiscation Act. Greeley condemned Lincoln's "mistaken deference to Rebel Slavery" and his failure to rebuke his generals for having "habitually disregarded" the Confiscation Act. Lincoln replied to Greeley, equally prominently, within days, in a famous public letter dated August 22, 1862, published in a rival newspaper and "widely reprinted," defending his course of action. V Complete Works of Lincoln 388-389; see Holzer, supra note 259, at 400-401. One month later, Lincoln issued his Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in which he noted and quoted provisions of the Second Confiscation Act (without invoking the statute as actual authority for his proclamation). V Complete Works of Lincoln at 434-435 (stating that "attention is hereby called to" provisions of the act but relying for authority on his powers as executive and military Commander in Chief). See also Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 (noting that "the Second Confiscation Act embodied a major shift in national policy").

[288] 12 Stat. 589, 590. (emphasis added). Section 2 provided penalties for conviction, which included confiscation of slaves. A modified version of this provision remains a crime today, and continues to incorporate the Confiscation Act's disqualification from federal office, id., as well. 18 U.S.C. §2383 ("Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States."). Needless to say, a prosecution under Section 2383 of Title 18 is neither a prerequisite to nor preclusive of the self-executing application of Section Three of the Constitution.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof" (a formulation closely conforming to our working definitions). Section 2 imposes criminal liability on persons who "incite" such acts; who "set on foot" such acts; who "assist" such acts; who in any other way "engage in" such conduct; or who "give aid and comfort to" such conduct. All of these terms have close parallels in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Section 3 of the Act then imposed a sweeping disqualification from future officeholding—a kind of proto-Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "every person guilty of either of the offences described in this act shall be forever incapable and disqualified to hold any office under the United States."[289] Section 5 directed the President to seize rebel property belonging to a long list of confederate officers plus anyone in a loyal state who "shall hereafter assist and give aid and comfort to such rebellion."[290] Officeholding in a rebel government or military was per se blameworthy participation; but general giving of assistance or aid or comfort also qualified as participation in rebellion. Section 6 provided a further authorization for seizure of the property of any person not already mentioned who, "being engaged in armed rebellion against the government of the United States, or aiding or abetting such rebellion," and, after sixty days' notice issued by the President, did not "cease to aid, countenance, and abet such rebellion, and return to his allegiance to the United States."[291] Section 7 and Section 8 provided for in rem proceedings against property "found to have belonged to a person engaged in rebellion, or who has given aid or comfort thereto," in which case it "shall be condemned as enemies' property."[292] And Section 9 famously emancipated slaves of persons "who shall hereafter be engaged in rebellion" against the Union or who "shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto."[293] Throughout these sections, one can see the recurrent use of terms and concepts, and synonyms for such terms, that would reappear in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "engaged in," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "abet," "countenance," "enemies."

Unlike the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act did not give rise to many opportunities for immediate application and further interpretation. In part, this was simply due to the exigencies and realities of Civil War at the time. For example, the civil forfeiture provisions contemplated in rem judicial proceedings against persons in the district where property was located. At the time, such property was often located in areas of rebel control. Often, the federal courts were not even functioning those areas.[294] Similarly, as a practical matter, criminal prosecutions of rebels for

---

[289] 12 Stat. 589, 590.
[290] Id. (emphasis added.)
[291] Id. at 591.
[292] Id.
[293] Id.
[294] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 500 (noting confusing aspects of the Second Confiscation Act and the requirement of "in rem proceedings by district courts that were of course not functioning in the rebellious states"); Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 ("For most property, [the Act] established a cumbersome judicial process that helps to explain why little land was actually seized and sold

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

treason and insurrection had to await Union military success. (And after success came, President Andrew Johnson ultimately pardoned a great many offenders.)[295] The Lincoln administration, focused on other matters, showed little interest in bringing legal actions to enforce the Act's specific policies. The administration, according to one scholar, "chose not to implement the law vigorously."[296] Attorney General Bates "exerted no more than a minimal effort to make the first and second confiscation acts work."[297] And the Act's section authorizing limited military emancipation section was rapidly overtaken—superseded in practical effect—by President Lincoln's far more comprehensive Emancipation Proclamation, issued pursuant to his constitutional Commander in Chief power.

But in some ways the lack of enforcement cases is beside our point here, which concerns the Act's prominence in national discussions and its pervasive use of terms, phrases, and concepts—rebellion, insurrection, engage in, aid or comfort—that would reappear in only slightly different form in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act employed terminology nearly identical to that employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. The usage of the terms in this landmark legislation we think helps explicate the meaning, in public legal context, of the language in the amendment. In the context of 1860s public legal usage, engaging in or giving aid or comfort to rebellion and insurrection extended to a broad range of activity advancing or furthering efforts to unlawfully upend the lawful operation of the U.S. constitutional regime. This strongly supports the conclusion that Section Three's terms can fairly be read quite expansively, as embracing a broad range of conduct directed against the authority of government under the Constitution.

c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases

The most important constitutional decision of the U.S. Supreme Court during the Civil War was The Prize Cases.[298] There, the majority upheld the constitutionality of Lincoln's unilateral military order, made very early in the Civil War, imposing a blockade on Southern ports. In a truly landmark decision, the Supreme Court held that the President's war powers (including the power to impose a blockade) were triggered immediately, as soon as the South's rebellion took the form of organized military resistance to the authority of the U.S. government. The President's power to under its provisions."). See also Silvana R. Siddali, From Property to Person: Slavery and the Confiscation Acts, 1861-1862, at 238 (2005) (remarking that "[t]he confiscation bill that finally emerged was neither sweeping nor enforceable" though opining that "if the law had not been hobbled by its own internal inconsistencies, it might have affected the lives and property of a large majority of southerners.").

---

[295] See Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 141-152 (1960).

[296] John Syrett, The Civil War Confiscation Acts: Failing to Reconstruct the South 55 (2005).

[297] Id. at 72; see also James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems Under Lincoln 288-292 (1926) (describing minimal enforcement of the Second Confiscation Act).

[298] 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635 (1863).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wage civil war against rebel forces derived from his delegated statutory power to employ force to suppress rebellion, the Court held. A congressional declaration of war was neither a prerequisite nor legally appropriate for this type of use of force: "This greatest of civil wars was not gradually developed by popular commotion, tumultuous assemblies, or local unorganized insurrections" but "sprung forth suddenly … in the full panoply of war. The President was bound to meet it in the shape it presented itself, without waiting for Congress to baptize it with a name."[299]

The Court's decision in The Prize Cases is today regarded as the leading judicial exposition of the Constitution's allocation of war powers. At the time, the case had other hugely consequential implications: the principles set forth in the decision essentially endorsed in advance (but of course without addressing the question directly) Lincoln's constitutional justification for the Emancipation Proclamation, which he had issued earlier that year.[300] The decision of The Prize Cases was a very big deal indeed.

Of special interest for our purposes is the Court's usage and explanation—in a highly prominent legal context—of the terms insurrection and rebellion, and their relationship to war and the war powers of the national government: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government," the majority said.[301] A civil war "becomes such by its accidents—the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on."[302] Where a rebellion has come to possess certain military characteristics, the "party in rebellion" might come to be treated as a belligerent for law-of-war purposes, even though a domestic rebellion stands on different constitutional legal ground than war with a foreign nation. "It is not the less a civil war, with belligerent parties in hostile array, because it may be called an 'insurrection' by one side, and the insurgents be considered as rebels or traitors."[303]

In a nutshell: insurrection or rebellion were forms of active resistance to the lawful authority of the government. An insurrection might be something short of outright rebellion. But an insurrection against government authority sometimes grows into full-on "rebellion." A rebellion, in turn, need not take the form of civil war in order to be a rebellion. But sometimes it does. At all events, rebellion seems its own distinct, more general legal concept of repudiation or attempted overthrow of the lawful constitutional regime by unlawful means.

---

[299] Id. at 668-669; see also Stephen I. Vladeck, Emergency Power and the Militia Acts, 114 Yale L. J. 149, 177-180 (2004).
[300] Paulsen, Emancipation, supra 263, at, 814-823.
[301] 67 U.S. at 666 (emphasis added).
[302] Id. at 666
[303] Id. at 668.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Prize Cases also held that persons engaged in insurrection or rebellion could be treated as "enemies" (as well as traitors) for legal purposes. Further, the war power, such as imposition of a blockade, could lawfully affect the legal property rights of persons engaged in "commerce" that "supplies" rebels or insurrectionists—and could do so irrespective of the supposed loyalties of the property owner. Even "neutral" powers' shipping could be seized when it violated a blockade: "Whether property be liable to capture as 'enemies' property' does not in any manner depend on the personal allegiance of the owner. 'It is the illegal traffic that stamps it as "enemies' property."'"[304]

The Prize Cases' treatment of the concepts of insurrection and rebellion, of who constituted "enemies," and of what actions constituted support for rebellion, would have been very much part of the legal culture of the day and provides important legal background as to how these terms would have been understood at the time of the drafting of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, just a few years later. Insurrection and rebellion involve varying degrees of concerted resistance to "the lawful authority of the Government," with insurrection being the arguably somewhat lesser form and rebellion the somewhat greater. A rebellion or insurrection need not involve acts tantamount to levying war. (War is sometimes a feature of rebellion but does not define it.) The Civil War was an outgrowth of insurrection or rebellion. But the fundamental act of rebellion remains the attempt to displace the lawful authority of government by unlawful means. And those who give material assistance to the enemy may also suffer legal consequences.

We find the overall evidence of prominent 1860s political and legal usage of the same concepts and language as would soon be employed by Section Three—"insurrection," "rebellion," and what it meant to "engage in" or provide "aid or comfort" to enemies—highly probative of Section Three's original public meaning. President Lincoln, repeatedly and insistently; Congress, pointedly and consistently; and the Supreme Court, decisively, used these terms in connection with secession, forcible resistance to the legal authority of the Constitution, and participation to varying degrees in efforts to overthrow, subvert, or undermine the authority of lawful government. These usages were public, prominent, legal, and essentially undisputed within the Union. While the specific circumstances of secession and civil war gave rise to these formulations, they did not define or limit the terms' meanings, which were more [304] Id. at 674 (quoting 3 Wash. C.C.R. 183). That said, the Court also cautioned that " 'enemies' property" was "a technical phrase peculiar to prize courts, and depends upon principles of public policy, as distinguished from the common law." Id. at 674. The point that, in a military context, property could be treated as "enemies' property" irrespective of the allegiance of the owner was important to the lawfulness of the Emancipation Proclamation: even though Lincoln's proclamation purported to free the slaves of all persons in rebel-controlled territory – including slaves held by persons claiming to be loyal to the Union – such "property" constituted a resource assisting or supplying the rebellion and thus could be declared seized, confiscated, and liberated as a matter of the military law of war. See Paulsen, Emancipation, supra note 263. See generally John Fabian Witt, Lincoln's Code (2012).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

general. Secession, and civil war, were species of insurrection and rebellion—organized, group resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws and attempts to substitute an unlawful legal regime for the lawful, constitutional one. But insurrection and rebellion were the broader categories. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that these 1860s Civil War usages of terms carried over into the meaning of Section Three.

5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples

a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally)

What about the Insurrection Acts themselves—the statutes that comprised the statutory authority supporting Lincoln's use of military force to suppress secession? These statutes implemented Congress's power "To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" as well as its other war powers over the army and navy. The central statute was enacted in 1795 (superseding a similar enactment in 1792) and was amended in 1807 and 1861. These statutes—the conduct they were understood to reach; the forms and degree of opposition to government authority that were believed to trigger the statutes' application; and the circumstances in which they had been invoked and applied in the past—also would have been part of the background understanding of the term "insurrection" as it came to be incorporated into Section Three.

The 1795 act explicitly recited that it was enacted in part to carry into execution the power to "suppress insurrections." But it also applied to repel invasions and to enforce federal law. Together, these were the three circumstances where Congress had the power to provide for calling out the militia.[305] Section One of the Act allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe," as well as, upon request of state authorities, "in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof."[306] Section Two allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act."[307] Section Two encompasses insurrections against the United States.[308] (Section One specifically deals only with insurrections against a state government.)

In 1807, Congress supplemented this power with the power to call out the army and navy in similar circumstances: "in all cases of insurrection, or obstruction to the

[305] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15.
[306] 2 Stat. 424 (1795), sec. 1.
[307] Id. sec. 2. (emphasis added).
[308] That said, because Section Two is supported by both Congress's power to "suppress Insurrections" and its power "to execute the Laws of the Union," U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15. it could encompass instances of law enforcement that do not rise to the level of a constitutional "insurrection."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

laws, either of the United States, or of any individual state or territory, where it is lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ, for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval force of the United States as shall be judged necessary …" The 1807 act thus carried forward and repeated the 1795 act's understanding of insurrection.[309]

Finally, on July 29, 1861, Congress amended the trigger again to specifically describe "rebellion." It allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President of the United States, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States . . ."[310]

The various versions of the Insurrection Act illustrate a common theme: insurrection is more than ordinary law violation; it entails "combinations" or "assemblages," acting together, to "oppose[s]" or "obstruct" the ability of government to "execute" the law, in numbers "too powerful" to be suppressed by the usual means of law enforcement.[311]

Moreover, several famous instances in which this statutory authority had been (or might have been) invoked provide additional informative context for understanding "insurrection" or "rebellion." Consider just a few.

The "Whiskey Rebellion" was one famous such instance. In 1794, acting under the 1792 predecessor statute, President George Washington personally led militia forces into western Pennsylvania to suppress a large uprising against the government spurred by resistance to the enactment of a federal tax on distilleries. Notably, the Whiskey Rebellion involved armed mobs, organized and employed for the purposes of intimidating and threatening federal officers, keeping them from performing their [309] 2 Stat. 443 (1807).

[310] 12 Stat. 281 (1861).

[311] Myles Lynch has written that there can exist no insurrection within the meaning of the Insurrection Acts unless the President proclaims that an insurrection exists and, further, that as a consequence, there can exist no insurrection or rebellion within the meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment unless the President proclaims that such an insurrection exists. Lynch, supra note 5, at 168, 214-215. This seems plainly wrong. If the Insurrection Act defines insurrection, it is defined as concerted and powerful obstruction of the execution of the laws by government. It is no part of this definition that an insurrection exists only if the President declares it to exist. The President's proclamation is a statutory prerequisite to the use of military force, not part of the definition of insurrection. The President can use force if he proclaims that there is an insurrection; but it is not an insurrection only because he proclaims it one.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

duties under the law, and preventing others from assuming federal office (or inducing them to renounce their authority).[312]

We believe the "Whiskey Rebellion" would have been regarded in the nineteenth century as a classic illustration of what was meant by the terms insurrection and rebellion.[313] Indeed, by the time of the drafting of Section Three, it seems to have been regularly referred to in precisely those terms.[314] In commonplace usage, as well as in political, and legal discourse, the Whiskey Rebellion was a familiar illustration of an "insurrection" or "rebellion."

"Fries Rebellion," in 1799, was another well-known anti-tax revolt, this time in eastern Pennsylvania.[315] President John Adams invoked the 1795 Act to suppress the "insurrection," as he called it,[316] which had involved threats, intimidation, and violence directed at federal tax assessors by organized bands of persons designed to prevent the assessors from performing their duties, and further such acts directed against the ability of the government to arrest tax resisters. In at least one instance, armed opponents of the government successfully freed prisoners from federal custody. The Adams administration's suppression of the insurrection led to widely publicized treason prosecutions[317] of leaders and instigators of the unlawful resistance, including John Fries. As with the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries Rebellion was characterized by

---

[312] See generally Elkins & McKitrick, The Age of Federalism 461-474 (1993) (detailing actions of organized resistance, intimidation, and threats preventing federal officials from performing their duties – including tarring and feathering, whipping, surrounding of officials' homes by armed mobs, and kidnapping and coerced repudiation of federal authority); see also Ron Chernow, Alexander Hamilton 468-478 (2004) (similar); Robert W. Coakley, The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1789-1878, at 43-68 (1988) (documenting the resistance and military response).

[313] To be sure, one scholar of the Acts suggests that "[i]t may have been dubious whether actions of the Whiskey Rebellion farmers truly rose to the level of insurrection," and that Washington may have treated it as law-obstruction rather than insurrection. Vladeck, at 161 n. 46; see also Coakley, supra note 312, at 67 (suggesting that to "characterize the . . . affair as a 'riot' and the participants as 'rioters'" is "far closer to the truth"). But later sources called it at least an insurrection, see infra note 314, and this goes to show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government.

[314] See 1 Francis Wharton. State Trials of the United States during the Administrations of Washington and Adams 102-184 (1849) (describing "The Trials of the Western Insurgents"); Townsend Ward, The Insurrection of the Year 1794, in the western counties of Pennsylvania (J.B. Lippincott 1858); H.M. Brackenridge, History of the western insurrection in western Pennsylvania: commonly called the whiskey insurrection (W.S. Haven, 1859).

[315] Coakley, supra note 312, 69-77.

[316] John Adams, Proclamation on Insurrection in Pennsylvania, 12 March 1799, https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Adams/99-02-02-3377.

[317] These prosecutions also occasioned a widely-cited jury charge from Circuit Justice Chase, in which he repeatedly discussed "insurrection," describing it as a "rising of any body of the people" and arguing that it qualified as treason because "an insurrection to resist or prevent, by force, the execution of any statute of the United States, has a direct tendency to dissolve all the bands of society, to destroy all order and all laws, and also all security for the lives, liberties and property of the citizens of the United States." Case of Fries, 9 F. Cas. 924, 930 (C.C.D. Pa. 1800). See also 1 Wharton, supra note 314, at 458-609 (describing these proceedings as "The Trial of the Northampton Insurgents").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

concerted acts of forcible interference with federal officials' ability to perform their duties under law.[318]

Nat Turner's Rebellion, a violent slave revolt in 1831, did not lead to a presidential invocation of the Insurrection Act.[319] But it surely would have been a classic illustration of at least an "insurrection" and perhaps even a "rebellion"—a concerted uprising seeking forcibly to overturn the legal order and thwart government's ability to execute the law. A published report of Turner's own account called it both an insurrection[320] and in one instance an "open rebellion."[321] This example, too, likely would have formed part of the background understanding of the terms insurrection or rebellion at the time they were employed in Section Three.

More broadly, slavery and anti-slavery produced other prominent incidents that would have been classed as small or large insurrections against government—instances that went beyond individual instances of legal disobedience, or of resistance to the laws themselves, and rose to the level of active, concerted, unlawful resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws. Specifically, revolt against the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 sometimes took the form of slave liberation in open defiance of government authority. For example, in Boston in 1850 and 1851, a local vigilance committee invoked "the 'higher law' doctrine" to openly harbor freed slaves to the point that President Millard Fillmore "threatened to send in federal troops."[322] In Christiana, Pennsylvania in 1851, a Quaker community took up arms (!) to defend fugitive slaves, shooting several slaveowners who had arrived from nearby Maryland. This was denounced as an "act of insurrection," and this time President Fillmore did call out federal troops.[323] In Wisconsin in 1859, resistance to federal authority became so widespread as to prefigure the coming of the Civil War.[324] And of course John

---

[318] As with the Whiskey Rebellion, these events show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government. See also Elkins & McKitrick at 696-700 (questioning "whether the circumstances really called for military force of any kind").

[319] Federal troops were used to suppress this and other slave rebellions, but "without following the legal procedures laid down in the statutes of 1795 and 1807." Coakley, supra note 312, at 92-94. Coakley suggests that this the failure to go through the Insurrection Acts reflected "the universal dread of slave revolts" at the time and the fact that "t]he slaves had no political constituency." Id. at 94.

[320] See The Confessions of Nat Turner, The Leader of the Late Insurrection in Southampton, VA, as fully and voluntarily made to Thomas R. Gray, at 3, 5, 7, 20, 22 (1831) (calling it "insurrection"); see also Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Nat Turner's Insurrection, 8 Atlantic Monthly 173 (1861)

[321] See Turner, supra note 320, at 3 ("The late insurrection . . . is the first instance in our history of an open rebellion of the slaves") (emphases added).

[322] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 81-84; Cf. Coakley, supra note 312, at 130-131 (noting debate about whether this disturbance in Boston was sufficiently great to trigger the insurrection acts).

[323] McPherson, supra note 231, at 84-85. See also Thomas Slaughter, Bloody Dawn: The Christian Riot and Racial Violence in the Antebellum North (1991); and cf. id. at ix ("The line between riot and rebellion was shifting during the antebellum period.").

[324] See generally H. Robert Baker, The Rescue of Joshua Glover: A Fugitive Slave, the Constitution, and the Coming of the Civil War (2006) (describing resistance, in the mid-to-late1850s, in Wisconsin to federal legal authority to execute the Fugitive Slave Act).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Brown's fateful raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859 was an explicit act of insurrection and rebellion: a quixotic and ill-prepared attempt to foment a massive slave insurrection and to overthrow the power of proslavery governments in the South.[325] These rebels and insurrectionists were fighting deeply unjust laws, but there is no question that they committed many acts of insurrection nonetheless. Rebellion for a good cause is still rebellion.

Another prominently identified insurrection or rebellion would have been Dorr's Rebellion, in Rhode Island, in 1841-1842 which led to the Supreme Court's 1849 decision in Luther v. Borden.[326] There, a cabal claiming to constitute the new, lawful government of Rhode Island engaged in forcible resistance to and sought to overturn the authority of the prior, lawful state government (the "charter" government that traced its authority to Rhode Island's original colonial charter). The federal government did not invoke the Insurrection Act to intervene, but it well might have. When the Supreme Court ultimately adjudicated the case—through the vehicle of a trespass suit by a member of one faction, against members of the other—the Court held that the question of which government constituted the lawful government of the state was a political question committed to the judgment of Congress and the President and that the judiciary lacked authority to interfere with the political branches' actions (and inactions), which had tacitly supported the charter government. The practical result of the decision—relevant to our inquiry– was that the losing side in the struggle (the faction headed by Mr. Dorr) legally could be treated by the prevailing side (the charter government) as having engaged in "insurrection" against the rightful state government. The Court noted, and seemingly accepted, the charter government's characterization of plaintiff and others having "assembled in arms . . . for the purpose of overthrowing the government by military force"[327] and as having attempted "to assert the authority of [the Dorr government] by force,"[328] as amounting to having "engaged in the insurrection."[329] The Court also referred to the government's actions as having been designed to suppress that "insurrection."[330] The Court appeared to equate with "insurrection" the Dorr group's attempts to displace or supersede the existing government and forcibly assert its own claimed authority as a replacement.

Finally, several notable invocations of the Insurrection Act occurred during the period of Reconstruction during the presidency of Ulysses S. Grant.[331] While these

---

[325] McPherson, supra note 231, 202-208. Federal troops helped suppress this insurrection and rebellion too. See Coakley, supra note 312, at 193 ("This intervention was, as in the case of Nat Turner's Rebellion, an emergency measure undertaken without the usual formalities.").
[326] Luther v. Borden, 58 U.S. (7 How.) 1 (1849). On Dorr's Rebellion generally and the federal response, see Coakley, supra note 312, at 119-127.
[327] Luther, 58 U.S. (7 How.) at 8.
[328] Id. at 37
[329] Id. at 46
[330] Id. at 45.
[331] By this time, the Act had been amended yet again. See 17 Stat. 13, 14-15 (1871), §§ 3-4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

events occurred after ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment (and thus could not have formed any part of the subjective understanding of the drafters and ratifiers of the meaning of Section Three), they nonetheless deserve mention as roughly contemporaneous evidence of the objective meaning of "insurrection" as displayed by important usage within a few years of adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. Briefly summarized: In South Carolina in 1871, Grant twice invoked the Insurrection Act (as well as suspending habeas corpus, among other actions) to secure order in dealing with the Ku Klux Klan.[332] In Louisiana, in 1872, a contested gubernatorial election spawned efforts by white supremacists to overthrow the elected pro-Reconstruction Republican government, culminating in the infamous "Colfax Massacre" of April 13, 1873, in which a white mob attacked and massacred perhaps 150 black citizens who had been defending a courthouse in Colfax, Louisiana and, more broadly, the Reconstruction Republican government. President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act as authority to suppress the insurrection that sought to overturn the election result.[333] Later, in 1874, Grant again invoked the Insurrection Act in Louisiana, this time to suppress a white supremacist coup d'etat that had overthrown the Republican governor by force.[334] Federal troops reinstated the lawful government, but the insurrectionists established a rival state government that effectively controlled much of Louisiana outside of the capital—New Orleans at the time. (The conflict lasted until 1877, when Reconstruction was abandoned by the national government and white supremacists took full control of the state.) In Mississippi, in 1874, white supremacists fabricated criminal charges against the newly elected black sheriff, Peter Crosby, and deposed him by mob action.[335] Black citizens organizing an effort to reinstate Crosby were attacked by white mobs, resulting in the massacre of as many as 300 black citizens. Again, President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act and sent federal troops to reinstate Crosby and prevent further violence. Also in 1874, in Arkansas, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to quell violence in an ongoing dispute over the 1872 gubernatorial election results.[336] And in 1876, in South Carolina, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to protect the gubernatorial election process from white supremacist groups.[337] Common to each of these instances during the Grant administration was

---

[332] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 197, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Mar. 24, 1871); http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70253; Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 200, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 12, 1871); for background see Michael Bahar, The Presidential Intervention Principle: The Domestic Use of the Military and the Power of the Several States, 5 Harv. Nat'l Sec. J. 537, 613-14 (2014); Lou Falkner Williams, The Great South Carolina Ku Klux Klan Trials, 1871-1872, at 39-49 (1996).

[333] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 213, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (May 22, 1873) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70364

[334] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 220, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (Sept. 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70422

[335]Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 223, Law and Order in the State of Mississippi (Dec. 21, 1874), http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70459.

[336] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 218, Law and Order in the State of Arkansas (May 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70420.

[337] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 232, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 17, 1876) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70542.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the idea that concerted efforts to overturn lawful popular election results by mob action, force, violence, and intimidation constituted "insurrection" against government.

It is difficult to evaluate precisely the probative force of all of these incidents, and application of federal authority to suppress "insurrections," for understanding Section Three. But they were unquestionably part of the picture, contributing to the background for understanding Section Three's terms. They were very much part of a common historical vocabulary of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and culpable participation in the same, familiar to those who drafted and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment: The Whiskey Rebellion, Shays' Rebellion, Nat Turner's Rebellion, Dorr's Rebellion, the insurrections against the Fugitive Slave Act in the 1850s, John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859—all of these incidents would have informed the general understanding of what constitutes "insurrection or rebellion" and what actions amount to having "engaged in" or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to such uprisings. They all tend to support our working definitions of Section Three's terms. Even President Grant's post-1868 invocations of the Insurrection Act, to combat attempts to overthrow election results or displace lawful state authority, may shine some interpretive light backward on Section Three's meaning. If an uprising of similar nature to these events were to occur, it seems to us that it likely would have been understood as an insurrection or rebellion within the coverage of Section Three.

b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates

As noted above, the federal Ironclad Oath adopted during the Civil War closely paralleled the requirements and consequences of Section Three. These parallels are drawn more sharply by a series of cases where both houses of Congress enforced the oath to exclude their own prospective members from being seated. As one scholar has put it, these debates "were littered with relevant concepts, and we can judge the Fortieth Congress's reception to those similar arguments as indicative of their expectations as to Section 3's application."[338] Moreover, several of these proceedings occurred right around the time of the proposal and ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In some cases after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, Congress applied Section Three itself, further demonstrating continuity and overlap with the Ironclad Oath.

The familiar source compiling the houses' debates on such matters of internal administration is Hinds' Precedents, which we rely on here.[339]

[338] Lynch, supra note 5, at 196. Lynch ably and accurately describes the most important such cases. See id. at 196-201, 207-210. We find little or nothing to disagree with in his account and analysis of these disputes and are indebted to Lynch's research and analysis.

[339] See generally 1 Asher C. Hinds, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, ch. 14, pp. 431-486 (1907).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, Kentucky: In 1867, Kentucky submitted eight members-elect to the House, seven of whom were challenged as ineligible on the ground that they had given aid or comfort to the Confederacy, during the Civil War. The Committee on Elections concluded that "no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion," ought to be sworn or seated.[340] A subsequent report determined that such charges needed to be "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony" and establish more than mere lack of active support for the Union or passive sympathy for the rebellion but that "the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion."[341] Such acts or speech need not rise to the level of constitutional treason, but they "must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion."[342]

On this standard, the committee found that four of the challenged members-elect were not proved to have either "engaged in armed hostility" to the Government or provided "aid or comfort" to its adversaries. These four were admitted to their seats. Three others—John Y. Brown, John D. Young, and Lawrence Trimble—posed more serious difficulty, however. The House ultimately refused to seat either Brown or Young but admitted Trimble. The facts of these cases are instructive explorations of the boundaries between free speech and "aid or comfort."

The House addressed the John Y. Brown case first. "This election case," Hinds' reports, was "the first of its kind since the formation of the Constitution, and recognized by the House as of the highest importance."[343] It also involved an incident of pure speech as disqualifying a member-elect from office: John Y. Brown had explicitly embraced and advocated violent resistance to the Union in Kentucky. Indeed, he had gone so far as to urge the shooting of any man who volunteered for service in Union forces. Brown's disqualifying conduct consisted solely of such acts of speech. The committee relied on a letter Brown had written to the Louisville Courier in 1861 in which Brown had gone to great lengths to affirm his support for the rebellion in unequivocal terms:

> Editors Louisville Courier:
>
> My attention has been called to the following paragraph, which appeared in your paper of this date:
>
> "JOHN YOUNG BROWN'S POSITION.– This gentleman, in reply to some searching interrogatories put to him by Governor Helm,

[340] Id. §448 at 442.
[341] Id. at 443 (emphasis added).
[342] Id.
[343] Id. at 445.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

said, in reference to the call of the President for four regiments of volunteers to march against the South—

'I would not send one solitary man to aid that Government, and those who volunteer should be shot down in their tracks.'"

This ambiguous report of my remarks has, I find, been misunderstood by some who have read it, who construe my language to apply to the government of the Confederate States! What I did say was this:

"Not one man or one dollar will Kentucky furnish Lincoln to aid him in his unholy war against the South. If this northern army shall attempt to cross our borders, we will resist it unto the death; and if one man shall be found in our Commonwealth to volunteer to join them he ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."

This was not said in reply to any question propounded by ex-Governor Helm, as you have stated, and is no more than I frequently uttered public and privately prior to my debate with him.

Respectfully,

JOHN YOUNG BROWN.[344]

The House concluded, on the strength of this letter alone, that Brown had supported the rebellion and therefore voted to exclude him. This became a precedent for the House's subsequent actions in other cases. The standard applied—whether the facts, "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony," showed that an individual had, by an "act or speech … overt and public … done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion"—had been satisfied by Brown's letter.[345]

Similarly, in March 1868, the House excluded John D. Young under this standard. Young's case also involved speech. The Young case involved numerous expressions of support and sympathy for the South and against the Union, and the committee explicitly took the position "that 'aid and comfort' may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion" by a person (like Young, a county judge) in an "influential position."[346] But Young's case was overdetermined, because there was also testimony that Young had provided material assistance to Confederate troops, by giving them food and provisions and assisting in the capture by Confederate troops of a Union soldier. According to the committee, Young's "expressions and admissions" of sympathy for the enemy, "taken in connection with the open acts of 'aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States,'" established that he could not "'honestly and truly take the oath,'"[347] and the full House agreed.

[344] Quoted in id. at §449, p. 445.
[345] Id. at §449, pp. 443, 448.
[346] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).
[347] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The contrasting case of Lawrence Trimble, however, showed that mere political opposition did not establish disloyalty. Aside from some overly vague allegations that he had traded with the enemy, the core of the case against Trimble were his political speeches. Trimble had been the Union candidate for Congress in 1861 and "made Union speeches in that canvass throughout the district." Trimble opposed Lincoln's war policies after the Emancipation Proclamation, asserting that the North was waging "an abolition war" and reportedly was opposed to "voting any more men or money to aid in carrying it on." These views and statements, however, were not materially different from other members' statements in Congress opposing the administration's policy. The committee (and House) considered Trimble's "loyalty unquestioned" and found no case for disqualifying him.[348]

Next consider Tennessee: Tennessee supplied two interesting membership cases, one in the House and one in the Senate. Both involved undoubtedly pro-Union men who nonetheless had held state office under Tennessee's secessionist regime and sworn oaths under it, while seemingly using their positions to support Union interests and resist the secession government. This presented a distinct problem under the Ironclad Oath, which required its swearer to disaffirm that he had ever accepted or exercised office under a pretended government hostile to the United States. What to do? In each case—Senator-elect David Patterson, who had served as a state court judge in the eastern region of Tennessee during the Confederate regime; and Representative-elect R.R. Butler, who had retained his seat in the state legislature during secession, while opposing it—the respective house ultimately admitted the applicant to his seat and permitted him to take a modified oath omitting the never-held-office-under-a-hostile-regime sentence.[349]

A potentially broad understanding of "aid or comfort" also surfaced in the exclusion of Maryland Senator-elect Philip Thomas in 1867.[350] What had Thomas done to support the South in its rebellion? Apparently, he had permitted his minor son, a member of his household, to join the Confederate army, and given his son $100 on the way out the door. The Senate debated whether Thomas had done anything more by way of counsel or encouragement of his son's taking up arms against the United States and it is not clear how the senators evaluated such evidence. Some seemed to have thought Thomas's treatment of his son disqualifying. Others focused instead on allegations that Thomas had resigned as President Buchanan's Treasury Secretary because he disagreed with the President's decision to send federal reinforcements to

---

[348] Id. at §453, p. 459.

[349] Id. at §453, 455, pp. 459-461, 462-465. In Butler's case, two-thirds of both houses voted him amnesty. Id. at 464-465. In Patterson's case, the Senate tried to pass a bill altering the oath for Patterson, but the House tabled it, id. at 46, but perhaps that is okay, if application of the Ironclad Oath, to members of Congress, is a function of each house's separate power to make rules governing its proceedings. U.S. Const. art. I §5.

[350] Hinds' at §§457, 458 at pp. 465-470.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Charleston Harbor.[351] Either theory of Thomas's exclusion suggests that "aid or comfort" to rebellion was understood to sweep broadly and possibly include conduct of a somewhat more passive or quiescent nature—allowing one's son to become a rebel soldier, under circumstances where such permission (and financial assistance) might have been withheld; opposing, or resisting, measures to suppress insurrection and defend national institutions and personnel, and resigning office in protest against such measures.

Cases like these continued in the House and Senate after Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment had taken effect. By this point, the basic principles were more established, and the cases were sometimes more factbound or less illuminating, but they further confirm the continuity between Section Three and the Ironclad Oath, and illustrate the understanding of Section Three very shortly after its adoption.

To recount them very briefly: In 1868, John Christy had received the most votes for Congress in Georgia's sixth district, but the House committee found that Christy, by his own admission, had given "aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement" to persons in armed hostility against the Union and therefore, "in accordance with the precedent in the case of John Y. Brown," was disqualified by the Ironclad Oath, and he was not seated.[352] In 1869, the House sat John Rice from Kentucky despite a divided House committee's conclusion that he was disqualified by Section Three.[353] The pages of the Congressional Globe reveal a debate about whether Rice had in fact joined the Confederate Army, which turned on the dubious credibility of two witnesses.[354] In 1870, the House allowed Representative George Booker of Virginia to keep his seat, despite subsequent charges that he had directly supported the militia of the rebel government in his role as justice of the peace. But Booker made an apparently persuasive case that he had been loyal all along, even as he worked within the Confederacy, and as a practical matter he had already been seated. For one reason or the other, the House ultimately voted to table the issue, leaving Booker in office.[355] Also in 1870, the House allowed Representative Lewis McKenzie of Virginia to sit, despite various votes he had taken as a member of the Virginia house of [351] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470 (reporting that Senator Sumner withdrew a resolution focused on Thomas's son "it being urged that Mr. Thomas's conduct as a Cabinet officer in 1860 afforded more certain grounds for action."). See also Cong. Globe 40th Cong. 2nd Sess. at 1260-1262 (Feb. 19, 1868).

---

[352] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470-472. Interestingly, the Governor of Georgia had concluded that Christy was disqualified under Section Three while the House committee relied on the Ironclad Oath "independently of any question as to ineligibility under the fourteenth amendment," id.

[353] Hinds' at §460, pp. 472-473.

[354] Congressional Globe, 41st Cong, 2nd Sess. pp. 5442-5447 (July 11, 1870). Rice had also been in the Kentucky legislature and voted for a resolution against the coercion of the southern states; but everybody agreed this was not enough to count as aid or comfort, because it was only in January 1861: "No war exist[ed] at the time" and it was before "the policy of the Government had been announced." Id. at 5443 (Butler); see also id. at 5445 (Garfield). Nor could Rice be excluded solely because of his politics. See id. at 5445 ("[T]his man was a Democrat. That is a political sin, but it is not a crime under the law. He is a Democrat yet. I think he is very wrong in being that, but yet it is not a crime.") (Logan).

[355] Hinds' at §461, pp. 474-475.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

delegates in 1861—votes pledging Virginia's commitment to "unite her destiny with the slaveholding States of the South" should attempts to reconcile differences between North and South fail, supporting Virginia's willingness to fight, and to provision Virginia fighters. Because all of these votes occurred before voter ratification of Virginia's secession ordinance on May 23, 1861, and because McKenzie remained "an outspoken Union man" after secession and throughout the war, the House concluded he had neither engaged in rebellion nor given it aid or comfort.

Finally, in 1871, the Senate declined to seat Senator-elect Zebulon Vance from North Carolina.[356] The exclusion of Vance was a particularly easy case. After serving in Congress, he had led Confederate troops in battle against the Union and then became the wartime governor of Confederate-regime North Carolina.[357] If anyone had engaged in rebellion and given aid or comfort to the Union's enemies, it was Vance. He was clearly barred by both Section Three and by the Ironclad Oath. He could be seated only if Congress chose to exercise amnesty, which it did not do until later.[358]

These congressional seating challenges suggest some rough lines as to what Congress thought was "aid or comfort" to the Confederacy. On one hand, direct material support for the rebel cause—providing supplies or working with enemy forces—was clearly aid or comfort. On the other hand, disfavored political beliefs and pre-war political stances were clearly not. In between lay contested territory. But there was no bright line, for instance, protecting all speech or political activity. In some situations, speech alone could be disqualifying. A sufficiently clear and unequivocal statement of disloyalty in the form of proposed active resistance to Union authority or encouragement to violence against Union forces appears generally to have been thought disqualifying. Voluntarily holding confederate office or advocating resistance to the Union also could be enough to disqualify. We do not suggest these individual applications—many of which were contested and complicated—are strictly binding. But they provide useful concrete evidence for how parts of Section Three may well have been understood and thought to work.[359]

---

[356] See generally Hinds' at §463, pp. 478-486.

[357] See generally Richard E. Yates, Zebulon B. Vance: as War Governor of North Carolina, 1862-1865, 3 J. Southern Hist. 43 (1937).

[358] Vance ultimately had the last laugh. Vance was excluded from the 1872 amnesty statute because he had served in the thirty-sixth Congress, Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142; https://bioguide.congress.gov/search/bio/V000021. Cf. Franklin Ray Shirley, Zebulon Vance, Tarheel Spokesman 71 & 152 n. 36 (1962) (claiming that Vance had been waiting for the 1872 amnesty until his opponent Abbott had somehow engineered the amendment to the 1872 act that excluded Vance), but Congress then passed a private bill granting him individual amnesty. 17 Stat. 691 (June 10, 1872). Thanks to Gerard Magliocca for this source. Vance subsequently returned to the North Carolina governorship, and then to the Senate until his death in 1884. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 111 n. 126.

[359] Finally, though it occurred long after this period, there has been one additional congressional exclusion under Section Three: the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. See supra notes 222-224 and accompanying text. The Berger episode of course has no probative value about the original meaning of Section Three, since it occurred more than 50 years after Section

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6. Legislative History

There is only a little fruit to be gleaned from the legislative history of the Fourteenth Amendment—the records of the proposing Congress's debates over its various provisions and of state ratification debates. The Fourteenth Amendment's legislative history is famously voluminous, and Section Three—like the other "forgotten" sections of the Amendment (Section Two and Section Four)—was much more salient to the debates then than it is to today.[360] As briefly noted above, the legislative history supports the key propositions we have advanced earlier in this article—that Section Three was designed to be general and prospective, and not limited to the situation of the Civil War and Reconstruction; that Section Three's disqualification was seen by proponents and opponents alike to be self-executing and automatic; and that Section Three was understood to supersede (or satisfy) prior constitutional limitations.[361]

Perhaps somewhat surprisingly, however, we have found relatively few interpretive insights about the scope of conduct triggering disqualification under Section Three. What evidence there is generally confirms the understanding that the provision would have sweeping consequences: there appears to have been substantial agreement—by both opponents and proponents—that the provision would cover a broad range of activity supporting or assisting the South's efforts to throw off the authority of the Union and the Constitution. The original proposal would have excluded all such persons from voting, not just officeholding and, further, would not have been limited in its coverage to former oath-swearing federal and state officeholders. However, the language concerning what conduct triggered disfranchisement (and, as later revised, disqualification from officeholding) was carried forward throughout the discussion. Opponents of what eventually became Section Three thought the range of what was included in disability-triggering conduct (that is, when one might be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion or given "aid or comfort" to it) was hugely broad in its reach, sweeping in nearly everybody in the rebel South—and viewed the proposal as regrettable on account of such breadth. Significantly, proponents of the amendment did not disagree with its opponents concerning the breadth of the description of disability-triggering conduct. The proponents simply thought such breadth appropriate, necessary, and valuable.[362]

As things proceeded, Congress narrowed the provision in two specific respects. Congress backed away from complete disfranchisement to disqualification from holding office. And relatedly, it narrowed Section Three to cover only those who had sworn a prior oath of loyalty to the U.S. Constitution as federal or state officeholders. Rather

---

Three was enacted. In our view, the House's decision was mistaken—an overzealous reading of the law, the facts, or both.

[360] See generally Graber, Volume 1, supra note 8.

[361] See supra notes 12, 59, & 184.

[362] See generally Graber Section Three manuscript, supra note 12.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

than disenfranchising pretty much the entire white South, it would disqualify from future office those who had held constitutional office and then rebelled.

But what did not change was the broad description of the conduct that triggered disfranchisement (in the earlier proposal) or disqualification from office (in the proposal eventually agreed to).[363] As noted, there is not a great deal of explication of what this conduct was, exactly. But the overall tenor of the debates over what became Section Three suggest that all meaningful connection with, support for, or aid to the Confederacy—officeholding, military service (whether voluntary or not), political support or endorsement, provision of material assistance to rebellion or rebel forces—was regarded by the proposing Congress as covered. The legislative history of Section Three—such as it is—supports a broad understanding of the prohibition contained in its language.

7. Early Applications of Section Three

A final set of evidence comes from the handful of cases applying Section Three shortly after its adoption. Once again, because these examples come after the provision was adopted, they do not provide direct evidence of its original public meaning, but they still can be informative.[364] Section Three came up in a range of procedural and institutional situations; each of these situations further confirms Section Three's broad substantive sweep.[365]

For instance, the 1867 Military Reconstruction Act—which imposed provisional governments on the southern states until they obtained readmission to representation in Congress by enacting new, republican, Reconstruction-compliant constitutions—directly incorporated Section Three of the proposed (but not yet ratified) Fourteenth Amendment as a restriction on those governments. Persons disqualified

---

[363] Congress also rejected a series of proposed amendments to Section Three that would have narrowed or limited the conduct or persons to which the language would apply – e.g., only to persons who joined the Confederacy while still holding prior office under the U.S. Constitution; only to persons who had sworn oaths to the Constitution since 1851; only to persons who had not received presidential pardons; and only to persons who had voluntarily served the confederacy. Republican defenders of Section Three successfully opposed these proposed limitations on Section Three's scope, arguing that limiting the ban to persons who still held office under the Constitution when they joined the Confederacy would indulge the pretext that resignation from office before engaging in or assisting rebellion absolved one of any prior duty of loyalty to the United States Constitution. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. p. 2770 (statement of Sen. Howard). Republicans likewise rejected the proposed limitation to persons who had "voluntarily" assisted or participated in rebellion, because it would raise unnecessary and difficult proof problems and permit spurious claims of involuntary participation. Indeed, one senator noted that Alexander Stephens, Vice President of the Confederacy, had testified before the Joint Committee on Reconstruction that he "never entered into the rebellion voluntarily"! Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. p. 2918 (statement of Sen. Willey).

[364] See, e.g., Baude, Liquidation, supra note 242, at 61-62; Paulsen, Most Dangerous, supra note 242, at 293, 303.

[365] Additionally, some of Congress's application of the Ironclad Oath to its own members also entailed the application of Section Three, see supra Part IV.A.5.b.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

under Section Three could not hold office under the provisional governments, nor could they serve in—or even vote for those who would serve in—the state's constitutional convention.[366]

Andrew Johnson's attorney general, Henry Stanbery, published a two-part opinion in 1867 setting forth his interpretation of the Act and thus, indirectly, of Section Three.[367] Stanberry's opinion is explicitly slanted toward a narrow construction of Section Three, because of his concerns that it would be punitive and ex post facto in this context.[368] Even so, Stanberry's opinion found Section Three's definition of what constituted participation in rebellion to be quite broad:

> "All those who, in legislative or other official capacity, were engaged in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, or persons who, in their individual capacity, have done any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion, may well be said, in the meaning of this law, to have engaged in rebellion."[369]

As to individuals, Stanberry also reiterated several times that any voluntary support, even if not violent, was covered and culpable. He found "it to be clear, that in the sense of this law persons may have engaged in rebellion without having actually levied war or taken arms,"[370] and added that "wherever an act is done voluntarily in aid of the rebel cause . . . it must work disqualification under this law."[371]

Subsequent cases took even broader positions. For instance, in the 1869 decision of Worthy v. Barrett, the North Carolina Supreme Court concluded that a state sheriff was disqualified under Section Three for holding basically the same office as a sheriff when his state was in rebellion. The court's reasoning on this issue was succinct but clear:

> What will amount to having engaged in the rebellion?
>
> (1st.) Holding any of these offices under the Confederate government.

---

[366] An Act to provide for the more efficient Government of the Rebel States, 14 Stat. 428, 429, sec. 5-6 (March 2., 1867).
[367] Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 141 (1867); Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 182 (1867).
[368] 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 159-160. But see supra Part III.A-B (explaining why the constitutional ex post facto and attainder principles do not apply to Section Three, especially as applied to new insurrections and rebellions).
[369] Id. at 161-162 (emphasis added)
[370] Id. at 161.
[371] Id. at 165.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 2d Voluntarily aiding the rebellion, by personal service, or by contributions, other than charitable, of any thing that was useful or necessary in the Confederate service.[372]

That is, the North Carolina Supreme Court embraced Stanberry's view that almost any voluntary assistance to the rebel cause was a form of engaging in rebellion, but also held that holding any office, even an ordinary non-military office far from the front lines, was a form of engaging in rebellion covered by Section Three.[373]

Shortly after this—and shortly after Chief Justice Chase's unsound and unfortunate decision in Griffin's Case had held that Section Three required congressional legislation in order to be put into operation – Congress enacted federal procedures to directly enforce Section Three in federal court. The 1870 Enforcement Act, also known as the First Ku Klux Klan Act, authorized district attorneys of the United States to bring quo warranto actions to remove officials holding office "contrary to the provisions of the third section of the fourteenth article of amendment of the Constitution" and to bring criminal prosecutions against person who "shall hereafter knowingly accept or hold" office in violation of Section Three.[374] In proceedings brought under both enforcement sections of the Act, in the short period between 1870 and 1872, the scope of Section Three's prohibition was interpreted broadly. (Recall that in 1872 Congress removed Section Three's disqualification as to most former rebels.)

Consider first a notable criminal prosecution under the 1870 Act. In North Carolina again, this time in federal court, the government brought criminal charges against Amos Powell, for accepting an appointment as county sheriff despite being covered by Section Three.[375] Powell's alleged act of rebellion was having "furnished a substitute for himself to the Confederate army," and Powell's defense was that this was involuntary, because he was about to be involuntarily conscripted himself.[376] This gave the federal court, through Judge Hugh Lennox Bond, occasion to instruct the jury on the relevance of voluntariness to Section Three:

> [T]he word "engage" implies, and was intended to imply, a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection or Rebellion, and to bring it to a successful termination; and unless you find the defendant did that, with which he is charged, voluntarily, and not by compulsion, he is not guilty of the indictment. But it is not every appearance of force nor timid fear that will

---

[372] Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 203 (1869). The court also applied the Worthy rule to the even easier case of a county attorney who "took part in th[e] rebellion by serving in the Confederate army, voluntarily." In Re Tate, 63 N.C. 308 (1869).

[373] By contrast, Stanberry had concluded that officers who "discharged official duties not incident to war, but in the preservation of order and the administration of law, are not to be considered as thereby engaging in rebellion." 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 162.

[374] 16 Stat. 140, 142-143, sections 14 & 15. See supra note 54.

[375] United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605 (C.C.D.N.C 1871).

[376] Id. at 607.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> excuse such actual participation in the Rebellion or Insurrection. Defendant's conduct must have been prompted by a well grounded fear of great bodily harm and the result of force, which the defendant was neither able to escape nor resist. And further, the defendant's action must spring from his want of sympathy with the insurrectionary movement, and not from his repugnance to being in an army, merely.[377]

In other words, only great duress and pure heart would be a defense if one's conduct otherwise provided material support to the rebellion. Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged" in insurrection covered a wide swath of voluntary participatory acts supporting or assisting rebellion, some bordering on near-passive acquiescence.

Meanwhile, in Tennessee. the U.S. Attorney brought dozens of federal enforcement actions, including against three members of the Tennessee Supreme Court.[378] Many of those charged were unquestionably covered by Section Three because they had fought in the Civil War, for the Confederacy. But some were charged for more remote participation. For instance, Thomas Nelson, one of the Tennessee Justices, had been a unionist during the war, and indeed at one point a prisoner of the Confederacy. His participation in the rebellion appears to have been limited to being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from Tennessee, after Tennessee's purported secession, and traveling to Washington to attempt to represent the state in Congress.[379] While these Section Three claims were never adjudicated, the fact that they were brought in the first place is consistent with the broad sweep of Section Three.[380]

The other scattered discussion of Section Three we have found are more ambiguous, but still consistent with these broad interpretations of Section Three's substantive disqualification—broad interpretations of insurrection, rebellion, "engaged in," and so on. Recall, for instance, that in Griffin's Case, it was essentially taken as given that Judge Hugh Sheffey would be disqualified by Section Three (if it applied) because he was "a member of the legislature of Virginia in 1862 during the late Rebellion, and as such voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[381] Other cases are consistent with similarly

---

[377] Id. Additionally, Powell had served as a justice of the peace under the Confederate government, but the federal court held this not to qualify, for reasons similar to those articulated by Attorney General Stanberry. Id.

[378] Sam D. Elliott, When the United States Attorney Sued to Remove Half the Tennessee Supreme Court: The Quo Warranto Cases of 1870, 49 Tenn. B.J. 20 (2013); see also Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.

[379] For one fawning account of Nelson, see Oliver P. Temple, Notable Men of Tennessee From 1833 to 1875. at 166-215 (1912).

[380] Justice Nelson resigned while these actions were pending, and the rest of the actions were abandoned with the passage of the 1872 Amnesty Act and a change in the federal attitude towards Section Three. Elliott, supra note 378.

[381] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D.Va. 1869).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

broad assumptions.[382] We have found none that took a substantially narrower view of Section Three, and even if some exist, they would seem to be the minority and inferior construction.

The application of Section Three immediately after its enactment is consistent with what the text, structure, context, and history of Section Three all tell us: to have "engage[d] in insurrection and rebellion," or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" was understood to embrace an incredibly broad sweep of voluntary conduct that provides support, material assistance, or specific encouragement to such actions.

In the end, the sum total of evidence concerning the original textual meaning of Section Three—contemporaneous dictionary definitions; parallel constitutional use of the same or similar language; the inferences that fairly may be drawn from the legislative history of Section Three's drafting; the especially strong evidence from 1860s Civil War era political and legal usage of nearly the precise same terms (in prominent presidential statements, congressional enactments and their implementation, and a landmark Supreme Court constitutional decision employing the same terms); the general legal backdrop of eighteenth century Insurrection Acts and the myriad and familiar historical incidents of "insurrection" and "rebellion" to which they applied; and finally early practice enforcing Section Three—points in a consistent direction: toward a broad understanding of what constitutes insurrection and rebellion and a remarkably broad understanding of what types of conduct constitute engaging in or perhaps giving aid or comfort to such movements.

B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred?

The next step in the analysis of Section Three is rather more tedious than difficult. But it is important to get it right: Holders of what prior offices or positions are covered by Section Three's disqualification from future office if they engaged in insurrection or rebellion? And from what future offices or positions are they thereby disqualified? The text of Section Three takes up these points in reverse order (and so we shall too) and uses slightly different language for each category.

First, the offices or positions from which a disqualified person is barred:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or an elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State … [383]

[382] Sands v. Commonwealth, 62 Va. (21 Gratt.) 871, 873, 885–87 (1872). There is reason to think there were hundreds of other Section Three actions brought during this time period, but few records of the specifics of the cases. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.
[383] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the offices or positions previously held, and for which an oath to the Constitution was taken, that trigger Section Three's disqualification:

> … who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States … [384]

We begin with a few observations.

First, the language of these provisions should be read in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one.[385] Keep this in mind as we proceed: we think readers should be wary of any interpretation of Section Three that would impute to the text a hyper-technical set of hidden distinctions not fully warranted by the language. Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside.

Second, it appears that the list of disqualification-triggering offices tracks closely, but not identically, the listing of positions for which the original Constitution imposed an oath requirement. Article VI of the Constitution dictates that "Senators and Representatives . . . Members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several states, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."[386] Article II, overlapping this general oath mandate, prescribes a specific oath for the President, who swears both that he will "faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States" and

---

[384] Id.

[385] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Captain James T. Kirk and the Enterprise of Constitutional Interpretation: Some Modest Proposals from the Twenty-third Century, 59 Albany L. Rev. 671, 674-76 (1995). For instance, consider the story, passed down from Albert Gallatin to Max Farrand to William Treanor, that Gouverneur Morris slyly attempted to replace a comma with a semicolon in Article I in order to convert the "General Welfare" Clause from a limitation on the tax power into a freestanding power of regulation. William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Guverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 20-24 (2021). Putting aside whether this story is really true, David S. Schwartz, Framing the Framer: A Commentary on Treanor's Governeur Morris as Dishonest Scrivener, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 51, 69-73 (2022), a sensible approach to constitutional interpretation should obviously resist such antics. Even if Morris had succeeded in smuggling in the semi-colon, that maneuver should not be decisive in interpreting the Clause. See Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 338-339 & n. 151.

[386] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"'to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.'"[387]

Section Three's listing of triggering positions largely tracks the substance (and to some extent even the sequence) of the all-offices-legislative-executive-judicial-federal-and-state oath mandates. Section Three's list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified builds on this list. All positions that trigger disqualification are disqualified-from. In addition, the disqualified-from list includes, notably, presidential electors, who are not listed in the Constitution as persons required to swear an oath to the Constitution. The wording also appears designed to clarify that the ban extends to "military" offices—including state military offices—whether or not they would be considered "executive" offices under state law or Article VI. Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application. And if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions plus disqualified from being an elector for President and Vice President. That seems to be the basic structure of the provision.

Our third observation is related. It appears to us that the text's overall project of office-listing, in both clauses, was designed to be reasonably comprehensive, covering the waterfront: both taking care not to accidentally leave out anything considered important—including everybody who was constitutionally required to have sworn an oath—and adding positions where appropriate, as with adding the category of electors to the list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified.

With these principles in mind, it appears to us that the two clauses—describing what past positions trigger disqualification and what future positions fall within the scope of that disqualification—can and should be read, together, in a straightforward manner. First, as to the persons to whom the provision applies (the second, "triggering" clause): Section Three's disqualification attaches to persons who previously swore an oath to support the Constitution as:

> [i] a "member" of Congress, or as
> [ii] an "officer of" the United States, or as > [iii] a "member" of any State legislature, or as > [iv] an "executive or judicial officer of" any State.[388]

---

[387] U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 8. On the Presidential Oath Clause generally, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitution of Necessity, 79 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1257, 1260-1267 (2004); on "to the best of my Ability," see William Baude, Signing Unconstitutional Laws, 86 Ind. L.J. 303, 310 (2011).
[388] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These four categories are then closely paralleled (with differences noted) in the description of offices from which covered persons are excluded (the first clause). Covered insurrectionists, rebels, and aid-and-comforters are disqualified from being:

> [i] "a Senator or Representative" in Congress (paralleling "member," a seemingly purely stylistic variation) or
> [ii] an elector for President or Vice President (a new exclusion from a position that is not an oath-required triggering position); or
> [iii] holding "any office, civil or military," "under" either federal or state government (paralleling "officer" of the United States or of any State, respectively, in the second and fourth triggering categories above—with the noted clarification of the inclusion of "military" officers).

The description "civil" office, in the disqualified-from list seems designed to embrace the categories of "executive or judicial" officer in the triggering list. Though somewhat more awkward, we think an elected office in a state legislature also qualifies as a "civil" office within the language and design of Section Three, reading the word "office" in this context in an ordinary, non-technical sense.[389]

The overall result is a broad list of disqualification-triggering positions covering essentially every major federal or state legislative, executive, and judicial office; and a list of barred-from positions embracing all of the above plus electors for president and vice president (and clarifying "military"). The legislative positions in question are the relevant elected offices—members of the legislature, whether a state legislature or the federal Congress—and do not embrace unelected staff positions. The executive positions embrace anyone in the executive branches of federal or state government who holds an "office" within that branch.

To be sure, there might be ancillary questions concerning what federal executive and judicial positions qualify as an "office," held by an "officer"—as opposed to non-officer, non-"office"-holding employees. That is: exactly how far down the organizational chart does the list of triggering and disqualified-from positions go?[390] Like-

---

[389] Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5 (setting forth arguments why state legislative offices are included within the general catch-all category of excluded-from "civil" offices.); contra John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 126 N. Am. Rev. 53, 54 (1878). None of this in our view affects the question whether a Member of Congress may properly be designated as an "Officer" to whom the duties of the office of President may devolve upon presidential and vice-presidential death, resignation, or inability, which turns on different considerations. Compare Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 113 (1995) with John F. Manning, Not Proved: Some Lingering Questions About Legislative Succession to the Presidency, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 141 (1995).

[390] Serious scholarship has explored those questions with respect to the Appointments Clause. Jennifer L. Mascott, Who Are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 Stan. L. Rev. 443 (2018). We do not address that somewhat peripheral question here, but leave such issues for another day.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wise, for the federal judicial branch, Article III judges and justices are plainly covered. (Other officers in the judicial branch, such as the clerks in Ex Parte Hennen,[391] are presumably covered as well—as well as perhaps bankruptcy judges, magistrate judges and the like.)[392] Non-office-holding employees, again, would not be covered. And of course there might be similar residual questions as to what state government positions constitute state executive "office" held by "officers" (thus, perhaps, the special need for designation "military," to be sure state military positions are included), and what state judicial-branch positions constitute a judicial office. But in the main, the description of who all is covered by Section Three and what offices such person, if disqualified, is excluded from holding strikes us as fairly straightforward.

The only challenge anyone has raised concerning this general description is the argument by professors Josh Blackman and Seth Tillman that a person who has served as President (and the same argument is made as to Vice President), while perhaps having held an office "under" the United States, is not properly classified as an "officer of" the United States.[393] On this view, disqualified persons might be barred from being President or Vice President—the authors are somewhat non-committal about this[394]—but having been President or Vice President, and engaged in insurrection or rebellion, does not trigger disqualification of an individual from anything! On this argument, the President and Vice President—alone among constitutional oath-takers—are exempt from Section Three's consequences.

We do not buy it, for many reasons: First, it adopts precisely the type of "secret code" hidden-meanings hermeneutic we think should be viewed extremely skeptically. Moreover, the code has a facially implausible consequence: an insurrectionist President is not covered by Section Three's disqualification (though nearly every other federal or state officeholder is); the President is (perhaps?) a disqualified-from office but not a disqualification-triggering office. This makes little sense.[395]

---

[391] 38 U.S. 230, 258 (1839) ("[T]hat a clerk is one of the inferior officers contemplated by [the Appointments Clause] cannot be questioned"). To be clear, Hennen dealt with the clerk of court, not what we would now call a term judicial law clerk.

[392] That said, to the extent that one maintains that magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges cannot lawfully exercise judicial power or executive power of their own, see William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1554-56, 1574-75 (2020), one might question whether they are truly "officers" at all. Again, we leave this issue for another day.

[393] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is The President An "Officer of the United States" For Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 N.Y.U. J. L. & Liberty 1 (2021).

[394] See, e.g., id. at 6, 17, 21.

[395] To be sure, faithful readings of the Constitution sometimes yield counterintuitive outcomes. See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Someone Should Have Told Spiro Agnew, 14 Const. Comm. 245 (1997); (suggesting the possibility that a straightforward reading of the constitutional text yields the "stupid" – and surely inadvertent – result that the Vice President would be the presiding officer over his own impeachment trial in the Senate and that this is a result to be rectified); Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1468. But that does not mean we should close our eyes to plausibility and common sense, especially when the proposed textual reading is such a stretch. See also Paulsen, supra, Nothing But the Text, supra note 10, at 1439-1440 (noting cautions concerning use of the "absurdity" canon to

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second (and relatedly), the argument rather implausibly splits linguistic hairs. No one denies that the President is an executive branch officer holding executive office. At the risk of belaboring the obvious: Article II refers to the "office" of President innumerable times. It specifies the length of term for which the President "holds his Office," certain minimum qualifications for eligibility "to that Office," what happens upon the President's removal "from Office," or inability to discharge "the Powers and Duties of said Office," and the oath he shall take before entering "on the Execution of his Office."[396] If the Presidency is not an office, nothing is.

So the argument must rely instead on the fine parsing of prepositional phrases. The President (perhaps?) holds an "office under" the United States but is not an "officer of" the United States? This seems to defy textual common sense. Far more sensible and straightforward to conclude, we think, that the officeholder holding the office of President is an officer "of" the United States who holds office under the authority of the United States. The minor textual difference between the triggering clause ("officer of") and the positions-disqualified clause ("office under")—a choice between prepositions—appears to be of no significant substantive consequence in Section Three, much as other minor textual variations in or among constitutional provisions often do not support differences in meaning.[397] Indeed, one far simpler and more straightforward explanation for the Constitution's use of "office under" and "officer of" in Section Three and elsewhere is that "office" and "officer" simply take different prepositions: the Constitution uses "of" when referring to an officer and "under" when referring to an office.

Finally, even if a plausible argument can be constructed that the difference might have once been thought capable of sustaining a term-of-art distinction with respect to different prepositional phrases in the original Constitution—surmounting the presumption against "secret code" interpretation—there is no evidence of such a distinction in Section Three and little logic to such a distinction either.[398] deny plain textual meaning, but noting how the canon is a sometimes useful tool in discerning actual textual meaning.).

---

[396] See generally U.S. Const. Art. II.

[397] For instance, consider the differently phrased, but seemingly identical enforcement clauses of the Reconstruction Amendments. U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."); id. amdt. XIC, sec. 5 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."); id. amdt. XV, sec. 2 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."). Or consider the Constitution's "gratuitous (one could also say strange) punctuation marks." Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 348 (giving examples).

[398] One of us has previously complimented Tillman's prior scholarship that attempts to prove such a systematic term-of-art/secret code in the original Constitution. William Baude, Constitutional Officers: A Very Close Reading, JOTWELL (Jul. 28, 2016) https://conlaw.jotwell.com/constitutional-officers-a-very-close-reading/. But the very pieces of evidence that are most arresting in that context also confirm extensive linguistic drift or changing understandings in the decades after the founding. Compare id. (foreign gifts to Washington) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Original Public Meaning of the Foreign

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Third, a variant of the Blackman-Tillman argument was explicitly made and explicitly refuted in the congressional debates proposing Section Three. Senator Reverdy Johnson of Maryland charged that the language employed was defective because the offices of President and Vice President had inadvertently been omitted from Section Three. The amendment "does not go far enough," Johnson averred.[399] "I do not see but that any one of these gentlemen may be elected President or Vice President of the United States, and why did you omit to exclude them?"[400] Johnson was complaining that these two officers should be included in Section Three and there was no good reason to omit them. Whereupon Senator Morrill of Maine interrupted: "Let me call the Senator's attention to the words 'or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States.'"[401] Senator Johnson promptly, and somewhat sheepishly, retreated: "Perhaps I am wrong as to the exclusion from the presidency; no doubt I am; but I was misled by noticing the special exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives."[402]

The Blackman-Tillman argument is not quite the same, but it is the mirror image of Johnson's concern. Johnson's inquiry was whether a covered, insurrectionist nonetheless might become president. The Blackman-Tillman argument is that an insurrectionist president is not an "officer of" the United States whose prior position triggers Section Three's restrictions on future office. The Johnson-Morrill colloquy does not specifically address that reverse-image argument. But it certainly suggests that the framers of Section Three were not parsing it as a secret code with facially implausible consequences. The question whether Section Three applied to former Presidents and Vice Presidents does not appear to have been raised again, by anyone.[403] Nor did anybody else involved in drafting or ratifying Section Three suggest that the mirror-image question would be any different. Subject to all the usual reservations about the use of legislative history (and legislative silence) in determining

---

Emoluments Clause: A Reply to Professor Zephyr Teachout, 107 Nw. U.L. Rev. Colloquy 180, 190 (2013) (contrary practice by Presidents Van Buren, Tyler, and Jackson); compare Baude, supra this note (Hamilton's list) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Reports of My Death Were Greatly Exaggerated, at 20-21 https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=3037107 (describing a scrivener's "condensed" version of this document likely made "circa 1830" that may reflect a different understanding of the constitutional terms); cf. Blackman & Tillman, supra note 393, at 24-31 (acknowledging, and arguing against, the possibility of linguistic drift). In other words, such secret code (if any) turns out to have been written in disappearing ink.

[399] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st sess. at 2899 (1866)

[400] Id.

[401] Id.

[402] Id.

[403] Former President John Tyler of Virginia subsequently sided with the Confederacy and was elected to the Confederate Congress (but died before assuming office). And former Vice President John Breckinridge subsequently served as a Confederate general and, later, as Confederate Secretary of War. See Blackman & Tillman, supra 393, at 45-46 (acknowledging this). While Tyler and Breckinridge had served in other disqualification-triggering posts, if the text really had failed to include the offices of President and Vice President as triggering disqualification these incidents would have shown that to be a glaring and dangerous omission.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

textual meaning, this further confirms the more natural reading. The only time anything like the question was raised, the point was answered by a proponent of Section Three, clearly and unequivocally, and the questioning Senator accepted the answer as correct.

Fourth and finally, in an additional piece of prepositional jujitsu, Blackman and Tillman tellingly equivocate about whether the President holds "office under" the United States as well. (If he does, Section Three stops covered insurrectionists from becoming President, and if not, not.) Blackman and Tillman do not deny this possibility, but they do not confirm it either. The difficulty for them is that both answers show the implausibility of their position.

If Blackman and Tillman maintain that the President does not hold "office under" the United States, then they must fly in the face of the directly on point discussion between Senators Johnson and Morrill. They must claim to understand Section Three better than its framers. This seems unlikely. But if they confirm that the President does hold "office under" the United States, then they must maintain a sharp and crucial distinction between "office under" and "officer of." As Mark Graber has observed, this distinction was also contradicted by Section Three's framers: "[T]he members of the Congress who framed Section 3 of the 14th Amendment often indicated—and sometimes explicitly stated—that all persons who held office 'under the United States' were officers 'of the United States.' During the debates over Section 3, no representative or senator alluded to the existence of a distinction between 'of' and 'under'. Representatives and senators often described the president as having an 'office under the United States' and being an 'officer of the United States.'"[404] If a secret code was really at work, it was an extraordinarily well-kept secret. The implausibility of both horns of the Blackman-Tillman straddle demonstrates the implausibility of their position.

In short, the ordinary sense of the text; the structure and logic of its provisions; the evident design to be comprehensive; the text's many references to the office of the Presidency as an "office"; the seeming absurdity of the prospect of exclusion of the offices of President and Vice President from triggering the disqualification fashioned [404] Mark Graber Disqualification From Office: Donald Trump v. the 39th Congress, Lawfare (Feb. 24, 2023). Professor Graber notes further that a "unanimous House select committee report issued barely a month after Congress sent the 14th Amendment to the states concluded that 'a little consideration of this matter will show that 'officers of' and 'officers under' the United States are 'indiscriminately used in the Constitution.'" In addition, "[t]he most comprehensive study of state ratification . . . does not point to a single example of any journalist or participant in a state convention who distinguished between 'officers under' and 'officers of' or who otherwise thought a president who participated in an insurrection could not be disqualified under Section 3.'" John Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit. J. Am. Legal Stud. (forthcoming), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4440157; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 158-160 (collecting authorities supporting the same point); Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 16 n. 48 ("My research . . . shows that President Andrew Johnson repeatedly referred to himself as "the chief executive officer of the United States").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

by the Radical Reconstruction Congress that drafted the Fourteenth Amendment; the fact that the only legislative debate over the language discussing whether Section Three inadvertently omitted the offices of President and Vice President rejected any such suggestion; and the fact that no one ever suggested that the "under/of" difference meant the presidency was not a covered office triggering Section Three, all convince us that the natural conclusion is the correct one: Section Three includes in its coverage, or "triggering" language, insurrectionists who once served as President and Vice President. And Section Three excludes disqualified insurrectionists from subsequently holding the office of either President or Vice President.

C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election

We come finally to the urgent question of the day: How does Section Three apply to the events of 2020-2021—the efforts by Donald Trump (and others) to overthrow the results of the 2020 presidential election and install Trump as president for another term, despite his loss to Joseph Biden?

Consider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021.

Taken as a whole, these actions represented an effort to prevent the lawful, regular, termination of President Trump's term of office in accordance with the Constitution. They were an attempt to unlawfully overturn or thwart the lawful outcome of a presidential election and to install, instead, the election loser as president. They constituted a serious attempt to overturn the American constitutional order. Does Section Three cover this conduct? Did these events constitute "insurrection" or "rebellion" within the meaning of the Constitution? And if so, who all might be said to have "engaged in" that conduct, or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to those who did? We will consider those questions in turn.

1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion

We begin with the general legal question whether the attempted overturning of the result of the 2020 presidential election is covered by Section Three in any respect. Do such efforts, in part or in whole, qualify as insurrection or rebellion, disqualifying prior-oath-swearing persons who participated in such acts from future office? In our view, based on all the foregoing analysis, the answer is yes.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There are multiple arguments for how Section Three would apply to the events of 2020-2021, but let us first focus on the events of January 6, 2021.[405] These include first the cluster of actions taken in assembling, encouraging, charging, and inciting an armed (in part) mob, producing the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol, Congress, and the Vice President. For some, importantly including Trump, these acts would also include subsequent deliberate inaction against the January 6 attack—by persons with duties and capacity to act to suppress, halt, or quell the insurrection in progress—that effectively facilitated, permitted, aided, and encouraged such insurrectionary violence.

Overall, it seems to us to be quite clear that the specific series of events leading up to and culminating in the January 6, 2021 attack qualifies as an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three: "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect."[406] The large group of people who descended upon, entered, and occupied the U.S. Capitol building used force to prevent a key step in the constitutional transfer of power. The group was in part coordinated, not merely a riot.[407] Some members of the group were armed,[408] and many used force to breach the Capitol, to overpower law enforcement there, and to effectuate their unlawful aim.[409]

Furthermore, it seems that, as a whole, the group's goal—to the extent the group had a specific objective in mind—was to disrupt the constitutional transfer of power, by disrupting a necessary formal step in the constitutional process.[410] The invasion of the Capitol on January 6 was not simply a violation of the law (though it was that of course). It was not merely a protest of a particular legal measure, but a forcible prevention and disruption of it. And it was not the disruption of just any legal measure, but of one that was itself central to the allocation of authority under our Constitution. If this is a fair description of what happened on January 6, then that

---

[405] In describing these events, we rely generally here and throughout on the public record assembled by the House January 6th Committee. Final Report, Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol, H.R. 117-000 (117th Cong., 2nd Sess.). Of course, to the extent that a potentially disqualified officer wished to prove that this public record was inaccurate or incomplete as relevant to them, they could attempt to do so in the relevant proceedings and to the relevant decisionmaker. See generally supra Part II.B.

[406] Supra Part IV.A.1. The fact that President Trump may have supported the insurrection, see infra II.C.2.b, does not change this. In our system the President is not "the government," and especially not when Congress is carrying out a constitutionally mandated role in supervising the transfer of power.

[407] See, e.g., January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 499-502, 530-531.

[408] Id. at 640-642.

[409] Id. at 646-647, 651-659.

[410] Id. at 502-510, 521-530.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

day was something quite different from more common acts of protest, even disruptive protest. January 6 was an insurrection.

To be sure, the events of January 6 itself—the attack on Congress and the Capitol—did not remotely rival in overall magnitude, or in sheer carnage, the experience of the U.S. Civil War, where more than 600,000 people died. Still, considered as discrete events, it is notable that more people died, and many more were injured, as a result of the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol than died or suffered injuries as a result of the attack on Fort Sumter. The events of January 6 match, in their essential elements—concerted resistance to federal authority, serious attempts to frustrate execution of national law, attacks on government officials and facilities, intimidation and violence—and arguably exceeded in their seriousness, the events of the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries' Rebellion, and other more limited historical insurrections. And at all events, it is less the magnitude or degree of disruption occasioned by an insurrection than whether it fits within the broad meaning of Section Three, as illuminated by evidence of its original meaning and historical understandings. As the Prize Cases teach, not every insurrection or rebellion ripens into a full-fledged war.[411] Most of the time, the authority of the state can nip it in the bud. But it is still an insurrection.[412]

Our assessment of the events of January 6, specifically, as an "insurrection" confirms the judgment made by public authorities: An act of Congress, to "award four congressional gold medals to the United States Capitol Police and those who protected the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021,"[413] found that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. The text of the act contains an official finding: "On January 6, 2021, a mob of insurrectionists forced its way into the U.S. Capitol building and congressional office buildings and engaged in acts of vandalism, looting, and violently attacked Capitol Police officers."[414] Another finding noted the historic magni-

---

[411] See supra Part IV.A.4.c.

[412] What about other disruptive, disorderly, even violent protests during the same time period? For instance, the many such events that erupted during the summer of 2020 in the wake of the police killing of George Floyd? So far as we can tell, none of these were covered by Section Three. Of course mere protest is not insurrection. Some of these protests devolved into riots, but even a riot is not necessarily an insurrection. And even if some of them went further, amounted to "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect," and met the definition of insurrection, they would seem to be insurrections against the state governments, not the United States, and thus outside the scope of Section Three. But of course if there were any other insurrections against the United States, Section Three applies to them all.

[413] Pub. Law. 117-32 (Aug. 5, 2021), 135 Stat. 322.

[414] Id. sec. 1(1). In the state Section Three proceedings against Marjorie Taylor Greene, supra notes 68-73 and accompanying text, the hearing officer cited this statute to conclude "Congress has characterized the Invasion as an insurrection." Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SEC-STATE-CE-57-Beaudrot, at 9-10 (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022). The hearing officer found it unnecessary to decide for himself, however, "Whether the Invasion of January 6 amounted to an insurrection." Id. at 18.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

tude and symbolic importance of that insurrection against democracy: "The desecration of the U.S. Capitol, which is the temple of American Democracy, and the violence targeting Congress are horrors that will forever stain our Nation's history."[415] The impeachment charges brought against President Trump as a result of January 6 were equally explicit in concluding that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. A majority of the House of Representatives approved (232 to 197) an article of impeachment charging then-President Trump with "incitement of insurrection" for the events of January 6th.[416] The Senate's vote to convict Trump of this charge, while falling short of the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution's impeachment process, constituted a substantial majority (57 to 43) of the Senate endorsing the House's charge and characterization. Majorities of both houses of Congress thus determined—at least twice—that January 6th was an insurrection; and in the impeachment proceedings majorities of both houses determined that Trump was responsible for having incited that insurrection.[417]

Finally, there is an additional possibility that we should see the events of January 6, 2021, as just one part of a broader "rebellion" against constitutional government, much like secession—actions seeking unlawfully to displace or replace the authority of lawful constitutional government and substitute a constitutionally unauthorized governmental authority in its stead.

We acknowledge that applying the term "rebellion" to the events of 2020-2021 goes beyond the Civil War era dictionaries. The attempt to overturn the 2020 election was neither an "open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government," as Webster would have it, nor (outside of the insurrection of January 6) "the taking up of arms" or "forcible opposition" as Bouvier would have it.[418] It is not a perfect fit.

Nonetheless, consider the argument that the term "rebellion" could be used more broadly to describe a coup d'etat seeking to overthrow the constitutional order—including a so-called "bloodless" coup d'etat (where no force is used) and a successful "self-coup" of the bloodless variety[419] (where the existing unlawful regime commands such force that it need not be used). Consider the following chain of logical steps: 1. A military coup d'etat upending lawful government by use of force surely qualifies,

---

[415] Pub. Law. 117-32, sec. 1(4).
[416] H. Res. 24 (117th Cong., 1st Sess. Jan 25, 2021).
[417] For what it is worth, other scholars have also agreed that January 6th was an insurrection. See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 23 n.65; Vlahoplus, supra note 404, at 1; Farah Peterson, Our Constitutionalism of Force, 122 Colum. L. Rev. 1539, 1622-25 (2022); see also Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Mark A. Graber, Treason, Insurrection, and Disqualification: From the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 to Jan. 6, 2021, Lawfare (Sep. 26, 2022) at https://www.lawfaremedia.org/article/treason-insurrection-and-disqualification-fugitive-slave-act-1850-jan-6-2021.
[418] See supra Part IV.A.2.
[419] See generally Daniel J. Hemel, Self-Coup and The Constitution, 37 Const. Comm. (forthcoming 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

constitutionally, as a "rebellion." It is literally an effort unlawfully to overthrow constitutional government, by force. 2. It follows that a military coup d'etat upending lawful government by show or threat of force should be treated the same way, even though force was not used. 3. A military coup d'etat by the existing regime—a "self-coup," would seem, legally, to be the same thing. In such a case the regime does not seize power, by show or threat of force; it retains power by show or threat of force. But it is logically identical to situations #1 and #2. 4. A "bloodless" self-coup against the lawful regime, where no force is used because none is needed, should be treated the same as #3. Indeed, it seems fair to say that situation #4 is merely an instance of situation #3. 5. The same self-coup attempt, but that styles itself as not renouncing but instead as restoring or maintaining, the constitutional regime—but that in truth seeks to overthrow or defeat that regime—logically should be treated the same as #4. If one accepts this chain of reasoning, one might then fairly conclude that the entirety of the course of conduct attempting dishonestly and unlawfully to overthrow the 2020-2021 election constituted a "rebellion," even though this might stretch somewhat the dictionary definitions of the term.[420]

Calling the events of 2020 and 2021 "insurrection" or potentially even "rebellion" might seem to some exaggerated or hyperbolic. It is not. It is simply being legally precise and not shying away from difficult or upsetting consequences that flow from legal precision. We believe it is important to call the events of 2020 and 2021 by their true legal names, their right names, unshielded by artful euphemism.[421]

2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort"

This brings us to the rubber-hits-the-road question: Who all, by virtue of their personal, voluntary conduct, can be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion in connection with the efforts to overthrow the result of the presidential election of 2020 and unlawfully maintain Donald Trump in office as President of the United States? Additionally, perhaps, who might be said to have provided "aid or comfort" to those insurrectionists and rebels?

As detailed at great—perhaps excruciating—length above, "engaged in" under Section Three is properly understood to embrace a broad range of willful participatory

[420] In similar fashion, we note that—at least at first—the purported "secession" of a state from the Union was not universally acknowledged to be itself an act constituting "rebellion" as a legal matter It too did not fit perfectly the standard dictionary definition (unless and until force was used or threatened). But the logic of the matter led Lincoln—and Congress, and the Supreme Court—to conclude that secession, in practical and legal terms, was a species of "rebellion" and legally to be treated as such. See supra Part IV.A.4. As set forth in the text, the same logic suggests that conduct tantamount to an attempted coup d'etat (including attempting to maintain a defeated incumbent president in office, dishonestly and unlawfully) may fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection or rebellion."

[421] For the sake of completeness, we add that we think the events of 2020-2021 probably do not rise to the level of "treason" or "levying war" against the United States, though of course it is possible that further investigation will reveal truly treasonous conduct that is not yet on the public record.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct. This includes, certainly, deliberate acts in the nature of planning, promoting, encouraging, counseling, supporting, materially assisting, advancing, or facilitating activity or plots that can fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection" or "rebellion." And, as noted, in certain circumstances it might well include inaction supporting insurrection. Finally, giving "aid or comfort" arguably expands the range of acts of participation, support, and encouragement that qualify as triggering Section Three's disqualification.[422]

Who, then, engaged in such behavior?

a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation

Some applications of Section Three are factually straightforward. Others might involve potentially more difficult questions of fact and proof concerning the degree and nature of an individual's voluntary and intentional participation in (i) the overall plot and concrete efforts to overthrow the election and install Trump as president re-elect; (ii) the assembly, instigation, and incitement of a mob to attack the Capitol on January 6, 2021 to prevent certification of the election outcome; or (iii) the willful failure to take action to suppress the attack on Congress while it was in progress.

As discussed in Part II, above, judgments concerning the application of the legal standards of Section Three to specific individuals may and must be made by a variety of public actors—all those whose responsibilities call for application of the Constitution's criteria for eligibility to hold office. The ultimate judgment will rest with different actors and institutions in different circumstances: sometimes by state election officials; sometimes by presidential electors; sometimes by state and federal executive branch officials; sometimes by the respective houses of Congress or by state legislatures. In many cases, the judgment ultimately will fall to state and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. Everybody in such positions is bound to apply Section Three faithfully and enforce its commands rigorously.

That said, from our interpretation of Section Three's broad sweep, it is clear that at least two purported factual defenses are simply immaterial:

First, it is no defense that an individual might claim that his or her conduct does not constitute having engaged in or supported "insurrection" or "rebellion" because the election was in fact stolen—that is, that Trump in fact won the election—making it legitimate to "stop the steal." The problem is that the premise is simply false. Decisionmakers can and should act on the well settled factual understanding that Joe Biden won, and Donald Trump lost, the election of 2020.[423]

---

[422] See generally supra Part IV.A.

[423] See not only the January 6 Report, supra note 405, but also John Danforth, Benjamin Ginsburg, Thomas B. Griffith, David Hoppe, J. Michael Luttig, Michael W. McConnell, Theodore B. Olson &

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, it likewise is no defense that an individual believed (even if mistakenly) that the election had in fact been stolen, or believed that their insurrectionary conduct was somehow lawful. That one may have been deluded or deceived by disinformation does not excuse acts of insurrection or rebellion. And as the South's secession and the resulting Civil War illustrate, a bogus and unsuccessful constitutional theory does not excuse them either. In other words, there is no mistake-of-insurrection defense to Section Three.[424] Acts intentionally done as part of what is in fact and in law insurrection or rebellion are covered, irrespective of an individual's wrong subjective belief that no such insurrection or rebellion occurred, or the reasons for such wrong belief.[425]

b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office

The most politically explosive application of Section Three to the events of January 6, is at the same time the most straightforward. In our view, on the basis of the public record, former President Donald J. Trump is constitutionally disqualified from again being President (or holding any other covered office) because of his role in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 election and the events leading to the January 6 attack.

The case for disqualification is strong. There is abundant evidence that Trump deliberately set out to overturn the result of the 2020 presidential election result, calling it "stolen" and "rigged";[426] that Trump (with the assistance of others) pursued numerous schemes to effectuate this objective; that among these were efforts to alter the vote counts of several states by force, by fraud, or by intended intimidation of state election officials,[427] to pressure or persuade state legislatures and/or courts unlawfully to overturn state election results,[428] to assemble and induce others to submit bogus slates of competing state electors,[429] to persuade or pressure Congress to refuse to count electors' votes submitted by several states,[430] and finally, to pressure the

---

Gordon H. Smith, Lost, Not Stolen: The Conservative Case that Trump Lost and Biden Won the 2020 Presidential Election (2022), https://lostnotstolen.org.

[424] This is consistent with principles of mens rea that distinguish knowledge of what one is doing from knowledge of the proper legal characterization of what one is doing. See, e.g., Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. ___, at 4 n.2 (2023).

[425] Now what if the shoe were on the other foot? What if Trump had somehow succeeded in unlawfully holding apparent office after January 20, 2021? Would comparable actions by Biden supporters have constituted "insurrection"? We think not. The true facts matter. A rebellion against lawful government is rebellion, but acts of counter-insurgency against an attempted coup d'etat are not.

[426] And not that it matters, see supra Part IV.C.2.a, but it also appears that Trump knew that these accusations were false. See January 6 Report, supra note 405, 100-01, 103-04, 203, 213, 789.

[427] Id. at 202-203, 263-265; see also id. at 223-231,

[428] Id. at 296-300.

[429] Id. at 341-354.

[430] Id. at 431.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Vice President unconstitutionally to overturn state election results in his role of presiding over the counting of electors' votes.[431]

Leading up to January 6, Trump repeatedly solicited, suborned, and pressured Vice President Mike Pence to prevent the counting of the electoral votes in favor of President-elect Biden.[432] Not only that: Trump assembled a large crowd to march on the Capitol and intimidate Congress and the Vice President into complying with his wishes and thereby prevent the official counting of the votes of electors confirming Trump's defeat. Trump had announced on Twitter a protest to be held on January 6, 2021: "Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!"[433] According to testimony amassed by the House's January 6th Commission, Trump's supporters interpreted this as a call to arms, sometimes literally.[434]

Then there are the events of January 6 specifically. When January 6 arrived, Trump delivered an incendiary address at the White House Ellipse to the crowd of supporters he had effectively summoned to the Capitol to oppose what he had been calling the "steal" of the election. Trump reiterated his false claim that he had in fact won the election—"we won this election and we won it by a landslide"—but that the Democrats and the media had "stolen" the election and "rigged" a false outcome. "They rigged it like they've never rigged an election before," he charged. "Make no mistake, this election was stolen from you, from me and from the country. … This [is] the most corrupt election in the history, maybe of the world." The crowd was "gathered together in the heart of our nation's capital for one very, very basic and simple reason: To save our democracy." Trump called on the crowd to march on the Capitol. "Our country has had enough. We will not take it anymore and that's what this is all about. … We will stop the steal." He urged the assembled mass of thousands, some of whom Trump knew to be armed, to "fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore."[435]

Some might quibble that the speech is ambiguous.[436] Not all of Trump's rambling address called literally for the crowd to "fight." Some of his statements were

---

[431] Id. at 441-458.
[432] Id. at 441-458.
[433] Quoted in id. at 499.
[434] Id. at 499-540.
[435] For the quotations in this paragraph, see "Transcript of Trump's Speech at Rally Before US Capitol Riot," Associated Press, (Jan. 13, 2021), available at https://apnews.com/article/election-2020-joe-biden-donald-trumpcapitol-siege-media-e79eb5164613d6718e9f4502eb471f27. See also id. ("And again, most people would stand there at 9 o'clock in the evening and say, 'I want to thank you very much,' and they go off to some other life. But I said something is wrong here, something is really wrong, can't have happened, and we fight. We fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore.").
[436] See Michael Conklin, Capital Offense: Is Donald Trump Guilty of Inciting a Riot at the Capital?, 15 U. St. Thomas J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 483 (2022); see also Alan Z. Rozenshtein & Jed Handelsman Shugerman, January 6, Ambiguously Inciting Speech, and the Overt-Acts Rule, 37 Const. Comm. at 2-3, 20-21 (forthcoming 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ambiguous and at one point he remarked that the crowd would be marching "peacefully and patriotically."[437] He never directly and literally called for attacking the Capitol or the Vice President. Much of what might be thought incitement to lawlessness was innuendo. Nonetheless, the general and specific message was that the election had been stolen; that a constitutional fraud of colossal proportions and cataclysmic consequence was in the process of being perpetrated on the nation; that the crowd needed to take "strong" and direct action to protect the country; and that immediate action was necessary to prevent Vice President Pence and Congress from ratifying the unconstitutional election of an illegitimate president and doing irreparable damage to the nation.

These ambiguities have given rise to a debate about whether Trump's speech did or did not cross the strict incitement threshold of Brandenburg v. Ohio.[438] It could well be that it did cross the line: Trump had deliberately assembled the mob of supporters, steeled them to action, knew that they were ready to take immediate action, and directed them to take it.[439] But the most important thing is that the Brandenburg question is beside the point. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact the legal standard of Brandenburg v. Ohio. It enacts the standards of participation in and support for "insurrection or rebellion," and it qualifies, modifies, or simply satisfies the First Amendment to the extent of any conflict between these constitutional principles.[440] First Amendment or no, the speech was part of Trump's participation in and support for the insurrection.

Finally, as events unfolded and the violence began, Trump maintained silence—and indeed deliberate indifference bordering on tacit encouragement—for what had by that time clearly become a forcible insurrection. For three hours after learning that his supporters had attacked the Capitol, Trump took no action to urge them to leave, despite being begged to do so by his advisors and despite having a constitutional duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.[441] During this same period, while the insurrection was in progress and after the Capitol had been breached, he again condemned Vice President Pence for not "hav[ing] the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution,"[442] a statement that the January 6th Commission concluded was "a statement that could

---

[437] Transcript, supra note 435.
[438] 395 U.S. 444 (1969); compare Conklin, supra note 436, with Alexander Tsesis, Incitement to Insurrection and the First Amendment, 57 Wake Forest L. Rev. 971 (2022); see also Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 3 n.3 (citing these and other sources and describing this disagreement).
[439] As Rozenshtein and Shugerman also emphasize, "Trump's speech was accompanied by several overt acts in furtherance of inciting an attack against the Capitol," which they argue takes it outside of the Brandenburg framework for that reason. Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 38.
[440] See supra Part III.D (arguing that Section Three is not limited by the free speech principles of the First Amendment).
[441] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577-606.
[442] Donald J. Trump, Tweets of January 6, 2021, available at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/tweets-january-6-2021

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

only further enrage the mob" and that in fact apparently did so.[443] Once Trump finally did—after several hours and with great reluctance—direct his supporters to leave the Capitol, they quickly dispersed.[444]

This culpable inaction—failing to intervene to stop an insurrection in progress, declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite having both the capacity and responsibility to intervene—is another crucial part of Trump's responsibility for the January 6 insurrection. Section Three reaches a broad range of conduct providing meaningful assistance to or support for acts of insurrection or rebellion performed by others, even quite passively.[445] Sitting by and doing nothing—declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite possessing the material capacity and legal responsibility to intervene—might qualify. Additionally and equally important, Trump's deliberate inaction renders his January 6 speech much more incriminating in hindsight, because it makes it even less plausible (if it was ever plausible) that the crowd's reaction was all a big mistake or misunderstanding.

Taking these events as a whole, and judging them under the standard of Section Three, it is unquestionably fair to say that Trump "engaged in" the January 6 insurrection through both his actions and his inaction. Officials—administrators, courts, legislators—whose responsibilities call upon them to apply Section Three properly and lawfully may, indeed must, take action within their powers to preclude Trump from holding future office,

Moreover, if one accepts the broader argument that the entire campaign to overthrow the results of the 2020 election was a form of constitutional rebellion,[446] then Trump's complicity is even more obvious—as the leader, motive force, and chief attempted perpetrator of that rebellion. Indeed, it would not be going too far to say that Trump, having previously sworn a constitutionally required oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States knowingly attempted to execute what, had it succeeded, would have amounted to a political coup d'etat against the Constitution and its system of elections and overturn the results of the constitutional process, in order to maintain himself in office as President contrary to law. If that itself constitutes "rebellion" against the Constitution, Trump's overall

---

[443] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577.

[444] Even as he urged peace in a video to the insurrectionists ("we can't play into the hands of these people. We have to have peace") he continued to express affection for them ("So go home. We love you. You're very special.") and to reiterate that the "election was stolen from us." Donald J. Trump, Videotaped Remarks During the Insurrection at the United States Capitol, at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/videotaped-remarks-during-the-insurrection-the-united-states-capitol. Later that night he tweeted: "These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!" Trump Tweets, supra note 442.

[445] Cf. notes 350-351 and accompanying text (describing the exclusion of Senator-elect Phillip Thomas).

[446] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

course of conduct disqualifies him under Section Three, even apart from the specific incitement to storm the Capitol on January 6.

The bottom line is that Donald Trump "engaged in" "insurrection or rebellion" and gave "aid or comfort" to others engaging in such conduct, within the original meaning of those terms as employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. If the public record is accurate, the case is not even close. He is no longer eligible to the office of Presidency, or any other state or federal office covered by the Constitution. All who are committed to the Constitution should take note and say so.

c. Beyond Trump

Donald Trump is at the top of the list of Section Three disqualifications, but the list does not end with him. The public record to date shows many others who are or may be connected to either the insurrection of January 6 or to a possible broader rebellion. These include government lawyers, executive branch officials, state officeholders, and even members of Congress. It is not for us to definitively say who all these may be—that, as we have said, is ultimately the responsibility and judgment of all those whose public duties call upon them to apply the Constitution's provisions concerning officeholder qualifications. But to see why this responsibility is urgent, consider the following categories:

Consider first those who marched with—who rose up with—the January 6 mob itself. Some of these folks, such as Couy Griffin of New Mexico, and Derrick Evans of West Virginia, have already been stripped of or resigned from their state offices, as Section Three contemplates.[447] They present the easiest case of "engag[ing] in . . . insurrection." Open and shut.

But many more cases follow. Consider those who were not part of the uprising itself, but who provided planning, encouragement, assistance, or other material support to those who rose up on January 6. Recent proceedings against U.S. Representatives Biggs, Gosar, and Greene, for instance, raise this as a serious possibility.[448] Pennsylvania State Senator Doug Mastriano—who is also a retired military officer and recent gubernatorial candidate—is said to have transported busloads of people to what became the insurrection and "was near the Capitol during the attack."[449] Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani worked extensively to overturn the election, and likewise riled the mob at the Ellipse on January 6.[450] Trump Chief of [447] See supra notes 85-88, 114-116 and accompanying text.

[448] See supra notes 68-80 and accompanying text.
[449] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 294. Such a claim was brought against Mastriano in federal court but dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. See supra note 89.
[450] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 536, 577, 581, 593-594, 608; https://www.rev.com/blog/transcripts/rudy-giuliani-speech-transcript-at-trumps-washington-d-c-rally-wants-trial-by-combat

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Staff (and former legislator) Mark Meadows planned and organized parts of the January 6 rally and apparently also "directed that [Giuliani] be allowed to speak" to the crowd.[451] These current and former officeholders are also subject to serious challenge under Section Three.

And if one entertains the argument that the entire course of conduct to overthrow the 2020 election was a broader rebellion,[452] the list just grows longer and longer. According to the public record: Former National Security Advisor General Michael Flynn proposed a plan to seize voting machines, invalidate election results, and rerun the vote in swing states won by Biden.[453] Would-be Trump electors (some of whom came from state political offices covered by Section Three) met on December 14 even in states where Biden's electors had been chosen, thus laying the groundwork for Trump's schemes.[454] Assistant Attorney General Jeffrey Clark sought to use the power and authority of the Department of Justice to fraudulently upend state election results.[455] At least one member of Congress pressed for the removal of more senior Department of Justice officials who opposed Clark's scheme, and lobbied for the appointment of Clark as Acting Attorney General, thus providing aid or comfort.[456] These officials, too, would be subject to challenge.

We could go on, but we have made the point: All persons who betrayed their earlier constitutional oaths by subsequently engaging in conduct (in any of a number of forms) directed at overthrowing the result of a lawful presidential election or supporting an attack on Congress and the Capitol, should face serious inquiry under Section Three. If they try to hold, retain, re-obtain, or seek public office, their eligibility for such positions should be stringently scrutinized. That inquiry should be conducted by every relevant level of government, from state election officials to the halls of Congress, to the courts throughout the country. In many cases we may not yet even know the full extent of the participation and support for acts of insurrection or rebellion in 2020-2021. But we must find out.

Taking Section Three seriously as part of our nation's operative, ongoing fundamental law means that such inquiries are constitutionally necessary. Indeed, they are constitutionally required. Taking Section Three seriously, as binding constitutional law, means faithfully ascertaining and fearlessly applying the objective, original meaning of its words and phrases, understood in their historical context, whether we like that meaning or not, and tirelessly following the logic of the text's meaning to its fair conclusions. The upshot of doing so, we think—the consequence of adhering to constitutional principle—may well be the disqualification from public office of a

---

[451] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 533, 535-536.
[452] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.
[453] January 6 Report, supra note 405, 222.
[454] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 352-353. Several of these would-be electors previously held state and local offices, and so are covered by Section Three.
[455] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 50.
[456] Id. at 50 (discussing actions of Pennsylvania U.S. Representative Scott Perry).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

great many more individuals than is generally recognized. In many cases, the inquiry has not yet begun. It is past time to start the reckoning.

Conclusion

Despite its long slumber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is alive and in force. It remains fully legally operative. It is constitutionally self-executing—that is, its command is automatically effective, directly enacted by the Constitution itself. And it is sweeping: It sweeps over earlier and inconsistent constitutional provisions. It sweeps in a broad range of conduct attacking the authority of the United States. And it sweeps in a broad category of former oath-swearing officeholders turned insurrectionists or aiders and comforters of insurrection or rebellion. It is enforceable by anybody whose duties provide occasion for judging legal eligibility for office. Indeed, each of these actors has a duty to faithfully apply Section Three. All possess legitimate constitutional interpretive authority to construe and apply this constitutional prohibition, many of them independently of other actors, including courts.

All of this has obvious, important, and immediate legal implications.

We the People should honor and vigorously enforce this important provision of our Constitution. It should not be allowed to become a dead letter from disuse. Its purpose, while inspired by specific historical events, is one of general and continuing importance. The idea that men and women who swore an oath to support the Constitution as government officials, but who betrayed that oath by engaging in or abetting acts of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, should be disqualified from important positions of government power in the future (unless forgiven by supermajorities of both houses of Congress) remains a valid, valuable, and we think vital precept. Disqualifying candidates and officials from office is not something to be done lightly, but Section Three was not enacted lightly. Section Three remains part of our Constitution, part of our nation's fundamental law. If we honor the Constitution, we must honor Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

That means that those who possess the power and duty to apply and enforce Section Three have a constitutional responsibility to do so, fairly but vigorously. If state election boards or secretaries of state determine that a candidate for state elective office or a candidate seeking to represent that state in Congress is constitutionally disqualified from holding that office, those state authorities should exercise the state-law powers they possess to remove ineligible candidates from the ballot. If the House or Senate determines that a person elected to serve as a member of such body is constitutionally disqualified from holding such a position, they should refuse to seat or expel that person. And if a candidate for President, or an already-elected President, is constitutionally disqualified from office by Section Three, then that disqualification should be enforced by state election officials, by electors, by Congress

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

through the impeachment process, and by the Vice-President, cabinet and, Congress in carrying out the Twenty-fifth Amendment. In any and all these situations, and more, where the enforcement of Section Three's constitutional disqualifications is properly presented to the judiciary in a case over which a court possesses jurisdiction, it is the constitutional duty, province, and responsibility of federal and state judges exercising the judicial power to faithfully apply and enforce Section Three according to its terms.

No official should shrink from these duties. It would be wrong – indeed, arguably itself a breach of one's constitutional oath of office—to abandon one's responsibilities of faithful interpretation, application, and enforcement of Section Three. It is wrong to shrink on the pretext that some other officials may or should exercise their authority—as if one's own constitutional obligations cease to exist if others fail to act. And it is wrong to shrink from observing, and enforcing, the Constitution's commands on the premise that doing so might be unpopular in some quarters, or fuel political anger, or resentment, or opposition, or retaliation. The Constitution is not optional and Section Three is not an optional part of the Constitution.

Importantly, it is also wrong to shrink from applying Section Three on grounds of "democracy," whether on the premise that Section Three should be ignored or narrowly construed because it limits who voters may choose, or on the premise that only the voters should enforce Section Three. It is true, as we have said, that limiting democratic choice is not something to be done lightly, but it is something the Constitution does, and for serious reasons.[457] The Constitution cannot be overruled or disregarded by ordinary election results. (And we note that there is particular irony in invoking democracy to shrink from applying Section Three to the insurrectionists of 2020-2021, who refused to abide by election results and instead sought to overthrow them.)[458]

Finally, we believe it would be wrong for courts to refuse to decide cases, otherwise lawfully within their jurisdiction, concerning Section Three on the pretense that such matters are "political questions." Outside of certain exercises of power to exclude, expel, or impeach and try, committed to each House's judgment, Section Three is enforceable by the judiciary as well as by other officials.[459] Section Three's terms embody rules and standards, enforceable as any other constitutional provision

---

[457] See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 14-24 (arguing at length that "the democracy canon is a seductive but mistaken way of reading Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment," and that it "elevates a background constitutional principle in a way that is inconsistent with the text, purpose, and history of Section Three").

[458] See William Baude, The Real Enemies of Democracy, 109 Cal. L. Rev. 2407, 2418-20 (2021) ("The real enemies of democracy, at a more fundamental level, are those who try to ignore the rules of the game after they have already lost it. This past election, that means the real enemies of democracy were President Donald Trump and those who fought for him.").

[459] Supra note 95.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

is enforceable. There is no freestanding judicial power to abstain from enforcing the Constitution whenever doing so might be difficult or controversial.

We think that if these constitutional duties are taken seriously, there is a list of candidates and officials who must face judgment under Section Three. Former president Donald Trump is at the top of that list, but he is not the end of it. As we have said, it is not for us to say who all is disqualified by virtue of Section Three's constitutional rule. That is the duty and responsibility of many officials, administrators, legislators, and judges throughout the country. Where they are called on to decide eligibility to office, they are called on to enforce Section Three, applying the Constitution's legal standard to the facts before them in a given instance. Our point is to emphasize Section Three's continuing force, and broad sweep.

At all events, if a President or former President of the United States; a current or former officer of the federal executive branch; a Member or former Member of Congress; a current or former state legislator or state executive official; or a current or former federal or state court judge, planned, supported, assisted, encouraged, endorsed, or aided in a material way those who engaged in the insurrection of January 6, or otherwise knowingly and willfully participated in a broader rebellion against the constitutional system, such persons are constitutionally disqualified from office. In such situations, Section Three's constitutional disqualifications can, should, and must be carried out.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 4

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Risk Specialists Companies Insurance Agency, Inc.
d/b/a RSCIA in NH, UT & VT
CA Surplus Lines License #: 0G29322
One Montgomery Tower
25th Floor
San Francisco, CA 94104-4505
(415) 836-2700

BINDER OF INSURANCE CONFIRMATION LETTER

September 29, 2023

MARIANA SALYER
ALLIANT INSURANCE SERVICES, INC.
18100 VON KARMAN AVENUE 10TH FLOOR
IRVINE, CA 92612

Insured: THE STATE OF MICHIGAN
DTMB Risk Management
525 West Allegan Street, Lansing, MI 48909

Insurance Carrier: NATIONAL UNION FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PITTSBURGH, PA.
1271 AVE OF THE AMERICAS, FL 37, NEW YORK, NY, 10020-1304

Policy: GOVERNMENT CRIME POLICY
TAB #: 242935, SUBMISSION #: 683576840
POLICY #: 01-546-06-73
REPLACEMENT OF POLICY #: 1-590-71-05
POLICY PERIOD: FROM 10/01/2023 TO 10/01/2024

Dear MARIANA:

On behalf of National Union Fire Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, Pa. (hereinafter "Insurer"), I am pleased to confirm the binding of coverage in accordance with our agreement as set forth below and subject to the conditions set forth herein. Please review said Binder for accuracy and contact the Insurer prior to the effective date of policy coverage of any inaccuracy(ies) found within the issued Binder. If the Insurer does not hear from you prior to the effective date of policy coverage it will be understood that the Binder has been accepted as an accurate description of the agreed upon terms of coverage.

IMPORTANT POLICY ISSUANCE VERIFICATION

A policy will be issued with the name and address of the Insured exactly as referenced in the "Policy Information" Section of this Binder. If this information is inaccurate, please advise us immediately.

POLICY INFORMATION

INSURED: THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

INSURED'S ADDRESS: DTMB Risk Management 525 West Allegan Street
Lansing, MI 48909

TYPE OF POLICY: Government Crime Policy

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

BASIC FORM: CR0026 (05/06)

INSURANCE COMPANY: National Union Fire Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.

POLICY NUMBER: 01-546-06-73

EFFECTIVE DATE: 10/01/2023 EXPIRATION DATE: 10/01/2024

Single Loss Coverage Forms	Limit of Liability	Single Loss Deductible
Employee Theft-Per Loss Coverage	$5,000,000	$500,000
Forgery or Alteration	$5,000,000	$500,000
Inside Premises-Theft of Money & Securities	$5,000,000	$500,000
Inside Premises-Robbery,Safe Burglary-Other Prop.	$5,000,000	$500,000
Outside the Premises	$5,000,000	$500,000
Computer Fraud	$5,000,000	$500,000
Money Orders and Counterfeit Paper Currency	$5,000,000	$500,000
Funds Transfer Fraud	$5,000,000	$500,000

Premium	$128,493
Commission	0.00 %

Total Amount due: $128,493

Important Conditions of Binder: See Below

ENDORSEMENTS

The following endorsements will be added to the basic policy:

#	Form #	Ed Dt	Title
1	CR0246	08/07	MICHIGAN CHANGES
2	MNSCPT		DELETE BONDED EMPLOYEES EXCLUSION
3	99758	08/08	NOTICE OF CLAIM (REPORTING BY E-MAIL)
4	113013	10/12	PROTECTED INFORMATION EXCLUSION
5	MNSCPT		DUTIES IN THE EVENT OF LOSS PROVISION AMENDED
6	119679	09/15	ECONOMIC SANCTIONS ENDORSEMENT
7	113024	10/12	INDIRECT OR CONSEQUENTIAL LOSS EXCLUSION
8	CR2512	08/07	INCLUDE TREASURER OR TAX COLLECTORS AS EMPLOYEES
9	CR2541	08/07	INCLUDE DESIGNATED PERSONS OR CLASSES OF PERSONS AS EMPLOYEES
10	MNSCPT		SCHEDULED PREMISES COVERAGE ENDORSEMENT

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

11	CR2519	05/06	ADD FAITHFUL PERFORMANCE OF DUTY COVERAGE FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES
12	CR2520	08/07	ADD CREDIT, DEBIT OR CHARGE CARD FORGERY
13	CR2506	08/07	INCLUDE CHAIRPERSON AND MEMBERS OF SPECIFIED COMMITTEES AS EMPLOYEES
14	CR2508	08/07	INCLUDE SPECIFIED NON COMPENSATED OFFICERS AS EMPLOYEES
15	95442	08/07	PRIOR THEFT OR DISHONESTY
16	CR2022	08/07	INCLUDE DESIGNATED PERSON REQUIRED TO HAVE KNOWLEDGE OF LOSS (DISCOVERY FORM)
17	MNSCPT		NAMED INSURED-REVISED
18	116981	05/15	VENDOR THEFT COVERAGE ENDORSEMENT
19	CR 2505	03/00	INCLUDE LEASED WORKERS AS EMPLOYEES
20	143939	06/22	THIRD PARTY COVERAGE IDENTIFIED EMPLOYEE
21	120021	05/15	CONDITIONS AMENDED (SUBROGATION)
22	120271	08/15	BLANKET LOSS PAYEE (WHERE LEGALLY PERMISSIBLE)
23	136082	03/20	IMPERSONATION FRAUD COVERAGE GOVERNMENT CRIME DISCOVERY FORM - PRIMARY TO OTHER INSURANCE
24	132819	05/19	EXPENSES INCURRED TO ESTABLISH AMOUNT OF COVERED LOSS
25	95428	08/07	EMPLOYEE POST TERMINATION COVERAGE
26	95420	08/07	CANCELLATION OF POLICY AMENDED
27	101036	04/09	CANCELLATION AMENDATORY (RETURN PRO RATA)
28	141306	08/21	Cyberextortion Exclusion Resulting Directly
29	78859	10/01	FORMS INDEX ENDORSEMENT

CONDITIONS OF BINDER

When signed by the Insurer, the coverage described above is in effect from 12:01 AM of the Effective Date listed above to 12:01 AM of the Expiration Date listed above, pursuant to the terms, conditions and exclusions of the policy form listed above, any policy endorsements described above, and any modifications of such terms as described in this Binder section. Unless otherwise indicated, this Binder may be canceled prior to the Effective Date by the Insured, or by the Broker on the behalf of the Insured, by written notice to the Insurer or by the surrender of this Binder stating when thereafter such cancellation shall be effective. Unless otherwise indicated, this Binder may be canceled by the Insurer prior to the Effective Date by sending written notice to the Insured at the address shown above stating when, not less than thirty days thereafter, such cancellation shall be effective. Unless otherwise indicated, this Binder may be canceled by the Insurer or by the Insured on or after the Effective Date in the same manner and upon the same terms and conditions applicable to cancellation of the policy form listed above. Issuance by the Insurer and acceptance by or on the behalf of the Insured of the policy shall render this Binder void except as indicated below.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A condition precedent to coverage afforded by this Binder is that no material change in the risk occurs and no submission is made to the Insurer of a claim or circumstances that might give rise to a claim between the date of this Binder indicated above and the Effective Date.

Please note this Binder contains only a general description of coverages provided. For a detailed description of the terms of a policy you must refer to the policy itself and the endorsements bound herein.

PREMIUM PAYMENT

Our accounting procedures require that payment be remitted within 30 days of the effective date of coverage or 15 days from the billing date, whichever is later.

We appreciate your compliance with this procedure.

We appreciate your business and hope that we can be of further service to you in the future.

Sincerely,

JUSTIN BAILEY
Regional Underwriting Manager

CC: Chris Marker
Vice President

If you have any questions regarding this policy, or for any other service needs, please contact our AIG Broker Services:

Monday-Friday 9:00 AM - 6:00 PM Eastern
Telephone: 1-877-TO-SERVE or (877)867-3783
E-mail: TOSERVE@aig.com
Fax: (800) 315-3896 Raising the bar with commitment to quality

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

POLICYHOLDER NOTICE

Thank you for purchasing insurance from a member company of American International Group, Inc. (AIG). The AIG member companies generally pay compensation to brokers and independent agents, and may have paid compensation in connection with your policy. You can review and obtain information about the nature and range of compensation paid by AIG member companies to brokers and independent agents in the United States by visiting our website at www.aig.com/producer-compensation or by calling 1-800-706-3102.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOTICE TO MICHIGAN INSUREDS

MICHIGAN DISCLAIMER
Michigan Senate Bill 1213
Exempt Commercial Policyholder

The following notice is being provided in compliance with Michigan Law:

This policy is exempt from the filing requirements of section 2236 of the insurance code of 1956, 1956 PA 218, MCL 500.2236.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CRIME AND FIDELITY
CR DS 04 08 07
POLICY NUMBER:
01-590-71-05
REPLACEMENT OF POLICY NUMBER:
01-701-60-50

GOVERNMENT CRIME POLICY DECLARATIONS

In Return For The Payment Of The Premium, And Subject To All The Terms And Conditions Of This Policy, We Agree With You To Provide The Insurance As Stated In This Policy.

Coverage Is Written:

☒ Primary ☐ Excess ☐ Coindemnity ☐ Concurrent

Company Name Area:	National Union Fire Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.
Producer Name Area:	ALLIANT INSURANCE SERVICES, INC. 18100 VON KARMAN AVENUE 10TH FLOOR IRVINE, CA 92612
Named Insured:	THE STATE OF MICHIGAN
	(including any Employee Welfare or Benefit Plans)
Mailing Address:	DTMB Risk Management 525 West Allegan Street Lansing, MI 48909
	Policy Period
From:	October 1, 2022
To:	October 1, 2023 12:01 A.M. at your mailing address shown above.

Insurance Agreements	Limit of Insurance Per Occurrence	Deductible Amount Per Occurrence
1. Employee Theft - Per Loss Coverage	$5,000,000	$500,000
2. Employee Theft - Per Employee Coverage	Not Covered	Not Covered
3. Forgery Or Alteration	$5,000,000	$500,000
4. Inside The Premises - Theft Of Money And Securities	$5,000,000	$500,000
5. Inside The Premises - Robbery Or Safe Burglary Of Other Property	$5,000,000	$500,000
6. Outside The Premises	$5,000,000	$500,000
7. Computer Fraud	$5,000,000	$500,000
8. Funds Transfer Fraud	$5,000,000	$500,000
9. Money Orders And Counterfeit Money	$5,000,000	$500,000

If "Not Covered" is inserted above opposite any Insuring Agreement, such Insuring Agreement and any other reference thereto in this policy is deleted.

242935

© ISO Properties, Inc., 2006

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CRIME AND FIDELITY
CR DS 04 08 07

GOVERNMENT CRIME POLICY DECLARATIONS

POLICY NUMBER:
01-590-71-05
REPLACEMENT OF POLICY NUMBER:
01-701-60-50

Endorsements Forming Part Of This Policy When Issued:
#1,#2,#3,#4,#5,#6,#7,#8,#9,#10,#11,#12,#13,#14,#15,#16,#17,#18,#19,#20,#21,#22,#23,#24,#25,#26,#27,#28,#29

Cancellation Of Prior Insurance Issued By Us:
By acceptance of this Policy you give us notice cancelling prior policy Nos. 01-701-60-50; the cancellation to be effective at the time this Policy becomes effective.

Premium: $128,473

Countersignature Of Authorized Representative

Name:

Title:

Signature:

Date:

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the Insurer has caused this Policy to be signed by its President, Secretary and Authorized Representative. This Policy shall not be valid unless signed below at the time of issuance by an authorized representative of the insurer.

PRESIDENT

SECRETARY

AUTHORIZED REPRESENTATIVE

242935

© ISO Properties, Inc., 2006

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ENDORSEMENT# 2

This endorsement, effective at 12:01AM October 01, 2022 forms a part of Policy number: 01-590-71-05
Issued to: THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

By: National Union Fire Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.

DELETE BONDED EMPLOYEES EXCLUSION

THIS ENDORSEMENT CHANGES THE POLICY. PLEASE READ IT CAREFULLY.

This endorsement modifies insurance provided under the following:

GOVERNMENT CRIME POLICY

It is agreed that:

1. Clause D. Exclusions, paragraph 2. is hereby amended by deleting exclusion a. Bonded Employees in its entirety.

2. Nothing contained herein shall be held to vary, alter, waive or extend any of the terms, limitations, conditions, or provisions of the attached policy/bond other than as above stated.

AUTHORIZED REPRESENTATIVE

©All rights reserved.

END 002

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ENDORSEMENT# 11

CRIME AND FIDELITY
CR 25 19 05 06

This endorsement, effective 12:01 am October 1, 2022 forms a part of policy number 01-590-71-05 issued to THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

by National Union Fire Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.

THIS ENDORSEMENT CHANGES THE POLICY. PLEASE READ IT CAREFULLY.

ADD FAITHFUL PERFORMANCE OF DUTY COVERAGE FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

This endorsement modifies insurance provided under the following:

GOVERNMENT CRIME COVERAGE FORM
GOVERNMENT CRIME POLICY

and applies to the Insuring Agreements designated below:

SCHEDULE

	Insuring Agreement	Limit Of Insurance
[X]	Employee Theft - Per Loss Coverage	$5,000,000
[ ]	Employee Theft - Per Employee Coverage

Information required to complete this Schedule, if not shown above, will be shown in the Declarations.

1. The following is added to the Employee Theft Insuring Agreement designated above:

We will pay for loss or damage to "money", "securities" and "other property" resulting directly from the failure of any "employee" to faithfully perform his or her duties as prescribed by law, when such failure has as its direct and immediate result a loss of your covered property. The most we will pay for loss arising out of any one "occurrence" is the Limit of Insurance shown in the Schedule. That Limit, is part of, not in addition to, the Limit of Insurance shown in the Declarations.

2. The following exclusions are added to Section D.2. Exclusions:

a. Loss resulting from the failure of any entity acting as a depository for your property or property for which you are responsible.

b. Damages for which you are legally liable as a result of:

(1) The deprivation or violation of the civil rights of any person by an "employee"; or

(2) The tortious conduct of an "employee", except the conversion of property of other parties held by you in any capacity.

3. The Indemnification Condition is replaced by the following:

We will indemnify any of your officials who are required by law to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties against loss through the failure of any "employee" under the supervision of that official to faithfully perform his or her duties as prescribed by law, when such failure has as its direct and immediate result a loss of your covered property.

4. Part (l) of the Termination As To Any Employee Condition is replaced by the following:

(1) As soon as:

(a) You; or

(b) Any official or employee authorized to manage, govern or control your "employees" learn of any act committed by the "employee" whether before or after becoming employed by you which would constitute a loss covered under the terms of the Employee

END 011

© ISO Properties, Inc.,2005

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Theft Insuring Agreement, as amended by this endorsement.

ALL OTHER TERMS, CONDITIONS AND EXCLUSIONS REMAIN UNCHANGED.

AUTHORIZED REPRESENTATIVE

END 011

© ISO Properties, Inc.,2005

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 5

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Request For Rulemaking

Pending rule set #:

2022-64 ST

Department:

State

Bureau:

Elections & Campaign Finance

Title of rule set:

Electronic Return of Absent Voter Ballots by Eligible Voters

Rule number(s) or rule set range of numbers:

R 168.101 - R 168.159

Filing date:

Pending

Effective date:

Pending

Click on the link(s) below to download

RFR Form PDF HTML

RFR Form updated on: 11/21/2022 2:06:56 PM

Copyright 2023 State of Michigan

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan Office of Administrative Hearings and Rules

Administrative Rules Division (ARD)

MOAHR-Rules@michigan.gov

REQUEST FOR RULEMAKING (RFR)

1. Department:
State

2. Bureau:
Elections & Campaign Finance

3. Promulgation type:
Full Process

4. Title of proposed rule set:
Electronic Return of Absent Voter Ballots by Eligible Voters

5. Rule numbers or rule set range of numbers:
R 168.101 - R 168.159

6. Estimated time frame:
6 months

Name of person filling out RFR:
Jenny McInerney

E-mail of person filling out RFR:
McInerneyJ1@michigan.gov

Phone number of person filling out RFR:
517-331-7825

Address of person filling out RFR:
430 W. Allegan Street
Lansing, MI 48918

7. Describe the general purpose of these rules, including any problems the changes are intended to address.
To establish rules for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible voters as specified in MCL 168.759a(17) and authorize an electronic portal to facilitate their return.

8. Please cite the specific promulgation authority for the rules (i.e. department director, commission, board, etc.).
"The secretary of state shall promulgate rules that establish policies and procedures for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members. The secretary of state may develop and maintain a secure web portal on the secretary of state's website to facilitate the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members." MCL 168.759a(17).

A. Please list all applicable statutory references (MCLs, Executive Orders, etc.).
MCL 168.31(1)(a), MCL 168.32(1), MCL 168.37, MCL 168.759a(12), MCL 168.759a(13), MCL 168.759a(17).

B. Are the rules mandated by any applicable constitutional or statutory provision? If so, please explain.
Yes. 2022 PA 197 requires the Secretary of State (SOS) to promulgate rules that establish policies and procedures for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible voters. Under PA 197, the rules must be promulgated no later than January 1, 2024 and must allow for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible voters, as specified in MCL 168.759a(17), no later than the 2024 statewide presidential primary election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9. Please describe the extent to which the rules conflict with or duplicate similar rules, compliance requirements, or other standards adopted at the state, regional, or federal level.

The rules do not conflict with or duplicate similar rules, compliance requirements, or other standards adopted at the state, regional, or federal level. The proposed rules reflect and implement certain aspects of 2022 PA 197.

10. Is the subject matter of the rules currently contained in any guideline, handbook, manual, instructional bulletin, form with instructions, or operational memoranda?

No

11. Are the rules listed on the department's annual regulatory plan as rules to be processed for the current year?

No

12. Will the proposed rules be promulgated under Section 44 of the Administrative Procedures Act, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.244, or under the full rulemaking process?

Full Process

13. Please describe the extent to which the rules exceed similar regulations, compliance requirements, or other standards adopted at the state, regional, or federal level.

The rules would not exceed similar regulations, compliance requirements, or other standards adopted at the state, regional, or federal level. According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, at least seven states allow Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act (UOCAVA) voters to return a voted absentee/mail ballot through an online portal. Many states also allow return by fax or email.

14. Do the rules incorporate the recommendations received from the public regarding any complaints or comments regarding the rules? If yes, please explain.

This proposed rule has not been submitted to the public for comment.

15. If amending an existing rule set, please provide the date of the last evaluation of the rules and the degree, if any, to which technology, economic conditions, or other factors have changed the regulatory activity covered by the rules since the last evaluation.

This proposed rule does not amend a current rule.

16. Are there any changes or developments since implementation that demonstrate there is no continued need for the rules, or any portion of the rules?

This proposed rule does not amend a current rule.

17. Is there an applicable decision record (as defined in MCL 24.203(6) and required by MCL 24.239(2))? If so, please attach the decision record.

No

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

v

No. 23-000128-MM

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as the duly elected Secretary of State,

Defendant.

Robert Davis, In Pro Per
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), Michigan PII MCL 15.243(1
313.523. PII MCL 15.24
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

---/

DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE'S RESPONSE TO 9/18/23 EMERGENCY MOTION FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT, WRIT OF MANDAMUS, AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR COUNTS 1-IV OF VERIFIED COMPLAINT
AND
IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT'S 10/16/23 PARTIAL MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: October 16, 2023

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Index of Authorities iii

Introduction 1

Counter-Statement of Facts 1

Standards for granting declaratory or mandamus relief 5

Argument 7

I. Secretary Benson's responses to the questions posed by the Court in its October 9, 2023, scheduling order. 7

A. Whether defendant has an affirmative duty and the authority to decide whether a candidate may be placed on a ballot prior to a court's review of the issue. 7

B. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to the offices of President and Vice President and to candidates for those offices? 12

C. Whether § 3 precludes a person from serving in an office covered by § 3, seeking election to an office covered by § 3, or both. 17

D. Whether § 3 is self-executing. 19

E. Whether the 1872 Amnesty Act applies to the instant case. 21

II. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition as to Counts I, II, V, and VI. 23

A. Standard of Review for Summary Disposition. 23

B. Davis fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under Counts I and II where the date of the presidential primary is yet to be determined and where the date upon which the primary will be held is controlled by the Michigan Constitution. 23

C. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition in her favor with respect Count V where there can be no dispute that she has satisfied any applicable bond requirement. 25

D. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition in her favor with respect Count VI where there can be no dispute that she has initiated rulemaking relating to the electronic return of absent voter ballots by military voters. 27

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Conclusion and Relief Requested 28

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases

Allstate Ins Co v Hayes, 442 Mich 56 (1993) 6

Arizona v Inter Tribal Council of Ariz, Inc, 570 US 1 (2013) 8

Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich 673 (2022) 11

Cawthorn v Amalfi, 35 F4th 245 (CA 4, 2022) 15, 22

Cawthorn v Circosta, 590 F Supp 3d 873 (ED NC 2022) 14

Central High Sch Athletic Ass'n v Grand Rapids, 274 Mich 147 (1936) 6

Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't v Attorney Gen, 243 Mich App 43 (2000) 5

Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 280 Mich App 273 (2008) 6

Costello v INS, 376 US 120 (1964) 22

Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152 (1946) 11

Davis v Sec'y of State, 333 Mich App 588 (2020) 11

Ernsting v Ave Maria College, 274 Mich App 506 (2007) 23

Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283 (ND Ga 2022) 12, 14

Greene v Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F 4th 907 (CA 11, 2022) 14

Griffin v New Mexico, ex rel White, No. S-1-SC-39571 (NM Feb 16, 2023) 14, 22

Hansen v FinchemI, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz May 9, 2022) . 14, 17, 20

Hayes v Parole Bd, 312 Mich App 774 (2015) 7

Henry v Dow Chem Co, 473 Mich 63 (2005). 23

In re Griffin, 11 F Cas 7 (CCD Va 1869) 20

Joseph v Auto Club Ins Ass'n, 491 Mich 200 (2012) 23

Lansing Sch Educ Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Educ (On Remand), 293 Mich App 506 (2011) 5, 6

Lickfeldt v Dept of Corrections, 247 Mich App 299 (2001) 7

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MacDonald v. PKT, Inc., 464 Mich 322 (2001) 23

Moore v Genesee Cty, 337 Mich App 723 (2021) 10

People v Lewis, 503 Mich 162 (2018) 11

Powell v McCormack, 395 US 486 (1969) 18

PT Today, Inc v Comm'r of Office of Fin & Ins Servs, 270 Mich App 110 (2006) 5

Rowan v Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022) 14

Teasel v Dept of Mental Health, 419 Mich 490 (1984) 7

Tuggle v Dep't of State Police, 269 Mich App 657 (2005) 6

UAW v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486 (2012) 5, 25

United Sav Bank of Detroit v Sch Dist No. 5, Fractional, Redford & Livonia Tps, Wayne Cnty, & Farmington Twp, Oakland Cnty, 280 Mich 419 (1937) 25

Univ Med Affiliates, PC v Wayne Co Executive, 142 Mich App 135 (1985) 6

US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779 (1995) 18

West v Gen Motors Corp, 469 Mich 177 (2003) 23

White-Bey v Dept of Corrections, 239 Mich App 221 (1999) 6

Statutes

MCL 15.1 25

MCL 15.2 26

MCL 15.5 26

MCL 15.51 ..... 2, 25, 26

MCL 168.131 10

MCL 168.161 10

MCL 168.21 ..... 8, 24

MCL 168.281 10

MCL 168.31(1) 8

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MCL 168.41 10

MCL 168.42 9

MCL 168.51 10

MCL 168.558(1) 10

MCL 168.591 9

MCL 168.613a 2, 4, 23, 24

MCL 168.613a(1) 2, 23

MCL 168.614a(1) 8

MCL 168.615a 9

MCL 168.615a(2) 9

MCL 168.616a 9

MCL 168.619 9

MCL 168.71 10

MCL 168.713 4

MCL 168.714 4

MCL 168.759a 4, 27

MCL 168.759a(13) 3, 27

MCL 168.759a(17) 3, 27, 28

MCL 168.91 10

Other Authorities

Amnesty Act of 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432 21

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 NYU J L & Liberty 1 (2021) 15

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3, 28 TEX REV L & POL (forthcoming 2024) 20

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 Wm & Mary Bill Rts J 153, 189-194 (2021) 18

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulson, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U PA L REV ___ (forthcoming 2024) 16

Rules

MCR 2.116(C) (10) 28

MCR 2.116(C)(10) 23

MCR 2.116(C)(8) 23, 28

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 2, § 3 10

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) 8

Const 1963, art 5, § 3 8

US Const art I, § 4, cl 1 7

US Const art II, § 1, cl 2 8

US Const, Am XIV, § 3 13

US Const, art II, § 1, cl 5 9

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

In his principal claim Plaintiff asks this Court to declare that the Secretary of State has a duty pursuant to her oath under article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution to determine whether former President Donald Trump should be disqualified from appearing as a presidential candidate on Michigan's ballot under the "disqualification" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. This Court should decline to grant such relief.

The Secretary takes her role as the State's chief elections officer with the utmost seriousness. And it is her duty to ensure that Michigan elections are conducted in accordance with the laws of this State and in a manner that preserves the purity and integrity of the process. The Secretary does not dispute that allowing an unqualified candidate to appear on the ballot undermines that very process. But the question is who has the authority to determine whether a candidate for President of the United States has engaged in insurrection and should be disqualified from seeking or holding that office under the federal Constitution.

Respectfully, the laws of this State have not conferred upon the Secretary the authority to determine a question of such magnitude, nor the process or procedure for even entertaining and resolving such a legal- and fact-dependent challenge. To be clear, the Secretary stands ready to fulfill her oath to uphold the state and federal Constitutions by complying with any order this Court or another issues in relation to the former President's eligibility to appear on Michigan's ballot. But until a court so decides, the Secretary takes no position on the federal constitutional issues raised in this case.

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF FACTS

In his complaint, Plaintiff Robert Davis seeks relief on multiple counts.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Overview of Davis's claims

In Count I, Davis seeks a declaration that Secretary Benson must schedule and hold the 2024 presidential primary election on March 12, 2024, rather than on February 27, 2024, as required by MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023. (Comp, ¶¶ 7-41.) As Davis notes in his filing, Public Act 2 of 2023 did not receive immediate effect.[1]

In Count II, Davis seeks mandamus relief to compel the Secretary to hold the presidential primary in March consistent with the declaration he seeks in Count I. (Compl, ¶¶ 42-55.)

In Count III, Davis seeks a declaration that Secretary Benson has a legal duty under article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution to determine whether a presidential candidate meets eligibility requirements to run for President of the United States. (Compl, ¶¶ 56-90.) Specifically, Davis alleges that the Secretary has the authority to determine that former President Donald Trump is ineligible to run as candidate for President in 2024 pursuant to the disqualification clause in § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the US Constitution. (Id.)

In Count IV, Davis seeks mandamus relief to compel the Secretary to issue the declaratory ruling previously requested by Davis declaring that former President Trump is ineligible to run as a candidate for President in Michigan. (Compl, ¶¶ 91-104.)

In Count V, Davis seeks a declaration that the Secretary of State was required to comply with MCL 15.51, which requires the filing of a bond within 20 days of assuming office. (Compl, ¶¶ 105-125.) Davis alleges that he submitted FOIA requests for the Secretary's bond and that no record was provided. (Id.)

[1] The legislative history for Public Act 2 is available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0013 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And in Count VI, Davis seeks a writ of mandamus compelling the Secretary to promulgate rules pursuant to MCL 168.759a(17) regarding the electronic return of voted ballots by overseas military voters. (Comp, ¶¶ 126-142.) Public Act 197 of 2022 amended MCL 168.759a(13) to provide for the ability of military voters to return absent voter ballots electronically and required the Secretary of State to promulgate rules to provide for the process to do so. MCL 168.759a(17), as amended by 2022 PA 197.[2]

Procedural history

Davis filed his complaint against Secretary Benson on September 15, 2023, and the emergency motion for declaratory relief on September 18, 2023.[3] He then filed an emergency motion for an expedited hearing and briefing schedule on September 19, 2023.[4] But Davis did not serve his complaint and motions until September 22, 2023.[5] In his "emergency motion for expedited hearing and expedited briefing schedule for plaintiff's 9/18/2023 emergency motion for declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause for Counts I-IV of verified complaint", Davis requested that this Court decide his motions "within the next 14 days," which would have been by October 3, 2023. (9/19/23 Motion, p 3.)

On September 29, 2023, the Secretary responded to the emergency motion for an expedited hearing, arguing that relief was not warranted by October 3, but that the Secretary did not oppose a reasonably expedited briefing schedule. (Def's 9/29/23 Response).

---

[2] The legislative history for Public Act 197 is available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0311 (2021).

[3] See register of actions for Case No. 23-000128-MB, available at RegisterOfActions (michigan.gov)

[4] Id.

[5] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On October 9, 2023, this Court entered an expedited scheduling order in which it denied Davis's request for relief by October 3, 2023, but ordered Defendant to respond to Davis's emergency motion and complaint by October 16, 2023. (10/9/23 Order.) The Court further stated that it was expediting the instant case along with another case, LaBrant et al v Benson, Court of Claims No. 23-000137-MZ, which raises similar claims regarding the eligibility of former President Trump to appear as a candidate for U.S President on the ballot in Michigan. (Id.) Defendant understands the Court's order to require responses to the LaBrant complaint by October 16, as well.

The Court further ordered the Plaintiffs in both cases to give notice to Mr. Trump of the cases and the Court's order. (Id.) And the Court ordered Defendant address six specific questions concerning application of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Election dates to consider

Under the existing statute, MCL 168.613a, the date of the presidential primary continues to be March 12, 2024. But, because it is possible that Public Act 2 of 2023 may become effective and change the date to February 27, 2024, the Secretary has been preparing for the February date.[6] Using the February date, absent voter ballots for the primary must be available to send out to military and overseas voters by January 13, 2024. MCL 168.759a.[7] To meet that date, the ballot must be finalized early in January so that county clerks have time to print and distribute ballots. MCL 168.713 (requiring county boards to deliver absent voter ballots to the county clerk at least 47 days before the primary election; MCL 168.714 (requiring county clerks

---

[6] See February 27, 2024, Presidential Primary Dates, available at Election Calendar of Dates (michigan.gov).

[7] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to deliver AV ballots to the township and city clerks at least 45 days before the primary election). This means that court proceedings and any appeals must conclude before that date to ensure the timely delivery of absent voter ballots.

STANDARDS FOR GRANTING DECLARATORY OR MANDAMUS RELIEF

Declaratory relief under MCR 2.605

A plaintiff seeking declaratory relief must meet the requirements of MCR 2.605, which provides that "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment . . . ." Pursuant to MCR 2.605, "[t]he existence of an 'actual controversy' is a condition precedent to invocation of declaratory relief." Lansing Sch Educ Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Educ (On Remand), 293 Mich App 506, 515 (2011) (citation omitted).

"An actual controversy exists when declaratory relief is needed to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights." 293 Mich App at 515 (citing Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't v Attorney Gen, 243 Mich App 43, 55 (2000)). "The essential requirement of the term actual controversy under the rule is that plaintiffs plead and prove facts that demonstrate an adverse interest necessitating the sharpening of the issues raised." UAW v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495 (2012) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). "Generally, where the injury sought to be prevented is merely hypothetical, a case of actual controversy does not exist." Citizens for Common Sense, 243 Mich App at 55.

But "[t]he language of MCR 2.605 is permissive rather than mandatory; thus, it rests with the sound discretion of the court whether to grant declaratory relief." PT Today, Inc v Comm'r of Office of Fin & Ins Servs, 270 Mich App 110, 126 (2006). This is true even if a case or controversy exists. Allstate Ins Co v Hayes, 442 Mich 56, 74 (1993) ("Assuming the existence of a case or controversy within the subject matter of the court, the determination to make such a declaration is ordinarily a matter entrusted to the sound discretion of the court.") (citation omitted). Further, "[o]ur Supreme Court has long recognized the necessity of having all interested parties before it in order to have a case that is appropriate for declaratory judgment." Lansing Schools Educ Ass'n, 293 Mich App at 516 (holding that plaintiffs failed to present an actual controversy where interested parties were missing from the case), citing Central High Sch Athletic Ass'n v Grand Rapids, 274 Mich 147, 153 (1936).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mandamus relief

A writ of mandamus remains an extraordinary remedy and will only be issued where: "(1) the party seeking the writ has a clear legal right to performance of the specific duty sought, (2) the defendant has the clear legal duty to perform the act requested, (3) the act is ministerial, and (4) no other remedy exists that might achieve the same result." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 280 Mich App 273, 284 (2008), aff'd in result, 482 Mich 960 (2008), citing Tuggle v Dep't of State Police, 269 Mich App 657, 668 (2005). "The burden of showing entitlement to the extraordinary remedy of a writ of mandamus is on the plaintiff." White-Bey v Dept of Corrections, 239 Mich App 221, 223 (1999); Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, 324 Mich App at 584.

With respect to the elements of mandamus, "a clear, legal right" is "one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided." Univ Med Affiliates, PC v Wayne Co Executive, 142 Mich App 135, 143 (1985) (quotation marks and citation omitted). "A clear legal duty, like a clear legal right, is one that 'is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided.' " Hayes v Parole Bd, 312 Mich App 774, 782 (2015) (citation omitted). Michigan courts have identified only two circumstances in which a clear legal duty to act exists such that mandamus may compel performance of the duty: (1) when the act sought to be compelled is clearly ministerial, leaving no exercise of discretion or judgment, Lickfeldt v Dept of Corrections, 247 Mich App 299, 302 (2001); and (2) when the officer is charged with the duty to perform an act which requires the exercise of discretion. Teasel v Dept of Mental Health, 419 Mich 490, 410 (1984).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ARGUMENT

I. Secretary Benson's responses to the questions posed by the Court in its October 9, 2023, scheduling order.

The Court ordered Defendant Benson to address six specific questions relating to § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, including whether the Secretary is authorized to disqualify a candidate for President under that section. Because the Secretary has no authority to make such a determination, she has no official position as to the outcome of the related constitutional questions. Her responses to the questions below, other than to the first question, therefore do not advance an affirmative position.

A. Whether defendant has an affirmative duty and the authority to decide whether a candidate may be placed on a ballot prior to a court's review of the issue.

Although the Court's question refers to a "candidate" generally, the Secretary will address this question as if directed to candidates for the Office of President.

The US Constitution delegates to state "Legislature[s]" the authority to regulate the "Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives," subject to Congress's ability to "make or alter such Regulations." US Const art I, § 4, cl 1. This provision is known as the "Elections Clause." The Clause "imposes" on state legislatures the "duty" to prescribe rules governing federal elections. Arizona v Inter Tribal Council of Ariz, Inc, 570 US 1, 8 (2013). It also guards "against the possibility that a State would refuse to provide for the election of representatives" by authorizing Congress to prescribe its own rules. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Similar to the Elections Clause, the "Electors Clause" of the US Constitution provides that "[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of [Presidential] Electors." US Const art II, § 1, cl 2. Congress can "determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States." US Const art II, § 1, cl. 4. Congress has set the time for appointing electors as "the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in every fourth year succeeding every election of a President and Vice President." 3 USC 1.

Under the Michigan Constitution, the Legislature "shall enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all . . . elections[.]" Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2). The Legislature delegated the task of conducting proper elections to the Secretary of Secretary, an elected Executive-branch officer, and the head of the Department of State. Const 1963, art 5, §§ 3, 9. See also, MCL 168.31(1), MCL 168.21.

The Legislature has prescribed the manner in which candidates for the Office of President obtain ballot access in Michigan. With respect to obtaining access to the presidential primary ballot, under MCL 168.614a(1), the Secretary creates a list of candidates from national news media sources:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. . . . [Emphasis added.]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And under subsection 614a(2), the chairpersons for the major political parties in Michigan file a list of candidates with the Secretary after she issues her list:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. . . .

All names of the candidates identified under § 614a will then be placed on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws.[8] MCL 168.615a ("Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party.") (emphasis added). The winning candidates for each party are then certified by the Board of State Canvassers. MCL 168.616a. However, the names of which candidates for President will actually appear on the November general election ballot is ultimately a determination made by the major political parties through their respective fall state conventions. See, e.g., MCL 168.42, 168.591, 168.619. This process usually results in the winners of the Michigan presidential primary election being nominated by the parties as their candidates for November, but that is not a forgone result.

The US Constitution imposes qualifications for the Office of President. See, e.g., US Const, art II, § 1, cl 5 ("No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.") But no

[8] A person who is not identified as a candidate under either method described in § 614a(1)-(2), may seek to access the ballot by timely filling a nominating petition containing sufficient valid signatures of registered voters. MCL 168.615a(2).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

language in §§ 614a, 615a, or any other section of the Michigan Election Law requires or authorizes the Secretary to determine whether a candidate for President meets the qualifications for office or is otherwise eligible to run for or hold that office if elected.

In contrast, the Legislature has incorporated eligibility requirements for various offices into the Michigan Election Law, including federal offices, see, e.g., 168.51, 168.71, 168.91, 168.131, 168.161, 168.281, and has required these candidates to file "affidavit[s] of identity," which include a statement that a candidate "meets the constitutional and statutory qualifications for the office sought," MCL 168.558(1)-(2).[9] Candidates who fail to complete a certificate identity or supply false information are prohibited from appearing on the ballot. Moore v Genesee Cty, 337 Mich App 723, 731 (2021). The Legislature chose, however, to expressly exclude candidates for President from compliance with the affidavit of identity requirement, likely because the Legislature expects the parties to police the qualifications and eligibility of their candidates. MCL 168.558(1) ("The affidavit of identity filing requirement does not apply to a candidate nominated for the office of President of the United States or Vice President of the United States.").

There simply is no statute in the Michigan Election Law that imposes upon the Secretary a duty to determine whether a candidate for President meets the qualifications for office or is otherwise eligible to run for or hold that office if elected. Nor can such a duty be implied from any statute, particularly where the Legislature expressly relieved presidential candidates from making any affirmation that they meet the qualifications for that office. See MCL 168.558(1). The Legislature's drafting choice strongly suggests that the Secretary has neither the duty nor the authority to prohibit a presidential candidate who lacks the constitutional qualifications from appearing on a primary or general election ballot. See People v Lewis, 503 Mich 162, 165-66 (2018) ("[W]hen the Legislature includes language in one part of a statute that it omits in another, it is assumed that the omission was intentional."). And while the Secretary has the "inherent authority to take measures to ensure that voters [are] able to avail themselves of the constitutional rights established" in article 2, § 4 of the Michigan Constitution, Davis v Sec'y of State, 333 Mich App 588, 601 (2020), nothing in that article suggests she has the authority to modify the largely ministerial process of identifying and accepting a slate of presidential candidates to be voted upon at the presidential primary (or at the November election).

[9] There is an eligibility requirement for presidential electors. See MCL 168.41, Const 1963, art 2, § 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Further, whether the Fourteenth Amendment bars Mr. Trump from appearing as a presidential candidate on Michigan's ballots, is a federal constitutional question of enormous consequence. Michigan courts have held that administrative agencies generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions. Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich 673, 710 (2022), citing Dickerson v Warden, Marquette Prison, 99 Mich App 630, 641-642 (1980). See also Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152, 159 (1946). And here, where the Legislature has not authorized or required the Secretary to determine or confirm whether candidates for President are qualified and eligible to serve, she has no authority to determine this constitutional question.

In his pleadings, Davis argues that article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution, which requires state officers to take an oath in which they "swear (or affirm) that [they] will support the Constitution of the United States," requires the Secretary to resolve the Fourteenth Amendment question otherwise she is not supporting the US Constitution. (Comp, ¶¶ 77-90.) But the text of § 3 does not speak directly to whether the Secretary or any other state official must prohibit a candidate for the Office of President from appearing on a state's ballot when state law confers no authority on that official to evaluate presidential candidates' qualifications for office. And article 11, § 1 does not somehow authorize the Secretary to determine a constitutional question she is otherwise not required or authorized to resolve. Moreover, the Secretary simply has no administrative process for making the legal—let alone factual—determinations that would need to be made concerning the application of § 3. There is no statutory vehicle that provides either a citizen with the right to initiate such an action or for the participation of the impacted candidate, who would presumably be entitled to some process. See, e.g., Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283 (ND Ga 2022) (discussing plaintiff's due process concerns in case involving disqualification under § 3).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary will certainly comply with any order entered by this Court or another that declares Mr. Trump eligible or ineligible to appear as a candidate for President on Michigan's ballots by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment. And in doing so, the Secretary will uphold the oath she took to support both the US Constitution and the Michigan Constitution.

For these reasons, the Secretary does not have an affirmative, legal duty or the authority to decide whether the Fourteenth Amendment renders Mr. Trump eligible or ineligible to be placed on the ballot prior to a court's review of that constitutional question. And because that is so, Davis is not entitled to a declaration that the Secretary has such a duty, or to mandamus relief to compel her to perform such a duty.

B. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to the offices of President and Vice President and to candidates for those offices?

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides:

> No Person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability. [US Const, Am XIV, § 3 (emphasis added).]

Again, the Secretary takes no position with respect to whether Mr. Trump should appear as a candidate in Michigan's presidential primary or general election, or whether he should be precluded from doing so under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Court's question raises two, inter-related questions—does the office of President constitute "any office" "under the United States" from which a person may be disqualified from holding based on his engaging in insurrection. And was Mr. Trump "an officer of the United States" who previously took an oath to support the US Constitution for purposes of § 3 when he previously held the office of President. In a separate question, this Court also asked whether there were any state or federal cases interpreting or applying § 3 to candidates for office or persons serving in an office, including any cases currently involving Mr. Trump as potential presidential candidate.

Addressing this second question first, there are numerous cases pending throughout the United States in which the movants seek to disqualify Mr. Trump under § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[10] A list of known cases is attached as Exhibit 1. Upon information and belief, none of the cases have yet resulted in a substantive determination by a court regarding the application of § 3 to Mr. Trump.[11] And several have been dismissed for lack of standing.

---

[10] Most of the cases have been filed by John Anthony Castro, a purported presidential candidate from Texas. Castro filed a complaint against Secretary Benson and Donald J. Trump in the Court of Claims on August 31, 2023. See Castro v Benson, et al, Case No. 23-000122, however, the complaint has not been served.

[11] Cases worth monitoring currently include Growe v Simon, Minnesota Supreme Court Case No. A23-1354, and Anderson v Griswold, District Court, City and County of Denver, 23-cv-32577. See Exhibit 1.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(Exhibit 1, Case list.) As far as cases applying § 3 to other candidates, there are a few cases of recent vintage in which several candidates were challenged on that basis.

In Hansen v Finchem, the court determined that the plaintiffs could not use a state statute allowing challenges to candidates based upon their qualifications for office to disqualify the candidates under § 3 because § 3 is a "legal proscription from holding office," not a law that "prescribe[s]" qualifications. No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz May 9, 2022).

In Rowan v Greene, the Georgia Secretary of State affirmed an administrative hearing officer's determination that the plaintiffs failed to provide sufficient proof that Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene was not qualified to seek and hold public office. See No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022). See also Greene v Raffensperger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283, 1320 (ND Ga 2022) (refusing to enjoin the state proceedings where Greene failed to demonstrate that states were prohibited from enforcing § 3), Greene v Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F 4th 907, 909-910 (CA 11, 2022) (remanding for dismissal of case as moot).

In Griffin v New Mexico ex rel White, a quo warranto proceeding, a state court judge determined that § 3 applied to a county commissioner convicted of a crime in relation to the events on January 6, 2021, and the commissioner was removed from office. See No. D-101-CV-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619 (NM Dist Ct Sept 6, 2022). The commissioner's appeal to the New Mexico Supreme Court was denied. Griffin v New Mexico, ex rel White, No. S-1-SC-39571 (NM Feb 16, 2023).

And in Cawthorn v Circosta, voters filed a challenge with the North Carolina State Board of Elections seeking to disqualify Representative Madison Cawthorne from the 2022 primary ballot, and Cawthorne filed suit in federal court seeking to bar the state board from considering

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the issue. 590 F Supp 3d 873, 891 (ED NC 2022). The District Court held that the 1872 Amnesty Act supported enjoining the state proceedings. Id. at 890-892. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, and no further litigation occurred as Cawthorne lost in the primary. Cawthorn v Amalfi, 35 F4th 245 (CA 4, 2022).

Given the dearth of cases, reference to recent law review articles may assist the Court.

In a 2021 article, the authors opine that the President of the United States is not an "officer of the United States" whose prior taking of an oath will trigger the disqualification from holding a covered office under § 3. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 NYU J L & Liberty 1 (2021), attached as Exhibit 2. In summary of what is a complex argument, the authors argue that the terms "officer of the United States" and "[o]ffice . . . under the United States" should be presumed to have different meanings in § 3 since the Framers used different wording within the same section. Id. at 7-10. They argue that the history of the Framers use of this different terminology in different sections of the Constitution, supports a presumption that "these phrases refer to different positions." Id. at 9. And that "the better inference . . . is that the President and Vice President are not 'Officers of the United States.'" Id. at 10.

> All available evidence suggests that the Framers were deliberate. The ratifiers and their contemporaries would have understood how these alterations modified the meaning of these provisions. The different "office"- and "officer"-language presumptively had different meanings. And, we think, the Framers of 1868 also took reasonable care when using the coordinate phrases "officers of the United States" and "office ... under the United States" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. [Id.]

The authors go on to expressly argue that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of the various provisions that use that language, including § 3, that there is no compelling evidence that the Framers intended something different in § 3, and that various cases and authorities support that conclusion. Id. at 21-33. The article then discounts various past authorities and arguments that suggest or reach different conclusions. Id. at 34-50. In their conclusion, the authors note that they chose not to resolve whether the President is an "office . . . under the United States," but that if the President is not an "officer of the United States," it "ends the case" for purposes of the application of § 3. Id. at 54.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Conversely, in a 2023 article, the authors reject the analysis in the Blackman and Tillman article that the President is not an "officer of the United States," and further conclude that the President is an "officer . . . under the United States" for purposes of both clauses in § 3. See William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulson, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U PA L REV ___ (forthcoming 2024), attached as Exhibit 3. These authors argue that the provisions of § 3 should be read:

> in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one. . . . Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside. [Id. at p 105 (footnote omitted).]

The authors further argue that the list of disqualification triggering offices in § 3 ("officer . . . of the United States") closely tracks the listing of offices in the Constitution's oath provisions, see art VI, cl 3, art II, § 1, cl 8, and that the list of offices from which a person is disqualified from ("offices . . . under the United States") builds on that list. Id. at 105-106. "Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application." Id. at 106. And "if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions[.]" Id. The argue that § 3's "project of office-listing" was to simply provide a comprehensive list of positions in both clauses. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The authors reject the analysis of Blackman and Tillman as a technical and non-natural reading of the text that ultimately results in the implausible consequence that an insurrectionist President could hold the office of President, but that his prior holding of that office would not trigger disqualification. Id. at 108-109. They further note that a "variant" of that argument was refuted during congressional debates on § 3. (Id. at 110-111.)

There are certainly additional, relevant articles available, Defendant chose these as two recent competing viewpoints. It is also likely that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump, see Exhibit 1, will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 applies to the Office pf President.

C. Whether § 3 precludes a person from serving in an office covered by § 3, seeking election to an office covered by § 3, or both.

Defendant Benson understands this question as asking whether § 3 is a qualification for seeking office, or whether it is a prohibition to holding office if elected, or whether it functions as both. Again, § 3 provides, in part, that "[n]o Person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States[.]" (Emphasis added.)

This issue does not appear to have been the subject of significant litigation yet or academic discussion. But in the Arizona case discussed above in I.B, the Arizona Supreme Court held in its brief opinion that the state statute allowing candidate challenges could not be used to advance a claim under § 3 because its "scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law.'" Hansen, 2022 WL 1468157 at * 1. The statute did not apply, the court reasoned, because § 3 is a "legal proscription from holding office," not a law that "prescribe[s]" qualifications. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But in the Fourth Circuit's opinion in Cawthorn, also noted above in I.B, the Court stated in a footnote that it was "assuming without deciding" that the "disability" imposed by § 3 is a "qualification" for purposes of article I, § 5 of the US Constitution, 35 F4th at 257 n7, which provides that "Each House shall be the judge of . . . the qualifications of its own members[.]" US Const, art I, § 5. In the text the Fourth Circuit cited Powell v McCormack, 395 US 486 (1969), in which the US Supreme Court made a passing reference to § 3 but stated in a footnote that it was not deciding whether § 3 and other constitutional provisions properly constituted "qualifications." Id. at 520 n 41. See also US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779, 788 n 2 (1995) (citing Powell and likewise not deciding the issue).

Also, in Greene, the District Court discussed the state's important regulatory interests in ensuring that only qualified candidates appear on the ballot and appeared to treat the disqualification component of § 3 as a qualification. 599 F Supp 3d at 1311-1312, 1316 ("On the current record, it appears that the Challenge Statute imposes minimal burdens through its process of ensuring that only candidates who meet the Constitution's minimum threshold requirements appear on the ballot — including candidates who are not disqualified by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.")

One author has discussed the possible timing of challenges to federal-office candidates under § 3, including the President, describing possible pre-election, post-election/pre-inauguration, and post-assumption of office challenges. See Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 Wm & Mary Bill Rts J 153, 189-194 (2021).[12]

[12] The Baude and Paulson article includes a discussion of the mode of enforcing § 3. See Exhibit 3, pp 22-35.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 functions as a qualification for seeking office or a prohibition from ultimately holding office.

D. Whether § 3 is self-executing.

The question of whether § 3 is self-executing appears to have proponents on both sides. Authors Baude and Paulson in their article, discussed above in I.B., argue that § 3 functions as an automatic, legal disqualification whenever its' conditions for disqualification are met, and thus needs no implementing legislation by Congress. (Exhibit 3, p 17.) They note that the federal Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and states what the law is. (Id.) "Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: 'No person shall be' directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall be." (Id., pp 17-18.) The authors observe that this language is consistent with other self-executing "disqualification" sections, such as those in article I and article II, § 1, cl 5's requirement that "[n]o person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not meet the age requirement. (Id., p 18.) As well as other provisions, like the Thirteenth Amendment (abolishing slavery) and other sections of the Fourteenth Amendment, such as the Equal Protection Clause. (Id., pp 18-19.)

The authors recognize that Congress can enact legislation to enforce § 3, as it has in the past, but Congress need not do so where § 3 "was effective all along." (Id., p 19-20.) They further contrast § 3's language with other provisions like the Constitution's impeachment provisions, which require implementation, whereas § 3 does not. (Id., pp 20-21.) For these reasons, they conclude that § 3 "has legal force already," meaning it is self-executing. (Id., p 22.)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Blackman and Tillman, in a new article, advance a contrary view. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3, 28 TEX REV L & POL (forthcoming 2024).[13] Again, in summary of what is a complex argument, they argue that whether § 3 is self-executing ultimately depends on the manner enforcement is sought. (Id., pp 18-20.) They note that many Article I qualification-type provisions have gone unenforced, whether at the federal or state level, which undermines Baude's and Paulson's argument that such provisions are self-executing without legislation intervention, and by extension their argument that § 3 is as well. (Id., pp 25-37.) Turning to the Fourteenth Amendment, Blackman and Tillman acknowledge that § 1, which includes the due process and equal protection clauses, is generally considered self-executing. (Id., pp 38-39.) But they say "the better question is in what fashion is Section 1 self-executing?" (Id. at p 39.) The authors argue, citing various precedents, that while a defensive ("shield") use of the constitutional constraints found in the Fourteenth Amendment is always permissible, the offensive ("sword") use of the Fourteenth Amendment's limitations, including those in § 3, is not. (Id. at pp 39-53.) Thus, in their view, § 3 would be not self-executing if used as a sword to disqualify a candidate.[14]

Secretary Benson is aware of only one recent case that has touched on whether § 3 is self-executing. In Hansen, the Arizona Supreme Court did not use the words self-executing, but it noted "that Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress

---

[13] An abstract of the lengthy article as well as a download is available online at Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3 by Josh Blackman, Seth Barrett Tillman :: SSRN.

[14] Both Baude and Paulson and Blackman and Tillman spend time in their respective articles discussing the ramifications of US Supreme Court Justice Salmon Chase's decision as a circuit justice in In re Griffin, 11 F Cas 7 (CCD Va 1869), in which he determined § 3 required enabling legislation. For an additional viewpoint on this subject, the Court may wish to review Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const Comment 87, 100-108 (Spring 2021).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause ('The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article'), which suggests that ARS § 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates." 2022 WL 1468157, at *1. As above, it is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 is self-executing.

E. Whether the 1872 Amnesty Act applies to the instant case.

In 1872, Congress enacted legislation related to § 3, which provides:

> [A]ll political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States. [Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat 142 (1872).]

And in 1898, Congress removed the disabilities from the previously excepted persons in the 1872 Act by enacting another law, providing that "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed." Amnesty Act of 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

In Cawthorn, discussed previously, the District Court agreed with Representative Cawthorn that the 1872 Act permanently removed the disabilities stated in § 3. Cawthorne, 590 F Supp 3d at 890. "The 1872 Act, by its plain language, removed 'all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States from all persons whomsoever.' " Id. at 891 (emphasis in original). The court observed that Congress could have used language that clarified the act only applied to persons currently subject to § 3 but did not do so. Id. The District Court therefore enjoined any further proceedings against Cawthorne.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But the Fourth Circuit reversed the District Court.

That Court concluded that the District Court erred "in construing the Act as a sweeping removal of all future Fourteenth Amendment disabilities." Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 257. The Court determined that the lower court had read the Act incorrectly in that it did not prospectively relieve persons from disabilities in the future but was rather "'backward-looking'" because the language it employed ("imposed" and "removed") was in the "past tense." Id. at 258 (citations omitted). "Here, Congress employed the past-tense version, indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'" Id., citing Costello v INS, 376 US 120, 123–24 (1964) (referring to the past participle in "have been" as a "use of the past tense" (quotation marks omitted)). The Court went on to conclude that this construction was consistent with the Act's history and context in dealing with "the hordes of former Confederates seeking forgiveness." Id. at 259 (citation omitted). The Court thus reversed and vacated the injunction and remanded for further proceedings. Id. at 261.

The District Court in New Mexico in the Griffin case agreed with the Fourth Circuit's analysis concerning the 1872 Act. See Griffin, 2022 WL 2132042 at * 2. And in a decision preceding the Fourth Circuit's decision, the Georgia District Court in the Greene case rejected the District Court's analysis in Cawthorn. See Greene, 599 F Supp 3d at 1315 ("Suffice it to say, the Court is skeptical. It seems much more likely that Congress intended for the 1872 Amnesty Act to apply only to individuals whose disabilities under Section 3 had already been incurred, rather than to all insurrectionists who may incur disabilities under that provision in the future.")

Again, it is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of the 1872 Act.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition as to Counts I, II, V, and VI.

A. Standard of Review for Summary Disposition.

Summary disposition is proper under MCR 2.116(C)(8) if the plaintiff fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Henry v Dow Chem Co, 473 Mich 63, 71 (2005). A motion "under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint and allows consideration of only the pleadings." MacDonald v PKT, Inc, 464 Mich 322, 332 (2001). "For purposes of reviewing a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8), all well-pleaded factual allegations are accepted as true and construed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant." Ernsting v Ave Maria College, 274 Mich App 506, 509 (2007).

A motion for summary disposition brought under MCR 2.116(C)(10) tests the factual sufficiency of the complaint. Joseph v Auto Club Ins Ass'n, 491 Mich 200, 205-206 (2012). "Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(10) if there is no genuine issue regarding any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." West v Gen Motors Corp, 469 Mich 177, 183 (2003). A genuine issue of material fact exists when the record reveals an issue upon which reasonable minds might differ. Id.

B. Davis fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under Counts I and II where the date of the presidential primary is yet to be determined and where the date upon which the primary will be held is controlled by the Michigan Constitution.

Again, in Counts I and II, Davis seeks declaratory and mandamus relief to compel Secretary Benson to conduct the 2024 presidential primary election on March 12, 2024, rather than on February 27, 2024, as required by MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023. (Comp, ¶¶ 7-55.) As Davis notes, that Act did not receive immediate effect.[15] Thus, he [15] The legislative history for Public Act 2 is available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0013 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

argues the primary must be held on March 12, 2024. But Davis fails to plead an actual controversy to support his claims. Lansing Sch Educ Ass'n, 293 Mich App at 515 ("[t]he existence of an 'actual controversy' is a condition precedent to invocation of declaratory relief.")

Under article 4, § 27 of the Michigan Constitution, unless immediate effect is given an act, it shall not take effect until 90 days from the end of session. Const 1963, art 4, § 27. This means that Public Act 2 will take effect on the 91st day following the end of the Legislature's regular session. But when the Legislature will adjourn its current session is unknown. Typically, the Legislature adjourns sometime in December making the effective date sometime in March. If the Legislature adjourns earlier, then the effective date is earlier as well. So, at this point the effective date of Public Act 2 is unknown. Obviously, if the Legislature does not adjourn in time to make Public Act 2 effective in time to hold a February presidential primary, the primary will be conducted in March as required by the existing version of MCL 168.613a. This result is compelled by the Constitution.

But given the fact that Public Act 2 could become effective if the Legislature were to adjourn early, the Secretary has prepared for that eventuality by advising local clerks and computing certain deadlines for the presidential primary based on the amendment but noting that these deadlines could be adjusted if Public Act 2 does not become effective in time to conduct the primary.[16] Indeed, had she not so prepared there would surely be claims that she had failed in her duties as chief elections officers. See MCL 168.21.

[16] See Calendar of election dates available at Election Calendar of Dates (michigan.gov), and guidance for presidential candidates for 2024 at Ballot-Access-Information-for-Presidential-Candidates.pdf (michigan.gov). The latter guidance was modified to more clearly reflect the impact of Public Act 2 of 2023.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Where the effective date of Public Act 2 is unknown, but it is known that the primary will either be held on February 27 or March 12 pursuant to article 4, § 27 of the Constitution, there is no current controversy between Davis and the Secretary. There is no adverse interest between them necessitating the sharpening of the issues raised. UAW, 295 Mich App at 495. The Secretary will follow the Constitution, and she is entitled to a presumption that she will do so. See United Sav Bank of Detroit v Sch Dist No. 5, Fractional, Redford & Livonia Tps, Wayne Cnty, & Farmington Twp, Oakland Cnty, 280 Mich 419, 423 (1937) ("'There is always a presumption that official acts or duties have been properly performed, and in general it is to be presumed that everything done by an officer in connection with the performance of an official act in the line of his duty was legally done[.]' ") (citation omitted).

For these reasons, Davis's request for declaratory relief must be denied, along with his claim for mandamus relief which is premised on his request for a declaratory judgment.

C. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition in her favor with respect Count V where there can be no dispute that she has satisfied any applicable bond requirement.

In Count V, Davis seeks a declaration that Secretary Benson was required to comply with MCL 15.51, which requires the filing of a bond within 20 days of assuming office. (Compl, ¶¶ 105-125.) Davis believes the Secretary has not obtained the necessary bond because his FOIA requests did not result in the production of a copy of her bond. (Id.) This claim is without merit and is frivolous as well.

MCL 15.51 does impose a bond requirement for the Secretary of State:

> The secretary of state . . . shall be required within 20 days after entering upon the duties of [her] respective office[ ], to give bond[ ] to the people of the state of Michigan with 3 or more sureties to be approved by the state treasurer and attorney general . . . . The bond of the secretary of state shall be in the sum of $25,000.00 ….

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

However, MCL 15.1 provides that all state officers and state employees required to obtain a bond are covered by a "blanket bond":

> Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, officers . . . of all state departments . . . that are required by statute . . . to furnish bonds . . . shall be covered by a blanket bond or bonds as a departmental group or as a state group by corporate surety companies as approved by the director of the department of administration. . . . [Emphasis added.]

Under this section, the individual state officers and state employees with bond requirements are not required to secure individual bonds. The sections following § 1, MCL 15.2 through 15.4, discuss the obtaining of the blanket bond, and impose the requirement of obtaining the bond on what is now known as the Department of Management and Budget (DTMB). Thus, § 1 and the remaining provisions supersede any other statutes, including MCL 15.51. See MCL 15.5 ("This act supersedes all statutes, or parts of statutes, relating to amounts, terms and conditions, execution, approval and filing of surety bonds required of officers and employees of state departments and agencies, which are inconsistent with this act.") Meaning, Secretary Benson was not required to obtain her own, personal bond.

The DTMB satisfies these requirements through the State's Government Crime & Fidelity insurance policy, which is renewed yearly. (Exhibit 4, Excerpts of Insurance Policy.) Endorsement #2 removes the "bonded employees" exclusion from the policy, and Endorsement #11 indemnifies "all officials who are required by law to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties." (Id.) Accordingly, any bond requirement imposed on the Secretary is satisfied through the coverage specifically provided for this purpose in the insurance policy.

Because there is no genuine issue of material fact that the Secretary's obligation has been met through DTMB's maintenance of the insurance policy, she is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Count V.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

D. Secretary Benson is entitled to summary disposition in her favor with respect Count VI where there can be no dispute that she has initiated rulemaking relating to the electronic return of absent voter ballots by military voters.

Finally, in Count VI, Davis seeks a writ of mandamus compelling the Secretary to promulgate rules pursuant to MCL 168.759a(17) regarding the electronic return of voted ballots by military voters. (Comp, ¶¶ 126-142.) This claim is without merit and is frivolous as well.

Public Act 197 of 2022 amended MCL 168.759a to provide for the ability of overseas military voters to return absent voter ballots electronically, starting January 1, 2024. See MCL 168.759a, as amended by 2022 PA 197.[17] That amendment required the Secretary of State to promulgate rules to provide for the process of the return of such ballots by no later than January 1, 2024. MCL 168.759a(17), as amended by 2022 PA 197. In November 2022, the Secretary initiated a request for rulemaking regarding the electronic return of military ballots as required by § 759a(17), which request remains pending. (Exhibit 5, Request for Rulemaking.)[18] The Secretary has thus initiated rulemaking pursuant to § 759a(17), and the statute does not require rules until January 1, 2024.

However, since November 2022, bills have been introduced in the Legislature that would amend § 759a to expand who is eligible to electronically return a ballot,[19] and a bill has been introduced to postpone the start date for the return of electronically voted ballots to September 1, 2025, and to extend the time for the Secretary to promulgate rules until September 1, 2025. See [17] The legislative history for Public Act 197 is available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0311 (2021).

[18] See also MDOS request for rulemaking, available at ARS Public - RFR Transaction (state.mi.us).

[19] See Senate Bill 177, which would expand it to include "overseas voters", available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0177 (2023). See also House Bill 4210, which would expand it to include spouses and dependents of overseas military voters, available at Michigan Legislature - House Bill 4210 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

House Bill 4210, amending MCL 168.759a(17).[20] Thus, who is covered by § 759a(13) and when the process for returning voted ballots electronically must be available has been in a state of flux.

Regardless, under the current version of § 759a(17), rules need not be promulgated until January 1, 2024.

As a result, even if Davis has a clear, legal right to have rules promulgated under § 759a(17), which is certainly debatable, and the Secretary has a clear, legal duty to promulgate rules under the current version of § 759a(17), she has not failed to perform this duty. She has initiated rulemaking and the rules are not required to be promulgated until January 1, 2024, which date has yet to pass. Davis's request for mandamus relief must therefore be denied.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For the reasons stated above, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson respectfully requests that this Court resolve Plaintiff Robert Davis's emergency motion for declaratory judgment and mandamus relief consistent with the arguments made herein, and requests in addition that the Court grant summary disposition in her favor under MCR 2.116(C)(8) and (10) regarding Counts I, II, V and VI of the Complaint.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909

[20] See House Bill 4210, available at Michigan Legislature - House Bill 4210 (2023). The bill passed the House on September 27, 2023, and is now in the Senate. (Id.) See also Senate Bill 470, which would likewise extend the date to September 1, 2025, available at Michigan Legislature - Senate Bill 0470 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

517.335.7659

Dated: October 16, 2023

PROOF OF SERVICE

Heather S. Meingast certifies that on October 16, 2023, she served a copy of the above document in this matter on all counsel of record and parties in pro per via MiFILE.

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS

Plaintiff,

-vs-

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State,

Defendant,

-and-

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Proposed-Intervenor.

---/

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSTION

FILE NO.: 23-000128-MB

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Robert Davis
Plaintiff, pro se
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a) MI PII MCL 15.243(1
(313) 523-PII MCL 15.24
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 335-7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

David A. Kallman (P34200)
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC
Attorneys for Proposed-Intervenor
5600 W. Mount Hope Hwy.
Lansing, MI 48917
(517) 322-3207
dave@kallmanlegal.com
steve@kallmanlegal.com

Michael Columbo, pro hac vice coming
Mark P. Meuser, pro hac vice coming
Zachary Kramer, pro hac vice coming
DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor
177 Post St., Suite 700
San Francisco, CA 94108
(415) 433-1700
mcolumbo@dhillonlaw.com
mmeuser@dhillonlaw.com

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

For the past several years, whether Donald J. Trump is suited to hold the Presidency has been the defining political controversy of our national life. Plaintiff now asks a state court to terminate further discourse and decide this question of nationwide importance without regard for America's voters and their elected representatives. This request is manifestly inappropriate. Both the federal Constitution and Michigan law place the resolution of this nonjusticiable political question where it belongs: the democratic process, in the hands of either Congress or the people of the United States. This Court may not use Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment ("Section Three") to enjoin the Secretary of State of Michigan ("Sec. of State") from placing President Trump on the primary and general election ballots in the state.

The Complaint's many factual inaccuracies, gaps, and distortions largely fall under one overarching theme: Plaintiff has no evidence that President Trump intended or supported any violent or unlawful activity seeking to overthrow the government of the United States, either on January 6th or at any other time. On topic after topic, Plaintiff seeks to make up for the conspicuous absence of evidence by relying on innuendo, insinuation, and disdain for President Trump to win the day. Those are arguments for the American voters, not for this Honorable Court.

This Court should dismiss the Complaint for numerous reasons:

- First, this case presents a nonjusticiable political question that is constitutionally committed to Congress.
- Second, Plaintiffs lacks standing and/or a writ of mandamus is improper.
- Third, Congressional action is required to enforce Section Three because it is not self-executing when used to prohibit a candidate from standing for election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Fourth, neither Plaintiffs nor the Sec. of State has the authority to enforce Section Three as Plaintiff desires.
- Fifth, the United States Constitution and Congress solely govern presidential qualifications.
- Sixth, the prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to President Trump.
- Seventh, the conduct as alleged in the Complaint is not covered by Section Three.

For these reasons, this Court should dismiss the Complaint's claims as meritless, and remit Plaintiff's arguments to the political processes ordained by the Constitution.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

As to Plaintiff, Defendant, and Donald J. Trump, no facts have been properly pleaded. The only "facts" alleged in Plaintiff's Complaint are a mere recitation of news articles and political events.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

"Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(4) when the trial court 'lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter.'" Weishuhn v Catholic Diocese of Lansing, 279 Mich App 150, 155; 756 NW2d 483 (2008). "When determining if the trial court has subject-matter jurisdiction, [the] Court considers the pleadings, affidavits, depositions, admissions, and other documentary evidence. Durcon Co v Detroit Edison Co, 250 Mich App 553, 556; 655 NW2d 304 (2002).

For a motion brought pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8), this Honorable Court should review the pleadings to test the legal sufficiency of Plaintiff's claim. Spiek v Department of Transp, 456 Mich 331, 337; 572 NW2d 201 (1998). The motion should be granted if the claim is so clearly unenforceable that no factual development could justify Plaintiff's claim for relief. Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A motion brought under MCR 2.116(C)(10) tests the factual support for a Plaintiff's claim. Skinner v Square D Co, 445 Mich 153, 161; 516 NW2d 475 (1994). "The purpose of MCR 2.116(C)(10) is to 'avoid extensive discovery and an evidentiary hearing when a case can be quickly resolved on an issue of law.'" Kern v Kern-Koskela, 320 Mich App 212, 223; 905 NW2d 453 (2017); Maiden v Rozwood, 461 Mich 109, 120-121; 596 NW2d 817 (1999). "Opinions, conclusory denials, unsworn averments and inadmissible hearsay do not satisfy the court rule; disputed fact (or lack of it) must be established by admissible evidence." SSC Associates Limited Partnership v General Retirement System of City of Detroit, 192 Mich App 360; 180 NW2d 275, 277 (1991).

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiff's claims raise a nonjusticiable political question because a presidential candidate's qualifications are reserved for Congress and the voters to decide.

Federal and state courts presented with similar cases challenging the qualifications of presidential candidates have overwhelmingly held that they present nonjusticiable political questions the Constitution reserves for Congress and the voters. This Honorable Court should do likewise.

Political questions are nonjusticiable and therefore not cases or controversies. Massachusetts v EPA, 549 US 497, 516 (2007). The United States Supreme Court set out broad categories that should be considered nonjusticiable political questions in Baker v Carr, 369 US 186, 217 (1962):

> [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; [2] a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; [5] an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; [and 6] the potentiality of > embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For its part, Michigan has also adopted a version of the political question doctrine applicable when the courts of this state must determine whether to decide questions of state law that may have been entrusted to coordinate branches of state government. Makowski v Governor, 299 Mich App 166, 829 NW2d 291 (2012). In approaching those questions, the courts of this State have generally considered the Baker factors, albeit taking into account the greater jurisdiction granted trial courts in this State as compared to their federal counterparts. Id. at 173. Here, the U.S. Constitution reserves exclusively to the United States Congress the power under Section Three to determine whether a person may take office.

Plaintiff asks this Court to strip Congress of its power to make that determination, including waiver of disqualification by a two-thirds vote, and to empower the Sec. of State with duties she does not have. Federal and state courts have overwhelmingly ruled that challenges to the qualifications of presidential candidates are non-justiciable, taking into account considerations of comity and the deference due federal law under the Constitution's Supremacy Clause.

For example, numerous courts held that similar challenges to the qualifications of presidential candidates Barack Obama and John McCain presented nonjusticiable political questions. To wit, the Third Circuit held that a challenge to the qualifications of then-candidate Obama (based on his nationality) was a political question not within the province of the judiciary. See Berg v Obama, 586 F3d 234, 238 (3rd Cir 2009).

Multiple district courts reached the same conclusion. In Grinols v Electoral College, No. 2:12–cv–02997–MCE–DAD, 2013 WL 2294885, at *5-7 (ED Cal, May 23, 2013), the Court

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

dismissed a challenge to President Obama's qualifications for office.[1] There, the Court held that "the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not to federal courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President of the United States. As such, the question presented by Plaintiff in this case—whether President Obama may legitimately run for office and serve as President—is a political question that the Court may not answer." Id. at *6. Likewise, in Taitz v Democrat Party of Mississippi, No 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (SD Miss, Mar 31, 2015), the Court noted that the presidential electoral and qualification process "are entrusted to the care of the United States Congress, not this court" and that the Plaintiff's disqualification claims were therefore nonjusticiable.

In Robinson v Bowen, 567 F Supp 2d 1144 (ND Cal, 2008), the Court dismissed a case brought before the 2008 election seeking to remove Senator McCain from the ballot. After first holding that the plaintiff lacked standing, the Court rejected an attempt to fix that standing defect by adding Alan Keyes—a competing candidate—as a plaintiff, holding that it would be futile because:

> It is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify. Issues regarding qualifications for president are quintessentially suited to the foregoing process. Arguments concerning qualifications or lack thereof can be laid before the voting public before the election and, once the election is over, can be raised as objections as the electoral votes are counted in Congress. The members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are well qualified to adjudicate any objections to ballots for allegedly unqualified candidates. Therefore, this order holds that the challenge presented by plaintiff is committed under the Constitution to the electors and the legislative branch, at least in the first instance. Judicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course.

[1] Although the Grinols plaintiff sought the removal of a sitting president rather than a presidential candidate, the court had previously refused to grant a temporary restraining order to prevent President Obama's re-election on political question grounds. Grinols v Electoral Coll, No 12-CV-02997-MCE-DAD, 2013 WL 211135, at *4 (ED Cal, Jan. 16, 2013).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Id. at 1147.

Moreover, the Sec. of State has no authority to pre-judge a candidate's qualifications for office and strike a candidate from the ballot. The Sec. of State is required to issue a "list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential candidates" for each major political party's nomination by 4:00 p.m. on November 10, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(1). Thereafter, the state chairperson of each major political party must file a "list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party" with the Sec. of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(2). All names of the candidates will then be placed on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. MCL 168.615a.

The Sec. of State herself has admitted that she does not have the authority to refuse to place President Trump on or strike President Trump from the ballot. Even if express authority to pre-judge qualifications and strike a candidate from the ballot existed, the exercise of that authority would violate separation of powers:[2]

> If a state court were to involve itself in the eligibility of a candidate to hold the office of President, a determination reserved for the Electoral College and Congress, it may involve itself in national political matters for which it is institutionally ill-suited and interfere with the constitutional authority of the Electoral College and Congress.

[2] "Furthermore, in the context of a Presidential election, state-imposed restrictions implicate a uniquely important national interest. For the President and the Vice President of the United States are the only elected officials who represent all the voters in the Nation. Moreover, the impact of the votes cast in each State is affected by the votes cast for the various candidates in other States. Thus, in a Presidential election a state's enforcement of more stringent ballot access requirements, including filing deadlines, has an impact beyond its own borders. Similarly, a state has a less important interest in regulating Presidential elections than statewide or local elections, because the outcome of the former will be largely determined by voters beyond the state's boundaries." Anderson v Celebrezze, 460 US 780, 794-95 (1983).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Strunk v New York State Bd. Of Elections, No 6500/11, 2012 WL 1205117, *12 (Sup Ct Kings County NY, Apr 11, 2012). The California Court of Appeals' language in Keyes v Bowen, 189 CalApp4th 647, 660 (2010), is also instructive:

> In any event, the truly absurd result would be to require each state's election official to investigate and determine whether the proffered candidate met eligibility criteria of the United States Constitution, giving each the power to override a party's selection of a presidential candidate. The presidential nominating process is not subject to each of the 50 states' election officials independently deciding whether a presidential nominee is qualified, as this could lead to chaotic results. Were the courts of 50 states at liberty to issue injunctions restricting certification of duly-elected presidential electors, the result could be conflicting rulings and delayed transition of power in derogation of statutory and constitutional deadlines. Any investigation of eligibility is best left to each party, which presumably will conduct the appropriate background check or risk that its nominee's election will be derailed by an objection in Congress, which is authorized to entertain and resolve the validity of objections following the submission of the electoral votes.

Id.; accord, e.g., Jordan v Secretary of State Sam Reed, No. 12-2-01763-5, 2012 WL 4739216, at *1 (Wash Super, Aug 29, 2012) ("I conclude that this court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. The primacy of congress to resolve issues of a candidate's qualifications to serve as president is established in the US Constitution.")

If this court were to determine that President Trump had been involved in insurrection and that he could not be on the ballot, that decision would prevent Congress from fulfilling its constitutional obligations that occur when a presidential candidate is elected who is not qualified. The Constitution expressly provides that:

> If the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified … and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

US Const, Am XX. Were it to enter the requested injunction or declaratory judgment preventing President Trump from appearing on the ballot, this Honorable Court would be interfering with this

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

mechanism, responsibility for the operation of which the Constitution vests in Congress—and only in Congress. This case therefore presents a nonjusticiable political question.

II. Plaintiff lacks standing.

Plaintiff lacks standing to bring these lawsuits. The Michigan Supreme Court held:

> Where a cause of action is not provided at law, then a court should, in its discretion, determine whether a litigant has standing. A litigant may have standing in this context if the litigant has a special injury or right, or substantial interest, that will be detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large . . .

Lansing Schs Educ Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Educ, 487 Mich 349, 372; 792 NW2d 686, 700 (2010) (emphasis added).

Federal courts have widely held that individual voters lack standing to challenge the qualifications of presidential candidates.[3] In affirming the dismissal of a claim challenging President Obama's qualifications for office, the Third Circuit held that "a candidate's ineligibility . . . does not result in an injury in fact to voters." Berg v Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 239 (3d Cir. 2009).

Plaintiff makes no allegation as to how they would be "detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large" if Donald J. Trump is on the ballot. Further, they completely

---

[3] See, e.g., Hollander v. McCain, 566 F.Supp.2d 63, 71 (D.N.H. 2008), Cohen v. Obama, 2008 WL 5191864, *1 (D.D.C., Dec. 11, 2008); Berg v. Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 239 (3d Cir. 2009); Barnett v. Obama, No. SACV09-0082 DOC(ANX), 2009 WL 3861788 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 29, 2009) at *8, order clarified, No. SA CV 09-0082 DOC, 2009 WL 8557250 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 16, 2009), and aff'd sub nom. Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774 (9th Cir. 2011); Kerchner v. Obama, 612 F.3d 204, 207 (3d Cir. 2010); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 781-782 (9th Cir. 2011); Sibley v. Obama, 866 F.Supp.2d 17, 20 (D.D.C. 2012); Grinols v. Electoral Coll., No. 2:12-CV-02997-MCE, 2013 WL 2294885, at *10 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2013), aff'd, 622 F. App'x 624 (9th Cir. 2015); and Taitz v. Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *20 (S.D. Miss. Mar. 31, 2015); Const. Ass'n Inc. by Rombach v. Harris, No. 20-CV-2379, 2021 WL 4442870, at *2 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2021), aff'd, No. 21-56287, 2023 WL 418639 (9th Cir. Jan. 26, 2023); Booth v. Cruz, No. 15-CV-518, 2016 WL 403153, at *2 (D.N.H. Jan. 20, 2016), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 WL 409698 (D.N.H. Feb. 2, 2016); Fischer v. Cruz, No. 16-CV-1224, 2016 WL 1383493, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 7, 2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fail to allege how Plaintiff, specifically, has been injured in any way. How could they? Plaintiff merely pleads that he is a voter and intends to vote in the next primary and election, a statement that could apply to any eligible voter in the United States. This is not sufficient to establish standing.

Michigan recognizes a narrow exception to the general standing requirements that only applies to actions for a writ of mandamus regarding election laws. The Court of Appeals recently held:

> Michigan jurisprudence recognizes the special nature of election cases and the standing of ordinary citizens to enforce the law in election cases. "[I]n the absence of a statute to the contrary, ... a private person ... may enforce by mandamus a public right or duty relating to elections without showing a special interest distinct from the interest of the public."

Burton-Harris v Wayne Cnty Clerk, 337 Mich App 215, 225; 976 NW2d 30 (2021) (internal citation omitted). "Mandamus is the appropriate remedy for a party seeking to compel action by election officials." Attorney Gen v Bd of State Canvassers, 318 Mich App 242, 248; 896 NW2d 485 (2016).

While the Davis Plaintiff does raise mandamus, his claim also fails. A plaintiff seeking a writ of mandamus has the burden of establishing four requirements:

> (1) the party seeking the writ has a clear legal right to the performance of the duty sought to be compelled, (2) the defendant has a clear legal duty to perform the act requested, (3) the act is ministerial, that is, it does not involve discretion or judgment, and (4) no other legal or equitable remedy exists that might achieve the same result.

Burton-Harris, 337 Mich App at 228.

First, Plaintiff does not have a "clear legal right" to the performance of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment because it is not self-executing as outlined below. When a "constitutional provision is not self-executing," Plaintiff "ha[s] no right to mandamus." Muskegon Cnty v State, ___ Mich App ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2023) (Docket No. 360007); slip op at 6.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the Secretary of State has no legal duty to be the arbiter, enforcer, or adjudicator of Section Three as outlined below. Moreover, the Michigan Supreme Court held that when constitutional provisions "contemplate[] legislative action," they "may not be enforced by mandamus." Bd of Educ of Detroit v Elliott, 319 Mich 436, 443; 29 NW2d 902 (1947). In this case, it is the sole duty of Congress to adjudicate Section Three. Thus, mandamus is not available to Plaintiff.

Third, removing Donald J. Trump from the ballot is not a ministerial act. "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Burton-Harris, 337 Mich App at 228. Plaintiff's entire case is based upon a request to have the Sec. of State review statements, publications, news reports, debates, law review articles, and allegations of insurrection and apply this review to contested facts to make multiple determinations, including whether an "insurrection" occurred and, if so, whether President Trump "engaged" in it. Each requires an exceptional degree of "discretion or judgment" and would place the entire adjudication of Section Three and its implementation into the hands of a single elected official. These are the antithesis of "ministerial" determinations.

Since Donald J. Trump has never engaged in any actual acts of insurrection or rebellion, Plaintiff's entire request is that the Sec. of State review a smorgasbord of statements and speeches from Donald J. Trump and construe them to somehow collectively equate to an "insurrection." Plaintiff's request is the exact opposite of ministerial.

Fourth, Plaintiff does have another remedy: petition Congress. As outlined below, it is solely Congress that has the authority to make a determination under Section Three, not each state's Sec. of State. The proper means for Plaintiff to "achieve the same result" would be for him to request, through his elected representatives, that Congress adjudicate Section Three as it relates to Donald J. Trump.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff fails all four elements of the mandamus test.[4] In summary, Plaintiff have suffered no injury, they have not demonstrated that they will suffer any injury that is different from the "citizenry at large," and they have failed to demonstrate that they meet the mandamus elements. Plaintiff's lawsuits must therefore be dismissed.

III. The Complaint further fails because the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing and nothing has occurred to disqualify President Trump.

Even if this case did not pose a political question (it does) and if Plaintiff had standing (he does not), it would still not succeed on the merits. Section Three is not self-executing, and, therefore, it cannot support a cause of action absent an authorizing statute. See, e.g. Rosberg v Johnson, No. 8:22CV384, 2023 WL 3600895, at *3 (D. Neb. May 23, 2023); Secor v Oklahoma, No. 16-CV-85-JED-PJC, 2016 WL 6156316, at *4 (N.D. OK Oct. 21, 2016). Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment expressly states that "Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 5; See also Hansen v Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz, May 9, 2022) ("Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause."); see also, e.g., Ownbey v Morgan, 256 US 94, 112 (1921) ("[I]t cannot rightly be said that the Fourteenth Amendment furnishes a universal and self-executing remedy.").

A recent article by scholars Joshua Blackman and Seth Barrett Tillman summarizes the question of whether Section Three is self-executing as follows:

[4] Thus, even if the LaBrant Plaintiffs were permitted to amend their Complaint to add a request for mandamus, such a request would be futile.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> In our American constitutional tradition there are two distinct senses of self-execution. First, as a shield—or a defense. And second, as a sword—or a theory of liability or cause of action supporting affirmative relief. The former is customarily asserted as a defense in an action brought by others; the latter is asserted offensively by an applicant seeking affirmative relief.
>
> For example, when the government sues or prosecutes a person, the defendant can argue that the Constitution prohibits the government's action. In other words, the Constitution is raised defensively. In this first sense, the Constitution does not require any further legislation or action by Congress. In these circumstances, the Constitution is, as Baude and Paulsen write, self-executing.
>
> In the second sense, the Constitution is used offensively–as a cause of action supporting affirmative relief. For example, a person goes to court, and sues the government or its officers for damages in relation to a breach of contract or in response to a constitutional tort committed by government actors. As a general matter, to sue the federal government or its officers, a private individual litigant must invoke a federal statutory cause of action. It is not enough to merely allege some unconstitutional state action in the abstract. Section 1983, including its statutory antecedents, i.e., Second Enforcement Act a/k/a Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871, is the primary modern statute that private individuals use to vindicate constitutional rights when suing state government officers.
>
> Constitutional provisions are not automatically self-executing when used offensively by an applicant seeking affirmative relief. Nor is there any presumption that constitutional provisions are self-executing.[5]

Blackman and Tillman's article proceeds to analyze the question in depth and concludes that Section Three is not self-executing. Importantly, Blackman and Tillman's article has substantially refuted the Baude and Paulsen article cited by the Complaint. The strength of their arguments has caused Baude and Paulsen to substantially modify their own analysis. And Stephen Calabresi, a well-respected constitutional scholar and dean of the Northwestern University Law School, fully reversed his earlier agreement with Baude and Paulsen and has now concluded that Section Three

[5] Blackman and Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3: A Response to William Baude and Michael Stokes Paulsen, at 12, last viewed October 10, 2023, https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4568771 (emphasis in original; internal footnote omitted).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

does not prevent President Trump from serving as President.[6]

Ample precedent supports Blackman and Tillman's conclusion, as has been shown not only by Blackman and Tillman, but also by Kurt Lash, the leading scholarly authority on the Reconstruction Amendments, in his recent article.[7] During the debates on Section Three, Congressman Thaddeus Stevens twice argued that this section needed enabling legislation. On May 10, 1866 he argued that "if this amendment prevails, you must legislate to carry out many parts of it. . . . It will not execute itself, but as soon as it becomes a law, Congress at the next session will legislate to carry it out both in reference to the presidential and all other elections as we have a right to do."[8] On June 13, 1866, as the final speaker before the question was called, Congressman Stevens concluded his arguments to support Section Three by passionately arguing "let us no longer delay; take what we can get now, and hope for better things in further legislation; in enabling acts or other provisions. I now, sir, ask for the question."[9]

During the ratification debates, on January 30, 1867, Thomas Chalfant spoke in opposition to the Fourteenth Amendment. One concern he had was that as the Amendment was written, Congress was the only tribunal that was permitted to judge whether someone had "given aid and comfort to the enemy during the rebellion."[10] This was unthinkable to Chalfant since the current

---

[6] Prof. Steven G. Calabresi, Donald Trump Should be on the Ballot and Should Lose, https://reason.com/volokh/2023/09/16/steve-calabresi-donald-trump-should-be-on- the-ballot-and-should-lose/, last visited Sept. 29, 2023; see also Steven Calabresi, President Trump Can Not be Disqualified, Wall Street Journal, September 12, 2023.

[7] See Kurt Lash, The Meaning and Ambiguity of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment (Oct. 3, 2023), p. 37-43, available at SSRN: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4591838.

[8] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess., at 2544.

[9] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess., at 3149.

[10] See fn. 3; see also, Hon. Thos. Chalfant, member from Columbia County, in the House, January 30, 1867, on Senate Bill No. 3, in the Appendix to the Daily Legislative Record Containing the Debates on the Several Important Bills Before the Legislature of 1867 (George Bergner, ed.) (Harrisburg 1867).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

makeup of Congress was extremely hostile towards Southern leaders.[11] Chalfant argued that the only way rebel leaders would have a fair trial would be if "under the fifth section of this amendment . . . by appropriate legislation, for enforcing this amendment . . . . I can conceive of nothing, unless it be some act authorizing the appointment of a commission to prescribe qualifications and investigate claims of all candidates and candidates for office. This would be one way."[12]

One year after ratification, Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase of the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that Section Three was not self-executing and that it could only be enforced through specific procedures prescribed by Congress or the United States Constitution. In re Griffin, 11 F Cas 7 (CCVa 1869). Chief Justice Chase reasoned that a different conclusion would have created an immediate and intractable national crisis. In response to this ruling, Congress almost immediately enacted legislation suggested by the Chief Justice.

In 1870, in response to Chief Justice Chase's ruling, Congress passed a law, entitled the "Enforcement Act," which allowed federal district attorneys (but not state election officials) authority to enforce Section Three. The Enforcement Act allowed U.S. district attorneys to seek writs of quo warranto from federal courts to remove from office people who were disqualified by Section Three and further provided for separate criminal trials of people who took office in violation of Section Three. Federal prosecutors immediately started exercising quo warranto authority, bringing charges against many rebel leaders.

These actions waned after a few years,[13] and the Amnesty Act of 1898 completely removed all Section Three disabilities incurred to that date. In 1925, the Enforcement Act was repealed entirely. (By then, nearly every participant in the Civil War had passed away.) A century later, in

---

[11] See fn. 5 at 43.
[12] Id. at 43-44.
[13] See Amnesty Act of 1872 (removing most disqualifications in the manner provided by Section Three); Pres. Grant Proclamation 208 (suspending quo warranto prosecutions).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2021, legislation was introduced in Congress to create a cause of action to remove individuals from office who were engaged in insurrection or rebellion, but that bill died in Congress.[14] Thus, there is no private right of action that allows individuals such as Plaintiff to enforce Section Three against President Trump.

Congressman Stevens's concluding remarks on the floor of Congress before passage of Section Three, Mr. Chalfant's arguments during the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, Chief Justice Chase's order, and the subsequent legislative history demonstrate that Section Three is not self-executing unless Congress takes action to make it so. Section Three does not give individual secretaries of state, state or federal courts, or individual plaintiffs the authority to remove a presidential candidate from the ballot.

Nor could it be otherwise. A successful challenge would create a patchwork of 51 state (and district) election laws and potentially conflicting orders and rulings that would contradict established precedent, constitutional tradition, and common sense. Given the structure of our presidential elections, under Plaintiff's theory a single state's courts or election officials—whether acting in good faith or for partisan ends—would effectively be able to decide a national election no matter how out of step they were with the rest of the nation and its voters. This is the exact crisis Chief Justice Chase feared and it is precisely why this question is reserved for a single, uniform, national decision by Congress.

IV. Fourteenth Amendment considerations.

States are preempted from creating additional qualifications for federal office. The Constitution lists the qualifications to be President. The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits individuals from holding offices under the United States; it does not prohibit them from being [14] See H.R. 1405, 117th Cong. 2021.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

elected. States have not been delegated authority to create qualifications to run for President of the United States. Thus, Petitioners' requested relief is preempted.

Electing the President of the United States is a federal function. It arises under the Constitution as a consequence of the creation of the national government. "As Justice Story recognized, 'the states can exercise no powers whatsoever, which exclusively spring out of the existence of the national government, which the constitution does not delegate to them . . . . No state can say that it has reserved, what it never possessed." US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779, 802 (1995) (citation omitted). Thus, states cannot exercise any power over federal elections unless they are delegated such powers by the Constitution. If this were not so, it would lead to the absurd result where each state could add their own set of required qualifications in order to run for President. But see id. at 805 (states do not have authority to add their own qualifications for federal office). Moreover, if a state does not possess the authority to alter presidential qualifications, it logically follows that each state does not have any right to adjudicate presidential qualifications. Instead, the proper place to adjudicate presidential qualifications is in Congress. This is consistent with courts' determinations, in the context of a political question analysis (addressed above), that the Constitution assigned to Congress the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President of the United States.

While states are delegated some power to impose procedural requirements, such as requiring candidates to "muster a preliminary showing of support" before appearing on the ballot, they cannot add new substantive requirements. Schaefer v Townsend, 215 F3d 1031, 1038 (9th Cir 2000). States may not circumvent this limit by seeking to recast substantive restrictions as procedural ballot access conditions. See US Term Limits, 514 US at 829-835; Schaefer, 215 F3d at 1037-1039.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Yet, that is precisely what Plaintiff seeks to have this Honorable Court do in this case. Plaintiff wants this Honorable Court to direct the state to exclude President Trump from the ballot based on a purported violation of Section Three of the 14th Amendment. But doing so would require the state to adjudicate qualifications for President of the United States that are not in the Constitution.

To see why this is, it is necessary to examine the text of the 14th amendment. The 14th Amendment does not prohibit individuals from being on the ballot for an office under the United States, being nominated for such office, or being elected to such office. It prohibits them from holding such office. US Const, am 14, § 3. This distinction matters because it speaks directly to when the requirements of Section Three are operative.

This distinction makes sense because even if there is a "disability" under section 3, it may be lifted by a two-thirds vote of each House. Id. Thus, even if someone is unquestionably disqualified under Section Three, they may still appear on the ballot and be elected by the people. Whether they are able to "hold" the office depends on whether Congress "remove[s] such disability." See generally Smith v Moore, 90 Ind 294, 303 (1883) (describing the distinction between restrictions on being elected versus holding an office, and noting "[u]nder [section 3] . . . it has been the constant practice of the Congress of the United States since the Rebellion, to admit persons to seats in that body who were ineligible at the date of the election, but whose disabilities had been subsequently removed."); Privett v Bickford, 26 Kan 52, 58 (1881) (analogizing to section 3 and concluding that voters can vote for an ineligible candidate who can only take office once his disability is legally removed); Sublett v Bedwell, 47 Miss 266, 274 (1872) ("The practical interpretation put upon [Section Three] has been, that it is a personal disability to 'hold office,' and if that be removed before the term begins, the election is made good, and the person may take the office.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Ninth Circuit's opinion in Schaefer further illustrates why this is important. In Schaefer, the court evaluated a California law that required candidates for Congress to satisfy a residency requirement at the time he or she filed his or her nomination papers. As in this case, California's law sought to implement a constitutional requirement, the requirement that a member of the House of Representatives be an inhabitant of the state in which he shall be chosen.[15] Nevertheless, the court determined that California's law was unconstitutional because it added qualifications that are not found in the Constitution. Timing was critical in reaching this conclusion. The Constitution provides that an individual must be an inhabitant of the state "when elected." Id. "When elected" is not "when nominated" because nonresident candidates could move into the State and "inhabit" it in the period between nomination and election. Schaefer, 215 F3d at 1037.

As explained above, the manner of counting electoral college votes is dictated by federal statute and the United States Constitution. See e.g., 3 USC § 15. Further, "mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 USC § 15 for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted," and that "the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president-elect shall have failed to qualify." Bowen, 567 F Supp at 1146-47. Because federal constitutional and statutory law already governs presidential qualifications, federal law must reign supreme. Additionally, states may not add additional requirements for federal office beyond those listed in the Constitution, including eligibility requirements. US Term Limits, 514 US at 805. There is no precedent permitting a lone state to adjudicate a presidential

[15] US Const, art I, § 2, cl. 2.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

candidate's qualifications. Such a dispute must be addressed in Congress. Therefore, Plaintiff's claims must be dismissed.

V. The prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to President Trump.

The plain text of Section Three identifies to whom it applies. Section Three states as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

US Const, am XIV, § 3 (emphasis added)

The phrase "Officers of the United States" does not include the President. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15(1) NYU JL & LIBERTY 1 (2021). Shortly after ratification of Section Three:

> In 1876, the House of Representatives impeached Secretary of War William Belknap. During the trial, Senator Newton Booth from California observed, "the President is not an officer of the United States." Instead, Booth stated, the President is "part of the Government." Two years later, David McKnight wrote an influential treatise on the American electoral system. He reached a similar conclusion. McKnight wrote that "[i]t is obvious that . . . the President is not regarded as 'an officer of, or under, the United States,' but as one branch of 'the Government.'

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3, 28(2) TEX REV L & POL 112 (forthcoming circa Mar. 2024) (quoting David A. McKnight, The Electoral System of the United States: A Critical and Historical Exposition of its Fundamental Principles in the Constitution, and the of the Acts and Proceedings of Congress Enforcing it, 346 (Philadelphia, J.B. Lippincott & Co. 1878)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Recent precedent supports this history. Interpreting the Appointments Clause, the Supreme Court observed that "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States." Free Enterprise Fund v Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, 561 US 477, 497-98 (2010) (quoting US Const, art II, § 2, cl 2). As noted by the Supreme Court in 2020, "Article II distinguishes between two kinds of officers—principal officers (who must be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate) and inferior officers (whose appointment Congress may vest in the President, courts, or heads of Departments)." Seila Law LLC v. CFPB, 140 S Ct 2183, 2199 n. 3 (2020). Neither category includes the President.

Three provisions in the U.S. Constitution show that the President is not "an officer of the United States":

> First, presidents fall under the scope of the Impeachment Clause precisely because there is express language in the clause providing for presidential impeachments; the Impeachment Clause does not rely on general "office"- or "officer"-language to make presidents impeachable. We think this is the common convention with regard to drafting constitutional provisions. When a proscription is meant to control elected positions, those positions are expressly named, as opposed to relying on general "office"- and "officer"-language. Congress does not hide the Commander in Chief in mouseholes or even foxholes. For example, in 1969, future-Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, then an Executive Branch attorney, addressed this sort of clear-statement principle. Statutes that refer to "officers of the United States," he wrote, generally "are construed not to include the President unless there is a specific indication that Congress intended to cover the Chief Executive." Five years later, future-Justice Antonin Scalia, then also an Executive Branch attorney, reached a similar conclusion with regard to the Constitution's "office"-language. These Executive Branch precedents would counsel against deeming the President an "officer of the United States."
>
> Second, as to the Appointments Clause, which uses "Officers of the United States"-language, Presidents do not appoint themselves or their successors. The Supreme Court hears a never-ending stream of cases that ask if a particular position is a principal or inferior officer of the United States—even though the Appointments Clause does not even distinguish between those two types of positions. Where has the Court ever suggested that the President falls in the ambit of the Appointments Clause's "Officers of the United States"-language? . . .

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> And, finally, as to the Commissions Clause, which also uses "Officers of the United States"-language, Presidents do not commission themselves, their vice presidents, their successor presidents, or successor vice presidents.

Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3, supra at 106-07.

And finally, the structure of Section Three itself shows that it does not apply to the office of the President.

> The second clause does not expressly list several categories of positions: e.g., presidential electors, appointed officers of state legislatures, members of state constitutional conventions, and state militia officers. The first clause does not expressly list several categories of positions: e.g., members of the state legislatures, and members of state constitutional conventions. Neither list expressly mentions the President and Vice President.

Id. at 115.

Moreover, Section Three applies only to those who have "previously taken an oath . . . to support the Constitution of the United States." US Const, am XIV, § 3. (emphasis added). Certain members of the federal and state governments take such an oath:

> The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution . . . .

US Const, art VI, cl 3 (emphasis added). But the President of the United States does not. The presidential oath instead reads:

> Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:– I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

US Const, art II, § 1, cl. 8 (emphasis added).

The difference between the oath to support the constitution (per Article VI) and the oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution (per Article II) is a significant one. It establishes that the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment did not understand the President to be an Officer of the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

United States. And taking an oath to support the Constitution further limits the class of people to whom Section Three applies. President Trump is not one of those people to whom Section Three applies.

Section Three's drafting is no accident, but rather rooted in the Framers' robust debate and careful wordsmithing. When Congress was debating the wording of Section Three, there was no individual who had only taken the Article II oath.[16] The words that both the Framers and the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment chose must be given their proper meaning. Martin v Hunter's Lessee, 14 US 304, 334 (1816) ("From this difference of phraseology, perhaps, a difference of constitutional intention may, with propriety, be inferred. It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the language could have been accidental."). When drafting the Impeachment Clause, the Framers initially referred to the President, Vice President, and "other civil officers of the U.S." See 2 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 545 and 552 (Farrand ed., 1911). But upon further deliberation, the Framers changed the Impeachment Clause to remove the word "other." Id. at 600. This change shows that the Framers understood that the President was not one of the "other" officers of the United States—instead, the President is outside the category of "officers of the United States," and, therefore, falls outside the ambit of Section Three.

V. The prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to the conduct as alleged in the Complaint.

The Complaint rests on misinterpreting Section Three to say what it does not. Plaintiff, over dozens of pages and paragraphs of salacious distraction, alleges that President Trump engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or [gave] aid or comfort to the enemies thereof' within the meaning of section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. But Plaintiff fails to plausibly allege that President Trump did either of those things.

[16] See, Lash, The Meaning and Ambiguity of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, p. 4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. The January 6th riot does not constitute an "insurrection" under Section Three.

Section Three speaks in terms of "insurrection" and "rebellion"—and these terms were not pulled out of thin air. Congress modeled Section Three partly on the original Constitution's Treason Clause, and partly on the Second Confiscation Act (enacted in 1862). The Confiscation Act punished anyone who "shall hereafter incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States … or give aid or comfort thereto." 12 Stat. 589, 627 (1862); see 18 USC § 2383. Section Three similarly covers "insurrection or rebellion." US Const, am XIV, § 3. But unlike the Confiscation Act, Congress excluded from Section Three any penalty for inciting, assisting, or giving aid to insurrection. Section Three only penalizes those who "engaged" in it. Id.

Congress discussed the meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" at length in debates. Congress confirmed that insurrection and rebellion describe two types of treason—not lesser crimes. See 37 Cong. Globe 2d Session, 2173, 2189, 2190-91, 2164-2167 (1862). After ratification, Congress reinforced these same conclusions when debating enforcement of Section Three. 41 Cong Globe 2d Session, 5445-46 (1870). The Congress that had just drafted Section Three believed that someone committed "insurrection" or "rebellion" if he led uniformed troops in battle against the United States, but not if he or she merely voted to support secession with violent force, recruited for the Confederacy, provided wartime aid, or held offices in the rebel government. The drafters chose words that encompassed at least the main actors in that act of treason, but no more. They were not trying to legislate with an eye toward political riots. In the aftermath of the Civil War, these were imminently important distinctions.

One year after the Confiscation Act became law, Chief Justice Chase held that the Act prohibits only conduct that "amount[s] to treason within the meaning of the Constitution," not any lesser offense. United States v Greathouse, 26 F Cas 18, 21 (CCND Cal 1863). Not just any form of treason would do: the Act only covered treason that "consist[ed] in engaging in or assisting a rebellion or insurrection." Id. Writing in the same case, a second judge confirmed and clarified that, for these purposes, "engaging in a rebellion and giving it aid and comfort[] amounts to a levying of war," and that insurrection and treason involve "different penalt[ies]" but are "substantially the same." Id. at 25.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dictionaries of the time confirm this understanding. John Bouvier's 1868 legal dictionary defined "insurrection" as a "rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government," and "rebellion" as "taking up arms traitorously against the government." A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union (Philadelphia, GW Childs, 12th ed, rev and enl 1868).

So "insurrection," as understood at the time of the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, meant the taking up of arms and waging war upon the United States. At the time of Section Three's enactment, the United States had undergone a horrific civil war in which over 600,000 combatants died, and the very survival of the nation was in doubt. As shown by the omission of the word "incitement" in Section Three, Congress did not intend that provision to encompass those who merely encouraged an insurrection, but instead limited its breadth to those who actively participated in one.

Plaintiff's entire case is based upon President Trump's alleged nexus to an "insurrection," but Plaintiff is short on any facts to show that the January 6th riots constituted one. See Greathouse, 26 F Cas at 21 and 25. Not one of the 1,000+ people charged in connection with the riot has so far even been charged—much less convicted—under 18 USC § 2383. See United States v. Griffith, 2023 WL 2043223, *6 n. 5 (D DC, Feb 16, 2023) (finding that "no defendant has been charged with [18 USC § 2383]); Alan Feuer, More Than 1,000 People Have Been Charged in Connection with the Jan. 6 Attack, New York Times (Aug 1, 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Further, the Senate found President Trump not guilty of impeachment charges of insurrection brought by the 117th Congress. See Impeaching Donald John Trump, President of the United States, for high crimes and misdemeanors, H 24, 117th Cong (2021).[17] No court in the United States has found President Trump guilty under 18 USC § 2383. Not a single prosecutor has even filed an indictment against President Trump for an alleged rebellion or insurrection.

B. Mere words do not constitute "engaging" in insurrection.

Even so, Plaintiff fails to establish that President Trump "engaged" in insurrection. Plaintiff's core allegations fall well short. As explained above, the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment made a deliberate choice that Section Three should cover only actual "engage[ment] in" insurrection or rebellion (or assisting a foreign power), not advocating rebellion or insurrection. Mere words, unaccompanied by actions or legal effect, cannot meet that standard. That is especially the case here because President Trump's words and speeches cannot qualify as incitement under established First Amendment principles. See Brandenburg v Ohio, 395 US 444 (1969).

The same representatives who voted for the Fourteenth Amendment understood that, under its terms, even strident and explicit antebellum advocacy for a future rebellion was not "engaging in insurrection" or providing "aid or comfort to the enem[y]." In 1870—just two years after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified—Congress considered whether Section Three disqualified a Representative-elect from Kentucky when, before the Civil War began, he had voted in the Kentucky legislature in favor of a resolution to "resist [any] invasion of the soil of the South at all [17] The Senate's not guilty vote can be found at https://www.senate.gov/legislative /LIS/roll_call_votes/vote1171/vote_117_1_00059.htm (last visited on October 6, 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

hazards." 41 Cong Globe, 2d Session, 5443 (1870). The House found that this was not disqualifying. Id. at 5447. Similarly, in 1870 the House also considered the qualifications of a Representative-elect from Virginia who, before the Civil War, had voted in the Virginia House of Delegates for a resolution that Virginia should "unite" with "the slaveholding states" if "efforts to reconcile" with the North should fail, and stated in debate that Virginia should "if necessary, fight," but who after Virginia's actual secession "had been an outspoken Union man." Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, 477 (1907). The House found that this did not disqualify him under Section Three. Id. at 477-78. By contrast, the House did disqualify a candidate who "had acted as colonel in the rebel army" and "as governor of the rebel State of North Carolina." Id. at 481, 486. It is also important to note that it was Congress who made all of these determinations, not a state court. Plaintiff's allegations fall well-short of how Congress has understood and applied Section Three in practice.

C. Not only does "inciting" fall well short of "engaging," but Plaintiff's allegations also fall short of "inciting."

"[T]he free discussion of governmental affairs of course includes discussions of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated, and all such matters relating to political processes." Mills v Alabama, 384 US 214, 218-19 (1966). "Indeed, the First Amendment 'has its fullest and most urgent application' to speech uttered during a campaign for political office." Eu v San Francisco City Democratic Cent Comm, 489 US 214, 223 (1989). There is no exception to this rule for allegedly disloyal speech. The Supreme Court considered the Georgia legislature's refusal to seat an elected candidate, on the ground that his strident criticisms of the Vietnam War "gave aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States" and were inconsistent with an oath to support the Constitution. Bond v Floyd, 385 US 116, 118-23

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(1966). The Court held that the candidate's speech was protected by the First Amendment and could not be grounds for disqualification. Id. at 133-37.

Thus, "dissenting political speech" remains "within the First Amendment's core," even where it is alleged to be "mere advocacy of illegal acts" or "advocacy of force or lawbreaking." Counterman v Colorado, 143 S Ct 2106, 2115, 2118 (2023). The Constitution values and protects such speech unless it qualifies as "advocacy of the use of force or law violation" that "is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." Brandenburg, 395 US at 447.

Under the Brandenburg test, Trump's comments did not come close to "incitement," let alone "engagement" in an insurrection. As the Sixth Circuit recognized in analyzing President Trump's public speech, "the fact that audience members reacted by using force does not transform Trump's protected speech into unprotected speech. Thus, where "Trump's speech . . . did not include a single word encouraging violence . . . the fact that audience members reacted by using force does not transform" it into incitement. Nwanguma v Trump, 903 F3d 604, 610 (6th Cir 2018). And as a D.C. Circuit judge remarked at argument last year, "you just print out the speech . . . and read the words . . . it doesn't look like it would satisfy the [Brandenburg] standard." Tr of Argument at 64:5-7 (Katsas, J.), Blassingame v Trump, No 22-5069 (DC Cir, Dec 7, 2022). After all, the Supreme Court, for instance, has concluded that a call to "take the f[]ing streets later" does not meet the standard. Hess v Indiana, 414 US 105, 107 (1973); accord Nwanguma, 903 F3d at 611-12 (responding to a political protestor by repeatedly telling a crowd to "get 'em out of here" but "don't hurt 'em" was not incitement).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President Trump's explicit instructions called for protesting "peacefully and patriotically,"[18] to "support our Capitol Police and law enforcement,"[19] to "[s]tay peaceful,"[20] and to "remain peaceful."[21] President Trump's calls for peace and patriotism notwithstanding, the courts have made clear that angry rhetoric falls far short of an implicit call for lawbreaking. None of President Trump's speeches that took place before January 6 can possibly meet Brandenberg's imminence requirement. It is utterly impossible to regard statements like "stand back and standby" as advocacy of immediate illegal conduct. "[A] state cannot constitutionally sanction advocacy of illegal action at some indefinite future time." McCoy v Stewart, 282 F3d 626, 631 (9th Cir 2002) (cleaned up).

Finally, and again as explained above, none of Plaintiff's allegations plausibly suggest that President Trump intended any acts of violence. Both his language and his actions show the contrary. He intended to inspire a protest to contest an election outcome. That is not insurrectionary or unlawful in any way. In fact, although the President expressly called for a walk down Pennsylvania Avenue "after" his speech, the Complaint affirmatively alleges that the attack on the Capitol began before the speech ended—indeed, that television broadcasts had cut away from the President's speech to cover the violence.

Nor do President Trump's comments during a debate months before January 6. On September 29, 2020, an hour into President Trump's debate with then-candidate Biden, the following exchange occurred:

---

[18] Donald Trump Speech "Save America" Rally Transcript January 6, REV (Jan. 6, 2021) available at https://bit.ly/3GheZid; Brian Naylor, Read Trump's Jan. 6 Speech, A Key Part Of Impeachment Trial, NPR (Feb. 10, 2021), https://n.pr/3G1K2ON.
[19] https://twitter.com/realDonaldTrump/status/1346904110969315332.
[20] Id.
[21] https://twitter.com/realDonaldTrump/status/1346912780700577792.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> [Moderator Chris] WALLACE [to President Trump]: You have repeatedly criticized the Vice-President for not specifically calling out Antifa and other left-wing extremist groups. But are you willing, to-night, to condemn white supremacists and militia groups and to say that they need to stand down and not add to the violence in a number of these cities as we saw in Kenosha, and as we've seen in Port-land.
> TRUMP: Sure, I'm willing to do that.
> WALLACE: Are you prepared specifically to do it. Well go ahead, sir.
> TRUMP: I would say almost everything I see is from the left-wing not from the right wing.
> WALLACE: So what are you, what are you saying?
> TRUMP: I'm willing to do anything. I want to see peace.
> WALLACE: Well, do it, sir.
> [Vice President] BIDEN: Say it. Do it. Say it.
> TRUMP: You want to call them? What do you want to call them? Give me a name, give me a name, go ahead who would you like me to condemn.
> WALLACE: White supremacists and racists.
> BIDEN: Proud Boys.
> WALLACE: White supremacists and white militias.
> BIDEN: Proud Boys.
> TRUMP: Proud Boys, stand back and stand by. But I'll tell you what, I'll tell you what: somebody's got to do something about Antifa and the left because this is not a right wing problem this is a left-wing. This is a left-wing problem.[22]

As this context reveals, the "stand back and stand by" remark unambiguously referred to then-recent unrest in cities like Kenosha, Wisconsin and Portland, Oregon. Immediately before that remark, President Trump expressly agreed that his supporters "should not add to the violence in . . . these cities," and emphasized that he would "do anything" in order "to see peace." And immediately after the remark, President Trump reiterated that the violence was a "problem." His "stand back" statement emphasized that his supporters were not the ones who should "do something" about the problem. This cannot plausibly be interpreted as an endorsement of those groups, let alone of their future actions in response to an election that had not yet happened.

[22] September 29, 2020 Debate Transcript, The Commission on Presidential Debates, available at https://www.debates.org/voter-education/debate-transcripts/sep-tember-29-2020-debate-transcript/.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Were that not enough, other facts omitted by Plaintiff conclusively demonstrate that President Trump's "stand back and stand by" remark was condemning and not supporting illegal activity. The very next day, September 30, President Trump emphasized to a reporter that although he was not familiar with the Proud Boys, "they have to stand down and let law enforcement do their work . . . . [W]hoever they are, they have to stand down. Let law enforcement do their work."[23] When asked again, he reiterated, "Look, law enforcement will do their work. They're gonna stand down. They have to stand down. Everybody. . . . Whatever group you're talking about."[24]

Plaintiff's attempt to cast an off-the-cuff remark made in the second-half of a two-hour debate well before the General Election and the events of January 6th as a rallying cry is beyond absurd. As the full context clearly shows, the alleged recipient of the remarks was selected not by the then-Commander-in-Chief, but rather by candidate-Biden and moderator Chris Wallace. And the content itself was chosen not by the President, but—again—by Biden and Wallace.

D. "Aid or comfort to the Enem[y]" under Section Three requires assistance to a foreign power.

[23] See Video recording of President Trump's September 30, 2020, remarks available at https://youtu.be/Q8oyhvcOHk0?si=Hp6D0iJytKyUMdnM; see also September 30, 2020, Remarks by President Trump Before Marine One Departure (emphasis added), available at https://trumpwhitehouse.archives.gov/briefings-statements/remarks-president-trump-marine-one-departure-093020/.

[24] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three does not incorporate the Confiscation Act's criminalization of giving "aid or comfort" to a "rebellion or insurrection." See supra at 11-12. Instead, Section Three harkens back to the Treason Clause, which defines treason as "adhering to [the United States'] Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort." US Const, Art III, § 3, cl.1.

The "enemies" prong of the Treason Clause almost exactly replicated a British statute defining treason. See 4 Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 82 (1769). But "enemies" referred only to "the subjects of foreign powers with whom we are at open war," not to "fellow subjects." Id. at 82-83. Blackstone was emphatic that "an enemy" was "always the subject of some foreign prince, and one who owes no allegiance to the crown of England." Id.

This was also the American view. Four years after the Constitution was ratified, Justice Wilson explained that "enemies" are "the citizens or subjects of foreign princes or states, with whom the United States are at open war." 2 Collected Works of James Wilson 1355 (1791). The 1910 version of Black's Law Dictionary agrees, defining "enemy" as "either the nation which is at war with another, or a citizen or subject of such nation." Enemy, Black's Law Dictionary (2d. Ed. 1910). At the outset of the Civil War, the Supreme Court recognized that the Confederate states should be "treated as enemies," under a similar definition of that word, because of their "claim[] to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign state," and because the Confederacy claimed to be a de facto a foreign power that had "made war on" the United States. The Prize Cases, 67 US 635, 673-74 (1862). Section Three, enacted a few years later in response to the Civil War, referred to support for the Confederacy as "aid and comfort to . . . enemies," and treated "enemies" as foreign powers in a state of war with the United States.

On top of that, "aid and comfort to the enem[y]" involves only assisting a foreign government (or its citizens or subjects) in making war against the United States. Plaintiff does not,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and cannot, allege that the January 6 attack involved any foreign power, or that the attackers constituted any sort of de facto foreign government.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump, Inc., respectfully requests that Plaintiff's Complaint be dismissed with prejudice.

Respectfully submitted,

KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman, Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Stephen P. Kallman
Stephen P. Kallman, Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump

DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Michael Columbo
Michael Columbo, Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Mark P. Meuser
Mark P. Meuser, Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Zachary Kramer
Zachary Kramer, Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS

Plaintiffs,

-vs-

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State,

Defendant,

-and-

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Proposed-Intervenor.
/

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION, AND PROOF OF SERVICE

FILE NO.: 23-000128-MB

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Robert Davis
Plaintiff, pro se
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.243(1
(313) 523 PII MCL 15.243(
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 335-7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

David A. Kallman (P34200)
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC
Attorneys for Proposed-Intervenor
5600 W. Mount Hope Hwy.
Lansing, MI 48917
(517) 322-3207
dave@kallmanlegal.com
steve@kallmanlegal.com

Michael Columbo, pro hac vice coming
Mark P. Meuser, pro hac vice coming
Zachary Kramer, pro hac vice coming
DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor
177 Post St., Suite 700
San Francisco, CA 94108
(415) 433-1700
mcolumbo@dhillonlaw.com
mmeuser@dhillonlaw.com

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION

NOW COMES the above-named Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump, by and through his legal counsel, and moves this Honorable Court for Summary Disposition pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(4), 2.116(C)(8), and MCR 2.116(C)(10), for all the reasons as stated in the attached Brief in Support which are incorporated herein in full. Proposed-Intervenor sought concurrence for his motion pursuant to Local Rule 2.119(A)(2) on October 16, 2023. Concurrence was not received, thus necessitating this motion.

WHEREFORE, Proposed-Intervenor respectfully requests that this Honorable Court grant his Motion for Summary Disposition, dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint in its entirety with prejudice, find Plaintiffs' Complaint to be frivolous, devoid of merit, and filed for the purpose of harassment, and grant all other relief as the Court deems just and appropriate.

KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman (P34200)
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Stephen P. Kallman
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Michael Columbo
Michael Columbo
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Mark P. Meuser
Mark P. Meuser
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Zachary Kramer
Zachary Kramer
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

PROOF OF SERVICE

David A. Kallman, hereby states and affirms that on the 16th day of October, 2023, he did serve a copy of Proposed-Intervenor's Motion for Summary Disposition, with Brief in Support, upon Plaintiffs' and Defendant's counsel listed above via MiFile.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman (P34200)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS

Plaintiff,

-vs-

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State,

Defendant,

-and-

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Proposed-Intervenor.
/

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S MOTION TO INTERVENE, BRIEF IN SUPPORT, AND PROOF OF SERVICE

FILE NO.: 23-000128-MB

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Robert Davis
Plaintiff, pro se
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a), MI PII MCL 15.243(1
(313) 523 PII MCL 15.243(
PII MCL 15.243(1)(a)@gmail.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 335-7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

David A. Kallman (P34200)
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC
Attorneys for Proposed-Intervenor
5600 W. Mount Hope Hwy.
Lansing, MI 48917
(517) 322-3207
dave@kallmanlegal.com
steve@kallmanlegal.com

Michael Columbo, pro hac vice coming
Mark P. Meuser, pro hac vice coming
Zachary Kramer, pro hac vice coming
DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor
177 Post St., Suite 700
San Francisco, CA 94108
(415) 433-1700
mcolumbo@dhillonlaw.com
mmeuser@dhillonlaw.com

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S MOTION TO INTERVENE

NOW COMES the Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump ("President Trump"), by his undersigned legal counsel, bringing this Motion to Intervene pursuant to MCR 2.209, and in support of the motion, states the following:

1. Plaintiff is a resident and registered voter in Michigan intending to vote in the 2024 presidential primary and general elections.
2. Defendant is Jocelyn Benson, named in her official capacity as Secretary of State for her role in administering elections in the State of Michigan which includes causing the name of a presidential candidate to be printed on election ballots.
3. Proposed-Intervenor, President Trump, seeks to uphold his constitutional right to have his name placed on the Michigan presidential primary and general election ballots for the 2024 election.
4. In his complaint, Plaintiff seeks declaratory and mandamus relief that President Trump is disqualified, by section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, is ineligible to appear on the presidential primary or general election ballot and has no legal right to appear on the ballot. Plaintiff also seeks permanent injunctive relief preventing the Secretary [of State] from placing Trump on 2024 presidential primary or general election ballots.
5. By this motion, the Proposed-Intervenor requests he be allowed to intervene in this action as Intervening Party so that he may be afforded reasonable opportunity to present his arguments in opposition of Plaintiff's claims in order to protect his interests in this matter, and that he be added as an Intervening Party pursuant to MCR 2.209.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6. To ensure that he has a sufficient opportunity for meaningful and helpful participation, the Proposed-Intervenor also requests that he be granted an opportunity to present oral arguments before your Honor.

7. Proposed-Intervenor sought concurrence for his motion pursuant to Local Rule 2.119(A)(2) on October 16, 2023. Mr. Davis and Defendant did not concur, thus necessitating this motion.

8. Donald J. Trump hereby requests that his Motion to Intervene be granted for all the reasons as stated in the attached Brief in Support which are incorporated herein in full.

WHEREFORE, Proposed-Intervenor respectfully requests that this Honorable Court grant his Motion to Intervene, and grant all other relief as the Court deems just and appropriate.

KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman (P34200)
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Stephen P. Kallman
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Michael Columbo
Michael Columbo
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Mark P. Meuser
Mark P. Meuser
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Zachary Kramer
Zachary Kramer
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

BRIEF IN SUPPORT

A. Jurisdiction.

While the Court of Claims is a Court of limited jurisdiction pursuant to MCL 600.6419, Donald J. Trump ("President Trump") must be permitted to intervene in this matter to protect his interests and constitutional rights as outlined below and in the companion Motion for Summary Disposition (which is fully incorporated herein). Permitting this matter to proceed without allowing President Trump to be a party could deprive him of the typical rights of a party, such as the ability to file motions or an appeal.

Donald J. Trump's name is mentioned throughout the complaint including in the prayer for relief. This entire matter is about President Trump, his alleged statements, and his alleged political activities. To adjudicate the effect of Donald J. Trump's speech and his ability to be on the ballot without President Trump being a party would violate his constitutional rights, including, but not limited to, his First Amendment free speech rights[1] and his Due Process rights. US Const, am I and XIV. These constitutional interests would override any statutory limitations.

The Michigan Supreme Court held that "due process requires-at a minimum-that a person whose interests might be affected by government action be given notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard before the government acts. Bonner v City of Brighton, 495 Mich 209, 235; 848 NW2d 380 (2014). "Additional[] requirements may be necessary depending on three considerations: the private interest that will be affected, the risk of erroneous deprivation of such [1] For further analysis of Donald J. Trump's First Amendment rights, see Proposed-Intervenor's companion Motion for Summary Disposition, which is fully incorporated herein.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

interest through the procedures used, and the probable value of additional or substitute procedural safeguards." Id.

In order to preserve President Trump's rights and objections for a possible appeal or federal court action, he is requesting to intervene in this matter.

B. President Trump Is Entitled to Intervene as of Right.

The Prospective Intervening Party has a right to intervene in this action pursuant to MCR 2.209(A)(3), which permits a party's right to timely intervene as follows:

> "when the applicant claims an interest relating to the … transaction which is the subject of the action and is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties."

Put simply, MCR 2.209(A)(3) "allows an intervention of right in cases in which the intervenor's interests are not adequately represented by the parties." Estes v Titus, 481 Mich 573, 583; 751 NW2d 493 (2008). "[A] person may intervene by right in an action on timely application when that person asserts an interest in the subject of the action 'and is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.'" Kuhlgert v Mich State Univ, 328 Mich App 357, 378; 937 NW2d 716 (2019). The "rule should be liberally construed to allow intervention when the applicant's interest otherwise may be inadequately represented." Auto-Owners Ins Co v Keizer-Morris, Inc, 284 Mich App 610, 612 (2009) (citing Precision Pipe & Supply Inc v Meram Constr Inc, 195 Mich App 153, 156 (1992)).

1. President Trump's motion to intervene is timely.

A motion is timely if it is "asserted within a reasonable time," an inherently contextual standard. D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188 (1976); see also Cameron v EMW

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Women's Surgical Ctr, PSC, 142 S Ct 1002, 1012 (2022) (timeliness under federal intervention rules "is to be determined from all the circumstances").[2] Although Michigan courts have not enumerated the specific factors that should be analyzed in determining timeliness, courts have generally found that "a right to intervene should be asserted within a reasonable time." D'Agostini, 396 Mich at 188. First, this motion is timely. Plaintiff sued on September 15, 2023 and this motion is being filed before any issues have been decided or any procedural Rubicons have been crossed. There has been very little activity in the case, and Trump's intervention will not prejudice any party.

President Trump's motion to intervene in this case is timely. This motion is being made in a matter of days since becoming aware of this litigation. Therefore, President Trump's motion is timely and will not impact or delay future proceedings.

2. President Trump has a sufficient interest affected by the disposition of this case.

President Trump has a sufficient interest in this case, and "the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede [his] ability to protect [his] interest." Precision Pipe & Supply, 195 Mich App at 156 quoting MCR 2.209(A)(3).

President Trump is the frontrunner for the Republican nomination and has an overwhelming interest in defending constitutional challenges to his eligibility to appear on election ballots. And no party has a greater interest in ensuring Secretary Benson places his name on the ballots in Michigan than President Trump. Donald J. Trump has also exercised his First Amendment rights to freedom of association and speech and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process rights under the United States Constitution to campaign for the right to be on the primary and [2] "Because of the similarity of the state and Federal provisions," the Michigan Supreme Court "deem[s] it proper to look to the Federal courts for guidance" in applying the intervention rules. D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188 (1976).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

general election ballots in 2024. He has a strong interest in securing his access to those ballots and in clarifying the state of the law on Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and whether it is constitutional for a Secretary of State to interpret the same and cause for a candidate to remain off the election ballots.

At the Constitutional Convention of 1787, James Madison observed that "[t]he qualifications of electors and elected were fundamental articles in a Republican Govt, and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the Legislature could regulate those of either, it can by degrees subvert the Constitution. A Republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected, as the number authorized to elect."[3]

States have "a less important interest in regulating Presidential elections than statewide or local elections, because the outcome of the former will be largely determined by voters beyond the State's boundaries." Anderson v Celebrezze, 460 US 780, 795 (1983). Plaintiff's request that this Court declare that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States and enjoin the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot in Michigan. Plaintiff's request will have an effect on voters beyond Michigan's boundaries. Plaintiff's request is not targeted at "protect[ing] the integrity and reliability of the electoral process itself." Id. at 788, n 9. It does not ensure that "some sort of order, rather than chaos" accompanies the election. Cook v Gralike, 531 US 510, 524 (2001). And it does not require some minimum level of support before a presidential candidate can be put on the ballot. Anderson, 460 US at 788, n 9. Plaintiff's requested relief is therefore improper, and President Trump has a sufficient interest in this matter to intervene.

---

[3] The Debates on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution in the Convention Held at Philadelphia in 1787, as reported by James Madison, Revised and arranged by Jonathan Elliot, (1876) Vol. V., p. 404

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. President Trump's interests are not represented by any existing party.

There is no other party in this matter who can adequately represent Donald J. Trump's interests because the sole defendant is a state official who does not share his personal interest in ensuring he gains lawful access to the primary and general election ballots in 2024. For the sake of completeness, Plaintiff will not adequately represent President Trump's interests. "The rule for intervention should be liberally construed to allow intervention where the applicant's interests may be inadequately represented." Hill v LF Transp, Inc, 277 Mich App 500, 508; 746 NW2d 118 (2008) (emphasis added and citations omitted).

A party seeking intervention isn't required to definitively prove that its interests are inadequately represented. Instead, "the concern of inadequate representation of interests need only exist." Vestevich v W Bloomfield Twp, 245 Mich App 759, 761-762; 630 NW2d 646 (2001). "[T]here need be no positive showing that the existing representation is in fact inadequate. All that is required is that the representation by existing parties may be inadequate." Mullinix v City of Pontiac, 16 Mich App 110, 115; 167 NW2d 856 (1969); Kamp v Cannon Twp, 115 Mich App 726, 731-732; 321 NW2d 690 (1982) (citations omitted) ("The proposed intervenors satisfied the second requirement by establishing that their representation is or may be inadequate.") The possibly-inadequate-representation rule "is satisfied if the applicant shows that representation of his interest 'may be' inadequate; and the burden of making that showing should be treated as minimal." D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188-189; 240 NW2d 252 (1976), quoting Trbovich v United Mine Workers of Am, 404 US 528, 538 n 10; 92 S Ct 603; 30 L Ed 2d 686 (1972).

The interests of the Secretary of State are clearly different from that of President Trump.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Here, President Trump's interests are in the maintenance of his own rights and that of the American people who wish to see him on the ballot for the upcoming elections. In the wake of political persecution through various prosecutions by multiple state actors, Secretary Benson, an active member of the opposing major political party, has publicly weighed in with her views on Trump and her fear of a repeat of the 2020 election. In fact, her many public comments demonstrate her extreme and incurable bias against President Trump. For instance,

- During an interview with Cynthia McFadden of NBC News, Jocelyn Benson said, "Even the president himself had called on me to be arrested and tried for treason, potentially executed."[4]

- During an interview with Erik Meers, founder of uPolitics, Jocelyn Benson said:

> "There's kind of a good side and a bad side to the impact of having a former president spread lies about not just our election administration and procedures, but those who administer them like myself. […] All of that said, of course, his attacks and those of his most ardent followers, has created this strain on our work. Whether it's actual violence, or threats of violence, or harassment and requests for duplicative meaningless information, a lot of the misinformation has metastasized […] and until there's real accountability for those who are spreading these lies, from the former president on down, we're going to continue to see these tactics…"[5]

- In response to Oliver Darcy's January 25, 2023 article, Meta says it wont's punish Trump for attacking the 2020 election results. But the 2024 vote is a different story, Jocelyn Benson tweeted, "@Meta: Trump's baseless, false attacks on the 2020 election still generate harassment & violent threats aimed at election officials across the country, on both sides of the aisle. Your decision will lead to more harm aimed at us & our families."[6]

- In a tweet referring to Donald J. Trump, Jocelyn Benson said, "Pledging to pardon individuals convicted of using violence, force and threats to overturn the results of a legitimate presidential election shows you have no respect for the rule of law or the will

---

[4] Transcript: The ReidOut, NBC NEWS (May 19, 2022, 7:00 PM EST), https://www.msnbc.com/transcripts/reidout/transcript-reidout-5-19-22-n1295603

[5] Erik Meers, Mich. Sec. of State Jocelyn Benson Pt. 2: Fighting Trump's Election Lies, UPOLITICS (Oct. 25, 2022), https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dk07z4YwIBo

[6] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (Jan. 26, 2023, 7:44 AM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1618590577217441795

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of the people."[7]

- In linking to a Washington Post article about Trump and his advisors titled Justice Dept. asking about 2020 fraud claims as well as fake electors, Jocelyn Benson tweeted, "I know for years how many have rightfully demanded accountability for those who abused and misused the legal system to overturn a legitimate presidential election. And while the moral arc of the universe may be long … it bends towards justice."[8]

- During an interview with MSNBC's Nicolle Wallace, Jocelyn Benson had this exchange:

> WALLACE: "Certainly the evidence developed by the Select Committee leaves nothing to the imagination—this was a Trump-directed coup […] The legal architecture was fleshed out by John Eastman. And they knew it was both illegal and it violated the Electoral Count Act and unconstitutional [...] Do you, from where you're sitting, have any doubt that the evidence, if Jack Smith wishes to pursue it, will take this plot all the way to Trump's doorstep?"
>
> BENSON: "I think the evidence certainly shows a direct line between the former president, the phone calls, the pressure that he himself we know exerted on everyone from lawmakers in the State of Michigan, to local county certification boards. So, the line is there. Of course, the public speeches that you just showed earlier as well demonstrate that. So, I think his involvement is clear, and every drop of new evidence that emerges in the public arena only underscores that."[9]

- While interviewed by Victor Shi and Jill Wine-Banks on the "iGen Politics" podcast, Jocelyn Benson had the following exchange:

> SHI: "We come here […] less than a week after your State's Attorney General, Dana Wessel, issue indictments against 16 fake electors from 2020. Tell us more about what they're charged with and just how significant this is for our accountability nationwide."
>
> BENSON: "Yeah it's really a big deal […] These felony charges

---

[7] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (May 25, 2023, 7:09 PM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1661872120521998337

[8] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (Jul. 6, 2023, 11:26 AM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1676975791517646849

[9] Deadline: White House, MSNBC (Jul. 13, 2023, 4:10 PM EST), https://www.rawstory.com/direct-line-evidence-trump/

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that were filed against 16 individuals who allegedly, knowingly sought to defraud the government, the state and federal government, through submitting fake electoral vote certificates, with the goal of undoing the actual legitimate elector certificates, and having their fake elector certificates submitted to Congress on, what was January 6th, 2021. So, it was part of really, a national coordinated effort, to undo the will of the people simply because they, and others in their political party, as well as the former president were unhappy with the outcome of the election. So, as we now begin to enter the 2024 cycle it's really important that we see accountability and justice for those who were part of this nationally coordinated effort and this actionable plan to subvert the will of the people in the last presidential election because if we don't see these types of charges brought and indictments and accountability and in the legal process then we have to prepare especially those of us as election administrators for a repeat of these actions again."

WINE-BANKS: "How high up do you think the fraud goes? […] Do you know of any evidence that would link it […] directly to […] the former president?"

BENSON: "Yeah, I mean there have been some publicly disclosed pieces of evidence, voicemails from the Trump campaign to state officials and the like, we know there were meetings, we know Rudy Giuliani himself was in the state of Michigan a few days before the electors officially met, and testified before a sham legislative hearing about-with false claims of election fraud […] I have a lot of confidence in the investigators in our state to get to the bottom of, and make all the connections, and I'm grateful that folks at the federal level are looking at this too because they could make those similar connections. But I do think to me, it's important to seek full accountability, but not just put this on the shoulders of one person, the former president. We know certainly, he was a central piece to a lot of different things, and hence the indictments that you see pre and post this moment, percolating. But that said, there were a number of other it would seem co-conspirators at every level, and I think when we talk about accountability, we have to see full accountability for everyone who was involved, in this really unprecedented, un-American scheme to overturn a presidential election, because a small group of people, including the former president, were unhappy with the results."

WINE-BANKS: "The big lie continues repeatedly having not just Trump but all of his acolytes saying the election was stolen […] It also seems to me that there was a targeted effort in Michigan in certain counties and that those counties were counties with heavy

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA > minority populations. Is that a correct interpretation of where the targeting was?"

>
> BENSON: "Yeah. Sure […] It was the urban center where communities of color were concentrated where you saw initially the attempts to call out fraud, you know, falsely were targeted. Again, when you don't have any evidence of fraud then […] go towards the minority communities and start using racism to sow seeds of doubt. Which was clearly the strategy and then they began picking apart other things."[10]

- In an X (formerly Twitter) post after Trump and his allies were indicted for the events on January 6, 2020, Jocelyn Benson said, "Feeling vindicated. Grateful for the rule of law and those who enforce it." [11]

- In an X post on August 3, 2023, Jocelyn Benson said, "Trump allegedly led a national scheme to overturn the results of a legitimate presidential election. But his plot would only succeed with willing co-conspirators in the states. That's why the state charges against those in Michigan who signed fake electoral votes are so critical."[12]

- Again, on August, 3, 2023, Jocelyn Benson went on X to post, "If 'I'm being arrested for you' is Trump-speak for 'I'm being arrested for trying to nullify millions of your votes' then yeah, I guess that tracks."[13]

It is clear there is a real possibility Secretary Benson will undermine President Trump's interests in this action. Her inherent views and posture, and desire to avoid a feared repeat of the inconveniences she had to endure because of challenges made in the 2020 election will certainly keep her from advocating for President Trump's interests, namely that he appear on the ballots. Her mind is already made up.

Based on the above, President Trump more than satisfies this "minimal" burden and he

---

[10] Victor Shi and Jill Wine-Banks, Defending Democracy with Jocelyn Benson, IGEN POLITICS (Jul. 25, 2023), https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EYvbK51VMmk

[11] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (Aug. 2, 2023, 8:49 AM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1686720760570605569

[12] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (Aug.3, 2023, 9:57 AM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1687100474552688642

[13] Jocelyn Benson (@JocelynBenson), Twitter (Aug.3, 2023, 4:11 PM), https://twitter.com/JocelynBenson/status/1687194481773125632

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"certainly has an interest in defending" against lawsuits seeking to stop him from appearing on the primary and general election ballots in Michigan. Therefore, President Trump should not be forced to trust and hope that Defendant will adequately represent his interests.

C. President Trump Also Meets the Standard for Permissive Intervention.

In addition to being entitled to intervene as of right, President Trump also meets the standard for permissive intervention. Such intervention is appropriate when: (1) the application is timely; (2) the applicant's claim or defense has a common question of law or fact with the main action; and (3) there will be no prejudice or delay to the original parties. See Dean v Dep't of Corrections, 208 Mich App 144, 150 (1994) citing MCR 2.209(B). These elements have been satisfied.

First, President Trump's motion is timely as explained above. Second, President Trump's claims and defenses surround the common question of law related to his First Amendment rights to freedom of association and speech and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process rights to campaign to be on the Michigan primary and general election ballots in 2024—the very rights being threatened by the relief sought by Plaintiff. Finally, President Trump's intervention will not result in any prejudice or delay. President Trump moved to intervene promptly after Plaintiff filed his complaint. As with intervention as of right, President Trump readily meets the requirements for permissive intervention.

CONCLUSION

Donald J. Trump's name is mentioned throughout Plaintiff's complaint and in Plaintiff's prayer for relief. Nonetheless, Plaintiff failed to name him as a Defendant or as an interested party to the litigation. If this Court were to grant Plaintiff's relief, it would impede President Trump's ability to protect his interest. For all the reasons stated above, Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump, respectfully requests that his Motion to Intervene be granted.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Respectfully submitted,

KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Stephen P. Kallman
Stephen P. Kallman
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Michael Columbo
Michael Columbo
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Mark P. Meuser
Mark P. Meuser
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ Zachary Kramer
Zachary Kramer
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

PROOF OF SERVICE

David A. Kallman, hereby states and affirms that on the 16th day of October, 2023, he did serve a copy of Proposed-Intervenor's Motion to Intervene, with Brief in Support, upon Plaintiff's and Defendant's counsel listed above via MiFile.

DATED: October 16, 2023.

/s/ David A. Kallman
David A. Kallman (P34200)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/19/2023 5:36:29 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: LaBrant & Davis orders
Attachments: 20231018 2nd Expedited Sch Ord.pdf; 20231018 2nd Expedited Sch Ord.pdf

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

v

Case No. 23-000128-MB

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity, as the duly elected Secretary of State

Hon. James Robert Redford

Defendant.
_____/

SECOND

EXPEDITED SCHEDULING ORDER

In this matter, 23-000128-MB, former President Donald J. Trump has filed a motion to intervene under MCR 2.209(A)(3) and (B). On October 17, 2023, plaintiff filed a response in opposition to the proposed intervenor's motion to intervene. Plaintiff has also filed an emergency motion to strike the proposed motion to intervene, to strike proposed intervenor's concurrent motion and brief for summary disposition, and for costs pursuant to MCR 2.625, on the ground that the Court does not have jurisdiction over intervenor as a private individual.

In keeping with the Court's decision to expedite the hearing schedule in this case, any objection or response to plaintiff's response and motion by proposed intervenor Donald Trump is due by 4:00 p.m. Monday, October 23, 2023. The Court also notes that it has held in its expedited scheduling order of October 9, 2023 that Donald J. Trump and/or his presidential campaign is invited to seek amicus curiae involvement in both this matter and in LaBrandt, et al. v Jocelyn

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Benson, 23-000137-MZ, and if he does so, then his brief is due on or before 5:00 p.m. on October 23, 2023.

In addition, any other responses by the parties to the motion to intervene or to plaintiff's October 17, 2023 motions are due on or before 4:00 p.m. on October 23, 2023.

All parties are directed until further order of the Court to serve counsel for proposed intervenors any pleadings that have been filed to date that have not yet been filed and any further pleadings filed.

The parties are advised that should oral argument be ordered in this matter it will likely take place Monday, November 6, 2023, commencing at 9:00 a.m. and being completed by 12:00 p.m., in the City of Grand Rapids, in the Michigan Court of Appeals Courtroom located in the State of Michigan Building, 350 Ottawa, N.W., Grand Rapids, Michigan 49503.

Further scheduling orders will be issued as the Court determines they are needed and appropriate.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Date: October 18th, 2023

Hon. James Robert Redford
Judge, Court of Claims

Court of Claims State of Michigan

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT LABRANT, ANDREW BRADWAY, NORAH MURPHY, and WILLIAM NOWLING, Plaintiffs,

v

Case No. 23-000137-MZ

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official, capacity as Secretary of State

Hon. James Robert Redford

Defendant.
_____/

SECOND

EXPEDITED SCHEDULING ORDER

In this matter, 23-000137-MZ, former President Donald J. Trump has filed a motion to intervene under MCR 2.209(A)(3) and (B).

In keeping with the Court's decision to expedite the hearing schedule in this case, any objection or response by the parties to the motion to intervene is due on or before 4:00 p.m. on October 23, 2023.

The Court also notes that it has held in its expedited scheduling order of October 9, 2023, that Donald J. Trump and/or his presidential campaign is invited to seek amicus curiae involvement in both this matter and in Davis v Jocelyn Benson, 23-000128-MB, and if he does so, then his brief is due on or before 5:00 p.m. on October 23, 2023.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

All parties are directed until further order of the Court to serve counsel for proposed intervenors any pleadings that have been filed to date that have not yet been filed and any further pleadings filed.

The parties are advised that should oral argument be ordered in this matter it will likely take place Monday, November 6, 2023, commencing at 1:00 p.m. and being completed by 4:00 p.m., in the City of Grand Rapids, in the Michigan Court of Appeals Courtroom located in the State of Michigan Building, 350 Ottawa, N.W., Grand Rapids, Michigan 49503.

Further scheduling orders will be issued as the Court determines they are needed and appropriate.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Date: October 18th, 2023

James Robert Redford
Judge, Court of Claims

Court of Claims
State of Michigan

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) [/O=EXCHANGELABS/OU=EXCHANGE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=C266D4268285494D9331BB0303FC8111-MEINGAST HEATHER]
Sent: 10/17/2023 7:16:05 PM
To: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: LaBrant filings from yesterday
Attachments: brief01 exhibits (1).pdf; brief01 memo of law LaBrant.pdf; Brief, MSD LaBrant, Trump, Final.pdf; Motion for Summary, LaBrant, Trump.pdf; Motion to Intervene, LaBrant, Trump.pdf

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 1

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2023 Fourteenth Amendment Disqualification Cases

Active Cases

(As of 10/11/2023)

Alaska

Case	Description
Castro vs. Dahlstrom 23-cv-00011 U.S. District Court, District of Alaska	On September 29, 2023, John A. Castro, a Republican presidential candidate, filed a pro se civil action against Alaska Lieutenant Governor Nancy Dahlstrom and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Alaska according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Arizona

Case	Description
Castro v. Fontes 2:23-cv-01865 U.S. District Court, District of Arizona	On September 5, 2023, Castro filed a pro se civil action against Arizona Secretary of State Adrian Fontes and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Arizona according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro filed a TRO that the court converted to a preliminary injunction. A preliminary injunction hearing is scheduled for October 31, 2023.

California

Case	Description
Clark v. Weber 2:23-cv-07489 U.S. District Court, Central	On September 9, 2023, a Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief was filed on behalf of a California voter, identified as A.W. Clark, against California Secretary of State Shirley Weber. The complaint seeks declaratory relief that Donald J. Trump is "disqualified, prohibited, and barred from the office of president of the United States" and injunctive relief to bar Weber from placing Trump's name on any ballot in California

by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

District of California	under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Yagman argues that Trump "engaged in insurrection and/or rebellion," citing his role in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the U.S. Capitol. Plaintiff filed a preliminary injunction motion on September 22, 2023. On October 2, 2023 the court issued an order to show cause as to why the complaint shouldn't be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.
Castro v. Weber 2:23-cv-02172 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of California	On October 2, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Shirley Weber and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in California according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Colorado

Case	Description
Anderson v. Griswold District Court, City and County of Denver 2023CV32577 U.S. District Court, District of Colorado 1:23-cv-02291	On September 6, 2023, Colorado voters filed suit against Secretary of State Jena Griswold and Donald J. Trump, alleging that Trump's involvement in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the capitol qualifies as an insurrection and consequently disqualifies him as a candidate for the office of president under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The petitioners further assert that C.R.S. § 1-4-1204(4), § 1-1-113(1), § 13-51-105, and C.R.C.P. 57(a) enjoin the Colorado Secretary of State from granting Trump access to the ballot for any election in the state. The petition was filed by Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW), a government ethics watchdog. The Colorado Republican Committee has intervened in the lawsuit. Trump removed the case to federal court, but the case was quickly remanded and is now in state court in Colorado. The parties are briefing several motions to dismiss and a five-day hearing is scheduled on October 30, 2023. The court denied President Trump's anti-SLAPP motion to dismiss.

Connecticut

Case	Description
Castro v. Thomas 3:23-cv-01238	On September 21, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Stephanie Thomas and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of Connecticut	Connecticut according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro also filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Motion for Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits.

Delaware

Case	Description
Castro v. Albence et al. 1:23-cv-01068 U.S. District Court, District of Delaware	On September 28, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against State Election Commissioner Anthony Albence and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Delaware according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Florida

Case	Description
Castro v. Trump U.S. District Court, Southern District of Florida 9:23-cv-80015-AMC U.S. Court of Appeals, 11th Circuit 23-12111	On January 6, 2023, Castro filed a civil action against Donald J. Trump in the Southern District of Florida. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Florida according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On February 16, 2023, Trump filed a motion to dismiss. On June 26, 2023, U.S. District Judge Aileen Cannon dismissed the case based on standing and ripeness. Castro filed an appeal, which is pending before the 11th Circuit. Castro also filed a petition for cert before judgment with the U.S. Supreme Court that seeks a ruling on the standing issue. On October 2, 2023, the Supreme Court denied Castro's petition for a writ of certiorari.

Kansas

Case	Description
Castro v. Schwab 6:23-cv-01184	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Scott Schwab and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of Kansas	insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Kansas according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Massachusetts

Case	Description
Castro v. Galvin 1:23-cv-12121 U.S. District Court, District of Massachusetts	On September 18, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State William Francis Galvin and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Massachusetts according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 25, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on The Merits.

Michigan

Case	Description
Castro v. Benson 23-000122-MZ Michigan Court of Claims	On August 31, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Michigan according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.
Davis v. Benson 23-000128-MB Michigan Court of Claims	On September 15, 2023, activist Robert Davis filed a civil action to require Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson to exclude Donald J. Trump from the Michigan primary ballot. In his complaint, Davis acknowledges that state statutes do not grant her such authority, instead arguing that her obligation to "support the Constitution of the United States" requires her to exclude unqualified candidates from the primary ballots. On September 19, Davis filed an Emergency Motion for Expedited Hearing & Briefing.
Davis v. Wayne County Election Commission 23-012484-AW	On September 27, 2023, Robert Davis filed a civil action against the Wayne County Election Commission, which is responsible for printing ballots for the county. Davis argues that the commission has the "legal duty" to remove Donald J. Trump from the ballot under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. The commission, which includes the treasurer, clerk, and chief probate judge for Wayne County, has already stated that it does not plan to make any decisions on this matter.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wayne County Circuit Court
LaBrant vs. Benson 23-000137-MZ Michigan Court of Claims	On September 29, 2023, Free Speech for People filed a complaint on behalf of four Michigan voters for a Declaratory Judgment and a Permanent Injunction asking that the Michigan Court of Claims enjoin Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson from including Donald J. Trump on the primary and general ballots in 2024. The complaint states that the events of January 6, 2021, qualify as an insurrection and that Trump's actions and lack of intervention in the matter satisfy the provisions of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which would disqualify Trump from holding the office in the future.

Minnesota

Case	Description
Growe v. Simon A23-1354 Minnesota Supreme Court	On September 12, 2023, Free Speech for People filed a petition on behalf of Minnesota voters against Secretary of State Steve Simon arguing that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding public office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The case was filed directly with the Minnesota Supreme Court under a state law that allows voters to directly petition to the state supreme court to disqualify a candidate. The petition argues that the events of January 6, 2021 qualify as an insurrection, that the effort to unlawfully overthrow the results of the 2020 election constitute a rebellion, and that Trump was "engaged" in both efforts despite not personally participating in storming the Capitol. The Republican Party of Minnesota has intervened in the case. The parties are briefing the issues ahead of oral argument scheduled on November 2, 2023.

Montana

Case	Description
Castro v. Jacobsen 6:2023-cv-00062 U.S. District Court, District of Montana	On September 11, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Montana Secretary of State Christi Jacobsen and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Montana according to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 18, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Application for a TRO and an Expedited PI Hearing, which the court denied for failure to serve. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New Hampshire

Case	Description
Castro v. Scanlan 1:23-cv-00416 U.S. District Court, District of New Hampshire	On September 5, 2023, Castro, filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Hampshire Secretary of State David Scanlan and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Hampshire according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Castro filed an Emergency Application for a Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with a Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss. The court will hold a hearing on jurisdictional issues on October 20, 2023.

New Jersey

Case	Description
Castro v. Way 3:23-20929-GC U.S. District Court, District of New Jersey	On October 3rd, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Jersey Secretary of State Tahesha Way and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Jersey according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

New Mexico

Case	Description
Castro v. Toulouse Oliver 1:2023-cv-00766 U.S. District Court, District of New Mexico	On September 8, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against New Mexico Secretary of State Maggie Toulouse Oliver and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New Mexico according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The court issued an order to show cause why the claims should not be dismissed for jurisdictional issues.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New York

Case	Description
Castro v. New York State Board of Elections 23-cv-01223 U.S. District Court, Northern District of New York	On October 2nd, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against the New York State Board of Elections and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in New York according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Nevada

Case	Description
Castro v. Aguilar 2:23-cv-01387 U.S. District Court, District of Nevada	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Nevada Secretary of State Francisco V. Aguilar and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Nevada according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. President Trump filed a motion to dismiss which is in the briefing stage.

Pennsylvania

Case	Description
Castro v. Schmidt Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania Supreme Court of Pennsylvania	On August 30, 2023, Castro filed a Complaint against Pennsylvania Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt and Donald J. Trump in Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court seeking an injunction to prevent Schmidt from accepting ballot access documents for Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Pennsylvania according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Complaint in the Middle District of PA. He voluntarily dismissed the federal case on September 27, 2023.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania 1:23-cv-01468
Stilp v. Trump 1:23-cv-1489 U.S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania	On September 7, 2023, Pennsylvania resident Gene Stilp filed a pro se Complaint and Request for Declaratory Relief against Donald J. Trump. The complaint raises the question of whether Trump should be barred from running and removed from the Pennsylvania primary ballot under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Stilp argues that Trump need not have committed violence for his actions to be considered taking part in "insurrection" and notes that participants in the events of January 6, 2021 have testified that they "acted at the direction of Donald Trump."

Rhode Island

Case	Description
Castro v. Amore et al. 1:23-cv-00405 U.S. District Court, District of Rhode Island	On October 3, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Rhode Island Secretary of State Gregg Amore and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Rhode Island according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

South Carolina

Case	Description
Castro v. SC Election Commission, 3:23-cv-04501	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against the South Carolina Election Commission and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in South Carolina according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On September 19, 2023, Castro filed an Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Expedited Preliminary Injunction Hearing Consolidated with A Preliminary Bench Trial on the Merits. The Magistrate Judge issued a Report and Recommendation recommending the court deny the motion based on failure to show

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, District of South Carolina	immediate irreparable injury. The South Carolina Election Commission and President Trump filed motions to dismiss which are in the briefing stage.

Vermont

Case	Description
Castro v. Copeland-Hanzas et al. 2:23-cv-00453 U.S. District Court, District of Vermont	On October 2, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Vermont Secretary of State Sarah Copeland-Hanzas and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Vermont according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. On October 11, 2023, the court denied Castro's motion for a TRO and noted it would still consider the request for a preliminary injunction.

Virginia

Case	Description
Perry-Bey v. Trump 1:23-cv-1165 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of Virginia	On August 31, 2023, Virginia citizens and civil rights activists Roy L. Perry-Bey and Carlos A. Howard filed a Complaint for Declaratory Relief to determine whether Donald J. Trump is eligible to participate as a presidential candidate in the Virginia Republican Party Primary election or the general election. The complaint argues that Trump's actions with regard to the January 6, 2021 breach of the U.S. Capitol disqualify him as a viable candidate under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. Plaintiff Howard filed a Motion for Judgment which the court denied.

West Virginia

Case	Description
Castro v. Warner 2:23-cv-00598	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against West Virginia Secretary of State Andrew Warner and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in West Virginia according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U.S. District Court, Southern District of West Virginia	Castro filed an emergency application for a TRO and expedited preliminary injunction hearing. Motions to dismiss have been filed by President Trump and Defendant-Intervenor the West Virginia Republican Party.

Wisconsin

Case	Description
Castro v. WEC 2023-cv-002288 Wisconsin Circuit Court, Dane County	On August 31, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Injunctive Relief against the Wisconsin Elections Commission and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Wisconsin according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Wyoming

Case	Description
Castro	No record of a filing for this case so far but referenced in the press.

Dismissed Cases

District of Columbia

Case	Description
Castro v. Federal Election Commission U.S. District Court, District of Columbia 22-2176 D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals	On July 25, 2022, Castro filed a pro se civil action for declaratory and injunctive relief against the FEC. The complaint cites the Federal Election Campaign Act, 52 U.S.C. § 30109, and the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, for "unlawful agency delay" to argue that the FEC must enforce Donald J. Trump completing official filing as a candidate with the FEC (now moot), and that, once submitted, the FEC should deny Trump's candidacy form pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The court dismissed the complaint on December 6, 2022 for lack of standing, finding the FEC has no jurisdiction to reject candidacy filings, among other reasons. On December 7, 2022, Castro appealed. On April 10, 2023, the court granted the FEC's motion for summary affirmance.

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

22-5323

Florida

Caplan v. Trump 0:23-cv-61628-RLR U.S. District Court, Southern District of Florida	On August 24, 2023, Lawrence A. Caplan, a Florida lawyer, filed a civil action against Donald J. Trump in the Southern District of Florida. Caplan argues that Trump's candidacy violates Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment due to the "aid or comfort" he provided to January 6th insurrectionists. On August 31, 2023, the court issued a sua sponte order dismissing the lawsuit due to lack of standing.

Idaho

Case	Description
Castro v. McGrane 1:23-cv-00393 U.S. District Court, District of Idaho	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Phil McGrane and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Idaho according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/03/23 - Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff 10/04/23 - Order of Dismissal

Maine

Case	Description
Castro v. Bellows 1:23-cv-00335 U.S. District Court, District of Maine	On September 5, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Secretary of State Shenna Bellows and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Maine according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/03/23- Notice of Dismissal Filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

New Hampshire

Castro v. Trump 217-2023-cv-00462 Merrimack County Superior Court	On August 27, 2023, Castro filed a civil action against Secretary of State David Scanlan and Donald J. Trump, seeking an injunction against Scanlan. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the 2024 primary ballot in New Hampshire according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Secretary Scanlan held a press conference on September 13, 2023 stating that the Secretary of State does not have the power to withhold a candidate based on 14.3. 9/24/23: Motion for Voluntary Non-Suit 10/5/23: Case dismissed

North Carolina

Case	Description
Castro v. Bell 5:23-cv-00496 U.S. District Court, Eastern District of North Carolina	On September 7, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Karen Brinson Bell, the executive director of the North Carolina State Board of Elections, and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in North Carolina according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 10/2/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

Oklahoma

Case	Description
Castro v. Ziriax 5:2023-cv-00781 U.S. District Court, Western District of Oklahoma	On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Paul Ziriax, Secretary of the Oklahoma State Election Board, and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Oklahoma according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 9/29/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Utah

Case	Description
Castro v. Henderson 2:23-cv-00617 U.S. District Court, District of Utah	On September 6, 2023, Castro filed a Verified Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief against Utah Lt. Gov. Deirdre Henderson and Donald J. Trump. Castro argues that Trump provided "aid or comfort" to insurrectionists on January 6, 2021, and that he should be prevented from appearing on the ballot in Utah according to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. 9/27/23: Notice of Dismissal filed by Plaintiff

the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 2

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
JOURNAL OF LAW & LIBERTY

IS THE PRESIDENT AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT?

Josh Blackman* & Seth Barrett Tillman*

INTRODUCTION

On January 13, 2021, the House of Representatives voted to impeach then-President Donald J. Trump for inciting an insurrection.[1] The sole impeachment article invoked Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[2] But the House's impeachment article

---

* Professor, South Texas College of Law Houston.
 Associate Professor, Maynooth University Department of Law, Ireland. Roinn Dlí Ollscoil Mhá Nuad.

[1] H.R. Res. 24, 117th Cong. (2021) (as introduced in the House on Jan. 1, 2021) [https://perma.cc/DS5F-SCQD].

[2] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

elided over a critical threshold question: Was Trump covered by Section 3? The structure of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is a bit complicated. To assist our analysis, we distinguish the four elements with different typefaces (underline, bold, italics, and SMALL CAPS), and number them out of order:

> [3] No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state, who, [1] having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States, [2] shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. [4] BUT CONGRESS MAY BY A VOTE OF TWO-THIRDS OF EACH HOUSE, REMOVE SUCH DISABILITY.[3]

First, the jurisdictional element, [1], specifies which positions are subject to Section 3: a "person . . . who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States."[4]

Second, the offense element, [2], defines the conduct prohibited by Section 3. It regulates the conduct of a person satisfying the jurisdictional element who "shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same [the United States], or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof."[5]

Third, the disqualification element, [3], defines the legal consequences or punishment that Section 3 provides. A person who

---

[3] U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3.
[4] Id.
[5] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

satisfies the jurisdictional and offense elements of Section 3 shall not be "a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any state."[6] The phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element is distinguishable from the phrase "officer of the united States" in the jurisdictional element.

FOURTH, the amnesty element, [4], allows Congress to terminate the disqualification or disability: "Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[7]

This article does not focus on the offense element [2] and the amnesty element [4]. Rather, to determine whether former-President Trump was disqualified pursuant to Section 3, we will focus on the jurisdictional element [1] and the disqualification element [3].

Section 3's jurisdictional element applies to exactly four defined categories of state and federal positions. President Trump clearly does not fit into three of these categories. Trump never swore an oath as a "member of Congress," "a member of any state legislature," or an "executive or judicial officer of any state."[8] Indeed, Trump was the only President in American history to have never held prior state or federal, civilian or military, public office. Therefore, the only way for Section 3's jurisdictional element to cover President Trump would be if he falls into the fourth category: he took an oath to support the Constitution as an "officer of the United States." Trump only swore one constitutional oath: as President of the United States.[9] In short, for President Trump to be subject to Section 3 disqualification, he must have violated the offense element and fit within the jurisdictional element. And in order to fit within the

---

[6] Id.

[7] Id.

[8] Donald Trump, THE WHITE HOUSE [https://perma.cc/BHR3-DZ3M].

[9] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (the presidential oath). See, e.g., Brian Duignan, Donald Trump/president of the United States, ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA (Aug. 17, 2021) [https://perma.cc/2X7V-K8RN].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

jurisdictional element, the President must be an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3.

The House's impeachment article, however, did not address this threshold issue. It stated:

> [S]ection 3 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution prohibits any person who has "engaged in insurrection or rebellion against" the United States from "hold[ing] any office . . . under the United States."[10]

In fact, Section 3 does not apply to "any person" or even "any person" who committed the conduct provided for in the offense element. Here, the House seemed to assume that the phrase "officer of the United States" was equivalent to the phrase "any person." Perhaps the House assumed that a President is an "officer of the United States." Still, the House's position was not entirely clear.

After the Senate trial, Trump was not convicted. Therefore, he could not be disqualified from holding future office pursuant to the Impeachment Disqualification Clause.[11] But even after Trump's acquittal, efforts to disqualify the former President based on Section 3 continue. For example, there is a pending concurrent resolution that would find "President Donald J. Trump 'as an officer of the United States . . . engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the [United States], or g[ave] aid or comfort to the enemies thereof,' making him ineligible for future office . . . ."[12] This resolution assumed that the President is an "officer of the United States."

---

[10] See H.R. Res. 24, supra note 1, at 3:2-6 (emphasis added).

[11] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 7 ("Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States . . . .").

[12] H.R. Con. Res. 3, 117th Cong. (2021) (emphasis added), https://www.congress.gov/bill/117th-congress/house-concurrent-resolution/3/text [https://perma.cc/7JZP-E23D] ("Censuring President Donald J. Trump for attempting to overturn the results of the 2020 Presidential election through unlawful means and for inciting insurrection").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We disagree. There is some good reason to think the President is not an "officer of the United States." President Trump, who swore only one constitutional oath, does not fall within Section 3's jurisdictional element. Therefore, he cannot be disqualified pursuant to this provision.

This article will proceed in six parts. Part I will contend that the phrases "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3 refer to different categories of positions. Part II will analyze the phrase "officer of the United States," which is used in the Constitution of 1788 and in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Part III will show that the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" did not drift from 1788 through 1868. In both eras, there is substantial evidence that the President was not considered an "officer of the United States." Part IV will recount longstanding Executive Branch opinions, which affirmed that elected officials like the President are not "officers of the United States." Part V will respond to recent arguments suggesting that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3. Part VI will chart how the courts, and not Congress, will likely have the final say about whether President Trump is subject to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

I. THE PHRASES "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" AND "OFFICE ... UNDER THE UNITED STATES" IN SECTION 3 REFER TO DIFFERENT CATEGORIES OF POSITIONS

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment refers to two textually distinct groups of officers and offices: an "officer of the United States" and an "Office . . . under the United States." These phrases also appear in the Constitution of 1788. The Oath or Affirmation Clause refers to "officers of the United States." And the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" appears in the Elector Incompatibility Clause and Impeachment Disqualification Clause. We have long argued that these two phrases, which appear in the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution of 1788, have distinct, albeit related meanings.[13] We also think these two phrases, as used in Section 3, have different meanings. Indeed, the very fact that Section 3's text uses both of these phrases, and does so in the very same sentence, provides some substantial evidence that the two phrases do not have identical meanings. Moreover, there is some textual overlap between the Constitution of 1788 and Section 3. We draw three inferences from this textual overlap. First, we think the better view is that the jurisdictional element of Section 3 was modeled after the structure and language of the Oath or Affirmation Clause. Second, we think the better view is that the disqualification element of Section 3 was modeled after the structure and language of the Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, and the Impeachment Disqualification Clause. Third, we think the better view is that the Framers imported the meaning of "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" from the Constitution of 1788 to Section 3's jurisdictional element and disqualification element, respectively.

A. WE SHOULD PRESUME THAT THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF OFFICES REFERENCED IN THE SAME SENTENCE OF SECTION 3 HAVE DIFFERENT MEANINGS

The scope of Section 3 is complicated. Specifically, the jurisdictional element and the disqualification element, which appear in the same sentence, refer to different types of officers and offices. First, the jurisdictional element applies to a person who took an oath as an "officer of the United States." Second, the

---

[13] See Seth Barrett Tillman & Josh Blackman, Offices and Officers of the Constitution, Part I: An Introduction, 61 S. TEX. L. REV. (forthcoming 2021) [hereinafter Tillman & Blackman, Offices] [https://perma.cc/B7AM-E83B] (discussing taxonomy); Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, The Emoluments Clauses litigation, Part 1: The Constitution's taxonomy of officers and offices, WASH. POST (Sept. 25, 2017) [hereinafter Blackman & Tillman, Emoluments] [https://perma.cc/7K3C-ANSM].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disqualification element mandates that disqualification extends to "any office . . . under the United States."[14] Had the framers used the same phrase twice in the same sentence—for example, both elements applied to "officer[s] of the United States"—we would reasonably conclude that those phrases have the same meaning. This reasoning follows from the presumption of intrasentence uniformity: where the same language is used in the same sentence, we presume that language is used uniformly.[15]

However, Section 3 uses different phrases in the same sentence. Here, the presumption should be the converse. The better conclusion is that when the same sentence in the Constitution uses two different phrases—here, referring to different categories of offices and officers—we should presume that the Framers intended to convey two different meanings.[16] This latter principle can be called the presumption of intrasentence non-uniformity: where different language is used in the same sentence, we presume that the language is not used uniformly. Given this presumption, the phrases "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" would have different meanings.

The Constitution of 1788 also juxtaposes these same two categories of officers in the same sentence. Consider the third paragraph of Article VI:

> [1] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of

---

[14] The ellipses refer to three words the Framers placed after office but before under: "civil or military."

[15] See, e.g., Saikrishna Prakash, Our Three Commerce Clauses and the Presumption of Intrasentence Uniformity, 55 ARK. L. REV. 1149, 1150 (2002) (defending "a presumption of intrasentence uniformity in constitutional, statutory, and regulatory interpretation").

[16] See, e.g., id. at 1172 ("It is far better to use two different words in a sentence when we mean to convey two different meanings."); see also Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. (1 Wheat.) 304 (1816) ("It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the [Constitution's] language could have been accidental.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; [2] but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.[17]

First, the Oath or Affirmation Clause, which appears before the semicolon, applies to "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States." Second, the Religious Test Clause, which appears after the semicolon, refers to "any Office . . . under the United States." [18] The same sentence references two textually distinct categories of officers and offices.

There is some evidence that the two types of "officers" and "offices" in Article VI refer to different categories of positions. During the drafting process, the Framers revised the Religious Test Clause to clarify what type of offices it applied to. Earlier, a draft provision referred to "any office or public trust under the authority of the United States."[19] Later, the Committee of Style revised that draft to "any office or public trust under the United States." [20] The committee removed the phrase "the authority of." [21] This revision provides some evidence that the Framers in 1787 paid reasonably careful attention to the way the Constitution used "office"- and

---

[17] U.S. CONST. art. VI (emphasis added).

[18] The Religious Test Clause also applies to a "public trust under the United States." U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 3. See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13, at 1 (finding that the phrase "public trust under the United States" includes "federal officials who are not subject to direction or supervision by a higher federal authority in the normal course of their duties"—a category that would include presidential electors).

[19] PETER K. ROFES, THE RELIGION GUARANTEES: A REFERENCE GUIDE TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION 12 (2005) (noting that "[t]he Committee of Style rephrased the language by eliminating the words 'the authority of'" from the draft Religious Test Clause).

[20] Id. See generally William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Gouverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 MICH. L. REV. 1, 47 n.275, 87 n.492 (2021) (discussing revisions made to "office"- and "officer"-language in the Succession Clause, Impeachment Clause, and Religious Test Clause).

[21] See ROFES, supra note 19.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"officer"-language. One cannot presume that the various phrases using "office" and "officer" were used indiscriminately. There is no record of commensurate efforts by the Committee of Style or the Committee of Detail to textually align or harmonize the phrases "Officer[] . . . of the United States" and "Office . . . under the United State" which both appear in the same sentence of Article VI. Given the Framers' careful attention to such details, we conclude that the two different phrases were used to refer to different types of offices.[22]

We think the same presumption of intrasentence non-uniformity should likewise extend to Section 3. The phrase "officer of the United States" in the jurisdictional element has a different meaning from the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element. Our position regarding Section 3 is supported by the similar usage in Article VI. Both the text of Section 3 and Article VI use textually distinct language: "officer of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States." And we should presume these phrases referred to different positions.

The Framers of the Constitution of 1788 made many other changes to "office"- and "officer"-language in provisions of the draft constitution. For example, in the Succession Clause, the phrase "officer of the United States" was changed to "officer."[23] In the Impeachment Clause, the phrase "[President, Vice President,] and other Civil officers of the U.S." was changed to "President, Vice President, and Civil Officers of the U.S."[24] And in its final form, the Impeachment Clause became: "President, Vice President, and all civil Officers of the United States." The Framers changed the word that preceded "Civil Officers of the United States" from "other" to "all." This and other similar alterations to the draft constitution's "office"- and "officer"-language were significant. First, these revisions show

---

[22] Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

[23] Compare 2 THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 532 and 535 (Max Farrand ed., 1911) [hereinafter FARRAND'S RECORDS], with id. at 573 and 599. See generally Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 STAN. L. REV. 113, 116 nn.16–18 (1995).

[24] Compare 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 545 & 552, with id. at 600.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that this language was not modified indiscriminately. The Framers paid careful attention to the words they chose. Second, the use of "other" in the draft constitution shows that at a preliminary stage, the Framers used language affirmatively stating that the President and Vice President were "Officers of the United States." But the draft constitution's use of "other" was, in fact, rejected in favor of "all." The better inference, arising in connection with the actual Constitution of 1788, is that the President and Vice President are not "Officers of the United States." Joseph Story stated this position in his Commentaries on the Constitution.[25] The Framers also made complex changes to the "officer"-language in the Appointments Clause.[26]

These precise, surgical textual changes cannot be described as random. All available evidence suggests that the Framers were deliberate. The ratifiers and their contemporaries would have understood how these alterations modified the meaning of these provisions. The different "office"- and "officer"-language presumptively had different meanings. And, we think, the Framers of 1868 also took reasonable care when using the coordinate phrases "officers of the United States" and "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

---

[25] 2 JOSEPH STORY, COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 791, at 260 (Boston, Hilliard, Gray, and Co. 1833) ("[The Impeachment Clause] says, 'the president, vice-president, and all civil officers (not all other civil officers) shall be removed,' &c. The language of the clause, therefore, would rather lead to the conclusion, that the[] [President and Vice President] were enumerated, as contradistinguished from, rather than as included in the description of, civil officers of the United States." (latter two emphases added)).

[26] 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 177, 181–82; Jennifer L. Mascott, Who are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 STAN. L. REV. 443, 472 (2018) (citing 1 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 20–22, 20 n.10); 2 FARRAND'S RECORDS, supra note 23, at 614.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. THERE IS SOME TEXTUAL OVERLAP BETWEEN THE JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENT OF SECTION 3 AND THE OATH OR AFFIRMATION CLAUSE

We do not think that the language used in Section 3 was drafted from a blank slate. Indeed, there is some overlap between Section 3 and provisions from the Constitution of 1788. The Framers of Section 3's jurisdictional element likely drew its language from the text of the 1788 Oath or Affirmation Clause in Article VI. Therefore, the meaning of the phrase "Officers of the United States" in Article VI should inform the meaning of "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Compare these two provisions, which each refer to four types of positions. Once again, we have used different typefaces (underline, bold, italics, and SMALL CAPS) to distinguish the four categories.

Oath or Affirmation Clause (1788)	Jurisdictional Element of Section 3 (1868)
"[1] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the [2] Members of the several State Legislatures, and [3] all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and [4] OF THE SEVERAL STATES, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution"	"No person . . . who having previously taken an oath, [1] as a member of Congress, or as [3] an officer of the United States, or as a [2] member of any state legislature, or as [4] AN EXECUTIVE OR JUDICIAL OFFICER OF ANY STATE, to support the Constitution of the United States. . . . "

Both provisions reference the same four categories of office holders who swore an oath to support the Constitution: [1] Senators and Representatives, [2] members of the state legislatures, [3] executive and judicial officers of the United States, and [4] EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL OFFICERS OF THE STATES.

There are substantial similarities between the Oath or Affirmation Clause and Section 3's jurisdictional element. This overlap is not surprising. Article VI already imposed an oath on

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

many positions in the federal and state governments. It would make sense for the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment to use that same grouping of people to identify those subject to disqualification. We think it reasonable to infer that the jurisdictional element of Section 3 was modeled after the Oath or Affirmation Clause of Article VI.

There are slight variations between the Oath or Affirmation Clause and Section 3's jurisdictional element. And these alterations support our position that the Framers took care when writing "office"- and "officer"-language. They did not simply copy the language in its entirety, but instead made careful revisions.

The first category was changed from "the Senators and Representatives before mentioned" to "member of Congress." These phrases are not identical. The category of "member[s] of Congress" is narrower than the category of "Senators and Representatives." Not all Senators and Representatives become members. Senators and Representatives begin their terms as members-elect from the date of the start of their two-year or six-year constitutional terms. Customarily, prior to the start of their terms, a Senator or Representative—that is, a member-elect—travels to the Capitol and presents bona fide credentials or a certificate of election. But such a member-elect does not become a member until his house organizes and accepts him as a member.[27]

The distinction between a member-elect and a member affects the timing of when officer-holders in the Executive Branch or Judicial Branch transition to Congress. For example, the Incompatibility Clause bars "a member of either House" from holding "any Office under the United States." But this restriction only applies to actual members, and not members-elect. Therefore, when a member-elect begins the two-year or six-year constitutional term to which he was [27] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 1 ("Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members . . . ."); id. art. I, § 6, cl. 2 ("[N]o Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.").

---

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

elected, but before he is accepted as a member, he could still hold a position in the Executive Branch or Judicial Branch. But in order to be accepted as a member, the member-elect must resign his executive-branch or judicial-branch office. These sorts of disputes are not hypothetical. In 1818, the House of Representatives drew this distinction when it accepted the credentials of a federal-office holder who simultaneously served as member-elect, but had not yet become a member.[28] In 1788, 1818, and 1868, and today, the Constitution's "office"- and "officer"-language mattered and continues to matter.

The second category was tweaked from "Members of the several State Legislatures" to "member of any state legislature." Here, we do not see any material change. There may have been some linguistic preference for the phrase "any state" over the phrase "several states" followed by a plural noun. The Framers of Section 3 likewise changed the phrase "executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several states" to "an executive or judicial officer of any state." The Constitution of 1788 used the phrase "several states" in seven clauses,[29] and the phrase

---

[28] See, e.g., 1 ASHER C. HINDS, HINDS' PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES § 499, at 624–27 (1907) [https://perma.cc/B5V8-XFD6] ("After a careful consideration of the status of a Member-elect the House decided that such an one was not affected by the constitutional requirement that an officer . . . shall not be a Member.").

[29] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 1 ("The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 2, cl. 3 ("Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 8, cl. 3 ("To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes" (emphasis added)); id. art. 2, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 ("The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." (emphasis added)); id. art. V ("The Congress . . . on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. VI, cl. 3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"any state" in six provisions.[30] It may be that the phrase "any state" referred to specific conduct that occurred in only one state. And the phrase "several states" referred to general conduct that could recur in multiple states. The Framers also used the phrase "each state" in eight provisions to similar effect as "any state."[31] The Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article VI, which refers to both "each state" and "several states," illustrates this usage: "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the

---

[30] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 4 ("When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 9, cl. 5 ("No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 10, cl. 2 ("[T]he net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States . . . . " (emphasis added)); id. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 ("[B]ut when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 2, cl. 3 ("A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State . . . ." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 3, cl. 1 ("[N]or any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." (emphasis added)).

[31] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 1 ("[T]he Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 2, cl. 3 ("The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative." (emphasis added)); id. art. I, § 3, cl. 1 ("The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years."); id. art. I, § 4, cl. 1 ("The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." (emphasis added)); id. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 ("Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors . . . ."); id. art. II, § 1, cl. 3 ("But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote." (emphasis added)); id. art. IV, § 1, ("Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State."); id. art. IV, § 2 ("The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

several States."[32] It appears that the Fourteenth Amendment used "any state" and "several states" to the same effect.[33]

The third category was changed from "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States" to "an officer of the United States."

The FOURTH ELEMENT was changed from "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several States" to "an executive or judicial officer of any state."

These third and fourth revisions show the care with which the Framers approached the "officer"-language in Section 3. Article VI of the 1788 Constitution refers broadly to "all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States." In a single clause, the Framers lumped together a wide variety of federal and state offices. This clause applied to "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States" and "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the several states."

In our view, it was unnecessary to specify that the "Officers of the United States" had to be "executive and judicial" officers. In light of the Appointments Clause, "Officers of the United States" could only be appointed to the executive and judicial branches. Appointed positions in the legislative branch—such as the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate—are not appointed pursuant to the Appointments Clause. They are not "Officers of the United States." And they do not take an oath pursuant to Article VI.[34] However, Article VI also provided the oath for state officeholders. And each state had different governmental structures, which could change. It would have been arduous to draft a single federal constitutional provision that could reflect the varied state

---

[32] U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis added).

[33] Compare U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 ("[N]or shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . ." (emphasis added)), with id. § 2 ("Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers . . . .").

[34] See also Steven G. Calabresi, The Political Question of Presidential Succession, 48 STAN. L. REV. 155, 162 (1995) ("No constitutional oath is required of legislative officers, like the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate . . . .").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

constitutional structures regarding offices and officers. To provide some guidance to the state, Article VI clarified which types of state officers were covered: executive officers and judicial officers. Members of state legislatures are expressly covered by the Article VI oath requirement, but appointed positions in state legislatures are not covered.

In 1868, the Framers of Section 3's jurisdictional element departed from the structure of Article VI: they decoupled the state officers from the federal officers. Section 3 still specifies the types of state officers covered: "an executive or judicial officer of any state." Again, this provision accounts for the wide range of state government officeholders. And, now that state and federal provisions were textually decoupled, there was no need to specify that "Officers of the United States" had to be in the executive and judicial branches. Rather, the Appointments Clause defines the scope of the "Officers of the United States": appointed positions in the executive and judicial branches.[35]

This history supports a reasonable inference: the 1788 and 1868 Framers took some care when drafting "office"- and "officer"-language. These phrases were not used indiscriminately. Rather, in 1868, there was some deliberate effort to modify the extant 1788 language.

C. THERE IS SOME TEXTUAL OVERLAP BETWEEN THE DISQUALIFICATION ELEMENT OF SECTION 3 AND THE ELECTOR INCOMPATIBILITY CLAUSE, THE INCOMPATIBILITY CLAUSE, AND THE IMPEACHMENT DISQUALIFICATION CLAUSE

In the Constitution of 1788, the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" is used in four provisions: the Elector Incompatibility

---

[35] See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, and the Foreign Emoluments Clause. In our view, the phrase "Office . . . under the United States" in each of these four provisions refers to appointed positions in the Executive and Judicial Branches, as well as non-apex appointed positions in the Legislative Branch.[36] The phrase "office . . . under the United States" also appears in Section 3's disqualification element. In this Article, we take no position as to the meaning or scope of "office . . . under the United States" in Section 3, or whether that phrase in Section 3 included the President and Vice President. Instead, we use the Constitution of 1788 for a different purpose. The 1868 Framers of Section 3's disqualification element, who used the phrase "office . . . under the United States," were likely to have drawn that language from the similar language in the 1788 Constitution. Specifically, three of the four 1788 provisions share a similar structure with Section 3's disqualification element: holders of an "office . . . under the United States" are barred from some other position. The fourth provision, the Foreign Emoluments Clause, is structurally different; it does not impose any disqualifications.

---

[36] See id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Compare the disqualification element of Section 3 with the Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, and the Impeachment Disqualification Clause:

Elector Incompatibility Clause (1788)	Incompatibility Clause (1788)	Impeachment Disqualification Clause (1788)	Disqualification Element of Section 3 (1868)
"no [1] Senator or Representative, or [2] Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector."	"no [2] Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office."	"Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to [2] hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States"	"No person shall be a [1] Senator or Representative in Congress, or [3] elector of President and Vice President, or [2] hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or [4] UNDER ANY STATE . . . ."

The disqualification element of Section 3, like the Elector Incompatibility clause, applies to Senators and Representatives. To be precise, Section 3 extends disqualification to "a Senator or Representative in Congress." The phrase "in Congress" may have been added to clarify that disqualification did not extend to state legislators, who may have the same formal title: senators and representatives. In 1878, a prominent commentator observed, without equivocation, that members of state legislatures are not "officers under any State" for purposes of Section 3's disqualification element.[37] This subtle addition, "in Congress," demonstrates that the [37] See John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 106 N. AM. REV. 53, 55 (1878) ("[I]t is clear that a member of a State Legislature is not a civil or military officer under any State, any more than a member of Congress is a civil or military officer under the United States . . . .") [https://perma.cc/JJM6-PBQG].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Framers of Section 3 took care with respect to "office"-language. They did not use these terms indiscriminately.

The Elector Incompatibility Clause, the Incompatibility Clause, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, and the disqualification element of Section 3 all apply to any "office . . . under the United States."[38] The Impeachment Disqualification Clause empowered the Senate to disqualify a person from "hold[ing] and enjoy[ing] any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." The Incompatibility Clause bars a "person holding any Office under the United States" from serving as a member of Congress. And the Elector Incompatibility Clause bars members of Congress, as well as a "Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States" from serving as presidential electors. In light of these textual overlaps, it is reasonable to infer that the Framers of Section 3's disqualification element may have relied on the three provisions of the 1788 Constitution that barred certain officials from holding certain positions. And it is also reasonable to infer that the Framers of Section 3 used the phrase "office . . . under the United States" to have a different meaning than the phrase "officers of the United States."

The disqualification element of Section 3 departs from the provisions of the 1788 Constitution that use the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in two regards. First, the disqualification element of section 3 refers to an "elector of President and Vice President." This category of position does not appear in the Elector Incompatibility Clause—with good reason. It would be nonsensical to bar an elector from serving as an elector. But it would make sense to disqualify former confederates from serving as presidential electors. The Incompatibility Clause, which governs members of

---

[38] Here, the ellipses refer to different words placed after office but before under: i.e., "of Trust or Profit" in the Elector Incompatibility Clause; "of honor, Trust or Profit" in the Impeachment Disqualification Clause; and "civil or military" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. By contrast, no ellipsis is necessary for the Incompatibility Clause, which simply uses "office under the United States."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress, also does not refer to electors. There was no need to list electors in the Incompatibility Clause because the Elector Incompatibility Clause already expressly barred Senators and Representatives from serving as electors. We think that a person disqualified under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause could serve as an elector. In our view, an elector is a "public trust under the United States," as that phrase is used in the Religious Test Clause, but does not hold an "Office . . . under the United States."[39]

Second, Section 3's disqualification element extends to "any office . . . under any state." The Elector Incompatibility Clause does not bar state officeholders from serving as electors. Indeed, to this day, it is common for state officeholders to serve as electors. Likewise, the Impeachment Disqualification Clause does not bar a disqualified person from holding state office. And the text of the Incompatibility Clause does not expressly bar a person who holds a state position from also serving in Congress. Indeed, a Governor could appoint himself to fill a Senate vacancy, and concurrently serve as both Governor and Senator without violating the plain text of the Incompatibility Clause.[40] The Fourteenth Amendment was novel in that the national constitution disqualified former confederates from serving in state governments. However, the disqualification element does not specify whether Section 3 disqualification extends to state legislative, executive, or judicial positions. Nonetheless, in 1878 John Randolph Tucker stated that members of the state legislature are not

---

[39] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, What are Presidential Electors?, REASON—VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (May 21, 2020) [https://perma.cc/66HF-YBBM].

[40] Several Governors appointed themselves to fill Senate vacancies, but they resigned their state positions. Ken Rudin, When Governors Appoint Themselves To The Senate, POLITICAL JUNKIE (Sept. 8, 2009) [https://perma.cc/H4YL-3S2A]. See generally Josh Chafetz, Leaving the House: The Constitutional Status of Resignation from the House of Representatives, 58 DUKE L.J. 177, 219 & n.277 (2008) (affirming that joint member of congress and state officeholding is not regulated by the Constitution's Incompatibility Clause).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

covered by Section 3's disqualification element.[41] By contrast, the jurisdictional element, like the Oath or Affirmation Clause, does provide such specificity: both provisions refer to "executive or judicial officer of any state" as well as "a member of any state legislature." The disqualification element simply refers to "any office . . . under any state."

We are not aware of any legislative debates that explain why the Framers chose the precise words they did for the jurisdictional and disqualification elements of Section 3. But we can reasonably presume that these two elements were drawn from very similarly-worded provisions from the Constitution of 1788. And if the phrases "Officers of the United States" and "Office . . . under the United States" had different meanings in the Constitution of 1788, we can reasonably presume that the Framers of Section 3 also understood these phrases to have different meanings. Here, we take no position on what the phrase "office . . . under the United States" meant in the disqualification element of Section 3, and whether that phrase as used in Section 3 includes the President and Vice President. Rather, we focus on the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element.

II. THE PRESIDENT IS NOT AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF THE 1788 CONSTITUTION OR FOR SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

The phrase "Officers of the United States" is used in four provisions of the Constitution of 1788: the Appointments Clause, the Impeachment Clause, the Commissions Clause, and the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[42] (We discussed the fourth provision in Part I). In our view, the President is not an "officer of the United States" for

---

[41] See Tucker, supra note 37.

[42] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. II, § 3; id. art. II, § 4; id. art. VI, cl. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

purposes of these four provisions.[43] We discussed this taxonomy in September 2017:

> First, the Appointments Clause spells out with clarity that the president can nominate "Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States." . . . Second, the Impeachment Clause expressly provides that "[t]he President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment. …" Story explained that the president and vice president's [express] enumeration in the Impeachment Clause in addition to "all civil Officers of the United States" shows that the president and vice president are not deemed "officers of the United States" themselves. Otherwise, the Framers would have stated that "all other civil officers" were subject to impeachment. [Third], the oaths clause specifically enumerates that "Senators and Representatives, and the Members of the several State Legislatures," as well as "all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States of the United States" were required to be "bound by Oath or Affirmation to, support this Constitution." . . . [Fourth], the commission clause provides that "all the officers of the United States" receive presidential commissions. All means all. This structure explains why appointed executive-branch and judicial-branch officers receive commissions, but there is no record of any elected official, whether a president, vice president or a member of Congress, ever receiving a [presidential] commission. The [43] See Tillman & Blackman, Offices, supra note 13 (discussing taxonomy).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reason is simple: Elected officials like the president are not "Officers of the United States."[44]

Our position is consistent with recent Supreme Court precedent. In Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., Chief Justice Roberts observed that "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[45] Rather, "Officers of the United States" are appointed exclusively pursuant to Article II, Section 2 procedures.[46] It follows from these premises that the President, who is an elected official, is not an "officer of the United States."

Of these four provisions, only the Impeachment Clause expressly applies to the President. However, by contrast, the jurisdictional element of Section 3 does not specifically mention the presidency. Instead of using express language akin to the Impeachment Clause, the jurisdictional element of Section 3 applies to: A "person . . . who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any state legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any state, to support the Constitution of the United States."[47]

We think Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language was imported from the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[48] By using this phrasing, the Framers of Section 3 likely intended to import or adopt the settled meanings from that provision, whether or not they had given concrete thought to what that meaning was. "[W]hen 'a word is obviously transplanted from another legal source, whether the common law or other legislation, it brings the old soil with it.'"[49] Here, Section 3's jurisdictional element was "quite obviously

---

[44] See Blackman & Tillman, Emoluments, supra note 13.

[45] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497–98 (2010).

[46] Id. at 497.

[47] U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3 (emphasis added).

[48] See supra Part I.B.

[49] United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 176–77 (2014) (Scalia, J., concurring) (quoting Felix Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 COLUM. L. REV. 527, 537 (1947)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

modeled" on the Oath or Affirmation Clause.[50] The soil was transplanted, along with the tree's roots and branches.

The President is not expressly listed in the Oath or Affirmation Clause. Why? Because the President does not recite an oath pursuant to Article VI. Rather, the President recites an oath pursuant to the Presidential Oath Clause in Article II.[51] The fact that the President does not take his oath pursuant to Article VI provides further evidence that he is not an "officer[] . . . of the United States" as that phrase is used in the Oath or Affirmation Clause. And if the President is not covered by the Oath or Affirmation Clause of 1788, then the presumption should be that he is not covered by the substantially similar phrase "officer of the United States" used in the jurisdictional element of Section 3.

In 1788, the President was not an "officer of the United States." We contend that the phrase "officer of the United States" has the same meaning in Section 3 as it does in the Constitution of 1788: the elected President is not an "officer of the United States." And we have seen no substantial evidence showing that the meaning of "officer of the United States" drifted from 1788 to 1868.

III. THERE IS NO DIRECT, CLEAR, OR COMPELLING EVIDENCE THAT THE MEANING OF "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" DRIFTED FROM 1788 TO 1868

Critics may argue that the meaning of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3 is different from the meaning of the phrase "Officers of the United States" in the Constitution's original seven articles. In other words, there was some linguistic drift or slippage between the 1788 ratification of the Constitution and the 1868 ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. Let's assume that the President is not an "officer[] of the United States" for purposes of the

---

[50] Id.

[51] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (the presidential oath).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1788 Constitution. Under that assumption, it is still possible that the President might be an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3. Thus, a reader might take the limited position that the President is an "officer of the United States" for the purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

This position is conceivable. Indeed, more than a decade ago, Tillman suggested that linguistic drift may have occurred with respect to this phrase between 1788 and 1868.[52] He wrote that "[t]he stretch of time between the two events [1788 and 1868] was more than half a century. . . . It is hardly surprising that in the post-bellum epoch new meanings might have accrued to older language. Such linguistic slippage is common."[53] Again, in this Article, we take no position on whether the President and Vice President hold an "office . . . under the United States" for the purposes of the disqualification element of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. But we do not think linguistic drift occurred with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States."[54]

Absent contrary evidence, the default presumption should be one of linguistic continuity, rather than a presumption of linguistic drift. In other words, the proponents of the view that Section 3's jurisdictional element applies to the presidency have the burden to prove two propositions. First, proponents must show that the particular linguistic drift involving the Constitution's "officer of the United States"-language had actually occurred. And second, proponents must show that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language, in fact, drifted to include the presidency. In other words, even if the meaning shifted over time, it is not self-evident that the

---

[52] See Thomas R. Lee & James C. Phillips, Data-Driven Originalism, 167 U. PA. L. REV. 261, 265 (2019) (discussing linguistic drift); see also James C. Phillips & Josh Blackman, Corpus Linguistics & Heller, 56 WAKE FOREST L. REV. 609, 622 (2021).

[53] Seth Barrett Tillman, Either/Or: Professors Zephyr Rain Teachout and Akhil Reed Amar—Contradictions and Suggested Reconciliation 70 n.119 (Feb. 1, 2012) [https://perma.cc/5CSU-66A2] (unpublished manuscript) (emphasis added) (citing Jack Tsen-Ta Lee, The Text Through Time, 31 STATUTE L. REV. 217 (2010)).

[54] See infra Part III.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

shift would embrace the presidency. Both propositions must be proven.

We do not think either proposition can be proven. Rather, there is some good authority to reject the position that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language extends to the presidency. First, United States v. Mouat (1888) strongly suggested that officers are appointed, and not elected. Second, United States v. Hartwell (1867) strongly suggested that officers are appointed, and not elected. Third, other contemporary sources—such as a treatise on election law and proceedings from an 1867 impeachment trial—further rebut arguments in favor of linguistic drift. In light of this evidence, the strongest position is that the meaning of "officer of the United States" did not drift between 1788 and 1868. The President was not an "officer of the United States" in 1788, and the President was not an "officer of the United States" in 1868.

A. United States v. Mouat rebuts arguments in favor of linguistic drift

The Supreme Court decided United States v. Mouat in 1888, two decades after the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.[55] Mouat interpreted a statute that used the phrase "officers of the United States."[56] It provided, in part, that "no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision."[57] This statute was enacted in June 1873, five years after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in 1868.

Justice Samuel Miller, who served on the Supreme Court during the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, wrote the majority opinion in Mouat. He grounded his understanding of the statutory

---

[55] United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303 (1888).
[56] Id. at 307.
[57] Id. at 305 (citing 18 Stat. 72) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

phrase "Officers of the United States" in the Appointments Clause. Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution provides:

> The President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments."[58]

Justice Miller concluded, "[u]nless a person in the service of the government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the president, or of one of the courts of justice or heads of departments authorized by law to make such an appointment, he is not strictly speaking, an officer of the United States."[59] In other words, if a person was not appointed pursuant to the paths identified in Article II, Section 2, then he is likely not an "officer of the United States." Moreover, the discussion in Mouat was not limited to appointed officers. Rather, the Mouat test governs all persons in "the service of the government." The President is in "the service of the government," but he is not appointed by a President, a court of law, or a department head; indeed, he is not appointed at all. Notwithstanding the process followed by presidential electors, the Constitution expressly states that the President "shall . . . be elected."[60] Under the rule in Mouat, the President is not "strictly speaking" an "officer of the United States." Here, Mouat strongly

---

[58] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

[59] Mouat, 124 U.S. at 307 (emphasis added).

[60] U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1; see also id. art. II, § 1, cl. 7 ("The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them." (emphasis added)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

suggests that the meaning of the phrase "officers of the United States" remained stable from 1788 through 1868.

Mouat provides some probative evidence of the original public meaning of Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language. Justice Miller's opinion also provides some evidence rebutting any presumption of post-1788 linguistic drift with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States." Finally, Mouat rebuts the position that, circa 1868, the president was obviously, plainly, or clearly an "officer of the United States."

In short, Mouat makes the linguistic drift view very difficult to defend. For this argument to work, the meaning of "officer of the United States" must have drifted back and forth: (1) in 1788, the phrase did not include the presidency; (2) in 1868, the phrase did include the presidency; (3) but during the five year span between 1868 and 1873, the meaning of that phrase drifted back to its original 1788 meaning, such that the President was not an "officer of the United States." We find that proposed chronology implausible.

B. United State v. Hartwell rebuts arguments in favor of linguistic drift

United States v. Hartwell was decided contemporaneously with the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.[61] This case further refutes the possibility of linguistic drift. In Hartwell, a clerk in the Treasury Department was charged with embezzlement. The relevant 1846 statute applied to an "officer" who was "charged with the safe-keeping of the public money."[62] The defendant claimed that because he was not an "officer," the indictment was defective. The Supreme Court disagreed and found that he was an "officer." Justice Noah Swayne wrote the majority opinion. He offered a two-part definition of an office. First, "[a]n office is a public station, or employment,

---

[61] United States v. Hartwell, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 385 (1867).
[62] Id. at 392 (citing 9 Stat. 59).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conferred by the appointment of government."[63] Second, "[t]he term [office] embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties."[64]

In Hartwell, the clerk "was appointed by the head of a department within the meaning of the constitutional provision upon the subject of the appointing power."[65] The court did not expressly connect the term "officer" in the embezzlement statute with the phrase "officer of the United States" in the Appointments Clause. However, the court's discussion of the appointment being made by the head of the department suggests the two concepts were closely related—rightly so, in our view. Hartwell, like Mouat, understood officers to be appointed, and not elected. Eleven years later, the Court decided United States v. Germaine.[66] And the Germaine Court repeated Hartwell's four-factor test.[67]

In the modern era, the Supreme Court has cited the second part of Hartwell's test, as repeated in Germaine, to determine whether a position is a principal or inferior "officer of the United States."[68] But this second part of Hartwell was premised on the first part: an officer is "conferred by the appointment of government." Presidents are not

---

[63] Id. at 393 (emphasis added).

[64] Id.

[65] Id. at 393–94.

[66] United States v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508 (1878).

[67] Id.

[68] Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 672 (1988) ("In our view, these factors relating to the 'ideas of tenure, duration . . . and duties' of the independent counsel, are sufficient to establish that appellant is an 'inferior' officer in the constitutional sense." (citing Germaine, 99 U.S. at 511–12)); cf. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 718 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (noting that the four-factor test from Germaine "was dictum in a case where the distinguishing characteristics of inferior officers versus superior officers were in no way relevant, but rather only the distinguishing characteristics of an 'officer of the United States' (to which the criminal statute at issue applied) as opposed to a mere employee."). We agree with Justice Scalia. See also Seth Barrett Tillman & Josh Blackman, Is Robert Mueller an 'Officer of the United States' or an 'Employee of the United States'?, LAWFARE (July 23, 2018), [hereinafter Tillman & Blackman, Mueller] [https://perma.cc/XK32-Q3JW] ("Germaine's four-factor test had nothing to do with whether a position was held by an . . . 'inferior' or 'principal' officer. Germaine concerned the distinction between an 'officer of the United States' and an 'employee of the United States.'").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"appointed" by the "government." Presidents are "elected" by the people.[69] Chief Justice Roberts announced the same view in Free Enterprise Fund: "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[70]

From Hartwell to the present, the Supreme Court has consistently understood that "offices" and "officers" refer to appointed positions. These authorities place the President outside the scope of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3.

C. OTHER CONTEMPORARY AUTHORITIES FURTHER REBUT ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF LINGUISTIC DRIFT

There is additional evidence that the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3 does not extend to the presidency. Furthermore, this evidence is roughly contemporaneous with the 1868 ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In 1876, the House of Representatives impeached Secretary of War William Belknap. During the trial, Senator Newton Booth from California observed, "the President is not an officer of the United States."[71] Instead, Booth stated, the President is "part of the Government."[72]

Two years later, David McKnight wrote an influential treatise on the American electoral system. He reached a similar conclusion. McKnight wrote that "[i]t is obvious that . . . the President is not regarded as 'an officer of, or under, the United States,' but as one

---

[69] See supra note 51 and accompany text (discussing the elected President).

[70] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497 (2010).

[71] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD CONTAINING THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE SITTING FOR THE TRIAL OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP, LATE SECRETARY OF WAR, ON THE ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT EXHIBITED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES 145 (Washington, Government Printing Office 1876) (reproducing May 27, 1876 statement of Newton Booth, Senator from California); see also id. at 130 (reproducing May 25, 1876 statement of George Sewell Boutwell, Senator from Massachusetts, who stated: "[F]or according to the Constitution, as well as upon the judgment of eminent commentators, the President and Vice-President are not civil officers.").

[72] Id. at 145.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

branch of 'the Government.'"[73] In 1866, the Supreme Court observed that "the President is the executive department."[74] And more recently, the Supreme Court described the presidency in the same fashion: "The President is the only person who alone composes a branch of government."[75]

These sources tend to rebut any argument in favor of post-1788 linguistic drift with respect to the phrase "officer of the United States." Likewise, these sources provide some evidence that in the period following the Civil War, the phrase "officer of the United States" did not extend to elected positions, including the presidency. We do not suggest that there is no counter-authority. But until proponents of the view that Section 3's "officer of the United States"-language includes the presidency put forward evidence as probative as Mouat and Hartwell, we will maintain that the original public meaning did not shift between 1788 and 1868. The President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

IV. CONSISTENT WITH SUPREME COURT PRECEDENT, THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH HAS LONG CONTENDED THAT ELECTED OFFICIALS, LIKE THE PRESIDENT, ARE NOT "OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES"

The Executive Branch has long relied on Justice Miller's discussion of "Officers of the United States" in Mouat. In 1918, Attorney General Thomas Watt Gregory concluded that "[a]n assistant United States district attorney is not an employee of the United States within the meaning of the Federal Employees'

---

[73] DAVID A. MCKNIGHT, THE ELECTORAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES: A CRITICAL AND HISTORICAL EXPOSITION OF ITS FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES IN THE CONSTITUTION, AND OF THE ACTS AND PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS ENFORCING IT 346 (Philadelphia, J.B. Lippincott & Co. 1878).

[74] Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 500 (1866).

[75] Trump v. Mazars USA, LLP, 140 S. Ct. 2019, 2034 (2020).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Compensation Act."[76] Citing Mouat, he assumed that if a "person in the service of the Government [is] not appointed by the President, a court, or a head of a department, and not elect[ed]," then he is not an officer, but "is an employee."[77] The Executive Branch has long taken the position that the phrase "Officers of the United States" does not extend beyond persons appointed pursuant to Article II, Section 2 procedures.

In 1943, Attorney General Francis Biddle cited Mouat for the proposition that "under the Constitution of the United States, all its officers were appointed by the President . . . or by a court of law, or the head of a department."[78] Biddle's reading of Mouat did not distinguish "officers of the United States" as used in the statute from "Officers of the United States" as used in the Constitution. And, Biddle reasoned that "all" officers must be appointed—not elected.

In 2007, an Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) memorandum echoed this position. Citing Mouat, the memorandum stated, "[i]t is true that an individual not properly appointed under the Appointments Clause cannot technically be an officer of the United States."[79] The modifier "technically" is significant. Here, OLC suggests that the Constitution uses the phrase "officer of the United States" in a technical sense. The Constitution does not use the phrase "officer of the United States" as a colloquialism. In other words, the Framers did not use the phrase "officer of the United States" as it is used in [76] Employee Compensation Act—Assistant United States Attorney, 31 U.S. Op. Atty. Gen. 201, 202 (1918) (citing United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 307 (1888)) (emphasis added).

---

[77] Id. (emphasis added). Buckley v. Valeo also distinguished between an "officer of the United States" and an "employee of the United States." See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 126 n.162 (1976). See also Tillman & Blackman, Mueller, supra note 68 (concluding that under Buckley v. Valeo, Special Counsel Mueller was not an "officer of the United States," but a mere "employee of the United States").

[78] Prosecution of Claims by Members of War Price and Rationing Boards, 40 U.S. Op. Atty. Gen. 294, 296 (1943) (Biddle, A.G.) (emphasis added).

[79] Officers of the United States Within the Meaning of the Appointments Clause, 31 Op. O.L.C. 73 (2007) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

common parlance—a position that performs services for the United States of America. Rather, the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in a technical fashion to refer to specific positions.

Indeed, Mouat recognized that the phrase "officer of the United States" was a technical term. The Mouat Court found that a "person in the service of the Government" "is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States" unless he "holds his place by virtue of an appointment. . . ."[80] This 2007 OLC opinion strongly supports our position: the President, who is elected and not appointed, cannot be an officer of the United States.

Other executive-branch opinions have reached a similar conclusion when interpreting "officer"-language in statutes or regulations. Future-Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist observed that federal courts do not extend general "officer"-language in statutes to the President, "unless there is a specific indication that Congress intended to cover the Chief Executive."[81] Future-Justice Antonin Scalia also embraced this position in an OLC opinion. He wrote, "when the word 'officer' is used in the Constitution, it invariably refers to someone other than the President or Vice President."[82] These authorities, which are consistent with Mouat, Hartwell, and Free Enterprise Fund, provide further support for our position: the elected President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

V. ADVOCATES WHO ARGUE THAT THE PRESIDENT IS AN "OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES" FOR PURPOSES OF

---

[80] Mouat, 124 U.S. at 307 (emphasis added).

[81] Memorandum from William H. Rehnquist, Asst. Att'y Gen., to the Honorable Egil Krogh, Re: Closing of Government Offices in Memory of Former President Eisenhower, OLC, at 3 (Apr. 1, 1969) [https://perma.cc/P229-BAKL].

[82] Memorandum from Antonin Scalia, Asst. Att'y Gen, to Honorable Kenneth A. Lazarus, Re: Applicability of 3 C.F.R. Part 100 to the Pres. and V.P., OLC, at 2 (Dec. 19, 1974) [https://perma.cc/GQA4-PJNN].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SECTION 3 HAVE FAILED TO MEET THEIR BURDEN OF PERSUASION

Professor Gerard Magliocca wrote an analysis of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[83] He cited our prior work suggesting that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.[84] Magliocca did not reach a firm position on this issue. But he acknowledged that "[i]f there is an attempt to apply Section Three to former President Trump for his role in the events of January 6, 2021, the issue of whether Section Three applies to him or to the presidency itself will surely be part of any ensuing litigation."[85]

Magliocca cited congressional debates about draft versions of the Fourteenth Amendment. These records suggest that some members of Congress thought the presidency was an "office . . . under the United States" for purposes of Section 3's disqualification element.[86] Other scholars reached similar conclusions.[87] This evidence, however, does not clearly control the threshold question presented by the jurisdictional element: is the President an "officer of the United States."

---

[83] Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 CONST. COMM. 87, 93 n.29 (2021).

[84] Id. (citing Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an 'Officer of the United States' for Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, REASON-VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (Jan. 20, 2021) [https://perma.cc/A45G-PCQJ]).

[85] Id.

[86] Id. at 93–94 (discussing, for example, statements of Rep. Morrill and Rep. Bingham).

[87] See Mark Graber, Their Fourteenth Amendment, Section 3 and Ours, JUST SECURITY (Feb. 16, 2021) [https://perma.cc/26BG-W7Q7] ("In the absence of any statement even hinting the contrary, no Republican could have believed that traitors should not become members of Congress, but ought to be allowed to be President of the United States."); Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-To Guide, LAWFARE (Jan. 19, 2021) [https://perma.cc/FBS4-HFYN] ("But the framers of the 14th Amendment clearly thought that Section 3 covered the president."). Hemel seems to have conflated Section 3's jurisdictional and disqualification elements.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Magliocca also made a purposivist argument. He wrote that "Congress did not intend (nor would the public have understood) that Jefferson Davis could not be a Representative or a Senator but could be President."[88] In 2009, Professor Saikrishna Prakash made this same argument in response to an article by Tillman.[89] But these intuitions also concern the scope of Section 3's disqualification element. These intuitions do not squarely resolve the issue of whether a President was an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Advocates who argue that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of the jurisdictional element have presented three broad arguments. First, advocates cite scattered sources that refer to the President as an "officer" or an "officer of the United States." Second, advocates hypothesize that the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment may have feared a former President, who took one constitutional oath and later supported the Confederacy, being re-elected to the presidency. Third, advocates argue that Section 3's jurisdictional element should be read to cover as many positions as possible, and not exclude the presidency. In our view, these arguments fail to meet the burden of persuasion. Finally, if any doubt remains, the democracy canon supports excluding the president from the scope of Section 3's jurisdictional element. Let the people, and not partisan state election boards decide who can be the next President.

---

[88] Magliocca, supra note 83, at 93–94.

[89] Saikrishna B. Prakash, Why the Incompatibility Clause Applies to the Office of President, 4 DUKE J. CONST. L. & PUB. POL'Y 143, 161 (2009) ("Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee could have served as President of the United States without a congressional waiver of the bar against oath-breaking confederates. Reading this Amendment to require a congressional waiver for former confederates serving as postmasters or corporals but to not require such a waiver when a turncoat wished to serve as President would be rather strange."). Prakash was responding to Tillman's argument that a sitting President could serve in the Senate. See Seth Barrett Tillman, Why Our Next President May Keep His or her Senate Seat: A Conjecture on the Constitution's Incompatibility Clause, 4 DUKE J. CONST. L. & PUB. POL'Y 107 (2009).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. SCATTERED REFERENCES TO THE PRESIDENT AS AN "OFFICER" ARE NOT SUFFICIENT TO OVERCOME THE EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT OF OUR READING OF SECTION 3'S JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENT

Myles S. Lynch wrote an article about Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. He rejected the distinction we draw between an "office . . . under the United States" and an "officer of the United States."[90] And he contended that the President is both an "office . . . under the United States" and an "officer of the United States."[91] To support his thesis, Lynch cites three categories of evidence. First, he looks to language used in the 1862 loyalty oath statute. Second, he cited a circuit court decision from 1837. Third, he cites scattered references that the President is an "officer of the United States." These sources provide only minimal support for Lynch's position, and are not sufficient to overcome the evidence in support of our reading of Section 3's jurisdictional element.

1. The 1862 Loyalty Oath statute does not support the argument that the Presidency holds an "Office … under the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element

Lynch cited the 1862 loyalty oath statute to support his reading of Section 3.[92] The law required certain federal positions to swear they did not support people "engaged in armed hostility" against the

---

[90] Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 WM. & MARY BILL OF RTS. J. (forthcoming 2021) (manuscript at 11) [https://perma.cc/6EYJ-TMQ2]. At present, Lynch has only posted a draft of his article to the Social Science Research Network. In this Article, we respond to what Lynch has posted online and to other materials he has cooperatively made available to us.

[91] Id. at 7.

[92] Act to Prescribe an Oath of Office, and for other Purposes, ch. 127, Pub. L. No. 37-127, 12 Stat. 502 (1862) (repealed 1868).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

United States.[93] Specifically, the law imposed an additional oath requirement on "every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the government of the United States, either in the civil, military or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States."[94] The statute used the phrase "office . . . under the government of the United States," which is similar, but not identical to the phrase "office . . . under the United States." Lynch drew an inference from this statute: if the President did not hold an "office . . . under the United States," then there would be no need to expressly exempt him. Therefore, Lynch reasoned, the presidency would be considered an "office . . . under the United States."

This inference might have some bearing on Section 3's disqualification element, which uses the phrase "office . . . under the United States." But this inference does not plainly affect the meaning of Article 3's jurisdictional element, which refers to an "officer of the United States." If "officer of the United States" has a different meaning than "office . . . under the United States"—the central thesis of this Article—then the 1862 oath statute does not shed much light on Section 3's jurisdictional element.

Even if you disagree with our thesis, there are other reasons to express caution about relying on the 1862 loyalty statute. This bill was very controversial. There was a vigorous congressional debate about the scope of the law's statutory language. In 1863, Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts put forward a resolution requiring all Senators to take the newly-prescribed loyalty oath.[95] Senator James Asheton Bayard, Jr. of Delaware, however, objected to the constitutionality of this resolution. Bayard, a former United States Attorney for Delaware, had authored an antebellum treatise on the

---

[93] Id.

[94] Id. (emphasis added).

[95] CONG. GLOBE, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 31, 37 (1864) (statement of Sen. Bayard) [https://perma.cc/UD62-KPJ4]; Seth Barrett Tillman, The Foreign Emoluments Clause – Where the Bodies are Buried: "Idiosyncratic" Legal Positions, 59 S. TEX. L. REV. 237, 260 (2017) [hereinafter Tillman, Bodies].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution,[96] and chaired the Judiciary Committee in the 35th and 36th Congresses.[97] He questioned whether the statute's "office . . . under the United States"-language could reach members of Congress. Congress can mandate that appointed officers take an additional oath, beyond the ordinary oath prescribed by the Article VI Oath or Affirmation Clause, because Congress created those positions by statute. But in Bayard's view, Congress should not be able to add additional qualifications for elected positions that are created by the Constitution, such as members of Congress.[98] Bayard concluded that members of Congress did not hold an "Office . . . under the United States."[99] Bayard based his conclusion, in part, on a report prepared in 1793 by Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton.[100] After the debate, a majority of Senators disagreed with Bayard. Senator Sumner's resolution passed.[101] And Bayard, a three-term Senator, resigned in protest on a point of principle.[102] The loyalty oath would not last long. Congress repealed the statute in 1868, the same year the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified.[103]

---

[96] See JAMES BAYARD, A BRIEF EXPOSITION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES (Philadelphia, Hogan & Thompson 1833). Bayard's treatise continues to be cited by the Supreme Court and in modern scholarship. See, e.g., Harmelin v. Michigan, 501 U.S. 957, 981 (1991) (quoting BAYARD); John F. Stinneford, The Original Meaning of "Cruel," 105 GEO. L.J. 441, 486 & n.263 (2017) (quoting BAYARD).

[97] See Bayard, James Asheton, Jr. (1799–1880), BIOGRAPHICAL DIRECTORY OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS, 1774–PRESENT [https://perma.cc/NW8G-FYMR]; History of the District of Delaware, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE [https://perma.cc/NC5W-UZJZ].

[98] CONG. GLOBE, 38th Cong., 1st Sess. 31, 37 (1864) (statement of Sen. Bayard) [https://perma.cc/UD62-KPJ4].

[99] Id.

[100] For the relevance of Bayard's speech and Hamilton's report, see Tillman, Bodies, supra note 95, at 259. Bayard was relying on an edited reproduction of Hamilton's original document—the reproduction was prepared in the 1830s.

[101] Tillman, Bodies, supra note 95, at 261.

[102] Id.

[103] See generally The Senate's First Act—The Oath Act, UNITED STATES SENATE [https://perma.cc/V9B7-A6VY] (discussing 1862 Ironclad Oath, and 1868 and 1884 repeal of that oath).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There is one final reason why the loyalty oath poses special difficulties for Lynch. In his view, members of Congress do not hold "office[s] . . . under the United States."[104] But the 1862 statute, as understood by Senator Sumner, applied to members of Congress. In other words, Sumner viewed members of Congress as "office[s] . . . under the United States." This understanding of the statute undermines Lynch's position in regard to Section 3's jurisdictional element. Ultimately, Lynch may find himself in agreement with Bayard, who argued that members of Congress do not hold "office . . . under the United States." We think the better position is to look to other, and more on-point, sources to understand Section 3's jurisdictional element.[105]

2. Stokes v. Kendall does not shed light on the meaning of Section 3's jurisdictional element

Lynch cited a second source of authority to support his position that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element: United States ex rel. Stokes v. Kendall, a circuit court decision from 1837.[106] This dispute led to the Supreme Court's definitive statement of the president's duty to oversee his principal officers.[107]

During the John Quincy Adams administration, Stockton & Stokes received important carrier contracts to assist the Postal Service. That firm was loyal to Adams. Upon taking office in 1829, President Jackson refused any service from the firm. Amos Kendall was appointed postmaster general in 1835. He found that the Adams administration overpaid Stockton & Stokes in credits. Kendall sought to correct that error by eliminating the credits. Kendall wrote in his autobiography that when he raised the issue with President Jackson,

---

[104] Lynch, supra note 90.

[105] See supra Parts II, III, and IV.

[106] United States ex rel. Stokes v. Kendall, 26 F. Cas. 702, 752 (C.C.D.C. 1837) (No. 15,517).

[107] Kendall v. United States, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 524 (1838).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Old Hickory "remitted the matter to [his] discretion."[108] Kendall knew what had to be done, and removed the credits from the ledgers.

Congress did not approve of the nonpayment. Rather, Congress passed a law requiring the solicitor of the Treasury Department to review the accounts, settle the differences, and order the postmaster general to apply the credits. After receiving the solicitor's judgment, Kendall paid out most of the credits, but withheld some that he believed to be outside the congressional edict. This act of defiance was purportedly done "by President Jackson's order."[109]

Stockton & Stokes continued to press its claims after President Martin Van Buren succeeded Jackson in 1837. The firm "called on the President, under his constitutional power to take care that the laws were faithfully executed, to require the postmaster general to execute this law, by giving them the further credit" to which they claimed entitlement.[110] The circuit court, per Chief Judge Cranch, issued a writ of mandamus compelling the postmaster general to apply the credits in full.[111] On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, and held that the postmaster general must comply with positive congressional edicts, lest the duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed become a "dispensing power."[112] On appeal, Chief Justice Taney wrote the majority opinion. The Court stated, "[t]o contend that the obligation imposed on the President to see the laws faithfully executed, implies a power to forbid their execution, is a novel construction of the constitution."[113] The Supreme Court has reiterated Kendall's reasoning. The principles from that case are

---

[108] AMOS KENDALL, AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AMOS KENDALL 350 (William Sitckney, ed., Boston, Lee & Shepard Publishers 1872).

[109] 2 CHARLES WARREN, THE SUPREME COURT IN UNITED STATES HISTORY: 1836–1918, at 44 (1926).

[110] Kendall, 37 U.S. at 538.

[111] United States ex rel. Stokes, 26 F. Cas. at 702.

[112] Kendall, 37 U.S. at 608 (citing the Take Care Clause).

[113] Id. at 613.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"fundamental and essential," and without them, "the administration of the government would be impracticable."[114]

Lynch cited a single sentence from Chief Judge Cranch's circuit court decision that used the phrase "officer of the United States." Lynch used that sentence to interpret the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3's jurisdictional element. But we think Lynch read Kendall out of context.

In his opinion, Cranch described the nature of the Postmaster General's role. He explained that the Postmaster General does not work at the President's absolute command. Rather, the Postmaster General "is responsible to the United States, and not to the president." [115] The President can only command the Postmaster General when, "express law, authorized to assign [to the President] duties over and above those specially prescribed by the legislature." [116] The Postmaster General is not an officer of the President. Rather, he is "the officer of the United States, and so called in the constitution, and in all the acts of congress which relate to such officers."[117]

Here, Cranch was not interpreting the phrase "officer of the United States" as used in the Appointments Clause or in any other constitutional provision. Cranch also was not interpreting how the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in any statute or other positive law. Rather, Cranch was making a broader point about our system of government: officers are responsible to the nation and its laws, and not to the President. Cranch explained, "the postmaster-general must judge for himself, and upon his own responsibility, not

---

[114] United States ex rel. Goodrich v. Guthrie, 58 U.S. (17 How.) 284, 304 (1854). See also United States v. Midwest Oil Co., 236 U.S. 459, 505 (1915); Texas v. United States, No. 6:21-CV-00016, 2021 WL 3683913, at *37 (S.D. Tex. Aug. 19, 2021) (citing Brief for the Cato Institute, Professor Randy E. Barnett & Professor Jeremy Rabkin as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents at 5–6, United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (No. 15-674) [https://perma.cc/DXM2-VHJH]).

[115] United States ex rel. Stokes, 26 F. Cas. at 752.

[116] Id.

[117] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to the president, but to the United States, whose officer he is."[118] The Constitution "does not authorize the president to direct [the Postmaster] how he shall discharge"[119] his duties. In the very next sentence, Cranch wrote:

> The president himself, although called by the postmaster-general, in his answer, 'the highest representative of the majesty of the people, in this government,' is but an officer of the United States, the head of one of the departments into which the sovereign power of the nation is divided; and, as that is the executive department, he may, with propriety, be called the chief magistrate of the United States.[120]

Lynch cited this sentence as evidence that the President is an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element. We disagree. Cranch used the phrase "of the United States" here in the same way that he did with respect to the Postmaster General: The President is responsible to the nation and its laws. In using "officer of the United States"-language, Cranch was not interpreting either a statute or a constitutional provision. He was using this same language in a more colloquial, or even a philosophical sense.

Cranch was not making a precise statement about what constitutional language governs or includes the President. Rather, he juxtaposed "officer of the United States" and "chief magistrate of the United States." Cranch made a broader point about constitutional governance—with some well-positioned jabs at President Jackson.

---

[118] Id.
[119] Id.
[120] Id.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(Cranch, a Federalist, was the nephew of President John Adams, and was also President John Quincy Adams's cousin.[121])

This brief aside from a circuit court decision is a very thin reed on which to place the construction of Section 3, which was ratified three decades later. Indeed, no comparable language appears in Chief Justice Taney's Supreme Court decision. By contrast, Free Enterprise Fund was an Appointments Clause case where the scope of the Constitution's "Officers of the United States"-language was a live issue. Chief Justice Roberts wrote, "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.'"[122] Moreover, Mouat and Hartwell provide far more authoritative support for the proposition that the President is not an "officer of the United States." We do not put much weight on this aside from Kendall.

3. Scattered references that suggest the President is an "officer of the United States" or an "officer" cannot establish the precise meaning of a phrase used in Section 3's jurisdictional element

Finally, Lynch cited scattered sources in which the President was referred to as an "officer of the United States." For example, in 1824, President James Monroe sent a communication to the Senate and House.[123] Monroe recounted an incident in which the Massachusetts Governor refused to call forth the state militia. The state executive argued that the state executive must consent to that request. Moreover, according to Monroe, the Governor argued that the militia

---

[121] See John Quincy Adams to Lucy Cranch, June 1, 1778, FOUNDERS ONLINE (last visited Dec. 8, 2021) [https://perma.cc/E83G-8N6] ("Late in 1800 President John Adams, the husband of Cranch's aunt Abigail Smith Adams, appointed [William Cranch] a commissioner of the federal district, and early the next year he made him an assistant judge for the United States Circuit Court for the District of Columbia. . . . Despite Cranch's Federalist views, [Thomas Jefferson] named him chief justice for the circuit court, in which capacity he served until his death."); id. ("Only the immediately preceding letter from [John Quincy Adams] to his cousin William Cranch, Lucy's brother, has been found.").

[122] Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497–98 (2010).

[123] S. JOURNAL, 24th Cong., 1st Sess. 190 (1824) [https://perma.cc/CYY9-3WYC].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"could not be commanded by a regular officer of the United States, or other officer than of the militia, except by the President, in person." In the very next sentence, Monroe wrote "this decision of the Executive of Massachusetts was repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and of dangerous tendency."

Lynch read this correspondence to suggest that the President is an "officer of the United States." That conclusion is not obvious, particularly because Monroe's statement was awkward. The construction of the sentence can be read in two different ways. First, that the President is an officer of the United States who can command the militia. Second, that the militia could be commanded by militia officers who are not "regular officers of the United States," but the President is a militia officer and not an "officer of the United States." This second reading is consistent with the Constitution's militia clause, which puts the state militias under presidential control in certain circumstances.[124]

We are not sure which reading is correct. We should be hesitant to put much weight on a poorly-crafted comment from President Monroe, which he used to assail the allegedly unconstitutional viewpoint of the Massachusetts Governor. And even if Lynch's reading were correct, Monroe was not interpreting how the phrase "officer of the United States" was used in Section 3 or any then-extant constitutional provision.

Lynch also cited an 1865 proclamation by President Andrew Johnson. It stated, "the President of the United States is, by the constitution, made commander-in-chief of the army and navy, as well as the chief civil officer."[125] Here, the phrase "chief civil officer"

---

[124] U.S. CONST. art. 2, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States.").

[125] After Slavery: Educator Resources, 3. President Andrew Johnson Appoints William W. Holden Provisional Governor of North Carolina, LOWCOUNTRY DIGIT. HIST. INITIATIVE [https://perma.cc/9Z63-9K8B].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

is distinct from the language used in Section 3's jurisdictional element: "officer of the United States."

There may be other scattered statements in records of congressional debates that refer to the President as an "officer of the United States." We don't doubt it. People in government and academics may use imprecise language to describe different types of offices and officers. And in everyday parlance, the President is an officer of the United States of America.[126] We have never said otherwise. We have never suggested that authority is not divided. However, these scattered references cannot establish the precise meaning of a phrase used in Section 3 and elsewhere in the Constitution.

B. FEARS OF A FORMER CONFEDERATE BECOMING PRESIDENT WOULD NOT CONTROL WHETHER A FORMER PRESIDENT, WHO TOOK ONLY THE PRESIDENTIAL OATH, COULD BE DISQUALIFIED

We acknowledge that there is a purposivist argument supporting the view that the President is an "officer of the United States" with respect to Section 3's jurisdictional element. Could it really be, the argument goes, that virtually every elected and appointed position in the federal and state governments would be encompassed by Section 3's jurisdictional element, but not the presidency? After all, a former President of the United States—John Tyler—actually was elected to the Confederate congress![127] Would the Framers really have exempted Tyler (or men like him) from disqualification? Professor Magliocca, citing the Tyler hypothetical, suggested that "the idea of an insurrectionist President was real, not

---

[126] See supra Part IV (discussing Officers of the United States Within the Meaning of the Appointments Clause, 31 Op. O.L.C. 73 (2007)).

[127] Tyler, John, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/Y6F5-SWCE].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a far-fetched hypothetical."[128] And John Breckinridge, who had served as Vice President of the United States under President Buchanan, later served as a general in the Confederate army.[129]

There is a pragmatic rationale that explains why the presidency was excluded from the jurisdictional element of Section 3. By the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in 1868, there were no living Presidents that had supported the Confederacy. Tyler died in 1862.[130] Moreover, Tyler had served as Senator from Virginia. Had Tyler still been alive, he was unquestionably covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element.

The other four living former Presidents—Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, and Johnson—had not supported the Confederacy. And each of those four officials had previously served in Congress, so they were unquestionably covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element. Moreover, Breckinridge, the former Vice President of the United States who joined the Confederacy, had previously served as a U.S. Senator.[131] Therefore, he was already expressly covered by Section 3's jurisdictional element.

At the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, there were zero former living U.S. Presidents and Vice Presidents who supported the Confederacy, and who would not otherwise fit within the express language used in Section 3's jurisdictional element. Thus, the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment—whose focus was on past wrongdoing during the Civil War—had no pressing reason to draft Section 3's jurisdictional element to cover presidents. And we are not aware of any evidence that Section 3 was forward-looking,

---

[128] Gerard N. Magliocca, Section Three Questions Answered, BALKINIZATION (Jan. 17, 2021, 7:19 PM) [https://perma.cc/Z4PE-Q8WJ].

[129] Breckinridge, John Cabell, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/BDK8-JTZ7].

[130] Tyler, John, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/Y6F5-SWCE].

[131] Breckinridge, John Cabell, HISTORY, ART & ARCHIVES: U.S. H.R. (last visited Aug. 3, 2021) [https://perma.cc/BDK8-JTZ7].

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and was drafted to disqualify future presidents who might participate in future insurrections.

We think the democracy canon provides further support for our position.[132] Professor Richard L. Hasen explains that under this canon, a provision of the Constitution that might be read to "limit the citizen in his exercise of [the right of suffrage] should be liberally construed in his favor."[133] This presumption equally applies to the political candidate who wishes to run for an elected position. Given two reasonable readings of the phrase "officer of the United States" in Section 3, the democracy canon favors the reading that expands democratic choice. Under our approach, voters and electors can select the President of their choice. Under Lynch's reading of Section 3, voters and electors nationwide are permanently disenfranchised from selecting a presidential candidate. Indeed, they are disenfranchised from selecting a person who was already elected as President who seeks a second term. We should prefer the former reading, which is consistent with the democracy canon.

Even in the wake of January 6, 2021, we should not read Section 3's text through the lens of the transitory and felt needs of the moment. The original public meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, including Section 3's jurisdictional element, was fixed more than 150 years ago.

Finally, from 1789 through 2016, all of the presidents and vice Presidents had previously taken a constitutional oath in some other government position. We do not think this pattern was coincidental. Historically, a person could only rise to the level of presidency following prior public service in state or federal governments. The only President who never held any other public office, and thus did not take any other constitutional oath prior to his inauguration, was Donald Trump. The question this article seeks to answer—is the President an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's

---

[132] Richard L. Hasen, The Democracy Canon, 62 STAN. L. REV. 69 (2009).
[133] Id. at 71.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

jurisdictional element—is relevant for only one President in American history: Donald Trump.

C. SECTION 3'S JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENTS, WHICH EXCLUDES CERTAIN STATE AND FEDERAL POSITIONS, SHOULD NOT BE VIEWED AS A CATCHALL PROVISION

Section 3's jurisdictional element is not a catchall. It does not cover all state and federal positions. There are gaps in coverage. For example, the jurisdictional element extends to a "member of any state legislature," as well as "an executive or judicial officer of any state." But Section 3's jurisdictional element does not extend to appointed positions in the state legislature. For examples, clerks and secretaries of state legislatures, who later served in the Confederate government, could not be subject to disqualification.

The same analysis would likely extend to appointed congressional positions in the federal government, like the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate. Section 3's jurisdictional element extends to an "officer of the United States." Appointed legislative positions do not fall in this category.

We find support for our position based on the Oath or Affirmation Clause, which in our view served as a model for Section 3's jurisdictional element.[134] The Oath or Affirmation Clause provides the oath for "[t]he Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States."[135] Appointed congressional positions are not expressly referenced in Article VI.

If Section 3's jurisdictional element was modeled after the Oath or Affirmation Clause, we can presume that appointed congressional positions are not covered by Section 3. As a result, a House Clerk or

---

[134] See supra Part I.B.
[135] U.S. CONST. art. VI, cl. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Secretary of the Senate, who took only one constitutional oath, and later joined the Confederate government, could not be disqualified. Section 3's jurisdictional element was not a catchall.

Likewise, Section 3's disqualification element is not a catchall. It did not bar a disqualified person from serving in state legislatures.[136] This omission was significant. After all, state legislators were central players as southern states declared their secession. Moreover, prior to the ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment, members of state legislatures chose their state's U.S. Senators.[137] The state legislatures also "prescribed" the rules for the "Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives."[138] The decision to exclude state legislatures from Section 3's disqualification element had the potential to undermine Reconstruction.

Section 3, as a whole, had other glaring omissions. Disqualified persons could: (1) serve on state or federal juries; (2) serve as elected territorial officers; (3) serve as enlisted federal military or state militia personnel; (4) participate as national or state convention members under Article V; and many other positions. Section 3's jurisdictional and disqualification elements did not universally apply to every person who had supported the Confederacy.

None of the advocates for Section 3 disqualification of President Trump have advanced comprehensive arguments or marshaled systematic evidence that the President is an "officer of the United States." This position cannot simply be asserted or presumed, absent evidence. Advocates for Section 3 disqualification of President Trump have the burden of persuasion. They should rebut the evidence we have put forward in this article, and elsewhere.[139] And they must explain why the arguments and evidence they put forward

---

[136] Tucker, supra note 37, at 54–56.

[137] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 1 ("The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six Years.").

[138] U.S. CONST. art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

[139] See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, What Happens if the Biden Administration Prosecutes and Convicts Donald Trump of Violating 18 U.S.C. § 2383?, 2021 U. ILL. L. REV. ONLINE 190 (2021) (discussing scope of disqualification element).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

carries the burden of persuasion notwithstanding contrary argument and evidence, and notwithstanding the democracy canon. And the evidence should be something more than personal intuitions or citations to the conclusory statements of other modern commentators asserting how the 1868 public must have understood the language of Section 3. Critically, these issues should be resolved before the next presidential election.

VI. THE COURTS, AND NOT CONGRESS, WILL LIKELY HAVE THE FINAL SAY OVER WHETHER PRESIDENT TRUMP CAN BE DISQUALIFIED UNDER SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

In 2021, the Senate did not convict President Trump based on the sole article of impeachment. Therefore, the Senate had no need to squarely face the question of whether a Section 3 disqualification against Trump would bar him from holding the presidency in the future. Similarly, even if the Senate had convicted President Trump in impeachment proceedings, and voted to disqualify him under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, the Senate would not finally resolve the scope of that disqualification. To be sure, had the Senate tried, convicted, and disqualified President Trump, members of Congress could have stated on the record that they were barring Trump from ever serving again as President.

Those statements, however, would not be dispositive of the constitutional issue. Rather, the situation would arise in a different context. Imagine that Trump seeks re-election in the future. Trump would submit a ballot petition to state and territorial boards of election. But that submission could be contested in adversarial proceedings. County-wide, multi-country, and state-wide boards of elections regularly hear challenges to candidates' ballot petitions. These suits are brought by voters or candidates seeking to keep a rival candidate off the ballot. In such circumstances, the candidate seeking his place on the ballot is the defendant.

In certain circumstances, a board of election might strike a candidate's ballot petition sua sponte. However, we think that a board

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

would only do so where the petition is facially defective. For example, where a required document is entirely missing, or where the candidate's signature is missing, or where all required notarizations are absent, or where the petition itself makes admissions establishing that it is defective. We do not think a board sua sponte striking a ballot based on a novel reading of Section 3 would be consistent with established law. Nevertheless, it is also conceivable that a board of election might act sua sponte in making a Section 3 determination.[140]

It is also feasible that Congress will pass a concurrent or joint resolution to disqualify Trump under Section 3. At that juncture, boards of election would hear arguments presented through adversarial litigation. And the boards would be in a position to determine the effect (if any) of a Section 3 concurrent or joint resolution against President Trump's holding an "office . . . under the United States." Such a concurrent resolution is currently pending before the House.[141]

All of these determinations by election boards could be appealed to the courts. In all likelihood, it is not Congress, but the courts that would have the final say in resolving the scope—if any—of Section 3 disqualification imposed by the Senate or by both houses of Congress.

The courts may also be asked to resolve an appeal of a decision by an elections board in regard to a ballot-access dispute, which may involve these same issues. Additionally, even in the absence of any disqualification decision by the Senate or by Congress, an elections board might decide a Section 3-related ballot challenge. Specifically,

---

[140] See Gerard Magliocca, State Law and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, PRAWFSBLAWG (Aug. 26, 2021, 2:00 PM) [https://perma.cc/T2W9-5GYT] ("One possible scenario in 2023 goes something like this: Donald Trump declares that he is a candidate for President. Some state election officials rule that he is ineligible to run under Section 3. He sues and the constitutional issue is litigated. . . . . Of course, some states might decide to amend their election law to include Section 3 and thus eliminate the problem I've just described prior to 2023.").

[141] See H.R. Con. Res. 3, supra note 12.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

if a voter or rival candidate brings a ballot access challenge, the board may conclude that President Trump is already disqualified to serve as President. Likewise, in the absence of any disqualification decision by the Senate or by Congress, the courts may be asked to decide, in the first instance, whether President Trump was disqualified for purposes of Section 3.

There are many possible routes through which these issues might be litigated before boards of election, the courts, or both. Still, there is a common thread: If the President is not an "officer of the United States" as that phrase was used in Section 3's jurisdictional element, then President Trump cannot be disqualified pursuant to Section 3.

Finally, it was not clear that the House managers actually sought to disqualify Trump under the Impeachment Disqualification Clause, as well as under Section 3. During the 2021 proceedings the sole article of impeachment was opaque on this point. This lack of clarity was perhaps intentional. Or the imprecision could be attributed to the House's rushed drafting. We think the article of impeachment only referenced Section 3, in the context of efforts to define a substantive impeachable offense. We expected that President Trump's counsel would have argued that the text of the House's single article of impeachment did not give him fair notice that he faced Section 3 disqualification. But because Trump was never convicted by the Senate, the disqualification issue was never discussed in any detail.

Conclusion

The issue presented in this Article is not merely a theoretical one. There is a real chance that the fate of the 2024 presidential election could turn on whether President Trump is disqualified under Section 3.

Imagine that Donald Trump runs for re-election. Soon, election boards throughout the country hear ballot challenges. However, the rulings are inconsistent. Some boards may even conclude that Trump is already disqualified based on Section 3 of the Fourteenth

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Amendment, even absent any congressional or Senate resolution so deciding. Candidate Trump would be forced to take urgent appeals to the courts. And, in short order, the judiciary would have to resolve three pivotal questions. First, does President Trump fit within the jurisdictional element of Section 3: was he an "officer of the United States"? Second, does President Trump's conduct fit within the offense element: did he "engage[] in insurrection"? Third, does the disqualification element extend to the presidency: is the presidency an "office . . . under the United States"? And these questions would be promptly appealed to the Supreme Court.

If the Supreme Court agrees with us, and concludes that the President is not an "officer of the United States," then the case is over. Election boards that deemed Trump disqualified would be reversed. Trump could be listed on the ballot. The people, and not partisan election boards would select the next President.

However, if the Supreme Court disagrees with us, it would need to decide several other thorny issues. The Justices would be drawn into the maelstrom of January 6, 2021, and have to decide, as a matter of law, whether the President "engaged in insurrection." Here, abstention would not be a viable option. If the Court dismisses the case as a political question, election boards, and not the people, would decide the next presidency. States would face chaos if local election boards make different decisions. It is possible that within a given state, some counties would list Trump on the ballot and other counties would not. State supreme courts may not enforce uniform ballot procedures. This fragmented patchwork approach would be far more problematic than the selective recounts at issue in Bush v. Gore.

Perhaps the Supreme Court would leapfrog the offense element, and jump right to the disqualification element. If the presidency is not an "office . . . under the United States," then Trump could not be disqualified from the presidency. Thus, there is no need to decide if Trump "engaged in insurrection." In this article, we have made the case that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of Section 3's jurisdictional element. But we have been very careful to avoid resolving the scope of the phrase "office . . . under the United States" in the disqualification element. Suffice to say, in light of the possibility of linguistic drift from 1788 till 1868, we think this issue is contestable. And in the end, the Supreme Court would decide whether President Trump remains on the ballot.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In 2020, the U.S. Supreme Court was able to avoid resolving any of the major election disputes. But 2024 may be different. A Supreme Court ruling on this issue could make Bush v. Gore seem mild by comparison. There are many prudential reasons for the Court to avoid deciding whether Trump engaged in insurrection, or whether Trump can be—or perhaps was already—disqualified. The Court should can stay out of that MAGA thicket. A narrow finding that the President is not an "officer of the United States" ends the case. That opinion would be entirely consistent with Supreme Court authority from Mouat to Free Enterprise Fund. It would track the text of Section 3. It would be consistent with the Constitution of 1788. And, most importantly, it allows the people to elect the next President, and not the courts, much less partisan election boards.

We conclude that the President is not a Section 3 "officer of the United States." Donald Trump is not disqualified by Section 3, and can run for re-election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=3978095

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT 3

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Abstract: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids holding office by former office holders who then participate in insurrection or rebellion. Because of a range of misperceptions and mistaken assumptions, Section Three's full legal consequences have not been appreciated or enforced. This article corrects those mistakes by setting forth the full sweep and force of Section Three.

First, Section Three remains an enforceable part of the Constitution, not limited to the Civil War, and not effectively repealed by nineteenth century amnesty legislation. Second, Section Three is self-executing, operating as an immediate disqualification from office, without the need for additional action by Congress. It can and should be enforced by every official, state or federal, who judges qualifications. Third, to the extent of any conflict with prior constitutional rules, Section Three repeals, supersedes, or simply satisfies them. This includes the rules against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws, the Due Process Clause, and even the free speech principles of the First Amendment. Fourth, Section Three covers a broad range of conduct against the authority of the constitutional order, including many instances of indirect participation or support as "aid or comfort." It covers a broad range of former offices, including the Presidency. And in particular, it disqualifies former President Donald Trump, and potentially many others, because of their participation in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 presidential election.

Introduction 3
I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today 7
A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language 7
B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?) 11
II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing 17
A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification 17
B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three? 22
1. Seeking Office 23
a. by election 23
b. by appointment 26
2. Holding Office 27
3. Special Situations 29
C. The Problem of Griffin's Case 35
1. Background 35
2. Chase on Section Three 37
a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these" 38
b. The argument from "the intention of the people" 40

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law 42
d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power 44
3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum 45
III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions 49
A. Bills of Attainder 53
B. Ex Post Facto Laws 54
C. Due Process of Law 56
D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment 57
IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping 61
A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies" 63
1. Working definitions 64
2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions 70
3. Intratextualism 72
4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage 74
a. President Lincoln 75
b. Congress 79
i. The Ironclad Oath 80
ii. The Second Confiscation Act 81
c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases 84
5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples 87
a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally) 87
b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates 93
6. Legislative History 99
7. Early Applications of Section Three 100
B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred? 104
C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election 112
1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion 112
2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort" 116
a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation 117
b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office 118
c. Beyond Trump 122
Conclusion 124

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Sweep and Force of Section Three

172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024)

William Baude* & Michael Stokes Paulsen

Introduction

"Section 3 has long since faded into history."
- Eric Foner[1]

Reports of Section Three's demise are greatly exaggerated. It turns out that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment remains of direct and dramatic relevance today—a vital, fully operative rule of constitutional law with potentially far-reaching contemporary real-world consequences. Section Three remains in legal force, and has a broad substantive sweep.

Here is what it says:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.[2]

This section of the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular historical situation and acute problem arising in the aftermath of the Civil War.

---

* Harry Kalven, Jr. Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.
 Distinguished University Chair and Professor of Law, University of St. Thomas Law School. We thank Frank Bowman, Steve Calabresi, Josh Chafetz, John Harrison, Ed Hartnett, Daniel Hemel, Brian Kalt, Myles Lynch, Gerard Magliocca, Michael McConnell, Derek Muller, Farah Peterson, Eric Posner, Micah Quigley, Richard Re, Michael L. Rosin, Stephen Sachs, Greg Sisk, Seth Barrett Tillman, and workshop participants at the University of Chicago Law School and University of St. Thomas Law School for helpful comments on the first draft of this article, T.J. Bowman, Nicole Catlin, Connie Gong, Sarah Leitner, James Marmaduke, Matt Phillips, and Georgios Sarris for valuable research assistance, and countless others for discussions about these issues—though not all of them gave aid or comfort to our conclusions.

[1] Eric Foner, The Second Founding: How the Civil War and Reconstruction Remade the Constitution 85 (2019).

[2] U.S. Const. art. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States in the South had purported (unconstitutionally)[3] to secede from the Union; they had purported to form the (so-called) "Confederate States of America" in rebellion against the authority of the U.S. Constitution; and they had waged a bloody four-year war of rebellion against the United States. Yet even after the rebellion had been defeated, Southern States had audaciously sent to Congress, to serve as U.S. Senators and Representatives, men who had notoriously violated previously sworn oaths to support the U.S. Constitution by subsequently engaging in or supporting secession, rebellion, and civil war against the authority of the United States (to say nothing of those now serving again in their state governments). The former Confederates who arrived in Washington included "four Confederate generals, four colonels, several Confederate congressmen and members of Confederate state legislatures, and even the vice president of the Confederacy, Alexander Stephens."[4]

The Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment rightly regarded the situation as outrageous—not only morally, but practically. If former Confederates held the levers of federal and state government power, effective "reconstruction" of the political order and any hope of extending the full and equal protection of the laws to the newly freed former slaves would be at an end. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment responded to that outrage, enacting a sweeping disqualification from state and federal office of those who had, as legislators or officers in the federal or state government prior to the War, sworn required oaths of loyalty to the United States Constitution and subsequently engaged in "insurrection or rebellion" against the U.S. constitutional authority or given "aid or comfort" to its enemies. Only a two-thirds majority vote of both houses of Congress could remove that sweeping disqualification.

Fast-forward a century and a half. The events surrounding efforts to overturn the result of the presidential election of 2020 have sparked renewed scholarly, judicial, and political interest in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[5] The core events are familiar to all—the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for States' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several States; the efforts of Members of Congress to assert a similar power to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; the fomenting

---

[3] See infra note 231 and sources cited there.

[4] Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography 377 (2005); see also Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 176-179 (1960); Allen C. Guelzo, Reconstruction: A Concise History 25 (2018).

[5] The most important scholarly articles (to which we are deeply indebted) are Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment.. 87 (2021); Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty and Disqualification: Reconstructing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 William & Mary Bill of Rights J. 153 (2021), both of which were written before the events of January 6, and Daniel J. Hemel, Disqualifying Insurrectionists and Rebels: A How-to Guide, Lawfare (Jan. 19, 2021), available at https://www.lawfareblog.com/disqualifying-insurrectionists-and-rebels-how-guide.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and immediate incitement of a mob to attempt to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes—all in an attempt to prevent the defeated incumbent President, Donald Trump, from losing power in accordance with the Constitution.

This was undoubtedly a serious assault on the American constitutional order. Not since the Civil War has there been so serious a threat to the foundations of the American constitutional republic. It takes little imagination to describe the efforts to maintain Trump in office, notwithstanding his defeat, as an attempted political coup d'etat. These actions culminated in the incitement and execution of a violent uprising at the Capitol on January 6, 2021—an "insurrection" aimed at preventing Congress and the incumbent Vice President from performing their constitutional responsibilities to count the votes for President and Vice President in the 2020 election. Several of the people involved in these events—most notably the defeated President, Donald Trump—had previously taken oaths to support the Constitution. If they engaged in or gave aid and comfort to an insurrection against the constitutional government, Section Three would appear to bar them from holding office again.

As legal officials and citizens generally have begun to confront the application of Section Three, they have foundered on the most fundamental questions. How does Section Three's disqualification apply—does it apply—to those who planned, supported, encouraged, assisted, incited, or otherwise participated in the events surrounding the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020? Does Section Three's century-and-a-half old disqualification, designed for the aftermath of the Civil War, even remain legally operative in the first place? If so, what must be done to enforce Section Three? Does it require implementing legislation or criminal trials (or impeachments) before its disqualification kicks in? How does Section Three interact with the rest of the constitutional order—are its subjects protected by constitutional principles of attainder, anti-retroactivity, due process and free speech? And if Section Three does apply—to what and to whom? What actions count as having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" against the Constitution of the United States or having "given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof"? Which officials are covered by Section Three's exclusions?

This article attempts to answer these questions. It makes four key points (or clusters of points):

First. Section Three remains legally operative. It is no less part of the Constitution than the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is not a dead letter. The Constitution is a binding, authoritative written text, not a collection of specific historical purposes and intentions. Where the text applies, it applies. Its legal force is not limited to the immediate problem or purpose that prompted its enactment. Section Three is not limited to the circumstances of the Civil War and Reconstruction, even if the meaning of its terms may be illuminated by that experience and history.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor has Section Three somehow been "repealed" by Congress's two major nineteenth-century statutes granting amnesty to those covered by Section Three. This is not because it would be impossible for a constitutional provision to expire by its terms after a period of time, or upon the occurrence of a particular event, or upon action taken by future actors. Article I, Section 9, for example, created a constitutional prohibition of most congressional regulation of the international slave trade for a period of twenty years—but its prohibition then vanished in 1808. Section Three, however, does not work that way. It imposes a general, prospective, rule of disqualification, which Congress may remove by two-thirds vote of both houses only once it has occurred. Section Three is prospective; Congressional amnesty is retrospective.

Second. Section Three is legally self-executing. That is, Section Three's disqualification is constitutionally automatic whenever its terms are satisfied. Section Three requires no legislation or adjudication to be legally effective. It is enacted by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its disqualification, where triggered, just is. It follows that Section Three's disqualification may and should be followed and carried out by all whose duties are affected by it. In many cases, Section Three will give rise to justiciable controversies in the courts. In others it will be enforceable by state and federal officials. But no prior judicial decision, and no implementing legislation, is required for Section Three to be carried out by officials sworn to uphold the Constitution whose duties present the occasion for applying Section Three's commands. Section Three is ready for use.

While Section Three's requirements could be made the subject of enforcement legislation by Congress, under its general power under Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce" the provisions of the amendment, no such legislation is constitutionally required as a prerequisite to Section Three doing what Section Three itself does. Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase's circuit court opinion to the contrary, In re Griffin,[6] is simply wrong on this point—full of sleight of hand, motivated reasoning, and self-defeating maneuvers—as we will explain at length. In re Griffin should be hooted down the pages of history, purged from our constitutional understanding of Section Three.

Third. Section Three supersedes (or satisfies) earlier-enacted constitutional provisions to the extent of any supposed conflict between them. Section Three, at the time it was adopted as part of the Constitution, imposed a disqualification from office based on an individual's past conduct. Even if imposition of such a disability might otherwise, if done by statute, have been a forbidden Ex Post Facto law or Bill of Attainder, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment constitutionally supersedes any prior provision conflicting with its terms.

[6] 11 F. Cas. 7, 22-27 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This principle extends to a more unsettling point. To the extent Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" or giving "aid or comfort" to "the enemies" might turn out to be in tension with the First Amendment's protection of freedom of speech, Section Three supersedes the First Amendment to the extent of any true conflict. To be sure, the proper construction of Section Three's terms ("insurrection," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "enemies") will leave much speech and advocacy completely free. But in the cases where it does not, the terms of Section Three, not the constructions of the First Amendment, decide where the line is.

This leads to the article's fourth and final group of points:

Fourth. Section Three's disqualification is sweeping in its terms. It disqualifies from future office-holding persons who "engaged in"—an expansive and encompassing term connoting many forms of participation in or active support of—a broad swath of activity covered by the terms "insurrection or rebellion" or the giving of "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of the nation or its constitutional order. It applies to a broad swath of civilian, military, and legislative office holders who swore oaths of fidelity to the Constitution, and it disqualifies such persons from holding in the future any of an extraordinarily broad swath of public offices. Taking Section Three seriously, on its own terms, means taking seriously the enormous sweep of the disqualification it creates. And, we will argue, taking Section Three seriously means that its constitutional disqualifications from future state and federal officeholding extend to participants in the attempted overturning of the presidential election of 2020, including former President Donald Trump and others. The substantive terms of Section Three's prohibition are not themselves difficult or inscrutable (even if there might be questions of application at the outer edges of the text's meaning). But they are potentially breathtaking in their straightforward consequences.

In what follows, we develop each of these four core points at length.

Section Three remains a valid, prospective, enforceable, self-executing, broad, and relevant part of our Constitution. It falls to us to fulfill our duties to it. These include the duties of legislative bodies, state and federal election officials, executive officers, and perhaps others to take up the Constitution, including Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and wield it faithfully and forcefully against its enemies. Taking Section Three seriously means excluding from present or future office those who sought to subvert lawful government authority under the Constitution in the aftermath of the 2020 election by engaging in insurrection or rebellion or giving aid or comfort to enemies of the lawful constitutional order.

I. Section Three is Legally Operative Today

A. The Generality and Presumptive Perpetuity of Constitutional Language

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The first step in our argument is an easy one, but perhaps not immediately obvious to everyone: Section Three's disqualification remains an operative rule of the Constitution. The reason this might not be obvious, at least to the uninitiated, is that Section Three plainly was designed for a specific historical situation—the circumstances of Reconstruction following the end of the Civil War. The implication, in the eyes of some, might be that that historical situation limits the scope of the provision's operation. We think any such inference badly mistaken. Section Three was prompted by historical circumstances, but that does not in any way detract from its enduring force.

To be sure, Section Three clearly bears the hallmarks of its historical context. It is, for one thing, a radical rule. The sheer sweep of the disqualification from offices that it imposed on former Southern officeholders-turned-rebels was dramatic. Its operation was hugely disruptive of antebellum patterns of elite political leadership, apparently indifferent to inconvenience, and seemingly rather punitive in its consequences. Section Three is harsh. It is categorical. It is insistent. It seems to have been deliberately designed to turn the prior Southern political order upside down. As Eric Foner puts it, "Section 3 aimed to promote a sweeping transformation of Southern public life."[7]

In these respects, the disqualification reflects and embodies the distinctive political impulses of the so-called Radical Republican Congress that proposed the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866. If its disqualification had radical policy consequences for the South, so be it.[8] It was more important to strip insurrectionists and rebels of governing power completely, to remake Southern political society thoroughly, and to prevent Southern backsliding from the full consequences of Union victory entirely, than to be concerned about such things as seeming harshness, impracticality, or disruptiveness. Section Three is very much a creation and creature of its day.

Yet it is (or should be) basic constitutional law that it is the enduring text of the Constitution that supplies the governing rule, not the ostensible "purpose" or specific historical situation for which the text was written. Constitutional provisions, written into our fundamental law, live beyond the circumstances that prompted their adoption. And many such constitutional provisions are written in broad, or general, terms that obviously extend beyond the specific situation or situations that led to their enactment. Sometimes this is by design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule, applicable to a broad class of circumstances, as a more general, "neutral," way of addressing a class of situations of which the specific problem motivating the writing of the text might be just one instance. The thinking might be that if the principle giving rise to the text is a correct one, it should be correct in like circumstances, not just the one situation that provoked the rule's adoption. And sometimes a text's breadth and [7] Eric Foner, Reconstruction, 1863-1877, at 260 (1988).

[8] Mark Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 1 (2023, University Press of Kansas).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

generality might not reflect conscious design: the text's drafters wrote a general rule that unintentionally went further than the problem they had in mind. Put colloquially, the text sometimes "overshoots" its drafters' intended purposes. (A text might undershoot the problem its framers had in mind to address, too—or achieve only part of its intended purpose, perhaps because of political compromise.)

The reason does not really matter. It is the rule as drafted and enacted in the written text that counts, whether it goes further than the purposes supposed to have inspired its adoption, or even whether it falls short of fully achieving those purposes. While evidence of intention, usage, purpose, and political context can assist in ascertaining the meaning of the enactment, it is that objective meaning that constitutes the law, not the ostensible purposes or motivations that supposedly lay behind it. This is "originalism," our system's basic method for interpreting the Constitution and its amendments.[9]

Consider, for example, Section One of the same Fourteenth Amendment. As a matter of historical purpose, the specific mischief the framers of Section One had in mind was the enactment of "Black Codes" in Southern States that discriminated against the newly freed former slaves. But the words chosen by the drafters to enact the rule embodied in the text command, in general terms, that no state shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" nor deny to any "person" within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws"—rules not cast in racial terms at all, let alone limited to the immediate situation of former enslaved persons. The rules enacted apply to all persons irrespective of race. So it was entirely plausible for lawyers to argue that Section One also barred the same kind of discrimination against women citizens that it barred against black citizens. It doesn't matter that the drafts*men* of the amendment might not have had women "in mind" if women are covered by the meaning of the words they actually wrote and ratified.[10] Similarly, it was entirely plausible to argue that Section One went so far as to ban racially segregated schools.[11] The answers to each of these questions turn on the objective, original

---

[9] See Vasan Kesavan & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Interpretive Force of the Constitution's Secret Drafting History, 91 Geo. L. J. 1113, 1124-1148 (2004); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Does the Constitution Prescribe Rules for Its Own Interpretation? 103 Nw. U. L. Rev. 857, 872-883 (2009); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Misunderstood Eleventh Amendment, 169 U Pa. L. Rev. 609, 624-625 (2021); William Baude & Stephen Sachs, Grounding Originalism, 113 Nw. U. L. Rev. 1455, 1456-1460 (2019). For purposes of this article, we can bracket any differences in emphasis between Paulsen's objective-original-meaning originalism and Baude's original-law originalism.

[10] We have used such examples before. Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 901-902; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Text, the Whole Text, and Nothing but the Text, So Help Me God: Un-Writing Amar's Unwritten Constitution, 81 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1385, 1421 n. 68 (2014); William Baude, Jud Campbell, & Stephen Sachs, General Law and the Fourteenth Amendment , 76 Stan. L. Rev. at 67-68 (forthcoming 2024).

[11] We have used this example before, too. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839-840 (1993); William Baude, Is Originalism Our Law?, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 2349, 2380-2381 (2015). See also Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 66.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

meaning of "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and "equal protection of the laws," not whether the 1866 Congress and subsequent ratifiers had thought through the possible radical implications of their own work. If the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment's terms forbade racially discriminatory classifications of any and all kinds, as a matter of the rules of late-1860s language and usage, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether it was intended or expected that governments could enforce certain types of racial discrimination, like enforced racial segregation. The rule as adopted might overshoot the purposes, expectations, or desires of those who voted for it. But the rule is the rule; the text's meaning is the text's meaning.

Thus, if the framers and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment enacted a general rule in Section Three—a disqualification from future officeholding keyed to having taken an oath to the Constitution and subsequently engaging in insurrection or rebellion against the United States—rather than a provision that by its terms applied only to the case of former Civil War secessionists and Confederate officials and officers,[12] it is the general rule that matters. That the rule had a particular political purpose behind it as a matter of history might be an aid to correct interpretation of the language supplying that rule. (We will make such an argument below, concerning the meaning, in context, of the phrase "insurrection or rebellion.")[13] But in the end the question is what rule was enacted. If Section Three's rule fell short somehow, missing some folks its drafters might have meant to ensnare, those persons are not ensnared. The text might (or might not) be thought deficient in this regard—as having failed to fulfill its full purpose. But the text means what it says. Similarly, if the rule supplied by the objective meaning of the text runs right on past the specific historical purpose for which it was enacted and embraces as well other insurrectionists, rebels, and aiders and comforters of enemies, that rule must be given full legal effect as part of the Constitution. The rule's overbreadth in terms of its perceived purpose, and even its inconvenience as a consequence of such overbreadth, are beside the point.[14]

---

[12] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history of Section Three confirms that this is what the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment did. Earlier drafts had limited the Section's application to the "late insurrection." Later versions dropped this limitation and generalized Section Three's application to "insurrection" and "rebellion." See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2767-68, 2770 2869, 2921; see also Mark A. Graber, Rewarding Loyalty (?) and Punishing Treason Through Disenfranchisement and Bans on Officeholding: Section 3, at 3-4 (unpublished chapter, forthcoming in The Forgotten Fourteenth Amendment, Volume 2, University Press of Kansas) (documenting this development).

[13] Infra Part IV.A.

[14] See, e.g., Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 908-909 (1994) (making this point about the disqualification of some senators and representatives from eligibility for certain appointed offices posed by the Emoluments Clause of Article I, § 6, cl. 2); William Baude, The 2023 Scalia Lecture: Beyond Textualism?, 46 Harv. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y (forthcoming 2023) ("Sometimes rules go beyond their reasons; a rule can be overbroad compared to the reasons for enacting it. And sometimes rules are underbroad; a rule cannot quite do all the things that you might want to do given the reasons for enacting the rule. Textualism recognizes that when the judge enforces the law, the law's rule might sometimes be different from what the people who enacted the law would have wanted had they thought about the situation."). For an extended discussion of the abuse of arguments

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, we take it as almost too obvious to require stating that constitutional provisions have indefinite life unless and until repealed or amended by subsequent constitutional enactments. The fact that an unrepealed, unamended provision of law is "old" does not in any way weaken its legal force. The First Amendment is old too, as is the entire original Constitution. But both remain in force. This is true even if the purpose for which a constitutional provision was originally written has ceased to be relevant, or even if the constitutional provision at issue might be thought in today's society to be something of an anachronism.[15] There are, of course, some self-identified living constitutionalists who deny this point—who think that old texts have a legal shelf life and lose their potency over time, as "the interest in sovereignty fades."[16] But in our view, this just shows what is wrong with such living constitutionalism.[17] The Constitution is not a spice cabinet.

All of this might seem to belabor the obvious. Few interpreters of Section Three explicitly deny that it continues to govern new insurrections and rebellions.[18] But sometimes we wonder if this kind of denial is sneaking in to people's intuitions—subtly infecting and distorting the actual interpretation of Section Three. So let us start from the right first principles: Section Three remains constitutionally fully in force, as alive as the day it was enacted.

B. Has Congress Removed the Disability for Everyone for All Time? (And Could It Do So If It Wanted To?)

But what about this? The second sentence of Section Three provides that Congress "may by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[19] Just as the first sentence's disqualification is not limited specifically to the Civil War, neither is Congress's power to grant amnesty. Thus, Congress can, by the requisite vote, remove any disqualification that exists by virtue of the operation of Section Three. But just exactly how far does that power reach? Could Congress, by two-thirds majorities, essentially extinguish the legally operative effect of Section Three entirely, by removing the disability imposed by Section Three generally, prospectively, and universally? Put from inconvenience, see infra Part II.C.2.a (discussing Chief Justice Chase's appalling opinion in Griffin's Case).

---

[15] Michael Stokes Paulsen, Dirty Harry and the Real Constitution, 64 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1457, 1486-1490 (1997) (discussing privilege against self-incrimination).

[16] David A. Strauss, The Supreme Court, 2014 Term—Foreword: Does the Constitution Mean What It Says?, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 58 (2015); see also Adam M. Samaha, Originalism's Expiration Date, 30 Cardozo L. Rev. 1295 (2008).

[17] See Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1487 (responding to Strauss).

[18] For a rare example, see an argument made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Clarence Cannon, Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives 55 (1935) ("It was also seriously contended by counsel that section 3 of the fourteenth amendment was an outgrowth of the Civil War and that such a provision cannot possibly apply to the present case").

[19] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

more vividly: Can Congress, by two-thirds vote of each house, essentially "explode" Section Three—render it inoperative in the future, for all time?

These questions turn out not to be completely hypothetical. In two statutes enacted in the late nineteenth century, Congress might arguably have done this. One statute (from 1872) removed "from all persons whomsoever"—except designated categories of individuals—all "political disabilities imposed" by Section Three.[20] Another (from 1898) further removed "the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred."[21] And indeed, in a recent case (brought by then-Representative Madison Cawthorn) a federal judge relied on these statutes to conclude that Section Three was now legally dead.[22] Is that right? Do these statutes—can these statutes—grant amnesty to all insurrectionists, past, present and future?[23]

No. While the argument is not entirely bonkers, it does not withstand more serious scrutiny. It is wrong on both statutory and constitutional grounds. Consider the statutes first. Neither one purports to rescind Section Three's operative rule for all time. They do not pretend to explode the first sentence of the constitutional provision.

Begin with the 1872 act. In 1872, after a period of case-by-case consideration of amnesty requests, Congress, as mentioned above, enacted a general statute removing disqualification from a broad description of persons embraced by Section Three's prohibition. As Professor Magliocca recounts, the statute reflected a mixture of motives: genuine mercy and magnanimity; the practical consequences of Section Three in the South; the burdens and biases of case-by-case consideration of private bills; the politics of a presidential election year; and the general but regrettable retreat from aggressive Congressional Reconstruction.[24] But what is most important is what it says. The statute reads, in full:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-

[20] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[21] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.
[22] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 889-892 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022). This argument, too, was made and rejected by the House during the exclusion of Victor Berger. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55.
[23] The power in general of Congress by two-thirds vote of each House to remove Section Three's disability and the history of its exercise are the central themes of Professor Gerard Magliocca's excellent article, cited supra note 5.
[24] See generally Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 112-120.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States.[25]

The key words are "imposed" and "[hereby] removed." The words of the 1872 statute are used in the past tense: the statute removed disqualifications imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment—that is, disabilities that had already become legally effective. That is simply the natural reading, and the natural implication, of the language employed.

Indeed, this is almost exactly what the Fourth Circuit recently said in reversing the district court's decision in the Cawthorn case: Congress in 1872 employed "the past-tense version" of the verb "impose," thus "indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'"[26] Moreover, the Fourth Circuit continued: "[t]he operative clause's principal verb—'removed'—reinforces this conclusion. In the mid-nineteenth century, as today, that word generally connoted taking away something that already exists rather than forestalling something yet to come."[27]

By contrast, the district court had faulted Congress for not being more explicit: Congress "could have limited the Act to remove Section 3's disabilities from 'persons currently subject to the disabilities' or 'persons against whom the disabilities were lodged' at the time (i.e., the 'Confederates') but did not do so."[28] Therefore, the district court concluded, by the "plain language of Section 3 and the 1872 Act, Congress removed all of Section 3's disabilities from all persons whomsoever who were not explicitly excepted."[29] With all due respect, the district court appears to have been simply hoodwinked by the (for lack of a better word) feel of the "all persons whomsoever" language and completely missed the other language that made clear the statute's past tense.

What about the 1898 statute? Does it yield a different result? On the cusp of the Spanish-American War, at a moment of seeming national unity and perhaps a desire to put aside old sectional grievances (and, one might add more cynically, at a time of rising Jim Crow sentiment)[30]—Congress enacted another general disqualification-removal statute. This one removed the disqualification for everybody, without exception. Its language is even more laconic:

---

[25] Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142.
[26] Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022).
[27] Id.
[28] Cawthorn v. Circosta, 590 F. Supp. 3d 873, 891 (E.D. N.C. 2022) rev'd sub nom Carthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022).
[29] Id.
[30] See, e.g., Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896); Cummings v. Richmond County Bd. of Ed. 175 U.S. 528 (1899). See also Michael Stokes Paulsen & Luke Paulsen, The Constitution: An Introduction 195-201 (2015).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed.[31]

In one sense, that's about as categorical, across-the-board a disqualification-removal as one can imagine: the disability imposed by section three is hereby removed. Period. No exceptions. But here it is also even clearer that the 1898 act is backward-looking. Like the 1872 act, the 1898 act uses past-tense language: a disability (already) "imposed" is now being "removed" from its prior legal existence. What's more, the 1898 act says that the Section Three disqualification being removed was one "heretofore incurred." That is unmistakably backward-looking, past-occurrence language.

What might otherwise—that is, but for the clarity of the "heretofore incurred" language—give the 1898 act the feel of a now-and-ever-shalt-be removal, eliminating all future Section Three disqualification as well as any and all extant ones, is the Act's reference to "the disability" imposed by Section Three. This singular reference might be taken to suggest that Section Three's disqualification was thought a one-time-only, single-shot, Civil War era occurrence.[32] If Section Three was good for one rebellion only, then repealing it in the past tense repeals all that there is. But of course, as we have argued, Section Three is not limited to one rebellion only, and so far as we can tell even the Fifty-fifth Congress did not think that it was[33] (nor would it matter if they did).

In any event, though these statutes do not even purport to sunset Section Three for the future, they do prompt us to consider the interesting question of Congress's constitutional power: What if they did purport to sunset Section Three for the future? Is Congress's constitutional power to remove Section Three's disqualification general and prospective, letting it remove Section Three's disqualification once and for all, including for future situations? We think not.

To be clear, we don't think there's anything inherently unthinkable or absurd about the idea of an "exploding" or otherwise defeasible constitutional provision. Legal drafters might sometimes want to provide for an expiration event or expiration

---

[31] Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

[32] For instance, the D.C. Circuit's recess-appointments opinion in Noel Canning v. NLRB, 705 F.3d 490, 500 (D.C. Cir. 2013) aff'd only on alternate grounds, 134 S.Ct. 2550 (2014), leaned heavily on "this difference between the word choice 'recess' and 'the Recess'," arguing that "[a]s a matter of cold, unadorned logic, it makes no sense to [say] that when the Framers said 'the Recess,' what they really meant was 'a recess.' This is not an insignificant distinction. In the end it makes all the difference." Id. But a majority of the Supreme Court did not share this view of the text. NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S.Ct. 2550, 2561 (2014).

[33] For the brief legislative history of the 1898 act, see 31 Cong. Rec. 5367-5419 (1898).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

date, even in an enduring Constitution. Article I's Slave Importation Clause, protecting the international slave trade, exploded after twenty years.[34] So too the initial allocation of representatives to states is written in to the text of the Constitution, even though it was then exploded by the subsequent census.[35] Other provisions of the Constitution set baseline rules that Congress has power to modify. Article I, section 4 does that with respect to state legislative power over congressional elections: "Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations."[36] Article III, section 2 does that with respect to the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction, setting a default rule subject to "such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."[37] The Twentieth Amendment, in Section 2, sets a default date of Congress's annual meeting.[38]

There's no reason why the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment could not have similarly drafted Section Three to provide for the provision's own extinction after a supermajority vote of Congress.[39] But that is simply not what Section Three says. The second sentence of Section Three is not a grant of power to explode, or amend, the content of the rule stated in the first sentence. It is a grant of power to remove the consequences of the rule's operation.

To see this, break down Section Three into its component parts: Section Three has two sentences. The first one describes at length the disqualification for those who have taken a covered oath and engaged in insurrection or related conduct. Of course, those two things must actually have happened for the rule of Section Three's first sentence to be triggered—for a disqualification to have come into legal effect.

---

[34] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 1. ("The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.") For a scathing critique of the substance and purpose of this proviso, see, e.g., Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 81-83.

[35] U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl.3.

[36] U.S. Const. art. I, § 4.

[37] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2.

[38] U.S. Const. amend. XX, §2.

[39] We thus part ways with Professor Magliocca here. Magliocca argues (in addition to versions of the points we make above) that Section Three's second sentence cannot be read as authorizing Congress to remove future disabilities because this "would mean that Congress basically repealed Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1872. But Congress cannot repeal a part of the Constitution by itself: only a constitutional amendment can do that." Gerard N. Magliocca, The January 6th Insurrectionists Do Not Have Amnesty, JURIST – Academic Commentary, April 13, 2022, https://www.jurist.org/commentary/2022/04/gerard-magliocca-january-6-insurrectionists/. See also Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1314 (N.D. Ga. 2022) ("'Congress has no power whatever to repeal a provision of the Constitution by a mere statute'") (quoting 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 55).

This strikes us as not quite right: If Section Three in fact authorized prospective removal of disqualifications arising from future acts of insurrection, a statute doing so would not be repealing a constitutional provision but exercising a power conferred by that constitutional provision—a power to terminate the provision's ongoing legal effect.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second sentence (the "But" sentence) then gives Congress the power to "remove such disability." ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.") The "But" sentence explicitly cross-references the first. Thus, the most natural reading of the two sentences in relation to each other is that the second sentence confers an exceptions power that only comes into existence when the conditions specified in the first sentence have occurred. And to belabor the point a moment further, the word "Remove" means (and meant at the time, according to 1864 dictionaries) to displace or take away something that already exists.[40] This confirms that Congress's removal power therefore only comes into being when a legal disqualification has vested by virtue of the operation of Section Three's first sentence.

Section Three's first sentence is written as a general and prospective rule, not limited to the specific instance of the Civil War. Section Three's second sentence is written as a continuing power to grant relief from disabilities already imposed by the operation of the first sentence. The power to remove an extant legal disability is not a power to rescind the legal rule that creates that disability. Thus, not only has Congress never purported to sunset Section Three, it lacks the power to do so by Section Three's own terms.

* * *

All of this is, we submit, basic. But it is also foundational. Section Three remains legally operative as part of the U.S. Constitution. Its rule of disqualification is general, not limited to the Civil War era. It states a rule of law embodied in the written constitutional text as permanent fundamental law. It possesses prospective force and applies to new situations: wherever the rule applies, the rule applies. And while Congress comprehensively relieved insurrectionists of the disability of disqualifications incurred prior to 1898, it did not (and could not) erase Section Three from the Constitution. Section Three remains in force.

Is anything more required, then, before this provision of the Constitution can (and must) be given effect by U.S. political actors whose powers and duties are such as to call for application of Section Three as a rule of law? Put somewhat differently: Is Section Three a self-executing rule of constitutional law, complete in itself? Or does Section Three require implementing legislation by Congress or some other further legal or administrative action before it has legal force? We take up that question next.

---

[40] Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 1116 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (defining "remove" as "To cause to change place; to move away from the position occupied; to displace") (quoted in Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F. 4th 245, 258 (4th Cir. 2022)).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three is Legally Self-Executing

Our second point is colossally important—a major sticking point for some. But it is a point we think should be obvious: Section Three is self-executing. That is, its disqualifications from office are constitutionally automatic whenever its conditions for disqualification are met. Nothing more needs to be done in order for Section Three's prohibitions to be legally effective. Section Three requires no implementing legislation by Congress. Its commands are enacted into law by the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. Where Section Three's legal rule of constitutional disqualification is satisfied, an affected prospective officeholder is disqualified. Automatically. Legally.

In the years immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted this seemingly obvious reading of Section Three was deemed inconvenient, rejected in the highest quarters, and has since faded from view. We thus give the point considerable attention here. Our analysis here is organized in three steps. First, we take Section Three itself, and explain why it has direct legal effect. Second, we discuss how this legal effect can and must be recognized by all persons and institutions who have the occasion to apply it in the performance of their duties—election officials, state and federal administrators, legislatures, courts. Third, we consider at some length the leading counterargument to our view: the 1869 opinion written by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase as a circuit court judge in Griffin's Case. Even if the result in that case is defensible—which is far from clear, and raises grave separation-of-powers problems of its own—its argument against self-execution is so wrong as to prove our case. Section Three is legally self-executing as operative constitutional law.

A. Section Three as Automatic Legal Disqualification

Before we consider Section Three itself, consider the Constitution as a whole. Though too many constitutional law teachers and casebooks begin their study of the Constitution with questions of judicial review, and cases like Marbury,[41] in doing so they put the cart before the horse. The horse is the Constitution, which is itself the "supreme law of the land."[42] Our system is one of constitutional supremacy, not judicial supremacy or legislative supremacy. As a general matter, this means that it is the Constitution which states the law, and it is the job of government officials to apply it, not the other way around.

This general truth is no less true of Section Three. Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: "No person shall be" directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall [41] But not ours! See Paulsen, McConnell, Bray and Baude, The Constitution of the United States (5th ed. 2022).

[42] U.S. Const. art. VI.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

be.[43] It does not grant a power to Congress (or any other body) to enact or effectuate a rule of disqualification. It enacts the rule itself. Section Three directly adopts a constitutional rule of disqualification from office.

This should be no surprise, as the same thing is true of the Constitution's other rules of disqualification from office. A person who has not attained to the age of thirty-five is not qualified to be President of the United States. This disqualification is automatic. The Constitution's rule is self-executing. "No person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not satisfy the age requirement.[44] The disqualification requires no further legislation or other action, by anybody, to be operative. The disqualification simply is. So too for Article II's citizenship and length-of-residency eligibility prerequisites for the office of President. And so too for the constitutional qualifications—age, citizenship, state inhabitancy—for members of the House and Senate: "No Person shall be" a Representative who does not meet Article I, section 2's requirements.[45] "No Person shall be" a U.S. Senator who does not meet Article I, section 3's requirements.[46] These restrictions on eligibility are legally binding simply by virtue of their presence in the Constitution.

The language of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment parallels, even duplicates, the language used in these other provisions to express other constitutional disqualifications from officeholding.[47] None of these disqualifications requires any further legal action or legislation to be operative. Where a constitutional legal disqualification exists, it simply exists. It is a binding rule of constitutional law.

Again, this kind of binding rule should be no surprise. The Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery, enacted a few years earlier, works the same way. Immediately upon adoption of the amendment, slavery was legally extinguished as a matter of constitutional law. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist ...," the Thirteenth Amendment provides.[48] The institution of slavery was immediately, legally, constitutionally gone.[49] The Thirteenth Amendment contains a separate section granting Congress the power to enforce the prohibition of slavery.[50] But that enforcement power scarcely means that the ban on slavery contained in Section One was inoperative unless and until Congress passed legislation making it operative. Such a

---

[43] We have borrowed this felicitous phrasing from John Harrison. Cf. John Harrison, The Power of Congress to Limit the Jurisdiction of the Federal Courts and the Text of Article III, 84 U. Chi. L. Rev. 203, 211 (1997) ("The Vesting Clause is a self-executing enactment; it lays down rules by saying what shall be.")

[44] U.S. Const. art. II, §2, cl. 5 (emphasis added).

[45] U.S. Const. art. I, §2, cl. 2(emphasis added).

[46] U.S. Const. art. I, §3, cl. 3 (emphasis added).

[47] See Josh Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few 168 (2007).

[48] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §1 (emphasis added).

[49] See Alexander Tsesis, The Thirteenth Amendment and American Freedom: A Legal History 48–53 (2004) (documenting reactions of persons learning of their freedom immediately after ratification).

[50] U.S. Const. amend. XIII §2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

position would be ridiculous. The power to enforce adds to the substantive prohibition—it is not a subtraction from or suspension of it.

And of course, the same is true elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment too. We take it as obvious that Section One is self-executing. Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment, like Section Three states directly operative rules of constitutional law: "No state shall," in Section One, and "No person shall" in Section Three.[51] Both of these provisions are subject to additional enforcement legislation by Congress under Section Five. Yet it is common ground that Section One is self-executing. Nobody thinks (for example) that the prohibitions of Section One are inoperative unless and until Congress enacts legislation pursuant to its Section Five legislative power to bring them to life.

In each instance, Congress certainly can enact legislation "to enforce" the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments' commands, pursuant to their grants of legislative power.[52] Doing so can unlock additional procedural mechanisms, additional deference by courts to Congress's view of the law, and so on. The Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and more were designed to enforce Section One of the Thirteenth and Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment. But, to repeat, the existence of an enforcement power does not mean that the Amendment's specific legal commands lack any independent, self-executing force.[53]

So too, Congress in fact enacted implementing legislation in 1870 to enforce Section Three, authorizing quo warranto civil suits brought by the United States to remove state officials unconstitutionally holding office in violation of Section Three and imposing criminal penalties for knowing violations of Section Three.[54] But Congress's choice to trigger additional procedural mechanisms and federal jurisdiction

---

[51] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 1, 3. Nothing here turns on it, but Section Four of the Fourteenth Amendment, which repudiates rebel and slave debts while guaranteeing the legal obligation of the national debt, also seems to be self-executing. Section Two, which alters Article I, section 2's rule for how Representatives "shall be apportioned," presents a more complicated case. Its rule is immediately operative, like the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, but its rule operates by changing an apportionment process undertaken by Congress. In practice, Congress has ignored it, see Michael Rosin, The Five-Fifths Rule and the Unconstitutional Presidential Election of 1916, 46 Hist. Meth. 57 (2013); Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 395; see also email from John Harrison to Akhil Reed Amar, quoted in id. at 611 n. 96, and it is hard to see how anybody else can realistically enforce it.

[52] U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2; amdt. XIV, sec. 5.

[53] Indeed, Section One was added to an early draft of the Fourteenth Amendment precisely to ensure that state Black Codes would be unenforceable even if there were no federal legislation saying so. Baude, Campbell, & Sachs, supra note 10, at 30-31, 63-64.

[54] Act of May 31, 1870 (First Ku Klux Klan Act), ch. 114 §§14, 15, 16 Stat. 140, 143. The criminal prohibition in Section 15 of the Act was repealed in the 1909 codification of the penal code, 35 Stat. 1088, 1153, § 341 (1909), and the quo warranto provision in Section 14 was repealed during the 1948 positive law codifications of Title 28 of the U.S. Code, see Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, § 39; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 206 n. 365. Neither of these codifications was thought to make a substantive change by repealing these provisions, see generally William W. Barron, The Judicial Code, 8 F.R.D. 439 (1949); see also The United States Compiled Statutes, Title XIX, page 4459 (1916), which were

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

for Section Three cases does not mean that there was no constitutional prohibition before Congress acted.[55] Congress enforced Section Three's prohibition. Congress was not the one to give it legal effect. Section Three was effective law all along.

Section Three is also noticeably different from other constitutional provisions that deal with misbehavior—provisions that are not self-executing in the same way. Article III, for instance, describes the offense of treason:

> Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.
>
> The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.[56]

Note the contrast. The Treason Clause defines an offense ("Treason . . . shall consist") but it does not itself convict anybody of treason. Section Three, by contrast, enacts its own disqualification ("No person shall be"). It acts on persons, not offenses. This is driven home by the Treason Clause's specific procedures and powers: "[C]onvict[ions] of treason" require two witnesses or a public confession; and "Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason." Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, by contrast enacts its standard and imposes its consequences all at once.

Similarly, the Constitution's impeachment provisions say that those who are impeached "shall be removed from Office."[57] But the Constitution does not itself impeach anybody. Instead, it specifies that somebody else—the House and Senate—must do the impeaching.[58] Again, Section Three's contrast is glaring. The framers of Section Three had the treason clause and impeachment clauses at hand and chose a thought obsolete by then. The repeals therefore certainly did not reflect a decision to preempt or preclude any other existing remedies for Section Three.

---

[55] Professor Magliocca concurs. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 106 & n.101 (noting that "enacting enforcement legislation does not imply that legislation is required" and that the existence of Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment does not imply that the other sections are not self-executing). Indeed, this is especially so because Congress may have been responding to the decision in Griffin's Case (wrongly) holding that such legislation was required for Section Three to have operative legal effect. See infra Part II.C.

[56] U. S. Const. art. III, sec. 3.

[57] U.S. Const. art. II, sec. 4.

[58] U.S. Const. art I, sec. 3 & sec. 4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

noticeably different path.[59] Section Three does not call for treason trials or the impeachment of insurrections and rebels. It directly imposes an across-the-board disqualification and involves Congress only if Congress wishes to end it.

Section Three's constitutional disqualification, where applicable, just is. It stands on its own as a constitutional rule of law, having come into legal force "as Part of this Constitution," along with the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment, "when ratified" as a constitutional amendment.[60] It immediately became "supreme Law of the Land." [61] Its rule took immediate effect. Section Three is, in that sense, legally self-executing.

Is there any serious textual argument to the contrary? We will address Chief Justice Chase's conclusion in Griffin's Case in a moment. But we suspect that resistance to this point often comes instead from some misdirected intuitions. One is the problem of supposed difficulty. It seems easy, perhaps, to apply the constitutional qualifications of age and citizenship.[62] It is pretty obvious what these are and obvious what they demand that we do. But who exactly is disqualified by Section Three is, at least to initial appearances, a more difficult, complicated, and fact-specific question. It is a more difficult question of law because we must plumb the meanings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and so on—and these meanings are not quite as self-evident as "thirty-five years of age" (at least until this article is widely read and accepted). And it is more difficult in practice, because even once we know what the terms of Section Three mean, we must know what exactly every prior-oath-sworn official did.

---

[59] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this understanding. Section Three's opponents criticized the proposal for its immediate consequences on former Confederates, and its proponents seemed to share the same understanding. For opponents, see Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2900 (Senator Doolittle) (amendment "will have the effect of putting a new punishment, not prescribed by the laws, upon all those persons who are embraced within its provisions"); id. at 2916 (Senator Doolittle); id. at 2940 (Senator Hendricks) (complaining about immediate consequences); for proponents, see id. at 2919 (Senator Willey) (defending the amendment's immediate effect because those affected had already "forfeited" their claim to participate in government "by their past conduct'); id. (they lost their "citizenship rights when they committed treason"); Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess., App., at 228 (Senator Defrees); Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. at 3036 (Senator Henderson) (defending the immediate effect of Section Three against the charge that it is a bill of attainder or ex post facto law); see generally infra Part III.A-B. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-27, 35-37 (documenting all of these discussions) .

[60] U.S. Const. art. V.

[61] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[62] See Gerard N. Magliocca, Background as Foreground: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and January 6th, at 14 n.42 (Mar. 2, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4306094 ("Section Three was unprecedented in the sense that prior restrictions on serving in office were bright-line rules (age and citizenship, for example) instead of standards"). On the other hand, the Constitution's inhabitancy requirement, has proved far from simple in practice. See Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Qualifications of Members of Congress (Jan 15, 2015) at 13-18, https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/R41946.pdf. And there has been recent litigation about the requirement that the President be a "natural born citizen" as well. See Derek T. Muller, "Natural Born" Disputes in the 2016 Election, 85 Fordham L. Rev. 1097 (2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Not all participation in insurrection or rebellion is open and notorious. More difficult it may be, to interpret and apply the disqualification of Section Three than the disqualifications of age, citizenship, and residency. But the fact of difficulty is a non sequitur. The fact that it might be hard for us to know today what a legal rule means (or how it applies) does not mean that it is not the legal rule.[63] The Constitution says what it says and we must try to apply it as best we can. To start by asking what is easy for us, and then to assume that the Constitution must mean something that makes our lives easy, is as fallacious as drawing the curve before gathering the data points.[64]

Resistance might also come from the problem of enforcement. The Constitution is generally self-executing law, but still, somebody has to enforce it. Somebody has to read it, understand it, and ensure that our practices conform to its commands. (Many somebodies, actually, as we discuss shortly.) This is true, but again it is a non-sequitur. It is true that government officials must enforce the Constitution, and who does this and how they do it are important questions, maybe the central questions of constitutional law. But the meaning of the Constitution comes first. Officials must enforce the Constitution because it is law; it is wrong to think that it only becomes law if they decide to enforce it. Section Three has legal force already.

B. Who (All) Can (Must) Faithfully Apply and Enforce Section Three?

As we just said, even though Section Three is a self-executing, immediately applicable constitutional legal rule, someone needs to do the actual applying of that rule to particular situations where its application is called for. Section Three's constitutional disqualification exists of its own force as an abstract matter. But someone needs to bring that legal rule to bear in a concrete situation as a practical matter.

Who has the power and duty to do this? We think the answer is: anybody who possesses legal authority (under relevant state or federal law) to decide whether somebody is eligible for office. This might mean different political or judicial actors, depending on the office involved, and depending on the relevant state or federal law. But in principle: Section Three's disqualification rule may and must be followed—applied, honored, obeyed, enforced, carried out—by anyone whose job it is to figure out whether someone is legally qualified to office, just as with any of the Constitution's other qualifications.

---

[63] Christopher R. Green, Constitutional Truthmakers, 32 Notre Dame J. L. Ethics & Pub Pol'y 497, 511-512 (2018).

[64] Cf. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lemon Is Dead, 43 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 795, 839 (1993) (mocking constitutional interpretation that engages in "the legal equivalent of the method my lab partner and I used in high school chemistry: first draw the desired curve; then plot the data; if time permits, do the experiment"); Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism: Standard and Procedure, 135 Harv. L. Rev. 777 (2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These actors might include (for example): state election officials; other state executive or administrative officials; state legislatures and governors; the two houses of Congress; the President and subordinate executive branch officers; state and federal judges deciding cases where such legal rules apply; even electors for the offices of president and vice president. We will discuss in detail some of these examples presently. But two points are important to keep clear at the outset: First, all of these bodies or entities may possess, within their sphere, the power and duty to apply Section Three as governing law. Second, their authority to do so exists as a function of the powers they otherwise possess. No action is necessary to "activate" Section Three as a prerequisite to its application as law by bodies or persons whose responsibilities call for its application. The Constitution's qualification and disqualification rules exist and possess legal force in their own right, which is what makes them applicable and enforceable by a variety of officials in a variety of contexts.

Consider some illustrations:

1. Seeking Office

a. by election

Anybody who seeks office will at some point need to show that they are entitled to hold that office. At every point that this occurs, Section Three governs. So, for instance, state or local election boards, and state Secretaries of State, may possess state-law authority to make at least initial determinations as to eligibility of candidates for elected office in that state or representing that state in Congress (as authorized by Article I, section 4 of the Constitution)—and, thus, whether or not such candidates shall be placed on a primary or general election ballot.[65] Those state bodies or officers are obliged, often by oath—sometimes by oath mandated by the U.S. Constitution—to act consistently with the requirements of the Constitution in the discharge of their duties.[66] Accordingly, such state actors can and must apply Section Three's disquali-

[65] To be sure, the centralized, government-administered ballot did not come to American until the late Nineteenth Century and so of course states are not constitutionally required to run elections in this way. But if they do, Section Three governs how they carry out their duties.

[66] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.2 ("This Constitution … shall be the supreme Law of the Land"). See also U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."). The nature of the Constitution as supreme, binding law is of course fundamental to the argument for "judicial review," as it is likewise fundamental to the argument for the obligation of all government officials to adhere to the law supplied by the Constitution and give its commands priority over any other source of law or legal duty. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Irrepressible Myth of Marbury, 101 Mich. L. Rev. 2706 (2003); see also William Baude, Severability First Principles, 109 Va. L. Rev. 1, 5-9 (2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fication in carrying out their state-law responsibilities—just as they possess the authority and duty to comply with and enforce the Constitution's other qualification-for-office requirements.[67]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work, consider how the state of Georgia entertained a Section Three challenge to the qualifications of Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene under Georgia law. A state administrative law judge took evidence about Representative Greene's involvement in the events of January 6, 2021.[68] The judge proceeded under the theory that if January 6 was a constitutional "insurrection," and if Representative Greene had been part of it, she would be barred from office.[69] But it concluded that the challengers had failed to meet their burden of proof under state law: "In short, even assuming, arguendo, that the Invasion was an insurrection, Challengers presented no persuasive evidence Rep. Greene took any action—direct physical efforts, contribution of personal services or capital, issuance of directives or marching orders, transmissions of intelligence, or even statements of encouragement—in furtherance thereof on or after January 3, 2021."[70] Secretary of State Brad Raffensberger issued a final decision ratifying the hearing officer's proposed findings that day.[71]

Such determinations about ballot eligibility may also be subject to further judicial review. In state courts, these procedures will of course depend on what review is available under state law. Similarly, federal courts might well possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual federal jurisdiction doctrines (such as standing, ripeness, mootness, and abstention), to decide cases of candidate eligibility. Continuing the example, Representative Greene did file a federal lawsuit attempting to enjoin the then-pending state proceedings (mentioned above), and the district court concluded that the case was justiciable and that Younger abstention did not apply, but that Greene's claims failed on the merits.[72] While Greene's appeal to the Eleventh Circuit was pending, she prevailed in the state proceedings, so the case was dismissed as moot.[73] The

---

[67] We note that the determination by state officials that a candidate for election to the U.S. Congress is not disqualified—and may be elected—does not bind the respective houses of Congress, in the exercise of their independent Article I, section 5, powers to act as "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members" and refuse to seat prospective members it judges to be constitutionally disqualified by Section Three or other constitutional limitation. See also infra n. 96 and accompanying text.

[68] Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022).

[69] Id. at 5-6.

[70] Id. at 15. The January 3, 2021 cut-off is because that is the date that Representative Greene first took a constitutional oath. The Court also specifically rejected the argument that a Newsmax appearance on January 5, 2021, should be interpreted as a "coded message from Rep. Greene to her co-conspirators to go forward with a previously planned incursion into the Capitol." Id. at 16.

[71] Final Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022).

[72] Greene v. Raffensperger, 599 F. Supp. 3d 1283, 1320 (N.D. Ga. 2022).

[73] Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 909-910 (11th Cir. 2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

details, of course, will vary from case to case. But where any of these tribunals has jurisdiction they too obviously have the power and duty to apply Section Three as the supreme law of the land.

This is not to say that states must provide any particular procedure for bringing a challenge to ballot eligibility qualification or grant a cause of action to particular private individuals to bring such challenges. For instance, in a recent suit seeking to disqualify Arizona Representative Mark Finchem and U.S. Representatives Paul Gosar and Andy Biggs from the 2022 primary ballot, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded that state law did not provide a private cause of action for a disqualification challenge.[74] In principle, that could well be right. Whether to provide a cause of action in such cases is largely a question of state law. Section Three slots in to existing powers and procedures without mandating or micromanaging them.

That said, the Arizona Supreme Court's muddied reasoning in the Finchem-Gosar-Biggs case necessitates a few clarifying points. First, state law can enforce Section Three, and the Fourteenth Amendment does not place any particular presumption against doing so. Unfortunately, the Arizona Supreme Court suggested otherwise, writing that "Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause . . . which suggests that A.R.S. 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates."[75] This inference is mistaken—Congress's power to enforce federal law, including constitutional law, is not exclusive of the states, and states regularly enforce federal law including constitutional law in their own courts.[76]

Second, in some circumstances state law not only can but must enforce Section Three. Under the rule of Testa v. Katt,[77] where a state does open its courts to a cause of action, it must apply federal law evenhandedly to that cause of action. As the unanimous Court put it: "[T]he Constitution and the laws passed pursuant to it are the supreme laws of the land, binding alike upon states, courts, and the people, 'any-thing

---

[74] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[75] Id. at *1. The court did not cite any authority for this interpretation, but its argument does echo a fallacious argument made by Chief Justice Chase in Griffin's Case, which we discuss at greater length presently. See infra Part II.C.2.d. The Arizona Supreme Court also made the additional suggestion that Article I, Section 5 gave Congress "exclusive authority to determine whether to enforce the Disqualification Clause against its prospective members," id. We are skeptical of this point as well, see infra n. 96 and accompanying text, but in any event it would have only applied to federal representatives Gosar and Biggs, not the lead defendant, state representative Finchem. The individual houses of Congress of course have no Article I, Section 5 power, exclusive or otherwise, to determine the membership of state legislatures.

[76] See, e.g., Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458-460 (1990); id. at 469- 470 (Scalia, J., concurring); see also Thomas Koenig & Christopher D. Moore, Of State Remedies and Federal Rights (May 29, 2023) https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4462807.

[77] 330 U.S. 386 (1947).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."[78] And thus "the policy of the federal Act is the prevailing policy in every state."[79] A state cannot treat federal obligations the way it can treat foreign ones.

The Arizona Supreme Court's decision unfortunately can be read to suggest otherwise. The court cryptically wrote that the state "statute's scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law,' and does not include the Disqualification Clause, a legal proscription from holding office."[80] If the court meant to distinguish federal constitutional qualifications from state statutes, it seems to have violated Testa. If the court meant that Section Three's dis-qualification is not a "qualification," that seems nonsensical. And if it meant something else, it is hard to figure out what.

In any event, the real question is what procedure is available for determining whether a candidate is qualified to office. That is basically a question of state law, and the correct procedures will likely vary from state to state. But the courts owe state law a full and fair reading, not one slanted by reticence to acknowledge the life in Section Three.

b. by appointment

Now let us turn to appointments. Just as with elected office, anybody who must decide whether an appointee is qualified must comply with Section Three. Traditionally this includes at a minimum whoever nominated the officer.[81] Thus governors, presidents, and other nominating authorities can and should—indeed, constitutionally must—decline to nominate and appoint to state or federal offices persons who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. And likewise, where nominating authority is subject to additional confirmation—by a state senate, the U.S. Senate, or any other body—that body presumably can and should, constitutionally must, decline to consent to the appointment of such constitutionally disqualified nominees.[82]

---

[78] Id. at 391 (quoting U.S. Const. Art VI, sec. 2).

[79] Id. at 393. To be sure, Testa and especially subsequent cases expanding it have been subject to powerful criticisms as a matter of original meaning, see Ann Woolhandler & Michael G. Collins, State Jurisdictional Independence and Federal Supremacy, 72 Fla. L. Rev. 73, 78-83, 97-105 (2020); Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 742-67 (2009) (Thomas, J., dissenting). We bracket those criticisms here.

[80] Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz. Supreme Ct. May 9, 2022) (nonprecedential disposition).

[81] For instance, both President George Washington and President Franklin Roosevelt felt obligated to consider whether their Supreme Court nominees (Patterson and Black, respectively) were constitutionally disqualified by Article I, sec. 6. See William Baude, The Unconstitutionality of Justice Black, 98 Tex. L. Rev. 327, 330, 333-334, 355-356 (2019).

[82] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is Lloyd Bentsen Unconstitutional? 46 Stanford L. Rev. 907, 914-918 (1994) (discussing constitutional responsibility of political branches to enforce constitutional disqualifications from office irrespective of whether they give rise to a judicial case or controversy, and bemoaning the failure of all to enforce the Emoluments Clause); see also Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 355-356 (similar); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, Straightening Out The Confirmation Mess, 105

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In other words, the election and appointment systems, from top to bottom, frequently make decisions about a candidate's eligibility for office. All of those decisions are legally bound by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment; and all persons making such decisions are correspondingly bound to faithfully interpret, enforce, and apply Section Three.

2. Holding Office

What about those who already hold office—either because Section Three was not attended to before they gained office, or because their disqualifying conduct happened later?[83]

Once again, the answer turns in part on what procedures are available under other law. State officials can be subject to a variety of remedies for unlawfully holding office. They might (or might not) be subject to removal, as a matter of state law, by a private suit quo warranto, by the authority of another executive or judicial officer or administrative board, or perhaps even by the state legislature exercising powers of impeachment or recall. In addition, it is possible that the salaries of such rightfully-disqualified officials—and the legal eligibility of such persons for those salaries—might be subject to the authority and determination of some other state official.

We submit that all such officials—administrators, executives, legislatures—possessing legal authority concerning such matters likewise possess the authority (and duty) to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three's disqualification in the course of exercising that legal authority. And once again: if such determinations are judicially reviewable under state law, the courts likewise possess the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.[84]

For an example of how this process is supposed to work consider how the state of New Mexico removed commissioner Couy Griffin from state office.[85] Griffin was an elected commissioner for Otero County, New Mexico, who promoted, assisted, and

---

Yale L.J. 549, 562-570 (1995) (noting parallel constitutional structural argument for obligation of both the President and the Senate to exercise independent faithful constitutional interpretive judgment in the course of carrying out their respective powers with respect to appointment); Charles L. Black, Jr., A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees, 79 Yale L.J. 657, 658-660 (1970) (similar).

[83] Or because Section Three was not yet adopted as law when they were appointed to office but became operative and disqualified them subsequently. This was the situation presented in Griffin's Case, discussed presently. See infra at II.C.

[84] Of course, federal courts, too, might possess jurisdiction, subject to the usual rules and conditions, to decide such lawsuits just as they will for state determinations of election candidate eligibility. See supra notes 72-73 and accompanying text. And when doing so, they have the authority and duty to interpret, apply, and enforce Section Three.

[85] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ultimately joined in the January 6 insurrection against the Capitol. A group of New Mexico citizens filed a quo warranto action against Griffin under New Mexico law, seeking his removal from office. The New Mexico district court took evidence, received legal arguments, and then concluded that Griffin was disqualified under Section Three. More precisely, and quite correctly, it held that Griffin had been disqualified since the day of the January 6 insurrection, and ordered his immediate ejection from office, and permanently enjoined him from seeking or holding any other covered position.[86]

As a matter of state procedure, the court concluded that the New Mexico quo warranto statute was a remedy for ejecting unlawful office holders.[87] It also concluded that quo warranto could be sought by any citizen of New Mexico, without any further showing of injury, because the New Mexico courts are not bound by the same "standing" limitations as the federal courts are. As a matter of federal law, the court had no trouble concluding that the events of January 6. 2021 were a constitutional "insurrection." And it had no trouble concluding that Griffin had engaged in that insurrection, both by "voluntarily aid[ing] the insurrectionists' cause by helping to mobilize and incite" the crowd, and by joining in the invasion of the Capitol itself, even though Griffin himself did not commit a violent act.[88] The New Mexico county court correctly recognized both its power and its duty to interpret and apply Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The same general principle applies to the situations of those who hold federal office. Again, anyone who possesses legal power to decide whether such a person can and should hold (or continue to hold) the office in question must apply Section Three's disqualification in doing so.[89] Here, the specific federal constitutional rules for tenure and removal present some interesting complications, which we address shortly.

---

[86] Id. at 46. The New Mexico Supreme Court dismissed Griffin's appeal on procedural grounds. NO. S-1-SC-39571 (N.M. Sup. Ct. Nov. 15, 2022). Meanwhile, the federal courts concluded that they lacked federal jurisdiction over two related claims by Griffin: an attempt to remove the state action to federal court, State ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 1707187 (D.N.M. May 27, 2022) (denying removal because of plaintiffs' lack of Article III standing) and a separate parallel suit attempting to enjoin the state proceedings, Griffin v. White, 2022 WL 2315980 (D.N.M. June 28, 2022) (finding lack of standing, lack of ripeness, and invoking Pullman abstention).

[87] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473, at 24-25 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[88] Id. at 35-38.

[89] The availability of a federal quo warranto action is curiously codified in the D.C. Code, §§ 16-3501-02. Courts have generally construed this statute quite narrowly, holding that only the Attorney General may bring a quo warranto against a public official, and that he has broad discretion not to do so. See Andrade v. Lauer, 729 F.2d 1475, 1498 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 784-785 (9th Cir. 2011); SW Gen., Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 796 F.3d 67, 81 (D.C. Cir. 2015), aff'd, 580 U.S. 288 (2017). The Third Circuit recently dismissed a Section Three quo warranto against former state senator Doug Mastriano on this ground. Hill v. Mastriano, No. 22-2464, 2022 WL 16707073, at *2 (3d Cir. Nov. 4, 2022). See also Hill v. Perry, No. 22-2465, 2023 WL 3336648, at *1 (3d Cir. May 10, 2023) (dismissing similar suits by same plaintiff against Rick Saccone and Scott Perry).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But in general: wherever anyone possesses the constitutional authority or duty to remove others from office for legal reasons, they can and should remove those barred by Section Three. Presidents—and subordinate executive officers acting at the president's direction—should remove from office executive officers, civil and military, who are constitutionally disqualified by Section Three. Likewise, the House of Representatives should impeach, and the Senate convict and thereby remove from office, civil executive officers who become constitutionally disqualified by Section Three.[90]

Finally and additionally, what happens if all of the above fails? Somebody disqualified by Section Three is given office and nobody removes that person from office. What then? Here too there will often still be additional procedures to enforce Section Three. These procedures mirror those available to enforce the Appointments Clause and other constitutional law of appointments. A litigant can move to disqualify a judge whose appointment is improper.[91] A regulated entity can challenge the actions of an executive official who holds office improperly.[92] Those who cannot constitutionally hold office cannot constitutionally exercise government power, so the subjects of that power can challenge their acts as ultra vires. While there may be some limits to the available relief in some kinds of suits under the "de facto officer doctrine," (more on which shortly), in many cases the courts will be called on to decide if an action is ultra vires. Section Three governs those cases.

3. Special Situations

A few federal constitutional offices raise special cases, where the Constitution itself speaks to official tenure or qualifications.

First consider Congress. Each house of Congress has two specific powers with respect to its own membership in which Section Three might come into play. First, each house has power to "Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of "its own Members."[93] Since one of those qualifications is non-disqualification under Section Three, each house can and must judge whether Section Three forbids the seating of a member. This judgment is conclusive, and it operates as a crucial constitutional [90] An officeholder who has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to enemies of the United States has surely committed a "high Crime or Misdemeanor" within the meaning of Article II, section 4's description of the scope of the impeachment and removal power. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, To End a (Republican) Presidency, 132 Harv. L. Rev. 689, 698-702 (2018). Note that military officers are not subject to impeachment; they are subject instead to the President's removal authority as Commander in Chief. Whether Congress could supplement that authority through appropriate legislation is an interesting question. See Zachary Price, Congress's Power Over Military Offices, 99 Tex. L. Rev. 291 (2021).

---

[91] Nguyen v. United States, 539 U.S. 69, 77–79, 81–82 (2003); Baude, Black, supra note 81, at 346-47.

[92] Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 8–9 (1976) (per curiam); Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 668 (1988); Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 487–88 (2010); NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550, 2557 (2014); see also Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 36-37.

[93] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 1.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

backstop for each house. No state or group of voters can force upon the House or Senate a Member it judges to be constitutionally disqualified. Indeed, even federal courts could not properly do so. While the Supreme Court has held, in Powell v. McCormack,[94] that Congress cannot create new "Qualifications" and that the federal courts have the power to stop it from doing so, neither Powell nor first principles allow a federal court to second-guess each house's judgment about whether the existing, constitutional, qualifications have been satisfied.[95]

Some have argued that each house's judging power also preempts other early stages of the election process. The argument is that states and state election law have no power to exclude a candidate for Congress because they are constitutionally ineligible to office—that instead the state must allow the voters to send up the ineligible candidate, so as not to prejudge the possibility that the House or Senate will find them eligible.[96] With respect, we do not agree with this argument. As a logical matter, each house's right to judge whether an elected candidate can hold office does not give it the power to force states to elect that candidate (or allow them to be elected) in the first place. And as a textual matter, state legislatures have the power to regulate the "manner" of elections, which includes ballot eligibility.[97] In our view, the better interpretation is that Section Three can be relevant to both the state's power to regulate the manner of elections and each house's power to judge the results of those elections.

---

[94] 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

[95] See Powell, 395 U.S. at 520 n. 41 (reserving the possibility that Section Three disqualification is a qualification); see also P. Allan Dionisopoulos, A Commentary on the Constitutional Issues in the Powell and Related Cases, 17 J. Pub. L. 103, 114-115 (1968) (cited in id. at n.41) (arguing that it is); Powell, 395 U.S. at 521 n.42 (noting that "federal courts might still be barred by the political question doctrine from reviewing the House's factual determination that a member did not meet one of the standing qualifications"). We emphasize that questions of interpretation and application of Section Three are not in general "political questions" that cannot be decided by federal courts, simply because they have political consequences. Where the Constitution supplies a rule, and the rule's application is not committed by the text of the Constitution to the judgment of one of the political branches, the courts are not disabled from deciding a case based on that rule. We simply think that the provision committing to each house the power to be the "Judge" of the "Elections, Returns, and Qualifications" of its own Members does not permit judicial review of determinations of each house that properly fall within these constitutional categories.

[96] See Derek T. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind. L.J. 559, 594-598 (2015); see also Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245, 267-273, 282-284 (4th Cir. 2022) (Richardson, J., concurring); Greene v. Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F.4th 907, 912-916 (11th Cir. 2022) (Branch, J., concurring).

[97] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 4. The same Clause also gives Congress the power to "make or alter" such regulations by legislation if it wishes. Two relatively recent Supreme Court cases have invalidated state ballot eligibility rules for members of Congress that attempted to impose congressional term limits, U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995); Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510 (2001), and Judge Richardson relies on these cases to argue that states cannot judge the qualifications of congressional candidates, Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 273-275 (Richardson, J., concurring). Putting aside whether these cases are correct as an original matter, we think they further support our view. The Court rejected term-limit-ballot-access restrictions because they were an attempt to impose a qualification not contained in the Constitution. E.g., U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 784, 787-788, 806-815. It

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second relevant power each house possesses with respect to its own Members concerns Members already sitting in Congress. Each house also has power to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member."[98] So in addition to the initial power to exclude under Section Three, each house could potentially proceed through the expulsion power instead, by two-thirds vote.[99] As with the power to exclude, the power to expel, where exercised within the scope of the power conferred exclusively on each house, is committed to that house's discretion.

Additionally, Article I's Speech and Debate Clause provides that "for any Speech or Debate in either House," members of Congress "shall not be questioned in any other Place."[100] This means that to the extent that the conduct that violates Section Three was a member of Congress's official statements or legislative actions,[101] each house's powers of exclusion and expulsion are necessarily the sole mechanism for enforcing Section Three.

Federal judges hold their offices during "good Behaviour."[102] What if a sitting federal judge or even a Supreme Court justice has engaged in insurrection or rebellion or given aid or comfort to the nation's enemies?[103] As a matter of substance this is easy. Whether regarded as simply a violation of the Article III tenure condition of "good Behaviour" or as satisfying the impeachment standard of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors,"[104] conduct meeting Section Three's standard disqualifies a federal judge from office.

As a matter of procedure the question is trickier. The conventional wisdom is that Article III allows good behavior to be judged only through the procedure of impeachment by Congress. An alternative view, with some support in the history, is follows that ballot access rules that follow the qualifications contained in the Constitution could be treated differently.

---

[98] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 5, cl. 2.

[99] There is some debate whether Congress can expel a member for conduct that occurred before being elected. See Chafetz, Democracy's Privileged Few, supra note 47, at 210-212 (recounting arguments on both sides but arguing that it can); Jack Maskell, Congressional Research Service, Expulsion, Censure, Reprimand, and Fine: Legislative Discipline in the House of Representatives 4-7 (2016) https://sgp.fas.org/crs/misc/RL31382.pdf (same). At all events, however, continuing to hold office when forbidden to do so by Section Three is ongoing conduct that would seem independently to justify expulsion in the here-and-now.

[100] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 6, cl. 1.

[101] As we elaborate later, we think it is quite rare that such conduct could violate Section Three, even on its own terms.

[102] U.S. Const. art. III.

[103] Cf. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 2, 141 (1866) (Chase, C.J., concurring in the judgment) ("In Indiana, the judges and officers of the courts were loyal to the government. But it might have been otherwise. In times of rebellion and civil war, it may often happen, indeed, that judges and marshals will be in active sympathy with the rebels, and courts their most efficient allies.").

[104] See supra note 90.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that Congress could provide other procedures for adjudicating misbehavior (as for instance in the 1791 Crimes Act, which purported to require the immediate removal of any federal official convicted of bribery or other crimes).[105] Whichever is the answer, the procedures and criteria for judging judges can and must apply Section Three.

Finally, what about the top of the ticket? What if the President or a presidential candidate (or likewise for Vice President) is constitutionally disqualified?[106] Who has the power and duty to enforce Section Three's legal prohibition? Again, the answer depends on whether the supposedly disqualified individual is seeking election to office or already holds it. In the case of a candidate, state election officials and state election law will frequently judge that candidate's ballot eligibility, applying Section Three as described above, and subject to the usual avenues of judicial review. That eligibility question can be a part of a state's Article II election for electors just as much as any other state election.[107] Put simply: a state secretary of state (for example) might well possess state-law authority to determine candidate eligibility for federal elective offices—President and Vice President, U.S. Representatives, U.S. Senators—selected directly or indirectly via state elections; and among those relevant eligibility criteria is whether a candidate is disqualified from the office he or she seeks by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Additionally, presidential electors have the power (and therefore perhaps the responsibility as well) to enforce Section Three.[108] In perhaps half the states, the question is more complicated, because state laws purport to bind the electors in various ways to vote for their party's candidate rather than making their own determination, and the Supreme Court has recently upheld such laws.[109] But even working

---

[105] Saikrishna Prakash & Steven D. Smith, How to Remove A Federal Judge, 116 Yale L.J. 72 (2006). In the interests of full disclosure, one of us was the student lead editor when this piece was published, and continues to think it is probably right, notwithstanding the counterarguments in James E. Pfander, Removing Federal Judges, 74 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1227 (2007). The other of us adheres to the traditional view. Michael Stokes Paulsen, Checking the Court, 10 NYU J. L. & Liberty 18, 76-77 (2016).

[106] We are assuming for now that the Presidency and Vice Presidency are covered by Section Three's language as an "office, civil or military, under the United States." We think that assumption is correct, and we will return to it in Part IV.B.

[107] See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) (upholding state exclusion from presidential primary ballot of twenty-seven-year-old candidate constitutionally disqualified on grounds of age); Hassan v. Colorado, 495 Fed. App'x 947, 948 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J.) (upholding state exclusion from presidential election ballot of naturalized citizen constitutionally disqualified from office by Natural Born Citizen Clause of Article II); see also Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 599-608; see also Muller, Natural Born, supra note 62, at 1100-1106. This is standard practice and law even though the President and Vice President are only indirect candidates, with their electors as direct candidates.

[108] See Muller, Scrutinizing, supra note 96, at 579-580.

[109] Chiafolo v. Washington, 591 U.S. ___ (2020); see also Muller, supra note 96, at 580. We bracket the serious possibility that Chiafolo was wrongly decided. See, e.g., Mike Rappaport, The Originalist Disaster in Chiafolo, Law & Liberty (Aug. 7, 2020), https://lawliberty.org/the-originalist-disaster-in-

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

within that paradigm, states and their legislatures have their own duties to uphold the Constitution. That means they have a responsibility to arrange that their electors do not elect a constitutionally disqualified candidate, which should be reflected in their laws.

If the voters and presidential electors do select a disqualified candidate for the Presidency, we do not believe that Congress (or the Vice President) have the power to reject that candidate when the votes are counted in joint session. Whatever the extent of Congress's and the Vice President's authority to count the electoral votes, or determine the authenticity of submitted votes—i.e., was this the act of the electors of the state?—we do not believe that they have the authority to evaluate the decisions or actions of the electors themselves.[110] So if a properly selected elector submits a vote for a constitutionally disqualified individual it should still be counted.

Still, once those votes are counted, a disqualified candidate does not become president, even if he has the most votes. This is made explicit by the (self-executing) command of Section Three of the Twentieth Amendment, which sets the constitutional terms of a President's term. It states that at "the time fixed for the beginning of [the President's] term," "if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified."[111] The language thus specifically confirms the possibility of a failure to qualify, and specifies the consequences of that failure. If the President-elect is covered by Section Three, he cannot become President—unless Congress chooses (by supermajority votes) to remove Section Three's disability.

Once the President has taken office, the Constitution provides two paths for involuntary removal from office: impeachment for "high Crimes and Misdemeanors" and removal for being "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" under the procedure of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. The impeachment route is straightforward. As we have discussed, an insurrection against the United States is a paradigm example of a high crime or misdemeanor. On the other hand, it is less clear whether being legally disqualified from holding office makes the would-be President "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office" within the meaning of the Twenty-fifth Amendment. (Structurally, the Twenty-fifth Amendment appears to relate to Article II, Section 1, paragraph 6, which deals with Presidential succession, rather than Article II, Section 1, paragraph 5, which deals with eligibility.) But in chiafalo/; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitutional Power of the Electoral College, Public Discourse (Nov. 21, 2016), https://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2016/11/18283/.

---

[110] We take no position on many further details of this issue, including the relative interplay of the Electoral Count Reform Act, Pub.L. 117-328, Div. P, Title I, § 109(a) (Dec. 29, 2022) 136 Stat. 5238-5239, codified in relevant part at 3 U.S.C. 15(b) & (d)(2)(B)(ii), possible constitutional challenges to it, see Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1805 (2002); see also John Harrison, Nobody for President, 16 J.L & Pol. 699 (2000), interpretations of it, but see Derek T. Muller, Electoral Votes Regularly Given, 55 Ga. L. Rev. 1529, 1538 (2021), or the like.

[111] U.S. Const. amdt. XX, sec. 3. Cf, Muller, Regularly Given, supra note 110, at 1538 n.42.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

any event the Twenty-fifth Amendment question will usually be unimportant in practice, because it requires a two thirds vote of both houses, and the Vice President and many cabinet officials, and so it will usually be significantly easier to use the impeachment process instead.[112]

* * *

Tying together all of these different procedures and possibilities: consider briefly (and not-so-hypothetically) a violent insurrection on the seat of government, by a mob joined or given aid or comfort by various government officials, from a state representative or commissioner to a U.S. Senator to the President himself.[113] From the moment of their participation in the insurrection, those officials would be legally ineligible to hold their offices, thanks to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. How this would play out practically might vary across them. As the state official returned home, he would immediately be subject to state law procedures such as a quo warranto suit.[114] He might be removed by such a suit,[115] or might well choose to resign instead.[116] The Senator might choose to brazen it out, counting on the difficulty in getting together a two-thirds vote to expel him. But if he sought re-election the Senate could and should exclude him by a mere majority vote. As for the hypothetical President, by right he ought to be immediately subject to impeachment and conviction by Congress, and perhaps also a Twenty-fifth Amendment declaration by the Vice President and supported by the cabinet. Even if those things did not happen, if he sought re-election, state election officials around the country would be bound by Section Three in deciding whether to put him on the ballot, even in the primary.

And of course, some of these matters would no doubt promptly find their way into the courts as well. Continuing the example of the presidential candidate, if state officials excluded him from ballot eligibility, he would likely be able to sue in state or federal court to challenge state officials' determination of ineligibility. And if he was not excluded by state officials, voters (at least in some states) might possess the legal right to challenge his eligibility. Either way, such a challenge would present a classic legal case or controversy. It is not difficult to imagine such suit being resolved by courts. Indeed, given the magnitude of the question and its consequences, it is not

---

[112] Brian Kalt, Unable: The Law, Politics, and Limits of Section 4 of the Twenty-Fifth Amendment (2019).

[113] See infra Part IV.C. for further discussion.

[114] For two relevant examples, see NMSA. 1978, sec. 44-3; W.V. Code sec. 53-2-1. In West Virginia, such a claim may be brought "[w]henever the Attorney General or prosecuting attorney of any county is satisfied that a cause exists therefor he may, at his own instance, or at the relation of any person interested." Id. 53-2-2. For illustrative applications, see State ex rel. Zickefoose v. West, 145 W. Va. 498, 545 (1960); Wells v. Miller, 237 W. Va. 731 (2016).

[115] New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, D-101-CV-2022-00473 (1st. Dist. Santa Fe County, Sep. 6, 2022).

[116] Resignation letter from West Virginia Delegate Derrick Evans to Governor Jim Justice (Jan. 9, 2021), available at https://s3.documentcloud.org/documents/20447012/derrick-evans-resignation-letter.pdf.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

difficult to imagine such an important case making its way quickly to the U.S. Supreme Court. It would then become the province and duty of the Court to determine and apply the meaning of Section Three.

Section Three thus functions as a sort of constitutional immune system, mobilizing every official charged with constitutional application to keep those who have fundamentally betrayed the constitutional order from keeping or reassuming power.

C. The Problem of Griffin's Case

A small problem with our view that Section Three is self-executing and immediately operative is that the Chief Justice of the United States said the opposite, almost immediately after the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted. This was the opinion in Griffin's Case by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, sitting as Circuit Justice in 1869, in one of the first cases to interpret any part of the Amendment. In Griffin's Case, Chief Justice Chase concluded that Section Three is inoperative unless and until Congress passes implementing legislation to carry it into effect.[117] This precedent continues to cast a shadow over Section Three today.[118]

But there is a simple response to this small problem. Griffin's Case is just wrong. It is possible—possible—that its result is correct on an alternate ground, under the so-called de facto officer doctrine, which we will discuss. But Chase's legal reasoning that the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing is unsustainable. Indeed, the more one pulls at his opinion, the more it unravels. We examine it in some detail.[119]

1. Background

Caesar Griffin, a black man, was charged in a Virginia state court with the crime of shooting with the intent to kill. Griffin was tried, convicted, and sentenced to prison. He made no claim that the statute under which he was tried was unconstitutional; nor that he had been subjected to discrimination because of his race; nor that the composition of the jury was improper. As Chase put it: Griffin made "no allegation that the trial was not fairly conducted, or that any discrimination was made against him, either in indictment, trial, or sentence, on account of his color."[120] Nor did Griffin allege that the presiding judge—Judge Hugh W. Sheffey—"did not

---

[117] In re Griffin ("Griffin's Case"), 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D.Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) (Chase 364).

[118] See, e.g., Josh Blackman and S. B. Tillman, Opinion, "Only the Feds Could Disqualify Madison Cawthorn and Marjorie Taylor Greene," The New York Times, (Apr. 20, 2022); Tom Ginsburg, Aziz Huq, & David Landau, The Law of Democratic Disqualification, 111 Calif. L. Rev. at 16, 51 (forthcoming 2023) at https://ssrn.com/abstract=3938600.

[119] For other criticism of Griffin's Case, insightful as always, see Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 102-108; Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 9-14.

[120] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct the trial with fairness and uprightness."[121] Griffin raised just one challenge to the validity of his conviction: that Judge Sheffey (or, one might say, so-called Judge Sheffey)[122] was legally disqualified by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment from serving.

The facts relevant to Judge Sheffey were not disputed either. He had taken the oath: Before the Civil War, Hugh Sheffey had been a member of the Virginia state legislature, as far back as 1849. And he had "engaged in" rebellion: After Virginia purported to secede from the Union, Sheffey continued to serve as a member of Virginia's secessionist legislature. In that role, in 1862, he "voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[123] Thus "it is admitted," wrote Chase, that Judge Sheffey "was one of the persons to whom the prohibition to hold office pronounced by the amendment applied."[124]

Griffin had petitioned the U.S. district judge, Judge John Underwood, for a writ of habeas corpus challenging the lawfulness of his custody, which Judge Underwood granted.[125] The sheriff appealed to the circuit court, which was held by Chase as circuit justice.[126]

---

[121] Id. at 22.

[122] Cf. Will Baude, The deadly serious accusation of being a "so-called judge," Volokh Conspiracy, Wash. Post. (Feb. 4, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2017/02/04/the-deadly-serious-accusation-of-being-a-so-called-judge/ ("[T]o call him a 'so-called' judge is to hint that he is not really a judge, that he lacks judicial power. It is just a hint, but it flirts with a deadly serious issue").

[123] 11 F. Cas. at 22.

[124] Id. at 23.

[125] See Opinion of Judge Underwood in Edward McPherson, The Political History of the United States of America During the Period of Reconstruction (from April 15, 1865, to July 15, 1870), at 462-466 (1875). We are indebted to Myles Lynch for locating this source.

[126] The procedural posture of this and several related cases are extremely confusing and reflect background machinations by both Judge Underwood and Chief Justice Chase: At the time, habeas was apparently available from the district court, or "at chambers," or from the circuit court. If Judge Underwood issued the writ from the district court or at chambers, he could be reviewed by the circuit court, which would include Chief Justice Chase. But if Chief Justice Chase was not present, Judge Underwood could also sit alone as the circuit court. And thanks to a recent statute designed to strip jurisdiction over the anti-Reconstruction suit of Ex parte McCardle, there would be no appeal if Judge Underwood sat as the circuit court. Underwood took this, the unreviewable route, in another habeas case like Griffin's brought by Sally Anderson. Chief Justice Chase then wrote to Underwood with a veiled threat, floating the possibility that a recent statute could be interpreted to deprive Underwood of his ability to hold the circuit court at that time, and encouraging Underwood to hear the cases in the district court or at chambers so that Chase could review him. Underwood obliged. Meanwhile, Virginia also sought an original writ in the Supreme Court to put a stop to Underwood's Section Three docket. The Supreme Court ordered all of the proceedings stayed, and then let Chase go down to the circuit to clean things up, taking no action on the writ. See Charles Fairman, Reconstruction and Reunion at 601-607; Letter from Chase to Underwood (Nov. 19, 1868) in 5 The Salmon P. Chase Papers 285-286 (1998); Letter from Chase to Underwood (Jan. 14, 1869) in id. at 292-293.

This background is briefly alluded to in the synopsis in Griffin's Case which explains that "[a] motion was then made by James Lyons, Esq. in the supreme court of the United States for a writ of prohibition against the district judge, to restrain him from further exercise of such power. The supreme

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Chase on Section Three

Chase reversed. Here is how he framed the problem: Everybody agreed that Sheffey had been lawfully appointed as a state judge in February 1866, while Virginia was controlled by military reconstruction and the Fourteenth Amendment did not exist.[127] The question was whether ratification of Section Three kicked him out. As Chase put it: "whether upon a sound construction of the amendment, it must be regarded as operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power."[128]

Chase said no, rejecting this as a "literal construction" [129] of Section Three. There is a lot going on in this opinion. Chase included a number of makeweight arguments and asides on topics such as the legal history of West Virginia.[130] But his core argument was that surely Section Three cannot mean what it says: It would have bad consequences, can't possibly have been intended by the ratifiers, and would violate the spirit of the Constitution. As we will explain, these arguments are bad ones. Chase then supplemented them with a shocking claim of a secret Supreme Court ruling in favor of an alternative approach—which was both generally improper, but also further impeached Chase's interpretation of Section Three. All in all, Griffin's Case is a case study in how not to go about the enterprise of faithful constitutional interpretation.

---

court advised on the motion, and never announced any conclusion, but shortly afterward the chief justice opened the circuit court at Richmond, and immediately called up the appeal in Griffin's Case. This statement is necessary for a full understanding of the pregnancy of the chief justice's statement that the supreme court agreed with him as to the decision he rendered in this case." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 7-8. But really, these circumstances are extraordinary. We take them up again below.

[127] Id. at 23.

[128] Id. at 18.

[129] Id. at 24.

[130] Chase summarized the intriguing legal history of this Virginia government: When Virginia, by act of its legislature in 1861, purported to secede from the Union, loyal Unionists assembled in convention in Wheeling to organize a new state government. Congress and the Lincoln administration recognized the Wheeling government as the lawful government of Virginia. The Wheeling Virginia government then gave its consent to the creation of a new Wheeling-based state of West Virginia, after which the (Wheeling) Virginia government-in-exile relocated to Alexandria, just across the river from Washington, to serve as the loyal, Union-recognized government of all of what remained as "Virginia." After Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Chase's opinion notes, the "government recognized by the United States was transferred from Alexandria to Richmond" and "became in fact what it was before in law, the government of the whole state." Id. at 18. Judge Sheffey was appointed under the authority of this government. (For the full story – and full formalist legal defense – of the validity of the legal fiction of "Virginia" giving its consent to the creation of a breakaway state of West Virginia, see Vasan Kesavan and Michael Stokes Paulsen, Is West Virginia Unconstitutional? 90 Calif. L. Rev. 291 (2002) For an argument that this aside was actually relevant to Chase's argument, see Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30, discussed infra note 157.)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a. "The argument from inconveniences, great as these"

The core of Chase's argument was that if Section Three were an immediately operative, self-executing constitutional rule of disqualification, it would have inconvenient consequences in the Reconstruction South. "In the examination of questions of this sort," Chase wrote, "great attention is properly paid to the argument from inconvenience."[131] And here "the argument from inconveniences" was "great" in Chase's estimation— it was "of no light weight."[132]

In several incompletely reconstructed Southern governments, many offices were in fact held by former oath-breaking rebels.[133] If Section Three were automatically operative, it would have immediately barred all such men from office. (Indeed.) Yet, Chase argued, many such disqualified persons in fact had not vacated their offices but instead continued to exercise authority under those offices notwithstanding the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. To give Section Three immediate effect would thus upset the apple cart in a fairly major way. "No sentence, no judgment, no decree, no acknowledgement of a deed, no record of a deed, no sheriff's or commissioner's sale—in short no official act—is of the least validity."[134] Chase found this unthinkable: "It is impossible to measure the evils which such a construction would add to the calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these [Southern] states."[135]

Chase went on: not only did Section Three impose great "inconveniences" and "calamities," it was unfairly punitive—ungraciously ousting once-lawfully-appointed officers from their offices—and ostensibly inconsistent with the "spirit" of prior constitutional principles, concerning due process, bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.[136] And besides, the specific remedy sought—vacating Griffin's conviction—only worked mischief, because it did not even seek the literal removal of Judge Sheffey from office. Put these things together and you have Chase's interpretive driver: "Surely," Chase continued, "a construction which fails to accomplish the main purpose of the amendment, and yet necessarily works the mischief and inconveniences which have been described, and is repugnant to the first principles of justice and right embodied in other provisions of the constitution, is not to be favored, if any other reasonable construction can be found."[137]

---

[131] 11 F. Cas. at 24.
[132] Id. at 25.
[133] Chase also suggested that the problem was not completely limited to the Southern governments. Id. at 25 (observing that "[i]t is well known that many persons, engaged in the late Rebellion, have emigrated to states which adhered to the national government . . ." and that "it is not to be doubted that not a few among them" had previously taken a covered oath, and that "[p]robably some of these persons" had subsequently been elected to office).
[134] Id. at 25. Of course, Chase would undercut this conclusion later in the opinion. See infra Part II.C.
[135] 11 F. Cas. at 25.
[136] More on this point presently, Part II.C.2.c, and again Part III.
[137] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chase tried to funnel these policy arguments into a rule of constitutional construction: "the argument from inconvenience."[138] This argument "it is true, can not prevail over plain words or clear reason," Chase acknowledged.[139] "But, on the other hand," he wrote, "a construction which must necessarily occasion great public and private mischief, must never be preferred to a construction which will occasion neither, or neither in so great a degree, unless the terms of the instrument absolutely require such preference."[140]

This is not an unreasonable principle, as interpretive canons go. When confronted with two plausible interpretations of genuinely ambiguous, unclear text, one of which would produce manifestly jarring results, the less jarring interpretation is more likely the correct one. As James Madison said in his famous speech against the national bank: "Where a meaning is clear, the consequences, whatever they may be, are to be admitted—where doubtful, it is fairly triable by its consequences."[141] Or as Chief Justice Marshall said in United States v. Fisher: "where great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain; in which case it must be obeyed."[142] But Chase's canon was noticeably more aggressive: The supposedly more disruptive reading must "never be preferred" unless the text's terms "absolutely require" such preference.[143] That is putting not just a thumb on the scale, but a whole hand.

But that is not the real problem with Chase's analysis. The real problem was how Chase applied these principles to Section Three.

First, Chase was too quick—far too quick—to dismiss the "literal" reading of the "terms of the instrument" as meaning exactly what they seem to say. As discussed above, the language of Section Three's prohibition on office holding is clear and direct; it is hardly doubtful at all. It takes considerable effort to impute any ambiguity to the text and Chase's opinion does not even undertake that effort. Instead, the opinion assumes its own conclusion—that the text's language is somehow insufficiently clear to justify applying the "literal" meaning of its words. Indeed, even on Chase's own hyper-strict standard, the words of Section Three do "absolutely require" the conclusion that it, on its own, disqualifies covered rebels from office.

Second, Chase was too ready—far too ready—to find that following the ("literal") language of the document would produce (what Chase considered to be) great "inconveniences" or "mischief"— indeed, increase "calamities" already visited upon

---

[138] Id. at 24.
[139] Id. at 24.
[140] Id. at 24.
[141] James Madison, Speech on Feb. 2, 1791, reprinted in Legislative and Documentary History of the Bank of the United States 39, 40 (photo. reprint 2008)
[142] United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch (6 U.S.) 358, 386 (1805)
[143] 11 F. Cas. at 24 (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the South. Chase emphasized the breadth of Section Three's language: it applied in all the states, not just the former Confederacy (so?); it applied beyond the context of Civil War but included aiding enemies in a foreign war (so?); it would apply in terms to immediately disqualify men for acts done long ago, for example in the Mexican War (so?); it would apply "to all persons in the category" and "for all time, present and future" (so?). And, taken seriously, this broad rule would, as noted, "annul all official acts" performed by disqualified officers, including judges. (Would it?)

For Chase, all this seemed to border on the shocking—a parade of horribles demanding the search for an alternative construction of Section Three. But why? Because it might have a broad effect? Because it adopted a new rule of constitutional law superseding prior law? Because it would have removed immediately a substantial number of former-oath-swearing-officeholders-turned-rebels from positions of power? Because it could have the effect of invalidating their unauthorized, lawless actions? Chase's parade of horribles assumes, without argument, the correctness of his own apparent policy prejudices.[144]

Now Chase did attempt to groom these prejudices into more plausible legal arguments, which we will get to in a moment. But because these arguments from inconvenience are the heart of Chase's opinion, and because we still see these kinds of arguments repeated today, we pause to emphasize that this is not how judging is supposed to work, even if it too often does.

Chase's construe-to-avoid-the-force-of-constitutional-language-whose-policy-consequences-you-dislike approach to constitutional interpretation is simply wrong. Judges do not get to rewrite constitutional provisions they find objectionable on policy grounds. Relatedly, judges do not get to make up new provisions of law in order to devise policy "solutions" to texts they don't like. Chase's opinion imposed, as a solution to textual literalism and its real and imagined policy inconveniences, a different kind of constitutional provision, one more like the Impeachment Clause and the Treason Clause. Put bluntly, Chase made up law that was not there in order to change law that was there but that he did not like.

b. The argument from "the intention of the people"

In places, Chase raises the inconvenience argument as an inquiry into the "intent" of the Framers: "What was the intention of the people of the United States in adopting the fourteenth amendment? What is the true scope and purpose of the prohibition to hold office contained in the third section?"[145] This at least sounds kind of [144] As Judge Underwood had put it: "Whatever inconvenience may result from the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws, I think the experience of the last few years shows that much greater inconvenience comes from attempting their overthrow." Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 465.

[145] 11 F.Cas. at 24.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

like the question a judge should be asking—the original meaning of the constitutional provision adopted by We The People and binding on those who interpret it. But in fact it conceals still more sleight of hand.

First and foremost, Chase's framing of the interpretive question commits a classic blunder: swapping in original intent for original meaning. In our constitutional system, law is made by enacting texts, not by searching for the unenacted wishes of lawmakers.[146] And whatever evidence Chase might have that the consequences of Section Three were unintended by some of those who voted for it, he had no evidence that these consequences were not entailed by what they voted for.

Second, however dubious it is to look to original intent over original meaning generally, it is especially dicey to do so in the case of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in unusual, exigent circumstances. In Congress, the Amendment represented a compromise between different Republican factions, some much more radical than the others. And in the states, where ratification made it law, the Amendment depended on the ratification votes of the southern states, who were pressured—some might say "coerced"—to ratify the Amendment as the price of regaining their representation in Congress.[147] Even if one accepts this process as lawful (which we do) it is obvious that it means one must cast a skeptical eye on stories about the supposed "intent" of those who ratified it, especially in the South. It may well be that some of the ratifiers had their fingers crossed behind their backs and intended to give the Amendment as little effect and as little quarter as they could get away with. But so what? What matters is what they did, in one of the highest-stakes moments of constitutional law making in American history. By diminishing the plain scope of the Amendment's text, Chase was succumbing to this kind of anti-constitutional subversion.

Third and finally, all of Chase's evidence of this supposed intent just boils down to the inconvenience argument we have just discussed. And as discussed above, this is why one must be especially careful with judges who invoke the supposed "intent" of a written text. When meaning is uncertain, it is permissible to give a slight edge to the interpretation that is more likely to match what its authors were trying to do.

---

[146] See supra notes 9-14, sources cited there, and accompanying text.

[147] See generally, John Harrison, The Lawfulness of the Reconstruction Amendments, 68 U. Chi. L. Rev. 375, 461 (2001). For arguments that Congress's requiring states' ratification as condition of restored representation was entirely lawful and appropriate, see id; Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 329; Amar, America's Constitution, supra note 4, at 364-380, see especially id. at 376-378. There is a different argument for ratification, the "loyal denominator" theory, in which the southern states were unnecessary for ratification. See Christopher R. Green, Loyal Denominatorism and the Fourteenth Amendment: Normative Defense and Implications, 13 Duke J. Const. L. & Pub. Pol'y 167, 168 (2017); Christopher R. Green, The History of the Loyal Denominator, 79 La. L. Rev. 47, 48 (2018). One of us has rejected this theory in prior writing, Michael Stokes Paulsen, A General Theory of Article V: The Constitutional Lessons of the Twenty-Seventh Amendment, 103 Yale L.J. 677, 709 (1993); see also Amar, supra note 4, at 378-380, and the other of us is inclined in the same direction.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But it is easy for a judge to use this principle as an excuse for reading into the text his own views of what the law should be. After all, the authors of the provision were reasonable people, trying to do reasonable things, and, I, the judge, am also reasonable, so surely if I don't like this result, they wouldn't have liked this result, and therefore it must not be the result. To write it down this way would give up the game, but it is too easy to think it. Chase's use of original intent is makeweight at best, and a trick at worst.

c. The argument that Section Three should not be read to depart from the "spirit" of prior constitutional law

The "inconveniences" and "calamities" that, surely, were not intended by the authors of the Fourteenth Amendment were Chase's main arguments. But he had a bit more to say. There was "another principle, which in determining the construction of this amendment, is entitled to equal consideration."

> Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of an amendment of a public act, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general terms and spirit of the act amended. This principle forbids a construction of the amendment, not clearly required by its terms, which will bring it into conflict or disaccord with the other provisions of the constitution.[148]

What was the supposed conflict between Section Three and the rest of the Constitution? Chase fretted that Section Three was a penal enactment, imposing punishment without trial on secessionists, and thus in tension with the spirit of earlier provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process:

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once and without trial, deprives a whole class of persons of offices held by them, for cause, however grave. It is true that no limit can be imposed on the people when exercising their sovereign power in amending their own constitution of government. But it is a necessary presumption that the people in the exercise of that power, seek to confirm and improve, rather than to weaken and impair the general spirit of the constitution.[149]

Thus, Chase concluded, Section Three should not be read as accomplishing disqualification of its own force.

---

[148] 11 F.Cas. at 25.
[149] Id. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Now once again, the interpretive rule Chase is formulating here is not totally crazy. But it is a warped version of the real thing. As we discuss at length in the next part: It is true that repeals by implication are disfavored, and this principle applies to constitutional law. But at the same time, constitutional amendments change things, and when an amendment is inconsistent with prior constitutional rules, ultimately it is the amendment that controls. If a new provision fairly can be harmonized with prior law—where there is no true conflict—the provisions should be read harmoniously.[150] But where new language in fact changes old law, by clear terms or necessary logical effect, the greater error is to deny such change out of undue attachment to the former legal regime.

This greater error is exactly what Chase did. Chase leaned very heavily—too heavily—on the rule against implied repeals, ratcheting it up to "forbid[]" readings of a text "not clearly required" by its terms, that would "bring it into conflict or disaccord" with other provisions of the Constitution.[151] Each leaning is wrong. Repeals by implication may be disfavored; but repeals, made in terms or by necessary logical implication, are not presumptively forbidden. Nor does new language changing old provisions require such extraordinary clarity as Chase would have it. The true question is whether the language and logic of a new provision really does present a conflict with prior law. And the idea that constitutional amendments should presumptively be read so as not to change the Constitution (!)—that they should be construed to avoid conflict or even mere disaccord with prior constitutional law—is indefensible. Of course constitutional amendments change prior constitutional law. That is their purpose and function. Now, that doesn't warrant reading them to change more than they really do. But a presumption that constitutional amendments should be read to change as little as possible makes no sense.

Finally, this part of Chase's argument took a puzzling turn that is worth noting. In one of many strange asides, Chase noted the possibility that Section Three had implicitly repealed the Treason Clause: "in the judgment of some enlightened jurists, the legal effect" of Section Three's imposition of a new prohibition on officeholding for rebels and insurrectionists "was to remit all other punishments" for treason.[152] If anything this seemed to hurt Chase's argument against self-execution, because it emphasized that Section Three could change the pre-existing constitutional rules. And at the same time this supposedly enlightened argument was also bonkers. The enactment of a constitutional rule of disqualification from office does not remotely suggest a supersession or repeal of criminal-law punishment for treason. And if it did it would have the perverse effect of leaving Confederates who had not previously

[150] See infra, Part III.
[151] 11 F. Cas. at 25 (emphasis added).
[152] Id. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

taken a constitutional oath subject to the death penalty, while previous office holders avoided all criminal punishment except the officeholding ban.[153]

So why did Chase bring it up? Who were these "enlightened jurists" who imagined such a thing? The answer is . . . Chase himself! He had asserted precisely this wacky construction of Section Three's effect on the criminal penalty for treason—and quietly suggested the argument to defense counsel—in the federal criminal treason prosecution of Jefferson Davis just two years earlier.[154] Even Davis's lawyers had been puzzled by the argument, and wondered if it was some sort of trick, and it seems likely that Chase had complex political motivations in proposing it at the time.[155] This argument was tendentious then, and weirdly irrelevant in Griffin's Case. But it is a helpful reminder that Chief Justice Chase was not shooting straight in his applications of Section Three.

d. The argument from the Section Five enforcement power

Having flailed to avoid the natural reading of Section Three, Chase finally offered his alternative, "reasonable construction":

> For in the very nature of things, it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate. To accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcement of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable; and these can only be provided by Congress. Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.' [sic] … The fifth section qualifies the third to the same extent as it would if the whole amendment consisted of these two sections.[156]

Section Five "qualifies" Section Three. Of course, this proves too much. Taken seriously, it would suggest that Section Five likewise "qualifies" Section One and renders its commands—birthright citizenship, privileges or immunities, due process, and equal protection—inoperative until enforced by congressional legislation. It would imply that Section One had no self-executing legal effect, which has never been the law. It also proves too little. It is true, perhaps, that carrying a legal prohibition into

---

[153] See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 92, 95 (C.C.D. Va. 1867).
[154] Id. See Magliocca. Amnesty, supra note 5, at 100-102; Cynthia Nicoletti, Secession on Trial: The Treason Prosecution of Jefferson Davis 293-300 (2017).
[155] Nicoletti suggests—and she is not making this up—that either Chase was gunning for the Democratic nomination for President, or that this was a bank shot to get southern whites to accept the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, by arranging for the Amendment to benefit them. Id. at 293-296.
[156] 11 F. Cas. at 26.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

practical effect in actual situations frequently will involve, necessarily, actions by persons and institutions charged with applying that prohibition as law in the course of performing their assigned duties. But as noted above there is no reason why "proceedings" and "decisions" and "enforcement" with respect to Section Three's commands may not be conducted and carried out by these various state and federal actors, exercising their usual authority with respect to such matters.[157] It is simply not true that "these can only be provided by Congress." Congress can provide them. But so can many others. Indeed, that is just what Judge Underwood was trying to accomplish in Griffin's Case, until Chase stopped him.

Chase's tendentious construction of Section Three has gone on to a surprisingly serious career as a precedent. But it simply does not hold up as an original matter. But that is not even the weirdest thing about Griffin's Case.

3. Griffin's Self-Defeating and Highly Irregular Dictum

Chase concluded his discussion of Section Three this way: "After the most careful consideration, therefore, I find myself constrained to the conclusion that Hugh W. Sheffey had not been removed from the office of judge at the time of the trial and sentence of the petitioner; and that the sentence of the circuit court of Rockbridge county was lawful."[158]

By Chase's logic, such as it was, that should have been the final line of his opinion. But strangely, Chase was not actually done. He then launched into the weirdest part of his opinion, a sort of half-dictum, half-advisory opinion that cast further doubt on all that had come before:

> In this view of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine the question relating to the effect of the sentence of a judge de facto, exercising the office with the color, but without the substance of right. It is proper to say, however, that I should have no difficulty in sustaining the custody of the sheriff under sentence of a court held by such a judge. . . .
>
> This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term, with reference to this and kindred cases in this district, and I am authorized to say that they unanimously concur in [157] Magliocca also suggests that in the specific situation in Griffin's Case, state law may have been "unavailable for enforcement" of Section Three because "Virginia was an unreconstructed state and thus lacked the ordinary powers of a state" and "because Virginia did not yet recognize the Fourteenth Amendment's legitimacy" – in contrast with states such as North Carolina. Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 10 n.30. We are not sure whether this is giving Chase too much credit or not, but regardless, these points would obviously not hold today, where state law is fully available in every state of the union.

[158] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> the opinion that a person convicted by a judge de facto acting under color of office, though not de jure, and detained in custody in pursuance of his sentence, can not be properly discharged upon habeas corpus.[159]

What is going on here? Chase describes an alternate ground for the case—"a judge de facto acting under color of office," which we would now call the "de facto officer doctrine"—explains that it is unnecessary to decide it, but then also explains that he would "have no difficulty" resolving the case on that alternate ground, and also that the rest of the Supreme Court agrees with him. It is hard to make sense of this part of Chase's opinion, but the more one digs in to it the more dubious the whole opinion becomes.

First of all, notice that what Chase says here fatally undercuts his earlier arguments about Section Three. The heart of Chase's argument was that a self-executing Section Three would have calamitous consequences that could not possibly have been intended. But here Chase says that even an illegally appointed officer can be a "de facto" officer whose acts are treated as valid for purposes of a habeas claim. If Chase believed this claim about the de facto officer doctrine, then his earlier claim about the consequences was overblown. The de facto officer doctrine would limit or eliminate the supposedly calamitous consequences and allow Section Three to be given its more natural interpretation in other situations. On its own terms, then, this dictum is colossally self-defeating.[160]

Indeed, if Chase's extensive dictum about Section Three made it "unnecessary" to resolve the de facto officer doctrine, the same was equally true in reverse. Accepting Chase's conclusion about the de facto officer doctrine would have made his erroneous disquisition on Section Three completely unnecessary. The criticisms sometimes levelled against the chief justices who wrote the famous (or infamous) opinions in Marbury v. Madison, and Dred Scott v. Sandford, for having reached out to decide, gratuitously, unnecessarily, and improperly, grand questions of constitutional law,[161] fall far more heavily upon the head of Chief Justice Chase for his opinion in Griffin's Case.

Even stranger, Chase represented that the full Supreme Court unanimously agreed with him that on the de facto officer question. "This subject received the consideration of the judges of the supreme court at the last term," Chase asserted, "with

---

[159] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[160] Accord, Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 11 n.25.

[161] See, e.g., Letter from Thomas Jefferson to William Johnson (June 12, 1823) ("This practice of Judge Marshall, of travelling out of his case to prescribe what the law would be in a moot case not before the court, is very irregular and very censurable.") https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Jefferson/98-01-02-3562; Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Worst Constitutional Decision of All Time, 78 Notre Dame L. Rev. 995, 1011-12 & n.39 (2003); Baude, Judgment Power, 96 Geo. L.J. 1807, 1823-24 (2008).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reference to this and kindred cases in this district."[162] The full Court had apparently decided the de facto officer question, in secret, without having announced the fact in any case decision or written opinion,[163] in some form of advisory preemptive appellate jurisdiction!?

To be sure, judicial norms were looser back then, but the whole thing was highly irregular even by the standards of the day. Charles Fairman, whose account defends the whole affair as an urgent workaround to stop Judge Underwood, nonetheless acknowledges that "[i]t was most unusual to hear a Justice on circuit declare that he was authorized to announce the opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court on a matter pending in the Circuit Court."[164] Fairman further acknowledges technical problems with this maneuver, because the only issue in front of the full Court was an original writ of prohibition in Ex Parte State of Virginia, where the Court had granted a stay despite manifest procedural flaws.[165] Somehow the Court's non-ruling in a dubious vehicle became a second-hand advisory opinion on a legal question of great importance. The criticisms levelled today at the shenanigans allegedly perpetrated on the Supreme Court's "shadow docket,"[166] fall much more heavily and justifiably on the heads of the Reconstruction justices.

And to return to this point once more, even if we accept this whole problematic advisory opinion, it simultaneously undermines the other part of Chase's decision—his interpretation of Section Three. As Chase described it, there were two alternative ways to resolve the case—one massive constitutional question, and the other a more modest procedural question. Chase claimed that the whole Supreme Court had authorized him to issue a secondhand advisory opinion on the procedural question, an opinion adequate to resolve the Judge Underwood situation. But Chase ignored his colleagues' apparent preference and resolved the case on massive constitutional grounds instead—grounds that he did not claim were endorsed by the rest of the Court. Is there any justification for his doing so other than a personal power grab?

All of this is without taking a view on the merits of the de facto officer question. This, we think, is not as obvious as Chase (and apparently his colleagues) made it out

---

[162] 11 F. Cas. at 27.

[163] The Court's one recorded public statement on the matter was a statement from Justice Nelson in the original writ of prohibition case, Ex Parte State of Virginia, that Chief Justice Chase had "informed the court that before the pending motion for prohibition was made, he signified to the district judge his dissent" and that Chase was going to "direct that this division of opinion . . . be certified to this court." Ex parte State of Virginia No. 11, 1868 WL 10951, 19 L. Ed. 153 (1868); Fairman, supra note 126, at 606. That statement did not state the Court's view on the division, and seemed to anticipate that the Justices would deliberate on the issue later in the more ordinary course – not deputize the Chief Justice to go deliver some secret verdict in their stead.

[164] Fairman, supra note 126, at 607.

[165] Id.

[166] Stephen Vladeck, The Shadow Docket: How the Supreme Court Uses Stealth Rulings to Amass Power and Undermine the Republic (2023); William Baude, Foreword: The Supreme Court's Shadow Docket, 9 N.Y.U. J. L. & Lib. 1 (2015).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to be. True, American and English history was full of many statements about the valid acts of "de facto" officers and even specifically judges.[167] But many of these statements could not be taken to their logical extreme in our constitutional system, and indeed, at the founding the Supreme Court had refused to accept the actions of several de facto judges in the saga surrounding Hayburn's Case.[168]

How to reconcile these principles is a difficult question. One possibility, stated in some of the cases, is that an unlawful, but de facto, officer's acts can be questioned directly, and on direct review, but not "collaterally."[169] On this possibility, maybe the de facto officer doctrine was a defense to claims like habeas—the procedural vehicle in Griffin's Case—because habeas was a collateral attack.[170] Habeas could not be used as a substitute for a writ of error, where the challenge would have been properly raised.

But another possibility is that the de facto officer doctrine protects only technical and ordinary legal defects in an officer's appointment, not fundamental inability to exercise power, as when that power is forbidden by the Constitution.[171] On this possibility, Judge Sheffey's acts were inherently void, and thus everything he did fell outside of his court's jurisdiction.[172] The de facto officer arguments in Griffin's Case—and thus the correct legal fate of Caesar Griffin—turn on these technicalities.[173] Indeed, these technicalities were argued by the parties and they were the main subject

---

[167] For many citations, see Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 18-21 (argument of counsel). For more, see also Reply and Response Brief for the United States, Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius (Nos. 18-1334, 18-1475, 18-1496, 18-1514, 18-15121) at 27-47; and Calcutt v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 37 F.4th 293, 342-45 (6th Cir. 2022) (Murphy, J., dissenting).

[168] Baude, Severability, supra note 66, at 12 (discussing Yale Todd).

[169] For statements like this, see Ball v. United States, 140 U.S. 118, 128-129 (1891) ("was judge de facto if not de jure, and his acts as such are not open to collateral attack."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, 63 Colum. L. Rev. 909, 910, 919 (1963); but see id. at 910 & n. 9 (suggesting that a suit is collateral whenever the officer "is not a party," including on "writ of error").

[170] All three cases cited by Chase in Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 27, can be characterized this way. Taylor v. Skrine, 5 S.C.L. 516, 3 Brev. 516 (1815) deals with a writ of execution and observes that "no objections were made to his authority at the time the decree was given." State v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521 (1863) relies entirely on In re Boyle 9 Wis. 264 (1859) which is a habeas case holding that the "right to hold the offices cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding of this kind," id. at 267. And People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184., 187 (1860) distinguishes a "direct proceeding" from one where the doctrine applied.

[171] For statements like this, see McDowell v. United States, 159 U.S. 596, 598 (1895) ("presents a mere matter of statutory construction . . . . It involves no trespass upon the executive power of appointment."); see also Note, The De Facto Officer Doctrine, at 918 (discussing Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530 (1962)).

[172] But see In re Boyle, cited supra note 170 (distinguishing "the jurisdiction of the court, which may always be inquired into; it is an inquiry into the right of the judge to hold his office, which is a question entirely distinct from that of the jurisdiction of the court over the offence").

[173] In the Supreme Court's most recent de facto officer doctrine case, Ryder v. United States, 515 U.S. 177 (1995), it split the difference, holding the doctrine inapplicable because the case was on direct

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Judge Underwood's opinion below.[174] Chief Justice Chase could have turned his considerable powers to them, had he not been busy knee-capping the Fourteenth Amendment instead.

* * *

There is little to be said in defense of Griffin's Case, but much to be learned from it. The very weakness of its arguments; the obviously result-oriented nature of its legal analysis; and the inconsistency of its conclusion with Section Three's language, end up confirming the core conclusion in this section: Section Three's disqualification of designated persons from office is a self-executing constitutional command that requires nothing more to have immediate legal force.

III. Section Three Supersedes, Qualifies, or Satisfies Prior Constitutional Provisions

Our third proposition is logically and methodologically straightforward but perhaps unsettling in some of its implications: Section Three trumps the earlier parts of the Constitution—to the extent there is a true conflict between them.

As noted above, one of Chief Justice Chase's arguments against enforcing Section Three was that it conflicted (he thought) with prior constitutional norms—of due process, prospectivity, fairness, and so on.[175] Even for those who do not put the claim in so many words, we suspect that they might share a similar intuition—there is something about Section Three, taken seriously, that seems harsh, unforgiving, undemocratic, unAmerican (?), even . . . unconstitutional(!?). If so, it might seem to follow that somebody (judges?) should tame Section Three.

This is an understandable instinct. But it is wrong: dead wrong. We think the conflict with prior constitutional rules is overstated—more feel than real. But to the extent the conflict is real, Section Three wins the face-off.

Constitutional amendments change the Constitution. It thus should be unsurprising—indeed, it is in the very nature of constitutional amendments—that such new provisions, when added to the Constitution, supersede, displace, qualify, adjust, correct, or simply must be considered to satisfy earlier constitutional rules, to the extent of any actual conflict between them. Simply put: a constitutional amendment review and the challenge was constitutional. In the more recent case of Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico v. Aurelius, 140 S. Ct. 1649, 1666 (2020), it avoided the issue because it found the appointments lawful.

---

[174] See Opinion of Judge Underwood, supra note 125, at 463-466.

[175] See supra Part III.C.2.c.; see also Ginsburg, Huq, & Landau, supra note 118, at 18 (suggesting that a self-executing interpretation, "while in harmony with the original operation of Section 3, raises due process and perhaps bill of attainder concerns" and for that reason an "alternative, more plausible construction gives Congress authority to determine how Section 3 is enforced").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

supersedes prior law precisely to the extent that it departs from the prior rules. This general maxim of interpretation applies to Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment the same as it applies to any other constitutional amendment provision. If the original textual meaning of Section Three's terms, understood in their natural sense and accounting for any terms of art or specialized usages of words, departs from or alters prior constitutional understandings, that new constitutional language must be given full effect and priority over earlier provisions.

These basic principles of conflicting legal provisions were astutely captured by Alexander Hamilton, writing as Publius in The Federalist Number 78. "It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression," Hamilton wrote. When this occurs, the courts must determine the "meaning and operation" of the two provisions.

Hamilton articulated two principles for doing so, which work as a complementary pair. "So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done"—there's the first of the pair, but Hamilton's sentence does not end there, but instead pauses only ever-so-briefly, with a semi-colon, before proceeding to the second rule of the pair: "where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first." This was, Hamilton continued, "a mere rule of construction," but it was an appropriate one, "consonant to truth and propriety," consistently recognized by courts as interpreters of law: that, as "between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference."[176]

Hamilton went on, more famously, to explain that a different interpretive principle governed the interfering acts of a superior and a subordinate authority—and proceeded to derive the proposition customarily called "judicial review."[177] But that is not the interpretive question here. Here, the key point is precisely Hamilton's lead-in proposition: that, as between "interfering" acts of equal legal stature—the paradigm being two statutes, adopted by the same legislature, at different times—the last in time prevails to the extent of any true, irreconcilable conflict. As with statutes adopted by the same legislative authority at different times, so with constitutional provisions adopted by the same authority at different times and possessing the same

---

[176] See The Federalist No. 78 (I. Kramnick ed. 1987) at 439 (Hamilton). These rules were well-established in American and English law. Caleb Nelson, Preemption, 86 Va. L. Rev. 225, 235-244 (2000)

[177] See The Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439-440 (Hamilton) ("But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

legal status: By the terms of Article V, constitutional amendments are "valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution," when adopted.[178] Thus, where We, the People, have adopted a new constitutional text "interfering" with or departing from prior constitutional provisions, the last-in-time enacted prevails to the extent of any conflict. That is the interpretive principle that governs the relationship between new constitutional language and old language from which it departs.

Actual constitutional examples of these principles abound. The entire Bill of Rights in a sense qualifies, or limits, the original Constitution's grant of enumerated powers—to the extent of a conflict between those powers and the subsequently enumerated rights.[179] Likewise, the Eleventh Amendment qualifies Article III's extension of the federal judicial power to various cases and controversies. To the extent the Eleventh Amendment changes what Article III may originally have provided, the amendment supersedes that prior law.[180]

Much of the time, new amendments can be harmonized with what came before them. Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment's grant of "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article"[181] does not preempt, for example, the Due Process Clause or the Cruel or Unusual Punishments Clause. It does not allow Congress to punish civil rights violations through summary tortures without trial. Similarly, Section Five does not preempt the Veto Clause; it can and should be read together with Article I, to require "appropriate legislation" to go through the preexisting lawmaking process.[182] A new amendment does not ignore the legal system that it amends.

On the other hand, other parts of the Reconstruction Amendments did conflict sharply with prior constitutional norms, and they displaced them precisely to that extent. Consider the Thirteenth Amendment's ban on slavery—a dramatic and particularly obvious illustration of the point that new constitutional language supersedes and repudiates old constitutional language, to the extent of any conflict. The Thirteenth Amendment's abolition of slavery implicitly but necessarily overrides and extinguishes the Fugitive Slave Clause and any other provision of the original Constitution that protected the institution of slavery to the full logical extent of inconsistency with the amendment's flat ban. Similarly, Section Two of the Fourteenth Amendment supersedes and displaces the Constitution's original apportionment

---

[178] U.S. Const. art. V.

[179] On the relationship between rights and powers, see William Baude, Rethinking the Federal Eminent Domain Power, 122 Yale L.J. 1738, 1821-1822 (2013); Jud Campbell, The Invention of First Amendment Federalism, 97 Tex. L. Rev. 517, 561-67 (2019).

[180] Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 624-25; cf. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 21 (1890) (Harlan, J., concurring).

[181] U.S. Const. amdt XIV, sec. 5.

[182] See William Baude, Sovereign Immunity and the Constitutional Text, 103 Va. L. Rev. 1, 19 (2017) (offering the examples in this paragraph).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

rules including the notorious Three-fifths Clause.[183] Because the two rules conflict in substance, the amendment prevails over the Constitution's original language.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is in the same family. In most respects, Section Three can be easily harmonized with other parts of the Constitution, such as Article I's Speech or Debate Clause, Article I and II's impeachment provisions, Article II's process of presidential selection, Article III's requirement of a case or controversy, and so on. As we have discussed, Section Three's new constitutional qualification for office is enforced in the same way as other constitutional qualifications for office, and is easily reconciled with existing constitutional rules.

But there are a few constitutional provisions that have been alleged to conflict with Section Three. If and when this is the case, just as any later-enacted constitutional provision supersedes or modifies an earlier-enacted constitutional provisions with which the new provision conflicts, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment logically qualifies and, where the language so compels the conclusion, overrides prior constitutional rules.[184]

Thus, we think all this follows: To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides any limitations otherwise imposed by the Bill of Attainder Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three also overrides limitations imposed by the Ex post Facto Clause. To the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three likewise overrides—or simply satisfies—prior constitutional requirements of due process of law.

Finally—and this example might present more difficult questions—to the extent of any inconsistency between them, Section Three overrides, supersedes, or satisfies the free speech principles reflected in the First Amendment. That is: Whatever the [183] See U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2; U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 3. By itself, the Thirteenth Amendment also already rendered the Three-fifths Clause a null set. Section Two then dealt with the injustice of letting the South claim a massive increase in political power for its disenfranchised black population.

---

[184] Indeed, for what it is worth, the legislative history supports this conclusion as well. Opponents of Section Three characterized it as directly imposing retroactive punishment, thus contradicting principles of due process and principles against bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. at 2915 (Sen. Doolittle) (complaining that Section Three was an "ex post facto provision, a bill of attainder"); id. at 2890 (Sen. Cowen) (bill of attainder); id. at App 241 (Sen. Davis) (Section Three "is in the nature of both a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law"); id. at 2940 (Sen. Hendricks) (ex post facto); id. at 2916; see also id. at 2467 (Rep. Boyer) (criticizing earlier version of Section Three as "a bill of attainder or ex post facto law"). These charges were generally premised on the view – with which proponents of the amendment evidently agreed, see id. at 3036 (Sen. Henderson) – that Section Three would preempt these earlier rules to the extent of a direct conflict. Though at one point Senator Davis did make the wild suggestion that Section Three might itself exceed Congress's power to propose amendments to the Constitution. Id. at App. 241 ("The framers of the Constitution did not intend to invest, and have not in fact conferred on Congress the power to initiate alterations of it which would revolutionize the Government formed by it"); see also id. at 3146. See also Graber, supra note 12, at 26-31, 36-37 (documenting this history).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

correct meaning of Section Three as applied to conspiracies, attempts, incitements, and advocacy that meet the description of "engag[ing] in insurrection or rebellion" or of giving of "aid or comfort" to enemies of the constitutional government of the United States, the constitutional meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment modifies or qualifies what otherwise might have been thought the dictates of the First Amendment.

In the end, we think that these various prior provisions can mostly be read harmoniously with Section Three. Reason and common sense suggest they should be read consistently with one another to the extent fairly possible; and it is, for the most part, fairly possible to do so. But to the legitimate extent of any conflict or tension, Section Three controls over the Bill of Attainder Clause, the Ex Post Facto Clause, the Due Process Clause, and the First Amendment.

The first three are easy.

A. Bills of Attainder

A bill of attainder is the legislative infliction of punishment on specific people without a trial.[185] It is a violation of both the separation of powers and individual rights because it short-circuits the normal adjudication of guilt or innocence. But Section Three is neither a bill nor an attainder. It is not a "bill"—that is, an enactment of the legislature. Rather, it is an enactment of The People as supreme constitutional law. And it is not an "attainder" either—in that it is not at all clear that it inflicts punishment, because disqualification from office is not necessarily or exclusively a form of punishment. For instance, the Twenty-second Amendment is surely not inflicting a "punishment" when it precludes the President from running for a third term.[186] Moreover, Section Three does not inflict it on specified persons or groups, but rather on anybody who has committed a described course of conduct.

To be sure, Supreme Court precedent has read the Bill of Attainder Clauses more broadly, both in a pair of 20th-century "red scare" cases[187] and perhaps more relevantly in a pair of immediate post-Civil War-era loyalty cases: In Cummings v. Missouri[188] and Ex Parte Garland,[189] the Supreme Court invalidated state and federal oath requirements that required an "Ironclad Oath" from anybody holding a range of positions, both public and private. That oath was really a past-loyalty-requirement, requiring people to swear that they had not supported the confederacy or [185] See generally Anthony Dick, The Substance of Punishment Under the Bill of Attainder Clause, 63 Stan. L. Rev. 1177 (2011).

[186] U.S. Const. amdt. XXII. But see Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. 277, 320 (1866) ("Disqualification from office many be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment.").
[187] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437 (1965); United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303 (1946).
[188] 71 U.S. 277 (1866).
[189] 71 U.S. 333 (1866).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the like.[190] The Court concluded that these requirements were effectively bills of attainder—and also ex post facto laws—and held them unconstitutional.

Even if one takes these precedents at face value it does not follow that Section Three would similarly be a bill of attainder. First, the "Ironclad Oath" laws had a broader scope than Section Three: Garland dealt with bar membership, and concluded that "exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct."[191] Similarly, the plaintiff in Cummings was a Catholic priest forbidden from preaching.[192] Neither case dealt with a more focused exclusion from constitutional office. Indeed, the majority opinion emphasized this fact, explicitly noting that neither case involved qualifications for public office.[193] Second, because both cases focused on the retroactive effect of the laws,[194] neither case's reasoning would seem applicable to Section Three in post-Civil-War insurrections and rebellions—which of course are the only insurrections and rebellions to which Section Three still applies.[195]

And in any event we doubt that one should take these precedents at face value. First of all, if we had to take sides, we might well be inclined to say that Garland at least may have been wrong, for reasons stated in dissent by Justice Miller (joined by three other justices, including, perhaps somewhat ironically given his later position in Griffin, Chief Justice Chase).[196] Second, and more fundamentally, if constitutional amendments can change the Constitution, a fortiori they can change judicial interpretations (and misinterpretations) of the Constitution. That is of course what Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment famously did with respect to Dred Scott, what the Eleventh Amendment did with respect to Chisholm, and so on.[197] In short, the Court's interpretation of the Bill of Attainder Clause was a stretch, and regardless, it does not stretch far enough to change or limit the meaning of Section Three.

B. Ex Post Facto Laws

---

[190] For much more detailed discussion of the federal "Ironclad Oath" see infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[191] Garland, 71 U.S. at 377.
[192] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 319.
[193] Garland, 71 U.S. at 378.
[194] Cummings, 71 U.S. at 327 ("They are aimed at past acts, and not future acts."); Garland, at 377 ("In the exclusion which the statute adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed").
[195] See supra Part I.B.
[196] Garland, 71 U.S. at 382. Cummings presents a trickier case, as it might involve complicating questions of state power to interfere with religious liberty and church autonomy (albeit before ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment) and an especially weak case for the relevance of past loyalty to engaging in religious occupation.
[197] For a somewhat lighthearted explication of this principle – and a serious treatment of certain of its implications, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, Can a Constitutional Amendment Overrule a Supreme Court Decision? 24 Const. Comm. 285 (2007).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Article I also forbids both the state and federal governments from enacting an "Ex Post Facto" law.[198] An ex post facto law is generally thought to mean a legislative enactment that makes a past act criminal even though it was lawful at the time it was done. Once again, Section Three does not meet this description, being neither a legislative enactment (but rather a new constitutional provision) nor a legislative enactment defining a criminal offense.[199] True, as applied to actions done before 1868, Section Three has retroactive (non-criminal) constitutional legal effect. But as applied to actions done after 1868, the idea that Section Three might depart even from the "spirit" of the ban on ex post facto laws makes precious little sense.

So Section Three no longer produces any conflict—if it ever did—with the Ex Post Facto Clauses or with any Ex Post Facto Spirit that might be supposed to lurk behind them. And even if it did, Section Three would supersede both prior law and lurking spirit.

Indeed, we have this on especially good authority, as this very question has been asked and answered in the past. The Eleventh Amendment, as noted above, had the effect of cutting off jurisdiction previously recognized by Chisholm v. Georgia's interpretation of Article III. In Hollingsworth v. Virginia, the Court then confronted the question whether the Amendment was retroactive, cutting off suits pending when the Amendment became law. The plaintiffs argued in the U.S. Supreme Court against retroactivity, because "[t]he spirit of the constitution," forbade "the mischief of an ex post facto Constitution."[200] Indeed, this argument mirrored precisely the arguments for narrow construction we have seen above: "It is true, that an amendment to the Constitution cannot be controuled by those provisions; and if the words were explicit and positive, to produce the retrospective effect contended for, they must prevail. But the words are doubtful; and, therefore, they ought to be so construed, as to conform to the general principle of the Constitution."[201] But the Supreme Court disagreed emphatically—unanimously ruling the very next day that the Amendment applied retroactively, by necessary implication.[202] As with the Eleventh, so too for the Fourteenth: Had the Supreme Court ever been called upon to consider the question, the right answer surely is that the Fourteenth Amendment's rules immediately governed upon ratification and applied "retroactively" to prior actions covered by the revised constitutional rules.

---

[198] U.S. Const. art. I, §§9 & 10.

[199] To be sure, there are revisionist arguments that the Ex Post Facto clause itself extends to retroactive civil laws too. See Eastern Enterprises v. Apfel, 524 U.S. 498, 538-39 (1998) (Thomas, J., concurring). And as with bills of attainder, in the wake of the Civil War the Supreme Court held that Ironclad Oath requirements were ex post facto laws as well. Cummings, 71 U.S. at 326-332; Garland, 71 U.S. at 377-368. But as discussed in the text, even these principles do not ensnare Section Three going forward, on a non-ex-post-facto basis

[200] 3 U.S. at 378-80 (arguments of counsel).

[201] Id.

[202] Id. at 382. See Baude & Sachs, Eleventh Amendment, supra note 9, at 626-627.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. Due Process of Law

The Constitution also forbids the deprivation of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law," which in many circumstances requires judicial process. Does Section Three's self-executing legal disqualification from office present any incompatibility with this requirement? Again, we think the two sets of provisions readily reconciled by giving the Due Process Clause no more than its due.

First of all, it is far from clear that the right to hold public office is a form of life, liberty, or property. It is a public privilege, a public trust, to be vested with the power of the people. And though it is a closer case, the same thing may be true even for those who already hold office at the moment that Section Three disqualifies them. Due process protects private vested rights from public deprivation. It does not protect public rights.[203] It has been argued that in England, offices were understood as vested rights of property, and occasionally early American courts said so as well.[204] But that was not the better rule in America. Treating offices as property did not fit well with republican principles,[205] and by 1900 the Supreme Court could rightly state: "The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property as such."[206]

In any event, even if it were otherwise, and those who held offices were deprived of property by Section Three, what would follow? Nothing. Section Three would prevail. Consider once again the Thirteenth Amendment, which did directly interfere with private property rights—the right recognized in southern states to hold other humans in bondage. The Thirteenth Amendment instantly, self-executingly, eliminated those property rights, due process notwithstanding.[207] So too would Section Three.

Principles of due process might also animate a different objection—that imposing such harsh consequences on individual wrongdoing simply ought to involve fair notice and an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps this instinct motivates the argument against self-execution, as in Griffin's Case. But in our view this objection is sufficiently answered by the terms of Section Three itself. Perhaps the reason that Section

---

[203] Caleb Nelson, Adjudication in the Political Branches, 107 Colum. L. Rev. 559, 565-593 (2007); William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III, 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1540-1547 (2020).

[204] Jed Shugerman, Freehold Offices vs. "Despotic Displacement": Why "Executive Power" Did Not Include Removal (July 25, 2023), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4521119; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 NC 1 (1833).

[205] See Jane Manners & Lev Menand, The Three Permissions, 121 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 20 (2021) ("In revolutionary America, the idea of offices as property was roundly rejected"); Saikrishna Prakash, Removal and Tenure in Office, 92 Va. L. Rev. 1779, 1824 n. 157 (2006) ("A more republican conception of government meant a more republican conception of offices.").

[206] Taylor & Marshall v. Beckham, 178 U.S. 548 (1900).

[207] See supra notes 48-50 and accompanying text.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three only applies to holding office and not voting, and only applies to prior office-holders, who have previously sworn a constitutional oath—indeed, these limitations are the only ways in which Section Three's scope was appreciably narrowed during the drafting process—is that we can expect once and future officials and oath-takers to be on particularly strong notice about the basic rules of the constitutional order. Section Three does not ensnare garden-variety crime or miscreance. It ensnares offenses against the authority of the system by those who have been and seek to be part of that system.

Similarly, so long as Section Three is applied through the established and customary procedures for determining qualifications for office, many due process objections would seem to disappear. As discussed above, in many scenarios, Section Three's disqualification would be enforced through administrative hearings, quo warranto suits, state and federal judicial review, congressional adjudications, and so on. Anybody who wishes to argue that his conduct is not covered by the substantive sweep of Section Three is free to litigate that point through all relevant channels.[208] Section Three is therefore not in conflict with any requirements of fair notice or an opportunity to be heard.

D. The Ominous Question: Section Three and the First Amendment

With respect to the Constitution's provisions on bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, and due process, the harmonization of Section Three with prior constitutional law is easy and relatively unproblematic. There is little conflict between the two provisions, and to the extent there is, Section Three is plain enough that it must prevail. The interaction of Section Three with the First Amendment presents a more interesting, even troubling, question. Does Section Three partially revoke the right to political dissent?

This question begets more questions: What exactly is the relationship between Section Three's language imposing disqualification for having "engaged in insurrection or rebellion" and the First Amendment's protections of the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and petition? Likewise, what is the relationship between the disqualification for having given "aid or comfort" to enemies of the United States and the First Amendment? As we have argued, Section Three in principle can supersede, qualify, or modify (or be deemed to "satisfy") prior constitutional requirements, rendering the provisions of the First Amendment essentially without independent constitutional force as limitations on the scope of Section Three. But how might the prior and important constitutional principles of the First Amendment affect the proper understanding of Section Three's meaning and scope? What exactly does Section Three effectuate, in relation to the First Amendment? Where do the usual protections of the First Amendment leave off and the legal disabilities imposed by Section Three take over, as a matter of the proper understanding of Section Three?

---

[208] See generally supra Part II.B.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There are, crudely, three possible ways of describing the relationship. The first is to find Section Three (implicitly) limited by the First Amendment. The second is, in contrast, to view Section Three as properly understood as carving out a zone of exception to, supersession of, or satisfaction of First Amendment principles. The third, which we believe correct, lies somewhere in the middle: Section Three should be construed, to the extent fairly possible, consistently with the free speech principles memorialized in the First Amendment. But to the extent of a true conflict between them, Section Three must control.

To consider a not-so-hypothetical example, suppose that an officeholder covered by Section Three gives a speech to an assembled crowd encouraging them to engage in rebellious or insurrectionary conduct. (And suppose further that the crowd accepts the encouragement, rebelling against members of Congress carrying out a constitutional duty at the seat of government.) We will return to this example[209] but for now we consider: how do we judge such an example? Is this only a question of the constitutional definition of "engage in insurrection" and "aid or comfort"—of whether an encouraging speech to an insurrectionary crowd is covered by those terms? Or is it also a question of whether that speech is protected by freedom of speech, and under modern doctrine, that would mean the very stringent test of Brandenburg v. Ohio?[210] Or is it somehow both?

To a large extent, we think the conflicts between Section Three and free speech can be minimized—as Hamilton would counsel.[211] First, even under modern doctrine, free speech does not protect several categories of speech that overlap with Section Three. Second, Section Three's terms will not often reach pure speech.

To elaborate on the first point: Modern First Amendment doctrine leaves the government free to punish actual conspiracy and solicitation, direct incitement, and material support of unlawful activities such as insurrection, rebellion, and treason. (There are serious questions about how much modern First Amendment doctrine has exceeded the original protections of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, which we will largely put aside, but the point is that these exceptions are recognized even on today's liberal understandings.[212])

---

[209] See infra Part IV.C.2.

[210] 395 U.S. 444 (1969).

[211] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176 ("So far as they can, by fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done.").

[212] For what it is worth, we do not in general dispute many aspects of modern First Amendment doctrine, which we believe often captures the original meaning of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, as applied to modern circumstances. See generally Michael Stokes Paulsen, Scouts, Families, and Schools, 85 Minn. L. Rev. 1917, 1919-1922 (2001). To get a sense of how one might construct a truly marvelous proof of this, which this margin is too narrow to contain, see for starters, Adam Griffin, First Amendment Originalism: The Original Law and A Theory of Legal Change as Applied to The Freedom of Speech and of The Press, 17 First Amend. L. Rev. 91 (2019); Jud Campbell, Natural Rights

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The First Amendment has long been held not to protect conspiracy to commit a crime or direct solicitation of unlawful activity, because this is "speech integral to criminal conduct."[213] And while one must use some caution about unduly expanding this category, conspiracy and solicitation are at its core.[214] Thus, efforts to steal elections, to pressure state officials to manufacture votes, to pressure other officials (like the Vice President) to violate their constitutional duties in service of a constitutional coup—would all be unprotected by the First Amendment. To the extent those efforts are swept up by Section Three, there would be no conflict.

More familiar may be the modern line of cases concerning "incitement." Over the course of the twentieth century, judicial doctrine increasingly gave greater protection to speech that could be seen as generally inciting unlawful activity, recognizing that earlier doctrine (such as the famous "clear and present danger" test) had too readily permitted suppression of disfavored political views. The modern rule, stated in Brandenburg v. Ohio in 1969, excludes from First Amendment protection only advocacy or expressive conduct (i) "directed to" (ii) triggering or inciting (iii) "imminent" lawless action (presumably including acts of insurrection or rebellion) and (iv) "likely" to produce such action.[215] That is a fairly strict standard, but not one that is impossible to satisfy. Importantly, it does leave open—even under the generous terms of modern First Amendment law—the prospect that some acts of advocacy and expression supporting insurrection or rebellion are simply unprotected by the First Amendment in any event, so that Section Three does not even need to have amended or superseded the First Amendment in order for its terms to be given their full legal effect.

The Supreme Court's relatively recent decision in Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project[216] recognized a further and more controversial limitation on subversive speech: it can be forbidden where it provides "material support" to a foreign organization engaged in or committed to terrorist violence against the nation. The Court concluded that because the "interest in combating terrorism is an urgent objective of the highest order," the Congress could forbid even speech—such as teaching and training—assisting such organizations, and even though the speech did not directly and the First Amendment, 117 Yale L. J. 246 (2017); Jud Campbell, The Emergence of Neutrality, 131 Yale L. J. 861 (2022). (We will cease further digression on this point.)

---

[213] United States v. Hansen, 599 U.S. __, at 18-19 (2023); United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 297 (2008); Giboney v. New Ice Storage, 336 U.S. 490 (1949); Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 989-993, 1007-1008 (2016).

[214] Volokh, supra note 213, at 1011-1015.

[215] 395 U.S. at 447. This standard is elaborated in Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 108-109 (1973); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. 886 (1982). Additionally, Bond v. Floyd, 385 U.S. 116 (1966) rejected the idea that there is a lower First Amendment standard of incitement when a state legislature is excluding an elected member under state law, id. at 132-135; see also Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 449 (1974) (same principle applies to ballot access).

[216] 561 U.S. 1 (2010).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

further terrorist conduct. While this decision is hedged by multiple limiting principles,[217] it illustrates another set of circumstances where the First Amendment would create no conflict with potential applications of Section Three.

In sum, while modern First Amendment doctrine is quite generous in its protection of speech, in many cases it would produce no conflict with the coverage of Section Three. We will elaborate on the second point—the scope of Section Three itself—more fully in Part IV, but for now suffice it to say that the occasions will be rare where speech alone is what qualifies one as having "engaged in insurrection" or provided "aid or comfort" to enemies.

That said, we will concede that the conflict between free speech and Section Three cannot be denied entirely. Consider the Civil War example of Clement Vallandigham, who was arrested and imprisoned by the military on the theory that "he was laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops; to encourage desertions from the army; and to leave the Rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it,"— that he was "warring upon the Military."[218] It is conceivable (though we do not prejudge the point) that Vallandigham's anti-military efforts could be covered by Section Three. And yet it is also quite plausible that his efforts would be protected by free speech.

Or for a sharper example, even more on point, consider the case of Representative-elect John Y. Brown, who was excluded from the Fortieth Congress on the grounds that he had given aid and comfort to the Confederacy by writing to the Louisville Courier promising to resist the Union army "unto the death" and stating that anybody who volunteered for the Union army "ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."[219] This exclusion was part of the backdrop of Section Three's enactment and likely the kind of thing Section Three was intended to cover. But, argues one scholar of the incident, this pre-Section Three exclusion "was entirely unconstitutional" and "plainly violative of the First Amendment."[220] If that was so before Section Three's enactment, does Section Three make it otherwise?[221]

Finally and perhaps most explosively, consider the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. Berger was denounced by members of the House for having given "aid and comfort to the enemies of this country during [217] The Court emphasized that "only material support coordinated with or under the direction of a designated foreign terrorist organization" was banned; "independent advocacy" was "not covered." Id. at 31-32. Additionally, the law only applied to foreign organizations.

---

[218] President Abraham Lincoln to Erastus Corning and others (June 12, 1863), in Abraham Lincoln, Speeches and Writings, 1859-1965, at 454, 459 (Don Fehrenbacher, ed. 1989). See infra notes 269-277 and accompanying text.

[219] See infra notes 270-278, and 343-348 and accompanying text.

[220] Lynch, supra note 5, at 197-198.

[221] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 198 ("Had Section 3 been ratified by this point, these concerns would be assuaged.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

this Great War," and excluded in part on that basis.[222] (Indeed, Berger had also been convicted and sentenced under the Espionage Act, though the charges were overturned by the Supreme Court on grounds of judicial bias.)[223] Another scholar of the incident writes that "Under a good reading of the First Amendment, Berger's speeches and writings could not have been seditious; however under the interpretation prevailing at the time, they probably were."[224] What should we make of such an incident?

In the end, in a case where free speech principles conflict with the best original understanding of "engaged in insurrection" or "aid or comfort," we think that free speech principles must give way. We stress that we do not think that all or even most disloyal speech will rise to the level of triggering Section Three's disqualifications.[225] But where it does, where "it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other," it is the more recent Fourteenth Amendment that "shall be preferred" to the earlier rule.[226]

For those (like us) who value First Amendment liberties of speech, press, assembly, religion, and the right to dissent generally, might Section Three therefore be thought a little dangerous? Might Section Three, in the wrong hands or applied improperly, be used to suppress dissent in the name of excluding insurrectionists from office? Perhaps. We do not shy away from the point. But the supposed danger of a constitutional provision is not really an argument against its meaning. And the potential abuse of a constitutional power, privilege, or disqualification is not really a good legal argument against its existence. Section Three's exclusion could be thought to pose a danger; but insurrection and rebellion are dangers too—all too real dangers, as recent events have shown. Where exactly that line is drawn by the Constitution, and the extent to which that line changes the prior rules of the First Amendment, are ultimately questions of the meaning of Section Three's general terms triggering disqualification from future office—"insurrection," "rebellion," "engaged in," "given aid or comfort to"—and of who all is included under Section Three's ban. To that set of important questions we turn next.

IV. Section Three's Substantive Disqualification is Sweeping

---

[222] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 190; Lynch, supra note 5, at 211-213; 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 52-63.
[223] Berger v. United States, 255 U.S. 22 (1921). During the initial exclusion, when Berger's conviction was on appeal, the House Committee announced "that it would not be governed by the action of the judge and jury at the Chicago trial," but would review the evidence and legal questions for itself. 6 Cannon, supra note 18, at 54. But curiously, after the convictions were reversed the House allowed Berger to sit in the sixty-eighth through seventieth Congresses. Lynch, supra note 5, at 213.
[224] Chafetz, supra note 47, at 191.
[225] In our view, for instance, the exclusion of Victor Berger went too far—not because the First Amendment makes an exception to Section Three, but because Berger's advocacy did not satisfy the original meaning of Section Three. See infra note 359.
[226] Federalist No. 78, supra note 176, at 439.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We come at last to the heart of the beast: the substance of Section Three's prohibition. We begin (in Subpart A) with the most interesting and important set of issues—the types of misconduct that trigger Section Three. What deeds (and words?) amount to having "engaged in" "insurrection" or "rebellion" against the lawful authority of the Constitution and the system of government it establishes? What acts (or words?) amount to having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" of lawful government under the Constitution?

These terms to some extent bear a range of meaning and fair construction. The events they describe are often exceptional and to some extent unique. Still, some applications will be clear and virtually indisputable, falling within the terms' core meaning—the center of the interpretive bullseye, so to speak. Such scenarios so clearly fall within Section Three that they may be said to be contained within the opposite of a safe harbor—a "sure shipwreck,"[227] to borrow Susan Morse's phrase—of unquestionably disqualifying conduct falling within the core of Section Three's meaning: for example, declaring unilateral secession from lawful constitutional government; or the taking up of arms against government (as in the waging of the Civil War). At the other end of the continuum, there will be situations that clearly lie in a safe harbor outside the legitimate range of meaning of Section Three's terms—ordinary expression of political dissent as well as even ordinary law violations. In between these markers, there is a zone of reasonable, fair construction of allowable interpretation and application in which government officials may make judgments that must be conceded to be within the range of what the Constitution permits—and where the decisions and actions of government officials exercising their constitutional powers consequently cannot be considered unlawful and thereby subject to judicial invalidation. Within that fair range of meaning, different interpreters legitimately can reach differing conclusions, all in accordance with the Constitution. We address all of these questions in subpart A.

We then turn more briefly (in subpart B) to the questions of what prior-office-holding, oath-taking categories of persons—persons who then subsequently engaged in insurrection or rebellion—are covered by Section Three's ban and (a similar but distinct question) what future offices are constitutionally barred to such persons. We conclude that Section Three's disqualification is sweeping, both in the substantive conduct that triggers such disqualification and in the office-holders and offices to which it applies. In particular, contrary to one recent revisionist view, we believe it applies to the Presidency.

Finally (in Subpart C) we will consider the attempted overthrow of the 2020 Presidential election. Did the incumbent president's willful, deliberate refusal to accept the outcome of the lawful constitutional election resulting in his defeat for re-election and, instead, his (and others') attempt to overthrow constitutional election results and install or maintain himself in office, by force, by fraud or by attempted de [227] Susan Morse, Safe Harbors, Sure Shipwrecks, 49 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1385 (2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

facto political coup d'etat against the regime of lawful constitutional government, constitute engaging in "insurrection or rebellion against the Constitution of the United States"? We think the answer is yes.

Whether called a "rebellion," an attempted coup d'etat seeking to displace lawful government authority under the Constitution, or an "insurrection," instigating, inciting and encouraging a mob to engage in acts of forcible violence directed against the ability of Congress and the Vice President to carry out their constitutional duties—and then refusing to intervene—such conduct is covered by Section Three, and is disqualifying. If those are indeed the facts concerning Donald Trump's (and others') efforts to overthrow the election—and we think they are—such conduct triggers the disqualification rule of Section Three.

Whether other federal and state officeholders—members of Congress, state legislators, past or present state and federal executive and judicial officers—engaged in conduct constituting "insurrection" or "rebellion" (including meaningful action in deliberate furtherance of an attempted coup against lawful constitutional government), or gave "aid or comfort" (approval, encouragement, support) to enemies might sometimes involve more difficult questions of fact and judgment. But they are the questions Section Three compels us to ask, and to answer. Where such evaluations and judgments have been made by actors exercising legitimate authority to make them (as discussed in Part II) and fall within the fair range of Section Three's meaning, those judgments are entitled to full legal effect.

A. Section Three's Disqualifying Conduct: "Insurrection or Rebellion"; "Engaged In"; "Aid or Comfort" to "Enemies"

What is the proper, original public meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" as used in Section Three? Of having "engaged in" such conduct? Of having given "aid or comfort" to "enemies"?

Because the terms are capacious and the evidence is sprawling, we will start by proposing our working definitions for these terms. We then show how they are largely consistent with standard sources for discerning the meaning of constitutional text: contemporaneous definitions of these terms; usage elsewhere in the Constitution; and contemporaneous public, political, and legal usage of the terms. This last category, which is especially instructive, includes usages from President Lincoln, legislation adopted by the Civil War Congress (both the 1862 "Ironclad" oath and the Second Confiscation Act), and the significant mid-Civil-War decision of the Supreme Court in The Prize Cases. We also consider, albeit in somewhat more abbreviated fashion, statutes and usages leading up to the Civil War, including the Insurrection Act of 1795 as amended, and an important series of exclusions from Congress itself, as well as the relevant legislative history of Section Three, and a few scattered post-enactment applications of Section Three itself.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Working definitions

We begin by offering working definitions of the terms insurrection and rebellion and of what might constitute "engaging in" such conduct or giving "aid or comfort" to enemies under Section Three.

Insurrection is best understood as concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect. The term "insurrection" connotes something more than mere ordinary lawbreaking. It suggests an affirmative contest with, and active resistance to, the authority of the government. It is in that sense more than just organized resistance to the laws—more than just a protest, even one involving civil disobedience. Rather, it is organized resistance to the government. Insurrection is also more than mere "protest" in that it implies some element of forcible resistance. It is something more than a mere spontaneous, disorganized "riot."[228] Insurrection suggests at least some degree of coordinated, concerted action. The term also implies something more than acts of solitary individuals: to qualify as an insurrection the acts in question must involve some form of collective action, even if not an advance plan.

At the same time, insurrection may fall short of outright rebellion—even as the terms overlap and might bleed into each other—in that an insurrection might not seek to overturn, overthrow, or displace the government itself, in whole or in part (as a rebellion does). As the Supreme Court put it in The Prize Cases, in 1863: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion."[229]

Rebellion is thus closely related to insurrection, but perhaps not quite identical in meaning. A rebellion is arguably broader in its reach than an insurrection: rebellion implies an effort to overturn or displace lawful government authority by unlawful means. (In the case of secession, or a declaration of independence, the rebellion is an effort to free those engaged in rebellion from the authority of the existing lawful government.) Rebellion is something beyond mere resistance to government authority in a particular instance or set of instances. A rebellion seeks to replace the existing regime, not just resist its law-executing authority. Rebellion involves repudiation, to some degree or another, of the regime's authority, legitimacy, or validity. It is a challenge, direct or indirect, to the regime itself. The South's attempted secession was a species of rebellion—an attempt to overturn the authority of the Constitution and government of the United States by the states asserting the right to secede. Likewise, an attempted coup d'etat is arguably also a species of rebellion—an effort to displace, replace, upend, or overthrow the existing lawful regime and substitute different authority in its stead.

---

[228] 10 Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution 1296 (Statement of Madison) ("A riot did not come within the legal definition of an insurrection").
[229] 2 Black (67 U.S.) 635, 667 (1863).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The term rebellion can also imply a competing claim to legitimacy. "Rebellion" thus seems to carry a stronger political-claim-of-right valence than does "insurrection."[230] Crucially, however, the fact that an insurrection or rebellion claims political or moral legitimacy—as the American Revolution did; indeed, as the South's secession did—does not make it any the less an insurrection or rebellion. The fact that an attempted coup d'etat, or declaration of independence, or secession, is claimed to be a "vindication" or "restoration" of rightful governmental authority—or asserted to be a pre-emptive effort to thwart some other person's or group's alleged wrongful assertion of authority—does not immunize such action from the legal characterization of rebellion against the regime. If somebody in fact participates in an attempt to overthrow the government, it makes no difference that he might think himself in the right for doing so, see himself as an agent for preserving lawful government, or view his acts and intention not as "rebellion" but restoration. Mistake of law is no defense to a coup d'etat. The South offered a variety of constitutional legal theories in defense of the supposed lawfulness of secession as an act for the vindication of its believed rights.[231] That did not make its acts of rebellion any less acts of rebellion.

As to the overlap and distinction between insurrection and rebellion our working definition is more tentative. It is possible that a rebellion is simply a special case of an insurrection, in the way that a square is a special case of a rectangle. But it is also possible that the term rebellion is not necessarily limited to regime change by

---

[230] Though it is possible that this connotation is anachronistic. See infra note 252.

[231] For important accounts and discussion of Southern arguments for the constitutional propriety and validity of secession, on a variety of asserted grounds, see James M. McPherson, Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era 234-236 (1988) (summarizing Southern constitutional and political theories); Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution 57-91 (2003) (emphasizing arguments of states' rights to interposition, nullification, and secession generally); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Lincoln and Judicial Authority, 83 Notre Dame. L. Rev. 1227, 1270-1277 (2008) (setting forth Southern leaders' constitutional arguments that Lincoln's stance against the Dred Scott decision, against judicial supremacy, and against extension of slavery violated the judicially settled constitutional rights of slaveholding persons and states); Kenneth M. Stampp, The Concept of a Perpetual Union, 65 J. Am. Hist. 5-53 (June 1978) (providing detailed history of constitutional and political arguments over the nature of Union and the validity of secession); David P. Currie, The Constitution in Congress: Descent into the Maelstrom 1829-1861, at 228-237 (2005) (discussing and evaluating the constitutional arguments for and against the validity of secession). For the case against the constitutionality of secession, see generally 2 Abraham Lincoln, Speeches & Writings, 1859-1865: Speeches, Letters, Miscellaneous Writings, Presidential Messages & Proclamations, at 217-218 (First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1861); id. at 254-258, 260-261 (Message to Congress, July 4, 1861); see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Civil War as Constitutional Interpretation, 71 U Chi. L. Rev. 691, 703-715 (2004) (reviewing Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution) (distilling and building on Lincoln's arguments); Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 303-311 (same). For further background, see generally William W. Freehling, The Road to Disunion: Secessionists at Bay 1776-1854 (1990), and for a comprehensive exposition of the Southern view, see Alexander M. Stephens, A Constitutional View of the Late War Between the States; Its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results (1867). As a clarification: we use the term "secession" here and throughout this article to refer to unilateral secession without the consent of the federal government, as in the Civil War, and do not discuss ways the federal government might lawfully consent to the independence of a state or territory.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

force—and thus may occupy some ground not covered by the word "insurrection" (which, we have suggested, must be forcible). There are such things as "bloodless coups": actions that effectively displace or upend the prior constitutional order without shots being fired, but that nonetheless are in unlawful defiance or repudiation of the existing legal order.[232]

To illustrate this hypothesized distinction between insurrection and rebellion: Imagine that the Southern attack on Fort Sumter in April 1861 had preceded any declared right to secession. The attack would have been an act of insurrection—an exercise of concerted, forcible defiance of the authority of the Union government—but not necessarily outright rebellion. Conversely, the ordinances of secession adopted by state conventions in the South in 1860 and 1861[233] preceded (mostly) any acts of actual forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws. The secession ordinances might still immediately constitute acts of "rebellion," even before any accompanying violence. In short: Sumter without secession would have still been insurrection. Secession without Sumter was already rebellion. Put the two events together—acts of forcible insurrection and declarations of avowed rebellion frequently travel in pairs (as they obviously did with the Civil War)—and it becomes difficult to distinguish "insurrection" from "rebellion." The overlap of the two terms in theory becomes complete in practice.

In the end, however, we do not wish to make too much of the ways in which the terms differ in shades of color and in their implication. The coverage of the terms overlaps substantially. Sometimes, the terms, occupying much of the same ground, seem capable of being used almost interchangeably. Indeed, the bigger picture point for understanding Section Three is that "insurrection" and "rebellion," in tandem, cover pretty much the entire terrain of large-scale unlawful resistance to government authority.

So much for our working definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion." What does it mean to have "engaged in" such conduct? We believe one has "engaged" in

---

[232] Indeed, one might characterize the process of adoption of the U.S. Constitution, replacing the regime of the Articles of Confederation, as a peaceful political coup d'etat – an act of "rebellion" if judged by the pre-existing law, but morally and politically justified by the failure of the prior regime and Lockean notions of self-governance, and subsequently legalized by its own success. See generally Paulsen & Paulsen, supra note 30, at 3-8, 17-20; Stephen E. Sachs, Originalism as a Theory of Legal Change, 38 Harv. J. L. & Pub Pol'y 818, 821, 844, 850 (2015). But cf. Akhil Reed Amar, The Words that Made Us: America's Constitutional Conversation 1760-1840, at 164-165 (2021) (emphasizing the states' retention of sovereignty under the Articles and the idea that states might thus properly exit that regime, legally, on the theory that the Articles had become a breached treaty).

[233] The seceding states adopted their secession resolutions by state "conventions," purporting to parallel the process by which the states ratified the Constitution. See McPherson, supra note 231, at 234-284 (describing secession actions of ten states that purported to secede from the Union). The secession ordinances of the South were self-consciously styled after the Declaration of Independence, which was obviously an act of formal legal rebellion.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

insurrection or rebellion when one has been actively involved in the planning or execution of intentional acts of insurrection or rebellion; or when one has knowingly provided active, meaningful, voluntary, direct support for, material assistance to, or specific encouragement of such actions. Such planning, participation, support, assistance, or encouragement may be in the form of either words or deeds, as long as the person who has "engaged in" such activities embraced the objectives of the insurrection or rebellion in question and did things that contributed in a meaningful way to advancing those objectives.[234] (There is obvious overlap here with the closely related concept of having given "aid or comfort" to the nation's enemies, which we discuss presently.)

Of course, there are also important limits to how far the concept of having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion extends. Mere passive acquiescence, resigned acceptance, silence, or inaction is not typically enough to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion. An exception to this limitation might exist where a person possesses an affirmative duty to speak or act. Further, mere abstract advocacy of, or theorizing concerning, the desirability of insurrection or rebellion, without more, is not the same as actually engaging in it. We think this is true even though the First Amendment does not formally constrain Section Three: it is simply the best understanding of Section Three's terms.

Then there is the related question of what constitutes having given "aid or comfort" to "the enemies thereof." This reads as a separate, independent ground for disqualification: Section Three is triggered by having engaged in insurrection or rebellion "or" having given aid or comfort to enemies. This language, of course, closely echoes the earlier constitutional language of the Treason Clause.[235]

In many cases, giving "aid or comfort" to enemies will be similar to the kind of conduct that counts as having "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion through intentional, active assistance. If there is a difference, it is that the term "aid or comfort" reinforces and emphasizes Section Three's coverage of indirect but material assistance. Such material assistance—possibly including expression supporting, encouraging, counseling, or promoting the enemy—might more naturally fall into Section

---

[234] This working definition of having "engaged in" wrongful activity resembles familiar common law understandings of accomplice liability in the area of criminal law, which typically resulted from the combination of (1) assistance to unlawful conduct (with "assistance" including uttering words of encouragement to, or agreeing not to interfere with, such conduct) and (2) the intention to further such unlawful conduct). Federal criminal law today is to similar effect. 18 U.S.C. § 2(a) (2012) ("Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal."). We think it is also generally supported by background mens rea principles. See William Baude & Stephen Sachs, The Law of Interpretation, 130 Harv. L. Rev. 1079, 1108 (2017). That said, the context of the Civil War also suggests one important limitation: there is no mistake-of-rebellion defense. See text accompanying infra note 425.

[235] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 ("Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.")

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Three's "aid or comfort" language, even where it might be debatable whether to characterize such conduct as directly "engag[ing] in" insurrection or rebellion.

Additionally, while Section Three uses some language paralleling that contained in the Treason Clause, Section Three is by no means limited to the constitutional crime of treason. "Insurrection" and "rebellion" are their own things, distinct from "treason." While some acts of insurrection and rebellion might also constitute treason they need not do so in order to be encompassed within Section Three. So even if "aid or comfort" in Section Three connotes the same type of assistance-and-embrace principles as "Aid and Comfort" in Article III's Treason Clause,[236] the relevant conduct to which such assistance is given might well differ. (And, as noted earlier, it is plain that Section Three requires no prior criminal-law conviction, for treason or any other defined crime, as a prerequisite for its disqualification to apply.)

Finally, aid or comfort to whom? "[T]he enemies thereof." Before the Civil War, some might have limited the term "enemies" to those owing allegiance to a foreign power,[237] but that is not plausibly true of Section Three. Rather, Section Three covers enemies both foreign and domestic. That now-familiar phrase ("enemies foreign and domestic") comes from the "Ironclad Oath," written into law in 1862, in the midst of the Civil War,[238] and it seems clear from the political context of Section Three that it likewise treats domestic enemies as enemies. Indeed, it is almost unthinkable that Confederate rebels would not have been thought "enemies" in the sense employed by the text.

What is less clear is how to define the foreign and domestic enemies covered by Section Three. The most straightforward option, which strikes us as the more likely one, is that "enemies" essentially cross-references the domestic rebels and insurrectionists just described earlier in the sentence (as well as more traditional foreign enemies, of course). On this straightforward reading, Section Three would cover a domestic officeholder who directly engages in insurrection or rebellion, or who gives aid or comfort to others who do so (or, of course, one who gives aid or comfort to foreign enemies). This straightforward reading is also consistent with the operation of another 1862 statute, the Second Confiscation Act.[239] That said, we cannot rule out another narrower possibility, that "enemies" is limited to those with whom the US are effectively at war, and thus excludes insurrections and rebellions that do not rise to the level of a civil war.[240] This would create a more complicated two-track system

---

[236] See infra note 258.
[237] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 174 (discussing United States v. Greathouse, 26 F. Cas. 18, 22 (C.C.N.D. Cal. 1863) (No. 15,254)).
[238] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.i.
[239] See infra Part IV.A.4.b.ii.
[240] See Lynch, supra note 5, at 173-178 for more discussion.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

where Section Three covers all insurrections and rebellions, as well as "aid or comfort" to a more limited set of insurrections and rebellions. While it strikes us as less likely, we cannot definitively rule it out.[241]

Our sense of the whole—of Section Three's substantive terms triggering disqualification for those who have engaged in the conduct described—is that Section Three is quite sweeping, using overlapping terms to cover several different characterizations of major collective resistance to the authority of government under the Constitution. Whether it be called "insurrection" or "rebellion"; and whether a covered individual is thought to have "engaged in" such activity or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies," Section Three's disqualification is triggered. The language is not unlimited, to be sure. But the broad and overlapping terms are not intended to be hospitable to loopholes or artful, narrow, technical evasions.

Finally, let us reiterate one consequence of Section Three's breadth and capaciousness. Because Section Three's terms possess a range of meaning, both a determinate core and a fuzzier periphery, we need a second-order rule concerning the authority of decisionmakers to act on the basis of fair interpretations of indefinite terms. We think that the general rule of our constitutional order is that political officials may take actions premised on fair interpretations of indefinite terms, and that when they do so, their actions cannot rightly be held "unconstitutional" by the courts, precisely because they fit within the fair range afforded by the Constitution. Where the Constitution admits of a range of choice, political authorities may exercise choices within that range.

This is foundational to our constitutional law.[242] It is the premise of judicial review as set forth in Marbury v. Madison, which justifies setting aside the acts of

---

[241] What is the referent of "enemies thereof"? Does "thereof" refer to enemies of the United States or enemies of the Constitution of the United States? We think this replicates the question of what "the same" refers to, earlier in the sentence, and presents the same issue of minor and seemingly inconsequential ambiguity. (Does "insurrection or rebellion against the same" refer to insurrection or rebellion against "the United States"?) On balance, we think that it probably makes little practical difference: rebellion against the United States and rebellion against the Constitution of the United States will often amount to the same thing; either one is capable of being considered an instance of the other. Whatever the answer, it should be the same for both—"against the same" and "thereof" refer to the same thing. Our best guess is that it is "the United States."

[242] See, e.g., Paulsen, Rules for Its Own, supra note 9, at 858 (arguing that where constitutional language states a general principle, "actions of government that fall within the scope of judgment or discretion admitted by the breadth with which that principle is expressed do not violate the Constitution, and are thus allowable"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, A Government of Adequate Powers, 31 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 991, 995 (2008) (arguing that "textual imprecision or generality often admits of a range of choices" and that the correct constitutional answer in such circumstances "is that the legislature must be permitted to choose from options within that range"; thus, "the more indeterminate or under-determinate the range of a constitutional provision, the broader the duty of the courts to defer to what the legislature has enacted"); Kesavan & Paulsen, Secret Drafting History, supra note 9, at 1129-30 n.54 (2003); Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Most Dangerous Branch: Executive Power to Say What the Law

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

other branches only because, and only to the extent to, they deviate from the Constitution's meaning. It is classically illustrated by the Court's reasoning in M'Culloch v. Maryland,[243] which upheld Congress's power to create the Bank of the United States because a generation of political actors had acted within the fair range of meaning of constitutionally granted powers.

And this principle means, as a practical matter, that the breadth of Section Three's broad terms cannot be ignored, or artificially limited, by judicial construction. Where those charged with responsibilities that involve applying Section Three's terms have given that language its full legitimate sweep, that breadth must be honored.

We now canvass—perhaps too briefly and yet at too great a length—some of the evidence supporting these working definitions.

2. Contemporaneous Dictionary Definitions

As we have said, the task of ascertaining true constitutional meaning consists of seeking out the objective, original meaning of the words and phrases of the text: that is, the meaning Section Three's terms and structure would have had in the legal system at the time. A starting point for such an inquiry—though not the ending point—is to look at contemporaneous dictionary definitions. (We think that evidence of contemporaneous political and legal usage of words and phrases contained in the constitutional text is actually quite often stronger evidence of original, objective linguistic meaning: it can serve as a kind of operational, practical concordance that may "define" terms more precisely in their application than can a cold dictionary definition.)

Nineteenth century dictionaries contain definitions of "insurrection" and "rebellion" that substantially corroborate our working definitions. Webster defined "insurrection" as "[a] rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state."[244] Rebellion was "[a]n open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government to which one owes allegiance."[245]

Is, 83 Geo. L.J. 217, 333 (1994); Baude & Sachs, Law of Interpretation, supra note 234, at 1120 (describing "the presumption of constitutionality" as a rule of unwritten law); William Baude, Constitutional Liquidation, 71 Stan. L. Rev. 1, 35-36, 44 (2019). Again, we bracket any differences in emphasis between our respective views of the adjudication of ambiguities.

[243] 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819),

[244] 1 Noah Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language 111 (1828, photoreprint 1993) ("Insurrection"); see also Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language 702 (Chauncy A. Goodrich and Noah Porter, eds. 1864) (similar); 1 John Boag, A Popular and Complete English Dictionary 727 (1850) (similar).

[245] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also Webster's (Porter 1864), supra note 244, at 1094 (similar); 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Importantly, Webster also noted several distinctions between these and other terms. In defining rebellion, he distinguished an insurrection as "a rising in opposition to a particular act or law, without a design to renounce wholly all subjection to the government," while a rebellion was a more categorical "attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one or to place the country under another jurisdiction."[246] And in defining insurrection, Webster noted that insurrection is "equivalent to sedition, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens."[247] This suggests a spectrum from sedition (not covered by Section Three) to insurrection to rebellion (both covered).

At the same time, Webster also conceded some overlap in these terms, writing that "[i]nsurrection may be, but is not necessarily, rebellion"[248] and that despite these technical distinctions, "[i]nsurrection is however used with latitude as to comprehend either sedition or rebellion."[249] This suggests a great deal of potential breadth and overlap in these terms.

Along similar lines, a prominent mid-century legal dictionary, John Bouvier's Law Dictionary in its 1868 edition, contains detailed definitions of insurrection, rebellion, and aid and comfort. "INSURRECTION" was defined simply as "[a] rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government."[250] "REBELLION" is correspondingly defined: "The taking up arms traitorously against the government. The forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued."[251] Bouvier's thus treated "insurrection" and "rebellion" as nearly interchangeable terms, both involving some degree of concerted and forcible opposition to the authority of the lawfully constituted government but not clearly distinguishing between them.[252]

---

[246] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 1 Boag, supra note 244, at 727; 2 id. at 319 (similar).

[247] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111 ("Insurrection"). For comparison, Webster defined "Sedition" as: "A factious commotion of the people, or a tumultuous assembly of men rising in opposition to law or the administration of justice, and in disturbance of the public peace. Sedition is a rising or commotion of less extent than an insurrection, and both are less than rebellion . . ." 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 66 ("Sedition").

[248] 2 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 51 ("Rebellion"); see also 2 Boag, supra note 244, at 319 (similar).

[249] 1 Webster (1828), supra note 244, at 111. Daniel Hemel argues that "Webster's definition of 'insurrection' seems implausibly broad for Section 3 purposes." See Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5.

[250] "Insurrection" in 1 John Bouvier. A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union 729-730 (Philadelphia, G.W. Childs, 12th ed., rev. and enl. 1868).

[251] "Rebellion" in 2 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 415 (emphasis added).

[252] See also Joseph Worcester, A Dictionary of the English Language 764, 1190 (1860) (generally equating insurrection and rebellion). Elsewhere in this edition, Bouvier drew a distinction in connotation between "REBEL" and "INSURGENT," suggesting that "rebel is always understood in a bad sense, as one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bouvier's dictionary also offers an instructive definition of "AID AND COMFORT" as "[h]elp, support, assistance, counsel, encouragement." The entry adds this discussion, noting the lack of U.S. judicial interpretation at the time but a generally accepted English background understanding of the term:

> The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, declares that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial discussion. They import, however, help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. 1, c.14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act …[253]

This tends to confirm our broad construction of "aid or comfort" as encompassing many kinds of intentional support, akin to the common law.

3. Intratextualism

In some cases, the Constitution can also serve as its own internal dictionary. The meaning of a constitutional term in one part of the document can inform its meaning in another, either because of the complete (or near) copying of one constitutional text by another or by virtue of subtle contrast, refinement, or qualification in a term's usage. (Professor Akhil Amar has dubbed this method of interpretation "Intratextualism.")[254] Chief Justice Marshall, for example, famously employed this method in M'Culloch v. Maryland as part of his argument for the constitutionality of Congress's chartering of a Bank of the United States.[255] tyranny of constitute authorities," and thus that "[t]he colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels." "Insurgent" and "Rebel" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 729; 2 id. at 415.

---

In a much later edition, Bouvier's drew a distinction between insurrection and rebellion as two different varieties of "actual and open resistance to [government] authority." Insurrection was "an actual uprising against the government" while rebellion "goes beyond insurrection in aim" and attempts actually to overthrow the government authority in question. "Insurrection" and "Rebellion," in 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary & Concise Encycl. (Rawles Rev., 1897). Lynch misstates the date of this edition as 1867, and thus mistakenly cites it as "contemporarily authoritative." Lynch, supra note 5, at 167 n. 80.

[253] "Aid and Comfort" in 1 Bouvier (1868), supra note 250, at 107.

[254] Akhil Reed Amar, Intratextualism, 112 Harv. L. Rev. 747, 748 (1999).

[255] M'Culloch, 17 U.S. at 413-414. In construing the scope of the legislative power conferred by the Necessary and Proper Clause, Marshall noted how the word "necessary" was used differently, and subjected to different qualifications, in other parts of the Constitution and found that those differences were useful in interpreting the clause at hand. For discussion of the prominence of intratextual and structural-logic, whole-text arguments in some of Chief Justice Marshall's most significant Supreme Court opinions, including Marbury and M'Culloch, see Paulsen, Marbury, supra note 66, at 2711; see also Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Plausibility of Personhood, 74 Ohio St. L. J. 13, 33 n. 72 (2013).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Might the Constitution's other usages of terms that also appear in Section Three serve as such markers of meaning for "insurrection" and "rebellion," and "aid or comfort" to enemies, as those terms are used in Section Three? A quick canvass suggests only limited help.

The word "insurrection" appears in the Militia Clause of Article I, Section 8 of the original Constitution: Congress is given the enumerated power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[256] The word "rebellion" appears in the Writ Suspension Clause of Article I, Section 9: "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or invasion the public Safety may require it."[257] In neither instance, however, does the context suggest any particular definition or explication of the term. They are thus of little direct assistance to the task of unpacking the meaning of Section Three.

As noted, the language in Section Three's alternative trigger—the giving of "aid and comfort" to enemies—borrows the nearly identical language of the Treason Clause of Article III. But once again, the similar language in Article III is not self-defining. Nor was there an established, settled, authoritative judicial interpretation of this language that might have been understood specifically to define "aid and comfort" as a constitutional term-of-art at the time of the framing of the Fourteenth Amendment.[258] Moreover, in the 1860s, the pairing of "aid" and/or "comfort" had be-

---

[256] U.S. Const. art. I, §8 cl. 15.

[257] U.S. Const. art. I, §9 cl. 2.

[258] Perhaps the most notable U.S. treason case to date was Ex parte Bollman, in which Chief Justice Marshall delivered an opinion for the Court granting habeas to two of the co-conspirators in Aaron Burr's plot to seize Spanish territory in the American (then-)southwest and attempt to form his own independent nation. Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75 (1807). The opinion combined a relatively narrow construction of the substantive crime of treason (in part because of Article III's text ("only in levying war") with a relatively broad construction of complicity. Thus on one hand: "However flagitious may be the crime of conspiring to subvert by force the government of our country, such conspiracy is not treason," id. at 126, but on the other hand, "if war be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors." Id. Ex parte Bollman was an early and prominent legal landmark supporting some key propositions that would have been familiar to lawyers during the Civil War era: first, that there are such things as conspiracies and plots to "overturn the government," in whole or in part, that though they might not qualify as treason, remain great and culpable legal wrongs; second, that the crime of treason specifically requires showing the existence of an armed assembly to employ force for a treasonable purpose; third, that one may be said to have engaged in (or provided "aid and comfort" to) treason where one is in league with the conspiracy and done any act, large or small, or played "any part," however remote, to further that plot. Whether or not Bollman's construction was sufficiently established to be read in to Section Three itself, it was cited occasionally in the 1860s Congress. See, e.g., 37th Congress 2nd Session Cong. Globe 414 (1862)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

come ubiquitous in legal and public discourse as a general allegation of improper assistance, making it still less clear that it was perfectly coterminous with the law of the Treason Clause.[259]

Finally, the words "insurrection" and "rebellion" also appear elsewhere in the Fourteenth Amendment itself, but again in ways that give little external light on Section Three. A person's "participation in rebellion" is specified in Section Two as an allowable ground for denying the right to vote that does not trigger a reduction in a state's representation as a consequence.[260] Section Four of the amendment prohibits payment of debts or obligations "incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion."[261] These neighboring sections use slightly different phrases for the behavior they cover ("participation" and "engaged in"; "aid or comfort" and "in aid of"), but it is difficult to say if the variations are meaningful.

4. Contemporaneous Public, Political, Legal Usage

Perhaps the best evidence of the public meaning of the terms "insurrection," "rebellion," and "engaging in," as they came to be used in Section Three, consists of their common and frequent public, political, and legal usage in the 1860s—the years immediately surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment—by a variety of actors: by President Abraham Lincoln, in prominent speeches, messages, public letters, and proclamations; by Congress, in major acts of legislation; and by the Supreme Court, in the landmark decision in The Prize Cases. The consistent pattern of usage was to treat the actions of the South as being, legally, "insurrection" or "rebellion." A wide range of actions supportive of secession appears to have constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort" to rebellion or insurrection.

This leads us to what we think an obvious "sure shipwreck"[262] for understanding Section Three's terms. Whatever else "insurrection or rebellion" might embrace, they certainly embrace the cluster of actions with which Section Three was, historically, immediately and directly concerned: first, the attempted secession from the authority of the U.S. Constitution—the effort to displace the lawful authority of the United States in favor of the supposedly "seceded" state governments and their confederation into the "Confederate States of America"; and second, engaging in forcible resistance to the authority of the United States to execute the laws of the United States—armed resistance to the Constitution, specifically in the shape of waging civil war against the nation. Conduct participating in, advancing, supporting, or assisting

---

(statement of Sen. Sumner) (citing Bollman passage quoted above during the proceedings to expel Senator Jesse Bright for writing a letter to Jefferson Davis).

[259] See Harold Holzer, Lincoln and the Power of the Press: The War for Public Opinion 361 (2014) (referring to the phrase "aid and comfort to the enemy" (by the press) as "that catch-basin phrase again.").

[260] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 2.

[261] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 4.

[262] Morse, supra note 227.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

either secession or armed resistance to U.S. authority constituted "engaging in" or giving "aid or comfort to" the Union's enemies. Section Three encompasses all such actions in support of secession and civil war as included within its substantive trigger.

a. President Lincoln

An extremely important contemporaneous source for understanding the public constitutional meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" in 1860s public discourse is President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln looms large in the public understanding of the day concerning the meaning of those terms. Lincoln consistently characterized secession and the Civil War as acts of insurrection or rebellion, avoiding wherever possible treating "secession" as if it were a separate legal category. Secession, for Lincoln, was a Southern euphemism for rebellion and treason. The Confederacy had no valid legal existence: what was going on with the Civil War was properly called insurrection and rebellion—the lawless attempt to overthrow the constitutional processes of the United States and displace lawful government with unlawful governments.

Lincoln was insistent and relentless—and very public and prominent—on this point, consistently so, across a range of contexts. For instance, the Civil War was emphatically not, in Lincoln's view, a "war" between the United States and another sovereign.[263] It was not subject to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 11 power to "declare War," but was rather an illegal rebellion—a "giant insurrection"—to be suppressed by executive authority pursuant to Congress's Article I, section 8, clause 15 power to "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[264]

Consider just a few prominent and illustrative statements: In his First Inaugural Address, on March 4, 1861, Lincoln, after setting forth arguments that "no State upon its own mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union," concluded that "acts of violence within any State or States against the authority of the United States" are "insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances."[265] Following the attack on Fort Sumter, Lincoln's April 15, 1861 proclamation calling forth the militia

---

[263] On Lincoln's understanding of secession as unconstitutional and his resulting conception of the Civil War as, legally, a situation of insurrection or rebellion (not declared war) see sources cited in note 231. That does not exclude the existence of full constitutional Commander in Chief Clause powers in the situation of actual civil war, however. Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Emancipation Proclamation and the Commander in Chief Power, 40 Georgia L. Rev. 807, 814-823 (2006).

[264] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 11 (Declare War Clause) with U.S. Const. art. I, §8, cl. 15 (power "to provide for calling forth" the Militia for law execution and to suppress insurrections"). Congress's exercise of this power – the Insurrection Acts of 1795 and 1807 – is discussed infra Part IV.A.5.a.

[265] Abraham Lincoln, First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1861), IV Complete Works of Lincoln ("CWL") 262, 265.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

similarly characterized the attack as fitting the statutory definition of insurrection.[266] And in his July 4, 1861 Message to Congress, Lincoln labelled the South's purported secession a "giant insurrection" and, vividly, as "rebellion … sugar coated." The "so-called 'Confederate States'" had formed an "insurrectionary government."[267] In the same July 4 Message, Lincoln used the nature of secession as rebellion to justify suspension of the writ of habeas corpus as authorized by the terms of Article I, section 9, clause 2 of the Constitution, which used exactly that language of "rebellion."[268] Lincoln's use of terms was significant and pulled no punches: efforts to displace lawful government authority with unlawful government—no matter how labelled by their perpetrators, no matter how deluded participants might be as to the lawfulness or propriety of their actions—were insurrectionary; such declarations and actions constituted rebellion.

Two years later, at the height of the war, Lincoln returned to the characterization of the South's actions as "rebellion" (and the constitutional question of power to suspend habeas corpus) in a notable incident testing the limit of Union military suppression of anti-war and disloyal speech. In a June 12, 1863 public letter, nominally addressed to Erastus Corning, Lincoln defended the military arrest of former Ohio Congressman Clement Vallandigham, a notorious racist and prominent "Copperhead" pro-South, anti-Union northerner, who had made a public speech vehemently condemning the Emancipation Proclamation and the propriety of the Union's war effort.

Lincoln distinguished law enforcement arrests from detentions in cases of rebellion. Wrote Lincoln: "Ours is a case of Rebellion—so called by the resolutions before me—in fact, a clear, flagrant, and gigantic case of Rebellion." And that, Lincoln concluded, was what allowed suspension of habeas corpus.[269] In the course of his argument, Lincoln described rebellion as "sudden and extensive uprisings against the government."[270] This is a useful description that supports our working definition: Rebellion is an "uprising." It is something more than mere protest. It is, often, "sudden." It is "extensive." It is directed "against the government." Rebellion is something more than ordinary law violation and that is why it is treated differently by the Constitution.

How did Vallandigham's actions associate him with the rebellion? Lincoln made a forceful case that even pure speech might constitute assistance to rebellion—if it were advocacy producing direct, material effects benefitting the rebel enemy

---

[266] Abraham Lincoln, Proclamation Calling Militia and Convening Congress (April 15, 1861), IV CWL 331, 332.
[267] Abraham Lincoln, Message to Congress in Special Session (July 4, 1861), IV CWL 421, 427-428, 432-437.
[268] Id. at 429-431 (emphasis added).
[269] U.S. Const. art. I, §9, cl. 2.
[270] Abraham Lincoln, To Erastus Corning and Others (June 12, 1863), VI CWL 260, 264 (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

cause, by tangibly harming the military authority engaged in trying to suppress that rebellion. In the Corning Letter, Lincoln wrote that, "under cover of 'Liberty of speech,' 'Liberty of the press,' and 'Habeas corpus,'" rebel sympathizers "hoped to keep on foot amongst us a most efficient corps of spies, informers, supplyers, and aiders and abettors of their cause in a thousand ways."[271] Claims of freedom of speech could improperly furnish a shield or cloak for wrongful conduct; they supplied "cover" for, and thus assisted, rebellion and insurrection.

Lincoln expanded these arguments in yet more arresting ways. He suggested that, in some circumstances, a person's refusal to speak out against rebellion might be tacit support for such rebellion: a "man who stands by and says nothing, when the peril of his government is discussed, can not be misunderstood. If not hindered, he is sure to help the enemy." He also hinted at regret that he had not earlier arrested prominent oath-breaking officers now "occupying the very highest places in the rebel war service," such as John Breckinridge, Robert E. Lee, Joseph Johnston, and John Magruder: "I think the time not unlikely to come when I shall be blamed for having made too few arrests rather than too many."[272] Lincoln's position seems clear, if perhaps a bit unsettling: claims of freedom of speech did not invariably prevail over the imperative constitutional necessity of suppressing rebellion; where words fueled insurrection, or thwarted its suppression, or signaled disloyalty, the speaker was aiding the enemy. Such expression was not necessarily privileged.

This is not exactly an expansive conception of First Amendment rights. Lincoln fully recognized the difficulties with his stance. He did not ignore the tension between his conclusions and peacetime free speech principles but argued that the tension could be reconciled.[273] In a colorful metaphor, Lincoln ventured:

> I can no more be persuaded that the Government can constitutionally take no strong measures in time of rebellion, because it can be shown that the same could not be lawfully taken in time of peace, than I can be persuaded that a particular drug is not good medicine for a sick man, because it can be shown not to be good food for a well one. Nor am I able to appreciate the danger apprehended by the meeting that the American people will, by means of military arrests during the Rebellion, lose the

---

[271] Id. at 263.

[272] Id. at 265.

[273] In several respects, Lincoln anticipated later judicial free speech doctrines and decisions, such as those distinguishing pure speech from speech linked to prohibited conduct; recognizing limits on speech posing a danger of inciting to crime or lawlessness; recognizing "compelling interest" overrides in exceptional circumstances, including for reasons of national security or military secrecy; finding that government's motives and purposes for a particular action may matter to its lawfulness; and noting where an incidental limitation on expression leaves open alternative channels for expression of the same message. See Paulsen, Civil War, supra note 231, at 698-702 & n.23 (noting how Lincoln anticipated many of the issues and exceptions contemplated by later judicial doctrine concerning the First Amendment's freedom of speech).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> right of Public Discussion, the Liberty of Speech and the Press, the Law of Evidence, Trial by Jury, and Habeas Corpus, throughout the indefinite peaceful future, which I trust lies before them, any more than I am able to believe that a man could contract so strong an appetite for emetics during temporary illness as to persist in feeding upon them during the remainder of his healthful life.[274]

Lincoln also stressed a distinction between speech directed at criticism of the government's political policy—fully protected by the freedom of speech—and expression more or less directly aimed at harming the military's recruitment and war effort. If Vallandigham had been arrested merely because he was "damaging the political prospects of the administration" or "the personal interests of the general," that would be one thing, Lincoln observed. "[I]f there was no other reason for the arrest, then I concede that the arrest was wrong." But as Lincoln understood it, the arrest "was made for a very different reason"—that Vallandigham was "laboring, with some effect, to prevent the raising of troops, to encourage desertions from the army, and to leave the rebellion without an adequate military force to suppress it." Vallandigham was, in short, "warring upon the military." He who "dissuades one man from volunteering, or induces one soldier to desert, weakens the Union cause as much as he who kills a union soldier in battle." Desertion was punishable by death, of course. In a famous line, Lincoln asked, rhetorically "Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wiley agitator who induces him to desert?"[275] Lincoln's answer was no: "I think that in such a case, to silence the agitator, and save the boy, is not only constitutional, but, withal a great mercy." [276]

Lincoln continued: "If I be wrong on this question of constitutional power," he added, "my error lies in believing that certain proceedings are constitutional when, in cases of rebellion or Invasion, the public Safety requires them, which would not be constitutional when, in absence of rebellion or invasion, the public Safety does not require them -- in other words, that the constitution is not in it's application in all respects the same, in cases of Rebellion or invasion, involving the public Safety, as it is in times of profound peace and public security."[277]

Lincoln thus embraced the view that material assistance to insurrection or rebellion could in some cases take the form of effective advocacy of unlawful conduct that, if engaged in by substantial numbers, would materially advance the rebel cause or harm the military prospects of the Union. The fact that such assistance to rebellion came in the form of words did not furnish any constitutional privilege to such action.

---

[274] Letter to Corning (June 12, 1863), VI CWL at 267. (Emetics referred to a medicine or substance used to induce vomiting.)
[275] Letter to Corning, VI CWL at 266.
[276] Id. at 266-67.
[277] Id. at 267.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Where rebellion threatens public safety or public security, the Constitution permits restriction on advocacy furthering, supporting, or assisting such rebellion.

To be sure, one might well conclude that Lincoln went too far in his arguments in the Corning Letter or in some of his actions during the war. That is an interesting and difficult question—and not our point here. Our point is that Lincoln's view was a prominently expressed contemporaneous understanding—and on the issues of insurrection, rebellion, and complicity, it was consistent with his longstanding and oft-repeated views. This does not directly answer the question whether or to what extent such thinking specifically informed general public understanding of Section Three. But Lincoln's thinking, articulated in such a public context, may well have informed the potential reach of the terms "insurrection or rebellion," and what constitutes engaging in or aiding such conduct, as those terms came to be employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

At all events, Lincoln made clear and prominent the position that declaring secession, engaging in forcible opposition to the constitutional authority of the Union, and materially assisting others in such conduct, all constituted forms of support for and participation in "insurrection" or "rebellion." And this stance continued throughout the war, even as the nation began to look to the war's conclusion and to questions of the post-war status of persons who had participated in that rebellion—questions at the core of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.[278]

b. Congress

President Lincoln was not the only public figure grappling with concepts of insurrection and rebellion during the Civil War. Similar themes can be found in the statements and actions of Congress and the Supreme Court.

Start with Congress: We think two specific enactments of Congress during the Civil War are especially probative of the understandings of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and of what conduct was publicly understood to constitute having "engaged in" or given assistance to rebellion. First, there is the so-called "Ironclad Oath," adopted

[278] Lincoln's characterization of Southern secession as rebellion continued throughout the war. His December 8, 1863 Message to Congress referred to the Confederacy as "the rebellion." Annual Message to Congress (Dec. 8, 1863), VII CWL at 51 In his accompanying offer of amnesty and pardon, in the Amnesty Proclamation of December 8, 1863, Lincoln referred, repeatedly, to the "rebellion" that "now exists whereby the loyal State governments of several States have for a long time been subverted" (id. at 53), to "said rebellion and treason" (id. at 54), to "said rebellion" (id.) and to persons who had provided "aid" to the "rebellion" in various forms. Interestingly, Lincoln excepted from his offer of forgiveness – in language that would seem to presage the similar terms of Section Three – "all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion" and "all who resigned commissions in the army or navy in the United States, and afterwards aided the rebellion." Id. at 55. Lincoln also left to the respective houses of Congress the exclusive judgment "whether members sent to Congress from any State shall be admitted to seats."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on July 2, 1862 as the oath one must be able to swear in order to hold federal office.[279] Second, there is the "Second Confiscation Act," adopted that same month, on July 17, 1862, to authorize legal forfeitures of property and slaves, and also to enforce disqualifications from federal office, by persons who had engaged in specified activities constituting "rebellion" or "insurrection."[280] These two enactments, and their implementation to exclude former insurrectionists and rebels from future office, say much about the terms they employed.

i. The Ironclad Oath

Congress adopted The Ironclad Oath in the thick of the Civil War and it was required of most federal officeholders from 1862 to 1884.[281] The text of the Oath sets forth the types of misconduct regarded as disqualifying an individual from eligibility for federal office because he had been engaged in supporting the rebellion—an inquiry very closely parallel to that contained in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, proposed by Congress just a few years later.

The Ironclad Oath required that prospective officeholders swear or affirm that they had not done any of several things. In that sense it did not function like a traditional oath of office—a promise of future behavior—but much more like a disqualification for past misbehavior.[282] It did indirectly what Section Three was soon to do directly. That makes the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers particularly instructive. Here's the oath, with its most-relevant-to-Section-Three features and phrases italicized (and with bracketed numbers inserted):

> I . . . do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never [1] voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have [2] voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have [3] neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have [4] not yielded a

[279] 12 Stat. 502.

[280] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). 12 Stat. 627 (1862).

[281] 23 Stat. 21 (1884). There was an important exception. In 1868, Congress provided that anybody who had received amnesty from two-thirds of each house of Congress under Section Three was exempt from the Ironclad Oath and need only swear future loyalty, 15 Stat. 85 (1868), and in 1871 it added that anybody "who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution" yet would otherwise "not be able on account of his participation in the late rebellion to take" the Ironclad Oath, could take the forward-looking oath instead, 16 Stat. 412 (1871). These two provisions effectively equated the Ironclad Oath to Section Three from 1871 on.

[282] For this reason, Lincoln famously wrote: "On principle I dislike an oath which requires a man to swear he has not done wrong. It rejects the Christian principle of forgiveness on terms of repentance. I think it is enough if the man does no wrong hereafter." Endorsement of Abraham Lincoln in Letter from R.M. Edwards to Edwin Stanton, February 5, 1864, 7 Lincoln Papers 169.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto.

While not using the words insurrection or rebellion, the Ironclad Oath's list of never-have-I-evers would seem strongly suggestive of how Section Three's triggering language likely would have been understood in public usage at the time. The Ironclad Oath is not a definition of Section Three's constitutional terms, of course. But it would appear an apt descriptive specification of the kinds of misconduct included within those terms. Under the oath, disqualifying behavior included: (1) fighting against the United States; (2) aiding or encouraging such armed hostility; (3) accepting office under a hostile authority (or "pretended authority"); and—a highly evocative phrase—(4) "yield[ing]" one's "voluntary support" to "any pretended government, authority, power or constitution . . . hostile or inimical" to the United States.

The content of this oath's requirement establishes a useful, historically prominent marker for the scope of Section Three: What the Ironclad Oath understood to be disqualifying for federal office, Section Three likely embraced as constitutionally disqualifying conduct for the far broader sweep of offices to which it extended.[283]

ii. The Second Confiscation Act

Barely more than two weeks after adopting the Ironclad Oath, the Civil War Congress enacted what is popularly called the "Second Confiscation Act." Its full title spoke explicitly in terms of insurrection and rebellion: "An Act to suppress Insurrection, to punish Treason and Rebellion, to seize and confiscate the Property of Rebels, and for other Purposes."[284]

This Second Confiscation Act was a very prominent piece of legislation. It imposed sweeping penalties, forfeitures, and disqualifications on anybody who had engaged in or assisted the rebellion.[285] The Second Confiscation Act was long and vigorously debated in Congress, much discussed in the press and in public discourse, objected to by many on constitutional grounds, and nearly vetoed by President Lincoln.[286] Enactment of the Second Confiscation Act gave rise to very public pressure

---

[283] The extensive overlap between the meaning of the Ironclad Oath and the Section Three disqualification is confirmed by Congress's own interpretation and application of the oath to its own members, during and after the enactment of Section Three. These applications are detailed infra Part IV.A.5.b.

[284] 12 Stat. 589 (1862). See also 12 Stat. 627 (1862) ("explanatory" joint resolution).

[285] An earlier act had provided for forfeiture more specifically of property or slaves actually used in service of rebellion. 12 Stat. 319 (Aug. 6, 1861).

[286] See generally David P. Currie, The Civil War Congress, 73 U. Chi. L. Rev. 1131, 1185-1195 (2006). Among many noteworthy twists and turns in the road to enactment, President Lincoln came close to vetoing the bill, preparing a veto message with his objections and signing the bill only after Congress passed an "explanatory" joint resolution (which Lincoln signed together with the bill). Lincoln nonetheless appended his original draft veto message setting forth his objections. For discussion of the constitutional objections of Lincoln and others to various aspects of the bill, and his unusual course of

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

on President Lincoln to take aggressive action against slavery in rebel states—pressure that helped spur Lincoln to issue his Emancipation Proclamation as an executive military order. The Second Confiscation Act was a big deal. [287]

The Act itself was a complicated and somewhat confusing hodgepodge of distinct provisions, combining property confiscation, emancipation, a new federal crime, and disqualification from office. But the terms it used are especially evocative, visiting legal consequences on persons who "engaged in," "incite[d]," "set on foot," or "assist[ed]" "rebellion" or "insurrection" or who had "given aid or comfort" to rebellion or done acts "aiding and abetting" rebellion. The Act is practically a glossary of the terms used in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment proposed by Congress just four years later.

Specifically: Section 2 made it a new crime, distinct from treason, to "incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof" or to "give aid or comfort thereto" or to "engage in, or give aid and comfort to," any "existing rebellion or insurrection."[288] It is worth pausing to parse the linguistic resemblances to Section Three, and the ways in which like terms are used and explained. Following Lincoln, secession and civil war are equated with "rebellion or insurrection." Those terms are described as involving acts "against action in signing it but nonetheless appending his objections, see id. at 1193-1194; Burrus M. Carnahan, Act of Justice: Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation and the Law of War 105-106 (2007) (noting Lincoln's initial concern that the act would violate Article III's limitations on the punishment for treason and the objections of others that the act was a bill of attainder); Eric Foner, The Fiery Trial: Abraham Lincoln and American Slavery 215-217 (2010). For Lincoln's July 17, 1862 message to Congress, detailing his objections, see V Complete Works of Lincoln 328-331.

---

[287] A month after the Act had been adopted, Horace Greeley published a scathing editorial titled "The Prayer of Twenty Millions," in which he demanded that Lincoln "EXECUTE THE LAWS" faithfully with specific reference to the Second Confiscation Act. Greeley condemned Lincoln's "mistaken deference to Rebel Slavery" and his failure to rebuke his generals for having "habitually disregarded" the Confiscation Act. Lincoln replied to Greeley, equally prominently, within days, in a famous public letter dated August 22, 1862, published in a rival newspaper and "widely reprinted," defending his course of action. V Complete Works of Lincoln 388-389; see Holzer, supra note 259, at 400-401. One month later, Lincoln issued his Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in which he noted and quoted provisions of the Second Confiscation Act (without invoking the statute as actual authority for his proclamation). V Complete Works of Lincoln at 434-435 (stating that "attention is hereby called to" provisions of the act but relying for authority on his powers as executive and military Commander in Chief). See also Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 (noting that "the Second Confiscation Act embodied a major shift in national policy").

[288] 12 Stat. 589, 590. (emphasis added). Section 2 provided penalties for conviction, which included confiscation of slaves. A modified version of this provision remains a crime today, and continues to incorporate the Confiscation Act's disqualification from federal office, id., as well. 18 U.S.C. §2383 ("Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States."). Needless to say, a prosecution under Section 2383 of Title 18 is neither a prerequisite to nor preclusive of the self-executing application of Section Three of the Constitution.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof" (a formulation closely conforming to our working definitions). Section 2 imposes criminal liability on persons who "incite" such acts; who "set on foot" such acts; who "assist" such acts; who in any other way "engage in" such conduct; or who "give aid and comfort to" such conduct. All of these terms have close parallels in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Section 3 of the Act then imposed a sweeping disqualification from future officeholding—a kind of proto-Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "every person guilty of either of the offences described in this act shall be forever incapable and disqualified to hold any office under the United States."[289] Section 5 directed the President to seize rebel property belonging to a long list of confederate officers plus anyone in a loyal state who "shall hereafter assist and give aid and comfort to such rebellion."[290] Officeholding in a rebel government or military was per se blameworthy participation; but general giving of assistance or aid or comfort also qualified as participation in rebellion. Section 6 provided a further authorization for seizure of the property of any person not already mentioned who, "being engaged in armed rebellion against the government of the United States, or aiding or abetting such rebellion," and, after sixty days' notice issued by the President, did not "cease to aid, countenance, and abet such rebellion, and return to his allegiance to the United States."[291] Section 7 and Section 8 provided for in rem proceedings against property "found to have belonged to a person engaged in rebellion, or who has given aid or comfort thereto," in which case it "shall be condemned as enemies' property."[292] And Section 9 famously emancipated slaves of persons "who shall hereafter be engaged in rebellion" against the Union or who "shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto."[293] Throughout these sections, one can see the recurrent use of terms and concepts, and synonyms for such terms, that would reappear in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: "engaged in," "rebellion," "aid or comfort," "abet," "countenance," "enemies."

Unlike the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act did not give rise to many opportunities for immediate application and further interpretation. In part, this was simply due to the exigencies and realities of Civil War at the time. For example, the civil forfeiture provisions contemplated in rem judicial proceedings against persons in the district where property was located. At the time, such property was often located in areas of rebel control. Often, the federal courts were not even functioning those areas.[294] Similarly, as a practical matter, criminal prosecutions of rebels for

---

[289] 12 Stat. 589, 590.
[290] Id. (emphasis added.)
[291] Id. at 591.
[292] Id.
[293] Id.
[294] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 500 (noting confusing aspects of the Second Confiscation Act and the requirement of "in rem proceedings by district courts that were of course not functioning in the rebellious states"); Foner, Fiery Trial, supra note 286, at 215 ("For most property, [the Act] established a cumbersome judicial process that helps to explain why little land was actually seized and sold

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

treason and insurrection had to await Union military success. (And after success came, President Andrew Johnson ultimately pardoned a great many offenders.)[295] The Lincoln administration, focused on other matters, showed little interest in bringing legal actions to enforce the Act's specific policies. The administration, according to one scholar, "chose not to implement the law vigorously."[296] Attorney General Bates "exerted no more than a minimal effort to make the first and second confiscation acts work."[297] And the Act's section authorizing limited military emancipation section was rapidly overtaken—superseded in practical effect—by President Lincoln's far more comprehensive Emancipation Proclamation, issued pursuant to his constitutional Commander in Chief power.

But in some ways the lack of enforcement cases is beside our point here, which concerns the Act's prominence in national discussions and its pervasive use of terms, phrases, and concepts—rebellion, insurrection, engage in, aid or comfort—that would reappear in only slightly different form in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like the Ironclad Oath, the Second Confiscation Act employed terminology nearly identical to that employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. The usage of the terms in this landmark legislation we think helps explicate the meaning, in public legal context, of the language in the amendment. In the context of 1860s public legal usage, engaging in or giving aid or comfort to rebellion and insurrection extended to a broad range of activity advancing or furthering efforts to unlawfully upend the lawful operation of the U.S. constitutional regime. This strongly supports the conclusion that Section Three's terms can fairly be read quite expansively, as embracing a broad range of conduct directed against the authority of government under the Constitution.

c. The Supreme Court's decision in The Prize Cases

The most important constitutional decision of the U.S. Supreme Court during the Civil War was The Prize Cases.[298] There, the majority upheld the constitutionality of Lincoln's unilateral military order, made very early in the Civil War, imposing a blockade on Southern ports. In a truly landmark decision, the Supreme Court held that the President's war powers (including the power to impose a blockade) were triggered immediately, as soon as the South's rebellion took the form of organized military resistance to the authority of the U.S. government. The President's power to under its provisions."). See also Silvana R. Siddali, From Property to Person: Slavery and the Confiscation Acts, 1861-1862, at 238 (2005) (remarking that "[t]he confiscation bill that finally emerged was neither sweeping nor enforceable" though opining that "if the law had not been hobbled by its own internal inconsistencies, it might have affected the lives and property of a large majority of southerners.").

---

[295] See Eric L. McKitrick, Andrew Johnson and Reconstruction 141-152 (1960).

[296] John Syrett, The Civil War Confiscation Acts: Failing to Reconstruct the South 55 (2005).

[297] Id. at 72; see also James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems Under Lincoln 288-292 (1926) (describing minimal enforcement of the Second Confiscation Act).

[298] 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635 (1863).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wage civil war against rebel forces derived from his delegated statutory power to employ force to suppress rebellion, the Court held. A congressional declaration of war was neither a prerequisite nor legally appropriate for this type of use of force: "This greatest of civil wars was not gradually developed by popular commotion, tumultuous assemblies, or local unorganized insurrections" but "sprung forth suddenly … in the full panoply of war. The President was bound to meet it in the shape it presented itself, without waiting for Congress to baptize it with a name."[299]

The Court's decision in The Prize Cases is today regarded as the leading judicial exposition of the Constitution's allocation of war powers. At the time, the case had other hugely consequential implications: the principles set forth in the decision essentially endorsed in advance (but of course without addressing the question directly) Lincoln's constitutional justification for the Emancipation Proclamation, which he had issued earlier that year.[300] The decision of The Prize Cases was a very big deal indeed.

Of special interest for our purposes is the Court's usage and explanation—in a highly prominent legal context—of the terms insurrection and rebellion, and their relationship to war and the war powers of the national government: "Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government," the majority said.[301] A civil war "becomes such by its accidents—the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on."[302] Where a rebellion has come to possess certain military characteristics, the "party in rebellion" might come to be treated as a belligerent for law-of-war purposes, even though a domestic rebellion stands on different constitutional legal ground than war with a foreign nation. "It is not the less a civil war, with belligerent parties in hostile array, because it may be called an 'insurrection' by one side, and the insurgents be considered as rebels or traitors."[303]

In a nutshell: insurrection or rebellion were forms of active resistance to the lawful authority of the government. An insurrection might be something short of outright rebellion. But an insurrection against government authority sometimes grows into full-on "rebellion." A rebellion, in turn, need not take the form of civil war in order to be a rebellion. But sometimes it does. At all events, rebellion seems its own distinct, more general legal concept of repudiation or attempted overthrow of the lawful constitutional regime by unlawful means.

---

[299] Id. at 668-669; see also Stephen I. Vladeck, Emergency Power and the Militia Acts, 114 Yale L. J. 149, 177-180 (2004).
[300] Paulsen, Emancipation, supra 263, at, 814-823.
[301] 67 U.S. at 666 (emphasis added).
[302] Id. at 666
[303] Id. at 668.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Prize Cases also held that persons engaged in insurrection or rebellion could be treated as "enemies" (as well as traitors) for legal purposes. Further, the war power, such as imposition of a blockade, could lawfully affect the legal property rights of persons engaged in "commerce" that "supplies" rebels or insurrectionists—and could do so irrespective of the supposed loyalties of the property owner. Even "neutral" powers' shipping could be seized when it violated a blockade: "Whether property be liable to capture as 'enemies' property' does not in any manner depend on the personal allegiance of the owner. 'It is the illegal traffic that stamps it as "enemies' property."'"[304]

The Prize Cases' treatment of the concepts of insurrection and rebellion, of who constituted "enemies," and of what actions constituted support for rebellion, would have been very much part of the legal culture of the day and provides important legal background as to how these terms would have been understood at the time of the drafting of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, just a few years later. Insurrection and rebellion involve varying degrees of concerted resistance to "the lawful authority of the Government," with insurrection being the arguably somewhat lesser form and rebellion the somewhat greater. A rebellion or insurrection need not involve acts tantamount to levying war. (War is sometimes a feature of rebellion but does not define it.) The Civil War was an outgrowth of insurrection or rebellion. But the fundamental act of rebellion remains the attempt to displace the lawful authority of government by unlawful means. And those who give material assistance to the enemy may also suffer legal consequences.

We find the overall evidence of prominent 1860s political and legal usage of the same concepts and language as would soon be employed by Section Three—"insurrection," "rebellion," and what it meant to "engage in" or provide "aid or comfort" to enemies—highly probative of Section Three's original public meaning. President Lincoln, repeatedly and insistently; Congress, pointedly and consistently; and the Supreme Court, decisively, used these terms in connection with secession, forcible resistance to the legal authority of the Constitution, and participation to varying degrees in efforts to overthrow, subvert, or undermine the authority of lawful government. These usages were public, prominent, legal, and essentially undisputed within the Union. While the specific circumstances of secession and civil war gave rise to these formulations, they did not define or limit the terms' meanings, which were more [304] Id. at 674 (quoting 3 Wash. C.C.R. 183). That said, the Court also cautioned that " 'enemies' property" was "a technical phrase peculiar to prize courts, and depends upon principles of public policy, as distinguished from the common law." Id. at 674. The point that, in a military context, property could be treated as "enemies' property" irrespective of the allegiance of the owner was important to the lawfulness of the Emancipation Proclamation: even though Lincoln's proclamation purported to free the slaves of all persons in rebel-controlled territory – including slaves held by persons claiming to be loyal to the Union – such "property" constituted a resource assisting or supplying the rebellion and thus could be declared seized, confiscated, and liberated as a matter of the military law of war. See Paulsen, Emancipation, supra note 263. See generally John Fabian Witt, Lincoln's Code (2012).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

general. Secession, and civil war, were species of insurrection and rebellion—organized, group resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws and attempts to substitute an unlawful legal regime for the lawful, constitutional one. But insurrection and rebellion were the broader categories. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that these 1860s Civil War usages of terms carried over into the meaning of Section Three.

5. Other Extant Statutory Sources and Notorious Examples

a. The Insurrection Acts (and Insurrections Generally)

What about the Insurrection Acts themselves—the statutes that comprised the statutory authority supporting Lincoln's use of military force to suppress secession? These statutes implemented Congress's power "To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" as well as its other war powers over the army and navy. The central statute was enacted in 1795 (superseding a similar enactment in 1792) and was amended in 1807 and 1861. These statutes—the conduct they were understood to reach; the forms and degree of opposition to government authority that were believed to trigger the statutes' application; and the circumstances in which they had been invoked and applied in the past—also would have been part of the background understanding of the term "insurrection" as it came to be incorporated into Section Three.

The 1795 act explicitly recited that it was enacted in part to carry into execution the power to "suppress insurrections." But it also applied to repel invasions and to enforce federal law. Together, these were the three circumstances where Congress had the power to provide for calling out the militia.[305] Section One of the Act allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe," as well as, upon request of state authorities, "in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof."[306] Section Two allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act."[307] Section Two encompasses insurrections against the United States.[308] (Section One specifically deals only with insurrections against a state government.)

In 1807, Congress supplemented this power with the power to call out the army and navy in similar circumstances: "in all cases of insurrection, or obstruction to the

[305] U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15.
[306] 2 Stat. 424 (1795), sec. 1.
[307] Id. sec. 2. (emphasis added).
[308] That said, because Section Two is supported by both Congress's power to "suppress Insurrections" and its power "to execute the Laws of the Union," U.S. Const. art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15. it could encompass instances of law enforcement that do not rise to the level of a constitutional "insurrection."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

laws, either of the United States, or of any individual state or territory, where it is lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ, for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval force of the United States as shall be judged necessary …" The 1807 act thus carried forward and repeated the 1795 act's understanding of insurrection.[309]

Finally, on July 29, 1861, Congress amended the trigger again to specifically describe "rebellion." It allowed the President to call forth the militia "whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President of the United States, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States . . ."[310]

The various versions of the Insurrection Act illustrate a common theme: insurrection is more than ordinary law violation; it entails "combinations" or "assemblages," acting together, to "oppose[s]" or "obstruct" the ability of government to "execute" the law, in numbers "too powerful" to be suppressed by the usual means of law enforcement.[311]

Moreover, several famous instances in which this statutory authority had been (or might have been) invoked provide additional informative context for understanding "insurrection" or "rebellion." Consider just a few.

The "Whiskey Rebellion" was one famous such instance. In 1794, acting under the 1792 predecessor statute, President George Washington personally led militia forces into western Pennsylvania to suppress a large uprising against the government spurred by resistance to the enactment of a federal tax on distilleries. Notably, the Whiskey Rebellion involved armed mobs, organized and employed for the purposes of intimidating and threatening federal officers, keeping them from performing their [309] 2 Stat. 443 (1807).

[310] 12 Stat. 281 (1861).

[311] Myles Lynch has written that there can exist no insurrection within the meaning of the Insurrection Acts unless the President proclaims that an insurrection exists and, further, that as a consequence, there can exist no insurrection or rebellion within the meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment unless the President proclaims that such an insurrection exists. Lynch, supra note 5, at 168, 214-215. This seems plainly wrong. If the Insurrection Act defines insurrection, it is defined as concerted and powerful obstruction of the execution of the laws by government. It is no part of this definition that an insurrection exists only if the President declares it to exist. The President's proclamation is a statutory prerequisite to the use of military force, not part of the definition of insurrection. The President can use force if he proclaims that there is an insurrection; but it is not an insurrection only because he proclaims it one.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

duties under the law, and preventing others from assuming federal office (or inducing them to renounce their authority).[312]

We believe the "Whiskey Rebellion" would have been regarded in the nineteenth century as a classic illustration of what was meant by the terms insurrection and rebellion.[313] Indeed, by the time of the drafting of Section Three, it seems to have been regularly referred to in precisely those terms.[314] In commonplace usage, as well as in political, and legal discourse, the Whiskey Rebellion was a familiar illustration of an "insurrection" or "rebellion."

"Fries Rebellion," in 1799, was another well-known anti-tax revolt, this time in eastern Pennsylvania.[315] President John Adams invoked the 1795 Act to suppress the "insurrection," as he called it,[316] which had involved threats, intimidation, and violence directed at federal tax assessors by organized bands of persons designed to prevent the assessors from performing their duties, and further such acts directed against the ability of the government to arrest tax resisters. In at least one instance, armed opponents of the government successfully freed prisoners from federal custody. The Adams administration's suppression of the insurrection led to widely publicized treason prosecutions[317] of leaders and instigators of the unlawful resistance, including John Fries. As with the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries Rebellion was characterized by

---

[312] See generally Elkins & McKitrick, The Age of Federalism 461-474 (1993) (detailing actions of organized resistance, intimidation, and threats preventing federal officials from performing their duties – including tarring and feathering, whipping, surrounding of officials' homes by armed mobs, and kidnapping and coerced repudiation of federal authority); see also Ron Chernow, Alexander Hamilton 468-478 (2004) (similar); Robert W. Coakley, The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1789-1878, at 43-68 (1988) (documenting the resistance and military response).

[313] To be sure, one scholar of the Acts suggests that "[i]t may have been dubious whether actions of the Whiskey Rebellion farmers truly rose to the level of insurrection," and that Washington may have treated it as law-obstruction rather than insurrection. Vladeck, at 161 n. 46; see also Coakley, supra note 312, at 67 (suggesting that to "characterize the . . . affair as a 'riot' and the participants as 'rioters'" is "far closer to the truth"). But later sources called it at least an insurrection, see infra note 314, and this goes to show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government.

[314] See 1 Francis Wharton. State Trials of the United States during the Administrations of Washington and Adams 102-184 (1849) (describing "The Trials of the Western Insurgents"); Townsend Ward, The Insurrection of the Year 1794, in the western counties of Pennsylvania (J.B. Lippincott 1858); H.M. Brackenridge, History of the western insurrection in western Pennsylvania: commonly called the whiskey insurrection (W.S. Haven, 1859).

[315] Coakley, supra note 312, 69-77.

[316] John Adams, Proclamation on Insurrection in Pennsylvania, 12 March 1799, https://founders.archives.gov/documents/Adams/99-02-02-3377.

[317] These prosecutions also occasioned a widely-cited jury charge from Circuit Justice Chase, in which he repeatedly discussed "insurrection," describing it as a "rising of any body of the people" and arguing that it qualified as treason because "an insurrection to resist or prevent, by force, the execution of any statute of the United States, has a direct tendency to dissolve all the bands of society, to destroy all order and all laws, and also all security for the lives, liberties and property of the citizens of the United States." Case of Fries, 9 F. Cas. 924, 930 (C.C.D. Pa. 1800). See also 1 Wharton, supra note 314, at 458-609 (describing these proceedings as "The Trial of the Northampton Insurgents").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

concerted acts of forcible interference with federal officials' ability to perform their duties under law.[318]

Nat Turner's Rebellion, a violent slave revolt in 1831, did not lead to a presidential invocation of the Insurrection Act.[319] But it surely would have been a classic illustration of at least an "insurrection" and perhaps even a "rebellion"—a concerted uprising seeking forcibly to overturn the legal order and thwart government's ability to execute the law. A published report of Turner's own account called it both an insurrection[320] and in one instance an "open rebellion."[321] This example, too, likely would have formed part of the background understanding of the terms insurrection or rebellion at the time they were employed in Section Three.

More broadly, slavery and anti-slavery produced other prominent incidents that would have been classed as small or large insurrections against government—instances that went beyond individual instances of legal disobedience, or of resistance to the laws themselves, and rose to the level of active, concerted, unlawful resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws. Specifically, revolt against the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 sometimes took the form of slave liberation in open defiance of government authority. For example, in Boston in 1850 and 1851, a local vigilance committee invoked "the 'higher law' doctrine" to openly harbor freed slaves to the point that President Millard Fillmore "threatened to send in federal troops."[322] In Christiana, Pennsylvania in 1851, a Quaker community took up arms (!) to defend fugitive slaves, shooting several slaveowners who had arrived from nearby Maryland. This was denounced as an "act of insurrection," and this time President Fillmore did call out federal troops.[323] In Wisconsin in 1859, resistance to federal authority became so widespread as to prefigure the coming of the Civil War.[324] And of course John

---

[318] As with the Whiskey Rebellion, these events show that an "insurrection" in the legal sense did not necessarily have to rise to the level of an attempt to take over or displace the government. See also Elkins & McKitrick at 696-700 (questioning "whether the circumstances really called for military force of any kind").

[319] Federal troops were used to suppress this and other slave rebellions, but "without following the legal procedures laid down in the statutes of 1795 and 1807." Coakley, supra note 312, at 92-94. Coakley suggests that this the failure to go through the Insurrection Acts reflected "the universal dread of slave revolts" at the time and the fact that "t]he slaves had no political constituency." Id. at 94.

[320] See The Confessions of Nat Turner, The Leader of the Late Insurrection in Southampton, VA, as fully and voluntarily made to Thomas R. Gray, at 3, 5, 7, 20, 22 (1831) (calling it "insurrection"); see also Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Nat Turner's Insurrection, 8 Atlantic Monthly 173 (1861)

[321] See Turner, supra note 320, at 3 ("The late insurrection . . . is the first instance in our history of an open rebellion of the slaves") (emphases added).

[322] See McPherson, supra note 231, at 81-84; Cf. Coakley, supra note 312, at 130-131 (noting debate about whether this disturbance in Boston was sufficiently great to trigger the insurrection acts).

[323] McPherson, supra note 231, at 84-85. See also Thomas Slaughter, Bloody Dawn: The Christian Riot and Racial Violence in the Antebellum North (1991); and cf. id. at ix ("The line between riot and rebellion was shifting during the antebellum period.").

[324] See generally H. Robert Baker, The Rescue of Joshua Glover: A Fugitive Slave, the Constitution, and the Coming of the Civil War (2006) (describing resistance, in the mid-to-late1850s, in Wisconsin to federal legal authority to execute the Fugitive Slave Act).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Brown's fateful raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859 was an explicit act of insurrection and rebellion: a quixotic and ill-prepared attempt to foment a massive slave insurrection and to overthrow the power of proslavery governments in the South.[325] These rebels and insurrectionists were fighting deeply unjust laws, but there is no question that they committed many acts of insurrection nonetheless. Rebellion for a good cause is still rebellion.

Another prominently identified insurrection or rebellion would have been Dorr's Rebellion, in Rhode Island, in 1841-1842 which led to the Supreme Court's 1849 decision in Luther v. Borden.[326] There, a cabal claiming to constitute the new, lawful government of Rhode Island engaged in forcible resistance to and sought to overturn the authority of the prior, lawful state government (the "charter" government that traced its authority to Rhode Island's original colonial charter). The federal government did not invoke the Insurrection Act to intervene, but it well might have. When the Supreme Court ultimately adjudicated the case—through the vehicle of a trespass suit by a member of one faction, against members of the other—the Court held that the question of which government constituted the lawful government of the state was a political question committed to the judgment of Congress and the President and that the judiciary lacked authority to interfere with the political branches' actions (and inactions), which had tacitly supported the charter government. The practical result of the decision—relevant to our inquiry– was that the losing side in the struggle (the faction headed by Mr. Dorr) legally could be treated by the prevailing side (the charter government) as having engaged in "insurrection" against the rightful state government. The Court noted, and seemingly accepted, the charter government's characterization of plaintiff and others having "assembled in arms . . . for the purpose of overthrowing the government by military force"[327] and as having attempted "to assert the authority of [the Dorr government] by force,"[328] as amounting to having "engaged in the insurrection."[329] The Court also referred to the government's actions as having been designed to suppress that "insurrection."[330] The Court appeared to equate with "insurrection" the Dorr group's attempts to displace or supersede the existing government and forcibly assert its own claimed authority as a replacement.

Finally, several notable invocations of the Insurrection Act occurred during the period of Reconstruction during the presidency of Ulysses S. Grant.[331] While these

---

[325] McPherson, supra note 231, 202-208. Federal troops helped suppress this insurrection and rebellion too. See Coakley, supra note 312, at 193 ("This intervention was, as in the case of Nat Turner's Rebellion, an emergency measure undertaken without the usual formalities.").
[326] Luther v. Borden, 58 U.S. (7 How.) 1 (1849). On Dorr's Rebellion generally and the federal response, see Coakley, supra note 312, at 119-127.
[327] Luther, 58 U.S. (7 How.) at 8.
[328] Id. at 37
[329] Id. at 46
[330] Id. at 45.
[331] By this time, the Act had been amended yet again. See 17 Stat. 13, 14-15 (1871), §§ 3-4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

events occurred after ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment (and thus could not have formed any part of the subjective understanding of the drafters and ratifiers of the meaning of Section Three), they nonetheless deserve mention as roughly contemporaneous evidence of the objective meaning of "insurrection" as displayed by important usage within a few years of adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. Briefly summarized: In South Carolina in 1871, Grant twice invoked the Insurrection Act (as well as suspending habeas corpus, among other actions) to secure order in dealing with the Ku Klux Klan.[332] In Louisiana, in 1872, a contested gubernatorial election spawned efforts by white supremacists to overthrow the elected pro-Reconstruction Republican government, culminating in the infamous "Colfax Massacre" of April 13, 1873, in which a white mob attacked and massacred perhaps 150 black citizens who had been defending a courthouse in Colfax, Louisiana and, more broadly, the Reconstruction Republican government. President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act as authority to suppress the insurrection that sought to overturn the election result.[333] Later, in 1874, Grant again invoked the Insurrection Act in Louisiana, this time to suppress a white supremacist coup d'etat that had overthrown the Republican governor by force.[334] Federal troops reinstated the lawful government, but the insurrectionists established a rival state government that effectively controlled much of Louisiana outside of the capital—New Orleans at the time. (The conflict lasted until 1877, when Reconstruction was abandoned by the national government and white supremacists took full control of the state.) In Mississippi, in 1874, white supremacists fabricated criminal charges against the newly elected black sheriff, Peter Crosby, and deposed him by mob action.[335] Black citizens organizing an effort to reinstate Crosby were attacked by white mobs, resulting in the massacre of as many as 300 black citizens. Again, President Grant invoked the Insurrection Act and sent federal troops to reinstate Crosby and prevent further violence. Also in 1874, in Arkansas, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to quell violence in an ongoing dispute over the 1872 gubernatorial election results.[336] And in 1876, in South Carolina, Grant invoked the Insurrection Act to protect the gubernatorial election process from white supremacist groups.[337] Common to each of these instances during the Grant administration was

---

[332] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 197, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Mar. 24, 1871); http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70253; Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 200, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 12, 1871); for background see Michael Bahar, The Presidential Intervention Principle: The Domestic Use of the Military and the Power of the Several States, 5 Harv. Nat'l Sec. J. 537, 613-14 (2014); Lou Falkner Williams, The Great South Carolina Ku Klux Klan Trials, 1871-1872, at 39-49 (1996).

[333] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 213, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (May 22, 1873) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70364

[334] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 220, Law and Order in the State of Louisiana (Sept. 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=70422

[335]Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 223, Law and Order in the State of Mississippi (Dec. 21, 1874), http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70459.

[336] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 218, Law and Order in the State of Arkansas (May 15, 1874) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70420.

[337] Ulysses S. Grant, Proclamation No. 232, Law and Order in the State of South Carolina (Oct. 17, 1876) http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=70542.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the idea that concerted efforts to overturn lawful popular election results by mob action, force, violence, and intimidation constituted "insurrection" against government.

It is difficult to evaluate precisely the probative force of all of these incidents, and application of federal authority to suppress "insurrections," for understanding Section Three. But they were unquestionably part of the picture, contributing to the background for understanding Section Three's terms. They were very much part of a common historical vocabulary of "insurrection" and "rebellion" and culpable participation in the same, familiar to those who drafted and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment: The Whiskey Rebellion, Shays' Rebellion, Nat Turner's Rebellion, Dorr's Rebellion, the insurrections against the Fugitive Slave Act in the 1850s, John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859—all of these incidents would have informed the general understanding of what constitutes "insurrection or rebellion" and what actions amount to having "engaged in" or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to such uprisings. They all tend to support our working definitions of Section Three's terms. Even President Grant's post-1868 invocations of the Insurrection Act, to combat attempts to overthrow election results or displace lawful state authority, may shine some interpretive light backward on Section Three's meaning. If an uprising of similar nature to these events were to occur, it seems to us that it likely would have been understood as an insurrection or rebellion within the coverage of Section Three.

b. The Congressional Exclusion Debates

As noted above, the federal Ironclad Oath adopted during the Civil War closely paralleled the requirements and consequences of Section Three. These parallels are drawn more sharply by a series of cases where both houses of Congress enforced the oath to exclude their own prospective members from being seated. As one scholar has put it, these debates "were littered with relevant concepts, and we can judge the Fortieth Congress's reception to those similar arguments as indicative of their expectations as to Section 3's application."[338] Moreover, several of these proceedings occurred right around the time of the proposal and ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. In some cases after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, Congress applied Section Three itself, further demonstrating continuity and overlap with the Ironclad Oath.

The familiar source compiling the houses' debates on such matters of internal administration is Hinds' Precedents, which we rely on here.[339]

[338] Lynch, supra note 5, at 196. Lynch ably and accurately describes the most important such cases. See id. at 196-201, 207-210. We find little or nothing to disagree with in his account and analysis of these disputes and are indebted to Lynch's research and analysis.

[339] See generally 1 Asher C. Hinds, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, ch. 14, pp. 431-486 (1907).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, Kentucky: In 1867, Kentucky submitted eight members-elect to the House, seven of whom were challenged as ineligible on the ground that they had given aid or comfort to the Confederacy, during the Civil War. The Committee on Elections concluded that "no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion," ought to be sworn or seated.[340] A subsequent report determined that such charges needed to be "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony" and establish more than mere lack of active support for the Union or passive sympathy for the rebellion but that "the claimant has by act or speech given aid or countenance to the rebellion."[341] Such acts or speech need not rise to the level of constitutional treason, but they "must have been so overt and public, and must have been done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion."[342]

On this standard, the committee found that four of the challenged members-elect were not proved to have either "engaged in armed hostility" to the Government or provided "aid or comfort" to its adversaries. These four were admitted to their seats. Three others—John Y. Brown, John D. Young, and Lawrence Trimble—posed more serious difficulty, however. The House ultimately refused to seat either Brown or Young but admitted Trimble. The facts of these cases are instructive explorations of the boundaries between free speech and "aid or comfort."

The House addressed the John Y. Brown case first. "This election case," Hinds' reports, was "the first of its kind since the formation of the Constitution, and recognized by the House as of the highest importance."[343] It also involved an incident of pure speech as disqualifying a member-elect from office: John Y. Brown had explicitly embraced and advocated violent resistance to the Union in Kentucky. Indeed, he had gone so far as to urge the shooting of any man who volunteered for service in Union forces. Brown's disqualifying conduct consisted solely of such acts of speech. The committee relied on a letter Brown had written to the Louisville Courier in 1861 in which Brown had gone to great lengths to affirm his support for the rebellion in unequivocal terms:

> Editors Louisville Courier:
>
> My attention has been called to the following paragraph, which appeared in your paper of this date:
>
> "JOHN YOUNG BROWN'S POSITION.– This gentleman, in reply to some searching interrogatories put to him by Governor Helm,

[340] Id. §448 at 442.
[341] Id. at 443 (emphasis added).
[342] Id.
[343] Id. at 445.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

said, in reference to the call of the President for four regiments of volunteers to march against the South—

'I would not send one solitary man to aid that Government, and those who volunteer should be shot down in their tracks.'"

This ambiguous report of my remarks has, I find, been misunderstood by some who have read it, who construe my language to apply to the government of the Confederate States! What I did say was this:

"Not one man or one dollar will Kentucky furnish Lincoln to aid him in his unholy war against the South. If this northern army shall attempt to cross our borders, we will resist it unto the death; and if one man shall be found in our Commonwealth to volunteer to join them he ought and I believe will be shot down before he leaves the State."

This was not said in reply to any question propounded by ex-Governor Helm, as you have stated, and is no more than I frequently uttered public and privately prior to my debate with him.

Respectfully,

JOHN YOUNG BROWN.[344]

The House concluded, on the strength of this letter alone, that Brown had supported the rebellion and therefore voted to exclude him. This became a precedent for the House's subsequent actions in other cases. The standard applied—whether the facts, "proved by clear and satisfactory testimony," showed that an individual had, by an "act or speech … overt and public … done or said under such circumstances, as fairly to show that they were actually designed to, and in their nature tended to, forward the cause of the rebellion"—had been satisfied by Brown's letter.[345]

Similarly, in March 1868, the House excluded John D. Young under this standard. Young's case also involved speech. The Young case involved numerous expressions of support and sympathy for the South and against the Union, and the committee explicitly took the position "that 'aid and comfort' may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion" by a person (like Young, a county judge) in an "influential position."[346] But Young's case was overdetermined, because there was also testimony that Young had provided material assistance to Confederate troops, by giving them food and provisions and assisting in the capture by Confederate troops of a Union soldier. According to the committee, Young's "expressions and admissions" of sympathy for the enemy, "taken in connection with the open acts of 'aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States,'" established that he could not "'honestly and truly take the oath,'"[347] and the full House agreed.

[344] Quoted in id. at §449, p. 445.
[345] Id. at §449, pp. 443, 448.
[346] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).
[347] Id. at §451, p. 452 (quoting House Report 40-29 (1868)) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The contrasting case of Lawrence Trimble, however, showed that mere political opposition did not establish disloyalty. Aside from some overly vague allegations that he had traded with the enemy, the core of the case against Trimble were his political speeches. Trimble had been the Union candidate for Congress in 1861 and "made Union speeches in that canvass throughout the district." Trimble opposed Lincoln's war policies after the Emancipation Proclamation, asserting that the North was waging "an abolition war" and reportedly was opposed to "voting any more men or money to aid in carrying it on." These views and statements, however, were not materially different from other members' statements in Congress opposing the administration's policy. The committee (and House) considered Trimble's "loyalty unquestioned" and found no case for disqualifying him.[348]

Next consider Tennessee: Tennessee supplied two interesting membership cases, one in the House and one in the Senate. Both involved undoubtedly pro-Union men who nonetheless had held state office under Tennessee's secessionist regime and sworn oaths under it, while seemingly using their positions to support Union interests and resist the secession government. This presented a distinct problem under the Ironclad Oath, which required its swearer to disaffirm that he had ever accepted or exercised office under a pretended government hostile to the United States. What to do? In each case—Senator-elect David Patterson, who had served as a state court judge in the eastern region of Tennessee during the Confederate regime; and Representative-elect R.R. Butler, who had retained his seat in the state legislature during secession, while opposing it—the respective house ultimately admitted the applicant to his seat and permitted him to take a modified oath omitting the never-held-office-under-a-hostile-regime sentence.[349]

A potentially broad understanding of "aid or comfort" also surfaced in the exclusion of Maryland Senator-elect Philip Thomas in 1867.[350] What had Thomas done to support the South in its rebellion? Apparently, he had permitted his minor son, a member of his household, to join the Confederate army, and given his son $100 on the way out the door. The Senate debated whether Thomas had done anything more by way of counsel or encouragement of his son's taking up arms against the United States and it is not clear how the senators evaluated such evidence. Some seemed to have thought Thomas's treatment of his son disqualifying. Others focused instead on allegations that Thomas had resigned as President Buchanan's Treasury Secretary because he disagreed with the President's decision to send federal reinforcements to

---

[348] Id. at §453, p. 459.

[349] Id. at §453, 455, pp. 459-461, 462-465. In Butler's case, two-thirds of both houses voted him amnesty. Id. at 464-465. In Patterson's case, the Senate tried to pass a bill altering the oath for Patterson, but the House tabled it, id. at 46, but perhaps that is okay, if application of the Ironclad Oath, to members of Congress, is a function of each house's separate power to make rules governing its proceedings. U.S. Const. art. I §5.

[350] Hinds' at §§457, 458 at pp. 465-470.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Charleston Harbor.[351] Either theory of Thomas's exclusion suggests that "aid or comfort" to rebellion was understood to sweep broadly and possibly include conduct of a somewhat more passive or quiescent nature—allowing one's son to become a rebel soldier, under circumstances where such permission (and financial assistance) might have been withheld; opposing, or resisting, measures to suppress insurrection and defend national institutions and personnel, and resigning office in protest against such measures.

Cases like these continued in the House and Senate after Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment had taken effect. By this point, the basic principles were more established, and the cases were sometimes more factbound or less illuminating, but they further confirm the continuity between Section Three and the Ironclad Oath, and illustrate the understanding of Section Three very shortly after its adoption.

To recount them very briefly: In 1868, John Christy had received the most votes for Congress in Georgia's sixth district, but the House committee found that Christy, by his own admission, had given "aid, countenance, counsel, and encouragement" to persons in armed hostility against the Union and therefore, "in accordance with the precedent in the case of John Y. Brown," was disqualified by the Ironclad Oath, and he was not seated.[352] In 1869, the House sat John Rice from Kentucky despite a divided House committee's conclusion that he was disqualified by Section Three.[353] The pages of the Congressional Globe reveal a debate about whether Rice had in fact joined the Confederate Army, which turned on the dubious credibility of two witnesses.[354] In 1870, the House allowed Representative George Booker of Virginia to keep his seat, despite subsequent charges that he had directly supported the militia of the rebel government in his role as justice of the peace. But Booker made an apparently persuasive case that he had been loyal all along, even as he worked within the Confederacy, and as a practical matter he had already been seated. For one reason or the other, the House ultimately voted to table the issue, leaving Booker in office.[355] Also in 1870, the House allowed Representative Lewis McKenzie of Virginia to sit, despite various votes he had taken as a member of the Virginia house of [351] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470 (reporting that Senator Sumner withdrew a resolution focused on Thomas's son "it being urged that Mr. Thomas's conduct as a Cabinet officer in 1860 afforded more certain grounds for action."). See also Cong. Globe 40th Cong. 2nd Sess. at 1260-1262 (Feb. 19, 1868).

---

[352] Hinds' at §459, pp. 470-472. Interestingly, the Governor of Georgia had concluded that Christy was disqualified under Section Three while the House committee relied on the Ironclad Oath "independently of any question as to ineligibility under the fourteenth amendment," id.

[353] Hinds' at §460, pp. 472-473.

[354] Congressional Globe, 41st Cong, 2nd Sess. pp. 5442-5447 (July 11, 1870). Rice had also been in the Kentucky legislature and voted for a resolution against the coercion of the southern states; but everybody agreed this was not enough to count as aid or comfort, because it was only in January 1861: "No war exist[ed] at the time" and it was before "the policy of the Government had been announced." Id. at 5443 (Butler); see also id. at 5445 (Garfield). Nor could Rice be excluded solely because of his politics. See id. at 5445 ("[T]his man was a Democrat. That is a political sin, but it is not a crime under the law. He is a Democrat yet. I think he is very wrong in being that, but yet it is not a crime.") (Logan).

[355] Hinds' at §461, pp. 474-475.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

delegates in 1861—votes pledging Virginia's commitment to "unite her destiny with the slaveholding States of the South" should attempts to reconcile differences between North and South fail, supporting Virginia's willingness to fight, and to provision Virginia fighters. Because all of these votes occurred before voter ratification of Virginia's secession ordinance on May 23, 1861, and because McKenzie remained "an outspoken Union man" after secession and throughout the war, the House concluded he had neither engaged in rebellion nor given it aid or comfort.

Finally, in 1871, the Senate declined to seat Senator-elect Zebulon Vance from North Carolina.[356] The exclusion of Vance was a particularly easy case. After serving in Congress, he had led Confederate troops in battle against the Union and then became the wartime governor of Confederate-regime North Carolina.[357] If anyone had engaged in rebellion and given aid or comfort to the Union's enemies, it was Vance. He was clearly barred by both Section Three and by the Ironclad Oath. He could be seated only if Congress chose to exercise amnesty, which it did not do until later.[358]

These congressional seating challenges suggest some rough lines as to what Congress thought was "aid or comfort" to the Confederacy. On one hand, direct material support for the rebel cause—providing supplies or working with enemy forces—was clearly aid or comfort. On the other hand, disfavored political beliefs and pre-war political stances were clearly not. In between lay contested territory. But there was no bright line, for instance, protecting all speech or political activity. In some situations, speech alone could be disqualifying. A sufficiently clear and unequivocal statement of disloyalty in the form of proposed active resistance to Union authority or encouragement to violence against Union forces appears generally to have been thought disqualifying. Voluntarily holding confederate office or advocating resistance to the Union also could be enough to disqualify. We do not suggest these individual applications—many of which were contested and complicated—are strictly binding. But they provide useful concrete evidence for how parts of Section Three may well have been understood and thought to work.[359]

---

[356] See generally Hinds' at §463, pp. 478-486.

[357] See generally Richard E. Yates, Zebulon B. Vance: as War Governor of North Carolina, 1862-1865, 3 J. Southern Hist. 43 (1937).

[358] Vance ultimately had the last laugh. Vance was excluded from the 1872 amnesty statute because he had served in the thirty-sixth Congress, Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142; https://bioguide.congress.gov/search/bio/V000021. Cf. Franklin Ray Shirley, Zebulon Vance, Tarheel Spokesman 71 & 152 n. 36 (1962) (claiming that Vance had been waiting for the 1872 amnesty until his opponent Abbott had somehow engineered the amendment to the 1872 act that excluded Vance), but Congress then passed a private bill granting him individual amnesty. 17 Stat. 691 (June 10, 1872). Thanks to Gerard Magliocca for this source. Vance subsequently returned to the North Carolina governorship, and then to the Senate until his death in 1884. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 111 n. 126.

[359] Finally, though it occurred long after this period, there has been one additional congressional exclusion under Section Three: the 1919 exclusion of socialist newspaper editor Victor Berger from the House. See supra notes 222-224 and accompanying text. The Berger episode of course has no probative value about the original meaning of Section Three, since it occurred more than 50 years after Section

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6. Legislative History

There is only a little fruit to be gleaned from the legislative history of the Fourteenth Amendment—the records of the proposing Congress's debates over its various provisions and of state ratification debates. The Fourteenth Amendment's legislative history is famously voluminous, and Section Three—like the other "forgotten" sections of the Amendment (Section Two and Section Four)—was much more salient to the debates then than it is to today.[360] As briefly noted above, the legislative history supports the key propositions we have advanced earlier in this article—that Section Three was designed to be general and prospective, and not limited to the situation of the Civil War and Reconstruction; that Section Three's disqualification was seen by proponents and opponents alike to be self-executing and automatic; and that Section Three was understood to supersede (or satisfy) prior constitutional limitations.[361]

Perhaps somewhat surprisingly, however, we have found relatively few interpretive insights about the scope of conduct triggering disqualification under Section Three. What evidence there is generally confirms the understanding that the provision would have sweeping consequences: there appears to have been substantial agreement—by both opponents and proponents—that the provision would cover a broad range of activity supporting or assisting the South's efforts to throw off the authority of the Union and the Constitution. The original proposal would have excluded all such persons from voting, not just officeholding and, further, would not have been limited in its coverage to former oath-swearing federal and state officeholders. However, the language concerning what conduct triggered disfranchisement (and, as later revised, disqualification from officeholding) was carried forward throughout the discussion. Opponents of what eventually became Section Three thought the range of what was included in disability-triggering conduct (that is, when one might be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion or given "aid or comfort" to it) was hugely broad in its reach, sweeping in nearly everybody in the rebel South—and viewed the proposal as regrettable on account of such breadth. Significantly, proponents of the amendment did not disagree with its opponents concerning the breadth of the description of disability-triggering conduct. The proponents simply thought such breadth appropriate, necessary, and valuable.[362]

As things proceeded, Congress narrowed the provision in two specific respects. Congress backed away from complete disfranchisement to disqualification from holding office. And relatedly, it narrowed Section Three to cover only those who had sworn a prior oath of loyalty to the U.S. Constitution as federal or state officeholders. Rather

---

Three was enacted. In our view, the House's decision was mistaken—an overzealous reading of the law, the facts, or both.

[360] See generally Graber, Volume 1, supra note 8.

[361] See supra notes 12, 59, & 184.

[362] See generally Graber Section Three manuscript, supra note 12.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

than disenfranchising pretty much the entire white South, it would disqualify from future office those who had held constitutional office and then rebelled.

But what did not change was the broad description of the conduct that triggered disfranchisement (in the earlier proposal) or disqualification from office (in the proposal eventually agreed to).[363] As noted, there is not a great deal of explication of what this conduct was, exactly. But the overall tenor of the debates over what became Section Three suggest that all meaningful connection with, support for, or aid to the Confederacy—officeholding, military service (whether voluntary or not), political support or endorsement, provision of material assistance to rebellion or rebel forces—was regarded by the proposing Congress as covered. The legislative history of Section Three—such as it is—supports a broad understanding of the prohibition contained in its language.

7. Early Applications of Section Three

A final set of evidence comes from the handful of cases applying Section Three shortly after its adoption. Once again, because these examples come after the provision was adopted, they do not provide direct evidence of its original public meaning, but they still can be informative.[364] Section Three came up in a range of procedural and institutional situations; each of these situations further confirms Section Three's broad substantive sweep.[365]

For instance, the 1867 Military Reconstruction Act—which imposed provisional governments on the southern states until they obtained readmission to representation in Congress by enacting new, republican, Reconstruction-compliant constitutions—directly incorporated Section Three of the proposed (but not yet ratified) Fourteenth Amendment as a restriction on those governments. Persons disqualified

---

[363] Congress also rejected a series of proposed amendments to Section Three that would have narrowed or limited the conduct or persons to which the language would apply – e.g., only to persons who joined the Confederacy while still holding prior office under the U.S. Constitution; only to persons who had sworn oaths to the Constitution since 1851; only to persons who had not received presidential pardons; and only to persons who had voluntarily served the confederacy. Republican defenders of Section Three successfully opposed these proposed limitations on Section Three's scope, arguing that limiting the ban to persons who still held office under the Constitution when they joined the Confederacy would indulge the pretext that resignation from office before engaging in or assisting rebellion absolved one of any prior duty of loyalty to the United States Constitution. Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. p. 2770 (statement of Sen. Howard). Republicans likewise rejected the proposed limitation to persons who had "voluntarily" assisted or participated in rebellion, because it would raise unnecessary and difficult proof problems and permit spurious claims of involuntary participation. Indeed, one senator noted that Alexander Stephens, Vice President of the Confederacy, had testified before the Joint Committee on Reconstruction that he "never entered into the rebellion voluntarily"! Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. p. 2918 (statement of Sen. Willey).

[364] See, e.g., Baude, Liquidation, supra note 242, at 61-62; Paulsen, Most Dangerous, supra note 242, at 293, 303.

[365] Additionally, some of Congress's application of the Ironclad Oath to its own members also entailed the application of Section Three, see supra Part IV.A.5.b.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

under Section Three could not hold office under the provisional governments, nor could they serve in—or even vote for those who would serve in—the state's constitutional convention.[366]

Andrew Johnson's attorney general, Henry Stanbery, published a two-part opinion in 1867 setting forth his interpretation of the Act and thus, indirectly, of Section Three.[367] Stanberry's opinion is explicitly slanted toward a narrow construction of Section Three, because of his concerns that it would be punitive and ex post facto in this context.[368] Even so, Stanberry's opinion found Section Three's definition of what constituted participation in rebellion to be quite broad:

> "All those who, in legislative or other official capacity, were engaged in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, or persons who, in their individual capacity, have done any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion, may well be said, in the meaning of this law, to have engaged in rebellion."[369]

As to individuals, Stanberry also reiterated several times that any voluntary support, even if not violent, was covered and culpable. He found "it to be clear, that in the sense of this law persons may have engaged in rebellion without having actually levied war or taken arms,"[370] and added that "wherever an act is done voluntarily in aid of the rebel cause . . . it must work disqualification under this law."[371]

Subsequent cases took even broader positions. For instance, in the 1869 decision of Worthy v. Barrett, the North Carolina Supreme Court concluded that a state sheriff was disqualified under Section Three for holding basically the same office as a sheriff when his state was in rebellion. The court's reasoning on this issue was succinct but clear:

> What will amount to having engaged in the rebellion?
>
> (1st.) Holding any of these offices under the Confederate government.

---

[366] An Act to provide for the more efficient Government of the Rebel States, 14 Stat. 428, 429, sec. 5-6 (March 2., 1867).
[367] Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 141 (1867); Henry Stanbery, The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 182 (1867).
[368] 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 159-160. But see supra Part III.A-B (explaining why the constitutional ex post facto and attainder principles do not apply to Section Three, especially as applied to new insurrections and rebellions).
[369] Id. at 161-162 (emphasis added)
[370] Id. at 161.
[371] Id. at 165.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> 2d Voluntarily aiding the rebellion, by personal service, or by contributions, other than charitable, of any thing that was useful or necessary in the Confederate service.[372]

That is, the North Carolina Supreme Court embraced Stanberry's view that almost any voluntary assistance to the rebel cause was a form of engaging in rebellion, but also held that holding any office, even an ordinary non-military office far from the front lines, was a form of engaging in rebellion covered by Section Three.[373]

Shortly after this—and shortly after Chief Justice Chase's unsound and unfortunate decision in Griffin's Case had held that Section Three required congressional legislation in order to be put into operation – Congress enacted federal procedures to directly enforce Section Three in federal court. The 1870 Enforcement Act, also known as the First Ku Klux Klan Act, authorized district attorneys of the United States to bring quo warranto actions to remove officials holding office "contrary to the provisions of the third section of the fourteenth article of amendment of the Constitution" and to bring criminal prosecutions against person who "shall hereafter knowingly accept or hold" office in violation of Section Three.[374] In proceedings brought under both enforcement sections of the Act, in the short period between 1870 and 1872, the scope of Section Three's prohibition was interpreted broadly. (Recall that in 1872 Congress removed Section Three's disqualification as to most former rebels.)

Consider first a notable criminal prosecution under the 1870 Act. In North Carolina again, this time in federal court, the government brought criminal charges against Amos Powell, for accepting an appointment as county sheriff despite being covered by Section Three.[375] Powell's alleged act of rebellion was having "furnished a substitute for himself to the Confederate army," and Powell's defense was that this was involuntary, because he was about to be involuntarily conscripted himself.[376] This gave the federal court, through Judge Hugh Lennox Bond, occasion to instruct the jury on the relevance of voluntariness to Section Three:

> [T]he word "engage" implies, and was intended to imply, a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection or Rebellion, and to bring it to a successful termination; and unless you find the defendant did that, with which he is charged, voluntarily, and not by compulsion, he is not guilty of the indictment. But it is not every appearance of force nor timid fear that will

---

[372] Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 203 (1869). The court also applied the Worthy rule to the even easier case of a county attorney who "took part in th[e] rebellion by serving in the Confederate army, voluntarily." In Re Tate, 63 N.C. 308 (1869).

[373] By contrast, Stanberry had concluded that officers who "discharged official duties not incident to war, but in the preservation of order and the administration of law, are not to be considered as thereby engaging in rebellion." 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 162.

[374] 16 Stat. 140, 142-143, sections 14 & 15. See supra note 54.

[375] United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605 (C.C.D.N.C 1871).

[376] Id. at 607.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> excuse such actual participation in the Rebellion or Insurrection. Defendant's conduct must have been prompted by a well grounded fear of great bodily harm and the result of force, which the defendant was neither able to escape nor resist. And further, the defendant's action must spring from his want of sympathy with the insurrectionary movement, and not from his repugnance to being in an army, merely.[377]

In other words, only great duress and pure heart would be a defense if one's conduct otherwise provided material support to the rebellion. Section Three's disqualification for having "engaged" in insurrection covered a wide swath of voluntary participatory acts supporting or assisting rebellion, some bordering on near-passive acquiescence.

Meanwhile, in Tennessee. the U.S. Attorney brought dozens of federal enforcement actions, including against three members of the Tennessee Supreme Court.[378] Many of those charged were unquestionably covered by Section Three because they had fought in the Civil War, for the Confederacy. But some were charged for more remote participation. For instance, Thomas Nelson, one of the Tennessee Justices, had been a unionist during the war, and indeed at one point a prisoner of the Confederacy. His participation in the rebellion appears to have been limited to being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from Tennessee, after Tennessee's purported secession, and traveling to Washington to attempt to represent the state in Congress.[379] While these Section Three claims were never adjudicated, the fact that they were brought in the first place is consistent with the broad sweep of Section Three.[380]

The other scattered discussion of Section Three we have found are more ambiguous, but still consistent with these broad interpretations of Section Three's substantive disqualification—broad interpretations of insurrection, rebellion, "engaged in," and so on. Recall, for instance, that in Griffin's Case, it was essentially taken as given that Judge Hugh Sheffey would be disqualified by Section Three (if it applied) because he was "a member of the legislature of Virginia in 1862 during the late Rebellion, and as such voted for measures to sustain the so-called Confederate States in their war against the United States."[381] Other cases are consistent with similarly

---

[377] Id. Additionally, Powell had served as a justice of the peace under the Confederate government, but the federal court held this not to qualify, for reasons similar to those articulated by Attorney General Stanberry. Id.

[378] Sam D. Elliott, When the United States Attorney Sued to Remove Half the Tennessee Supreme Court: The Quo Warranto Cases of 1870, 49 Tenn. B.J. 20 (2013); see also Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.

[379] For one fawning account of Nelson, see Oliver P. Temple, Notable Men of Tennessee From 1833 to 1875. at 166-215 (1912).

[380] Justice Nelson resigned while these actions were pending, and the rest of the actions were abandoned with the passage of the 1872 Amnesty Act and a change in the federal attitude towards Section Three. Elliott, supra note 378.

[381] In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D.Va. 1869).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

broad assumptions.[382] We have found none that took a substantially narrower view of Section Three, and even if some exist, they would seem to be the minority and inferior construction.

The application of Section Three immediately after its enactment is consistent with what the text, structure, context, and history of Section Three all tell us: to have "engage[d] in insurrection and rebellion," or given "aid or comfort" to "enemies" was understood to embrace an incredibly broad sweep of voluntary conduct that provides support, material assistance, or specific encouragement to such actions.

In the end, the sum total of evidence concerning the original textual meaning of Section Three—contemporaneous dictionary definitions; parallel constitutional use of the same or similar language; the inferences that fairly may be drawn from the legislative history of Section Three's drafting; the especially strong evidence from 1860s Civil War era political and legal usage of nearly the precise same terms (in prominent presidential statements, congressional enactments and their implementation, and a landmark Supreme Court constitutional decision employing the same terms); the general legal backdrop of eighteenth century Insurrection Acts and the myriad and familiar historical incidents of "insurrection" and "rebellion" to which they applied; and finally early practice enforcing Section Three—points in a consistent direction: toward a broad understanding of what constitutes insurrection and rebellion and a remarkably broad understanding of what types of conduct constitute engaging in or perhaps giving aid or comfort to such movements.

B. What Prior Officeholders are Covered? What Future Offices are Barred?

The next step in the analysis of Section Three is rather more tedious than difficult. But it is important to get it right: Holders of what prior offices or positions are covered by Section Three's disqualification from future office if they engaged in insurrection or rebellion? And from what future offices or positions are they thereby disqualified? The text of Section Three takes up these points in reverse order (and so we shall too) and uses slightly different language for each category.

First, the offices or positions from which a disqualified person is barred:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or an elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State … [383]

[382] Sands v. Commonwealth, 62 Va. (21 Gratt.) 871, 873, 885–87 (1872). There is reason to think there were hundreds of other Section Three actions brought during this time period, but few records of the specifics of the cases. Magliocca, Amnesty, supra note 5, at 109-110.
[383] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the offices or positions previously held, and for which an oath to the Constitution was taken, that trigger Section Three's disqualification:

> … who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States … [384]

We begin with a few observations.

First, the language of these provisions should be read in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one.[385] Keep this in mind as we proceed: we think readers should be wary of any interpretation of Section Three that would impute to the text a hyper-technical set of hidden distinctions not fully warranted by the language. Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside.

Second, it appears that the list of disqualification-triggering offices tracks closely, but not identically, the listing of positions for which the original Constitution imposed an oath requirement. Article VI of the Constitution dictates that "Senators and Representatives . . . Members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several states, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."[386] Article II, overlapping this general oath mandate, prescribes a specific oath for the President, who swears both that he will "faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States" and

---

[384] Id.

[385] See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Captain James T. Kirk and the Enterprise of Constitutional Interpretation: Some Modest Proposals from the Twenty-third Century, 59 Albany L. Rev. 671, 674-76 (1995). For instance, consider the story, passed down from Albert Gallatin to Max Farrand to William Treanor, that Gouverneur Morris slyly attempted to replace a comma with a semicolon in Article I in order to convert the "General Welfare" Clause from a limitation on the tax power into a freestanding power of regulation. William Michael Treanor, The Case of the Dishonest Scrivener: Guverneur Morris and the Creation of the Federalist Constitution, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 20-24 (2021). Putting aside whether this story is really true, David S. Schwartz, Framing the Framer: A Commentary on Treanor's Governeur Morris as Dishonest Scrivener, 120 Mich. L. Rev. 51, 69-73 (2022), a sensible approach to constitutional interpretation should obviously resist such antics. Even if Morris had succeeded in smuggling in the semi-colon, that maneuver should not be decisive in interpreting the Clause. See Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 338-339 & n. 151.

[386] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl.3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"'to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.'"[387]

Section Three's listing of triggering positions largely tracks the substance (and to some extent even the sequence) of the all-offices-legislative-executive-judicial-federal-and-state oath mandates. Section Three's list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified builds on this list. All positions that trigger disqualification are disqualified-from. In addition, the disqualified-from list includes, notably, presidential electors, who are not listed in the Constitution as persons required to swear an oath to the Constitution. The wording also appears designed to clarify that the ban extends to "military" offices—including state military offices—whether or not they would be considered "executive" offices under state law or Article VI. Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application. And if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions plus disqualified from being an elector for President and Vice President. That seems to be the basic structure of the provision.

Our third observation is related. It appears to us that the text's overall project of office-listing, in both clauses, was designed to be reasonably comprehensive, covering the waterfront: both taking care not to accidentally leave out anything considered important—including everybody who was constitutionally required to have sworn an oath—and adding positions where appropriate, as with adding the category of electors to the list of positions from which a covered person is disqualified.

With these principles in mind, it appears to us that the two clauses—describing what past positions trigger disqualification and what future positions fall within the scope of that disqualification—can and should be read, together, in a straightforward manner. First, as to the persons to whom the provision applies (the second, "triggering" clause): Section Three's disqualification attaches to persons who previously swore an oath to support the Constitution as:

> [i] a "member" of Congress, or as
> [ii] an "officer of" the United States, or as > [iii] a "member" of any State legislature, or as > [iv] an "executive or judicial officer of" any State.[388]

---

[387] U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 8. On the Presidential Oath Clause generally, see Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Constitution of Necessity, 79 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1257, 1260-1267 (2004); on "to the best of my Ability," see William Baude, Signing Unconstitutional Laws, 86 Ind. L.J. 303, 310 (2011).
[388] U.S. Const. amdt. XIV, sec. 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These four categories are then closely paralleled (with differences noted) in the description of offices from which covered persons are excluded (the first clause). Covered insurrectionists, rebels, and aid-and-comforters are disqualified from being:

> [i] "a Senator or Representative" in Congress (paralleling "member," a seemingly purely stylistic variation) or
> [ii] an elector for President or Vice President (a new exclusion from a position that is not an oath-required triggering position); or
> [iii] holding "any office, civil or military," "under" either federal or state government (paralleling "officer" of the United States or of any State, respectively, in the second and fourth triggering categories above—with the noted clarification of the inclusion of "military" officers).

The description "civil" office, in the disqualified-from list seems designed to embrace the categories of "executive or judicial" officer in the triggering list. Though somewhat more awkward, we think an elected office in a state legislature also qualifies as a "civil" office within the language and design of Section Three, reading the word "office" in this context in an ordinary, non-technical sense.[389]

The overall result is a broad list of disqualification-triggering positions covering essentially every major federal or state legislative, executive, and judicial office; and a list of barred-from positions embracing all of the above plus electors for president and vice president (and clarifying "military"). The legislative positions in question are the relevant elected offices—members of the legislature, whether a state legislature or the federal Congress—and do not embrace unelected staff positions. The executive positions embrace anyone in the executive branches of federal or state government who holds an "office" within that branch.

To be sure, there might be ancillary questions concerning what federal executive and judicial positions qualify as an "office," held by an "officer"—as opposed to non-officer, non-"office"-holding employees. That is: exactly how far down the organizational chart does the list of triggering and disqualified-from positions go?[390] Like-

---

[389] Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5 (setting forth arguments why state legislative offices are included within the general catch-all category of excluded-from "civil" offices.); contra John Randolph Tucker, General Amnesty, 126 N. Am. Rev. 53, 54 (1878). None of this in our view affects the question whether a Member of Congress may properly be designated as an "Officer" to whom the duties of the office of President may devolve upon presidential and vice-presidential death, resignation, or inability, which turns on different considerations. Compare Akhil Reed Amar & Vikram David Amar, Is the Presidential Succession Law Constitutional?, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 113 (1995) with John F. Manning, Not Proved: Some Lingering Questions About Legislative Succession to the Presidency, 48 Stan. L. Rev. 141 (1995).

[390] Serious scholarship has explored those questions with respect to the Appointments Clause. Jennifer L. Mascott, Who Are "Officers of the United States"?, 70 Stan. L. Rev. 443 (2018). We do not address that somewhat peripheral question here, but leave such issues for another day.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

wise, for the federal judicial branch, Article III judges and justices are plainly covered. (Other officers in the judicial branch, such as the clerks in Ex Parte Hennen,[391] are presumably covered as well—as well as perhaps bankruptcy judges, magistrate judges and the like.)[392] Non-office-holding employees, again, would not be covered. And of course there might be similar residual questions as to what state government positions constitute state executive "office" held by "officers" (thus, perhaps, the special need for designation "military," to be sure state military positions are included), and what state judicial-branch positions constitute a judicial office. But in the main, the description of who all is covered by Section Three and what offices such person, if disqualified, is excluded from holding strikes us as fairly straightforward.

The only challenge anyone has raised concerning this general description is the argument by professors Josh Blackman and Seth Tillman that a person who has served as President (and the same argument is made as to Vice President), while perhaps having held an office "under" the United States, is not properly classified as an "officer of" the United States.[393] On this view, disqualified persons might be barred from being President or Vice President—the authors are somewhat non-committal about this[394]—but having been President or Vice President, and engaged in insurrection or rebellion, does not trigger disqualification of an individual from anything! On this argument, the President and Vice President—alone among constitutional oath-takers—are exempt from Section Three's consequences.

We do not buy it, for many reasons: First, it adopts precisely the type of "secret code" hidden-meanings hermeneutic we think should be viewed extremely skeptically. Moreover, the code has a facially implausible consequence: an insurrectionist President is not covered by Section Three's disqualification (though nearly every other federal or state officeholder is); the President is (perhaps?) a disqualified-from office but not a disqualification-triggering office. This makes little sense.[395]

---

[391] 38 U.S. 230, 258 (1839) ("[T]hat a clerk is one of the inferior officers contemplated by [the Appointments Clause] cannot be questioned"). To be clear, Hennen dealt with the clerk of court, not what we would now call a term judicial law clerk.

[392] That said, to the extent that one maintains that magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges cannot lawfully exercise judicial power or executive power of their own, see William Baude, Adjudication Outside Article III 133 Harv. L. Rev. 1511, 1554-56, 1574-75 (2020), one might question whether they are truly "officers" at all. Again, we leave this issue for another day.

[393] Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is The President An "Officer of the United States" For Purposes of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 N.Y.U. J. L. & Liberty 1 (2021).

[394] See, e.g., id. at 6, 17, 21.

[395] To be sure, faithful readings of the Constitution sometimes yield counterintuitive outcomes. See Michael Stokes Paulsen, Someone Should Have Told Spiro Agnew, 14 Const. Comm. 245 (1997); (suggesting the possibility that a straightforward reading of the constitutional text yields the "stupid" – and surely inadvertent – result that the Vice President would be the presiding officer over his own impeachment trial in the Senate and that this is a result to be rectified); Baude & Sachs, Grounding, supra note 9, at 1468. But that does not mean we should close our eyes to plausibility and common sense, especially when the proposed textual reading is such a stretch. See also Paulsen, supra, Nothing But the Text, supra note 10, at 1439-1440 (noting cautions concerning use of the "absurdity" canon to

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second (and relatedly), the argument rather implausibly splits linguistic hairs. No one denies that the President is an executive branch officer holding executive office. At the risk of belaboring the obvious: Article II refers to the "office" of President innumerable times. It specifies the length of term for which the President "holds his Office," certain minimum qualifications for eligibility "to that Office," what happens upon the President's removal "from Office," or inability to discharge "the Powers and Duties of said Office," and the oath he shall take before entering "on the Execution of his Office."[396] If the Presidency is not an office, nothing is.

So the argument must rely instead on the fine parsing of prepositional phrases. The President (perhaps?) holds an "office under" the United States but is not an "officer of" the United States? This seems to defy textual common sense. Far more sensible and straightforward to conclude, we think, that the officeholder holding the office of President is an officer "of" the United States who holds office under the authority of the United States. The minor textual difference between the triggering clause ("officer of") and the positions-disqualified clause ("office under")—a choice between prepositions—appears to be of no significant substantive consequence in Section Three, much as other minor textual variations in or among constitutional provisions often do not support differences in meaning.[397] Indeed, one far simpler and more straightforward explanation for the Constitution's use of "office under" and "officer of" in Section Three and elsewhere is that "office" and "officer" simply take different prepositions: the Constitution uses "of" when referring to an officer and "under" when referring to an office.

Finally, even if a plausible argument can be constructed that the difference might have once been thought capable of sustaining a term-of-art distinction with respect to different prepositional phrases in the original Constitution—surmounting the presumption against "secret code" interpretation—there is no evidence of such a distinction in Section Three and little logic to such a distinction either.[398] deny plain textual meaning, but noting how the canon is a sometimes useful tool in discerning actual textual meaning.).

---

[396] See generally U.S. Const. Art. II.

[397] For instance, consider the differently phrased, but seemingly identical enforcement clauses of the Reconstruction Amendments. U.S. Const. amdt. XIII, sec. 2 ("Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."); id. amdt. XIC, sec. 5 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."); id. amdt. XV, sec. 2 ("The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."). Or consider the Constitution's "gratuitous (one could also say strange) punctuation marks." Kesavan & Paulsen, West Virginia, supra note 130, at 348 (giving examples).

[398] One of us has previously complimented Tillman's prior scholarship that attempts to prove such a systematic term-of-art/secret code in the original Constitution. William Baude, Constitutional Officers: A Very Close Reading, JOTWELL (Jul. 28, 2016) https://conlaw.jotwell.com/constitutional-officers-a-very-close-reading/. But the very pieces of evidence that are most arresting in that context also confirm extensive linguistic drift or changing understandings in the decades after the founding. Compare id. (foreign gifts to Washington) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Original Public Meaning of the Foreign

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Third, a variant of the Blackman-Tillman argument was explicitly made and explicitly refuted in the congressional debates proposing Section Three. Senator Reverdy Johnson of Maryland charged that the language employed was defective because the offices of President and Vice President had inadvertently been omitted from Section Three. The amendment "does not go far enough," Johnson averred.[399] "I do not see but that any one of these gentlemen may be elected President or Vice President of the United States, and why did you omit to exclude them?"[400] Johnson was complaining that these two officers should be included in Section Three and there was no good reason to omit them. Whereupon Senator Morrill of Maine interrupted: "Let me call the Senator's attention to the words 'or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States.'"[401] Senator Johnson promptly, and somewhat sheepishly, retreated: "Perhaps I am wrong as to the exclusion from the presidency; no doubt I am; but I was misled by noticing the special exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives."[402]

The Blackman-Tillman argument is not quite the same, but it is the mirror image of Johnson's concern. Johnson's inquiry was whether a covered, insurrectionist nonetheless might become president. The Blackman-Tillman argument is that an insurrectionist president is not an "officer of" the United States whose prior position triggers Section Three's restrictions on future office. The Johnson-Morrill colloquy does not specifically address that reverse-image argument. But it certainly suggests that the framers of Section Three were not parsing it as a secret code with facially implausible consequences. The question whether Section Three applied to former Presidents and Vice Presidents does not appear to have been raised again, by anyone.[403] Nor did anybody else involved in drafting or ratifying Section Three suggest that the mirror-image question would be any different. Subject to all the usual reservations about the use of legislative history (and legislative silence) in determining

---

Emoluments Clause: A Reply to Professor Zephyr Teachout, 107 Nw. U.L. Rev. Colloquy 180, 190 (2013) (contrary practice by Presidents Van Buren, Tyler, and Jackson); compare Baude, supra this note (Hamilton's list) with Seth Barrett Tillman, The Reports of My Death Were Greatly Exaggerated, at 20-21 https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=3037107 (describing a scrivener's "condensed" version of this document likely made "circa 1830" that may reflect a different understanding of the constitutional terms); cf. Blackman & Tillman, supra note 393, at 24-31 (acknowledging, and arguing against, the possibility of linguistic drift). In other words, such secret code (if any) turns out to have been written in disappearing ink.

[399] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st sess. at 2899 (1866)

[400] Id.

[401] Id.

[402] Id.

[403] Former President John Tyler of Virginia subsequently sided with the Confederacy and was elected to the Confederate Congress (but died before assuming office). And former Vice President John Breckinridge subsequently served as a Confederate general and, later, as Confederate Secretary of War. See Blackman & Tillman, supra 393, at 45-46 (acknowledging this). While Tyler and Breckinridge had served in other disqualification-triggering posts, if the text really had failed to include the offices of President and Vice President as triggering disqualification these incidents would have shown that to be a glaring and dangerous omission.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

textual meaning, this further confirms the more natural reading. The only time anything like the question was raised, the point was answered by a proponent of Section Three, clearly and unequivocally, and the questioning Senator accepted the answer as correct.

Fourth and finally, in an additional piece of prepositional jujitsu, Blackman and Tillman tellingly equivocate about whether the President holds "office under" the United States as well. (If he does, Section Three stops covered insurrectionists from becoming President, and if not, not.) Blackman and Tillman do not deny this possibility, but they do not confirm it either. The difficulty for them is that both answers show the implausibility of their position.

If Blackman and Tillman maintain that the President does not hold "office under" the United States, then they must fly in the face of the directly on point discussion between Senators Johnson and Morrill. They must claim to understand Section Three better than its framers. This seems unlikely. But if they confirm that the President does hold "office under" the United States, then they must maintain a sharp and crucial distinction between "office under" and "officer of." As Mark Graber has observed, this distinction was also contradicted by Section Three's framers: "[T]he members of the Congress who framed Section 3 of the 14th Amendment often indicated—and sometimes explicitly stated—that all persons who held office 'under the United States' were officers 'of the United States.' During the debates over Section 3, no representative or senator alluded to the existence of a distinction between 'of' and 'under'. Representatives and senators often described the president as having an 'office under the United States' and being an 'officer of the United States.'"[404] If a secret code was really at work, it was an extraordinarily well-kept secret. The implausibility of both horns of the Blackman-Tillman straddle demonstrates the implausibility of their position.

In short, the ordinary sense of the text; the structure and logic of its provisions; the evident design to be comprehensive; the text's many references to the office of the Presidency as an "office"; the seeming absurdity of the prospect of exclusion of the offices of President and Vice President from triggering the disqualification fashioned [404] Mark Graber Disqualification From Office: Donald Trump v. the 39th Congress, Lawfare (Feb. 24, 2023). Professor Graber notes further that a "unanimous House select committee report issued barely a month after Congress sent the 14th Amendment to the states concluded that 'a little consideration of this matter will show that 'officers of' and 'officers under' the United States are 'indiscriminately used in the Constitution.'" In addition, "[t]he most comprehensive study of state ratification . . . does not point to a single example of any journalist or participant in a state convention who distinguished between 'officers under' and 'officers of' or who otherwise thought a president who participated in an insurrection could not be disqualified under Section 3.'" John Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit. J. Am. Legal Stud. (forthcoming), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4440157; see also Lynch, supra note 5, at 158-160 (collecting authorities supporting the same point); Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 16 n. 48 ("My research . . . shows that President Andrew Johnson repeatedly referred to himself as "the chief executive officer of the United States").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

by the Radical Reconstruction Congress that drafted the Fourteenth Amendment; the fact that the only legislative debate over the language discussing whether Section Three inadvertently omitted the offices of President and Vice President rejected any such suggestion; and the fact that no one ever suggested that the "under/of" difference meant the presidency was not a covered office triggering Section Three, all convince us that the natural conclusion is the correct one: Section Three includes in its coverage, or "triggering" language, insurrectionists who once served as President and Vice President. And Section Three excludes disqualified insurrectionists from subsequently holding the office of either President or Vice President.

C. The Attempted Overthrow of the 2020 Presidential Election

We come finally to the urgent question of the day: How does Section Three apply to the events of 2020-2021—the efforts by Donald Trump (and others) to overthrow the results of the 2020 presidential election and install Trump as president for another term, despite his loss to Joseph Biden?

Consider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021.

Taken as a whole, these actions represented an effort to prevent the lawful, regular, termination of President Trump's term of office in accordance with the Constitution. They were an attempt to unlawfully overturn or thwart the lawful outcome of a presidential election and to install, instead, the election loser as president. They constituted a serious attempt to overturn the American constitutional order. Does Section Three cover this conduct? Did these events constitute "insurrection" or "rebellion" within the meaning of the Constitution? And if so, who all might be said to have "engaged in" that conduct, or perhaps given "aid or comfort" to those who did? We will consider those questions in turn.

1. The Question of Coverage: Insurrection and Rebellion

We begin with the general legal question whether the attempted overturning of the result of the 2020 presidential election is covered by Section Three in any re-

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

spect. Do such efforts, in part or in whole, qualify as insurrection or rebellion, disqualifying prior-oath-swearing persons who participated in such acts from future office? In our view, based on all the foregoing analysis, the answer is yes.

There are multiple arguments for how Section Three would apply to the events of 2020-2021, but let us first focus on the events of January 6, 2021.[405] These include first the cluster of actions taken in assembling, encouraging, charging, and inciting an armed (in part) mob, producing the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol, Congress, and the Vice President. For some, importantly including Trump, these acts would also include subsequent deliberate inaction against the January 6 attack—by persons with duties and capacity to act to suppress, halt, or quell the insurrection in progress—that effectively facilitated, permitted, aided, and encouraged such insurrectionary violence.

Overall, it seems to us to be quite clear that the specific series of events leading up to and culminating in the January 6, 2021 attack qualifies as an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three: "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect."[406] The large group of people who descended upon, entered, and occupied the U.S. Capitol building used force to prevent a key step in the constitutional transfer of power. The group was in part coordinated, not merely a riot.[407] Some members of the group were armed,[408] and many used force to breach the Capitol, to overpower law enforcement there, and to effectuate their unlawful aim.[409]

Furthermore, it seems that, as a whole, the group's goal—to the extent the group had a specific objective in mind—was to disrupt the constitutional transfer of power, by disrupting a necessary formal step in the constitutional process.[410] The invasion of the Capitol on January 6 was not simply a violation of the law (though it was that of course). It was not merely a protest of a particular legal measure, but a forcible prevention and disruption of it. And it was not the disruption of just any legal measure, but of one that was itself central to the allocation of authority under our Constitution. If this is a fair description of what happened on January 6, then that

---

[405] In describing these events, we rely generally here and throughout on the public record assembled by the House January 6th Committee. Final Report, Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol, H.R. 117-000 (117th Cong., 2nd Sess.). Of course, to the extent that a potentially disqualified officer wished to prove that this public record was inaccurate or incomplete as relevant to them, they could attempt to do so in the relevant proceedings and to the relevant decisionmaker. See generally supra Part II.B.

[406] Supra Part IV.A.1. The fact that President Trump may have supported the insurrection, see infra II.C.2.b, does not change this. In our system the President is not "the government," and especially not when Congress is carrying out a constitutionally mandated role in supervising the transfer of power.

[407] See, e.g., January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 499-502, 530-531.

[408] Id. at 640-642.

[409] Id. at 646-647, 651-659.

[410] Id. at 502-510, 521-530.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

day was something quite different from more common acts of protest, even disruptive protest. January 6 was an insurrection.

To be sure, the events of January 6 itself—the attack on Congress and the Capitol—did not remotely rival in overall magnitude, or in sheer carnage, the experience of the U.S. Civil War, where more than 600,000 people died. Still, considered as discrete events, it is notable that more people died, and many more were injured, as a result of the January 6, 2021 attack on the Capitol than died or suffered injuries as a result of the attack on Fort Sumter. The events of January 6 match, in their essential elements—concerted resistance to federal authority, serious attempts to frustrate execution of national law, attacks on government officials and facilities, intimidation and violence—and arguably exceeded in their seriousness, the events of the Whiskey Rebellion, Fries' Rebellion, and other more limited historical insurrections. And at all events, it is less the magnitude or degree of disruption occasioned by an insurrection than whether it fits within the broad meaning of Section Three, as illuminated by evidence of its original meaning and historical understandings. As the Prize Cases teach, not every insurrection or rebellion ripens into a full-fledged war.[411] Most of the time, the authority of the state can nip it in the bud. But it is still an insurrection.[412]

Our assessment of the events of January 6, specifically, as an "insurrection" confirms the judgment made by public authorities: An act of Congress, to "award four congressional gold medals to the United States Capitol Police and those who protected the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021,"[413] found that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. The text of the act contains an official finding: "On January 6, 2021, a mob of insurrectionists forced its way into the U.S. Capitol building and congressional office buildings and engaged in acts of vandalism, looting, and violently attacked Capitol Police officers."[414] Another finding noted the historic magni-

---

[411] See supra Part IV.A.4.c.

[412] What about other disruptive, disorderly, even violent protests during the same time period? For instance, the many such events that erupted during the summer of 2020 in the wake of the police killing of George Floyd? So far as we can tell, none of these were covered by Section Three. Of course mere protest is not insurrection. Some of these protests devolved into riots, but even a riot is not necessarily an insurrection. And even if some of them went further, amounted to "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect," and met the definition of insurrection, they would seem to be insurrections against the state governments, not the United States, and thus outside the scope of Section Three. But of course if there were any other insurrections against the United States, Section Three applies to them all.

[413] Pub. Law. 117-32 (Aug. 5, 2021), 135 Stat. 322.

[414] Id. sec. 1(1). In the state Section Three proceedings against Marjorie Taylor Greene, supra notes 68-73 and accompanying text, the hearing officer cited this statute to conclude "Congress has characterized the Invasion as an insurrection." Initial Decision, Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222-582-OSAH-SEC-STATE-CE-57-Beaudrot, at 9-10 (Georgia Office of State Administrative Hearings, May 6, 2022). The hearing officer found it unnecessary to decide for himself, however, "Whether the Invasion of January 6 amounted to an insurrection." Id. at 18.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

tude and symbolic importance of that insurrection against democracy: "The desecration of the U.S. Capitol, which is the temple of American Democracy, and the violence targeting Congress are horrors that will forever stain our Nation's history."[415] The impeachment charges brought against President Trump as a result of January 6 were equally explicit in concluding that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection. A majority of the House of Representatives approved (232 to 197) an article of impeachment charging then-President Trump with "incitement of insurrection" for the events of January 6th.[416] The Senate's vote to convict Trump of this charge, while falling short of the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution's impeachment process, constituted a substantial majority (57 to 43) of the Senate endorsing the House's charge and characterization. Majorities of both houses of Congress thus determined—at least twice—that January 6th was an insurrection; and in the impeachment proceedings majorities of both houses determined that Trump was responsible for having incited that insurrection.[417]

Finally, there is an additional possibility that we should see the events of January 6, 2021, as just one part of a broader "rebellion" against constitutional government, much like secession—actions seeking unlawfully to displace or replace the authority of lawful constitutional government and substitute a constitutionally unauthorized governmental authority in its stead.

We acknowledge that applying the term "rebellion" to the events of 2020-2021 goes beyond the Civil War era dictionaries. The attempt to overturn the 2020 election was neither an "open and avowed renunciation of the authority of the government," as Webster would have it, nor (outside of the insurrection of January 6) "the taking up of arms" or "forcible opposition" as Bouvier would have it.[418] It is not a perfect fit.

Nonetheless, consider the argument that the term "rebellion" could be used more broadly to describe a coup d'etat seeking to overthrow the constitutional order—including a so-called "bloodless" coup d'etat (where no force is used) and a successful "self-coup" of the bloodless variety[419] (where the existing unlawful regime commands such force that it need not be used). Consider the following chain of logical steps: 1. A military coup d'etat upending lawful government by use of force surely qualifies,

---

[415] Pub. Law. 117-32, sec. 1(4).
[416] H. Res. 24 (117th Cong., 1st Sess. Jan 25, 2021).
[417] For what it is worth, other scholars have also agreed that January 6th was an insurrection. See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 23 n.65; Vlahoplus, supra note 404, at 1; Farah Peterson, Our Constitutionalism of Force, 122 Colum. L. Rev. 1539, 1622-25 (2022); see also Hemel, How-to Guide, supra note 5; Mark A. Graber, Treason, Insurrection, and Disqualification: From the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 to Jan. 6, 2021, Lawfare (Sep. 26, 2022) at https://www.lawfaremedia.org/article/treason-insurrection-and-disqualification-fugitive-slave-act-1850-jan-6-2021.
[418] See supra Part IV.A.2.
[419] See generally Daniel J. Hemel, Self-Coup and The Constitution, 37 Const. Comm. (forthcoming 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

constitutionally, as a "rebellion." It is literally an effort unlawfully to overthrow constitutional government, by force. 2. It follows that a military coup d'etat upending lawful government by show or threat of force should be treated the same way, even though force was not used. 3. A military coup d'etat by the existing regime—a "self-coup," would seem, legally, to be the same thing. In such a case the regime does not seize power, by show or threat of force; it retains power by show or threat of force. But it is logically identical to situations #1 and #2. 4. A "bloodless" self-coup against the lawful regime, where no force is used because none is needed, should be treated the same as #3. Indeed, it seems fair to say that situation #4 is merely an instance of situation #3. 5. The same self-coup attempt, but that styles itself as not renouncing but instead as restoring or maintaining, the constitutional regime—but that in truth seeks to overthrow or defeat that regime—logically should be treated the same as #4. If one accepts this chain of reasoning, one might then fairly conclude that the entirety of the course of conduct attempting dishonestly and unlawfully to overthrow the 2020-2021 election constituted a "rebellion," even though this might stretch somewhat the dictionary definitions of the term.[420]

Calling the events of 2020 and 2021 "insurrection" or potentially even "rebellion" might seem to some exaggerated or hyperbolic. It is not. It is simply being legally precise and not shying away from difficult or upsetting consequences that flow from legal precision. We believe it is important to call the events of 2020 and 2021 by their true legal names, their right names, unshielded by artful euphemism.[421]

2. The Question of Participation: "Engaged in" and "Aid or Comfort"

This brings us to the rubber-hits-the-road question: Who all, by virtue of their personal, voluntary conduct, can be said to have "engaged in" insurrection or rebellion in connection with the efforts to overthrow the result of the presidential election of 2020 and unlawfully maintain Donald Trump in office as President of the United States? Additionally, perhaps, who might be said to have provided "aid or comfort" to those insurrectionists and rebels?

As detailed at great—perhaps excruciating—length above, "engaged in" under Section Three is properly understood to embrace a broad range of willful participatory

[420] In similar fashion, we note that—at least at first—the purported "secession" of a state from the Union was not universally acknowledged to be itself an act constituting "rebellion" as a legal matter It too did not fit perfectly the standard dictionary definition (unless and until force was used or threatened). But the logic of the matter led Lincoln—and Congress, and the Supreme Court—to conclude that secession, in practical and legal terms, was a species of "rebellion" and legally to be treated as such. See supra Part IV.A.4. As set forth in the text, the same logic suggests that conduct tantamount to an attempted coup d'etat (including attempting to maintain a defeated incumbent president in office, dishonestly and unlawfully) may fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection or rebellion."

[421] For the sake of completeness, we add that we think the events of 2020-2021 probably do not rise to the level of "treason" or "levying war" against the United States, though of course it is possible that further investigation will reveal truly treasonous conduct that is not yet on the public record.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

conduct. This includes, certainly, deliberate acts in the nature of planning, promoting, encouraging, counseling, supporting, materially assisting, advancing, or facilitating activity or plots that can fairly be characterized, legally, as "insurrection" or "rebellion." And, as noted, in certain circumstances it might well include inaction supporting insurrection. Finally, giving "aid or comfort" arguably expands the range of acts of participation, support, and encouragement that qualify as triggering Section Three's disqualification.[422]

Who, then, engaged in such behavior?

a. General Principles Concerning Culpable Participation

Some applications of Section Three are factually straightforward. Others might involve potentially more difficult questions of fact and proof concerning the degree and nature of an individual's voluntary and intentional participation in (i) the overall plot and concrete efforts to overthrow the election and install Trump as president re-elect; (ii) the assembly, instigation, and incitement of a mob to attack the Capitol on January 6, 2021 to prevent certification of the election outcome; or (iii) the willful failure to take action to suppress the attack on Congress while it was in progress.

As discussed in Part II, above, judgments concerning the application of the legal standards of Section Three to specific individuals may and must be made by a variety of public actors—all those whose responsibilities call for application of the Constitution's criteria for eligibility to hold office. The ultimate judgment will rest with different actors and institutions in different circumstances: sometimes by state election officials; sometimes by presidential electors; sometimes by state and federal executive branch officials; sometimes by the respective houses of Congress or by state legislatures. In many cases, the judgment ultimately will fall to state and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. Everybody in such positions is bound to apply Section Three faithfully and enforce its commands rigorously.

That said, from our interpretation of Section Three's broad sweep, it is clear that at least two purported factual defenses are simply immaterial:

First, it is no defense that an individual might claim that his or her conduct does not constitute having engaged in or supported "insurrection" or "rebellion" because the election was in fact stolen—that is, that Trump in fact won the election—making it legitimate to "stop the steal." The problem is that the premise is simply false. Decisionmakers can and should act on the well settled factual understanding that Joe Biden won, and Donald Trump lost, the election of 2020.[423]

---

[422] See generally supra Part IV.A.

[423] See not only the January 6 Report, supra note 405, but also John Danforth, Benjamin Ginsburg, Thomas B. Griffith, David Hoppe, J. Michael Luttig, Michael W. McConnell, Theodore B. Olson &

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, it likewise is no defense that an individual believed (even if mistakenly) that the election had in fact been stolen, or believed that their insurrectionary conduct was somehow lawful. That one may have been deluded or deceived by disinformation does not excuse acts of insurrection or rebellion. And as the South's secession and the resulting Civil War illustrate, a bogus and unsuccessful constitutional theory does not excuse them either. In other words, there is no mistake-of-insurrection defense to Section Three.[424] Acts intentionally done as part of what is in fact and in law insurrection or rebellion are covered, irrespective of an individual's wrong subjective belief that no such insurrection or rebellion occurred, or the reasons for such wrong belief.[425]

b. Section Three Disqualifies Donald Trump from Future Office

The most politically explosive application of Section Three to the events of January 6, is at the same time the most straightforward. In our view, on the basis of the public record, former President Donald J. Trump is constitutionally disqualified from again being President (or holding any other covered office) because of his role in the attempted overthrow of the 2020 election and the events leading to the January 6 attack.

The case for disqualification is strong. There is abundant evidence that Trump deliberately set out to overturn the result of the 2020 presidential election result, calling it "stolen" and "rigged";[426] that Trump (with the assistance of others) pursued numerous schemes to effectuate this objective; that among these were efforts to alter the vote counts of several states by force, by fraud, or by intended intimidation of state election officials,[427] to pressure or persuade state legislatures and/or courts unlawfully to overturn state election results,[428] to assemble and induce others to submit bogus slates of competing state electors,[429] to persuade or pressure Congress to refuse to count electors' votes submitted by several states,[430] and finally, to pressure the

---

Gordon H. Smith, Lost, Not Stolen: The Conservative Case that Trump Lost and Biden Won the 2020 Presidential Election (2022), https://lostnotstolen.org.

[424] This is consistent with principles of mens rea that distinguish knowledge of what one is doing from knowledge of the proper legal characterization of what one is doing. See, e.g., Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. ___, at 4 n.2 (2023).

[425] Now what if the shoe were on the other foot? What if Trump had somehow succeeded in unlawfully holding apparent office after January 20, 2021? Would comparable actions by Biden supporters have constituted "insurrection"? We think not. The true facts matter. A rebellion against lawful government is rebellion, but acts of counter-insurgency against an attempted coup d'etat are not.

[426] And not that it matters, see supra Part IV.C.2.a, but it also appears that Trump knew that these accusations were false. See January 6 Report, supra note 405, 100-01, 103-04, 203, 213, 789.

[427] Id. at 202-203, 263-265; see also id. at 223-231,

[428] Id. at 296-300.

[429] Id. at 341-354.

[430] Id. at 431.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Vice President unconstitutionally to overturn state election results in his role of presiding over the counting of electors' votes.[431]

Leading up to January 6, Trump repeatedly solicited, suborned, and pressured Vice President Mike Pence to prevent the counting of the electoral votes in favor of President-elect Biden.[432] Not only that: Trump assembled a large crowd to march on the Capitol and intimidate Congress and the Vice President into complying with his wishes and thereby prevent the official counting of the votes of electors confirming Trump's defeat. Trump had announced on Twitter a protest to be held on January 6, 2021: "Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!"[433] According to testimony amassed by the House's January 6th Commission, Trump's supporters interpreted this as a call to arms, sometimes literally.[434]

Then there are the events of January 6 specifically. When January 6 arrived, Trump delivered an incendiary address at the White House Ellipse to the crowd of supporters he had effectively summoned to the Capitol to oppose what he had been calling the "steal" of the election. Trump reiterated his false claim that he had in fact won the election—"we won this election and we won it by a landslide"—but that the Democrats and the media had "stolen" the election and "rigged" a false outcome. "They rigged it like they've never rigged an election before," he charged. "Make no mistake, this election was stolen from you, from me and from the country. … This [is] the most corrupt election in the history, maybe of the world." The crowd was "gathered together in the heart of our nation's capital for one very, very basic and simple reason: To save our democracy." Trump called on the crowd to march on the Capitol. "Our country has had enough. We will not take it anymore and that's what this is all about. … We will stop the steal." He urged the assembled mass of thousands, some of whom Trump knew to be armed, to "fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore."[435]

Some might quibble that the speech is ambiguous.[436] Not all of Trump's rambling address called literally for the crowd to "fight." Some of his statements were

---

[431] Id. at 441-458.
[432] Id. at 441-458.
[433] Quoted in id. at 499.
[434] Id. at 499-540.
[435] For the quotations in this paragraph, see "Transcript of Trump's Speech at Rally Before US Capitol Riot," Associated Press, (Jan. 13, 2021), available at https://apnews.com/article/election-2020-joe-biden-donald-trumpcapitol-siege-media-e79eb5164613d6718e9f4502eb471f27. See also id. ("And again, most people would stand there at 9 o'clock in the evening and say, 'I want to thank you very much,' and they go off to some other life. But I said something is wrong here, something is really wrong, can't have happened, and we fight. We fight like hell, and if you don't fight like hell you're not going to have a country anymore.").
[436] See Michael Conklin, Capital Offense: Is Donald Trump Guilty of Inciting a Riot at the Capital?, 15 U. St. Thomas J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 483 (2022); see also Alan Z. Rozenshtein & Jed Handelsman Shugerman, January 6, Ambiguously Inciting Speech, and the Overt-Acts Rule, 37 Const. Comm. at 2-3, 20-21 (forthcoming 2023).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ambiguous and at one point he remarked that the crowd would be marching "peacefully and patriotically."[437] He never directly and literally called for attacking the Capitol or the Vice President. Much of what might be thought incitement to lawlessness was innuendo. Nonetheless, the general and specific message was that the election had been stolen; that a constitutional fraud of colossal proportions and cataclysmic consequence was in the process of being perpetrated on the nation; that the crowd needed to take "strong" and direct action to protect the country; and that immediate action was necessary to prevent Vice President Pence and Congress from ratifying the unconstitutional election of an illegitimate president and doing irreparable damage to the nation.

These ambiguities have given rise to a debate about whether Trump's speech did or did not cross the strict incitement threshold of Brandenburg v. Ohio.[438] It could well be that it did cross the line: Trump had deliberately assembled the mob of supporters, steeled them to action, knew that they were ready to take immediate action, and directed them to take it.[439] But the most important thing is that the Brandenburg question is beside the point. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not enact the legal standard of Brandenburg v. Ohio. It enacts the standards of participation in and support for "insurrection or rebellion," and it qualifies, modifies, or simply satisfies the First Amendment to the extent of any conflict between these constitutional principles.[440] First Amendment or no, the speech was part of Trump's participation in and support for the insurrection.

Finally, as events unfolded and the violence began, Trump maintained silence—and indeed deliberate indifference bordering on tacit encouragement—for what had by that time clearly become a forcible insurrection. For three hours after learning that his supporters had attacked the Capitol, Trump took no action to urge them to leave, despite being begged to do so by his advisors and despite having a constitutional duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.[441] During this same period, while the insurrection was in progress and after the Capitol had been breached, he again condemned Vice President Pence for not "hav[ing] the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution,"[442] a statement that the January 6th Commission concluded was "a statement that could

---

[437] Transcript, supra note 435.
[438] 395 U.S. 444 (1969); compare Conklin, supra note 436, with Alexander Tsesis, Incitement to Insurrection and the First Amendment, 57 Wake Forest L. Rev. 971 (2022); see also Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 3 n.3 (citing these and other sources and describing this disagreement).
[439] As Rozenshtein and Shugerman also emphasize, "Trump's speech was accompanied by several overt acts in furtherance of inciting an attack against the Capitol," which they argue takes it outside of the Brandenburg framework for that reason. Rozenshtein & Shugerman, supra note 436, at 38.
[440] See supra Part III.D (arguing that Section Three is not limited by the free speech principles of the First Amendment).
[441] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577-606.
[442] Donald J. Trump, Tweets of January 6, 2021, available at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/tweets-january-6-2021

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

only further enrage the mob" and that in fact apparently did so.[443] Once Trump finally did—after several hours and with great reluctance—direct his supporters to leave the Capitol, they quickly dispersed.[444]

This culpable inaction—failing to intervene to stop an insurrection in progress, declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite having both the capacity and responsibility to intervene—is another crucial part of Trump's responsibility for the January 6 insurrection. Section Three reaches a broad range of conduct providing meaningful assistance to or support for acts of insurrection or rebellion performed by others, even quite passively.[445] Sitting by and doing nothing—declining to act to arrest a violent uprising, despite possessing the material capacity and legal responsibility to intervene—might qualify. Additionally and equally important, Trump's deliberate inaction renders his January 6 speech much more incriminating in hindsight, because it makes it even less plausible (if it was ever plausible) that the crowd's reaction was all a big mistake or misunderstanding.

Taking these events as a whole, and judging them under the standard of Section Three, it is unquestionably fair to say that Trump "engaged in" the January 6 insurrection through both his actions and his inaction. Officials—administrators, courts, legislators—whose responsibilities call upon them to apply Section Three properly and lawfully may, indeed must, take action within their powers to preclude Trump from holding future office,

Moreover, if one accepts the broader argument that the entire campaign to overthrow the results of the 2020 election was a form of constitutional rebellion,[446] then Trump's complicity is even more obvious—as the leader, motive force, and chief attempted perpetrator of that rebellion. Indeed, it would not be going too far to say that Trump, having previously sworn a constitutionally required oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States knowingly attempted to execute what, had it succeeded, would have amounted to a political coup d'etat against the Constitution and its system of elections and overturn the results of the constitutional process, in order to maintain himself in office as President contrary to law. If that itself constitutes "rebellion" against the Constitution, Trump's overall

---

[443] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 577.

[444] Even as he urged peace in a video to the insurrectionists ("we can't play into the hands of these people. We have to have peace") he continued to express affection for them ("So go home. We love you. You're very special.") and to reiterate that the "election was stolen from us." Donald J. Trump, Videotaped Remarks During the Insurrection at the United States Capitol, at https://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/documents/videotaped-remarks-during-the-insurrection-the-united-states-capitol. Later that night he tweeted: "These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!" Trump Tweets, supra note 442.

[445] Cf. notes 350-351 and accompanying text (describing the exclusion of Senator-elect Phillip Thomas).

[446] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

course of conduct disqualifies him under Section Three, even apart from the specific incitement to storm the Capitol on January 6.

The bottom line is that Donald Trump "engaged in" "insurrection or rebellion" and gave "aid or comfort" to others engaging in such conduct, within the original meaning of those terms as employed in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. If the public record is accurate, the case is not even close. He is no longer eligible to the office of Presidency, or any other state or federal office covered by the Constitution. All who are committed to the Constitution should take note and say so.

c. Beyond Trump

Donald Trump is at the top of the list of Section Three disqualifications, but the list does not end with him. The public record to date shows many others who are or may be connected to either the insurrection of January 6 or to a possible broader rebellion. These include government lawyers, executive branch officials, state officeholders, and even members of Congress. It is not for us to definitively say who all these may be—that, as we have said, is ultimately the responsibility and judgment of all those whose public duties call upon them to apply the Constitution's provisions concerning officeholder qualifications. But to see why this responsibility is urgent, consider the following categories:

Consider first those who marched with—who rose up with—the January 6 mob itself. Some of these folks, such as Couy Griffin of New Mexico, and Derrick Evans of West Virginia, have already been stripped of or resigned from their state offices, as Section Three contemplates.[447] They present the easiest case of "engag[ing] in . . . insurrection." Open and shut.

But many more cases follow. Consider those who were not part of the uprising itself, but who provided planning, encouragement, assistance, or other material support to those who rose up on January 6. Recent proceedings against U.S. Representatives Biggs, Gosar, and Greene, for instance, raise this as a serious possibility.[448] Pennsylvania State Senator Doug Mastriano—who is also a retired military officer and recent gubernatorial candidate—is said to have transported busloads of people to what became the insurrection and "was near the Capitol during the attack."[449] Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani worked extensively to overturn the election, and likewise riled the mob at the Ellipse on January 6.[450] Trump Chief of [447] See supra notes 85-88, 114-116 and accompanying text.

[448] See supra notes 68-80 and accompanying text.
[449] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 294. Such a claim was brought against Mastriano in federal court but dismissed on jurisdictional grounds. See supra note 89.
[450] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 536, 577, 581, 593-594, 608; https://www.rev.com/blog/transcripts/rudy-giuliani-speech-transcript-at-trumps-washington-d-c-rally-wants-trial-by-combat

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Staff (and former legislator) Mark Meadows planned and organized parts of the January 6 rally and apparently also "directed that [Giuliani] be allowed to speak" to the crowd.[451] These current and former officeholders are also subject to serious challenge under Section Three.

And if one entertains the argument that the entire course of conduct to overthrow the 2020 election was a broader rebellion,[452] the list just grows longer and longer. According to the public record: Former National Security Advisor General Michael Flynn proposed a plan to seize voting machines, invalidate election results, and rerun the vote in swing states won by Biden.[453] Would-be Trump electors (some of whom came from state political offices covered by Section Three) met on December 14 even in states where Biden's electors had been chosen, thus laying the groundwork for Trump's schemes.[454] Assistant Attorney General Jeffrey Clark sought to use the power and authority of the Department of Justice to fraudulently upend state election results.[455] At least one member of Congress pressed for the removal of more senior Department of Justice officials who opposed Clark's scheme, and lobbied for the appointment of Clark as Acting Attorney General, thus providing aid or comfort.[456] These officials, too, would be subject to challenge.

We could go on, but we have made the point: All persons who betrayed their earlier constitutional oaths by subsequently engaging in conduct (in any of a number of forms) directed at overthrowing the result of a lawful presidential election or supporting an attack on Congress and the Capitol, should face serious inquiry under Section Three. If they try to hold, retain, re-obtain, or seek public office, their eligibility for such positions should be stringently scrutinized. That inquiry should be conducted by every relevant level of government, from state election officials to the halls of Congress, to the courts throughout the country. In many cases we may not yet even know the full extent of the participation and support for acts of insurrection or rebellion in 2020-2021. But we must find out.

Taking Section Three seriously as part of our nation's operative, ongoing fundamental law means that such inquiries are constitutionally necessary. Indeed, they are constitutionally required. Taking Section Three seriously, as binding constitutional law, means faithfully ascertaining and fearlessly applying the objective, original meaning of its words and phrases, understood in their historical context, whether we like that meaning or not, and tirelessly following the logic of the text's meaning to its fair conclusions. The upshot of doing so, we think—the consequence of adhering to constitutional principle—may well be the disqualification from public office of a

---

[451] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 533, 535-536.
[452] See supra notes 418-420 and accompanying text.
[453] January 6 Report, supra note 405, 222.
[454] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 352-353. Several of these would-be electors previously held state and local offices, and so are covered by Section Three.
[455] January 6 Report, supra note 405, at 50.
[456] Id. at 50 (discussing actions of Pennsylvania U.S. Representative Scott Perry).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

great many more individuals than is generally recognized. In many cases, the inquiry has not yet begun. It is past time to start the reckoning.

Conclusion

Despite its long slumber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is alive and in force. It remains fully legally operative. It is constitutionally self-executing—that is, its command is automatically effective, directly enacted by the Constitution itself. And it is sweeping: It sweeps over earlier and inconsistent constitutional provisions. It sweeps in a broad range of conduct attacking the authority of the United States. And it sweeps in a broad category of former oath-swearing officeholders turned insurrectionists or aiders and comforters of insurrection or rebellion. It is enforceable by anybody whose duties provide occasion for judging legal eligibility for office. Indeed, each of these actors has a duty to faithfully apply Section Three. All possess legitimate constitutional interpretive authority to construe and apply this constitutional prohibition, many of them independently of other actors, including courts.

All of this has obvious, important, and immediate legal implications.

We the People should honor and vigorously enforce this important provision of our Constitution. It should not be allowed to become a dead letter from disuse. Its purpose, while inspired by specific historical events, is one of general and continuing importance. The idea that men and women who swore an oath to support the Constitution as government officials, but who betrayed that oath by engaging in or abetting acts of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, should be disqualified from important positions of government power in the future (unless forgiven by supermajorities of both houses of Congress) remains a valid, valuable, and we think vital precept. Disqualifying candidates and officials from office is not something to be done lightly, but Section Three was not enacted lightly. Section Three remains part of our Constitution, part of our nation's fundamental law. If we honor the Constitution, we must honor Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

That means that those who possess the power and duty to apply and enforce Section Three have a constitutional responsibility to do so, fairly but vigorously. If state election boards or secretaries of state determine that a candidate for state elective office or a candidate seeking to represent that state in Congress is constitutionally disqualified from holding that office, those state authorities should exercise the state-law powers they possess to remove ineligible candidates from the ballot. If the House or Senate determines that a person elected to serve as a member of such body is constitutionally disqualified from holding such a position, they should refuse to seat or expel that person. And if a candidate for President, or an already-elected President, is constitutionally disqualified from office by Section Three, then that disqualification should be enforced by state election officials, by electors, by Congress

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

through the impeachment process, and by the Vice-President, cabinet and, Congress in carrying out the Twenty-fifth Amendment. In any and all these situations, and more, where the enforcement of Section Three's constitutional disqualifications is properly presented to the judiciary in a case over which a court possesses jurisdiction, it is the constitutional duty, province, and responsibility of federal and state judges exercising the judicial power to faithfully apply and enforce Section Three according to its terms.

No official should shrink from these duties. It would be wrong – indeed, arguably itself a breach of one's constitutional oath of office—to abandon one's responsibilities of faithful interpretation, application, and enforcement of Section Three. It is wrong to shrink on the pretext that some other officials may or should exercise their authority—as if one's own constitutional obligations cease to exist if others fail to act. And it is wrong to shrink from observing, and enforcing, the Constitution's commands on the premise that doing so might be unpopular in some quarters, or fuel political anger, or resentment, or opposition, or retaliation. The Constitution is not optional and Section Three is not an optional part of the Constitution.

Importantly, it is also wrong to shrink from applying Section Three on grounds of "democracy," whether on the premise that Section Three should be ignored or narrowly construed because it limits who voters may choose, or on the premise that only the voters should enforce Section Three. It is true, as we have said, that limiting democratic choice is not something to be done lightly, but it is something the Constitution does, and for serious reasons.[457] The Constitution cannot be overruled or disregarded by ordinary election results. (And we note that there is particular irony in invoking democracy to shrink from applying Section Three to the insurrectionists of 2020-2021, who refused to abide by election results and instead sought to overthrow them.)[458]

Finally, we believe it would be wrong for courts to refuse to decide cases, otherwise lawfully within their jurisdiction, concerning Section Three on the pretense that such matters are "political questions." Outside of certain exercises of power to exclude, expel, or impeach and try, committed to each House's judgment, Section Three is enforceable by the judiciary as well as by other officials.[459] Section Three's terms embody rules and standards, enforceable as any other constitutional provision

---

[457] See Magliocca, Foreground, supra note 62, at 14-24 (arguing at length that "the democracy canon is a seductive but mistaken way of reading Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment," and that it "elevates a background constitutional principle in a way that is inconsistent with the text, purpose, and history of Section Three").

[458] See William Baude, The Real Enemies of Democracy, 109 Cal. L. Rev. 2407, 2418-20 (2021) ("The real enemies of democracy, at a more fundamental level, are those who try to ignore the rules of the game after they have already lost it. This past election, that means the real enemies of democracy were President Donald Trump and those who fought for him.").

[459] Supra note 95.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

is enforceable. There is no freestanding judicial power to abstain from enforcing the Constitution whenever doing so might be difficult or controversial.

We think that if these constitutional duties are taken seriously, there is a list of candidates and officials who must face judgment under Section Three. Former president Donald Trump is at the top of that list, but he is not the end of it. As we have said, it is not for us to say who all is disqualified by virtue of Section Three's constitutional rule. That is the duty and responsibility of many officials, administrators, legislators, and judges throughout the country. Where they are called on to decide eligibility to office, they are called on to enforce Section Three, applying the Constitution's legal standard to the facts before them in a given instance. Our point is to emphasize Section Three's continuing force, and broad sweep.

At all events, if a President or former President of the United States; a current or former officer of the federal executive branch; a Member or former Member of Congress; a current or former state legislator or state executive official; or a current or former federal or state court judge, planned, supported, assisted, encouraged, endorsed, or aided in a material way those who engaged in the insurrection of January 6, or otherwise knowingly and willfully participated in a broader rebellion against the constitutional system, such persons are constitutionally disqualified from office. In such situations, Section Three's constitutional disqualifications can, should, and must be carried out.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Electronic copy available at: https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT LaBRANT, ANDREW BRADWAY, NORAH MURPHY and WILLIAM NOWLING, Plaintiffs,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State,

Defendant.
_____/

No. 23-000137-MZ

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Mark Brewer (P35661)
Rowan Conybeare (P86571)
Attorneys for Plaintiffs
17000 West Ten Mile Road
Southfield, Michigan 48075
248.483.5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

Ronald Fein (pro hac vice)
Amira Mattar (pro hac vice)
Courtney Hostetler (pro hac vice)
John Bonifaz (pro hac vice)
Ben Clements (pro hac vice)
Attorneys for Plaintiffs
1320 Centre Street, #405
Newton, MA 02459
617.244.0234

_____/

DEFENDANT SECRETARY OF STATE'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW PURSUANT TO THE COURT'S OCTOBER 9, 2023, SCHEDULING ORDER ORDERING DEFENDANT TO ADDRESS SPECIFIC QUESTIONS

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: October 16, 2023

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Index of Authorities ii

Argument 1

I. Secretary Benson's responses to the questions posed by the Court in its October 9, 2023, scheduling order. 1

A. Whether Defendant has an affirmative duty and the authority to decide whether a candidate may be placed on a ballot prior to a court's review of the issue. 2

B. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to the offices of President and Vice President and to candidates for those offices? 7

C. Whether § 3 precludes a person from serving in an office covered by § 3, seeking election to an office covered by § 3, or both. 11

D. Whether § 3 is self-executing. 13

E. Whether the 1872 Amnesty Act applies to the instant case. 15

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases

Arizona v Inter Tribal Council of Ariz, Inc, 570 US 1 (2013) 2

Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich 673 (2022) 6

Cawthorn v Amalfi, 35 F4th 245 (CA 4, 2022) 9, 16

Cawthorn v Circosta, 590 F Supp 873 (ED NC 2022) 9

Costello v INS, 376 US 120 (1964) 16

Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152 (1946) 6

Davis v Sec'y of State, 333 Mich App 588 (2020) 5

Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283 (ND Ga 2022) 6, 17

Greene v Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F 4th 907 (CA 11, 2022) 8, 12

Griffin v New Mexico ex rel White, No. D-101-cv-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619 (NM Dist Ct Sept 6, 2022) 8

Griffin v New Mexico, ex rel White, No. S-1-SC-39571 (NM Feb 16, 2023) 9, 17

Hansen v Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz May 9, 2022) 8, 12

Moore v Genesee Cty, 337 Mich App 723 (2021) 4

People v Lewis, 503 Mich 162 (2018) 5

Powell v McCormack, 395 US 486 (1969) 12

US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779 (1995) 12

Statutes

MCL 168.131 4

MCL 168.161 4

MCL 168.21 3

MCL 168.281 4

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MCL 168.31(1) 3

MCL 168.41 4

MCL 168.42 4

MCL 168.51 4

MCL 168.558(1) 4, 5

MCL 168.591 4

MCL 168.614a(1) 3

MCL 168.615a 3

MCL 168.616a 3

MCL 168.619 4

MCL 168.71 4

MCL 168.91 4

Other Authorities

Amnesty Act of 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432 16

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 NYU J L & Liberty 1 (2021) 9

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3, 28 TEX REV L & POL (forthcoming 2024) 14

Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 Wm & Mary Bill Rts J 153, 189-194 (2021) 13

William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulson, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U PA L REV ___ (forthcoming 2024) 10, 13

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 2, § 3 4

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) 2

Const 1963, art 5, § 3 3

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Const 1963, art 5, § 9 3

US Const art I, § 4, cl 1 2

US Const art II, § 1, cl 2 2

US Const art II, § 1, cl. 4 2

US Const, art II, § 1, cl 5 4

US Const, Am XIV, § 3 7

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On September 29, 2023, Plaintiffs Robert LaBrant, Andrew Bradway, Noah Murphy, and William Nowling filed the instant Complaint against Defendant Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson. In Count I of their complaint, Plaintiffs request that the Court enter a declaratory judgment declaring that former President Donald Trump is ineligible to be placed on Michigan's presidential primary or general election ballot because he is disqualified under § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. (Comp, ¶¶ 316-319.) In Count II, Plaintiffs request that the Court enjoin the Secretary from placing Mr. Trump on Michigan's presidential or general election ballots. (Id., ¶¶ 320-322.)

A similar case was filed by Robert Davis on September 15, 2023. See Davis v Benson, Court of Claims Case No. 23-000128.

On October 9, 2023, this Court entered an expedited scheduling order in both cases. The Court stated that it was expediting the instant case along with the Davis case, No. 23-00028-MZ. Defendant understands the Court's order to require responses in both cases by October 16, 2023.

In response to Plaintiffs' complaint, Defendant Benson has filed an answer. However, in the Court's scheduling order, it ordered Defendant to respond to six specific questions. Consistent with that order Secretary Benson submits the instant memorandum of law.

ARGUMENT

I. Secretary Benson's responses to the questions posed by the Court in its October 9, 2023, scheduling order.

The Court ordered Defendant Benson to address six specific questions relating to § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, including whether the Secretary is authorized to disqualify a candidate for President under that section. Because the Secretary has no authority to make such a determination, she has no official position as to the outcome of the related constitutional questions. Her responses to the questions below, other than to the first question, therefore, do not advance an affirmative position.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. Whether Defendant has an affirmative duty and the authority to decide whether a candidate may be placed on a ballot prior to a court's review of the issue.

Although the Court's question refers to a "candidate" generally, the Secretary will address this question as if directed to candidates for the Office of President.

The US Constitution delegates to state "Legislature[s]" the authority to regulate the "Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives," subject to Congress's ability to "make or alter such Regulations." US Const art I, § 4, cl 1. This provision is known as the "Elections Clause." The Clause "imposes" on state legislatures the "duty" to prescribe rules governing federal elections. Arizona v Inter Tribal Council of Ariz, Inc, 570 US 1, 8 (2013). It also guards "against the possibility that a State would refuse to provide for the election of representatives" by authorizing Congress to prescribe its own rules. Id.

Similar to the Elections Clause, the "Electors Clause" of the US Constitution provides that "[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of [Presidential] Electors." US Const art II, § 1, cl 2. Congress can "determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States." US Const art II, § 1, cl. 4. Congress has set the time for appointing electors as "the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in every fourth year succeeding every election of a President and Vice President." 3 USC 1.

Under the Michigan Constitution, the Legislature "shall enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all . . . elections[.]" Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2). The Legislature delegated the task of conducting proper elections to the Secretary of Secretary, an elected Executive-branch

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

officer, and the head of the Department of State. Const 1963, art 5, §§ 3, 9. See also, MCL 168.31(1), MCL 168.21.

The Legislature has prescribed the manner in which candidates for the Office of President obtain ballot access in Michigan. With respect to obtaining access to the presidential primary ballot, under MCL 168.614a(1), the Secretary creates a list of candidates from national news media sources:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. . . . [Emphasis added.]

And under subsection 614a(2), the chairpersons for the major political parties in Michigan file a list of candidates with the Secretary after she issues her list:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. . . .

All names of the candidates identified under § 614a will then be placed on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws.[1] MCL 168.615a ("Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party.") (emphasis added). The winning candidates for each party are then certified by the Board of State Canvassers. MCL 168.616a. However, the names

[1] A person who is not identified as a candidate under either method described in § 614a(1)-(2), may seek to access the ballot by timely filling a nominating petition containing sufficient valid signatures of registered voters. MCL 168.615a(2).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of which candidates for President will actually appear on the November general election ballot is ultimately a determination made by the major political parties through their respective fall state conventions. See, e.g., MCL 168.42, 168.591, 168.619. This process usually results in the winners of the Michigan presidential primary election being nominated by the parties as their candidates for November, but that is not a forgone result.

The US Constitution imposes qualifications for the Office of President. See, e.g., US Const, art II, § 1, cl 5 ("No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.") But no language in §§ 614a, 615a, or any other section of the Michigan Election Law requires or authorizes the Secretary to determine whether a candidate for President meets the qualifications for office or is otherwise eligible to run for or hold that office if elected.

In contrast, the Legislature has incorporated eligibility requirements for various offices into the Michigan Election Law, including federal offices, see, e.g., 168.51, 168.71, 168.91, 168.131, 168.161, 168.281, and has required these candidates to file "affidavit[s] of identity," which include a statement that a candidate "meets the constitutional and statutory qualifications for the office sought," MCL 168.558(1)-(2).[2] Candidates who fail to complete a certificate identity or supply false information are prohibited from appearing on the ballot. Moore v Genesee Cty, 337 Mich App 723, 731 (2021). The Legislature chose, however, to expressly exclude candidates for President from compliance with the affidavit of identity requirement,

[2] There is an eligibility requirement for presidential electors. See MCL 168.41, Const 1963, art 2, § 3.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

likely because the Legislature expects the parties to police the qualifications and eligibility of their candidates. MCL 168.558(1) ("The affidavit of identity filing requirement does not apply to a candidate nominated for the office of President of the United States or Vice President of the United States.").

There simply is no statute in the Michigan Election Law that imposes upon the Secretary a duty to determine whether a candidate for President meets the qualifications for office or is otherwise eligible to run for or hold that office if elected. Nor can such a duty be implied from any statute, particularly where the Legislature expressly relieved presidential candidates from making any affirmation that they meet the qualifications for that office. See MCL 168.558(1). The Legislature's drafting choice strongly suggests that the Secretary has neither the duty nor the authority to prohibit a presidential candidate who lacks the constitutional qualifications from appearing on a primary or general election ballot. See People v Lewis, 503 Mich 162, 165-66 (2018) ("[W]hen the Legislature includes language in one part of a statute that it omits in another, it is assumed that the omission was intentional."). And while the Secretary has the "inherent authority to take measures to ensure that voters [are] able to avail themselves of the constitutional rights established" in article 2, § 4 of the Michigan Constitution, Davis v Sec'y of State, 333 Mich App 588, 601 (2020), nothing in that article suggests she has the authority to modify the largely ministerial process of identifying and accepting a slate of presidential candidates to be voted upon at the presidential primary (or at the November election).

Further, whether the Fourteenth Amendment bars Mr. Trump from appearing as a presidential candidate on Michigan's ballots, is a federal constitutional question of enormous consequence. Michigan courts have held that administrative agencies generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions. Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

673, 710 (2022), citing Dickerson v Warden, Marquette Prison, 99 Mich App 630, 641-642 (1980). See also Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152, 159 (1946). And here, where the Legislature has not authorized or required the Secretary to determine or confirm whether candidates for President are qualified and eligible to serve, she has no authority to determine this constitutional question.

It has been suggested that article 11, § 1 of the Michigan Constitution, which requires state officers to take an oath in which they "swear (or affirm) that [they] will support the Constitution of the United States," obligates the Secretary to resolve the Fourteenth Amendment question otherwise she is not supporting the US Constitution. But the text of § 3 does not speak directly to whether the Secretary or any other state official must prohibit a candidate for the Office of President from appearing on a state's ballot when state law confers no authority on that official to evaluate presidential candidates' qualifications for office. And article 11, § 1 does not somehow authorize the Secretary to determine a constitutional question she is otherwise not required or authorized to resolve. Moreover, the Secretary simply has no administrative process for making the legal—let alone factual—determinations that would need to be made concerning the application of § 3. There is no statutory vehicle that provides either a citizen with the right to initiate such an action or for the participation of the impacted candidate, who would presumably be entitled to some process. See, e.g., Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283 (ND Ga 2022) (discussing plaintiff's due process concerns in case involving disqualification under § 3).

The Secretary will certainly comply with any order entered by this Court or another that declares Mr. Trump eligible or ineligible to appear as a candidate for President on Michigan's ballots by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment. And in doing so, the Secretary will uphold the oath she took to support both the US Constitution and the Michigan Constitution.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For these reasons, the Secretary does not have an affirmative, legal duty or the authority to decide whether the Fourteenth Amendment renders Mr. Trump eligible or ineligible to be placed on the ballot prior to a court's review of that constitutional question.

B. Whether § 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to the offices of President and Vice President and to candidates for those offices?

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment provides:

> No Person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability. [US Const, Am XIV, § 3 (emphasis added).]

Again, the Secretary takes no position with respect to whether Mr. Trump should appear as a candidate in Michigan's presidential primary or general election, or whether he should be precluded from doing so under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Court's question raises two, inter-related questions—does the office of President constitute "any office" "under the United States" from which a person may be disqualified from holding based on his engaging in insurrection. And was Mr. Trump "an officer of the United States" who previously took an oath to support the US Constitution for purposes of § 3 when he previously held the office of President. In a separate question, this Court also asked whether there were any state or federal cases interpreting or applying § 3 to candidates for office or persons serving in an office, including any cases currently involving Mr. Trump as potential presidential candidate.

Addressing this second question first, there are numerous cases pending throughout the United States in which the movants seek to disqualify Mr. Trump under § 3 of the Fourteenth

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Amendment.[3] A list of known cases is attached as Exhibit 1. Upon information and belief, none of the cases have yet resulted in a substantive determination by a court regarding the application of § 3 to Mr. Trump.[4] And several have been dismissed for lack of standing. (Exhibit 1, Case list.) As far as cases applying § 3 to other candidates, there are a few cases of recent vintage in which several candidates were challenged on that basis.

In Hansen v Finchem, the court determined that the plaintiffs could not use a state statute allowing challenges to candidates based upon their qualifications for office to disqualify the candidates under § 3 because § 3 is a "legal proscription from holding office," not a law that "prescribe[s]" qualifications. No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157 (Ariz May 9, 2022).

In Rowan v Greene, the Georgia Secretary of State affirmed an administrative hearing officer's determination that the plaintiffs failed to provide sufficient proof that Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene was not qualified to seek and hold public office. See No. 2222-582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot (Georgia Office of the Secretary of State, May 6, 2022). See also Greene v Raffensperger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283, 1320 (ND Ga 2022) (refusing to enjoin the state proceedings where Greene failed to demonstrate that states were prohibited from enforcing § 3), Greene v Sec'y of State for Georgia, 52 F 4th 907, 909-910 (CA 11, 2022) (remanding for dismissal of case as moot).

In Griffin v New Mexico ex rel White, a quo warranto proceeding, a state court judge determined that § 3 applied to a county commissioner convicted of a crime in relation to the

[3] Most of the cases have been filed by John Anthony Castro, a purported presidential candidate from Texas. Castro filed a complaint against Secretary Benson and Donald J. Trump in the Court of Claims on August 31, 2023. See Castro v Benson, et al, Case No. 23-000122, however, the complaint has not been served.

[4] Cases worth monitoring currently include Growe v Simon, Minnesota Supreme Court Case No. A23-1354, and Anderson v Griswold, District Court, City and County of Denver, 23-cv-32577. See Exhibit 1.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

events on January 6, 2021, and the commissioner was removed from office. See No. D-101-CV-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619 (NM Dist Ct Sept 6, 2022). The commissioner's appeal to the New Mexico Supreme Court was denied. Griffin v New Mexico, ex rel White, No. S-1-SC-39571 (NM Feb 16, 2023).

And in Cawthorn v Circosta, voters filed a challenge with the North Carolina State Board of Elections seeking to disqualify Representative Madison Cawthorne from the 2022 primary ballot, and Cawthorne filed suit in federal court seeking to bar the state board from considering the issue. 590 F Supp 3d 873, 891 (ED NC 2022). The District Court held that the 1872 Amnesty Act supported enjoining the state proceedings. Id. at 890-892. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, and no further litigation occurred as Cawthorne lost in the primary. Cawthorn v Amalfi, 35 F4th 245 (CA 4, 2022).

Given the dearth of cases, reference to recent law review articles may assist the Court.

In a 2021 article, the authors opine that the President of the United States is not an "officer of the United States" whose prior taking of an oath will trigger the disqualification from holding a covered office under § 3. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15 NYU J L & Liberty 1 (2021), attached as Exhibit 2. In summary of what is a complex argument, the authors argue that the terms "officer of the United States" and "[o]ffice . . . under the United States" should be presumed to have different meanings in § 3 since the Framers used different wording within the same section. Id. at 7-10. They argue that the history of the Framers use of this different terminology in different sections of the Constitution, supports a presumption that "these phrases refer to different positions." Id. at 9. And that "the better inference . . . is that the President and Vice President are not 'Officers of the United States.'" Id. at 10.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> All available evidence suggests that the Framers were deliberate. The ratifiers and their contemporaries would have understood how these alterations modified the meaning of these provisions. The different "office"- and "officer"-language presumptively had different meanings. And, we think, the Framers of 1868 also took reasonable care when using the coordinate phrases "officers of the United States" and "office ... under the United States" in Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. [Id.]

The authors go on to expressly argue that the President is not an "officer of the United States" for purposes of the various provisions that use that language, including § 3, that there is no compelling evidence that the Framers intended something different in § 3, and that various cases and authorities support that conclusion. Id. at 21-33. The article then discounts various past authorities and arguments that suggest or reach different conclusions. Id. at 34-50. In their conclusion, the authors note that they chose not to resolve whether the President is an "office . . . under the United States," but that if the President is not an "officer of the United States," it "ends the case" for purposes of the application of § 3. Id. at 54.

Conversely, in a 2023 article, the authors reject the analysis in the Blackman and Tillman article that the President is not an "officer of the United States," and further conclude that the President is an "officer . . . under the United States" for purposes of both clauses in § 3. See William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulson, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U PA L REV ___ (forthcoming 2024), attached as Exhibit 3. These authors argue that the provisions of § 3 should be read:

> in as straightforward and common-sense a manner as possible. The text must be read precisely, of course, but also sensibly, naturally and in context, without artifice or ingenious invention unwarranted by that context. Some constitutional provisions embody precise terms of art that must be attended to. But a reading that renders the document a "secret code" loaded with hidden meanings discernible only by a select priesthood of illuminati is generally an unlikely one. . . . Where the simplest and most plausible explanation of minor textual differences is merely stylistic or accidental variation, that explanation should not lightly be cast aside. [Id. at p 105 (footnote omitted).]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The authors further argue that the list of disqualification triggering offices in § 3 ("officer . . . of the United States") closely tracks the listing of offices in the Constitution's oath provisions, see art VI, cl 3, art II, § 1, cl 8, and that the list of offices from which a person is disqualified from ("offices . . . under the United States") builds on that list. Id. at 105-106. "Thus, in general: If the original Constitution required an oath for a position, Section Three treats having held such a position as the trigger for Section Three's application." Id. at 106. And "if a person who once held any such position is disqualified under Section Three for engaging in or supporting insurrection, that person is barred (absent congressional relief) from holding any of those same positions[.]" Id. The argue that § 3's "project of office-listing" was to simply provide a comprehensive list of positions in both clauses. Id.

The authors reject the analysis of Blackman and Tillman as a technical and non-natural reading of the text that ultimately results in the implausible consequence that an insurrectionist President could hold the office of President, but that his prior holding of that office would not trigger disqualification. Id. at 108-109. They further note that a "variant" of that argument was refuted during congressional debates on § 3. (Id. at 110-111.)

There are certainly additional, relevant articles available, Defendant chose these as two recent competing viewpoints. It is also likely that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump, see Exhibit 1, will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 applies to the Office pf President.

C. Whether § 3 precludes a person from serving in an office covered by § 3, seeking election to an office covered by § 3, or both.

Defendant Benson understands this question as asking whether § 3 is a qualification for seeking office, or whether it is a prohibition to holding office if elected, or whether it functions as both. Again, § 3 provides, in part, that "[n]o Person shall be a Senator or Representative in

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States[.]" (Emphasis added.)

This issue does not appear to have been the subject of significant litigation yet or academic discussion. But in the Arizona case discussed above in I.B, the Arizona Supreme Court held in its brief opinion that the state statute allowing candidate challenges could not be used to advance a claim under § 3 because its "scope is limited to challenges based upon 'qualifications . . . as prescribed by law.'" Hansen, 2022 WL 1468157 at * 1. The statute did not apply, the court reasoned, because § 3 is a "legal proscription from holding office," not a law that "prescribe[s]" qualifications. Id.

But in the Fourth Circuit's opinion in Cawthorn, also noted above in I.B, the Court stated in a footnote that it was "assuming without deciding" that the "disability" imposed by § 3 is a "qualification" for purposes of article I, § 5 of the US Constitution, 35 F4th at 257 n7, which provides that "Each House shall be the judge of . . . the qualifications of its own members[.]" US Const, art I, § 5. In the text the Fourth Circuit cited Powell v McCormack, 395 US 486 (1969), in which the US Supreme Court made a passing reference to § 3 but stated in a footnote that it was not deciding whether § 3 and other constitutional provisions properly constituted "qualifications." Id. at 520 n 41. See also US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779, 788 n 2 (1995) (citing Powell and likewise not deciding the issue).

Also, in Greene, the District Court discussed the state's important regulatory interests in ensuring that only qualified candidates appear on the ballot and appeared to treat the disqualification component of § 3 as a qualification. 599 F Supp 3d at 1311-1312, 1316 ("On the current record, it appears that the Challenge Statute imposes minimal burdens through its process of ensuring that only candidates who meet the Constitution's minimum threshold requirements

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA appear on the ballot — including candidates who are not disqualified by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.")

One author has discussed the possible timing of challenges to federal-office candidates under § 3, including the President, describing possible pre-election, post-election/pre-inauguration, and post-assumption of office challenges. See Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 Wm & Mary Bill Rts J 153, 189-194 (2021).[5]

It is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 functions as a qualification for seeking office or a prohibition from ultimately holding office.

D. Whether § 3 is self-executing.

The question of whether § 3 is self-executing appears to have proponents on both sides. Authors Baude and Paulson in their article, discussed above in I.B., argue that § 3 functions as an automatic, legal disqualification whenever its' conditions for disqualification are met, and thus needs no implementing legislation by Congress. (Exhibit 3, p 17.) They note that the federal Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and states what the law is. (Id.) "Section Three's language is language of automatic legal effect: 'No person shall be' directly enacts the officeholding bar it describes where its rule is satisfied. It lays down a rule by saying what shall be." (Id., pp 17-18.) The authors observe that this language is consistent with other self-executing "disqualification" sections, such as those in article I and article II, § 1, cl 5's requirement that "[n]o person . . . shall be eligible" to be President who does not meet the age

[5] The Baude and Paulson article includes a discussion of the mode of enforcing § 3. See Exhibit 3, pp 22-35.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA requirement. (Id., p 18.) As well as other provisions, like the Thirteenth Amendment (abolishing slavery) and other sections of the Fourteenth Amendment, such as the Equal Protection Clause. (Id., pp 18-19.)

The authors recognize that Congress can enact legislation to enforce § 3, as it has in the past, but Congress need not do so where § 3 "was effective all along." (Id., p 19-20.) They further contrast § 3's language with other provisions like the Constitution's impeachment provisions, which require implementation, whereas § 3 does not. (Id., pp 20-21.) For these reasons, they conclude that § 3 "has legal force already," meaning it is self-executing. (Id., p 22.)

Blackman and Tillman, in a new article, advance a contrary view. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3, 28 TEX REV L & POL (forthcoming 2024).[6] Again, in summary of what is a complex argument, they argue that whether § 3 is self-executing ultimately depends on the manner enforcement is sought. (Id., pp 18-20.) They note that many Article I qualification-type provisions have gone unenforced, whether at the federal or state level, which undermines Baude's and Paulson's argument that such provisions are self-executing without legislation intervention, and by extension their argument that § 3 is as well. (Id., pp 25-37.) Turning to the Fourteenth Amendment, Blackman and Tillman acknowledge that § 1, which includes the due process and equal protection clauses, is generally considered self-executing. (Id., pp 38-39.) But they say "the better question is in what fashion is Section 1 self-executing?" (Id. at p 39.) The authors argue, citing various precedents, that while a defensive ("shield") use of the constitutional constraints found in the [6] An abstract of the lengthy article as well as a download is available online at Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3 by Josh Blackman, Seth Barrett Tillman :: SSRN.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fourteenth Amendment is always permissible, the offensive ("sword") use of the Fourteenth Amendment's limitations, including those in § 3, is not. (Id. at pp 39-53.) Thus, in their view, § 3 would be not self-executing if used as a sword to disqualify a candidate.[7]

Secretary Benson is aware of only one recent case that has touched on whether § 3 is self-executing. In Hansen, the Arizona Supreme Court did not use the words self-executing, but it noted "that Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause ('The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article'), which suggests that ARS § 16-351(B) does not provide a private right of action to invoke the Disqualification Clause against the Candidates." 2022 WL 1468157, at *1. As above, it is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of whether § 3 is self-executing.

E. Whether the 1872 Amnesty Act applies to the instant case.

In 1872, Congress enacted legislation related to § 3, which provides:

> [A]ll political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States. [Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat 142 (1872).]

And in 1898, Congress removed the disabilities from the previously excepted persons in the 1872 Act by enacting another law, providing that "the disability imposed by section three of

---

[7] Both Baude and Paulson and Blackman and Tillman spend time in their respective articles discussing the ramifications of US Supreme Court Justice Salmon Chase's decision as a circuit justice in In re Griffin, 11 F Cas 7 (CCD Va 1869), in which he determined § 3 required enabling legislation. For an additional viewpoint on this subject, the Court may wish to review Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const Comment 87, 100-108 (Spring 2021).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed." Amnesty Act of 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432.

In Cawthorn, discussed previously, the District Court agreed with Representative Cawthorn that the 1872 Act permanently removed the disabilities stated in § 3. Cawthorne, 590 F Supp 3d at 890. "The 1872 Act, by its plain language, removed 'all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States from all persons whomsoever.' " Id. at 891 (emphasis in original). The court observed that Congress could have used language that clarified the act only applied to persons currently subject to § 3 but did not do so. Id. The District Court therefore enjoined any further proceedings against Cawthorne.

But the Fourth Circuit reversed the District Court.

That Court concluded that the District Court erred "in construing the Act as a sweeping removal of all future Fourteenth Amendment disabilities." Cawthorn, 35 F.4th at 257. The Court determined that the lower court had read the Act incorrectly in that it did not prospectively relieve persons from disabilities in the future but was rather "'backward-looking'" because the language it employed ("imposed" and "removed") was in the "past tense." Id. at 258 (citations omitted). "Here, Congress employed the past-tense version, indicating its intent to lift only those disabilities that had by then been 'imposed.'" Id., citing Costello v INS, 376 US 120, 123–24 (1964) (referring to the past participle in "have been" as a "use of the past tense" (quotation marks omitted)). The Court went on to conclude that this construction was consistent with the Act's history and context in dealing with "the hordes of former Confederates seeking forgiveness." Id. at 259 (citation omitted). The Court thus reversed and vacated the injunction and remanded for further proceedings. Id. at 261.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The District Court in New Mexico in the Griffin case agreed with the Fourth Circuit's analysis concerning the 1872 Act. See Griffin, 2022 WL 2132042 at * 2. And in a decision preceding the Fourth Circuit's decision, the Georgia District Court in the Greene case rejected the District Court's analysis in Cawthorn. See Greene, 599 F Supp 3d at 1315 ("Suffice it to say, the Court is skeptical. It seems much more likely that Congress intended for the 1872 Amnesty Act to apply only to individuals whose disabilities under Section 3 had already been incurred, rather than to all insurrectionists who may incur disabilities under that provision in the future.")

Again, it is possible that the cases pending regarding Mr. Trump will result in additional discussions of the 1872 Act.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant Benson
PO Box 30736
Lansing, Michigan 48909
517.335.7659

Dated: October 16, 2023

PROOF OF SERVICE

Heather S. Meingast certifies that on October 16, 2023, she served a copy of the above document in this matter on all counsel of record and parties in pro per via MiFILE.

/s/Heather S. Meingast
Heather S. Meingast

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT LaBRANT, ANDREW BRADWAY, NORAH MURPHY, and WILLIAM NOWLING,

Plaintiffs,

-vs-

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State,

Defendant,

and

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Proposed-Intervenor.

_____/

PROPOSED-INTERVENOR'S BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION

FILE NO.: 23-000137-MZ

HON. JAMES ROBERT REDFORD

Mark Brewer (P35661)
Rowan E. Conybeare (P86571)
GOODMAN ACKER P.C.
Attorneys for Plaintiffs
17000 W. Ten Mile Road
Southfield, MI 48975
(248) 483-5000
mbrewer@goodmanacker.com

FREE SPEECH FOR PEOPLE
Ronald Fein (Proposed pro hac vice)
Amira Mattar (Proposed pro hac vice)
Courtney Hostetler (Proposed pro hac vice)
John Bonifaz (Proposed pro hac vice)
Ben Clements (Proposed pro hac vice)
Attorneys for Plaintiffs
1320 Centre St. #405
Newton, MA 02459
(617) 244-0234

David A. Kallman (P34200)
Stephen P. Kallman (P75622)
KALLMAN LEGAL GROUP, PLLC
Attorneys for Proposed-Intervenor
5600 W. Mount Hope Hwy.
Lansing, MI 48917
(517) 322-3207
dave@kallmanlegal.com
steve@kallmanlegal.com

Michael Columbo, pro hac vice coming
Mark P. Meuser, pro hac vice coming
Zachary Kramer, pro hac vice coming
DHILLON LAW GROUP, INC.
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor
177 Post St., Suite 700
San Francisco, CA 94108
(415) 433-1700
mcolumbo@dhillonlaw.com
mmeuser@dhillonlaw.com

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Heather S. Meingast (P55439)
Erik A. Grill (P64713)
Assistant Attorneys General
Attorneys for Defendant
P.O. Box 30736
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 335-7659
meingasth@michigan.gov
grille@michigan.gov

INTRODUCTION

For the past several years, whether Donald J. Trump is suited to hold the Presidency has been the defining political controversy of our national life. Plaintiffs now ask a state court to terminate further discourse and decide this question of nationwide importance without regard for America's voters and their elected representatives. This request is manifestly inappropriate. Both the federal Constitution and Michigan law place the resolution of this nonjusticiable political question where it belongs: the democratic process, in the hands of either Congress or the people of the United States. This Court may not use Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment ("Section Three") to enjoin the Secretary of State of Michigan ("Sec. of State") from placing President Trump on the primary and general election ballots in the state.

The Complaint's many factual inaccuracies, gaps, and distortions largely fall under one overarching theme: Plaintiffs have no evidence that President Trump intended or supported any violent or unlawful activity seeking to overthrow the government of the United States, either on January 6th or at any other time. On topic after topic, Plaintiffs seek to make up for the conspicuous absence of evidence by relying on innuendo, insinuation, and disdain for President Trump to win the day. Those are arguments for the American voters, not for this Honorable Court.

This Court should dismiss the Complaint for numerous reasons:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- First, this case presents a nonjusticiable political question that is constitutionally committed to Congress.
- Second, Plaintiffs lack standing and/or a writ of mandamus is improper.
- Third, Congressional action is required to enforce Section Three because it is not self-executing when used to prohibit a candidate from standing for election.
- Fourth, neither Plaintiffs nor the Sec. of State has the authority to enforce Section Three as Plaintiff desires.
- Fifth, the United States Constitution and Congress solely govern presidential qualifications.
- Sixth, the prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to President Trump.
- Seventh, the conduct as alleged in the Complaint is not covered by Section Three.

For these reasons, this Court should dismiss the Complaint's claims as meritless, and remit Plaintiffs' arguments to the political processes ordained by the Constitution.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

As to Plaintiffs, Defendant, and Donald J. Trump, no facts have been properly pleaded. The only "facts" alleged in Plaintiffs' Complaint are a mere recitation of news articles and political events.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

"Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(4) when the trial court 'lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter.'" Weishuhn v Catholic Diocese of Lansing, 279 Mich App 150, 155; 756 NW2d 483 (2008). "When determining if the trial court has subject-matter jurisdiction, [the] Court considers the pleadings, affidavits, depositions, admissions, and other documentary evidence. Durcon Co v Detroit Edison Co, 250 Mich App 553, 556; 655 NW2d 304 (2002).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For a motion brought pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8), this Honorable Court should review the pleadings to test the legal sufficiency of Plaintiffs' claim. Spiek v Department of Transp, 456 Mich 331, 337; 572 NW2d 201 (1998). The motion should be granted if the claim is so clearly unenforceable that no factual development could justify Plaintiff's claim for relief. Id.

A motion brought under MCR 2.116(C)(10) tests the factual support for a plaintiffs' claim. Skinner v Square D Co, 445 Mich 153, 161; 516 NW2d 475 (1994). "The purpose of MCR 2.116(C)(10) is to 'avoid extensive discovery and an evidentiary hearing when a case can be quickly resolved on an issue of law.'" Kern v Kern-Koskela, 320 Mich App 212, 223; 905 NW2d 453 (2017); Maiden v Rozwood, 461 Mich 109, 120-121; 596 NW2d 817 (1999). "Opinions, conclusory denials, unsworn averments and inadmissible hearsay do not satisfy the court rule; disputed fact (or lack of it) must be established by admissible evidence." SSC Associates Limited Partnership v General Retirement System of City of Detroit, 192 Mich App 360; 180 NW2d 275, 277 (1991).

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiff's claims raise a nonjusticiable political question because a presidential candidate's qualifications are reserved for Congress and the voters to decide.

Federal and state courts presented with similar cases challenging the qualifications of presidential candidates have overwhelmingly held that they present nonjusticiable political questions the Constitution reserves for Congress and the voters. This Honorable Court should do likewise.

Political questions are nonjusticiable and therefore not cases or controversies. Massachusetts v EPA, 549 US 497, 516 (2007). The United States Supreme Court set out broad categories that should be considered nonjusticiable political questions in Baker v Carr, 369 US 186, 217 (1962):

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; [2] a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; [5] an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; [and 6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

For its part, Michigan has also adopted a version of the political question doctrine applicable when the courts of this state must determine whether to decide questions of state law that may have been entrusted to coordinate branches of state government. Makowski v Governor, 299 Mich App 166, 829 NW2d 291 (2012). In approaching those questions, the courts of this State have generally considered the Baker factors, albeit taking into account the greater jurisdiction granted trial courts in this State as compared to their federal counterparts. Id. at 173. Here, the U.S. Constitution reserves exclusively to the United States Congress the power under Section Three to determine whether a person may take office.

Plaintiffs ask this Court to strip Congress of its power to make that determination, including waiver of disqualification by a two-thirds vote, and to empower the Sec. of State with duties she does not have. Federal and state courts have overwhelmingly ruled that challenges to the qualifications of presidential candidates are non-justiciable, taking into account considerations of comity and the deference due federal law under the Constitution's Supremacy Clause.

For example, numerous courts held that similar challenges to the qualifications of presidential candidates Barack Obama and John McCain presented nonjusticiable political questions. To wit, the Third Circuit held that a challenge to the qualifications of then-candidate Obama (based on his nationality) was a political question not within the province of the judiciary. See Berg v Obama, 586 F3d 234, 238 (3rd Cir 2009).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Multiple district courts reached the same conclusion. In Grinols v Electoral College, No. 2:12–cv–02997–MCE–DAD, 2013 WL 2294885, at *5-7 (ED Cal, May 23, 2013), the Court dismissed a challenge to President Obama's qualifications for office.[1] There, the Court held that "the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not to federal courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President of the United States. As such, the question presented by Plaintiffs in this case—whether President Obama may legitimately run for office and serve as President—is a political question that the Court may not answer." Id. at *6. Likewise, in Taitz v Democrat Party of Mississippi, No 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (SD Miss, Mar 31, 2015), the Court noted that the presidential electoral and qualification process "are entrusted to the care of the United States Congress, not this court" and that the plaintiffs' disqualification claims were therefore nonjusticiable.

In Robinson v Bowen, 567 F Supp 2d 1144 (ND Cal, 2008), the Court dismissed a case brought before the 2008 election seeking to remove Senator McCain from the ballot. After first holding that the plaintiff lacked standing, the Court rejected an attempt to fix that standing defect by adding Alan Keyes—a competing candidate—as a plaintiff, holding that it would be futile because:

> It is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify. Issues regarding qualifications for president are quintessentially suited to the foregoing process. Arguments concerning qualifications or lack thereof can be laid before the voting public before the election and, once the election is over, can be raised as objections as the electoral votes are counted in Congress. The members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are well qualified to adjudicate any objections to ballots for

[1] Although the Grinols plaintiff sought the removal of a sitting president rather than a presidential candidate, the court had previously refused to grant a temporary restraining order to prevent President Obama's re-election on political question grounds. Grinols v Electoral Coll, No 12-CV-02997-MCE-DAD, 2013 WL 211135, at *4 (ED Cal, Jan. 16, 2013).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> allegedly unqualified candidates. Therefore, this order holds that the challenge presented by plaintiff is committed under the Constitution to the electors and the legislative branch, at least in the first instance. Judicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course.

Id. at 1147.

Moreover, the Sec. of State has no authority to pre-judge a candidate's qualifications for office and strike a candidate from the ballot. The Sec. of State is required to issue a "list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential candidates" for each major political party's nomination by 4:00 p.m. on November 10, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(1). Thereafter, the state chairperson of each major political party must file a "list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party" with the Sec. of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023. See MCL 168.614a(2). All names of the candidates will then be placed on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. MCL 168.615a.

As Plaintiffs concede in Paragraph 311 of their Complaint, the Sec. of State herself has admitted that she does not have the authority to refuse to place President Trump on or strike President Trump from the ballot.

Even if express authority to pre-judge qualifications and strike a candidate from the ballot existed, the exercise of that authority would violate separation of powers:[2]

---

[2] "Furthermore, in the context of a Presidential election, state-imposed restrictions implicate a uniquely important national interest. For the President and the Vice President of the United States are the only elected officials who represent all the voters in the Nation. Moreover, the impact of the votes cast in each State is affected by the votes cast for the various candidates in other States. Thus, in a Presidential election a state's enforcement of more stringent ballot access requirements, including filing deadlines, has an impact beyond its own borders. Similarly, a state has a less important interest in regulating Presidential elections than statewide or local elections, because the outcome of the former will be largely determined by voters beyond the state's boundaries." Anderson v Celebrezze, 460 US 780, 794-95 (1983).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> If a state court were to involve itself in the eligibility of a candidate to hold the office of President, a determination reserved for the Electoral College and Congress, it may involve itself in national political matters for which it is institutionally ill-suited and interfere with the constitutional authority of the Electoral College and Congress.

Strunk v New York State Bd. Of Elections, No 6500/11, 2012 WL 1205117, *12 (Sup Ct Kings County NY, Apr 11, 2012). The California Court of Appeals' language in Keyes v Bowen, 189 CalApp4th 647, 660 (2010), is also instructive:

> In any event, the truly absurd result would be to require each state's election official to investigate and determine whether the proffered candidate met eligibility criteria of the United States Constitution, giving each the power to override a party's selection of a presidential candidate. The presidential nominating process is not subject to each of the 50 states' election officials independently deciding whether a presidential nominee is qualified, as this could lead to chaotic results. Were the courts of 50 states at liberty to issue injunctions restricting certification of duly-elected presidential electors, the result could be conflicting rulings and delayed transition of power in derogation of statutory and constitutional deadlines. Any investigation of eligibility is best left to each party, which presumably will conduct the appropriate background check or risk that its nominee's election will be derailed by an objection in Congress, which is authorized to entertain and resolve the validity of objections following the submission of the electoral votes.

Id.; accord, e.g., Jordan v Secretary of State Sam Reed, No. 12-2-01763-5, 2012 WL 4739216, at *1 (Wash Super, Aug 29, 2012) ("I conclude that this court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. The primacy of congress to resolve issues of a candidate's qualifications to serve as president is established in the US Constitution.")

If this court were to determine that President Trump had been involved in insurrection and that he could not be on the ballot, that decision would prevent Congress from fulfilling its constitutional obligations that occur when a presidential candidate is elected who is not qualified. The Constitution expressly provides that:

> If the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified … and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in > which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

US Const, Am XX. Were it to enter the requested injunction or declaratory judgment preventing President Trump from appearing on the ballot, this Honorable Court would be interfering with this mechanism, responsibility for the operation of which the Constitution vests in Congress—and only in Congress. This case therefore presents a nonjusticiable political question.

II. Plaintiffs lack standing.

Plaintiffs lack standing to bring these lawsuits. The Michigan Supreme Court held:

> Where a cause of action is not provided at law, then a court should, in its discretion, determine whether a litigant has standing. A litigant may have standing in this context if the litigant has a special injury or right, or substantial interest, that will be detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large . . .

Lansing Schs Educ Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Educ, 487 Mich 349, 372; 792 NW2d 686, 700 (2010) (emphasis added).

Federal courts have widely held that individual voters lack standing to challenge the qualifications of presidential candidates.[3] In affirming the dismissal of a claim challenging President Obama's qualifications for office, the Third Circuit held that "a candidate's

[3] See, e.g., Hollander v. McCain, 566 F.Supp.2d 63, 71 (D.N.H. 2008), Cohen v. Obama, 2008 WL 5191864, *1 (D.D.C., Dec. 11, 2008); Berg v. Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 239 (3d Cir. 2009); Barnett v. Obama, No. SACV09-0082 DOC(ANX), 2009 WL 3861788 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 29, 2009) at *8, order clarified, No. SA CV 09-0082 DOC, 2009 WL 8557250 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 16, 2009), and aff'd sub nom. Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774 (9th Cir. 2011); Kerchner v. Obama, 612 F.3d 204, 207 (3d Cir. 2010); Drake v. Obama, 664 F.3d 774, 781-782 (9th Cir. 2011); Sibley v. Obama, 866 F.Supp.2d 17, 20 (D.D.C. 2012); Grinols v. Electoral Coll., No. 2:12-CV-02997-MCE, 2013 WL 2294885, at *10 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2013), aff'd, 622 F. App'x 624 (9th Cir. 2015); and Taitz v. Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *20 (S.D. Miss. Mar. 31, 2015); Const. Ass'n Inc. by Rombach v. Harris, No. 20-CV-2379, 2021 WL 4442870, at *2 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2021), aff'd, No. 21-56287, 2023 WL 418639 (9th Cir. Jan. 26, 2023); Booth v. Cruz, No. 15-CV-518, 2016 WL 403153, at *2 (D.N.H. Jan. 20, 2016), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 WL 409698 (D.N.H. Feb. 2, 2016); Fischer v. Cruz, No. 16-CV-1224, 2016 WL 1383493, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 7, 2016).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ineligibility . . . does not result in an injury in fact to voters." Berg v Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 239 (3d Cir. 2009).

Plaintiffs make no allegation as to how they would be "detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large" if Donald J. Trump is on the ballot. Further, they completely fail to allege how Plaintiffs, specifically, have been injured in any way. How could they? Plaintiffs merely plead that they are voters and intend to vote in the next primary and election, a statement that could apply to any eligible voter in the United States. This is not sufficient to establish standing.

Michigan recognizes a narrow exception to the general standing requirements that only applies to actions for a writ of mandamus regarding election laws. The Court of Appeals recently held:

> Michigan jurisprudence recognizes the special nature of election cases and the standing of ordinary citizens to enforce the law in election cases. "[I]n the absence of a statute to the contrary, ... a private person ... may enforce by mandamus a public right or duty relating to elections without showing a special interest distinct from the interest of the public."

Burton-Harris v Wayne Cnty Clerk, 337 Mich App 215, 225; 976 NW2d 30 (2021) (internal citation omitted). "Mandamus is the appropriate remedy for a party seeking to compel action by election officials." Attorney Gen v Bd of State Canvassers, 318 Mich App 242, 248; 896 NW2d 485 (2016).

The LaBrant (et al) Plaintiffs have not made any claim for mandamus and have instead only requested declaratory and injunctive relief, which are not exceptions to the general standing doctrine. Thus, they have no claim to this narrow exception and their complaint must be dismissed on its face.

While the Davis Plaintiff does raise mandamus, his claim also fails. A plaintiff seeking a writ of mandamus has the burden of establishing four requirements:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> (1) the party seeking the writ has a clear legal right to the performance of the duty sought to be compelled, (2) the defendant has a clear legal duty to perform the act requested, (3) the act is ministerial, that is, it does not involve discretion or judgment, and (4) no other legal or equitable remedy exists that might achieve the same result.

Burton-Harris, 337 Mich App at 228.

First, none of the Plaintiffs have a "clear legal right" to the performance of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment because it is not self-executing as outlined below. When a "constitutional provision is not self-executing," Plaintiffs "have no right to mandamus." Muskegon Cnty v State, ___ Mich App ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2023) (Docket No. 360007); slip op at 6.

Second, the Secretary of State has no legal duty to be the arbiter, enforcer, or adjudicator of Section Three as outlined below. Moreover, the Michigan Supreme Court held that when constitutional provisions "contemplate[] legislative action," they "may not be enforced by mandamus." Bd of Educ of Detroit v Elliott, 319 Mich 436, 443; 29 NW2d 902 (1947). In this case, it is the sole duty of Congress to adjudicate Section Three. Thus, mandamus is not available to Plaintiffs.

Third, removing Donald J. Trump from the ballot is not a ministerial act. "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Burton-Harris, 337 Mich App at 228. Plaintiffs' entire case is based upon a request to have the Sec. of State review statements, publications, news reports, debates, law review articles, and allegations of insurrection and apply this review to contested facts to make multiple determinations, including whether an "insurrection" occurred and, if so, whether President Trump "engaged" in it. Each requires an exceptional degree of "discretion or judgment" and would place the entire adjudication of Section Three and its implementation into the hands of a single elected official. These are the antithesis of "ministerial" determinations.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Since Donald J. Trump has never engaged in any actual acts of insurrection or rebellion, Plaintiffs' entire request is that the Sec. of State review a smorgasbord of statements and speeches from Donald J. Trump and construe them to somehow collectively equate to an "insurrection." Plaintiffs' request is the exact opposite of ministerial.

Fourth, Plaintiffs do have another remedy: petition Congress. As outlined below, it is solely Congress that has the authority to make a determination under Section Three, not each state's Sec. of State. The proper means for Plaintiffs to "achieve the same result" would be for them to request, through their elected representatives, that Congress adjudicate Section Three as it relates to Donald J. Trump.

Plaintiffs fail all four elements of the mandamus test.[4] In summary, Plaintiffs have suffered no injury, they have not demonstrated that they will suffer any injury that is different from the "citizenry at large," and they have failed to demonstrate that they meet the mandamus elements. Plaintiffs' lawsuits must therefore be dismissed.

III. The Complaint further fails because the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing and nothing has occurred to disqualify President Trump.

Even if this case did not pose a political question (it does) and if Plaintiffs had standing (they do not), it would still not succeed on the merits. Section Three is not self-executing, and, therefore, it cannot support a cause of action absent an authorizing statute. See, e.g. Rosberg v Johnson, No. 8:22CV384, 2023 WL 3600895, at *3 (D. Neb. May 23, 2023); Secor v Oklahoma, No. 16-CV-85-JED-PJC, 2016 WL 6156316, at *4 (N.D. OK Oct. 21, 2016). Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment expressly states that "Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 5; See also [4] Thus, even if the LaBrant Plaintiffs were permitted to amend their Complaint to add a request for mandamus, such a request would be futile.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Hansen v Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, at *1 (Ariz, May 9, 2022) ("Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause."); see also, e.g., Ownbey v Morgan, 256 US 94, 112 (1921) ("[I]t cannot rightly be said that the Fourteenth Amendment furnishes a universal and self-executing remedy.").

A recent article by scholars Joshua Blackman and Seth Barrett Tillman summarizes the question of whether Section Three is self-executing as follows:

> In our American constitutional tradition there are two distinct senses of self-execution. First, as a shield—or a defense. And second, as a sword—or a theory of liability or cause of action supporting affirmative relief. The former is customarily asserted as a defense in an action brought by others; the latter is asserted offensively by an applicant seeking affirmative relief.
>
> For example, when the government sues or prosecutes a person, the defendant can argue that the Constitution prohibits the government's action. In other words, the Constitution is raised defensively. In this first sense, the Constitution does not require any further legislation or action by Congress. In these circumstances, the Constitution is, as Baude and Paulsen write, self-executing.
>
> In the second sense, the Constitution is used offensively–as a cause of action supporting affirmative relief. For example, a person goes to court, and sues the government or its officers for damages in relation to a breach of contract or in response to a constitutional tort committed by government actors. As a general matter, to sue the federal government or its officers, a private individual litigant must invoke a federal statutory cause of action. It is not enough to merely allege some unconstitutional state action in the abstract. Section 1983, including its statutory antecedents, i.e., Second Enforcement Act a/k/a Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871, is the primary modern statute that private individuals use to vindicate constitutional rights when suing state government officers.
>
> Constitutional provisions are not automatically self-executing when used offensively by an applicant seeking affirmative relief. Nor is there any presumption that constitutional provisions are self-executing.[5]

---

[5] Blackman and Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3: A Response to William Baude and Michael Stokes Paulsen, at 12, last viewed October 10, 2023, https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4568771 (emphasis in original; internal footnote omitted).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Blackman and Tillman's article proceeds to analyze the question in depth and concludes that Section Three is not self-executing. Importantly, Blackman and Tillman's article has substantially refuted the Baude and Paulsen article cited by the Complaint. The strength of their arguments has caused Baude and Paulsen to substantially modify their own analysis. And Stephen Calabresi, a well-respected constitutional scholar and dean of the Northwestern University Law School, fully reversed his earlier agreement with Baude and Paulsen and has now concluded that Section Three does not prevent President Trump from serving as President.[6]

Ample precedent supports Blackman and Tillman's conclusion, as has been shown not only by Blackman and Tillman, but also by Kurt Lash, the leading scholarly authority on the Reconstruction Amendments, in his recent article.[7] During the debates on Section Three, Congressman Thaddeus Stevens twice argued that this section needed enabling legislation. On May 10, 1866 he argued that "if this amendment prevails, you must legislate to carry out many parts of it. . . . It will not execute itself, but as soon as it becomes a law, Congress at the next session will legislate to carry it out both in reference to the presidential and all other elections as we have a right to do."[8] On June 13, 1866, as the final speaker before the question was called, Congressman Stevens concluded his arguments to support Section Three by passionately arguing "let us no longer delay; take what we can get now, and hope for better things in further legislation; in enabling acts or other provisions. I now, sir, ask for the question."[9]

---

[6] Prof. Steven G. Calabresi, Donald Trump Should be on the Ballot and Should Lose, https://reason.com/volokh/2023/09/16/steve-calabresi-donald-trump-should-be-on- the-ballot-and-should-lose/, last visited Sept. 29, 2023; see also Steven Calabresi, President Trump Can Not be Disqualified, Wall Street Journal, September 12, 2023.

[7] See Kurt Lash, The Meaning and Ambiguity of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment (Oct. 3, 2023), p. 37-43, available at SSRN: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4591838.

[8] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess., at 2544.

[9] Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess., at 3149.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

During the ratification debates, on January 30, 1867, Thomas Chalfant spoke in opposition to the Fourteenth Amendment. One concern he had was that as the Amendment was written, Congress was the only tribunal that was permitted to judge whether someone had "given aid and comfort to the enemy during the rebellion."[10] This was unthinkable to Chalfant since the current makeup of Congress was extremely hostile towards Southern leaders.[11] Chalfant argued that the only way rebel leaders would have a fair trial would be if "under the fifth section of this amendment . . . by appropriate legislation, for enforcing this amendment . . . . I can conceive of nothing, unless it be some act authorizing the appointment of a commission to prescribe qualifications and investigate claims of all candidates and candidates for office. This would be one way."[12]

One year after ratification, Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase of the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that Section Three was not self-executing and that it could only be enforced through specific procedures prescribed by Congress or the United States Constitution. In re Griffin, 11 F Cas 7 (CCVa 1869). Chief Justice Chase reasoned that a different conclusion would have created an immediate and intractable national crisis. In response to this ruling, Congress almost immediately enacted legislation suggested by the Chief Justice.

In 1870, in response to Chief Justice Chase's ruling, Congress passed a law, entitled the "Enforcement Act," which allowed federal district attorneys (but not state election officials) authority to enforce Section Three. The Enforcement Act allowed U.S. district attorneys to seek writs of quo warranto from federal courts to remove from office people who were disqualified by Section Three and further provided for separate criminal trials of people who took office in

---

[10] See fn. 3; see also, Hon. Thos. Chalfant, member from Columbia County, in the House, January 30, 1867, on Senate Bill No. 3, in the Appendix to the Daily Legislative Record Containing the Debates on the Several Important Bills Before the Legislature of 1867 (George Bergner, ed.) (Harrisburg 1867).
[11] See fn. 5 at 43.
[12] Id. at 43-44.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

violation of Section Three. Federal prosecutors immediately started exercising quo warranto authority, bringing charges against many rebel leaders.

These actions waned after a few years,[13] and the Amnesty Act of 1898 completely removed all Section Three disabilities incurred to that date. In 1925, the Enforcement Act was repealed entirely. (By then, nearly every participant in the Civil War had passed away.) A century later, in 2021, legislation was introduced in Congress to create a cause of action to remove individuals from office who were engaged in insurrection or rebellion, but that bill died in Congress.[14] Thus, there is no private right of action that allows individuals such as Plaintiff to enforce Section Three against President Trump.

Congressman Stevens's concluding remarks on the floor of Congress before passage of Section Three, Mr. Chalfant's arguments during the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, Chief Justice Chase's order, and the subsequent legislative history demonstrate that Section Three is not self-executing unless Congress takes action to make it so. Section Three does not give individual secretaries of state, state or federal courts, or individual plaintiffs the authority to remove a presidential candidate from the ballot.

Nor could it be otherwise. A successful challenge would create a patchwork of 51 state (and district) election laws and potentially conflicting orders and rulings that would contradict established precedent, constitutional tradition, and common sense. Given the structure of our presidential elections, under Plaintiffs' theory a single state's courts or election officials—whether acting in good faith or for partisan ends—would effectively be able to decide a national election no matter how out of step they were with the rest of the nation and its voters. This is the exact

[13] See Amnesty Act of 1872 (removing most disqualifications in the manner provided by Section Three); Pres. Grant Proclamation 208 (suspending quo warranto prosecutions).
[14] See H.R. 1405, 117th Cong. 2021.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

crisis Chief Justice Chase feared and it is precisely why this question is reserved for a single, uniform, national decision by Congress.

IV. Fourteenth Amendment considerations.

States are preempted from creating additional qualifications for federal office. The Constitution lists the qualifications to be President. The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits individuals from holding offices under the United States; it does not prohibit them from being elected. States have not been delegated authority to create qualifications to run for President of the United States. Thus, Petitioners' requested relief is preempted.

Electing the President of the United States is a federal function. It arises under the Constitution as a consequence of the creation of the national government. "As Justice Story recognized, 'the states can exercise no powers whatsoever, which exclusively spring out of the existence of the national government, which the constitution does not delegate to them . . . . No state can say that it has reserved, what it never possessed." US Term Limits, Inc v Thornton, 514 US 779, 802 (1995) (citation omitted). Thus, states cannot exercise any power over federal elections unless they are delegated such powers by the Constitution. If this were not so, it would lead to the absurd result where each state could add their own set of required qualifications in order to run for President. But see id. at 805 (states do not have authority to add their own qualifications for federal office). Moreover, if a state does not possess the authority to alter presidential qualifications, it logically follows that each state does not have any right to adjudicate presidential qualifications. Instead, the proper place to adjudicate presidential qualifications is in Congress. This is consistent with courts' determinations, in the context of a political question analysis (addressed above), that the Constitution assigned to Congress the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President of the United States.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

While states are delegated some power to impose procedural requirements, such as requiring candidates to "muster a preliminary showing of support" before appearing on the ballot, they cannot add new substantive requirements. Schaefer v Townsend, 215 F3d 1031, 1038 (9th Cir 2000). States may not circumvent this limit by seeking to recast substantive restrictions as procedural ballot access conditions. See US Term Limits, 514 US at 829-835; Schaefer, 215 F3d at 1037-1039.

Yet, that is precisely what Plaintiffs seek to have this Honorable Court do in this case. Plaintiffs want this Honorable Court to direct the state to exclude President Trump from the ballot based on a purported violation of Section Three of the 14th Amendment. But doing so would require the state to adjudicate qualifications for President of the United States that are not in the Constitution.

To see why this is, it is necessary to examine the text of the 14th amendment. The 14th Amendment does not prohibit individuals from being on the ballot for an office under the United States, being nominated for such office, or being elected to such office. It prohibits them from holding such office. US Const, am 14, § 3. This distinction matters because it speaks directly to when the requirements of Section Three are operative.

This distinction makes sense because even if there is a "disability" under section 3, it may be lifted by a two-thirds vote of each House. Id. Thus, even if someone is unquestionably disqualified under Section Three, they may still appear on the ballot and be elected by the people. Whether they are able to "hold" the office depends on whether Congress "remove[s] such disability." See generally Smith v Moore, 90 Ind 294, 303 (1883) (describing the distinction between restrictions on being elected versus holding an office, and noting "[u]nder [section 3] . . . it has been the constant practice of the Congress of the United States since the Rebellion, to admit persons to seats in that body who were ineligible at the date of the election, but whose disabilities had been subsequently removed."); Privett v Bickford, 26 Kan 52, 58 (1881) (analogizing to section 3 and concluding that voters can vote for an ineligible candidate who can only take office once his disability is legally removed); Sublett v Bedwell, 47 Miss 266, 274 (1872) ("The practical interpretation put upon [Section Three] has been, that it is a personal disability to 'hold office,' and if that be removed before the term begins, the election is made good, and the person may take the office.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Ninth Circuit's opinion in Schaefer further illustrates why this is important. In Schaefer, the court evaluated a California law that required candidates for Congress to satisfy a residency requirement at the time he or she filed his or her nomination papers. As in this case, California's law sought to implement a constitutional requirement, the requirement that a member of the House of Representatives be an inhabitant of the state in which he shall be chosen.[15] Nevertheless, the court determined that California's law was unconstitutional because it added qualifications that are not found in the Constitution. Timing was critical in reaching this conclusion. The Constitution provides that an individual must be an inhabitant of the state "when elected." Id. "When elected" is not "when nominated" because nonresident candidates could move into the State and "inhabit" it in the period between nomination and election. Schaefer, 215 F3d at 1037.

As explained above, the manner of counting electoral college votes is dictated by federal statute and the United States Constitution. See e.g., 3 USC § 15. Further, "mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 USC § 15 for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted," and that "the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding

[15] US Const, art I, § 2, cl. 2.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

how to proceed if a president-elect shall have failed to qualify." Bowen, 567 F Supp at 1146-47. Because federal constitutional and statutory law already governs presidential qualifications, federal law must reign supreme. Additionally, states may not add additional requirements for federal office beyond those listed in the Constitution, including eligibility requirements. US Term Limits, 514 US at 805. There is no precedent permitting a lone state to adjudicate a presidential candidate's qualifications. Such a dispute must be addressed in Congress. Therefore, Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed.

V. The prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to President Trump.

The plain text of Section Three identifies to whom it applies. Section Three states as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

US Const, am XIV, § 3 (emphasis added)

The phrase "Officers of the United States" does not include the President. See Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Is the President an "Officer of the United States" for Purposes of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment?, 15(1) NYU JL & LIBERTY 1 (2021). Shortly after ratification of Section Three:

> In 1876, the House of Representatives impeached Secretary of War William Belknap. During the trial, Senator Newton Booth from California observed, "the President is not an officer of the United States." Instead, Booth stated, the President is "part of the Government." Two years later, David McKnight wrote an influential treatise on the American electoral system. He reached a similar conclusion. McKnight wrote that "[i]t is obvious that . . . the President is not regarded as 'an officer of, or under, the United States,' but as one branch of 'the Government.'

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3, 28(2) TEX REV L & POL 112 (forthcoming circa Mar. 2024) (quoting David A. McKnight, The Electoral System of the United States: A Critical and Historical Exposition of its Fundamental Principles in the Constitution, and the of the Acts and Proceedings of Congress Enforcing it, 346 (Philadelphia, J.B. Lippincott & Co. 1878)).

Recent precedent supports this history. Interpreting the Appointments Clause, the Supreme Court observed that "[t]he people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States." Free Enterprise Fund v Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, 561 US 477, 497-98 (2010) (quoting US Const, art II, § 2, cl 2). As noted by the Supreme Court in 2020, "Article II distinguishes between two kinds of officers—principal officers (who must be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate) and inferior officers (whose appointment Congress may vest in the President, courts, or heads of Departments)." Seila Law LLC v. CFPB, 140 S Ct 2183, 2199 n. 3 (2020). Neither category includes the President.

Three provisions in the U.S. Constitution show that the President is not "an officer of the United States":

> First, presidents fall under the scope of the Impeachment Clause precisely because there is express language in the clause providing for presidential impeachments; the Impeachment Clause does not rely on general "office"- or "officer"-language to make presidents impeachable. We think this is the common convention with regard to drafting constitutional provisions. When a proscription is meant to control elected positions, those positions are expressly named, as opposed to relying on general "office"- and "officer"-language. Congress does not hide the Commander in Chief in mouseholes or even foxholes. For example, in 1969, future-Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, then an Executive Branch attorney, addressed this sort of clear-statement principle. Statutes that refer to "officers of the United States," he wrote, generally "are construed not to include the President unless there is a specific indication that Congress intended to cover the Chief Executive." Five years later, future-Justice Antonin Scalia, then also an Executive Branch attorney, reached a similar conclusion with regard to the Constitution's "office"-language. These Executive Branch precedents would counsel against deeming the President an "officer of the United States."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Second, as to the Appointments Clause, which uses "Officers of the United States"-language, Presidents do not appoint themselves or their successors. The Supreme Court hears a never-ending stream of cases that ask if a particular position is a principal or inferior officer of the United States—even though the Appointments Clause does not even distinguish between those two types of positions. Where has the Court ever suggested that the President falls in the ambit of the Appointments Clause's "Officers of the United States"-language? . . .
>
> And, finally, as to the Commissions Clause, which also uses "Officers of the United States"-language, Presidents do not commission themselves, their vice presidents, their successor presidents, or successor vice presidents.

Sweeping and Forcing the President Into Section 3, supra at 106-07.

And finally, the structure of Section Three itself shows that it does not apply to the office of the President.

> The second clause does not expressly list several categories of positions: e.g., presidential electors, appointed officers of state legislatures, members of state constitutional conventions, and state militia officers. The first clause does not expressly list several categories of positions: e.g., members of the state legislatures, and members of state constitutional conventions. Neither list expressly mentions the President and Vice President.

Id. at 115.

Moreover, Section Three applies only to those who have "previously taken an oath . . . to support the Constitution of the United States." US Const, am XIV, § 3. (emphasis added). Certain members of the federal and state governments take such an oath:

> The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution . . . .

US Const, art VI, cl 3 (emphasis added). But the President of the United States does not. The presidential oath instead reads:

> Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:– I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

US Const, art II, § 1, cl. 8 (emphasis added).

The difference between the oath to support the constitution (per Article VI) and the oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution (per Article II) is a significant one. It establishes that the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment did not understand the President to be an Officer of the United States. And taking an oath to support the Constitution further limits the class of people to whom Section Three applies. President Trump is not one of those people to whom Section Three applies.

Section Three's drafting is no accident, but rather rooted in the Framers' robust debate and careful wordsmithing. When Congress was debating the wording of Section Three, there was no individual who had only taken the Article II oath.[16] The words that both the Framers and the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment chose must be given their proper meaning. Martin v Hunter's Lessee, 14 US 304, 334 (1816) ("From this difference of phraseology, perhaps, a difference of constitutional intention may, with propriety, be inferred. It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the language could have been accidental."). When drafting the Impeachment Clause, the Framers initially referred to the President, Vice President, and "other civil officers of the U.S." See 2 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, at 545 and 552 (Farrand ed., 1911). But upon further deliberation, the Framers changed the Impeachment Clause to remove the word "other." Id. at 600. This change shows that the Framers understood that the President was not one of the "other" officers of the United States—instead, the President is outside the category of "officers of the United States," and, therefore, falls outside the ambit of Section Three.

V. The prohibitions of Section Three do not even apply to the conduct as alleged in the Complaint.

[16] See, Lash, The Meaning and Ambiguity of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, p. 4.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Complaint rests on misinterpreting Section Three to say what it does not. Plaintiffs, over dozens of pages and hundreds of paragraphs of salacious distraction, allege that President Trump "'engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or [gave] aid or comfort to the enemies thereof' within the meaning of section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment." [Complaint at ¶¶305; see also 285-309.] But Plaintiffs fail to plausibly allege that President Trump did either of those things.

A. The January 6th riot does not constitute an "insurrection" under Section Three.

Section Three speaks in terms of "insurrection" and "rebellion"—and these terms were not pulled out of thin air. Congress modeled Section Three partly on the original Constitution's Treason Clause, and partly on the Second Confiscation Act (enacted in 1862). The Confiscation Act punished anyone who "shall hereafter incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States … or give aid or comfort thereto." 12 Stat. 589, 627 (1862); see 18 USC § 2383. Section Three similarly covers "insurrection or rebellion." US Const, am XIV, § 3. But unlike the Confiscation Act, Congress excluded from Section Three any penalty for inciting, assisting, or giving aid to insurrection. Section Three only penalizes those who "engaged" in it. Id.

Congress discussed the meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" at length in debates. Congress confirmed that insurrection and rebellion describe two types of treason—not lesser crimes. See 37 Cong. Globe 2d Session, 2173, 2189, 2190-91, 2164-2167 (1862). After ratification, Congress reinforced these same conclusions when debating enforcement of Section Three. 41 Cong Globe 2d Session, 5445-46 (1870). The Congress that had just drafted Section Three believed that someone committed "insurrection" or "rebellion" if he led uniformed troops in battle against the United States, but not if he or she merely voted to support secession with violent force, recruited for the Confederacy, provided wartime aid, or held offices in the rebel government. The drafters chose words that encompassed at least the main actors in that act of treason, but no more. They were not trying to legislate with an eye toward political riots. In the aftermath of the Civil War, these were imminently important distinctions.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

One year after the Confiscation Act became law, Chief Justice Chase held that the Act prohibits only conduct that "amount[s] to treason within the meaning of the Constitution," not any lesser offense. United States v Greathouse, 26 F Cas 18, 21 (CCND Cal 1863). Not just any form of treason would do: the Act only covered treason that "consist[ed] in engaging in or assisting a rebellion or insurrection." Id. Writing in the same case, a second judge confirmed and clarified that, for these purposes, "engaging in a rebellion and giving it aid and comfort[] amounts to a levying of war," and that insurrection and treason involve "different penalt[ies]" but are "substantially the same." Id. at 25.

Dictionaries of the time confirm this understanding. John Bouvier's 1868 legal dictionary defined "insurrection" as a "rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government," and "rebellion" as "taking up arms traitorously against the government." A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union (Philadelphia, GW Childs, 12th ed, rev and enl 1868).

So "insurrection," as understood at the time of the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, meant the taking up of arms and waging war upon the United States. At the time of Section Three's enactment, the United States had undergone a horrific civil war in which over 600,000 combatants died, and the very survival of the nation was in doubt. As shown by the omission of the word "incitement" in Section Three, Congress did not intend that provision to encompass those who

