¶81 Furthermore, because section 1-1-113 proceedings are designed to address election-related disputes, they move quickly out of necessity. Frazier, ¶ 11, 401 P.3d at 544 ("Given the tight deadlines for conducting elections, section 1-1-113 is a summary proceeding designed to quickly resolve challenges brought by electors, candidates, and other designated plaintiffs against state election officials prior to election day."). Lawyers who practice in this area are well-aware of this. Looming elections trigger a cascade of deadlines under both state and federal law that cannot accommodate protracted litigation schedules, particularly when the dispute concerns a candidate's access to the ballot. And a state's interest in "protecting the integrity of the election process and avoiding voter confusion," Lindsay, 750 F.3d at 1063 (citing Timmons, 520 U.S. at 364–65), allows a state to expedite the process by which a candidate's qualifications, once challenged, are subsequently determined. That the form of section 1-1-113 proceedings reflects their function—to expeditiously resolve pre-election disputes over an election official's wrongful act—does not mean these proceedings lack due process.

¶82 Nor does the need for expedited proceedings in election disputes preclude a district court from using traditional means of case management in a section

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1-1-113 proceeding to construct a schedule that accommodates legally or factually complex issues. See Ferrigno Warren, ¶¶ 8–13, 462 P.3d at 1083 (explaining that the district court ordered briefing and held a hearing one month after the candidate filed a section 1-1-113 petition). President Trump contends that the expedited nature of section 1-1-113 proceedings do not provide time for the kinds of procedures he believes the complexities of this case require—for example, filing C.R.C.P. 12 motions testing the legal sufficiency of the Electors' claims before the litigation proceeds, allowing for extended discovery and disclosure procedures, and providing the opportunity to depose expert witnesses. But he has never specifically articulated how the district court's approach lacked due process. He certainly does not contend that he was prejudiced because the district court moved too slowly or failed to resolve the case in a week. He made no specific offer of proof regarding other discovery he would have conducted or other evidence he would have tendered. Moreover, his arguments throughout this case have focused predominantly on questions of law and not on disputed issues of material fact.

¶83 In addition, the district court took many steps to address the complexities of the case. For example, the first hearing in this case was a status conference on September 18—four days after the case was reopened after being remanded from federal court. In recognition of the complexity of the case, the district court—with the parties' input—adopted a civil-case-management approach to the litigation that afforded the parties the opportunity to be heard on a wide range of substantive issues.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶84 The district court's case-management approach worked. After permitting multiple intervenors to participate, the district court allowed sufficient time for extensive prehearing motions in which all parties vigorously engaged. It then issued three substantive rulings on these motions, including an omnibus ruling addressing four of Intervenors' motions, all in advance of the trial. The trial took place over five days and included opening and closing statements, the direct- and cross-examination of fifteen witnesses, and the presentation of ninety-six exhibits. Moreover, the legal and factual complexity of this case did not prevent the district court from issuing a comprehensive, 102-page order within the forty-eight-hour window section 1-4-1204(4) requires.

¶85 In short, the district court admirably—and swiftly—discharged its duty to adjudicate this complex section 1-1-113 action, substantially complying with statutory deadlines while demonstrating the flexibility inherent in such a proceeding to address the various issues raised by Intervenors. And nothing about the district court's process suggests that President Trump was deprived of notice or opportunity to fully respond to the claim against him or to mount a vigorous defense. If any case suggests that it is not impossible to "fully litigate a complex constitutional issue within days or weeks," this is it. Frazier, ¶ 18 n.3, 401 P.3d at 545 n.3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶86 For these reasons, we conclude that the Election Code allows Colorado's courts, through challenges brought under sections 1-4-1204(4) and 1-1-113, to assess the constitutional qualifications of a candidate—and to order the Secretary to exclude from the ballot candidates who are not qualified. These provisions advance Colorado's "legitimate interest in protecting the integrity and practical functioning of the political process" by allowing the Secretary to "exclude from the ballot [presidential] candidates who are constitutionally prohibited from assuming office." Hassan, 495 F. App'x at 948. Moreover, these provisions neither infringe on a political party's associational rights nor compromise the validity of a court's rulings on complex factual and legal issues. Rather, they provide a robust vehicle through which to protect the purity of Colorado's elections.[10] See Colo. Const. art. VII, § 11.

---

[10] We note that Colorado's Election Code differs from other states' election laws. Michigan's election law, for example, does not include the term "qualified candidate," does not establish a role for Michigan courts in assessing the qualifications of a presidential primary candidate, and strictly limits the Michigan Secretary of State's responsibilities in the context of presidential primary elections. See Mich. Comp. Laws §§ 168.613, 168.620a (governing presidential primary elections in Michigan). The Michigan code also excludes presidential and vice presidential candidates from the requirement to submit the "affidavit of identity" that other candidates must submit to indicate that they "meet[] the constitutional and statutory qualifications for the office sought." See Davis v. Wayne Cnty. Election

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶87 Because the Electors have properly invoked Colorado's section 1-1-113 process to challenge the listing of President Trump on the presidential primary ballot as a wrongful act, we proceed to the other threshold questions raised by Intervenors.

C. The Disqualification Provision of Section Three Attaches Without Congressional Action

¶88 The Electors' challenge to the Secretary's ability to certify President Trump as a qualified candidate presumes that Section Three is "self-executing" in the sense that it is enforceable as a constitutional disqualification without implementing legislation from Congress. Because Congress has not authorized state courts to enforce Section Three, Intervenors argue that this court may not consider President Trump's alleged disqualification under Section Three in this section 1-1-113 proceeding.[11] We disagree.

Comm'n, No. 368615, 2023 WL 8656163, at *14 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 14, 2023) (unpublished order) (quoting Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.558(1)–(2)). Given these statutory constraints, it is unsurprising that the Michigan Court of Appeals recently concluded that the Michigan Secretary of State had no discretion to refrain from placing President Trump on the presidential primary ballot once his party identified him as a candidate. Id. at *16.

[11] Intervenors and their supporting amici occasionally assert that the Electors' claim is brought pursuant to Section Three and that the Section is not self-executing in the sense that it does not create an independent private right of action. But as mentioned above, the Electors do not bring any claim directly under Section Three. Their claim is brought under Colorado's Election Code, and resolution of that claim requires an examination of President Trump's qualifications in light of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶89 The only mention of congressional power in Section Three is that "Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove" the disqualification of a former officer who had "engaged in insurrection." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Section Three does not determine who decides whether the disqualification has attached in the first place.

¶90 Intervenors, however, look to Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment, which provides that "[t]he Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article," to argue that congressional authorization is necessary for any enforcement of Section Three. Id. at § 5. This argument does not withstand scrutiny.

¶91 The Supreme Court has said that the Fourteenth Amendment "is undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation, so far as its terms are applicable to any existing state of circumstances." The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 20 (1883). To be sure, in the Civil Rights Cases, the Court was directly focused on the Thirteenth Amendment, so this statement could be described as dicta. But an examination of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments

---

Section Three. The question of "self-execution" that we confront here is not whether Section Three creates a cause of action or a remedy, but whether the disqualification from office defined in Section Three can be evaluated by a state court when presented with a proper vehicle (like section 1-1-113), without prior congressional authorization.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

("Reconstruction Amendments") and interpretation of them supports the accuracy and broader significance of the statement.

¶92 Section Three is one of four substantive sections of the Fourteenth Amendment:

- Section One: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . ."
- Section Two: "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State . . . ."
- Section Three: "No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office . . . under the United States . . . who, having previously taken an oath . . . to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same . . . ."
- Section Four: "The validity of the public debt of the United States . . . shall not be questioned."

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, §§ 1–4 (emphases added). Section Five is then an enforcement provision that applies to each of these substantive provisions. Id. at § 5. And yet, the Supreme Court has held that Section One is self-executing. E.g., City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 524 (1997) ("As enacted, the Fourteenth Amendment confers substantive rights against the States which, like the provisions of the Bill of Rights, are self-executing."), superseded by statute, Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 114 Stat. 803, on other grounds as recognized in Ramirez v. Collier, 595 U.S. 411, 424 (2022). Thus, while Congress may enact enforcement legislation pursuant to Section Five, congressional action is not required to give effect to the constitutional provision. See Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641, 651 (1966) (holding that Section Five gives Congress authority to "determin[e] whether and what legislation is needed to secure the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment," but not disputing that the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶93 Section Two, moreover, was enacted to eliminate the constitutional compromise by which an enslaved person was counted as only three-fifths of a person for purposes of legislative apportionment. William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U. Pa. L. Rev. (forthcoming 2024) (manuscript at 51–52), https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751. The self-executing nature of that section has never been called into question, and in the reapportionment following passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress simply treated the change as having occurred. See The Apportionment Act of 1872, 17 Stat. 28 (42nd Congress) (apportioning Representatives to the various states based on Section Two's command without mentioning, or purporting to enforce, the Fourteenth Amendment). Similarly, Congress never passed enabling legislation to effectuate Section Four.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶94 The same is true for the Thirteenth Amendment, which abolished slavery and involuntary servitude. Section One provides the substantive provision: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . . shall exist within the United States . . . ." U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1 (emphasis added). Section Two provides the enforcement provision: "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." Id. at § 2. Discussing this Amendment, the Supreme Court recognized that "legislation may be necessary and proper to meet all the various cases and circumstances to be affected by it," but that "[b]y its own unaided force it abolished slavery" and was "undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation." The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. at 20.

¶95 Like the other Reconstruction Amendments, the Fifteenth Amendment, which established universal male suffrage, contains a substantive provision—"[t]he right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged . . . on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"—followed by an enforcement provision—"[t]he Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." U.S. Const. amend. XV, §§ 1–2 (emphasis added). As with Section One of both the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments, the Supreme Court has explicitly confirmed that the Fifteenth Amendment is self-executing. E.g., South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 325 (1966) (holding that Section One of the Fifteenth Amendment "has always been treated as self-executing and has repeatedly been construed, without further legislative specification, to invalidate state voting qualifications or procedures which are discriminatory on their face or in practice").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶96 There is no textual evidence that Congress intended Section Three to be any different.[12] Furthermore, we agree with the Electors that interpreting any of the Reconstruction Amendments, given their identical structure, as not self-executing would lead to absurd results. If these Amendments required legislation to make them operative, then Congress could nullify them by simply not passing enacting legislation. The result of such inaction would mean that slavery remains legal; Black citizens would be counted as less than full citizens for reapportionment; non-white male voters could be disenfranchised; and any individual who engaged in insurrection against the government would nonetheless be able to serve in the [12] It would also be anomalous to say this disqualification for office-holding requires enabling legislation when the other qualifications for office-holding do not. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 2 ("No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen."); id. at § 3, cl. 3 ("No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."); id. at art. II, § 1, cl. 5 ("No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.").

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

government, regardless of whether two-thirds of Congress had lifted the disqualification. Surely that was not the drafters' intent.

¶97 Intervenors argue that certain historical evidence requires a different conclusion as to Section Three. We generally turn to historical and other extrinsic evidence only when the text is ambiguous, which it is not here. Nonetheless, we will consider these historical claims in the interest of providing a thorough review.

¶98 Intervenors first highlight a statement Representative Thaddeus Stevens made during the Congressional framing debates: "[Section Three] will not execute itself, but as soon as it becomes a law, Congress at the next session will legislate to carry it out both in reference to the presidential and all other elections as we have the right to do." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2544 (1866); see also Kurt T. Lash, The Meaning and Ambiguity of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment 42 (Oct. 3, 2023) (unpublished manuscript), https://ssrn.com/abstract=4591838. But as one of the amici points out, this statement referenced a deleted portion of Section Three that disenfranchised all former Confederates until 1870. In any event, given the complex patchwork of perspectives and intentions expressed when drafting these constitutional provisions, we refuse to cherry-pick individual statements from extensive debates to ground our analysis. See generally Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 39–53).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶99 Intervenors next direct us to the non-binding opinion written by Chief Justice Salmon Chase while he was riding circuit: In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) ("Griffin's Case").[13] There, Caesar Griffin challenged his criminal conviction as null and void because under Section Three, the judge who had entered his conviction was disqualified from holding judicial office, having formerly sworn a relevant oath as a state legislator and then engaged in insurrection by continuing to serve as a legislator in Virginia's Confederate government. Id. at 22–23. It was undisputed that the judge fell within Section Three's scope, but the question Chief Justice Chase sought to answer was whether Section Three "operat[ed] directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power." Id. at 23.

¶100 In interpreting the scope of the provision, Chief Justice Chase observed that, after the end of the Civil War but before the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, many southern states had established, with the approval of the federal government, provisional governments to keep society functioning. Id. at 25; see [13] Between 1789 and 1911, U.S. Supreme Court justices traveled across the country and, together with district court judges, sat on circuit courts to decide cases. See generally Joshua Glick, On the Road: The Supreme Court and the History of Circuit Riding, 24 Cardozo L. Rev. 1753 (2003). Decisions written by the justices while they were riding circuit were not decisions of the Supreme Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

also Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 36). And, within these provisional governments, many offices were filled with citizens who would fall within Section Three's scope. Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 25. Chief Justice Chase observed that giving Section Three a literal construction, as Griffin advocated, would "annul all official acts performed by these officers. No sentence, no judgment, no decree, . . . no official act [would be] of the least validity." Id. He reasoned that it would be "impossible to measure the evils which such a construction would add to the calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these states." Id.

¶101 And so, Chief Justice Chase turned to what he termed the "argument from inconveniences" and the interpretive canon that, when faced with two or more reasonable interpretations, the interpretation "is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general terms and spirit of the act amended." Id. He then explained that, while it was not "improbable that one of the objects of this section was to provide for the security of the nation and of individuals, by the exclusion of a class of citizens from office," it could also "hardly be doubted that the main purpose was to inflict upon the leading and most influential characters who had been engaged in the Rebellion, exclusion from office as a punishment for the offense." Id. at 25–26. To find the provision self-executing under the circumstances, he argued, would be contrary to due process because it would, "at once without trial, deprive[] a whole class of persons of offices held by them." Id. at 26.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶102 Chief Justice Chase therefore concluded that the object of the Amendment—"to exclude from certain offices a certain class of persons"—was impossible to do "by a simple declaration, whether in the constitution or in an act of congress . . . . For, in the very nature of things, it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate." Id. To accomplish "this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions . . . are indispensable; and . . . can only be provided for by congress." Id. Thus, Chief Justice Chase concluded that Section Three was not self-executing. Id.

¶103 Griffin's Case concludes that congressional action is needed before Section Three disqualification attaches, but this one case does not persuade us of that point. Intervenors and amici assert that Griffin's Case "remains good law and has been repeatedly relied on." Because the case is not binding on us, the fact that it has not been reversed is of no particular significance. And the cases that cite it do so either with no analysis—e.g., State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599 (1875), and Rothermel v. Meyerle, 136 Pa. 250 (1890)—or for the inapposite proposition that Section Three does not create a self-executing cause of action—e.g., Cale v. City of Covington, 586 F.2d 311, 316 (4th Cir. 1978), and Hansen v. Finchem, CV 2022-004321 (Sup. Ct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of Ariz., Maricopa Cnty. Apr. 22, 2022), aff'd on other grounds, 2022 WL 1468157 (May 9, 2022). Moreover, Griffin's Case has been the subject of persuasive criticism. See, e.g., Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three, supra, at 105–08 (critiquing the case because the other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment were understood as self-executing and the notion that Section Three was not self-executing was inconsistent with congressional behavior at the time); Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 37–49) (criticizing Chief Justice Chase's interpretation as wrong and constituting a strained interpretation based on policy and circumstances rather than established canons of construction).

¶104 Although we do not find Griffin's Case compelling, we agree with Chief Justice Chase that "it must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition." 11 F. Cas. at 26. While the disqualification of Section Three attaches automatically, the determination that such an attachment has occurred must be made before the disqualification holds meaning. And Congress has the power under Section Five to establish a process for making that determination. But the fact that Congress may establish such a process does not mean that disqualification pursuant to Section Three can be determined only through a process established by Congress. Here, the Colorado legislature has established a process—a court proceeding pursuant to section 1-1-113—to make the determination whether a candidate is qualified to be placed on the presidential primary ballot. And, for the reasons we have already explained, that process is sufficient to permit a judicial determination of whether Section Three disqualification has attached to a particular individual.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶105 We are similarly unpersuaded by Intervenors' assertions that Congress created the only currently available mechanism for determining whether a person is disqualified pursuant to Section Three with the 1994 passage of 18 U.S.C. § 2383. That statute makes it a crime to "assist[] or engage[] in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States." True, with that enactment, Congress criminalized the same conduct that is disqualifying under Section Three. All that means, however, is that a person charged and convicted under 18 U.S.C. § 2383 would also be disqualified under Section Three. It cannot be read to mean that only those charged and convicted of violating that law are constitutionally disqualified from holding future office without assuming a great deal of meaning not present in the text of the law.

¶106 In summary, based on Section Three's plain language; Supreme Court decisions declaring its neighboring, parallel Reconstruction Amendments self-executing; and the absurd results that would flow from Intervenors' reading, we conclude that Section Three is self-executing in the sense that its disqualification provision attaches without congressional action. Intervenors' contrary arguments do not persuade us otherwise.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶107 That said, our conclusion that implementing legislation from Congress is unnecessary for us to proceed under section 1-1-113 does not resolve the question of whether doing so would violate the separation of powers among the three branches of government. We turn to this justiciability question next.

D. Section Three Is Justiciable

¶108 President Trump next asserts that presidential disqualification under Section Three presents a nonjusticiable political question. Again, we disagree.

¶109 "In general, the Judiciary has a responsibility to decide cases properly before it, even those it 'would gladly avoid.'" Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 194 (quoting Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 404 (1821)). The political question doctrine is a narrow exception to this rule, and a court may not avoid its responsibility to decide a case merely because it may have "political implications." Id. at 195–96 (quoting Immigr. & Naturalization Serv. v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 943 (1983)).

¶110 A controversy involves a nonjusticiable political question when, as relevant here, "there is 'a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it.'" Id. at 195 (quoting Nixon v. United States, 506 U.S. 224, 228 (1993)); see also Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 210, 217 (1962) (noting that "[t]he nonjusticiability of a political question is primarily a function of the separation of powers" and identifying the above-described instances, and four others not relevant here, as examples of political questions). The requisite textual commitment must be "[p]rominent on the surface of any case." Baker, 369 U.S. at 217.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶111 Here, President Trump argues that this case is nonjusticiable because, in his view, the Constitution and federal law commit the question of the qualifications of a presidential candidate to Congress. The Electors point out that President Trump did not argue before us that the questions presented in this appeal are also nonjusticiable based on a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards, and therefore, he arguably waived any such argument. We nevertheless address that issue, again in the interest of providing a thorough review.

1. No Textually Demonstrable Constitutional Commitment to Congress of Section Three Disqualification

¶112 Contrary to President Trump's assertions, we perceive no constitutional provision that reflects a textually demonstrable commitment to Congress of the authority to assess presidential candidate qualifications. Conversely, the Constitution commits certain authority concerning presidential elections to the states and in no way precludes the states from exercising authority to assess the qualifications of presidential candidates.

¶113 As discussed in Part B.4 above, Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 of the Constitution empowers state legislatures to direct how presidential electors are appointed, and the Supreme Court has recognized that this provision affords the states "far-reaching authority over presidential electors, absent some other constitutional constraint." Chiafalo, 140 S. Ct. at 2324. In furtherance of this delegation of authority, "the States have evolved comprehensive, and in many respects complex, election codes regulating in most substantial ways, with respect to both federal and state elections," the "selection and qualification of candidates," among other things. Storer, 415 U.S. at 730. The Election Code is an example of such a "comprehensive" code to regulate state and federal elections. And the fact that Article II, Section 1, Clause 4 authorizes Congress to determine the time for choosing the electors and the date on which they vote does not undermine the substantial authority provided to the states to regulate state and federal elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶114 In our view, Section Three's text is fully consistent with our conclusion that the Constitution has not committed the matter of presidential candidate qualifications to Congress. As we have noted, although Section Three requires a "vote of two-thirds of each House" to remove the disqualification set forth in Section Three, it says nothing about who or which branch should determine disqualification in the first place. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Moreover, if Congress were authorized to decide by a simple majority that a candidate is qualified under Section Three, as President Trump asserts, then this would nullify Section Three's supermajority requirement.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶115 President Trump's reliance on Article II, Section 1, Clause 5 of the Constitution and on the Twelfth, Fourteenth, and Twentieth Amendments is misplaced. We address each of these provisions, in turn.

¶116 Article II, Section 1, Clause 5 provides that no person shall be eligible to serve as President unless that person is "a natural born Citizen" who is at least thirty-five years of age and who has resided in the United States for at least fourteen years. This provision, however, says nothing about who or which branch should determine whether a candidate satisfies the qualification criteria either in the first instance or when a candidate's qualifications are challenged. See id.

¶117 The Twelfth Amendment charges the Electoral College with the task of selecting a candidate for President and then transmitting the electors' votes to the "seat of the government of the United States," and it provides the procedure by which the electoral votes are to be counted. U.S. Const. amend. XII. Nothing in the Twelfth Amendment, however, vests the Electoral College with the power to determine the eligibility of a presidential candidate. See Elliott v. Cruz, 137 A.3d 646, 650–51 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2016), aff'd, 134 A.3d 51 (Pa. 2016) (mem.). Nor does the Twelfth Amendment give Congress "control over the process by which the President and Vice President are normally chosen, other than the very limited one of determining the day on which the electors were to 'give their votes.'" Id. at 651 (citing U.S. Const. amend. XII). And although the Twelfth Amendment provides for the scenario in which no President is selected by March 4 and specifies that no person constitutionally ineligible to serve as President shall be eligible to serve as Vice President, the Amendment does not assign to Congress (nor to any other branch) the task of determining whether a candidate is qualified in the first place.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶118 Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment authorizes Congress to pass legislation to enforce the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, but as discussed above, the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing, and congressional action under Section Five is not required to animate Section Three's disqualification of insurrectionist oath-breakers. Nor does Section Five delegate to Congress the authority to determine the qualifications of presidential candidates to hold office. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 5.

¶119 Finally, the Twentieth Amendment, in relevant part, empowers Congress to enact procedures to address the scenario in which neither the President nor the Vice President qualifies for office before the time fixed for the beginning of their terms. U.S. Const. amend. XX, § 3. By its express language, however, this Amendment applies post-election. Id. (referring to the "President elect" and "Vice President elect"). Moreover, the Amendment says nothing about who determines in the first instance whether the President and Vice President are qualified to hold office.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶120 For these reasons, we perceive no textually demonstrable constitutional commitment to Congress of the authority to assess presidential candidate qualifications, and neither President Trump nor his amici identify any constitutional provision making such a commitment. In reaching this conclusion, we are unpersuaded by the cases on which President Trump and his amici rely, which are predicated on inferences they assert can be drawn from one or more of the foregoing constitutional provisions or on the fact that the cases had political implications. See, e.g., Taitz v. Democrat Party of Miss., No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *12–16 (S.D. Miss. Mar. 31, 2015); Grinols v. Electoral Coll., No. 2:12-cv-02997-MCE-DAD, 2013 WL 2294885, at *5–7 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2013), aff'd, 622 F. App'x 624 (9th Cir. 2015); Kerchner v. Obama, 669 F. Supp. 2d 477, 483 n.5 (D.N.J. 2009), aff'd, 612 F.3d 204 (3d Cir. 2010); Robinson v. Bowen, 567 F. Supp. 2d 1144, 1146–47 (N.D. Cal. 2008); Keyes v. Bowen, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 207, 216 (Cal. Ct. App. 2010); Strunk v. N.Y. State Bd. of Elections, No. 6500/11, 2012 WL 1205117, at *11–12 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 11, 2012), aff'd in part, dismissed in part, 5 N.Y.S.3d 483 (N.Y. App. Div. 2015). As noted above, such inferences are insufficient to establish the requisite clear textual commitment to a coordinate branch of government, see Baker, 369 U.S. at 217, and we may not avoid our duty to decide a case merely because it may have political implications, Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 195–96.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶121 Moreover, we may not conflate "actions that are textually committed" to a coordinate political branch with "actions that are textually authorized." Stillman v. Dep't of Defense, 209 F. Supp. 2d 185, 202 (D.D.C. 2002), rev'd on other grounds sub nom., Stillman v. C.I.A., 319 F.3d 546 (D.C. Cir. 2003). The Supreme Court has prohibited courts from adjudicating only the former. Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 195. Absent an affirmative constitutional commitment, we cannot abdicate our responsibility to decide a case that is properly before us. Id. at 194.

2. Section Three Involves Judicially Discoverable and Manageable Standards

¶122 The question of whether there are judicially discoverable and manageable standards for determining a case is not wholly separate from the question of whether the matter has been textually committed to a coordinate political department. Nixon, 506 U.S. at 228. "[T]he lack of judicially manageable standards may strengthen the conclusion that there is a textually demonstrable commitment to a coordinate branch." Id. at 228–29.

¶123 As we have said, President Trump has not argued before us that Section Three lacks judicially discoverable and manageable standards, and we believe for good reason. Section Three disqualifies from certain delineated offices persons who have "taken an oath . . . to support the Constitution of the United States" as an "officer of the United States" and who have thereafter "engaged in insurrection or rebellion." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Although, as we discuss below, the meanings of some of these terms may not necessarily be precise, we can discern their meanings using "familiar principles of constitutional interpretation" such as "careful examination of the textual, structural, and historical evidence put forward by the parties." Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 201.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶124 Indeed, in this and other contexts, courts have readily interpreted the terms that we are being asked to construe and have reached the substantive merits of the cases before them. See, e.g., United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605, 607 (C.C.D.N.C. 1871) (No. 16,079) (defining "engage" as that term is used in Section Three); United States v. Rhine, No. 210687 (RC), 2023 WL 2072450, at *8 (D.D.C. Feb. 17, 2023) (defining "insurrection" in the context of ruling on a motion in limine in a criminal prosecution arising out of the events of January 6); Holiday Inns Inc. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 571 F. Supp. 1460, 1487 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (defining "insurrection" in the context of an insurance policy exclusion); Gitlow v. Kiely, 44 F.2d 227, 233 (S.D.N.Y. 1930) (defining "insurrection" as that term is used in a section of the U.S. Code), aff'd, 49 F.2d 1077 (2d Cir. 1931); Hearon v. Calus, 183 S.E. 13, 20 (S.C. 1935) (defining "insurrection" as that term is used in a provision of the South Carolina constitution).

¶125 Accordingly, we conclude that interpreting Section Three does not "turn on standards that defy judicial application." Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 201 (quoting Baker, 369 U.S. at 211). In so concluding, we respectfully disagree with the Michigan

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Court of Claims' finding that the interpretation of the terms now before us constitutes a nonjusticiable political question merely because "there are . . . many answers and gradations of answers." Trump v. Benson, No. 23000151-MZ, slip op. at 24 (Mich. Ct. Cl. Nov. 14, 2023), aff'd sub nom. Davis v. Wayne Cnty. Election Comm'n, No. 368615, 2023 WL 8656163 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 14, 2023). In our view, declining to decide an issue simply because it requires us to address difficult and weighty questions of constitutional interpretation would create a slippery slope that could lead to a prohibited dereliction of our constitutional duty to adjudicate cases that are properly before us.

¶126 For these reasons, we conclude that the issues presented here do not, either alone or together, constitute a nonjusticiable political question. We thus proceed to the question of whether Section Three applies to the President.

E. Section Three Applies to the President

¶127 The parties debate the scope of Section Three. The Electors claim that this potential source of disqualification encompasses the President. President Trump argues that it does not, and the district court agreed. On this issue, we reverse the district court.

¶128 Section Three prohibits a person from holding any "office, civil or military, under the United States" if that person, as "an officer of the United States," took an oath "to support the Constitution of the United States" and subsequently engaged in insurrection. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Accordingly, Section Three applies to President Trump only if (1) the Presidency is an "office, civil or military, under the United States"; (2) the President is an "officer of the United States"; and (3) the presidential oath set forth in Article II constitutes an oath "to support the Constitution of the United States." Id. We address each point in turn.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. The Presidency Is an Office Under the United States

¶129 The district court concluded that the Presidency is not an "office, civil or military, under the United States" for two reasons. Anderson, ¶¶ 303–04; see U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. First, the court noted that the Presidency is not specifically mentioned in Section Three, though senators, representatives, and presidential electors are. The court found it unlikely that the Presidency would be included in a catch-all of "any office, civil or military." Anderson, ¶ 304; see U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Second, the court found it compelling that an earlier draft of the Section specifically included the Presidency, suggesting that the drafters intended to omit the Presidency in the version that passed. See Anderson, ¶ 303. We disagree with the district court's conclusion, as our reading of both the constitutional text and the historical record counsel that the Presidency is an "office . . . under the United States" within the meaning of Section Three.

¶130 When interpreting the Constitution, we prefer a phrase's normal and ordinary usage over "secret or technical meanings that would not have been known to ordinary citizens in the founding generation." District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 577 (2008). Dictionaries from the time of the Fourteenth Amendment's ratification define "office" as a "particular duty, charge or trust conferred by public authority, and for a public purpose," that is "undertaken by . . . authority from government or those who administer it." Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language 689 (Chauncey A. Goodrich ed., 1853); see also 5 Johnson's English Dictionary 646 (J.E. Worcester ed., 1859) (defining "office" as "a publick charge or employment; magistracy"); United States v. Maurice, 26 F. Cas. 1211, 1214 (C.C.D. Va. 1823) (No. 15,747) ("An office is defined to be 'a public charge or employment,' . . . ."). The Presidency falls comfortably within these definitions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶131 We do not place the same weight the district court did on the fact that the Presidency is not specifically mentioned in Section Three. It seems most likely that the Presidency is not specifically included because it is so evidently an "office." In fact, no specific office is listed in Section Three; instead, the Section refers to "any office, civil or military." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. True, senators, representatives, and presidential electors are listed, but none of these positions is considered an "office" in the Constitution. Instead, senators and representatives are referred to as "members" of their respective bodies. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 5, cl. 1 ("Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members . . . ."); id. at § 6, cl. 2 ("[N]o Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office."); id. at art. II, § 1, cl. 2 ("[N]o Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶132 Indeed, even Intervenors do not deny that the Presidency is an office. Instead, they assert that it is not an office "under the United States." Their claim is that the President and elected members of Congress are the government of the United States, and cannot, therefore, be serving "under the United States." Id. at amend. XIV, § 3. We cannot accept this interpretation. A conclusion that the Presidency is something other than an office "under" the United States is fundamentally at odds with the idea that all government officials, including the President, serve "we the people." Id. at pmbl. A more plausible reading of the phrase "under the United States" is that the drafters meant simply to distinguish those holding federal office from those held "under any State." Id. at amend. XIV, § 3.

¶133 This reading of the language of Section Three is, moreover, most consistent with the Constitution as a whole. The Constitution refers to the Presidency as an "Office" twenty-five times. E.g., id. at art. I, § 3, cl. 5 ("The Senate shall chuse [sic] their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States." (emphasis added)); id. at art. II, § 1, cl. 5 (providing that "[n]o Person except a natural born Citizen . . . shall be eligible to the Office of President" and "[t]he executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America [who] shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years" (emphases added)). And it refers to an office "under the United States" in several contexts that clearly support the conclusion that the Presidency is such an office.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶134 Consider, for example, the Impeachment Clause, which reads that Congress can impose, as a consequence of impeachment, a "disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." Id. at art. I, § 3, cl. 7. If the Presidency is not an "office . . . under the United States," then anyone impeached—including a President—could nonetheless go on to serve as President. See id. This reading is nonsensical, as recent impeachments demonstrate. The Articles of Impeachment brought against both President Clinton and President Trump asked for each man's "removal from office[,] and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States." Articles of Impeachment Against William Jefferson Clinton, H. Res. 611, 105th Cong. (Dec. 19, 1998); see also Articles of Impeachment Against Donald J. Trump, H. Res. 755, 116th Cong. (Dec. 8, 2019); Articles of Impeachment Against Donald J. Trump, H. Res. 24, 117th Cong. (Jan 13, 2021). Surely the impeaching members of Congress correctly understood that either man, if convicted and subsequently disqualified from future federal office by the Senate, would be unable to hold the Presidency in the future.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶135 Similarly, the Incompatibility Clause states that "no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office." U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 2. To read "office under the United States" to exclude the Presidency would mean that a sitting President could also constitutionally occupy a seat in Congress, a result foreclosed by basic principles of the separation of powers. See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 124 (1976) ("The principle of separation of powers . . . was woven into the [Constitution] . . . . The further concern of the Framers of the Constitution with maintenance of the separation of powers is found in the so-called 'Ineligibility' and 'Incompatibility' Clauses contained in Art. I, s 6 . . . ."), superseded by statute on other grounds, Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, 116 Stat. 81, as recognized in McConnell v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 540 U.S. 93 (2003), overruled on other grounds by Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 558 U.S. 310 (2010).

¶136 Finally, the Emoluments Clause provides that "no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under [the United States] shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State." U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8. To read the Presidency as something other than an office under the United States would exempt the nation's chief diplomat from these protections against foreign influence. But Presidents have long sought dispensation from Congress to retain gifts from foreign leaders, understanding that the Emoluments Clause required them to do so.[14]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶137 The district court found it compelling that an earlier draft of the proposed Section listed the Presidency, but the version ultimately passed did not. Anderson, ¶ 303. As a starting point, however, we are mindful that "it is always perilous to derive the meaning of an adopted provision from another provision deleted in the drafting process." Heller, 554 U.S. at 590. And the specifics of the change from the [14] See, e.g., H. Rep. No. 23-302, at 1–2 (Mar. 4, 1834) (discussing the receipt of gifts from the Emperor of Morocco and noting that the President's "surrender of the articles to the Government" satisfied the "constitutional provision in relation to their acceptance"); 14 Abridgement of the Debates of Congress from 1789 to 1856, 140–41 (Thomas Hart Benton ed., 6 1860) (displaying (1) a letter from the Secretary of State to the Imaum of Muscat indicating that the President "directed" the Secretary to refuse the Imaum's gifts "under existing constitutional provisions" and (2) a letter from the President requesting that Congress allow him to accept the gifts); An Act to authorize the sale of two Arabian horses, received as a present by the Consul of the United States at Zanzibar, from the Imaum of Muscat, Mar. 1, 1845, 5 Stat. 730 (providing that the President is "authorized" to sell some of the Imaum's gifts and place the proceeds in the U.S. Treasury); Joint Resolution No. 20, A Resolution providing for the Custody of the Letter and Gifts from the King of Siam, Mar. 15, 1862, 12 Stat. 616 (directing the King of Siam's gifts and letters to be placed in "the collection of curiosities at the Department of the Interior").

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

earlier draft to what was ultimately passed do not demonstrate an intent to exclude the Presidency from the covered offices.

¶138 The draft proposal provided that insurrectionist oath-breakers could not hold "the office of President or Vice President of the United States, Senator or Representative in the national Congress, or any office now held under appointment from the President of the United States, and requiring the confirmation of the Senate." Cong. Globe., 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 919 (1866) (emphasis added). Later versions of the Section—including the enacted draft—removed specific reference to the President and Vice President and expanded the category of office-holder to include "any office, civil or military" rather than only those offices requiring presidential appointment and Senate confirmation. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3.

¶139 It is hard to glean from the limited available evidence what the changes across proposals meant. But we find persuasive amici's suggestion that Representative McKee, who drafted these proposals, most likely took for granted that his second proposal included the President. While nothing in Representative McKee's speeches mentions why his express reference to the Presidency was removed, his public pronouncements leave no doubt that his subsequent draft proposal still sought to ensure that rebels had absolutely no access to political power. Representative McKee explained that, under the proposed amendment,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"the loyal alone shall rule the country" and that traitors would be "cut[] off . . . from all political power in the nation." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2505 (1866); see also Mark Graber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: Our Questions, Their Answers, 22–23 (Univ. of Md. Legal Stud. Rsch. Paper No. 2023-16), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4591133 ("Our Questions, Their Answers"); Mark A. Graber, Punish Treason, Reward Loyalty: The Forgotten Goals of Constitutional Reform After the Civil War 106, 114 (2023) (indicating that Representative McKee desired to exclude all oath-breaking insurrectionists from all federal offices, including the Presidency). When considered in light of these pronouncements, the shift from specifically naming the President and Vice President in addition to officers appointed and confirmed to the broadly inclusive "any officer, civil or military" cannot be read to mean that the two highest offices in the government are excluded from the mandate of Section Three.

¶140 The importance of the inclusive language—"any officer, civil or military"—was the subject of a colloquy in the debates around adopting the Fourteenth Amendment. Senator Reverdy Johnson worried that the final version of Section Three did not include the office of the Presidency. He stated, "[T]his amendment does not go far enough" because past rebels "may be elected President or Vice President of the United States." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2899 (1866). So, he asked, "why did you omit to exclude them? I do not understand them to be excluded from the privilege of holding the two highest offices in the gift of the nation." Id. Senator Lot Morrill fielded this objection. He replied, "Let me call the Senator's attention to the words 'or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States.'" Id. This answer satisfied Senator Johnson, who stated, "Perhaps I am wrong as to the exclusion from the Presidency; no doubt I am; but I was misled by noticing the specific exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives." Id. This colloquy further supports the view that the drafters of this Amendment intended the phrase "any office" to be broadly inclusive, and certainly to include the Presidency.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶141 Moreover, Reconstruction-Era citizens—supporters and opponents of Section Three alike—understood that Section Three disqualified oath-breaking insurrectionists from holding the office of the President. See Montpelier Daily Journal, Oct. 19, 1868 (writing that Section Three "excludes leading rebels from holding offices . . . from the Presidency downward"). Many supporters of Section Three defended the Amendment on the ground that it would exclude Jefferson Davis from the Presidency. See John Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit. J. Am. Legal Stud. (forthcoming 2023) (manuscript at 7–10), https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=4440157; see also, e.g., Rebels and Federal Officers, Gallipolis J., Feb. 21, 1867, at 2 (arguing that foregoing Section Three would "render Jefferson Davis eligible to the Presidency of the United States," and "[t]here is something revolting in the very thought").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶142 Post-ratification history includes more of the same. For example, Congress floated the idea of blanket amnesty to shield rebels from Section Three. See Vlahoplus, supra, (manuscript at 7–9). In response, both supporters and dissenters acknowledged that doing so would allow the likes of Jefferson Davis access to the Presidency. See id.; see also, e.g., The Pulaski Citizen, The New Reconstruction Bill, Apr. 13, 1871, at 4 (acknowledging as a supporter of amnesty that it would "make even Jeff. Davis eligible again to the Presidency"); The Chicago Tribune, May 24, 1872 (asserting that amnesty would make rebels "eligible to the Presidency of the United States"); Indiana Progress, Aug. 24, 1871 (similar).

¶143 We conclude, therefore, that the plain language of Section Three, which provides that no disqualified person shall "hold any office, civil or military, under the United States," includes the office of the Presidency. This textual interpretation is bolstered by constitutional context and by history surrounding the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment.

2. The President Is an Officer of the United States

¶144 We next consider whether a President is an "officer of the United States." U.S. Const., amend. XIV, § 3. The district court found that the drafters of Section Three did not intend to include the President within the catch-all phrase "officer of the United States," and, accordingly, that a current or former President can engage in insurrection and then run for and hold any office. Anderson, ¶ 312; see U.S. Const., amend. XIV, § 3. We disagree for four reasons.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶145 First, the normal and ordinary usage of the term "officer of the United States" includes the President. As we have explained, the plain meaning of "office . . . under the United States" includes the Presidency; it follows then that the President is an "officer of the United States." See Motions Sys. Corp. v. Bush, 437 F.3d 1356, 1372 (Fed. Cir. 2006) (Gajarsa, J., concurring in part) ("An interpretation of the Constitution in which the holder of an 'office' is not an 'officer' seems, at best, strained."). Indeed, Americans have referred to the President as an "officer" from the days of the founding. See, e.g., The Federalist No. 69 (Alexander Hamilton) ("The President of the United States would be an officer elected by the people . . . ."). And many nineteenth-century presidents were described as, or called themselves, "chief executive officer of the United States." See Vlahoplus, supra (manuscript at 17–18) (listing presidents).

¶146 Second, Section Three's drafters and their contemporaries understood the President as an officer of the United States. See Graber, Our Questions, Their Answers, supra, at 18–19 (listing instances); see also Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 915 (1866) (referring to the "chief executive officer of the country"); The Floyd Acceptances, 74 U.S. 666, 676–77 (1868) ("We have no officers in this government, from the President down to the most subordinate agent, who does not hold office under the law, with prescribed duties and limited authority." (emphases added)).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶147 President Trump concedes as much on appeal, stating that "[t]o be sure, the President is an officer." He argues, however, that the President is an officer of the Constitution, not an "officer of the United States," which, he posits, is a constitutional term of art. Further, at least one amicus contends that the above-referenced historical uses referred to the President as an officer only in a "colloquial sense," and thus have no bearing on the term's use in Section Three. We disagree.

¶148 The informality of these uses is exactly the point: If members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress and their contemporaries all used the term "officer" according to its ordinary meaning to refer to the President, we presume this is the same meaning the drafters intended it to have in Section Three. We perceive no persuasive contemporary evidence demonstrating some other, technical term-of-art meaning. And in the absence of a clear intent to employ a technical definition for a common word, we will not do so. See Heller, 554 U.S. at 576 (explaining that the "normal and ordinary as distinguished from technical meaning" should be favored (quoting United States v. Sprague, 282 U.S. 716, 731 (1931))).

¶149 We also find Attorney General Stanbery's opinions on the meaning of Section Three significant. In one opinion on the subject, Stanbery explained that the term "'officer of the United States,' within [Section Three] . . . is used in its most general sense, and without any qualification, as legislative, or executive, or judicial." The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y. Gen. 141, 158 (1867) ("Stanbery I"). And in a second opinion on the topic, he observed that the term "Officers of the United States" includes "without limitation" any "person who has at any time prior to the rebellion held any office, civil or military, under the United States, and has taken an official oath to support the Constitution of the United States." The Reconstruction Acts, 12 Op. Att'y. Gen. 182, 203 (1867) ("Stanbery II").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶150 Third, the structure of Section Three persuades us that the President is an officer of the United States. The first half of Section Three describes the offices protected and the second half addresses the parties barred from holding those protected offices. There is a parallel structure between the two halves: "Senator or Representative in Congress" (protected office) corresponds to "member of Congress" (barred party); "any office . . . under the United States" (protected office) corresponds to "officer of the United States" (barred party); and "any office . . . under any State" (protected office) also has a corresponding barred party in "member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. The only term in the first half of Section Three that has no corresponding officer or party in the second half is "elector of President and Vice President," which makes sense because electors do not take constitutionally mandated oaths so they have no corresponding barred party. Id.; see also id. at art. II, § 1 (discussing a presidential elector's duties without reference to an oath); id. at art. VI (excluding presidential electors from the list of positions constitutionally obligated to take an oath to support the Constitution). Save electors, there is a perfect parallel structure in Section Three. See Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 106).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶151 Fourth, the clear purpose of Section Three—to ensure that disloyal officers could never again play a role in governing the country—leaves no room to conclude that "officer of the United States" was used as a term of art. Id. The drafters of Section Three were motivated by a sense of betrayal; that is, by the existence of a broken oath, not by the type of officer who broke it: "[A]ll of us understand the meaning of the third section," Senator John Sherman stated, "[it includes] those men who have once taken an oath of office to support the Constitution of the United States and have violated that oath in spirit by taking up arms against the Government of the United States are to be deprived for a time at least of holding office . . . ." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2899 (1866); see also id. at 2898 (Senator Thomas Hendricks of Indiana, who opposed the Fourteenth Amendment, agreeing that "the theory" of Section Three was "that persons who have violated the oath to support the Constitution of the United States ought not to be allowed to hold any office."); id. at 3035–36 (Senator John B. Henderson explaining that "[t]he language of this section is so framed as to disfranchise from office . . . the leaders of any rebellion hereafter to come."); Powell, 27 F. Cas. at 607 (summarizing the purpose of Section Three: "[T]hose who had been once trusted to support the power of the United States, and proved false to the trust reposed, ought not, as a class, to be entrusted with power again until congress saw fit to relieve them from disability."). A construction of Section Three that would nevertheless allow a former President who broke his oath, not only to participate in the government again but to run for and hold the highest office in the land, is flatly unfaithful to the Section's purpose.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶152 We therefore conclude that "officer of the United States," as used in Section Three, includes the President.

3. The Presidential Oath Is an Oath to Support the Constitution

¶153 Finally, we consider whether the oath taken by the President to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution," U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 8, is an oath "to support the Constitution of the United States," id. at amend. XIV, § 3. The district court found that, because the presidential oath's language is more particular than the oath referenced in Section Three, the drafters did not intend to include former Presidents. Anderson, ¶ 313. We disagree.

¶154 Article VI of the Constitution provides that "all executive and judicial Officers . . . of the United States . . . shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution."[15] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3. Article II specifies that the President shall swear an oath to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution." Id. at art. II, § 1, cl. 8. Intervenors contend that because the Article II oath does not include a pledge to "support" the Constitution, an insurrectionist President cannot be disqualified from holding future office under Section Three on the basis of that oath.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶155 This argument fails because the President is an "executive . . . Officer[]" of the United States under Article VI, albeit one for whom a more specific oath is prescribed. Id. at art. VI, cl. 3 ("The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution . . . ."). This conclusion follows logically from the accepted fact that the Vice President is also an executive officer. True, the Vice President takes the more general oath prescribed by federal law, see 5 U.S.C. § 3331 (noting that anyone "except the President, elected or appointed to an office of honor or profit in the civil service or uniformed services, shall take" an oath including a pledge to "support and defend the Constitution"), [15] Article VI, however, does not provide any specific form of oath or affirmation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

but it makes no sense to conclude that the Vice President is an executive officer under Article VI but the President is not.

¶156 The language of the presidential oath—a commitment to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution"—is consistent with the plain meaning of the word "support." U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 8. Modern dictionaries define "support" to include "defend" and vice versa. See, e.g., Support, Merriam-Webster Dictionary, https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/support [https://perma.cc/WGH6-D8KU] (defining "support" as "to uphold or defend as valid or right"); see also Defend, at id., https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/defend [https://perma.cc/QXQ7-LRKX] (defining "defend" as "to maintain or support in the face of argument or hostile criticism"). So did dictionaries from the time of Section Three's drafting. See, e.g., Samuel Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language (5th ed. 1773) ("defend": "to stand in defense of; to protect; to support"); Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language 271 (Chauncey A. Goodrich, ed., 1857) ("defend": "to support or maintain").

¶157 The specific language of the presidential oath does not make it anything other than an oath to support the Constitution. Indeed, as one Senator explained just a few years before Section Three's ratification, "the language in [the presidential] oath of office, that he shall protect, support [sic], and defend the Constitution, makes his obligation more emphatic and more obligatory, if possible, than ours, which is simply to support the Constitution." Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 3d Sess. 89 (1862). And, in fact, several nineteenth-century Presidents referred to the presidential oath as an oath to "support" the Constitution. See James D. Richardson, A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1789–1897, Vol. 1 at 232, 467 (Adams, Madison), Vol. 2 at 625 (Jackson), Vol. 8 at 381 (Cleveland).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶158 In sum, "[t]he simplest and most obvious interpretation of a Constitution, if in itself sensible, is the most likely to be that meant by the people in its adoption." Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 671 (1889). The most obvious and sensible reading of Section Three, supported by text and history, leads us to conclude that (1) the Presidency is an "office under the United States," (2) the President is an "officer . . . of the United States," and (3) the presidential oath under Article II is an oath to "support" the Constitution.

¶159 President Trump asks us to hold that Section Three disqualifies every oath-breaking insurrectionist except the most powerful one and that it bars oath-breakers from virtually every office, both state and federal, except the highest one in the land. Both results are inconsistent with the plain language and history of Section Three.

¶160 We therefore reverse the district court's finding that Section Three does not apply to a President and conclude that Section Three bars President Trump from holding the office of the President if its other provisions are met; namely, if President Trump "engaged in insurrection." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶161 Before addressing the district court's findings that President Trump engaged in insurrection, however, we consider President Trump's challenge to the admissibility of a congressional report on which the district court premised some of its findings.

F. The District Court Did Not Err in Admitting Portions of the January 6 Report

¶162 President Trump asserts that the district court wrongly admitted into evidence thirty-one findings from a congressional report drafted by the Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the U.S. Capitol ("the Committee"), which recounted the Committee's investigation of the facts, circumstances, and causes of the attack on the Capitol. See H.R. Rep. No. 117-663 (Dec. 22, 2022) ("the Report"). In President Trump's view, the Report is an untrustworthy, partisan political document and therefore constituted inadmissible hearsay under Rule 803(8)(C) of the Colorado Rules of Evidence. We are unpersuaded. Under the deferential standard of review that governs, we perceive no error by the district court in admitting portions of the Report into evidence at trial.

¶163 We review a district court's evidentiary rulings for an abuse of discretion. Zapata v. People, 2018 CO 82, ¶ 25, 428 P.3d 517, 524. "A court abuses its discretion only if its decision is 'manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair.'" Churchill v. Univ. of Colo. at Boulder, 2012 CO 54, ¶ 74, 285 P.3d 986, 1008 (quoting Freedom Colo. Info., Inc. v. El Paso Cnty. Sheriff's Dep't, 196 P.3d 892, 899 (Colo. 2008)). We may not consider "whether we would have reached a different result," but only "whether the trial court's decision fell within a range of reasonable options." Id. (quoting E-470 Pub. Highway Auth. v. Revenig, 140 P.3d 227, 230–31 (Colo. App. 2006)).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶164 Hearsay statements are out-of-court statements offered in court for the truth of the matter asserted. CRE 801(c). Such statements are generally inadmissible, CRE 802, but CRE 803(8) creates an exception for "reports . . . of public offices or agencies, setting forth . . . factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law." This exception, however, applies only if the report is trustworthy. Id.

¶165 The Federal Rules of Evidence (on which our evidentiary rules were modeled) contain a near-identical exception to Colorado Rule 803(8), see Fed. R. Evid. 803(8), so we may look to federal case law interpreting the federal rule for guidance on how to assess trustworthiness, see Garcia v. Schneider Energy Servs., Inc., 2012 CO 62, ¶ 10, 287 P.3d 112, 115 (noting that, although we are "not bound to interpret our rules . . . the same way the United States Supreme Court has interpreted its rules, we do look to the federal rules and federal decisions interpreting those rules for guidance"); Harding Glass Co. v. Jones, 640 P.2d 1123, 1125 n.3 (Colo. 1982) ("[C]ase law interpreting the federal rule is persuasive in analysis of the Colorado rule."). Under federal law, courts are instructed to "assume[] admissibility in the first instance." Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey, 488 U.S. 153, 167 (1988). Thus, "the party challenging the admissibility of a public or agency report . . . bears the burden of demonstrating that the report is not trustworthy." Barry v. Trs. of Int'l Ass'n, 467 F. Supp. 2d 91, 96 (D.D.C. 2006). The federal courts have also identified four non-exclusive factors to help courts determine trustworthiness: "(1) the timeliness of the investigation; (2) the special skill or expertise of the investigating official; (3) whether a hearing was held and the level at which it was conducted; and (4) possible motivation problems." Id. at 97; see Beech Aircraft, 488 U.S. at 167 n.11.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶166 The district court employed the foregoing presumption and four factors to analyze the Report.[16] The court determined that "the first three Barry factors weigh [16] We also review a district court's trustworthiness analysis for an abuse of discretion. See United States v. Versaint, 849 F.2d 827, 831–32 (3d Cir. 1988) ("Under [Fed. R. Evid. 803(8)], this Court must decide whether the district court abused its discretion by '[g]iving undue weight to trustworthiness factors of slight relevance while disregarding factors more significant.'" (quoting In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 723 F.2d 238, 266 (3d Cir. 1983))); Bright v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 756 F.2d 19, 22 (6th Cir. 1984) ("Rule 803(8)(C) also requires that the report not be subject to circumstances indicating a lack of trustworthiness. This determination is within the discretion of the trial court."); Denny v. Hutchinson Sales Corp., 649 F.2d 816, 821–22 (10th Cir. 1981) ("We believe that 'the trial court strongly in favor of reliability." Anderson, ¶ 24. President Trump focuses his admissibility challenge on the fourth factor: "possible motivation problems." Barry, 467 F. Supp. 2d at 97.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶167 First, President Trump claims the Report was biased against him because all nine Committee members voted in favor of impeaching him before their investigation began. Timothy Heaphy, Chief Investigative Counsel for the Committee, testified at trial, however, that although members "certainly had . . . hypotheses that were a starting point," such hypotheses did not impair the members' ability to be fair and impartial. Anderson, ¶ 26. The district court found "Mr. Heaphy's testimony on this subject to be credible and h[eld] that any perceived animus of the committee members towards [President] Trump did not taint the conclusions of the January 6th Report in such a way that would render them unreliable." Id. We see no abuse of discretion. See People v. Pitts, 13 P.3d 1218, 1221 (Colo. 2000) ("It is the function of the trial court, and not the reviewing court, to weigh evidence and determine the credibility of the witnesses.").

¶168 Second, President Trump believes that the political backdrop against which the Report was created makes it unreliable. This argument proves too much. All is the first and best judge of whether tendered evidence meets th[at] standard of trustworthiness and reliability . . .' and [w]e cannot say the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to admit the report." (quoting Franklin v. Skelly Oil Co., 141 F.2d 568, 572 (10th Cir. 1944))).

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

congressional reports contain some level of political motivation, yet neither CRE 803(8) nor the corresponding federal rule declares such reports per se inadmissible; instead, as the district court explained, a court is at liberty to admit what it deems trustworthy. See Anderson, ¶ 28; see, e.g., Barry, 467 F. Supp. 2d at 101 (admitting report from a Senate investigation); Mariani v. United States, 80 F. Supp. 2d 352, 361 (M.D. Pa. 1999) (admitting minority report from a Congressional investigation); Hobson v. Wilson, 556 F. Supp. 1157, 1183 (D.D.C. 1982) (admitting Congressional Committee report), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 737 F.2d 1 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

¶169 Third, President Trump asserts that because Democrats outnumbered Republicans seven to two on the Committee, the Report's findings are necessarily biased. The district court determined that although the Report "would have further reliability had there been greater Republican participation," that deficit did not demonstrate "motivation problems." Anderson, ¶¶ 29–30. The district court observed that House Republicans opted to boycott the Committee after then-Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi agreed to seat only three of the five Republicans recommended to her. Id. at ¶ 30. Despite then-Speaker Pelosi's "unprecedented" move, id., the district court noted that "the two Republicans who did sit . . . were both duly elected Republicans," id. at ¶ 31; "[t]he investigative staff included . . . many Republican[]" lawyers, id. at ¶ 32; "the staffing decisions did not include any inquiry into political affiliation," id.; and "[t]he overwhelming majority of witnesses . . . were [President] Trump administration officials and Republicans," id. at ¶ 33. The court reasoned that "[t]hese facts all cut against Intervenors' argument that lack of participation of the minority party resulted in . . . unreliable conclusions." Id. at ¶ 34.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶170 Again, we perceive no abuse of discretion. CRE 803(8) assumes admissibility, Barry, 467 F. Supp. 2d at 96, and President Trump has not met his burden of demonstrating that, contrary to the evidence the district court highlighted, the Report suffered from motivation problems. See id. Moreover, we remain mindful that this is a four-factor inquiry. No single factor is dispositive. Instead, any perceived shortcomings as to one must be weighed against the strengths of the others. Whatever the "possible motivation problems," the weight of the other three factors remains. As the district court explained, (1) passage of time does not impugn the Report, as the investigation began six months after the attack and was completed in under two years; (2) the investigative staff consisted of highly skilled lawyers, including two former U.S. Attorneys; and (3) there was a formal ten-day hearing in which seventy witnesses testified under oath. Anderson, ¶ 24. So, not only was the court's analysis of the fourth factor reasonable, but it also did not abuse its discretion in reaching its broader conclusion that the Report was trustworthy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶171 President Trump nonetheless argues that, even if the Report is generally admissible under the CRE 803(8) exception, there were eleven admitted findings within the Report that remained independently inadmissible. Even if the general admissibility of the Report does not necessarily give a green light to multiple layers of hearsay, we conclude that only two of the eleven challenged findings constituted hearsay within hearsay.[17] And even if there was error in admitting those findings, neither is of sufficient consequence to warrant reversal. See Liggett v. People, 135 P.3d 725, 733 (Colo. 2006) (explaining that, under harmless error review, we will reverse only if, viewing the evidence as a whole, the error substantially influenced the outcome or impaired the fairness of the trial and that, [17] The nine remaining statements fall into three categories: statements made (1) by President Trump, (2) to President Trump, and (3) by his supporters during chants. First, President Trump's own statements are not hearsay under the party-opponent rule. See CRE 801(d)(2)(A). Second, various statements made to President Trump on January 6 are not hearsay because they were offered to show the statements' effect on the listener (i.e., that President Trump had knowledge of certain issues). See CRE 801(c); People v. Vanderpauye, 2023 CO 42 ¶ 21 n.4, 530 P.3d 1214, 1221 n.4 (accepting that a "statement was not hearsay because it was offered for its effect on the listener . . . not for the truth of the matter asserted"). Third, chants by President Trump's supporters were not offered to prove the truth of the chants, but simply to establish that the statements were made. That is not hearsay. CRE 801(c); see People v. Dominguez, 2019 COA 78 ¶ 20, 454 P.3d 364, 369 (stating that "verbal acts aren't hearsay" because such a statement is "offered not for its truth, but to show that it was made"). Thus, none of the findings in these three classes constitutes hearsay within the Report.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"[i]n the context of a bench trial, the prejudicial effect of improperly admitted evidence is generally presumed innocuous").

¶172 First, the Report cited a newspaper article stating that the election was called for President Biden. Although this is hearsay, the district court did not rely on the statement in its analysis, so President Trump was not prejudiced by any error in admitting this statement. See Raile v. People, 148 P.3d 126, 136 (Colo. 2006) ("[T]here is no reasonable probability that Raile was prejudiced by the admission of the statements; thus, the trial court's error was harmless.").

¶173 Second, the Report explained that Chief of Staff Mark Meadows told White House Counsel Pat Cipollone that President Trump "doesn't want to do anything" to stop the violence. H.R. Rep. No. 117 663, at 110. The fact that this statement is hearsay is irrelevant: The district court expressly noted that "it has only considered those portions of the January 6th Report which are referenced in this Order and has considered no other portions in reaching its decision," Anderson, ¶ 38, and it did not mention this statement in its order, nor did it rely on it to reach any conclusions. Thus, President Trump's embedded hearsay argument is unavailing.

¶174 For these reasons, we conclude that the district court did not abuse its discretion by admitting portions of the Report into evidence.

¶175 We now consider the district court's findings that President Trump "engaged in" an "insurrection" within the meaning of Section Three.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

G. President Trump Engaged in Insurrection

¶176 President Trump challenges the district court's findings that he "engaged in" an "insurrection." The Constitution leaves these terms undefined. Therefore, we must make a legal determination regarding what the drafters and ratifiers meant when they chose to deploy these words in Section Three. Mindful of the deferential standard of review afforded a district court's factual findings, we conclude that the district court did not clearly err in concluding that the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection and that President Trump engaged in that insurrection.

1. Standard of Review

¶177 As a general matter, we review findings of fact under either a clear error or abuse of discretion standard, and we review legal conclusions de novo. E-470 Pub. Highway Auth. v. 455 Co., 3 P.3d 18, 22 (Colo. 2000); accord State ex rel. Weiser v. Ctr. for Excellence in Higher Educ., Inc., 2023 CO 23, ¶ 33, 529 P.3d 599, 607. When, however, the issue before an appellate court presents a mixed question of law and fact, Colorado courts have taken different approaches, depending on the circumstances. 455 Co., 3 P.3d at 22. For example, courts have sometimes treated the ultimate conclusion as one of fact and applied the clear error standard. Id. In other cases, courts have concluded that a mixed question of law and fact mandates de novo review. Id. And when a trial court made evidentiary findings of fact in support of its application of a legal principle from another jurisdiction, we have found it appropriate to conduct an abuse of discretion review of the evidentiary factual findings supporting the legal conclusion and a de novo review of the legal conclusion itself. Id. at 23.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶178 For our purposes here, where we are called on to review the district court's construction of certain terms used in Section Three to the facts established by the evidence, we will review the district court's factual findings for clear error and its legal conclusions de novo.

2. "Insurrection"

¶179 Dictionaries (both old and new), the district court's order, and the briefing by the parties and the amici curiae suggest several definitions of the word "insurrection."

¶180 For example, Noah Webster's dictionary from 1860 defined "insurrection" as:

> A rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state. It is equivalent to SEDITION, except that sedition expresses a less extensive rising of citizens. It differs from REBELLION, for the latter expresses a revolt, or an attempt to overthrow the government, to establish a different one, or to place the country under another jurisdiction.

Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language 613 (1860); accord John Bouvier, A Law Dictionary Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America and of the Several States to the American Union (6th ed. 1856), available at https://wzukusers.storage.googleapis.com/user-32960741/documents/5ad525c314331myoR8FY/1856_bouvier_6.pdf [https://perma.cc/PXK4-M75N] (defining "insurrection" as "[a] rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶181 Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines "insurrection" as "an act or instance of revolting against civil or political authority or against an established government" or "an act or instance of rising up physically." Insurrection, Webster's Third New International Dictionary (2002).

¶182 In light of these and other proffered definitions, the district court concluded that "an insurrection as used in Section Three is (1) a public use of force or threat of force (2) by a group of people (3) to hinder or prevent execution of the Constitution of the United States." Anderson, ¶ 240.

¶183 Finally, we note that at oral argument, President Trump's counsel, while not providing a specific definition, argued that an insurrection is more than a riot but less than a rebellion. We agree that an insurrection falls along a spectrum of related conduct. See The Brig Amy Warwick (The Prize Cases), 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635, 666 (1862) ("Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government."); Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63, 96 (C.C.D. Va.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1871) (No. 3,621a) ("Although treason by levying war, in a case of civil war, may involve insurrection or rebellion, and they are usually its first stages, they do not necessarily reach to the actual levying of war."); 77 C.J.S. Riot; Insurrection § 36, Westlaw (database updated August 2023) ("Insurrection is distinguished from rout, riot, and offenses connected with mob violence by the fact that, in insurrection, there is an organized and armed uprising against authority or operations of government, while crimes growing out of mob violence, however serious they may be and however numerous the participants, are simply unlawful acts in disturbance of the peace which do not threaten the stability of the government or the existence of political society."). But we part company with him when he goes one step further. No authority supports the position taken by President Trump's counsel at oral argument that insurrectionary conduct must involve a particular length of time or geographic location.

¶184 Although we acknowledge that these definitions vary and some are arguably broader than others, for purposes of deciding this case, we need not adopt a single, all-encompassing definition of the word "insurrection." Rather, it suffices for us to conclude that any definition of "insurrection" for purposes of Section Three would encompass a concerted and public use of force or threat of force by a group of people to hinder or prevent the U.S. government from taking the actions necessary to accomplish a peaceful transfer of power in this country.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The required force or threat of force need not involve bloodshed, nor must the dimensions of the effort be so substantial as to ensure probable success. In re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 F. 828, 830 (N.D. Ill. 1894). Moreover, although those involved must act in a concerted way, they need not be highly organized at the insurrection's inception. See Home Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Davila, 212 F.2d 731, 736 (1st Cir. 1954) ("[A]t its inception an insurrection may be a pretty loosely organized affair. . . . It may start as a sudden surprise attack upon the civil authorities of a community with incidental destruction of property by fire or pillage, even before the military forces of the constituted government have been alerted and mobilized into action to suppress the insurrection.").

¶185 The question thus becomes whether the evidence before the district court sufficiently established that the events of January 6 constituted a concerted and public use of force or threat of force by a group of people to hinder or prevent the U.S. government from taking the actions necessary to accomplish the peaceful transfer of power in this country. We have little difficulty concluding that substantial evidence in the record supported each of these elements and that, as the district court found, the events of January 6 constituted an insurrection.

¶186 It is undisputed that a large group of people forcibly entered the Capitol and that this action was so formidable that the law enforcement officers onsite could not control it. Moreover, contrary to President Trump's assertion that no evidence in the record showed that the mob was armed with deadly weapons or that it attacked law enforcement officers in a manner consistent with a violent insurrection, the district court found—and millions of people saw on live television, recordings of which were introduced into evidence in this case—that the mob was armed with a wide array of weapons. See Anderson, ¶ 155. The court also found that many in the mob stole objects from the Capitol's premises or from law enforcement officers to use as weapons, including metal bars from the police barricades and officers' batons and riot shields and that throughout the day, the mob repeatedly and violently assaulted police officers who were trying to defend the Capitol. Id. at ¶¶ 156–57. The fact that actual and threatened force was used that day cannot reasonably be denied.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶187 Substantial evidence in the record further established that this use of force was concerted and public. As the district court found, with ample record support, "The mob was coordinated and demonstrated a unity of purpose . . . . They marched through the [Capitol] building chanting in a manner that made clear they were seeking to inflict violence against members of Congress and Vice President Pence." Id. at ¶ 243. And upon breaching the Capitol, the mob immediately pursued its intended target—the certification of the presidential election—and reached the House and Senate chambers within minutes of entering the building. Id. at ¶ 153.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶188 Finally, substantial evidence in the record showed that the mob's unified purpose was to hinder or prevent Congress from counting the electoral votes as required by the Twelfth Amendment and from certifying the 2020 presidential election; that is, to preclude Congress from taking the actions necessary to accomplish a peaceful transfer of power. As noted above, soon after breaching the Capitol, the mob reached the House and Senate chambers, where the certification process was ongoing. Id. This breach caused both the House and the Senate to adjourn, halting the electoral certification process. In addition, much of the mob's ire—which included threats of physical violence—was directed at Vice President Pence, who, in his role as President of the Senate, was constitutionally tasked with carrying out the electoral count. Id. at ¶¶ 163, 179–80; see U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 4; id. at art. II, § 1, cl. 3. As discussed more fully below, these actions were the product of President Trump's conduct in singling out Vice President Pence for refusing President Trump's demand that the Vice President decline to carry out his constitutional duties. Anderson, ¶¶ 148, 170, 172–73.

¶189 In short, the record amply established that the events of January 6 constituted a concerted and public use of force or threat of force by a group of people to hinder or prevent the U.S. government from taking the actions necessary to accomplish the peaceful transfer of power in this country. Under any viable definition, this constituted an insurrection, and thus we will proceed to consider whether President Trump "engaged in" this insurrection.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. "Engaged In"

¶190 Dictionaries, historical evidence, and case law all shed light on the meaning of "engaged in," as that phrase is used in Section Three.

¶191 Noah Webster's dictionary from 1860 defined "engage" as "to embark in an affair." Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language 696 (1860). Similarly, Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines "engage" as "to begin and carry on an enterprise" or "to take part" or "participate." Engage, Webster's Third New International Dictionary (2002). And Merriam-Webster defines "engage" as including both "to induce to participate" and "to do or take part in something." Engage, Merriam-Webster Dictionary, https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/engage [https://perma.cc/7JDM-4XSB].

¶192 Attorney General Stanbery's opinions on the meaning of "engage," which he issued at the time the Fourteenth Amendment was being debated, are in accord with these historical and modern definitions. Attorney General Stanbery opined that a person may "engage" in insurrection or rebellion "without having actually levied war or taken arms." Stanbery I, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 161. Thus, in Attorney General Stanbery's view, when individuals acting in their official capacities act "in the furtherance of the common unlawful purpose" or do "any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion," they have "engaged" in insurrection or rebellion for Section Three disqualification purposes. Id. at 161–62; see also Stanbery II, 12 Op. Att'y. Gen. at 204 (defining "engaging in rebellion" to require "an overt and voluntary act, done with the intent of aiding or furthering the common unlawful purpose"). Accordingly, "[d]isloyal sentiments, opinions, or sympathies would not disqualify; but when a person has, by speech or by writing, incited others to engage in rebellion, [h]e must come under the disqualification." Stanbery II, 12 Op. Att'y. Gen. at 205; accord Stanbery I, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 164.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶193 Turning to case law construing the meaning of "engaged in" for purposes of Section Three, although we have found little precedent directly on point, cases concerning treason that had been decided by the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified provide some insight into how the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment would have understood the term "engaged in." For example, in Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. 75, 126 (1807), Chief Justice Marshall explained that "if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors." In other words, an individual need not directly participate in the overt act of levying war or insurrection for the law to hold him accountable as if he had:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> [I]t is not necessary to prove that the individual accused, was a direct, personal actor in the violence. If he was present, directing, aiding, abetting, counselling, or countenancing it, he is in law guilty of the forcible act. Nor is even his personal presence indispensable. Though he be absent at the time of its actual perpetration, yet if he directed the act, devised or knowingly furnished the means, for carrying it into effect, instigating others to perform it, he shares their guilt. In treason there are no accessories.

In re Charge to Grand Jury-Treason, 30 F. Cas. 1047, 1048 (C.C.E.D. Pa. 1851).

¶194 We find the foregoing definitions and authorities to be generally consistent, and we believe that the definition adopted and applied by the district court is supported by the plain meaning of the term "engaged in," as well as by the historical authorities discussed above. Accordingly, like the district court, we conclude that "engaged in" requires "an overt and voluntary act, done with the intent of aiding or furthering the common unlawful purpose." Anderson, ¶ 254.

¶195 In so concluding, we hasten to add that we do not read "engaged in" so broadly as to subsume mere silence in the face of insurrection or mere acquiescence therein, at least absent an affirmative duty to act. Rather, as Attorney General Stanbery observed, "The force of the term to engage carries the idea of active rather than passive conduct, and of voluntary rather than compulsory action." Stanbery I, 12 Op. Att'y Gen. at 161; see also Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 67) (noting that "passive acquiescence, resigned acceptance, silence, or inaction is not typically enough to have 'engaged in' insurrection or rebellion . . . [unless] a person possesses an affirmative duty to speak or act").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶196 The question remains whether the record supported the district court's finding that President Trump engaged in the January 6 insurrection by acting overtly and voluntarily with the intent of aiding or furthering the insurrectionists' common unlawful purpose. Again, mindful of our applicable standard of review, we conclude that it did, and we proceed to a necessarily detailed discussion of the evidence to show why this is so.

¶197 Substantial evidence in the record showed that even before the November 2020 general election, President Trump was laying the groundwork for a claim that the election was rigged. For example, at an August 17, 2020 campaign rally, he said that "the only way we're going to lose this election is if the election is rigged." Anderson, ¶ 88. Moreover, when asked at a September 23, 2020 press briefing whether he would commit to a peaceful transfer of power after the election, President Trump refused to do so. Id. at ¶ 90.

¶198 President Trump then lost the election, and despite the facts that his advisors repeatedly advised him that there was no evidence of widespread voter fraud and that no evidence showed that he himself believed the election was wrought with fraud, President Trump ramped up his claims that the election was stolen from him and undertook efforts to prevent the certification of the election results. For example, in a December 13, 2020 tweet, he stated, "Swing States that have found massive VOTER FRAUD, which is all of them, CANNOT LEGALLY CERTIFY these votes as complete & correct without committing a severely punishable crime." Id. at ¶ 101. And President Trump sought to overturn the election results by directly exerting pressure on Republican officeholders in various states. Id. at ¶ 103.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶199 On this point, and relevant to President Trump's intent in this case, many of the state officials targeted by President Trump's efforts were subjected to a barrage of harassment and violent threats by his supporters. Id. at ¶ 104. President Trump was well aware of these threats, particularly after Georgia election official Gabriel Sterling issued a public warning to President Trump to "stop inspiring people to commit potential acts of violence" or "[s]omeone's going to get killed." Id. President Trump responded by retweeting a video of Sterling's press conference with a message repeating the very rhetoric that Sterling warned would result in violence. Id. at ¶ 105.

¶200 And President Trump continued to fan the flames of his supporters' ire, which he had ignited, with ongoing false assertions of election fraud, propelling the "Stop the Steal" movement and cross-country rallies leading up to January 6. Id. at ¶ 106. Specifically, between Election Day 2020 and January 6, Stop the Steal organizers held dozens of rallies around the country, proliferating President

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump's election disinformation and recruiting attendees, including members of violent extremist groups like the Proud Boys, the Oath Keepers, and the Three Percenters, QAnon conspiracy theorists, and white nationalists, to travel to Washington, D.C. on January 6. Id. at ¶ 107.

¶201 Stop the Steal leaders also joined two "Million MAGA Marches" in Washington, D.C. on November 14, 2020, and December 12, 2020. Id. at ¶ 108. Again, as relevant to President Trump's intent here, after the November rally turned violent, President Trump acknowledged the violence but justified it as self-defense against "ANTIFA SCUM." Id. at ¶ 109.

¶202 With full knowledge of these sometimes-violent events, President Trump sent the following tweet on December 19, 2020, urging his supporters to travel to Washington, D.C. on January 6: "Statistically impossible to have lost the 2020 Election. Big protest in D.C. on January 6. Be there, will be wild!" Id. at ¶ 112.

¶203 At this point, the record established that President Trump's "plan" was that when Congress met to certify the election results on January 6, Vice President Pence could reject the true electors who voted for President Biden and certify a slate of fake electors supporting President Trump or he could return the slates to the states for further proceedings. Id. at ¶ 113.

¶204 Far right extremists and militias such as the Proud Boys, the Oath Keepers, and the Three Percenters viewed President Trump's December 19, 2020 tweet as a

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"call to arms," and they began to plot activities to disrupt the January 6 joint session of Congress. Id. at ¶ 117. In the meantime, President Trump repeated his invitation to come to Washington, D.C. on January 6 at least twelve times. Id. at ¶ 118.

¶205 On December 26, 2020, President Trump tweeted:

> If a Democrat Presidential Candidate had an Election Rigged & Stolen, with proof of such acts at a level never seen before, the Democrat Senators would consider it an act of war, and fight to the death. Mitch [McConnell] & the Republicans do NOTHING, just want to let it pass. NO FIGHT!

Id. at ¶ 121.

¶206 And on January 1, 2021, President Trump retweeted a post from Kylie Jane Kremer, an organizer of the scheduled January 6 March for Trump, that stated, "The calvary [sic] is coming, Mr. President! JANUARY 6 | Washington, D.C." President Trump added to his retweet, "A great honor!" Id. at ¶ 119.

¶207 The foregoing evidence established that President Trump's messages were a call to his supporters to fight and that his supporters responded to that call. Further supporting such a conclusion was the fact that multiple federal agencies, including the Secret Service, identified significant threats of violence in the days leading up to January 6. Id. at ¶ 123. These threats were made openly online, and they were widely reported in the press. Id. Agency threat assessments thus stated that domestic violent extremists planned for violence on January 6, with weapons including firearms and enough ammunition to "win a small war." Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶208 Along the same lines, the Federal Bureau of Investigation received many tips regarding the potential for violence on January 6. Id. at ¶ 124. One tip said:

> They think they will have a large enough group to march into DC armed and will outnumber the police so they can't be stopped . . . . They believe that since the election was "stolen" it's their constitutional right to overtake the government and during this coup no U.S. laws apply. Their plan is to literally kill. Please, please take this tip seriously and investigate further.

Id.

¶209 The record reflects that President Trump had reason to know of the potential for violence on January 6. As President, he oversaw the agencies reporting the foregoing threats. Id. at ¶ 123. In addition, Katrina Pierson, a senior advisor to both of President Trump's presidential campaigns, testified, on behalf of President Trump, that at a January 5, 2021 meeting, President Trump chose the speakers for the January 6 event at which he, too, would speak (avoiding at least some extremist speakers) and that he knew that radical political extremists were going to be in Washington, D.C. on January 6 and would likely attend his speech. Id. at ¶¶ 48, 126.

¶210 January 6 arrived, and in the early morning, President Trump tweeted, "If Vice President @Mike_Pence comes through for us, we will win the Presidency. Many States want to decertify the mistake they made in certifying incorrect & even fraudulent numbers in a process NOT approved by their State Legislatures (which it must be). Mike can send it back!" Id. at ¶ 127. He followed this tweet later that morning with another that said, "All Mike Pence has to do is send them back to the States, AND WE WIN. Do it Mike, this is a time for extreme courage!" Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶211 These tweets had the obvious effect of putting a significant target on Vice President Pence's back, focusing President Trump's supporters on the Vice President's role in overseeing the counting of the electoral votes and certifying the 2020 presidential election to ensure the peaceful transfer of power. Id. at ¶¶ 128, 291.

¶212 At about this same time, tens of thousands of President Trump's supporters began gathering around the Ellipse for his speech. Id. at ¶ 129. To enter the Ellipse itself, attendees were required to pass through magnetometers. Id. at ¶ 130. Notably, from the approximately 28,000 attendees who passed through these security checkpoints, the Secret Service confiscated hundreds of weapons and other prohibited items, including knives or blades, pepper spray, brass knuckles, tasers, body armor, gas masks, and batons or blunt instruments. Id. at ¶¶ 130–31. Approximately 25,000 additional attendees remained outside the Secret Service perimeter, thus avoiding the magnetometers. Id. at ¶ 132.

¶213 President Trump then gave a speech in which he literally exhorted his supporters to fight at the Capitol. Among other things, he told the crowd:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- "We're gathered together in the heart of our nation's capital for one very, very basic reason: to save our democracy." Id. at ¶ 135.
- "Republicans are constantly fighting like a boxer with his hands tied behind his back. It's like a boxer. And we want to be so nice. We want to be so respectful of everybody, including bad people. And we're going to have to fight much harder." Id.
- "Now, it is up to Congress to confront this egregious assault on our democracy. And after this, we're going to walk down, and I'll be there with you . . . ." Id.
- "[W]e're going to walk down to the Capitol, and we're going to cheer on our brave senators and congressmen and women, and we're probably not going to be cheering so much for some of them. Because you'll never take back our country with weakness. You have to show strength and you have to be strong." Id.
- "When you catch somebody in a fraud, you're allowed to go by very different rules." Id.
- "This the most corrupt election in the history, maybe of the world. . . . This is not just a matter of domestic politics—this is a matter of national security." Id.
- "And we fight. We fight like hell. And if you don't fight like hell, you're not going to have a country anymore." Id.

¶214 Unsurprisingly, the crowd at the Ellipse reacted to President Trump's words with calls for violence. Indeed, after President Trump instructed his supporters to march to the Capitol, members of the crowd shouted, "[S]torm the capitol!"; "[I]nvade the Capitol Building!"; and "[T]ake the Capitol!" Id. at ¶ 141. And before he had even concluded his speech, President Trump's supporters followed his instructions. Id. at ¶ 146. The crowd marched to the Capitol, many carrying

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Revolutionary War flags and Confederate battle flags; quickly breached the building; and immediately advanced to the House and Senate chambers to carry out their mission of blocking the certification of the 2020 presidential election. Id. at ¶¶ 146–53.

¶215 By 1:21 p.m., President Trump was informed that the Capitol was under attack. Id. at ¶ 169. Rather than taking action to end the siege, however, approximately one hour later, at 2:24 p.m., he tweeted, "Mike Pence didn't have the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution, giving States a chance to certify a corrected set of facts, not the fraudulent or inaccurate ones which they were asked to previously certify. USA demands the truth!" Id. at ¶ 170.

¶216 This tweet was read over a bullhorn to the crowd at the Capitol, and produced further violence, necessitating the evacuation of Vice President Pence from his Senate office to a more secure location to ensure his physical safety. Id. at ¶¶ 171–75.

¶217 President Trump's next public communications were two tweets sent at 2:38 p.m. and 3:13 p.m., encouraging the mob to "remain peaceful" and to "[s]tay peaceful" (obviously, the mob was not at all peaceful), but neither tweet condemned the violence nor asked the mob to disperse. Id. at ¶ 178 (alteration in original).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶218 Throughout these several hours, President Trump ignored pleas to intervene and instead called on Senators, urging them to help delay the electoral count, which is what the mob, upon President Trump's exhortations, was also trying to achieve. Id. at ¶ 180. And President Trump took no action to put an end to the violence. To the contrary, as mentioned above, when told that the mob was chanting, "Hang Mike Pence," President Trump responded that perhaps the Vice President deserved to be hanged. Id. President Trump also rejected pleas from House Republican Leader Kevin McCarthy, imploring him to tell his supporters to leave the Capitol, stating, "Well, Kevin, I guess these people are more upset about the election than you are." Id.

¶219 Finally, at 4:17 p.m., President Trump released a video urging the mob "to go home now." Id. at ¶ 186. Even then, he did not condemn the mob's actions. Id. at ¶ 187. Instead, he sympathized with those who had violently overtaken the Capitol, telling them that he knew their pain. Id. at ¶¶ 186–87. He told them that he loved them and that they were "very special." Id. at ¶ 186. And he repeated his false claim that the election had been stolen notwithstanding his "landslide" victory, thereby further endorsing the mob's effort to try to stop the peaceful transfer of power. Id. at ¶¶ 186–87.

¶220 A short while later, President Trump reiterated this supportive message to the mob by justifying its actions, tweeting at 6:01 p.m., "These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace." Id. at ¶ 189. President Trump concluded by encouraging the country to "[r]emember this day forever!" Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶221 We conclude that the foregoing evidence, the great bulk of which was undisputed at trial, established that President Trump engaged in insurrection. President Trump's direct and express efforts, over several months, exhorting his supporters to march to the Capitol to prevent what he falsely characterized as an alleged fraud on the people of this country were indisputably overt and voluntary. Moreover, the evidence amply showed that President Trump undertook all these actions to aid and further a common unlawful purpose that he himself conceived and set in motion: prevent Congress from certifying the 2020 presidential election and stop the peaceful transfer of power.

¶222 We disagree with President Trump's contentions that the record does not support a finding that he engaged in an insurrection because (1) "engage" does not include "incite," and (2) he did not have the requisite intent to aid or further the insurrectionists' common unlawful purpose.

¶223 As our detailed recitation of the evidence shows, President Trump did not merely incite the insurrection. Even when the siege on the Capitol was fully underway, he continued to support it by repeatedly demanding that Vice President Pence refuse to perform his constitutional duty and by calling Senators to persuade them to stop the counting of electoral votes. These actions constituted overt, voluntary, and direct participation in the insurrection.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶224 Moreover, the record amply demonstrates that President Trump fully intended to—and did—aid or further the insurrectionists' common unlawful purpose of preventing the peaceful transfer of power in this country. He exhorted them to fight to prevent the certification of the 2020 presidential election. He personally took action to try to stop the certification. And for many hours, he and his supporters succeeded in halting that process.

¶225 For these reasons, we conclude that the record fully supports the district court's finding that President Trump engaged in insurrection within the meaning of Section Three.

H. President Trump's Speech on January 6 Was Not Protected by the First Amendment Right to Freedom of Speech

¶226 President Trump contends that his speech on January 6 was protected by the First Amendment and, therefore, cannot be used to justify his disqualification from office under Section Three. The district court concluded that this speech was unprotected by the First Amendment. Anderson, ¶ 298. We agree with the district court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Standard of Review

¶227 In considering President Trump's First Amendment challenge, we undertake an "independent review of the record . . . to be sure that the speech in question actually falls within [an] unprotected category" of communication. Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., 466 U.S. 485, 505 (1984). We have interpreted this independent review as being akin to de novo review. See Air Wis. Airlines Corp. v. Hoeper, 2012 CO 19, ¶ 46, 320 P.3d 830, 841, rev'd on other grounds, 571 U.S. 237 (2014); Lewis v. Colo. Rockies Baseball Club, Ltd., 941 P.2d 266, 271 (Colo. 1997). Bose recognizes, however, that we may give some "presumption of correctness" to factual findings, 466 U.S. at 500, especially those that do not involve the application of standards of law, id. at 500 n.16, or those that arise from complex cases such as this one, where the district judge has "lived with the controversy," id. at 500. Focusing on the findings by the district court, we therefore "examine for ourselves the statements in issue and the circumstances under which they were made to see . . . whether they are of a character which the principles of the First Amendment . . . protect." Id. at 508 (first alteration in original) (quoting Pennekamp v. Florida, 328 U.S. 331, 335 (1946)).

2. First Amendment Protections and Incitement

¶228 The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . . ." U.S. Const. amend. I. This robust protection for speech functions to "invite dispute," Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949), and "was fashioned to assure unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people," Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 484 (1957); see also N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 269 (1964).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶229 Even so, "the right of free speech is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances." Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571 (1942). The First Amendment does not protect, for example, true threats, Watts v. United States, 394 U.S. 705, 708 (1969); speech essential to criminal conduct, Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 107 (2017); or speech that incites lawless action, Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969). It is this last strand of First Amendment jurisprudence that the parties debate here.

¶230 As the Supreme Court explained in Brandenburg, the First Amendment's "constitutional guarantees of free speech . . . do not permit a State to forbid or proscribe advocacy of the use of force or of law violation except where such advocacy is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." 395 U.S. at 447. Under Brandenburg and its progeny, the modern test to determine whether speech is unprotected under the First Amendment because it incited lawless action is whether (1) the speech explicitly or implicitly encouraged the use of violence or lawless action; (2) the speaker intended that the speech would result in the use of violence or lawless action; and (3) the imminent use of violence or lawless action was the likely result of the speech. Nwanguma v. Trump, 903 F.3d 604, 609 (6th Cir. 2018); accord Bible Believers v. Wayne Cnty., 805 F.3d 228, 246 (6th Cir. 2015).[18]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

3. Applying the Brandenburg Test

a. Context

¶231 President Trump contends that the district court erred by examining the broader context in which President Trump's speech was made, thereby "expand[ing] the context relevant to a Brandenburg analysis beyond anything recognized in precedent." He asserts that we should examine his speech only in the narrow context in which it was made. We disagree.

¶232 In Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52 (1919), the Supreme Court addressed, for the first time, advocacy of illegal conduct, and it recognized the importance of context in holding that "the character of every act depends upon the circumstances in which it is done." Although the Supreme Court has said little about how to analyze incitement since Brandenburg, it offered some guidance regarding a court's use of other statements for context in NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886 (1982).

---

[18] This tripartite formulation incorporates the holdings from Brandenburg and its progeny. See Brandenburg, 395 U.S. at 447 ("[T]he constitutional guarantees of free speech . . . do not permit a State to forbid or proscribe advocacy of the use of force or of law violation except where such advocacy is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action."); Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 108–09 (1973) (holding there was "no evidence or rational inference from the import of the language" that the defendant's words were intended to produce imminent disorder and thereby indicating that although illegal action must be imminent, advocacy of lawless action could be implicit (emphases added)); NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. 886, 928 (1982) ("When such [emotional] appeals [for unity and action in a common cause] do not incite lawless action, they must be regarded as protected speech.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶233 In Claiborne Hardware, the Court considered speeches given by Charles Evers, the field secretary of the Mississippi NAACP, in connection with the NAACP's boycott of white merchants in Claiborne County from 1966 to 1969. 458 U.S. at 890. Evers declared to Black residents of Claiborne County that "blacks who traded with white merchants would be answerable to him," and that "any 'uncle toms' who broke the boycott would 'have their necks broken' by their own people." Id. at 900 n.28. Evers's statements also included that "boycott violators would be 'disciplined' by their own people," and he "warned that the Sheriff could not sleep with boycott violators at night." Id. at 902. The Court held that Evers's speeches were protected by the First Amendment but said that "[i]f there [was] other evidence of [Evers's] authorization of wrongful conduct, the references to discipline in the speeches could be used to corroborate that evidence." Id. at 929. By considering and placing value in the absence of corroborating evidence of Evers's violent intentions, the Court implied that courts may look to circumstances beyond the speech itself to determine intent. See United States v. White, 610 F.3d

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

956, 961–62 (7th Cir. 2010) (relying on Claiborne Hardware in denying a motion to dismiss in a solicitation case based on the existence of "further evidence of . . . the relationship between [the defendant] and his followers which will show the posting was a specific request to [the defendant's] followers").

¶234 While incitement precedent is sparse, the case law on "true threats" is instructive regarding the importance of context. True threats and incitement are doctrinally distinct,[19] but true threats are the "closest cousin" to incitement under the First Amendment. Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. 66, 97 (2023) (Sotomayor, J., concurring in part); accord United States v. Howell, 719 F.2d 1258, 1260 (5th Cir. 1983) ("The line between the two forms of speech [incitement and true threats] may be difficult to draw in some instances . . . ."); see also G. Robert Blakey & Brian J. Murray, Threats, Free Speech, and the Jurisprudence of the Federal Criminal Law, 2002 B.Y.U. L. Rev. 829, 1069 (2002) (explaining that both exceptions involve exhortations regarding violence that derive from Schenck's "clear and present danger" test).

---

[19] Compare Brandenburg, 395 U.S. at 447 (defining unprotected incitement as that "directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and . . . likely to incite or produce such action"), with Virginia v. Black, 538 U.S. 343, 359 (2003) (defining true threats as "those statements where the speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence to a particular individual or group of individuals").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶235 And multiple federal circuit courts conducting a true-threat analysis confirm what common sense suggests: When assessing whether someone means to threaten another with unlawful violence, we sometimes need to consider more than the behavior exhibited on one occasion. See, e.g., Planned Parenthood of the Columbia/Willamette, Inc. v. Am. Coal. of Life Activists, 290 F.3d 1058, 1078 (9th Cir. 2002) (rejecting an argument that "'context' means the direct circumstances surrounding delivery of the threat," and instead concluding that "[w]e, and so far as we can tell, other circuits as well, consider the whole factual context and 'all of the circumstances' in order to determine whether a statement is a true threat" (internal citation omitted) (quoting United States v. Merrill, 746 F.2d 458, 462 (9th Cir. 1984), overruled on other grounds by Planned Parenthood, 290 F.3d at 1066–77, and United States v. Hanna, 293 F.3d 1080, 1088 n.5 (9th Cir. 2002))); United States v. Hart, 212 F.3d 1067, 1071 (8th Cir. 2000) (considering "whether the maker of the threat had made similar statements to the victim on other occasions" and "whether the victim had reason to believe that the maker of the threat had a propensity to engage in violence" when determining whether a true threat exists). So too with incitement. Context matters.

¶236 This is not to say, as President Trump contends the district court found, that we "may consider any speech ever uttered by [President Trump]" in evaluating incitement. Of course, there are limits. But we need not define those outer limits now. Instead, we simply conclude that it was appropriate for the district court to consider President Trump's "history of courting extremists and endorsing political violence as legitimate and proper, as well as his efforts to undermine the legitimacy of the 2020 election results and hinder the certification of the Electoral College results in Congress." Anderson, ¶ 289.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶237 With this in mind, we review the district court's application of Brandenburg's three-pronged test.

b. Encouraging the Use of Violence or Lawless Action

¶238 Again, the first prong of the test for incitement is that "the speech explicitly or implicitly encouraged the use of violence or lawless action." Nwanguma, 903 F.3d at 609.

¶239 The district court made dozens of findings regarding the general atmosphere of political violence that President Trump created before January 6, many of which we have already outlined in discussing why the district court concluded that President Trump "engaged in" insurrection. We incorporate those observations here by reference and supplement them with other illuminating evidence from the record below. For example, the district court found that "[a]t [a] February 2016 rally, [President] Trump told his supporters that in the 'old days,' a protester would be 'carried out on a stretcher' and that he would like to 'punch him in the face.'" Anderson, ¶ 68. In March 2016, President Trump responded to questions about his supporters' violence by saying it was "very, very appropriate" and "we need a little bit more of" it. Id. at ¶ 69. And during the 2020 election cycle, "President Trump threatened to deploy 'the Military' to Minneapolis to shoot 'looters' amid protests over the police killing of George Floyd," id. at ¶ 76, and told the Proud Boys to "stand back and stand by" during a debate for the 2020 presidential election. id. at ¶ 77.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶240 The district court also credited the testimony of Professor Peter Simi, a professor of sociology at Chapman University, whom it had "qualified . . . as an expert in political extremism, including how extremists communicate, and how the events leading up to and including the January 6 attack relate to longstanding patterns of behavior and communication by political extremists." Id. at ¶ 42. He testified, according to the court's summary, that (1) "violent far-right extremists understood that [President] Trump's calls to 'fight,' which most politicians would mean only symbolically, were, when spoken by [President] Trump, literal calls to violence by these groups, while [President] Trump's statements negating that sentiment were insincere and existed to obfuscate and create plausible deniability," id. at ¶ 84; and that (2) "[President] Trump's speech took place in the context of a pattern of [President] Trump's knowing 'encouragement and promotion of violence' to develop and deploy a shared coded language with his violent supporters," id. at ¶ 142.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶241 As we described in the foregoing section, the district court further found that President Trump encouraged and supported violence before and after the 2020 election by telling his supporters that "the only way we're going to lose this election is if the election is rigged. Remember that," id. at ¶ 88; that the election was "a fraud on the American public," id. at ¶ 92; see also id. at ¶ 101 ("Swing States that have found massive VOTER FRAUD, which is all of them, CANNOT LEGALLY CERTIFY these votes as complete & correct without committing a severely punishable crime"); and that the Democrats had stolen an election that rightfully belonged to President Trump and his supporters, id. at ¶¶ 93, 96. The district court also found that "[m]any of the state officials targeted by [President] Trump's campaign of intimidation were subject to a barrage of harassment and violent threats by [his] supporters—prompting Georgia election official Gabriel Sterling to issue a public warning to [President] Trump to 'stop inspiring people to commit potential acts of violence' or '[s]omeone's going to get killed.'" Id. at ¶ 104 (last alteration in original); see also id. at ¶ 105 (finding that "[f]ar-right extremists understood [President] Trump's refusal to condemn the violence [Sterling condemned] . . . as an endorsement of the use of violence to prevent the transfer of presidential power").

¶242 The district court then identified specific incendiary language in President Trump's speech at the Ellipse on January 6, some of which we alluded to earlier in this opinion. To reiterate: President Trump announced, "we're going to walk down, and I'll be with you, we're going to walk down . . . to the Capitol . . . ." Id. at ¶ 135. He "used the word 'fight' or variations of it [twenty] times during his Ellipse speech." Id. at ¶ 137; see also, e.g., id. at ¶ 135 ("And we fight. We fight like hell. And if you don't fight like hell, you're not going to have a country anymore."). He declared, "[w]hen you catch somebody in a fraud," a sentiment he had repeatedly said had occurred with the 2020 election, "you're allowed to go by very different rules." Id. at ¶ 135; see also id. at ¶ 138 ("You don't concede when there's theft involved."). And he claimed that "our election victory [was] stolen by emboldened radical-left Democrats . . . ." Id. at ¶ 135.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶243 In short, the district court found that President Trump's speech at the Ellipse "was understood by a portion of the crowd as, a call to arms." Id. at ¶ 145. And the district court here is not the first or only court to reach this conclusion. In Thompson v. Trump, 590 F. Supp. 3d 46, 118 (D.D.C. 2022), the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia found that President Trump > invited his supporters to Washington, D.C., after telling them for months that corrupt and spineless politicians were to blame for stealing an election from them; retold that narrative when thousands of them assembled on the Ellipse; and directed them to march on the Capitol building . . . where those very politicians were at work to certify an election that he had lost.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The court concluded that President Trump's speech was, therefore "plausibly . . . a positive instigation of a mischievous act."[20] Id. (quoting John Stuart Mill, On Liberty 100 (London, John W. Parker & Son, 2d ed. 1859)). Our independent review of the record in this case brings us to the same conclusion: President Trump incited and encouraged the use of violence and lawless action to disrupt the peaceful transfer of power. The tenor of President Trump's messages to his supporters in exhorting them to travel to Washington, D.C. on January 6 was obvious and unmistakable: the allegedly rigged election was an act of war and those victimized by it had an obligation to fight back and to fight aggressively. And President Trump's supporters did not miss or misunderstand the message: the cavalry was coming to fight.

¶244 The fact that, at one point during his speech, President Trump said that "everyone here will soon be marching to the Capitol building to peacefully and patriotically make your voices heard" does not persuade us that the district court erred in finding that the first prong of the Brandenberg test was met. See Thompson, 590 F. Supp. 3d at 113–14. This isolated reference "cannot inoculate [President

---

[20] Thompson involved a motion to dismiss. As a result, the court determined only that President Trump's speech "plausibly [involved] words of incitement not protected by the First Amendment." Thompson, 590 F. Supp. 3d at 115; see Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 553 (2007) (requiring plaintiffs to show that their complaints are plausible to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump] against the conclusion that his exhortation, made nearly an hour later, to 'fight like hell' immediately before sending rally-goers to the Capitol, within the context of the larger Speech and circumstances, was not protected expression." Id. at 117.

c. Intent to Produce Violent or Lawless Action

¶245 The second prong of the test for incitement is that "the speaker intends that his speech will result in the use of violence or lawless action." Nwanguma, 903 F.3d at 609. The Supreme Court has interpreted this second prong of the Brandenburg test to require specific intent.[21] Counterman, 600 U.S. at 79, 81 (establishing that "when incitement is at issue, we have spoken in terms of specific intent, presumably equivalent to purpose or knowledge," and defining acting purposely as "'consciously desir[ing]' a result"). So, we must consider whether President Trump's exhortations at the Ellipse on January 6 to "fight like hell," and his [21] There is some uncertainty as to whether specific intent to incite imminent lawless action is needed in civil cases such as the one before us now because most of the modern incitement cases arose in a criminal context. See Counterman, 600 U.S. at 70; Hess, 414 U.S. at 105; Brandenburg, 395 U.S. at 444; but see Claiborne Hardware, 458 U.S. at 890 (adjudicating complainants' request for injunctive relief and damages). The Counterman Court's justification for the specific intent standard was therefore tied to criminal liability. Counterman, 600 U.S. at 81 ("A strong intent requirement . . . was a way to ensure that efforts to prosecute incitement would not bleed over . . . to dissenting political speech at the First Amendment's core." (emphasis added)). But we need not resolve the issue because, regardless of whether it is required, we agree with the district court that President Trump acted with specific intent.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

urgings that his followers "go[] to the Capitol" and that they would get to "go by 'very different rules,'" were intended to produce imminent lawless action.

¶246 The district court concluded that President Trump exhibited the requisite intent here. It found that, before the January 6 rally, "[President] Trump knew that his supporters were angry and prepared to use violence to 'stop the steal' including physically preventing Vice President Pence from certifying the election," Anderson, ¶ 128, and that President Trump's response to the events following his speech "support . . . that [President] Trump endorsed and intended the actions of the mob on January 6," id. at ¶ 193 (second alteration in original). Based on these findings of fact, the court "conclude[d] that [President] Trump acted with the specific intent to incite political violence and direct it at the Capitol with the purpose of disrupting the electoral certification." Id. at ¶ 293.

¶247 The district court found that President Trump knew, before he gave his speech, that there was the potential for violence on January 6. It found that "[President] Trump himself agrees that his supporters 'listen to [him] like no one else,'" id. at ¶ 63 (second alteration in original), and that federal agencies that President Trump oversaw identified threats of violence ahead of January 6, including "threats to storm the U.S. Capitol and kill elected officials," id. at ¶¶ 123–24.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶248 The court also found that President Trump's conduct and tweets, which we outlined above, from the time he was told of the attack on the Capitol at 1:21 p.m. until Congress reconvened later that night, indicated his intent to produce lawless or violent conduct. See id. at ¶¶ 169–73, 178, 183, 186, 189.

¶249 In conducting our independent review of the district court's factual findings, we agree that President Trump intended that his speech would result in the use of violence or lawless action on January 6 to prevent the peaceful transfer of power. Despite his knowledge of the anger that he had instigated, his calls to arms, his awareness of the threats of violence that had been made leading up to January 6, and the obvious fact that many in the crowd were angry and armed, President Trump told his riled-up supporters to walk down to the Capitol and fight. He then stood back and let the fighting happen, despite having the ability and authority to stop it (with his words or by calling in the military), thereby confirming that this violence was what he intended.

¶250 We therefore conclude that the second prong of the Brandenburg test has also been met.

d. Likely to Incite or Produce Imminent Lawless Action

¶251 Finally, for speech to be unprotected, we must conclude that "the imminent use of violence or lawless action is the likely result of the speech." Nwanguma, 903 F.3d at 609.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶252 The district court found that:

> Professor Simi reviewed [President] Trump's relationship with his supporters over the years, identified a pattern of calls for violence that his supporters responded to, and explained how that long experience allowed [President] Trump to know how his supporters responded to his calls for violence using a shared language that allowed him to maintain plausible deniability with the wider public.

Id. at ¶ 62.

¶253 Professor Simi then "testified about . . . examples of [these] patterns of call-and-response that [President] Trump developed and used to incite violence by his supporters." Id. at ¶ 64. In one such instance, a November 2015 political rally, "[President] Trump . . . t[old] his supporters to 'get [a protester] the hell out of here' and the protester was then assaulted. When asked about the attack the next day, Trump said 'maybe [the protester] should have been roughed up.'" Id. at ¶ 66 (third and fourth alterations in original).

¶254 Further, the district court found that "on January 1, 2021, [President] Trump retweeted a post from Kylie Jane Kremer, an organizer of March for Trump on January 6, saying, 'The calvary [sic] is coming, Mr. President!'" Id. at ¶ 119. It found that, according to Professor Simi, "[President] Trump's December 19, 2020 ['will be wild'] tweet had an immediate effect on far-right extremists and militias . . . , who viewed the tweet as a 'call to arms' and began to plot activities to disrupt the January 6, 2021 joint session." Id. at ¶ 117.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶255 These findings support the conclusion that President Trump's calls for imminent lawlessness and violence during his speech were likely to incite such imminent lawlessness and violence. When President Trump told his supporters that they were "allowed to go by very different rules" and that if they did not "fight like hell," they would not "have a country anymore," it was likely that his supporters would heed his encouragement and act violently. We therefore hold that this final prong of the Brandenburg test has been met.

¶256 In sum, we conclude that President Trump's speech on January 6 was not protected by the First Amendment.

IV. Conclusion

¶257 The district court erred by concluding that Section Three does not apply to the President. We therefore reverse the district court's judgment. As stated above, however, we affirm much of the district court's reasoning on other issues. Accordingly, we conclude that because President Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President under Section Three, it would be a wrongful act under the Election Code for the Secretary to list President Trump as a candidate on the presidential primary ballot. Therefore, the Secretary may not list President Trump's name on the 2024 presidential primary ballot, nor may she count any write-in votes cast for him. See § 1-7-114(2), C.R.S. (2023) ("A vote for a write-in candidate shall not be counted unless that candidate is qualified to hold the office for which the elector's vote was cast."). But we stay our ruling until January 4, 2024 (the day before the Secretary's deadline to certify the content of the presidential primary ballot). If review is sought in the Supreme Court before the stay expires, it shall remain in place, and the Secretary will continue to be required to include President Trump's name on the 2024 presidential primary ballot until the receipt of any order or mandate from the Supreme Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT dissented.

JUSTICE SAMOUR dissented.

JUSTICE BERKENKOTTER dissented.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT dissenting.

¶258 I agree with the majority that an action brought under section 1-1-113, C.R.S. (2023) of Colorado's election code ("Election Code") may examine whether a candidate is qualified for office under the U.S. Constitution. But section 1-1-113 has a limited scope. Kuhn v. Williams, 2018 CO 30M, ¶ 1 n.1, 418 P.3d 478, 480 n.1 (per curiam, unanimous) (emphasizing "the narrow nature of our review under section 1-1-113"). In my view, the claim at issue in this case exceeds that scope. The voters' (the "Electors") action to disqualify former President Donald J. Trump under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment presents uniquely complex questions that exceed the adjudicative competence of section 1-1-113's expedited procedures. Simply put, section 1-1-113 was not enacted to decide whether a candidate engaged in insurrection. In my view, this cause of action should have been dismissed. Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

I. The Electors' Challenge Is Incompatible with a Section 1-1-113 Proceeding

¶259 Section 1-1-113 provides for the resolution of potential election code violations in a timely manner. In many scenarios, Colorado voters can challenge the Secretary of State's (the "Secretary") certification of a candidate's qualifications. Carson v. Reiner, 2016 CO 38, ¶ 17, 370 P.3d 1137, 1141 (acknowledging that section 1-1-113 "clearly comprehends challenges to a broad range of wrongful acts committed by [Colorado's election] officials charged with duties under the code [and] comprehends a specific challenge to a designated election official's certification of a candidate"). While section 1-1-113 only offers voters a "narrow opportunity," Kuhn, ¶ 28, 418 P.3d at 484, that opportunity has proven effective as voters have compelled the Secretary to omit from the ballot unqualified candidates whom they would have otherwise listed. E.g., id. at ¶ 57, 418 P.3d at 489 (barring a candidate from the ballot because his petition circulator was not a Colorado resident). Section 1-1-113's grant of discretionary review to this court has also vindicated voters' rights by preventing a decision that would have compelled the Secretary to place an unqualified candidate on the ballot. Griswold v. Ferrigno Warren, 2020 CO 34, ¶ 26, 462 P.3d 1081, 1087 (barring a candidate from the ballot because she failed to gather sufficient signatures).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶260 Further, our election code suggests that a petitioner may base a challenge to the Secretary's certification of an aspiring presidential primary candidate on federal law. Compare § 1-4-1203(2)(a), C.R.S. (2023) (stating that a candidate must be "qualified"), with §1-4-1201, C.R.S. (2023) (declaring that the code conforms to federal law); see also Coats v. Dish Network, LLC, 2015 CO 44, ¶ 20, 350 P.3d 849, 853 (relying on federal law to interpret "lawful activity" in a Colorado statute). We have previously held, however, that some federal law claims cannot be adjudicated under section 1-1-113. E.g., Frazier v. Williams, 2017 CO 85, ¶ 19,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

401 P.3d 541, 545 (concluding that a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim cannot be the basis of, or joined to, a section 1-1-113 action).

¶261 But not all federal questions exceed the scope of section 1-1-113. A qualification challenge under Article II, Section 1[1] or the Twenty-Second Amendment[2] lends itself to section 1-1-113's procedures. Although a claim that a candidate is not thirty-five years old may be easier to resolve than a claim that a candidate is not a natural born citizen, these presidential qualifications are characteristically objective, discernible facts. Age, time previously served as president, and place of birth all parallel core qualification issues under Colorado's election code.[3] Conversely, all these questions pale in comparison to the complexity of an action to disqualify a candidate for engaging in insurrection.

---

[1] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5 provides the presidential qualifications:

> No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

[2] U.S. Const. amend. XXII, § 1 provides further presidential qualifications:

> No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once.

[3] See also Colorado Secretary of State, Presidential Primary 2024 Candidate Qualification Guide 3, https://www.coloradosos.gov/pubs/elections/

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶262 Far from presenting a straightforward biographical question, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment proscribes insurrectionist U.S. officers from again holding office. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Unlike qualifications such as age and place of birth, an application of Section Three requires courts to define complex terms, determine legislative intent from over 150 years ago, and make factual findings foreign to our election code. The Electors contend that there is nothing "particularly unusual about a section 1-1-113 proceeding raising constitutional issues." However, the framework that section 1-1-113 offers for identifying qualified candidates is not commensurate with the extraordinary determination to disqualify a candidate because they engaged in insurrection against the Constitution. See Dis. op. ¶ 352 (Berkenkotter, J., dissenting) (noting that "the historical application of section 1-1-113 . . . has been limited to challenges involving relatively straightforward issues, like whether a candidate meets a residency requirement for a school board election."). Recognizing this limitation of section 1-1-113 is not novel. See Kuhn, ¶ 1 n.1, 418 P.3d at 480 n.1 (emphasizing "the narrow nature of our review under section 1-1-113" and declining to address a First Amendment challenge to Colorado's residency requirement for petition

---

Candidates/packets/2024PresidentialPrimaryGuide.pdf [https:// perma.cc/ KK3L-X8BM] (listing the "basic qualifications" for the presidency including the qualifications from Article II and the Twenty-Second Amendment but not mentioning the Fourteenth Amendment's disqualification for insurrectionists).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

circulators "because such claims exceed this court's jurisdiction in a section 1-1-113 action").

¶263 Dismissal is particularly appropriate here because the Electors brought their challenge without a determination from a proceeding (e.g., a prosecution for an insurrection-related offense) with more rigorous procedures to ensure adequate due process. Instead, the Electors relied on section 1-1-113 and its "breakneck pace" to declare President Trump a disqualified insurrectionist. See Frazier, ¶ 11, 401 P.3d at 544.

II. As Demonstrated by the Proceeding Below, the Statutory Timeline for a Section 1-1-113 Proceeding Does Not Permit a Claim as Complex as the Electors'

¶264 In addition to qualitative incompatibilities, the complexity of the Electors' claims cannot be squared with section 1-1-113's truncated timeline for adjudication. Section 1-1-113 actions for presidential primary ballots fulfill a need for speed by requiring the district court to hold a hearing within five days and issue its decision within forty-eight hours of the hearing:

> Any such challenge must provide notice in a summary manner of an alleged impropriety that gives rise to the complaint. No later than five days after the challenge is filed, a hearing must be held at which time the district court shall hear the challenge and assess the validity of all alleged improprieties. The district court shall issue findings of fact and conclusions of law no later than forty-eight hours after the hearing. The party filing the challenge has the burden to sustain the challenge by a preponderance of the evidence.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

§ 1-4-1204, C.R.S. (2023). This speed comes with consequences, namely, the absence of procedures that courts, litigants, and the public would expect for complex constitutional litigation. As President Trump, argues and the Electors do not contest, section 1-1-113's procedures do not provide common tools for complex fact-finding: preliminary evidentiary or pre-trial motions hearings, subpoena powers, basic discovery, depositions, and time for disclosure of witnesses and exhibits. This same concern was raised in Frazier; the then-Secretary argued that "it is impossible to fully litigate a complex constitutional issue within days or weeks, as is typical of a section 1-1-113 proceeding." ¶ 18 n.3, 401 P.3d at 545 n.3. While we avoided deciding if a claim could be too complex for a section 1-1-113 proceeding in Frazier, that question is unavoidable here, and it demands that we reconcile the complexity of this issue with the breakneck pace of a section 1-1-113 procedure. In my view, the answer to this question is dispositive.

¶265 This case's procedural history proves my point. Despite clear requirements, the district court did not follow section 1-4-1204's statutory timeline for section 1-1-113 claims. The proceeding below involved two delays that, respectively, violated (1) the requirement that the merits hearing be held within five days of the challenge being lodged, and (2) the requirement that the district court issue its order within forty-eight hours of the merits hearing.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶266 The Electors filed their challenge on September 6, 2023. Although the question of whether this action should be removed to federal court was resolved by September 14, the district court did not hold an evidentiary hearing until October 30. The majority appears to imply that a "status conference" on September 18 fulfills the statutory requirement that the hearing be held within five days of the Electors' challenge. Maj. op. ¶ 83. However, a status conference plainly does not satisfy the requirement: "No later than five days after the challenge is filed, a hearing must be held at which time the district court shall hear the challenge and assess the validity of all alleged improprieties." § 1-4-1204 (emphasis added); see Carson, ¶ 21, 370 P.3d at 1142 (ruling that section 1-1-113 "does not permit a challenge to an election official's certification of a candidate to the ballot, solely on the basis of the certified candidate's qualification, once the period . . . for challenging the qualification of the candidate directly has expired . . . ."). It is no mystery why the statutory timeline could not be enforced: This claim was too complex.[4] The fact it took a week shy of two months to hold a hearing that "must" take place within five days proves that section 1-1-113 is an incompatible vehicle

[4] The intervals between the challenge and the hearing, and the hearing and the order, should not cast aspersions on the district court, which made valiant efforts to add some process above and beyond what the election code provides. However, the Colorado General Assembly, not the district court, decides when and how to change statutory requirements.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

for this claim. The majority recognizes the five-day requirement, Maj. op. ¶ 38, but it does not acknowledge the violation of section 1-4-1204's timeline or give consequence to that violation.

¶267 Nonetheless, the majority touts the fact that a hearing was held and lauds the district court's timely issuance of its decision as evidence that this matter was not too complex for a section 1-1-113 proceeding. Maj. op. ¶¶ 84–85. But was the order timely issued? Substantially, I think not. Compare Maj. op. ¶ 22 ("The trial began, as scheduled, on October 30 [a Monday]. The evidentiary portion lasted five days [through Friday, November 3], with closing arguments almost two weeks later, on November 15. . . . The court issued its written final order on November 17 . . . ."), with § 1-4-1204 ("The district court shall issue findings of fact and conclusions of law no later than forty-eight hours after the hearing."). Section 1-4-1204 only mandates two deadlines, and neither were honored. After all the evidence had been presented at a week-long hearing, the court suspended proceedings for two weeks. I find nothing in the record offering a reason grounded in the election code for the interval between the five consecutive days of the hearing and the solitary closing arguments. However, I understand the necessity to postpone the closing arguments for one reason: The complexity of the case required more time than "no later than forty-eight hours after the hearing" for the court to draft its 102-page order. Thus, while the district court formally issued its order within forty-eight hours of the closing arguments, the interval between the evidentiary hearings and the closing arguments was not in compliance with section 1-4-1204.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶268 The majority condoned the district court's failure to observe the statutory timeline by concluding that it "substantially compl[ied]." See Maj. op. ¶ 85. This renders the statute's five-day and forty-eight-hour requirements meaningless. Contra Ferrigno Warren, ¶ 20, 462 P.3d at 1085 (holding that, under Colorado's election code, a "specific statutory command could not be ignored in the name of substantial compliance"); Gallegos Fam. Props., LLC v. Colo. Groundwater Comm'n, 2017 CO 73, ¶ 25, 398 P.3d 599, 608 ("Where the language is clear, we must apply the language as written."). If a court must contort a special proceeding's statutory timeline to process a claim, then that claim is not proper for the special proceeding.

¶269 From my perspective, just because a hearing was held and Intervenors participated, it doesn't mean that due process was observed. Nor should it be inferred that section 1-1-113's statutory procedures, which were not followed, were up to the task. I cannot agree with the majority that the district court's extra-statutory delays and select procedure augmentations indicate that the Electors' claim was fit for adjudication under sections 1-4-1204(4) and 1-1-113. Contra, Maj. op. ¶ 81 ("In short, the district court admirably—and swiftly—discharged its duty to adjudicate this complex section 1-1-113 action."). Dragging someone through a "makeshift proceeding" is not an indication that it was an appropriate process. See Dis. op. ¶ 274 (Samour, J., dissenting). Importantly, the Electors were not rushed into the process; they didn't have to file their challenge until they were prepared. Only Intervenors arguably had inadequate time to prepare.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶270 Finally, only a two-thirds majority of both houses of Congress can overturn a Section Three disqualification. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. This remedy is extraordinary and speaks volumes about the gravity of the disqualification. Such a high bar indicates that an expedited hearing absent any discovery procedures and with a preponderance of the evidence standard is not the appropriate means for adjudicating a matter of this magnitude.[5] See Frazier, ¶¶ 17–18, 401 P.3d at 545 (holding that "inconsistencies" between the procedures of section 1-1-113 and a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 "reinforce" the conclusion that not all federal law claims can be raised in section 1-1-113 proceedings).

[5] Although the district court made its findings using the clear and convincing standard, the election code calls for a preponderance standard. § 1-4-1204 ("The party filing the challenge has the burden to sustain the challenge by a preponderance of the evidence.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. Conclusion

¶271 My opinion that this is an inadequate cause of action is dictated by the facts of this case, particularly the absence of a criminal conviction for an insurrection-related offense.

¶272 The questions presented here simply reach a magnitude of complexity not contemplated by the Colorado General Assembly for its election code enforcement statute. The proceedings below ran counter to the letter and spirit of the statutory timeframe because the Electors' claim overwhelmed the process. In the absence of an insurrection-related conviction, I would hold that a request to disqualify a candidate under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is not a proper cause of action under Colorado's election code. Therefore, I would dismiss the claim at issue here. Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

JUSTICE SAMOUR dissenting.

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once without trial, deprives a whole class of persons of offices . . . for cause, however grave.

In re Griffin, 11 F. Cas. 7, 26 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) (No. 5,815) ("Griffin's Case").

¶273 These astute words, uttered by U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase a century and a half ago, eloquently describe one of the bedrock principles of American democracy: Our government cannot deprive someone of the right to hold public office without due process of law. Even if we are convinced that a candidate committed horrible acts in the past—dare I say, engaged in insurrection—there must be procedural due process before we can declare that individual disqualified from holding public office. Procedural due process is one of the aspects of America's democracy that sets this country apart.

¶274 The decision to bar former President Donald J. Trump ("President Trump")—by all accounts the current leading Republican presidential candidate (and reportedly the current leading overall presidential candidate)—from Colorado's presidential primary ballot flies in the face of the due process doctrine. By concluding that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing, the majority approves the enforcement of that federal constitutional provision by our state courts through the truncated procedural mechanism that resides in our state Election Code.[1] Thus, based on its interpretation of Section Three, our court sanctions these makeshift proceedings employed by the district court below—which lacked basic discovery, the ability to subpoena documents and compel witnesses, workable timeframes to adequately investigate and develop defenses, and the opportunity for a fair trial—to adjudicate a federal constitutional claim (a complicated one at that) masquerading as a run-of-the-mill state Election Code claim. And because most other states don't have the Election Code provisions we do, they won't be able to enforce Section Three. That, in turn, will inevitably lead to the disqualification of President Trump from the presidential primary ballot in less than all fifty states, thereby risking chaos in our country. This can't possibly be the outcome the framers intended.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶275 I agree that Section Three bars from public office anyone who, having previously taken an oath as an officer of the United States to support the federal Constitution, engages in insurrection. But Section Three doesn't spell out the

---

[1] As pertinent here, Section Three provides that:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office . . . under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath . . . as an officer of the United States . . . to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same . . . .

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

procedures that must be followed to determine whether someone has engaged in insurrection after taking the prerequisite oath. That is, it sheds no light on whether a jury must be empaneled or a bench trial will suffice, the proper burdens of proof and standards of review, the application of discovery and evidentiary rules, or even whether civil or criminal proceedings are contemplated. This dearth of procedural guidance is not surprising: Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment specifically gives Congress absolute power to enact legislation to enforce Section Three. My colleagues in the majority concede that there is currently no legislation enacted by Congress to enforce Section Three. This is of no moment to them, however, because they conclude that Section Three is self-executing, and that the states are free to apply their own procedures (including compressed ones in an election code) to enforce it.[2] That is hard for me to swallow.

---

[2] The majority repeatedly uses "self-executing" to describe Section Three, but then reasons that this part of the Fourteenth Amendment is enforceable in Colorado only because of the procedures our legislature has enacted as part of the state's Election Code. This strikes me as an oxymoron. If a constitutional provision is truly self-executing, it needs no legislation to be enforced. See Self-executing, Merriam-Webster Dictionary, https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/self-executing [https://perma.cc/4X7W-Y8AR] (defining "self-executing" as "taking effect immediately without implementing legislation"); see also Self-enforcing, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019) ("self-enforcing" means "effective and applicable without the need for any other action; self-executing"). Much like Inigo Montoya advised Vizzini, "I do not think [self-executing] means what [my colleagues in the majority] think it means." The Princess Bride (20th Century Fox 1987) ("You keep using that word [inconceivable]. I do not think it means what you think it means.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶276 Significantly, there is a federal statute that specifically criminalizes insurrection and requires that anyone convicted of engaging in such conduct be fined or imprisoned and be disqualified from holding public office. See 18 U.S.C. § 2383. If any federal legislation arguably enables the enforcement of Section Three, it's section 2383. True, President Trump has not been charged under that statute, so it is not before us. But the point is that this is the only federal legislation in existence at this time to potentially enforce Section Three. Had President Trump been charged under section 2383, he would have received the full panoply of constitutional rights that all defendants are afforded in criminal cases. More to the point for our purposes, had he been so charged, I wouldn't be writing separately to call attention to the substandard due process of law he received in these abbreviated Election Code proceedings.

¶277 I recognize the need to defend and protect our democracy against those who seek to undermine the peaceful transfer of power. And I embrace the judiciary's solemn role in upholding and applying the law. But that solemn role necessarily includes ensuring our courts afford everyone who comes before them (in criminal and civil proceedings alike) due process of law. Otherwise, as relevant here, how can we ever be confident that someone who is declared ineligible to hold public office pursuant to Section Three actually engaged in insurrection or rebellion after taking the prerequisite oath?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶278 In my view, what transpired in this litigation fell woefully short of what due process demands. Because I perceive the majority's ruling that Section Three is self-executing to be the most concerning misstep in today's lengthy opinion, I focus on that aspect of the legal analysis.

¶279 Context is key here. The Fourteenth Amendment was designed to address a particular juncture in American history. William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U. Pa. L. Rev. (forthcoming 2024) (manuscript at 3), https://ssrn.com/abstract=4532751. The postbellum framers were confronted with the unprecedented nexus of historical events that gave rise to and shaped secession, the Civil War, and Reconstruction. Josh Blackman & Seth Barrett Tillman, Sweeping and Forcing the President into Section 3, 28(2) Tex. Rev. L. & Pol. (forthcoming 2024) (manuscript at 214–15), https://ssrn.com/abstract=4568771. And their response, in some measure, sounded the clarion call of "a constitutional revolution." Id. at 99.

¶280 Indeed, the Fourteenth Amendment ushered in an expansion of federal power that undercut traditional state power. See United States v. Washington, 20 F. 630, 631 (C.C.W.D. Tex. 1883) ("The fourteenth amendment is a limitation upon the powers of the state and an enlargement of the powers of congress."); Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Peña, 515 U.S. 200, 255 (1995) (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("The Fourteenth Amendment directly empowers Congress at the same time it expressly limits the States."). Forefront in the minds of the framers was the evident concern that the states would again seek to undermine the national government. In short, the states—state institutions, state officials, and state courts—were not to be trusted. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. 339, 346 (1879) ("The prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment are directed to the States, and they are to a degree restrictions of State power.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶281 Thus, the indelible trespass of the former confederate states was met squarely by an overarching goal to render federal institutional authority paramount. Such is the contextual framework informing my view of the instant matter. To my mind, it compels the conclusion, soundly supported by the framers' intent and the weight of the relevant authorities, that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing, and that Congress alone is empowered to pass any enabling legislation.

¶282 My colleagues in the majority turn Section Three on its head and hold that it licenses states to supersede the federal government. Respectfully, they have it backwards. Because no federal legislation currently exists to power Section Three and propel it into action, because President Trump has not been charged under section 2383, and because there is absolutely no authority permitting Colorado state courts to use Colorado's Election Code as an engine to provide the necessary thrust to effectuate Section Three, I respectfully dissent.[3] I would affirm the district court's judgment in favor of President Trump, but I would do so on other grounds.[4]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. Analysis

A. Pertinent Procedural Posture

¶283 The district court gave short shrift to the question of whether Section Three is self-executing. In its Omnibus Order, which denied President Trump's September 29 motion to dismiss, the court found the issue "irrelevant." The court ruled, in conclusory fashion, that states are empowered to execute Section Three via their own enabling legislation and that Colorado's Election Code constitutes such an enactment. This analytical shortcut, though convenient, is inconsistent with both the text of the Fourteenth Amendment and persuasive authority interpreting it.

¶284 Griffin's Case is the jumping-off point for any Section Three analysis.

---

[3] There is a colorable argument that the majority incorrectly holds that Section Three applies to the President of the United States. Other parts of the majority's analysis, including the determinations that President Trump engaged in insurrection and that his remarks deserve no shelter under the First Amendment's rather expansive protective canopy, are at least questionable. Because I conclude that Section Three is not self-executing, and because that conclusion is dispositive, I don't address any other issue.

[4] The district court decided that Section Three does not apply to the President of the United States.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. Griffin's Case: The Fountainhead

¶285 In 1869, less than a year after the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Chase presided over Griffin's Case in the federal circuit court for the district of Virginia.[5] Griffin's Case is the wellspring of Section Three jurisprudence. And, given the temporal proximity of Chief Justice Chase's pronouncements on the topic of self-execution to the passage and ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, I consider the holding in Griffin's Case compelling.

¶286 Judge Hugh W. Sheffey presided over Caesar Griffin's criminal trial after the Fourteenth Amendment went into effect. Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 22. Before the Civil War, Sheffey held a Section Three-triggering position, and so, had taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Id. Subsequently, Sheffey served in Virginia's confederate legislature. Id. It was not until after the war that Sheffey was appointed to a state court judgeship, the position he held at the time of Griffin's trial. Id. at 16. Following the jury's guilty verdict on the charge of assault with intent to kill, Judge Sheffey sentenced Griffin to two years' imprisonment. Id. at 22–23.

¶287 Griffin filed a collateral attack in federal district court. He argued that his sentence was null because Section Three had "instantly, on the day of its promulgation, vacated all offices held by persons within the category of prohibition," thereby rendering Judge Sheffey ineligible to be on the bench. Id. at 24. More specifically, Griffin claimed that Sheffey was disqualified from being a judge because he had engaged in conduct prohibited by Section Three. Id. The federal district court agreed and ordered Griffin's immediate discharge from custody. Id.

[5] At the time, Supreme Court justices rode the circuit and sat in regional federal courts.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶288 On appeal, Chief Justice Chase framed the issue in the following terms: "[W]hether upon a sound construction of the amendment, it must be regarded as operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power." Id. at 23 (emphasis added). Chief Justice Chase grounded his resolution of this self-execution inquiry in the "character of the third section of the amendment." Id. at 25. In other words, he focused on the context in which the disqualification clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was enacted. Of course, he recognized that the ultimate object of this part of the Fourteenth Amendment was "to exclude from certain offices a certain class of persons." Id. at 26. But his prefatory statements echo the bugle blow of constitutional revolution: "The amendment itself was the first of the series of measures proposed or adopted by congress with a view to the reorganization of state governments acknowledging the constitutional supremacy of the national government, in those states which had attempted . . . to establish an independent Confederacy." Id. at 25.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶289 Crucially, he observed that "it is obviously impossible to [disqualify certain officers] by a simple declaration, whether in the constitution or in an act of congress." Id. at 26. He added that to carry out Section Three's punitive mandate and enforce "any sentence of exclusion," it must first "be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition." Id. Chief Justice Chase explained that "[t]o accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results," considerable procedural and normative mechanisms would need to be introduced; certainly, "proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable." Id. And here's the kicker, the beating heart of Griffin's Case: Chief Justice Chase declared that these indispensable mechanisms "can only be provided for by congress." Id. (emphasis added).

¶290 It was the very language of the Fourteenth Amendment, Chief Justice Chase continued, that put this proposition beyond doubt: "Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.'" Id. (emphasis added) (quoting U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3). Chief Justice Chase noted that Section Five "qualifies [Section Three] to the same extent as it would if the whole amendment consisted of these two sections." Id. And pivoting back to Section Three, he pointed out that, consistent with Section Five, its final clause "gives to congress absolute control of the whole operation of the amendment." Id.; see U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3 ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶291 Chief Justice Chase, therefore, concluded:

> Taking the third section then, in its completeness with this final clause, it seems to put beyond reasonable question the conclusion that the intention of the people of the United States, in adopting the fourteenth amendment, was to create a disability, to be removed in proper cases by a two-thirds vote, and to be made operative in other cases by the legislation of congress in its ordinary course.

Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26 (emphases added).

¶292 I extract three seminal, and related, takeaways from this review of Griffin's Case. First, Section Three is not self-executing. Second, only Congress can pass the "appropriate legislation" needed to execute it. And third, this grant of power to Congress was not merely formalistic; it was also pragmatic. Indeed, it was indicative of the complex nature of the disqualification function. Chief Justice Chase perceived that Section Three would require an array of mechanisms—procedural, evidentiary, and definitional—to ascertain who was subject to disqualification and how they could be disqualified. More on this third notion later.

¶293 For now, though, it is worth stressing that, despite detractors in some quarters, the other premises have withstood the test of time: Section Three is not self-executing, and Congress has the exclusive authority to enforce it. See Cale v. City of Covington, 586 F.2d 311, 316 (4th Cir. 1978) (citing Griffin's Case for the proposition that Section Three is "not self-executing absent congressional action"); State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599, 616–17 (1875) (same); Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL, 2022 WL 1468157, *1 (Ariz. May 9, 2022) (affirming the lower court's ruling against disqualification on state law grounds but stating that "Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment appears to expressly delegate to Congress the authority to devise the method to enforce the Disqualification Clause"); see also Va. Op. Att'y Gen. No. 21-003, at 3 (Jan. 22, 2021) (citing Griffin's Case and stating that "the weight of authority appears to be that Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is not 'self-executing'").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶294 I now address the criticisms launched by the Electors against the enduring vintage of Griffin's Case. For the reasons I articulate, I am not persuaded by any of the contentions advanced.

C. Harmonizing Griffin's Case and Case of Davis

¶295 The Electors argue that Chief Justice Chase took the opposite tack on Section Three a couple of years before deciding Griffin's Case. See Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63 (C.C.D. Va. 1871). But Griffin's Case was decided after Case of Davis, and unlike

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Griffin's Case, Case of Davis is a two-judicial-officer, unwritten, split decision.[6] Hence, to put it mildly, Case of Davis is of questionable precedential value. Indeed, the majority doesn't rely on Case of Davis in its attempt to undermine Griffin's Case.

¶296 In Case of Davis, Chief Justice Chase, again sitting as a circuit court judge, presided over the treason prosecution of former confederate president, Jefferson Davis. Id. The question before the court was whether Section Three displaced the federal criminal treason charges levied against Davis. Id. at 102. Defense counsel asserted that Section Three provided the exclusive punishment for those within its reach, thus foreclosing prosecution under the federal treason statute. Id. at 90–91. Furthermore, defense counsel maintained that Section Three "executes itself" and "needs no legislation on the part of congress to give it effect." Id. at 90.

¶297 Due to the structure of the federal judiciary at the time, the case was heard by both a federal district court judge and Chief Justice Chase sitting together. See Judiciary Act of 1802, 2 Stat. 156, 159, § 6. The judicial officers, however, failed to reach consensus on the defense's motion to quash the indictment. Case of Davis,

---

[6] Although the year in the citation for Case of Davis (1871) postdates the year in the citation for Griffin's Case (1869), it was in fact Case of Davis that came first. See Gerard N. Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const. Comment. 87, 100 n.66 (2021). Chief Justice Chase announced on December 5, 1868, that the court had failed to reach consensus in Case of Davis. Case of Davis, 7 F. Cas. at 102; Certificate of Division, Case of Jefferson Davis, 7 F. Cas. 63 (C.C.D. Va. 1867–1871) (No. 324), https://joshblackman.com/wp-content/uploads/2023/08/5220.pdf [https://perma.cc/K7QC-4YZJ].

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

7 F. Cas. at 102. Accordingly, a certificate of disagreement was submitted for review by the Supreme Court at its next session. Id. Notably, though, the case was never heard by the Supreme Court because President Johnson issued a proclamation of general amnesty in December 1868, effectively disposing of the treason charges. Id.

¶298 Although the certificate of disagreement did not indicate the judicial officers' votes, the final sentence in the 1894 report of the case in the Federal Reports states that Chief Justice Chase "instructed the reporter to record him as having been of opinion on the disagreement, that the indictment should be quashed, and all further proceedings barred by the effect of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States." Id. Over the years, some have clung to this hearsay to posit that Chief Justice Chase was inconsistent in his application of Section Three, waffling on the issue of self-execution.

¶299 Certain legal scholars have sought to explain this purported incongruence by surmising that Chief Justice Chase's application of Section Three in Griffin's Case was politically motivated. Consequently, they criticize Griffin's Case as wrongly decided and the result of flawed logic. See Baude & Paulsen, supra (manuscript at 35–49). Other legal scholars, however, question whether the statement quoted above from the Federal Reports accurately represented Chief Justice Chase's views. They point out that the case reporter, a former confederate general, was the very attorney who represented Judge Sheffey in Griffin's Case.[7] See Blackman & Tillman, supra (manuscript at 15). Even assuming Case of Davis warrants any consideration at all, there is no need to join this affray because these cases can be reconciled in a principled manner by recognizing that there are two distinct senses of self-execution. Id. at 19. I find this distinction both helpful and borne out by the case law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶300 First, there is self-execution as a shield, allowing individuals to raise the Constitution defensively, in response to an action brought by a third party. Second, there is self-execution as a sword—such as when individuals invoke the Constitution in advancing a theory of liability or cause of action that supports affirmative relief. When acting as a shield, the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing. Cale, 586 F.2d at 316. The Fourteenth Amendment, however, cannot act as a self-executing sword; rather, an individual seeking affirmative relief under the Amendment must rely on legislation from Congress. Id.

¶301 The Fourth Circuit aptly adopted this distinction in Cale, thereby reconciling any apparent inconsistencies in Fourteenth Amendment jurisprudence. That case

---

[7] Griffin's Case was decided in 1869 and the statement from the case reporter regarding Case of Davis appeared in the 1894 Federal Reports. Blackman & Tillman, supra (manuscript at 140).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

implicated a wrongful discharge action in which the plaintiff asked the court to sanction an implied cause of action arising under the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause. Id. at 313. In examining whether an implied cause of action exists under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the court turned to cases that have construed Section Five. It began by discussing Ex parte Virginia, where the Supreme Court explained that the Fourteenth Amendment derives much of its force from Section Five, which envisions enabling legislation from Congress to effectuate the prohibitions of the amendment:

> It is not said the judicial power of the general government shall extend to enforcing the prohibitions and to protecting the rights and immunities guaranteed. It is not said that branch of the government shall be authorized to declare void any action of a State in violation of the prohibitions. It is the power of Congress which has been enlarged[.] Congress is authorized to enforce the prohibitions by appropriate legislation. Some legislation is contemplated to make the amendments fully effective.

Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. at 345–46 (first emphasis in original, second emphasis added).

¶302 But shortly after deciding Ex parte Virginia, the Supreme Court declared the Fourteenth Amendment to be "undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation," while simultaneously making the seemingly inconsistent statement that Section Five "invests Congress with power to enforce" the Fourteenth Amendment "in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen." The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 11, 20 (1883). Although at first blush the opinion in the Civil Rights Cases appears to be both internally inconsistent and inconsistent with Ex parte Virginia, the Cale court did not so hold. Cale, 586 F.2d at 316. Instead, the Cale court resolved any apparent inconsistencies by distinguishing between, on the one hand, "the protection the Fourteenth Amendment provide[s] of its own force as a shield under the doctrine of judicial review," and on the other, affirmative relief sought under the amendment as a sword, which is unavailable without legislation from Congress. Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶303 In supporting this distinction, the Cale court found refuge in the Slaughter-House Cases. 83 U.S. 36 (1872). There, the defendants invoked the Fourteenth Amendment as a shield by arguing that a local law restricting where animals could be slaughtered deprived the city's butchers of their "right to exercise their trade." Id. at 60. The Supreme Court, however, held that given the history of the Reconstruction Amendments and their purpose of preventing discrimination against the newly liberated enslaved people, the butchers' "right to exercise their trade" was not a right that fell within the purview of the privileges-and-immunities provision of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. at 81. Of particular interest for our purposes is the fact that the Court did not reject the use of the Fourteenth Amendment as a self-executing shield, but rather rejected the argument that the particular right in question fit within the Fourteenth Amendment's protection.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶304 Importantly, based on its examination of Ex parte Virginia, the Civil Rights Cases, and the Slaughter-House Cases, the Cale court observed that "the Congress and Supreme Court of the time were in agreement that affirmative relief under the amendment should come from Congress." Cale, 586 F.2d at 316. The Cale court added that it's only when state laws or proceedings are asserted "in hostility to rights and privileges" that the Fourteenth Amendment, and specifically Section One, may be raised as a self-executing defense to those laws or proceedings. Id. (discussing the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. at 46 (Harlan, J., dissenting)); see also The Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. at 81 (explaining that when "it is a State that is to be dealt with, and not alone the validity of its laws," the matter should be left in the hands of Congress).

¶305 The defensive-offensive dynamic of the Fourteenth Amendment is best exemplified by the interplay between 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908). See Cale, 586 F.2d at 316–17. In Ex parte Young, multiple railroad companies wielded the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause as a shield to request enjoinment of the future enforcement of Minnesota's mandatory railroad rates. 209 U.S. at 130. The Court ruled in their favor, holding that they could prospectively bring suit against a state official to prevent the enforcement of an act that violated the federal constitution. Id. at 167. But an Ex parte Young claim is not so much an affirmative cause of action as it is a defense that may be asserted in anticipation of the enforcement of state laws alleged to be unconstitutional. See Mich. Corr. Org. v. Mich. Dep't of Corr., 774 F.3d 895, 906 (6th Cir. 2014). Hence, Ex parte Young provides a means of vindicating Fourteenth Amendment rights without violating the grant of exclusive enforcement power to Congress. When a party wishes to assert its Fourteenth Amendment rights offensively, however, it must bring a cause of action under legislation enacted by Congress, such as section 1983.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶306 Between affirmative relief provided by Congress and defensive Ex parte Young claims, constitutional rights are "protected in all instances." Cale, 586 F.2d at 316–17. Not surprisingly, after declining to find an implied cause of action permitting affirmative relief within the Fourteenth Amendment, the Fourth Circuit in Cale remanded to the district court with instructions to determine whether the plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim could be brought under section 1983, the proper enforcement mechanism. Id. at 312.

¶307 The majority devotes all of one sentence to Cale and disregards most of the Supreme Court jurisprudence to which that thoughtful opinion is moored. Maj. op. at ¶ 103. It is true that Cale was a Section One, not a Section Three, case. But Cale cited to Griffin's Case (a Section Three case) in determining that the Fourteenth Amendment cannot be used as a self-executing sword, thus tethering the distinction to both Sections. Cale, 586 F.2d at 316. Accordingly, while courts have seldom had occasion to interpret Section Three, the case law on Section One is instructive on the issue of self-execution.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶308 Critically, the Supreme Court has affirmed that the Fourteenth Amendment, while offering protection under certain circumstances, does not provide a self-executing cause of action. Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U.S. 94, 112 (1921) ("[I]t cannot rightly be said that the Fourteenth Amendment furnishes a universal and self-executing remedy. Its function is negative, [n]ot affirmative, and it carries no mandate for particular measures of reform."). Moreover, as pertinent here, the Supreme Court has retreated from recognizing implied causes of action, instead holding that for a cause of action to exist, Congress must expressly authorize it. Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 276 (2001) (refusing to recognize a private right of action because, "[l]ike substantive federal law itself, private rights of action to enforce federal law must be created by Congress").

¶309 The majority nevertheless protests that interpreting any section of the Fourteenth Amendment as requiring legislation yields absurd results because the rest of the Reconstruction Amendments are self-executing. Maj. op. ¶ 96. I do not dispute that the Thirteenth and Fifteenth Amendments are self-executing. But I disagree that Section Three must therefore be deemed self-executing as well. The Thirteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, on the one hand, and the Fourteenth Amendment, on the other, are different.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶310 The Thirteenth and Fifteenth Amendments speak in affirmative, universal terms to abolish slavery, create the right to vote, and restrain not only government actors, but also private individuals. See George Rutherglen, State Action, Private Action, and the Thirteenth Amendment, 94 Va. L. Rev. 1367, 1367 (2008); Guinn v. United States, 238 U.S. 347, 363 (1915) (recognizing "the right of suffrage" created by the Fifteenth Amendment's "generic character"). The Fourteenth Amendment, however, was born out of a deep suspicion of the states and acts as a negative policing mechanism intended solely to curtail state power. Adarand, 515 U.S. at 255 (Stevens, J. dissenting) ("The Fourteenth Amendment directly empowers Congress at the same time it expressly limits the States."); The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. at 11 (holding that the Fourteenth Amendment applies to state action, not private action). This curtailment applies both to state laws or actions abridging rights and to a state's selection of government officials. To give effect to this amendment while respecting our federalist system, courts have turned to the sword-shield paradigm of self-execution, thereby striking "a balance between delegated federal power and reserved state power" without forsaking the protection of constitutional rights "in all instances." Michigan Corr. Org., 774 F.3d at 900; Cale, 586 F.2d at 317.

¶311 To draw a yet deeper line in the sand, unlike the Thirteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, Section Three does not indelibly ensure a right but instead allows the federal government to act as a protective check against a state's selection of government officials so as to preclude elected insurrectionists and safeguard democracy. This shift in power between the authority of the states to choose their own government officials and the authority of the federal government as a last defense is all the more reason to require a congressionally created cause of action to direct the execution of this federal oversight.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶312 In sum, Chief Justice Chase's holding in Griffin's Case appears consistent and in alignment with both his alleged vote in Case of Davis and our framework for Fourteenth Amendment litigation. Griffin wielded Section Three as a self-executing sword, invoking the provision as a cause of action to disqualify Judge Sheffey. Davis, on the other hand, took a defensive posture and invoked Section Three as a self-executing shield, arguing that it provided the exclusive punishment for insurrection, thus displacing the federal criminal treason charges brought against him.

¶313 Having said that, I do not rely solely on Griffin's Case. Congress's own actions corroborate my understanding of Section Three.

D. Erstwhile Enabling Legislation

¶314 The majority's ruling that Section Three self-executes without the need for any federal enforcement legislation is further undermined by Congress's promulgation of just such legislation. One year after Griffin's Case was decided, and perhaps in response to it, Congress enacted the Enforcement Act of 1870. The Enforcement Act contained two provisions for the specific purpose of enforcing Section Three. Enforcement Act of 1870, ch. 114, 16 Stat. 140, 143–44. The first provided a quo warranto mechanism whereby a federal district attorney could bring a civil suit in federal court to remove from office a person who was disqualified by Section Three. Id. at 143. The second permitted a criminal prosecution for knowingly accepting or holding office in violation of Section Three, and included punishment by imprisonment of not more than a year, a fine of not more than $1,000, or both. Id. at 143–44.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶315 The enforcement purpose behind the Act was evident in the congressional debates held on these very two provisions. Speaking in support of their adoption, Senator Lyman Trumbull, referring to Section Three, stated, "But notwithstanding that constitutional provision we know that hundreds of men are holding office who are disqualified by the Constitution. The Constitution provides no means for enforcing itself, and this is merely a bill to give effect to the fundamental law embraced in the Constitution." Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess. 626 (1869) (emphasis added). He later reiterated this point as he explained that "[s]ome statute is certainly necessary to enforce the constitutional provision." Id. The debate on the floor focused not on whether the provisions were necessary for enforcing Section Three—that seemed to be a foregone conclusion—but instead on whether the second provision and its attendant punishments were necessary. The need for the first provision was so self-evident that it was not even debated. As Senator Garrett Davis put it, the first provision simply provided an "adequate remedy to prevent any of the criminals under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution from holding office in defiance of its letter." Id. at 627.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶316 While the quo warranto provision in the Enforcement Act would have provided a civil cause of action to challenge President Trump's eligibility to appear on Colorado's presidential primary ballot, Congress repealed it in 1948. See Myles S. Lynch, Disloyalty & Disqualification: Reconstructing Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 30 Wm. & Mary Bill Rts. J. 153, 206 n.365 (2021) (citing Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 646, § 39, 62 Stat. 869, 993); see also Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 645, § 2383, 62 Stat. 683, 808. The Enforcement Act's criminal provision, however, appears to have survived: As best I can tell, 18 U.S.C. § 2383 is its descendant. Id.

¶317 Presumably recognizing the civil-action gap created by the 1948 repeal, just months after the January 6, 2021 incident, legislation was proposed to allow the Attorney General of the United States to bring a civil action "against any Officeholder who engages in insurrection or rebellion, including any Officeholder who, after becoming an Officeholder, engaged in insurrection or rebellion." H.R. 1405, 117th Cong. (2021). H.R. 1405 would have disqualified such an Officeholder from federal or state office. Id. Furthermore, it would have provided what has been so apparently lacking from this state proceeding—clear designations of the appropriate procedures, forum, and standard of evidence, as well as the definition of "insurrection or rebellion." Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶318 H.R. 1405 made it no further than introduction in the House. But the relevant point for our purposes remains: As recently as 2021, just months after the January 6 incident, Congress considered legislation to enforce Section Three through a civil proceeding. Why would Congress do so if, as the majority insists, Section Three is self-executing? Along the same lines, if the majority is correct that Section Three is self-executing, why did Congress pass the Enforcement Act to begin with (on the heels of Griffin's Case) and then allow it to remain in effect in its entirety until 1948? The majority offers no salient explanation.

¶319 If there is any enforcing legislation for Section Three currently on the books, it is arguably what remains from the Enforcement Act, 18 U.S.C. § 2383. Similar to its ancestor, that statute states that:

> Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

While section 2383 might provide an enforcement mechanism for Section Three, it is not presently before us. That's because President Trump has never been charged with, let alone convicted of, violating it. The instant litigation feels to me like an end run around section 2383.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶320 To the extent there is interest in seeking to disqualify President Trump from holding public office (one of the mandatory punishments provided in section 2383) based on the allegation that he engaged in insurrection (one of the acts prohibited by section 2383), why wasn't he charged under section 2383? And, relatedly, why isn't he entitled to more due process than that which he received in this constricted Election Code proceeding? To be sure, unlike section 2383, Section Three prescribes neither a fine nor a term of imprisonment as a consequence for engaging in an insurrection after taking the prerequisite oath. So, I'm not suggesting that President Trump should have been afforded all the rights to which a defendant would be entitled in a criminal case. But here, the district court found that he engaged in insurrection after taking the prerequisite oath, despite affording him subpar due process (even under civil-procedure standards).

¶321 Compellingly, although H.R. 1405 wouldn't have called for a criminal proceeding, it would have provided more due process than that available in a civil action. For example, H.R. 1405 would have required any action brought to be "heard and determined by a district court of three judges." H.R. 1405, § 1(d)(1). Additionally, any allegation of insurrection would have demanded proof by clear and convincing evidence, and any final order or injunction would have been reviewable by appeal directly to the U.S. Supreme Court. Id. at § (1)(d)(1)–(4). I infer from these provisions that at least some members of Congress acknowledged the need to provide ample due process (more than is available in typical civil cases) to anyone alleged to have violated Section Three.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶322 My colleagues in the majority necessarily view as acceptable the diminished due process afforded President Trump as a result of enforcing Section Three through our Election Code. Instead, they prioritize their fear that a ruling disallowing the disqualification of President Trump from the primary ballot pursuant to Section Three would mean that "Colorado could not exclude from the ballot even candidates who plainly do not satisfy the age, residency, and citizenship requirements of the Presidential Qualifications Clause of Article II." Maj. op. ¶ 68. They see this as a more insidious evil. As I discuss in the following section, however, my colleagues are mistaken in their understanding of the law, and their worry is therefore unjustified.

E. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment Is Unlike Other Constitutional Qualification Clauses

¶323 The U.S. Supreme Court has acknowledged a non-exhaustive list of constitutional Qualification Clauses. See U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 787 n.2 (1995) (quoting Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 520 n.41 (1969), which lists "qualifications" codified in the following provisions of the U.S. Constitution: (1) Art. I, § 2, cl. 2; (2) Art. I, § 3, cl. 7; (3) Art. I, § 6, cl. 2; (4) Art. IV,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

§ 4; (5) Art. VI, cl. 3; and (6) Amend. XIV, § 3). This list can fairly be expanded to include Article II, Section One, Clause Five, and perhaps also Section One of the Twenty-Second Amendment. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5 (laying out three presidential eligibility requirements related to birth ("natural born Citizen"), age ("thirty five Years"), and residency ("fourteen Years a Resident"), which are similar to those specified in Art. I, § 2, cl. 2); U.S. Const. amend. XXII, § 1 (using the same "No person shall" language found in Art. I, § 2, cl. 2 and specifying a two-term limit for the presidency).

¶324 Although Section Three was included in Powell among the so-called Qualification Clauses, closer scrutiny reveals that it is unique and deserving of different treatment. That's because Section Three is the only one that is "qualifie[d]" by the following language: "[C]ongress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26 (emphasis added) (quoting U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 5 and stating that "[t]he fifth section qualifies the third"). None of the other Qualification Clauses—even when viewed in the context of the original Articles in toto—contains the "appropriate legislation" modifier. Indeed, that modifier only appears in certain other Amendments, none of which are objectively relevant to the instant matter. I need not contemplate what bearing, if any, this has on the self-executing nature of constitutional provisions more generally. While that might be an open question, see Blackman & Tillman, supra (manuscript at 23) (noting that there appears to be "no deep well of consensus that constitutional provisions are automatically self-executing or even presumptively self-executing"), the demands of the instant matter counsel in favor of limiting my exposition to the Constitution's presidential qualifications, especially those found in Article II, Section One, Clause Five.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶325 Here, once again, the interplay between Sections Three and Five of the Fourteenth Amendment is of great significance. See Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26. As mentioned, Article II, Section One, Clause Five contains nothing akin to the "appropriate legislation" language in Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, unlike Section Three's disqualification clause, which is modified by Section Five's "appropriate legislation" language, the Article II presidential qualifications do not appear to have a constitutionally mandated reliance on congressional enabling legislation.

¶326 We are not at liberty to ignore this blistering lacuna in Article II's language. But that is exactly what my colleagues in the majority do. And in so doing, they err. Even if the presidential qualifications contained in Article II are self-executing or allow for state enabling legislation — thereby providing the Electors with a cause of action to enjoin the Secretary of State ("the Secretary") from certifying a candidate disqualified by birth, age, or residency, to the Colorado presidential primary ballot, see, e.g., Hassan v. Colorado, 870 F. Supp. 2d 1192, 1194–95 (D. Colo.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2012), aff'd, 495 F. App'x 947 (10th Cir. 2012); see also § 1-4-1203(2)(a), C.R.S. (2023)—the same does not hold true for Section Three's disqualification clause.

¶327 Moreover, I detect a principled reason underlying this discrepancy in the language of Article II and Section Three. It relates to what I previously identified as my third takeaway from Griffin's Case. Recall that the Fourteenth Amendment's grant of absolute power to Congress vis-à-vis Section Three's enforcement was pragmatic, not merely formalistic. It was motivated by the complex nature of the disqualification function. Chief Justice Chase presciently observed that to "ascertain what particular individuals are embraced" by Section Three's disqualifying function, and to "ensure effective results" in a disqualification case, considerable "proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions . . . are indispensable." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26. In my view, the unwieldy experience of the instant litigation proves beyond any doubt the foresight of Chief Justice Chase's pronouncements. It doesn't require much process, procedure, or legal acumen to determine whether a candidate is barred by the binary and clerical requirements of birth, age, residency, and term limits. Typically, a notarized statement of intent will do the trick. See § 1-4-1204(1)(c), C.R.S. (2023). By contrast, Section Three disqualification necessarily requires substantial procedural and normative mechanisms to ensure a fair and constitutionally compliant outcome. These include, to name but a few, instruction on discovery and evidentiary rules; guidance as to whether a jury must be empaneled or a bench trial will suffice; direction as to the proper standards of review and burdens of proof; and clarification about whether civil or criminal proceedings are contemplated. Additionally, there's a vital need for definitional counsel on such questions as who is an "officer of the United States"? What is an "insurrection"? What does it mean to "engage[] in" the same? Does "incitement" count?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶328 By no means do I intend to undermine the sacred role of the judiciary in directing the course of similar issues through precedential pathways. Nor would I have the third branch hamstrung in its task of setting the metes and bounds of litigation practice. But when the enforcement power of a punitive constitutional mandate is delegated to Congress in such unequivocal terms, it would appear decidedly outside the judicial bailiwick to furnish the scaffolding that only "appropriate legislation" can supply. Because the Constitution gives this job to Congress, and only Congress, I consider it equally improper—indeed, constitutionally impossible—for state legislatures, in the absence of federal legislation, to create pseudo causes of action pursuant to Section Three's disqualification clause. This is precisely what the framers sought to prevent.

¶329 For this reason, the cases cited by the district court for the proposition that "states can, and have, applied Section [Three] pursuant to state statute without federal legislation" do not alter my analysis. See Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 200

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(1869), appeal dismissed sub no. Worthy v. Comm'rs, 76 U.S. 611 (1869); In re Tate, 63 N.C. 308, 309 (1869); State ex rel. Sandlin v. Watkins, 21 La. Ann. 631, 631–34 (La. 1869); State v. Griffin, No. D-101-CV-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619, at *15–22 (N.M. Dist. Sept. 6, 2022); Rowan v. Greene, No. 2222582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot, 1 (Ga. Off. Admin. Hearings May 6, 2022). To the extent other state courts have concluded that their own state statutes allow them to adjudicate Section Three claims, I respectfully submit that they are flat out wrong. Unfortunately, the majority joins company with these misguided decisions and holds that our General Assembly not only can, but has, empowered Colorado's state courts to adjudicate Section Three claims via our Election Code.[8] Maj. op. ¶ 88 n.11. I turn next to why Colorado's Election Code cannot rescue the majority.

F. Colorado's Election Code Cannot Supply What Congress Has Withheld

¶330 There is zero authority permitting state legislatures to do that which, though delegated to it, Congress has declined to do. The majority, however, holds that the Electors' Fourteenth Amendment claim can be brought under sections 1-1-113

[8] Interestingly, the majority does not explain what should happen moving forward if nobody challenges a candidate whom the Secretary believes previously engaged in insurrection after taking the prerequisite oath. Without the state courts' involvement, is the Secretary supposed to decide on her own whether the candidate is disqualified from public office by Section Three? And if so, how would the Secretary go about doing that? Would the majority expect her to act as investigator, prosecutor, and adjudicator in that type of situation?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and 1-4-1204(4), C.R.S. (2023), of the Colorado Election Code because the Secretary's listing of a constitutionally disqualified candidate on the presidential primary ballot would be a "wrongful act," as that term is used in section 1-1-113. See § 1-1-113(1). Maj. op. ¶¶ 4–5. But the truncated procedures and limited due process provided by sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4) are wholly insufficient to address the constitutional issues currently at play.

¶331 Section 1-1-113(1) provides that "when any eligible elector files a verified petition . . . alleging that a person charged with a duty under this code has committed or is about to commit a breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act, . . . upon a finding of good cause, the district court shall issue an order requiring substantial compliance with the provisions of this code." (Emphases added.) Section 1-4-1204(4) outlines the procedures to be followed when a section 1-1-113 challenge concerns the listing of a candidate on the presidential primary ballot. It provides that the challenge "must be made in writing and filed with the district court . . . no later than five days after the filing deadline for candidates." § 1-4-1204(4). The written challenge "must provide notice in a summary manner of an alleged impropriety that gives rise to the complaint." Id. Once the challenge is filed, the district court must hold a hearing within five days. Id. At that hearing, the district court must "hear the challenge and assess the validity of all alleged improprieties." Id. The filing party has the burden of sustaining the challenge by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. After the hearing, the district court must issue its findings of fact and conclusions of law within forty-eight hours. Id. An appeal from the district court's ruling must be brought before this court within three days of the district court's order, and this court has discretion to accept or decline jurisdiction over the case. § 1-4-1204(4); § 1-1-113(3).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶332 As these statutory provisions make clear, a section 1-1-113 challenge to the certification of a candidate to the presidential primary ballot is meant to be handled on an expedited basis. See Frazier v. Williams, 2017 CO 85, ¶ 11, 401 P.3d 541, 544 ("[S]ection 1-1-113 is a summary proceeding designed to quickly resolve challenges brought by electors, candidates, and other designated plaintiffs against state election officials prior to election day."). Indeed, "such proceedings generally move at a breakneck pace." Id. It's unsurprising, then, that this court has previously limited the types of claims that can be brought under section 1-1-113 to those "alleging a breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act under the Colorado Election Code." Id. at ¶ 10, 401 P.3d at 543 (emphasis added).

¶333 Because section 1-1-113 constitutes a modest grant of power, until today, this court has expressly declined to use that section's reference to "other wrongful act[s]" to expand its scope to include constitutional claims and other claims that do not arise specifically under the Election Code. Id. at ¶ 14, 401 P.3d at 544. The "accelerated" nature of a section 1-1-113 proceeding and the limited remedy available in such a proceeding (i.e., an order requiring "substantial compliance with the provisions of [the Election Code]") render the statute incompatible with complex constitutional claims such as the one involved here. See id. at ¶¶ 16–18, 401 P.3d at 544–45.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶334 An examination of the proceedings below highlights why a section 1-1-113 proceeding is a mismatch for a constitutional claim rooted in Section Three. The Electors filed their verified petition on September 6, 2023. The verified petition, far from being a "summary" notice of the alleged impropriety, see § 1-4-1204(4), was 105 pages in length. The district court did not hold a hearing within five days as required by section 1-4-1204(4). In fact, the court didn't hold its first status conference until September 18, twelve days after the verified petition was filed.[9] During that status conference, the court set deadlines for initial briefing. The district court gave the parties just four days, or until September 22, to file initial motions to dismiss with briefing on those motions to be completed by October 6. Cf. C.R.C.P. 12(b) (allowing twenty-one days from service of the complaint in a civil case to file motions to dismiss). The court also scheduled a five-day hearing to begin on October 30, or roughly eight weeks after the verified petition was filed.

[9] I recognize that the case was removed to federal court on September 7, the day after it was filed. But the federal court returned the case to the state court on September 12, six days before the first status conference was held.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

That's fifty-four days, which is nearly ten times the amount of time permitted by the Election Code. See § 1-4-1204(4) ("No later than five days after the challenge is filed, a hearing must be held . . . .").

¶335 At the next status conference, on September 22, the court set more deadlines, this time related to exhibit lists, expert disclosures, and proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. With respect to expert disclosures, the court ordered the Electors to provide expert reports by October 6, or twenty-four days before the hearing. Cf. C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2)(C)(I) (providing that in a civil case the claiming party's expert disclosures are typically due "at least 126 days (18 weeks) before the trial date"). It ordered President Trump to provide his expert reports no later than October 27, three days before the hearing was to begin. Cf. C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2)(C)(II) (stating that a defending party in a civil case is generally not required to provide expert reports "until 98 days (14 weeks) before the trial date"). And even though it was apparent from very early on in these proceedings that the Electors would rely heavily on expert testimony regarding both legal and factual matters to attempt to prove their challenge, the district court did not allow experts to be deposed. Cf. C.R.C.P. 26(b)(4)(A) (setting forth the default rule on the deposition of experts in civil cases: "A party may depose any person who has been identified as an expert disclosed pursuant to subsection 26(a)(2) of this Rule whose opinions may be presented at trial."). Instead, the court ordered that expert reports must be "fulsome" and that experts would not be allowed to testify to anything outside their reports.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶336 As planned, the hearing began on October 30 and concluded on November 3. The district court gave each side eighteen hours to present its case. The parties presented closing arguments on November 15, and the court issued its final order on November 17, two weeks after the hearing concluded and seventy-two days after the verified petition was filed.

¶337 This was a severe aberration from the deadlines set forth in the Election Code, see § 1-4-1204(4), which require a district court to issue its ruling no more than forty-eight hours after the hearing and roughly a week after the verified petition is filed. Despite this clear record, my colleagues in the majority curiously conclude that the district court "substantially compl[ied]" with all the statutory deadlines. Maj. op. ¶ 85. That's simply inaccurate (unless the majority views complete failure as substantial compliance). The majority's reading of the record, while creative, doesn't hold water.

¶338 Given the complexity of the legal and factual issues presented in this case, it's understandable why the district court may have felt that adhering to the deadlines in section 1-4-1204(4) wouldn't allow the parties to adequately litigate the issues. But the district court didn't have the discretion to ignore those statutory deadlines. Section 1-4-1204(4) states that "a hearing must be held" no later than five days after a challenge is filed and that the district court "shall issue findings of fact and conclusions of law no later than forty-eight hours after the hearing." See Waddell v. People, 2020 CO 39, ¶ 16, 462 P.3d 1100, 1106 ("[T]he 'use of the word "shall" in a statute generally indicates [the legislature's] intent for the term to be mandatory.'" (alteration in original) (quoting People v. Hyde, 2017 CO 24, ¶ 28, 393 P.3d 962, 969)); Ryan Ranch Cmty. Ass'n v. Kelley, 2016 CO 65, ¶ 42, 380 P.3d 137, 146 (noting that "shall" and "must" both "connote[] a mandatory requirement").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶339 Rather than recognize that the Section Three challenge brought by the Electors was a square constitutional peg that could not be jammed into our Election Code's round hole, the district court forged ahead and improvised as it went along, changing the statutory deadlines on the fly as if they were mere suggestions. If, as the majority liberally proclaims, sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4) provide such a "robust vehicle" for handling the constitutional claim brought here, Maj. op. ¶ 86, why didn't the district court just drive it? Why, instead, did the district court feel compelled to rebuild such a "robust vehicle" by modifying the procedural provisions of the Election Code? I submit that, in reality, while sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4) are plenty adequate to handle ordinary challenges arising under the Election Code, they did not measure up to the task of addressing the Electors' Section Three claim. The result was a proceeding that was neither the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"summary proceeding" envisioned by section 1-1-113 nor a full-blown trial; rather, it was a procedural Frankenstein created by stitching together fragments from sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4) and remnants of traditional civil trial practice.

¶340 Even with the unauthorized statutory alterations made by the district court, the aggressive deadlines and procedures used nevertheless stripped the proceedings of many basic protections that normally accompany a civil trial, never mind a criminal trial. There was no basic discovery, no ability to subpoena documents and compel witnesses, no workable timeframes to adequately investigate and develop defenses, and no final resolution of many legal issues affecting the court's power to decide the Electors' claim before the hearing on the merits.

¶341 There was no fair trial either: President Trump was not offered the opportunity to request a jury of his peers; experts opined about some of the facts surrounding the January 6 incident and theorized about the law, including as it relates to the interpretation and application of the Fourteenth Amendment generally and Section Three specifically; and the court received and considered a partial congressional report, the admissibility of which is not beyond reproach.

¶342 I have been involved in the justice system for thirty-three years now, and what took place here doesn't resemble anything I've seen in a courtroom. In my experience, in our adversarial system of justice, parties are always allowed to conduct discovery, subpoena documents and compel witnesses, and adequately prepare for trial, and experts are never permitted to usurp the role of the judge by opining on how the law should be interpreted and applied.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶343 The majority tries to excuse the due process shortcomings I have discussed by noting that section 1-1-113 proceedings "move quickly out of necessity" because "[l]ooming elections trigger a cascade of deadlines . . . that cannot accommodate protracted litigation schedules, particularly when the dispute concerns a candidate's access to the ballot." Maj. op. ¶ 81. But that's exactly my point. The necessarily expedited nature of section 1-1-113 proceedings is precisely why the Electors should not have been allowed to piggyback a Section Three claim—an admittedly complex constitutional claim—on their Election Code claim in the first place. In any event, the majority's acknowledgement that section 1-1-113 proceedings "cannot accommodate protracted litigation" seems to directly contradict its determination that the Election Code endowed the district court with the "flexibility" to adequately accommodate the needs of this complex litigation. Id. at ¶¶ 81, 85.[10] The majority can't have its cake and eat it too.

---

[10] Even if the majority were correct about the district court's "flexibility" to accommodate a constitutional claim, the "limit[ed] appellate review" available under the letter of section 1-1-113 further demonstrates why the Election Code is not an appropriate avenue for the prosecution of a Section Three claim. Frazier, ¶ 18, 401 P.3d at 545. This court has the sole discretion to review section 1-1-113 proceedings, § 1-1-113(3); § 1-4-1204(4), so, whenever we decline such review, "the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶344 The irregularity of these proceedings is particularly troubling given the stakes. The Electors ask us to hold that President Trump engaged in insurrection and is thus disqualified from being placed on the ballot for this upcoming presidential primary.[11]

¶345 Today's decision will have sweeping consequences beyond just this election. The majority's ruling that President Trump is disqualified under Section Three means that he can never again run for a Senate or House of Representatives position, or become an elector, or hold any office (civil or military) under the United States or under any state. In other words, he will be barred from holding any public office, state or federal, for the rest of time. His only possible out is if Congress at some point decides to remove the disqualification through a two-thirds vote by each House (which is no small feat). "A declaration that a person is permanently barred from any future public office raises constitutional issues that simple removal from office does not . . . . The serious nature of any such holding decision of the district court shall be final and not subject to further appellate review," Frazier, ¶ 18, 401 P.3d at 545 (quoting § 1-1-113(3)). Imagine, then, if we had declined to review the instant matter. Alarmingly, the adjudication of federal constitutional provisions, disqualifying President Trump from office, would have met its road's end in state district court. How can this court give its imprimatur to such an inverted conception of the supremacy doctrine? I, for one, cannot.

---

[11] This same ask has been made of other courts based on their state election codes. See, e.g., Trump v. Benson, No. 23-00151-MZ (Mich. Ct. Cl. Nov. 14, 2023); Growe v. Simon, 997 N.W.2d 81 (Minn. 2023). Ours is the first to take the bait.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

demands that the rules of procedural due process be complied with strictly." Bohannan v. Arizona ex rel Smith, 389 U.S. 1, 4 (1967) (Douglas, J., dissenting).

¶346 There was no strict compliance with procedural due process here. How is this result fair? And how can we expect Coloradans to embrace this outcome as fair?

¶347 I cannot agree with the majority that the chimeric proceedings below gave President Trump process commensurate to the interest of which he has been deprived. Nor did the proceedings below protect the interest Coloradans have in voting for a candidate of their choosing. Of course, if President Trump committed a heinous act worthy of disqualification, he should be disqualified for the sake of protecting our hallowed democratic system, regardless of whether citizens may wish to vote for him in Colorado. But such a determination must follow the appropriate procedural avenues. Absent adequate due process, it is improper for our state to bar him from holding public office.

¶348 More broadly, I am disturbed about the potential chaos wrought by an imprudent, unconstitutional, and standardless system in which each state gets to adjudicate Section Three disqualification cases on an ad hoc basis. Surely, this enlargement of state power is antithetical to the framers' intent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Conclusion

¶349 In the first American Declaration of Rights in 1776, George Mason wrote that "no free government, nor the blessings of liberty, can be preserved to any people, but by . . . the recognition by all citizens that they have . . . rights, and that such rights cannot be enjoyed save in a society where law is respected and due process is observed." Va. Const. art. I, § 15. Some two and a half centuries later, those words still ring true. In 2023, just as in 1776, all, including those people who may have committed horrendous acts, are entitled to procedural due process.

¶350 Because I cannot in good conscience join my colleagues in the majority in ruling that Section Three is self-executing and that the expedited procedures in our Election Code afforded President Trump adequate due process of law, I respectfully dissent. Given the current absence of federal legislation to enforce Section Three, and given that President Trump has not been charged pursuant to section 2383, the district court should have granted his September 29 motion to dismiss. It erred in not doing so. I would therefore affirm its judgment on other grounds.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

JUSTICE BERKENKOTTER dissenting.

¶351 Today, the majority holds that former President Donald J. Trump ("President Trump") cannot be certified to Colorado's presidential primary ballot. Maj. op. ¶ 5. He is, the majority concludes, disqualified from being President of the United States again because he, as an officer of the United States, took an oath to support the Constitution and thereafter engaged in insurrection. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3[1]; Maj. op. ¶¶ 4–5. In reaching this conclusion, the majority determines as an initial matter that a group of Colorado Republican and unaffiliated electors eligible to vote in the Republican presidential primary ("the Electors") asserted a proper claim for relief under Colorado's Election Code ("Election Code"). See §§ 1-1-101 to 1-13-804, C.R.S. (2023); Maj. op. ¶ 57.

---

[1] Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is a Civil War era amendment to the United States Constitution that was ratified in 1868. Its aim was to prohibit loyalists to the confederacy who had taken an oath to support the Constitution from taking various state and federal offices. It provides:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶352 I write separately to dissent because I disagree with the majority's initial conclusion that the Election Code—as currently written—authorizes Colorado courts to decide whether a presidential primary candidate is disqualified under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution ("Section Three") from being listed on Colorado's presidential primary ballot. Maj. op. ¶¶ 62–63, 66. In my view, the majority construes the court's authority too broadly. Its approach overlooks some of part 12 of the Election Code's plain language and is at odds with the historical application of section 1-1-113, C.R.S. (2023), which up until now has been limited to challenges involving relatively straightforward issues, like whether a candidate meets a residency requirement for a school board election. Plus, the majority's approach seems to have no discernible limits.

¶353 To explain why the majority—to my mind—is wrong, first, I explain the process for challenging the listing of a candidate on the presidential primary ballot in Colorado and describe sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4), C.R.S. (2023), since those sections of the Election Code define the scope of the district court's authority to hear the case below. Then, I lay out the procedural history of this case. After that, I turn to the question of whether the district court erred in interpreting these two statutes and consider the majority's analysis with respect to each. In doing so, I conclude that the General Assembly has not granted courts the authority the district court exercised in this case and that the court, accordingly, erred in denying President Trump's motion to dismiss.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. The Process for Challenging the Listing of a Candidate on the Presidential Primary Ballot in Colorado

¶354 Part 12 of the Election Code charges Jena Griswold, in her official capacity as Colorado's Secretary of State ("the Secretary"), with certifying the names and party affiliations of the candidates to be placed on presidential primary ballots no later than sixty days before the presidential primary election. See § 1-4-1204(1). Section 1-4-1204(4) details the process through which an eligible petitioner can challenge a candidate's listing on the presidential primary ballot. It states:

> Any challenge to the listing of any candidate on the presidential primary election ballot must be made in writing and filed with the district court in accordance with section 1-1-113(1) no later than five days after the filing deadline for candidates. Any such challenge must provide notice in a summary manner of an alleged impropriety that gives rise to the complaint. No later than five days after the challenge is filed, a hearing must be held at which time the district court shall hear the challenge and assess the validity of all alleged improprieties. The district court shall issue findings of fact and conclusions of law no later than forty-eight hours after the hearing. The party filing the challenge has the burden to sustain the challenge by a preponderance of the evidence. Any order entered by the district court may be reviewed in accordance with section 1-1-113(3).

§ 1-4-1204(4).

¶355 Section 1-1-113 is Colorado's fast-track procedural process under the Election Code that allows candidates; political parties; individuals who have made nominations; and, as pertinent here, eligible electors to file section 1-4-1204(4) and other challenges in court, alleging that the Secretary or one of Colorado's sixty-four county clerks and recorders has committed or is about to commit a breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act. It provides:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> When any controversy arises between any official charged with any duty or function under this code and any candidate, or any officers or representatives of a political party, or any persons who have made nominations or when any eligible elector files a verified petition in a district court of competent jurisdiction alleging that a person charged with a duty under this code has committed or is about to commit a breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act, after notice to the official which includes an opportunity to be heard, upon a finding of good cause, the district court shall issue an order requiring substantial compliance with the provisions of this code. The order shall require the person charged to forthwith perform the duty or to desist from the wrongful act or to forthwith show cause why the order should not be obeyed. The burden of proof is on the petitioner.

§ 1-1-113(1) (emphasis added).

II. Procedural History

A. The Electors' Petition

¶356 On September 6, 2023, the Electors sued the Secretary under sections 1-1-113 and 1-4-1204(4) of the Election Code, alleging that the Secretary certifying President Trump to the primary ballot would constitute an "impropriety" under section 1-4-1204(4), and thus a "breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act" under section 1-1-113(1) because Section Three—which disqualifies insurrectionists from holding office—prohibits him from being listed. The Secretary's "breach or neglect of duty or other wrongful act," the Electors argued, authorized the district court to "issue an order requiring" the Secretary to "substantial[ly] compl[y]" with the Election Code by not certifying President Trump to the ballot. See § 1-1-113(1).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. The Parties' Arguments in the District Court

¶357 Before trial, President Trump moved to dismiss the Electors' complaint. He argued that the court's authority to determine a claim under section 1-4-1204(4) is limited to the three criteria explicitly identified in section 1-4-1204(1)(b) and (c), which provide that the only candidates whose names shall be placed on the ballots for election are those who:

> (b) Are seeking the nomination for president of a political party as a bona fide candidate for president of the United States pursuant to political party rules and are affiliated with a major political party that received at least twenty percent of the votes cast by eligible electors in Colorado at the last presidential election; and
>
> (c) Have submitted to the secretary, not later than eighty-five days before the date of the presidential primary election, a notarized candidate's statement of intent together with either a nonrefundable filing fee of five hundred dollars or a petition signed by at least five thousand eligible electors affiliated with the candidate's political party who reside in the state. Candidate petitions must meet the requirements of parts 8 and 9 of this article 4, as applicable.

¶358 President Trump acknowledged that the Secretary's "Major Candidates Statement of Intent" form requires a candidate to affirm that they meet the three qualifications set forth in Article II of the U.S. Constitution,[2] but emphasized that the form says nothing about Section Three. Thus, he urged the court to adopt a very narrow reading of section 1-4-1204(4): So long as a party candidate (1) is a bona fide presidential candidate; (2) timely submits a notarized statement of intent affirming that they meet the three Article II qualifications; and (3) pays the $500 fee, the Secretary must certify the candidate to the presidential primary ballot, thus fulfilling her duty under the Election Code.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶359 Challenges based on anything other than those three criteria, including but not limited to a Section Three challenge, President Trump asserted in his motion, fall outside the court's authority to decide and fail to state a proper claim for relief under sections 1-4-1204(4) and 1-1-113. Any such claim, he posited, must be dismissed.

¶360 The Electors countered in their response to the motion to dismiss that section 1-4-1204(4) must be read in conjunction with the other provisions of the Election Code, including, specifically, section 1-4-1201, C.R.S. (2023), which states

---

[2] Article II, Section 1, Clause 5 of the U.S. Constitution states:

> No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that "it is the intent of the People of the State of Colorado that the provisions of this part 12 conform to the requirements of federal law and national political party rules governing presidential primary elections . . . ." § 1-4-1201 (emphasis added).

¶361 The Electors also pointed to section 1-4-1203(2)(a), C.R.S. (2023), which states:

> Except as provided for in subsection (5) of this section, each political party that has a qualified candidate entitled to participate in the presidential primary election pursuant to this section is entitled to participate in the Colorado presidential primary election. At the presidential primary election, an elector that is affiliated with a political party may vote only for a candidate of that political party.

(Emphasis added.) And they leaned on section 1-4-1203(3), which provides, in part, that the Secretary and county clerk and recorders have "the same powers and shall perform the same duties for presidential primary elections as they provide by law for other primary elections and general elections." Based on this section, they argued that, in all "other primary elections and general elections," only candidates who meet all the qualifications to hold office may access the ballot. Finally, the Electors emphasized the text of section 1-4-1204(4), which allows for "[a]ny challenge to the listing of any candidate" and directs the district court to assess the validity of "all alleged improprieties." (Emphases added.) In the Electors' view, part 12 of the Election Code, when read as a whole, necessarily encompasses challenges under Section Three.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. The District Court's Final Order

¶362 In its final order, the district court rejected President Trump's argument in his motion to dismiss that the Electors failed to state a proper claim under sections 1-4-1204(4) and 1-1-113. Anderson v. Griswold, No. 23CV32577, ¶ 224 (Dist. Ct., City & Cnty. of Denver, Nov. 17, 2023). It concluded that the Secretary lacked the authority under the Election Code to investigate and determine presidential primary candidate qualifications. Id. at ¶ 216. It then turned to whether it had the authority to adjudicate the Electors' complaint. Id. at ¶ 217. The court considered three cases in which this court concluded that the Election Code requires courts—not election officials—to determine candidate eligibility. Id. at ¶¶ 219–21; see Hanlen v. Gessler, 2014 CO 24, ¶ 40, 333 P.3d 41, 50 (holding that the Secretary exceeded his authority by passing a rule that permitted election officials to determine whether a candidate appearing on the state ballot was not qualified for office because "the election code requires a court, not an election official, to determine the issue of eligibility"); Carson v. Reiner, 2016 CO 38, ¶ 8, 370 P.3d 1137, 1139 ("[W]hen read as a whole, the statutory scheme evidences an intent that challenges to the qualifications of a candidate be resolved only by the courts . . . ."); Kuhn v. Williams, 2018 CO 30M, ¶ 40, 418 P.3d 478, 485 (per curiam) (a court may review the validity of a challenged candidate-nomination petition and consider extrinsic evidence in doing so). The district court found particularly instructive this court's conclusion in Kuhn that a challenger could "present evidence demonstrating that a petition actually fails to comply with the Election Code, even if it 'appear[ed] to be sufficient' in a paper review." ¶ 39, 418 P.3d at 485; Anderson, ¶ 219.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶363 The court then interpreted two provisions of the Election Code to implicitly incorporate Section Three, which it concluded grants courts broad authority to review, through section 1-1-113's expedited procedures, whether a candidate is disqualified as an insurrectionist. Anderson, ¶¶ 222, 224. Specifically, the court interpreted the language in section 1-4-1201 stating that the provisions of part 12 of the Election Code are intended to "conform to the requirements of federal law" as incorporating the entire U.S. Constitution, including Section Three. Anderson, ¶ 222. And the court noted that section 1-4-1203(2)(a) provides that only political parties that have a "qualified candidate" are entitled to participate in the presidential primary process. Anderson, ¶ 222. Relying on these provisions, the court held that, while the Secretary is not empowered to investigate and adjudicate a candidate's potential disability under Section Three, courts are not so constrained. Id. at ¶ 224.

D. The Majority's Opinion

¶364 The majority also appears to construe part 12 very broadly. In sum, its view is that section 1-4-1201's reference to "federal law" speaks to the General

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Assembly's intent, that section 1-4-1203(2)(a) limits participation in the presidential primary to "qualified" candidates, and that certification of a candidate who is not "qualified" thus constitutes a "wrongful act" within the scope of section 1-1-113. Maj. op. ¶¶ 36–37, 62–64. The majority draws on other provisions of the Election Code to inform the meaning of the term "qualified candidate." Id. at ¶¶ 37, 62 (citing § 1-4-1205, C.R.S. (2023) (requiring presidential primary write-in candidates to file a "notarized . . . statement of intent"); § 1-4-1101(1), C.R.S. (2023) (a write-in candidate's "affidavit of intent" must affirm that the candidate "desires the office and is qualified to assume its duties if elected"); § 1-4-1203(5) (when every party has no more than one certified candidate, whether party-nominated or write-in, the Secretary may cancel the presidential primary for all parties and declare the sole candidate the winner)). According to the majority, these provisions suggest that major party candidates—who are also required to submit a statement of intent—must also be "qualified to assume [the office's] duties if elected." Id. at ¶ 62; see § 1-4-1101(1).

¶365 Read as a whole, the majority thus interprets the Election Code to provide that a major party candidate in a presidential primary must, at a minimum, be qualified to hold the Office of President under the U.S. Constitution. Maj. op. ¶ 63. As such, it concludes that the General Assembly, through the Election Code, granted courts broad authority to determine presidential primary candidates' constitutional eligibility, including eligibility under Section Three. Id. at ¶¶ 60–62, 65–66. In the majority's view, a reading of the Election Code that constrains courts from considering a candidate's constitutional qualifications would produce a result "contrary to the purpose of the Election Code." Id. at ¶ 64.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. The Electors Failed to State a Cognizable Claim for Relief

¶366 Sections 1-4-1204(4) and 1-1-113 frame the threshold question this court must address before turning to the merits of the parties' appeal: Did the General Assembly intend to grant Colorado courts the authority to decide Section Three challenges? Based on my reading of sections 1-4-1204(4), 1-4-1201, and 1-4-1203(2)(a), I conclude that the answer to this question is no. As a result, I conclude that the Electors have not stated a cognizable claim for relief and their complaint should have been dismissed.

A. Section 1-4-1204(4) Allows for a Broad, but Not Unlimited, Range of Claims for Relief

¶367 As an initial matter, I acknowledge that the language in section 1-4-1204(4) is fairly broad insofar as it allows expedited challenges to the listing of any candidate on the presidential primary election ballot based on "alleged improprieties." And I agree with the majority that "section 1-1-113 'clearly comprehends challenges to a broad range of wrongful acts committed by officials charged with duties under the code,'" Maj. op. ¶ 61 (quoting Carson, ¶ 17, 370 P.3d at 1141), "including any act that is 'inconsistent with the Election Code,'" id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(quoting Frazier v. Williams, 2017 CO 85, ¶ 16, 401 P.3d 541, 545). I also agree with the majority that a "wrongful act" is "more expansive than a 'breach' or 'neglect of duty.'" Id. (quoting Frazier, ¶ 16, 401 P.3d at 545).

¶368 But this language can only do so much. As we also held in Frazier, "other wrongful act" is limited to acts that are wrongful under the Election Code. ¶ 16, 401 P.3d at 545. We have also emphasized that section 1-1-113 is a summary proceeding designed to quickly resolve challenges brought by designated plaintiffs against state election officials prior to election day. Id. Indeed, past cases decided by this court reflect the generally straightforward nature of the cases filed under section 1-1-113, the lion's share of which involved disputes over state or local election residency or signature requirements. See, e.g., Griswold v. Ferrigno Warren, 2020 CO 34, ¶ 15, 462 P.3d 1081, 1084 (deciding whether the Election Code's minimum signature requirement mandates substantial compliance and whether a U.S. Senate candidate satisfied that standard); Kuhn, ¶¶ 1–6, 418 P.3d at 480–81 (deciding whether a non-resident signature circulator could legally collect signatures for a candidate's petition); Frazier, ¶ 1, 401 P.3d at 542 (considering whether the Secretary improperly invalidated signatures included on a U.S. Senate candidate's petition to appear on the primary election ballot); Carson, ¶ 21, 370 P.3d at 1142 (considering whether a challenge to a candidate's qualifications based on their residency was permitted after the Secretary certified the candidate to the ballot).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶369 Don't get me wrong, the almost 450 entries in the district court register of actions in the two months and eleven days between September 6, 2023, the date on which the petition was filed, and November 17, 2023, the date on which the district court issued its 102-page final order, illustrate the extraordinary effort that the attorneys and the district court dedicated to this case. But that effort also proves too much. The deadlines under the statute were not met, nor could they have been. Setting aside the factual questions, an insurrection challenge is necessarily going to involve complex legal questions of the type that no district court—no matter how hard working—could resolve in a summary proceeding.

¶370 And that's to say nothing of the appellate deadline. Three days to appeal a district court's order regarding a challenge to a candidate's age? Sure. But a challenge to whether a former President engaged in insurrection by inciting a mob to breach the Capitol and prevent the peaceful transfer of power? I am not convinced this is what the General Assembly had in mind.

¶371 The various provisions of the Election Code on which the district court and the majority rely to suggest otherwise do not persuade me either.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. The Term "Federal Law" Does Not Support a Broad Grant of Authority to Colorado Courts to Enforce Section Three ¶372 The district court relied on the declaration of intent in part 12. Anderson, ¶ 222. It explains the intent of the People of the State of Colorado in the context of presidential primary elections. It provides: "In recreating and reenacting this part 12, it is the intent of the People of the State of Colorado that the provisions of this part 12 conform to the requirements of federal law and national political party rules governing presidential primary elections . . . ." § 1-4-1201 (emphasis added).[3] In adopting a broad view of section 1-4-1204(4)'s reach, the court assumed that the term "federal law," as used in this section, refers to the entire U.S. Constitution, including Section Three. Anderson, ¶¶ 222–24.

¶373 The majority also leans on this reference to "federal law" in section 1-4-1201, though more obliquely, suggesting it means the General Assembly intended for part 12 to operate "in harmony" with federal law. Maj. op. ¶ 36. I am not persuaded.

---

[3] As Professor Muller notes in his amicus brief, "A postpositive modifier like ['governing presidential primary elections'] attaches to both 'federal law' and 'national political party rules.'" Brief for Professor Derek T. Muller as Amicus Curiae Supporting Neither Party. Hence, the term "federal law" is properly understood not as a standalone term but as only relating to presidential primary elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶374 In my view, the term "federal law" is ambiguous at best. A brief dive into the history of part 12 explains why. See McCoy v. People, 2019 CO 44, ¶ 38, 442 P.3d 379, 389 ("If, however, the statute is ambiguous, then we may consider other aids to statutory construction, including the consequences of a given construction, the end to be achieved by the statute, and the statute's legislative history.").

¶375 Part 12 was enacted as part of the return to a primary system in Colorado. See § 1-4-1102, C.R.S. (1990) (governing Colorado's presidential primary system in the 1990s). From 2002 to 2016, presidential candidates were selected through a closed party caucus system. But in 2016, after "Colorado voters experienced disenfranchisement and profound disappointment with the state's [caucus] system," voters considered Proposition 107, which promised to restore presidential primary elections in Colorado, with one significant change—unlike prior iterations of its primary system, beginning in 2020, Colorado would host open presidential primaries, allowing unaffiliated voters to participate in these primary elections. See Proposition 107, § 1, https:// www.sos.state.co.us/pubs/elections/Initiatives/titleBoard/filings/2015-2016/140Final.pdf [https://perma.cc/2GA9-ZY7U] (noting that "restor[ing] [Colorado's] presidential primary" to an open primary system would enable the "35% of Colorado voters who are independent of a party" to "participat[e] in the presidential nomination process," and "encourage candidates who are responsive to the viewpoints of more Coloradans").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶376 When Proposition 107 passed, the General Assembly amended the Election Code and adopted part 12 to formally re-introduce the presidential primary process. Nothing in this history indicates that one of the concerns animating either the proponents of Proposition 107 or the General Assembly was a need to challenge, through the courts, issues concerning candidates' constitutional disqualifications. In fact, the language in the current version of section 1-4-1201 mostly mirrors the 1990 version of part 12 (then, part 11): "It is the intent of the general assembly that the provisions of this part 11 conform to the requirements of federal law and national political parties for presidential primary elections." § 1-4-1104(3), C.R.S. (1990) (emphasis added).

¶377 There is some history surrounding Proposition 107 and part 12 which suggests that proponents of this new open presidential primary system were concerned about one specific constitutional issue: a potential First Amendment challenge to the new law based on political parties' private right of association. See Independent Voters, Denver Metro Chamber of Com., https://denverchamber.org/policy/policy-independent-voters-white-paper/ [https://perma.cc/T2TT-A2UD] (The Denver Chamber of Commerce, which launched Proposition 107, noted that a semi-open primary system, because it would permit unaffiliated voters to affiliate with the Republican or Democratic parties in a presidential primary, could face legal challenges based on parties' First Amendment rights of association.); see also Christopher Jackson, Colorado Election Law Update, 46-SEP Colo. Law. 52, 53 (2017) (noting that the law was likely crafted in a manner designed to "stave off a First Amendment challenge" given the U.S. Supreme Court's 2000 decision in California Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567 (2000), which struck down California's "blanket primary" law).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶378 Curiously, the earlier version of the statute required the Secretary to provide a "written report" to the General Assembly "concerning whether the provisions of this part 11 conform to the requirements of federal law and national political party rules for presidential primary elections[,]" and provided that "the general assembly shall make such reasonable changes to this part 11 as are necessary to conform to federal law and national political parties' rules." § 1-4-1104(3), C.R.S. (1990). It is unclear if those reports were intended to speak to potential First Amendment concerns or some other issue, as any reports that may have been submitted to the General Assembly appear to have been lost to the sands of time (or, according to the State Archivist's Office, possibly a flood).

¶379 At bottom, this legislative history does little to illuminate what the 2016 General Assembly meant by this language in section 1-4-1201. What this history does show, however, is that the term "federal law" is most certainly not an affirmative grant of authority to state courts to enforce Section Three in expedited proceedings under the Election Code.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. The Term "Qualified Candidate" Does Not Support a Broad Grant of Authority to Colorado Courts

¶380 The other principal support for the district court's broad interpretation of section 1-4-1204(4) rests on the term "qualified candidate." The majority relies heavily on this language as well. Maj. op. ¶¶ 37, 62–64.

¶381 To understand the meaning of this term, it is critical to consider it in its full context. Recall, it states:

> Except as provided for in subsection (5) of this section, each political party that has a qualified candidate entitled to participate in the presidential primary election pursuant to this section is entitled to participate in the Colorado presidential primary election. At the presidential primary election, an elector that is affiliated with a political party may vote only for a candidate of that political party.

§ 1-4-1203(2)(a) (emphases added).

¶382 The district court construed this section expansively. It looked to the term "qualified candidate" as evidence of the General Assembly's intent to grant the court authority to determine if President Trump was disqualified under Section Three. The district court, like the Electors, appears to have read section 1-4-1203(2)(a) like a syllogism, such that if (1) participation in the presidential primary is limited to qualified candidates, and if (2) Section Three disqualifies insurrectionists, then (3) a court may appropriately consider a

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section Three challenge. But that is not what the statute says. Rather, it provides: "[E]ach political party that has a qualified candidate entitled to participate in the presidential primary election pursuant to this section is entitled to participate in the Colorado presidential primary election." Id. (emphases added).

¶383 Section 1-4-1203(2)(a) addresses when and how presidential primary elections are conducted. It does not prescribe additional qualifications through its use of the term "qualified candidate." See People ex rel. Rein v. Meagher, 2020 CO 56, ¶ 22, 465 P.3d 554, 560 ("[W]e do not add words to or subtract words from a statute."). Nor can it be read, given the fact that the term is explicitly tethered to subsection 1203, as expanding the criteria outlined in section 1-4-1204(1)(b) and (c): A candidate is eligible to be certified to the ballot by (1) being a bona fide candidate for president; (2) submitting a notarized candidate's statement of intent, and (3) paying the $500 filing fee or submitting a valid write-in petition. See § 1-4-1204(1)(b), (c).

¶384 It is significant, as well, that this part of the statute describes when a political party can participate in a presidential primary election. The consequence for a party that does not have a qualified candidate—that is, a candidate who does not meet the three-part criteria laid out in section 1-4-1204(1)(b) and (c)—is that the party cannot participate in the primary. Considered in context, then, the term

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"qualified candidate" does not offer support for an expansive reading of the court's authority to determine a challenge under Section Three.

¶385 The majority takes a slightly different approach. It points to section 1-4-1201's "federal law" declaration and suggests it means that the General Assembly intended part 12 to operate "in harmony" with federal law. Maj. op. ¶ 36. Then, like the district court, it gives great weight to the language in section 1-4-1203(2)(a), which it construes to mean that participation in the presidential primary is limited to "qualified candidates." Id. at ¶¶ 37, 62–64. It effectively reads "pursuant to this section" out of the statute by concluding that the phrase "sheds no light on the meaning of 'qualified candidate.'" Id. at ¶ 37 n.3 (quoting § 1-4-1203(2)(a)). The majority then asserts that, "[a]s a practical matter, the mechanism through which a presidential primary hopeful attests that he or she is a 'qualified candidate' is the 'statement of intent' (or 'affidavit of intent') filed with the Secretary." Id. at ¶ 37 (quoting § 1-4-1204(1)(c)).

¶386 And, it explains, the Secretary's statement of intent for a major party presidential candidate requires the candidate to affirm via checkboxes that the candidate meets the qualifications set forth in Article II of the U.S. Constitution for the Office of President, i.e., that the candidate is at least thirty-five years old, has been a resident of the United States for at least fourteen years, and is a natural-born U.S. citizen. Id. at ¶ 38; U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5; Major Party Candidate

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Statement of Intent for Presidential Primary, Colo. Sec'y of State, https://www.sos.state.co.us/pubs/elections/Candidates/files/MajorPartyCandidateStatementOfIntentForPresidentialPrimary.pdf [https://perma.cc/RY72-ASSD]. As well, the form requires the candidate to sign an affirmation that states: "I intend to run for the office stated above and solemnly affirm that I meet all qualifications for the office prescribed by law." Major Party Candidate Statement of Intent for Presidential Primary, supra.

¶387 The majority stitches these various parts of the Election Code together to conclude the General Assembly intended to grant state courts the authority to decide Section Three challenges. Maj. op. ¶¶ 36–38, 62. This approach falls short for five reasons.

¶388 First, there is nothing in section 1-4-1201's "federal law" declaration that indicates the General Assembly meant to refer to Section Three. Perhaps the declaration refers to the General Assembly's concern regarding a potential First Amendment right of association challenge to the open primary system created by part 12, perhaps not. The declaration's history is muddy at best.

¶389 Second, the term "qualified candidate" cannot be fairly read to grant Colorado courts authority to adjudicate Section Three disqualification claims. The term is best understood as describing when a political party can participate in the presidential primary process, not as the foundation for a wrongful act claim under section 1-4-1204(4) and section 1-1-113.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶390 Third, even assuming the General Assembly intended to grant some authority to the courts through its reference to the candidate's statement of intent in the exceptionally roundabout manner suggested by the majority, there is no basis for concluding that authority extends beyond the fairly basic types of Article II challenges that have come before this court in the past, such as those involving a candidate's age, or other challenges like those alleging that petition circulators did not reside in Colorado.

¶391 Fourth, I am not persuaded by the majority's reliance on sections 1-4-1205 and 1-4-1101, which govern the requirements write-in candidates must satisfy before being certified to the ballot. See Maj. op. ¶¶ 37, 62. Like major party presidential primary candidates, write-in candidates for the presidential primary must file a "notarized . . . statement of intent" and submit to the Secretary "a nonrefundable fee of five hundred dollars . . . no later than the close of business on the sixty-seventh day before the presidential primary election." § 1-4-1205. Section 1-4-1101(1), which applies to all write-in candidates regardless of office, requires that the write-in candidate confirm "that he or she desires the office and is qualified to assume its duties if elected." (Emphasis added.) According to the majority, "[t]he Election Code's explicit requirement that a write-in candidate be

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

'qualified' to assume the duties of their intended office logically implies that major party candidates under 1-4-1204(1)(b) must be 'qualified' in the same manner." Maj. op. ¶ 62.

¶392 It is true that both major party candidates and write-in candidates must fill out statement of intent forms, and that the forms are similar in some respects. But, if anything, the General Assembly's decision to include a specific qualification provision for write-in candidates shows that when it wants to include an explicit qualifications requirement, like the one in section 1-4-1101(1), it knows how to do so. See People v. Diaz, 2015 CO 28, ¶ 15, 347 P.3d 621, 625 ("But, in interpreting a statute, we must accept the General Assembly's choice of language and not add or imply words that simply are not there." (quoting People v. Benavidez, 222 P.3d 391, 393–94 (Colo. App. 2009))).

¶393 Fifth and finally, there is the problem that Section Three is a disqualification for office, not a qualification to serve. As the majority acknowledges, the U.S. Supreme Court has twice declined to address whether Section Three—which is described in the text as a "disability" and is referred to as the Disqualification Clause—amounts to a qualification for office. Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 520 n.41 (1969) (observing that an academic suggested in a law review article in 1968 that the three grounds for disqualification (impeachment, Section Three, and the Congressional incompatibility clause) and two other similar provisions were each no less of a "qualification" than the Article II, Section 5 qualifications); U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 787 n.2 (1995) (seeing "no need to resolve" the same question regarding Section Three in a case concerning the propriety of additional qualifications for office); Maj. op. ¶ 65.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶394 Given the fact that the U.S. Supreme Court has not weighed in on whether Section Three is a qualification for office, it seems all the more important to look for some affirmative expression by the General Assembly of its intent to grant state courts the authority to consider Section Three challenges through Colorado's summary hearing and appeal process under the Election Code. I see no such expression.

IV. Conclusion

¶395 The Electors' arguments below and before this court are, to my mind, unavailing. Too much of their position rests on text like "federal law" and "qualified candidate" that—on closer examination—does not appear to mean what they say it means because it is taken out of context. In short, these sections do not show an affirmative grant by the General Assembly to state courts to decide Section Three cases through Colorado's summary election challenge process.

¶396 Because it too relied on the provisions of part 12 regarding "federal law" and "qualified candidate," the district court's reasoning suffers from the same shortcomings.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶397 And, at the end of the day, while the majority's approach charts a new course—one not entirely presented by the parties—its approach has many of the same problems. It stitches together support from the Secretary's general authority to supervise the conduct of primary and other elections, § 1-1-107(1), C.R.S. (2023); the inference that section 1-4-1201's "federal law" declaration means something pertinent to Section Three; part, but not all, of the "qualified candidate" statute, § 1-4-1203(2)(a); inferences from the write-in candidate process statute, § 1-4-1101(1); and the novel suggestion that the General Assembly granted authority to state courts to adjudicate a Section Three challenge by virtue of its reference to the Secretary's statement of intent form in section 1-4-1204(1)(c). See Maj. op. ¶¶ 35–37, 62–63.

¶398 I agree with the majority that, if the General Assembly wants to grant state courts the authority to adjudicate Section Three challenges through the Election Code, it can do so. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 (authorizing states to appoint presidential electors "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct"); see also Hassan v. Colorado, 495 F. App'x 947, 948 (10th Cir. 2012) (recognizing that it is "a state's legitimate interest in protecting the integrity and practical functioning of the political process" that "permits it to exclude from the ballot candidates who are constitutionally prohibited from assuming office"). I just think it needs to say so.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/20/2023 9:43:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Just Security tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://www.justsecurity.org/86307/tracker-litigation-and-legislation-on-the-insurrection-bar-to-office-section-3-of-the-fourteenth-amendment/

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/20/2023 9:55:03 PM
To: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: FW: Just Security tracker

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

This link has a public tracker of 14.3 disqualification litigation. It's not limited to cases involving the president.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, December 20, 2023 at 4:43 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Subject: Just Security tracker

https://www.justsecurity.org/86307/tracker-litigation-and-legislation-on-the-insurrection-bar-to-office-section-3-of-the-fourteenth-amendment/

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/22/2023 11:51:29 PM
To: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Christine Sun [Christine@statesunitedaction.org]; Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE - Colorado case
Attachments: 14.3 amicus points[13].docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Erik,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

From: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, December 21, 2023 at 10:10 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE - Colorado case

Thank you, Jonathan. I appreciate the help!

Erik A. Grill
Assistant Attorney General
Civil Rights & Elections Division
517.930.8840
517.335.7640 (fax)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, December 20, 2023 5:20 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE - Colorado case

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Erik,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, December 20, 2023 at 4:05 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: ATTORNEY CLIENT PRIVILEGE - Colorado case

Hi Jonathan,

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/28/2023 2:11:20 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Colorado 14.3 SCOTUS petition
Attachments: Colorado-Republican-State-Central-Committee-v.-Anderson-Cert-Petition-PDFA_Redacted.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged

Per the New York Times, Colorado Republican State Central Committee filed the attached cert petition, which is not yet docketed. Story here: https://www.nytimes.com/2023/12/27/us/colorado-supreme-court-trump.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare

In addition to the disqualification issue, the party raises a First Amendment issue about whether a state can exclude a nominee from a party's primary. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Trump does not appear to have filed yet.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No. _____

In the Supreme Court of the United States

COLORADO REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE, Petitioner,

v.

NORMA ANDERSON, ET AL.,
Respondents.

On Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Colorado

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

MICHAEL W. MELITO
MELITO LAW LLC
ROBERT A. KITSMILLER
PODOLL & PODOLL, P.C.
[redacted]

CHRISTINA A. COMPAGNONE
OLIVIA F. SUMMERS
GARRETT A. TAYLOR
AMERICAN CENTER FOR LAW & JUSTICE
[redacted]

JAY ALAN SEKULOW
Counsel of Record
JORDAN A. SEKULOW
STUART J. ROTH
ANDREW J. EKONOMOU
JANE SERENE RASKIN
WALTER M. WEBER
BENJAMIN P. SISNEY
NATHAN MOELKER
AMERICAN CENTER FOR LAW & JUSTICE
[redacted]

Counsel for Petitioner

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Supreme Court of Colorado held that states possess authority, regardless of the lack of congressional authorization, to determine that a presidential candidate is disqualified under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and that former President Donald J. Trump is disqualified as an insurrectionist. The Questions Presented are:

1. Whether the President falls within the list of officials subject to the disqualification provision of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment?

2. Whether Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing to the extent of allowing states to remove candidates from the ballot in the absence of any Congressional action authorizing such process?

3. Whether the denial to a political party of its ability to choose the candidate of its choice in a presidential primary and general election violates that party's First Amendment Right of Association?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

PARTIES

Petitioner Colorado Republican State Central Committee was Intervenor-Appellee in the state courts. The following were Petitioners-Appellants/Cross-Appellees in the state courts and are respondents here: Norma Anderson, Michelle Priola, Claudine Cmarada, Krista Kafer, Kathi Wright, and Christopher Castilian. Jena Griswold, in her official capacity as Colorado Secretary of State, was Respondent-Appellee in the state courts and is a respondent here. Donald J. Trump was Intervenor-Appellee/Cross-Appellant in the state courts and is a nominal respondent here.

RELATED PROCEEDINGS

This case arises from the following proceedings:

- Anderson v. Griswold, 2023 CO 63, No. 2023SA300 (CO S. Ct. Dec. 19, 2023) (disqualifying Pres. Trump from ballots)

- Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577 (Colo. Dist. Ct. Nov. 17, 2023) (Held Pres. Trump is not disqualified from ballots)

- Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577, (Colo Dist. Ct. Oct. 20, 2023) (denying motions to dismiss)

Counsel is not aware of any other related proceedings under Supreme Court Rule 14.1(b)(iii).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page(s)

QUESTIONS PRESENTED i

PARTIES ii

RELATED PROCEEDINGS ii

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES v

OPINIONS BELOW 1

JURISDICTION 1

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

I. Proceedings in the Denver District Court 2

II. Proceedings in the Colorado Supreme Court 4

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 6

I. The President Is Not an Officer of the United States Covered Within the Disqualification Provision of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment 11

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment Is Not a Self-Executing Authority for State Courts and Litigants to Use as a Sword Against Presidential Candidates. 16

III. The Colorado Supreme Court's Decision Violates the Colorado Republican Party's First Amendment Associational Right to Choose Its Own Political Candidates. 26

CONCLUSION 34

APPENDIX CONTENTS

Page(s)

Appendix A: Supreme Court of Colorado, Opinion (Dec. 19, 2023)..... 1a

Appendix B: Colorado District Court Omnibus Ruling (Oct. 20, 2023) 1b

Appendix C: Colorado District Court Final Order (Nov. 17, 2023) 1c

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

CASES

Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983).....29

Anderson v. Griswold, 2023 CO 63..... 1

Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577, 2023 Colo. Dist. LEXIS 362 (Colo. Dist. Ct. Nov. 17, 2023).....1

Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577, 2023 Colo. Dist. LEXIS 369 (Colo Dist. Ct. Oct. 20, 2023).....1

Bates v. Jones, 131 F.3d 843 (9th Cir. 1997).....32

Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976).....29

Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428 (1992) 31

Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567, (2000) 26, 27, 31

Cale v. Covington, 586 F.2d 311 (4th Cir. 1978) 17, 18

Caplan v. Trump, No. 0:23-cv-61628-RLR, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 199051 (S.D. Fla. Aug. 31, 2023).....9

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Castro v. Dahlstrom, No. 1:23-cv-00011-JMK (D. Alaska filed Sept. 29, 2023) 8

Castro v. Fontes, No. 23-3960 (9th Cir. filed Dec. 8, 2023) 8

Castro v. Fontes, No. CV-23-01865-PHX-DLR, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 215802 (D. Ariz. Dec. 4, 2023) 8

Castro v. Trump, No. 9:23-cv-80015-AMC, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194440 (S.D. Fla. June 26, 2023) 9

Castro v. Warner, No. 2:2023cv00598, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 195186 (S.D.W. Va. Sept. 7, 2023) 9

Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245 (4th Cir. 2022) 10

City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997) 19

Clark v. Weber, No. 2:23-CV-07489-DOC-DFMx, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 189172 9

Davis v. Wayne Cnty. Election Comm'n, Nos. 368615, 368628, 2023 Mich. App. LEXIS 9150 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 14, 2023) 9

Duke v. Cleland, 954 F.2d 1526 (11th. Cir. 1992) ... 27

Ex parte Va., 100 U.S. 339 (1879) 17

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477 (2010) 12

Greene v. Sec'y of State, 52 F.4th 907, 910 (11th Cir. 2022) 10

Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D. Va. 1869) 19-24

Growe v. Simon, No. A23-1354 (Minn. Nov. 8, 2023) 27, 31

Growe v. Simon, No. A23-1354, 2023 Minn. LEXIS 571 (Minn. Sept. 12, 2023) 9

Hansen v. Finchem, 2022 Ariz. Super. LEXIS 5 (Maricopa Cnty. Sup. Ct. 2022) 21

Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV 2022-004321, 2022 Ariz. Super. LEXIS 5 (Ariz. Sup. Ct. Apr. 21, 2022) 10

Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966) 17, 19

Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662 (1889) 15

Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) 32

Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988) 29

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214 (1966) 29

Norman v. Reed, 502 U.S. 279 (1992) 32

Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U.S. 94 (1921) 7, 17, 21

Rothermel v. Meyerle, 136 Pa. 250 (1890) 22

State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599 (Ala. 1875) 22

Stencil v. Johnson, 605 F. Supp. 3d 1109 (E.D. Wis. 2022) 10

Tashjian v. Republican Party, 479 U.S. 208 (1986) 31

The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3 (1883) 17, 18

Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351 (1997) 30, 31, 32

United States Term Limits v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995) 25

United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303 (1888) 12

Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23 (1968) 30

STATUTES

18 U.S.C. § 2383 ..... 16, 24

28 U.S.C. § 1257 1

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C.R.S. § 1-1-113 4

C.R.S. § 1-4-1204 28

OTHER AUTHORITIES

CO GOP's Mot. to Dismiss 28

Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess. 626 (1869) 23

Cong. Rec. Containing the Proceedings of the Senate Sitting for the Trial of William W. Belknap 145 (1876) 13

DAVID MCKNIGHT, THE ELECTORAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES 346 (1878) 13

Enforcement Act of 1870, ch. 114, 16 Stat. 140, 143-44 23

JEFFREY S. SUTTON, 51 IMPERFECT SOLUTIONS (2018) 7

The Reconstruction Acts, 12 U.S. Op. Att'y Gen. 141 (1867) 10, 14, 15

U.S. CONST. amend. I 1, 28

U.S. CONST. amend. XIV 2, 11,

U.S. CONST. art. II 11, 12, 14

U.S. CONST. art. VI 14

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RULES

Supreme Court Rule 14.1(b)(iii) iii

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

OPINIONS BELOW

The per curiam opinion of the Colorado Supreme Court was published as Anderson v. Griswold, 2023 CO 63, Pet. App. A. The Final Order issued by the District Court for the City and County of Denver is as follows: Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577, 2023 Colo. Dist. LEXIS 362 (Colo. Dist. Ct. Nov. 17, 2023), Pet. App. C. The District Court's Omnibus Ruling on Pending Dispositive Motions is available as Anderson v. Griswold, No. 2023CV32577, 2023 Colo. Dist. LEXIS 369 (Colo Dist. Ct. Oct. 20, 2023), Pet. App. B.

JURISDICTION

The Colorado Supreme Court issued its judgment on December 19, 2023, affirming in part and reversing in part the district court's order. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(a).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The First Amendment to the Constitution provides in relevant part:

> Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

U.S. CONST. amend. I.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part: "No state shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment provides as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Proceedings in the Denver District Court

Six Colorado electors filed a verified petition against Colorado Secretary of State Jena Griswold

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and President Trump in the Denver District Court on September 6, 2023. The electors sought an order under Colorado Revised Statute section 1-4-1204 declaring President Trump constitutionally disqualified from the presidency and directing the Colorado Secretary of State to exclude his name from the 2024 primary and general election ballots.[1]

The Colorado Republican State Central Committee ("Colorado Republican Party" or the "Party") intervened in Denver District Court with several claims: (1) the relief sought violates the Party's First Amendment rights; (2) Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not apply to the President and is not self-executing such that a state disqualification proceeding would lie; and, (3) the Colorado Election Code does not allow for the Secretary of State to determine constitutional qualifications. The parties exchanged motions to dismiss. The district court issued an omnibus order on Oct. 20, 2023. Pet. App. 46b. In that order, the district court granted the Electors' Motion to Dismiss the Party's First Amendment claim. It denied President Trump's Motion to Dismiss, adopted by the Party, that was based on constitutional challenges to the suit's attempt to adjudicate whether President Trump is disqualified. The district court also denied the Party's Motion to Dismiss on statutory grounds.

---

1 During litigation, the Electors dropped their declaratory claim leaving only their claim under C.R.S. § 1-4-1204. As a result, President Trump was technically removed as a defendant. However, he immediately and without objection intervened and reentered the proceeding.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

An evidentiary hearing was held October 30 through November 3, and the district court entered its final order on November 17, 2023. Pet. App. 125c. The court ruled that President Trump is not one of the "officers of the United States" described in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and ordered the Colorado Secretary of State to place President Trump on the presidential primary ballot. Id.

Despite this dispositive ruling on the law in favor of President Trump, the district court also purported to make a factual finding that President Trump engaged in an insurrection.

II. Proceedings in the Colorado Supreme Court

Pursuant to C.R.S. § 1-1-113(3), the Electors sought review by the Supreme Court of Colorado on November 20, 2023. President Trump brought a cross-appeal. Oral arguments were held on December 6, 2023, and the Colorado Supreme Court issued its judgment on December 19, 2023. Pet. App. 223a. The supreme court affirmed in part and reversed in part the district court's order, ultimately concluding that President Trump was disqualified from appearing on the ballot. Id.

The Colorado Supreme Court held that "states have the constitutional power to assess presidential qualifications," Pet. App. 24a, that Colorado law authorizes such challenges, id., and that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment imposes such a qualification regarding insurrections, Pet. App. 56a-58a.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The court further held that the Party's First Amendment right was not violated by excluding from the primary or general ballot a candidate the state determined, through its courts, to be disqualified. Pet. App. 63a-68a.

Reversing the district court, the Colorado Supreme Court held that Section Three does apply to the Office of the President. It also held that Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing and that Congress need not pass implementing legislation for the disqualification provision to attach.

Finally, the Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's factual findings and legal conclusions that President Trump had engaged in insurrection and so was disqualified from both the primary and general ballot.

Three justices dissented, arguing that the Colorado Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to decide this insurrection challenge.

The state supreme court stayed its order to allow review in this Court:

> [W]e stay our ruling until January 4, 2024 (the day before the Secretary's deadline to certify the content of the presidential primary ballot). If review is sought in the Supreme Court before the stay expires, it shall remain in place, and the Secretary will continue to be required to include President Trump's name on the 2024 presidential primary ballot until > the receipt of any order or mandate from the Supreme Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Pet. App. 224a. This petition followed.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

For the first time in American history, a former President has been disqualified from the ballot, a political party has been denied the opportunity to put forward the presidential candidate of its choice, and the voters have been denied the ability to choose their Chief Executive through the electoral process. This unprecedented decision urgently merits this Court's review to prevent "the potential chaos wrought by an imprudent, unconstitutional, and standardless system in which each state gets to adjudicate Section Three disqualification cases on an ad hoc basis. Surely, this enlargement of state power is antithetical to the framers' intent." Pet. App. 316a (Samour, J., dissenting). By excluding President Trump from the ballot, the Colorado Supreme Court engaged in an unprecedented disregard for the First Amendment right of political parties to select the candidates of their choice and a usurpation of the rights of the people to choose their elected officials.

Rejecting a long history of precedent, a state's highest court has now concluded that individual litigants, state courts, and state election officials in each of the 50 states plus the District of Columbia possess legal authority to enforce Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment to remove presidential candidates. With the number of challenges to

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President Trump's candidacy now pending in other states, ranging from lawsuits to administrative proceedings, there is a real risk the Colorado Supreme Court majority's flawed and unprecedented analysis will be borrowed, and the resulting grave legal error repeated. While fifty-one different solutions may be a great idea for federalist experimentation, see JEFFREY S. SUTTON, 51 IMPERFECT SOLUTIONS (2018), it would be a recipe for national disaster if applied to the question whether a presidential candidate is constitutionally qualified for office.

The Colorado Supreme Court's decision is wrong for a host of reasons. As most relevant here, it improperly applied precedent establishing the First Amendment right of political parties, failed to apply precedent repeatedly holding that the Fourteenth Amendment is not a self-executing sword, see, e.g., Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U.S. 94, 112 (1921), and incorrectly concluded that the President is an "officer of the United States." This alone would present grounds for review in any circumstance.

But it is the radical effects of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision that particularly necessitate this Court's review as soon as reasonably possible. The Colorado Supreme Court has decided "to bar former President Donald J. Trump ('President Trump')—by all accounts the current leading Republican presidential candidate (and reportedly the current leading overall presidential candidate)—from Colorado's presidential primary ballot." Pet. App. 244a (Samour, J., dissenting). The historical significance of this decision cannot be overstated. The Colorado Supreme Court has removed the leading Republican candidate from the primary and general ballots, fundamentally changing the course of American democracy. And its significance is not merely political, but legal. Rejecting a long history of precedent, a state Supreme Court has now concluded that individual litigants, state courts, and secretaries of state in all 50 states plus the District of Columbia have authority to enforce Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Unless the Colorado Supreme Court's decision is overturned, any voter will have the power to sue to disqualify any political candidate, in Colorado or in any other jurisdiction that follows its lead. This will not only distort the 2024 presidential election but will also mire courts henceforth in political controversies over nebulous accusations of insurrection.

Indeed, the catastrophic effects of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision are already foreshadowed in pending and recently decided cases involving attempts to deny President Trump access to the 2024 ballot:

> Castro v. Dahlstrom, No. 1:23-cv-00011-JMK (D. Alaska filed Sept. 29, 2023).
>
> Castro v. Fontes, No. 23-3960 (9th Cir. filed Dec. 8, 2023) (on appeal from Castro v. Fontes, No. CV-23-01865-PHX-DLR, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 215802 (D. Ariz. Dec. 4, 2023)) (pending, appeal filed by Plaintiff after case was dismissed for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Clark v. Weber, No. 2:23-CV-07489-DOC-DFMx, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 189172 (Cent. D. Cal. Oct. 20, 2023) (dismissed sua sponte with prejudice, Plaintiff lacked standing).

Castro v. Trump, No. 9:23-cv-80015-AMC, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194440 (S.D. Fla. June 26, 2023) (dismissed, lack of standing and ripeness).

Caplan v. Trump, No. 0:23-cv-61628-RLR, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 199051 (S.D. Fla. Aug. 31, 2023) (dismissed, lack of subject matter jurisdiction).

Davis v. Wayne Cnty. Election Comm'n, Nos. 368615, 368628, 2023 Mich. App. LEXIS 9150 (Mich. Ct. App. Dec. 14, 2023) (affirmed dismissals, no jurisdiction for lack of actual controversy and lack of ripeness).

Growe v. Simon, No. A23-1354, 2023 Minn. LEXIS 571 (Minn. Sept. 12, 2023) (dismissed, no error as to the issue of the presidential primary and lack of ripeness as to the issue of the general election).

Castro v. Warner, No. 2:2023cv00598, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 195186 (S.D.W. Va. Sept. 7, 2023) (summary judgment granted for lack of standing on December 20, 2023).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Other cases, not involving President Trump, have also raised questions surrounding the application of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Cawthorn v. Amalfi, 35 F.4th 245, 248 (4th Cir. 2022); Greene v. Sec'y of State, 52 F.4th 907, 910 (11th Cir. 2022); Stencil v. Johnson, 605 F. Supp. 3d 1109, 1113, 1119 (E.D. Wis. 2022); Hansen v. Finchem, No. CV 2022-004321, 2022 Ariz. Super. LEXIS 5 (Ariz. Sup. Ct. Apr. 21, 2022) (holding "no private right of action exists" to enforce the Disqualification Clause of the 14th Amendment). Most courts have rejected these lawsuits on jurisdictional grounds, but the Colorado Supreme Court has followed its own, path and split from the others, warranting this Court's review.[2]

The district court rightly concluded, in ruling that President Trump must be given access to the Colorado ballot, that any doubts regarding these interpretative questions should be resolved in favor of the democratic process. As Attorney General Stanbery noted after the Civil War, "[w]here, from the generality of terms of description, or for any other reason, a reasonable doubt arises, that doubt is to be resolved against the operation of the law and in favor of the voter." The Reconstruction Acts, 12 U.S. Op. Att'y Gen. 141, 160 (1867). The same is true here. Should this Court have any interpretative doubt, it

---

2 The drastic effects of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision on the 2024 primary election necessitate this Court's immediate review, during this current term. The prompt hearing of this case is necessary to prevent the Colorado Supreme Court's decision from having an irreparable effect on the electoral process. Petitioner is prepared to abide by whatever expedited processes this Court may set. Along with the filing of this Petition for Certiorari, the Party is filing a Motion to Expedite.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

should resolve that doubt in favor of the democratic process.

I. The President Is Not an Officer of the United States Covered Within the Disqualification Provision of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The trial court reached the correct conclusion: the President is not covered by Section Three. The Fourteenth Amendment only disqualifies those who serve in specific roles. Specifically, a person is disqualified only if he "previously [took] an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State." U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3. Because President Trump was never a congressman, state legislator, or state officer, Section Three applies to him only if he was an "officer of the United States." Id. But that term as used in Section Three does not cover the President.[3]

The Constitution makes very clear that the President is not an officer of the United States. For example, the Commissions Clause states that the President "shall Commission all the Officers of the United States." U.S. CONST. art. II, § 4. If the 3 Moreover, there are legitimate grounds for questioning whether the Presidency is included within the scope of offices from which individuals are disqualified. For example, Section Three, in listing positions from which people can be disqualified, specifies Electors, who are selected by the people. Thus, it is that stage of the process the drafters of Section Three chose to protect against insurrectionists, not the stage at which the President is elected.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President is an officer of the United States, then the President commissions himself. On the contrary, the presidency is not among the specific roles enumerated, nor is the President an officer of the United States. "The people do not vote for the 'Officers of the United States.' . . . They instead look to the President to guide the 'assistants or deputies . . . subject to his superintendence.'" Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U.S. 477, 497-98 (2010) (internal citations omitted). See United States v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 307 (1888) ("Unless a person in the service of the Government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the President, or of one of the courts of justice or heads of Departments authorized by law to make such an appointment, he is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States.").

It is undisputed that the presidency can be considered an "office." But Section Three does not disqualify all "officers" in a general sense. Instead, it only disqualifies "officers of the United States." This term of art is used in only three places in the Constitution: Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, The Commissions Clause, and The Appointments Clause, which provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States." U.S. CONST. art. II, § 3.

Accordingly, it is the President who appoints the officers of the United States and has authority to commission those officers. He is not, himself, therefore, an officer of the United States. "Officer of the United States" is limited, each time it is used, to explicitly not include the Presidency.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Colorado Supreme Court reasoned that, because the President is an "officer" in a general sense, he is, therefore, also an "officer of the United States" in the specific sense intended by the drafters. That is not how constitutional interpretation works. The Constitution uses a distinct, specific term, "officer of the United States." Generic references to the term officer do not overcome the more specific meaning evidenced by the constitutional language. Nor does any historical source indicate that this term was not to be understood in the specific sense it is used in the Constitution's text. In fact, the historical evidence is to the contrary.

Less than a decade after the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, Senator Newton Booth posited, "the President is not an officer of the United States." Cong. Rec. Containing the Proceedings of the Senate Sitting for the Trial of William W. Belknap 145 (1876). Senator Boutwell likewise explained that "according to the Constitution, as well as upon the judgment of eminent commentators, the President and Vice-President are not civil officers." Id. at 130. Near the same time, a treatise determined "[i]t is obvious that . . . the President is not regarded as 'an officer of, or under, the United States.'" DAVID MCKNIGHT, THE ELECTORAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES 346 (1878).

Most importantly, Attorney General Henry Stanbery defined the term officer in the Fourteenth Amendment as "military as well as civil officers of the United States who had taken the prescribed oath." 12 U.S. Op. Att'y. Gen. at 158. He declared that the phrase "Officers of the United States" includes, "without limitation," any "person who has at any time prior to the rebellion held any office, civil or military, under the United States, and has taken an official oath to support the Constitution of the United States." Id. at 203.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A president does not take the "official oath" that Attorney General Stanberry viewed as dispositive, and thus is not subject to Article Three. There are two oaths of office in the Constitution. Article VI, Section 3 of the Constitution provides that "[t]he Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution." U.S. CONST. art. VI, § 3. Thus, all executive officers take an oath to support the Constitution. But the President does not take such an oath: Article II, Section 1 states that the President, instead and singularly, takes an oath to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States." U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1. This distinct phrasing further indicates that for the purposes of Article VI, Section 3, the President is clearly, explicitly, not an officer of the United States.

The actual language of the Fourteenth Amendment uses the words of Article VI, not Article II. The Colorado Supreme Court discussed extensively the overlapping duties between the two oaths, Pet. App. 142a-143a, but that similarity in practice does not erase the linguistic difference between the two oaths.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The court below cited this Court's statement, "[t]he simplest and most obvious interpretation of a Constitution, if in itself sensible, is the most likely to be that meant by the people in its adoption." Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 671 (1889). True enough. But here, the simplest and most obvious reading of Section Three is that it means what it says, disqualifying those who took an "official oath" to support the Constitution. 12 U.S. Op. Att'y Gen. at 203. No amount of discussion or obfuscation can change the simple fact that the President Trump did not take that oath. The Constitution is clear.

The Supreme Court of Colorado opined that it would make no sense to put in place an insurrectionist bar for every other federal office, but not for the President (or Vice-President). Pet. App. 140a. But there is a key difference. Every Senator or Representative represents a geographic area where sympathy for insurrection was (at the time of the post-Civil War era) a real and legitimate concern. Lower federal officers, meanwhile, are not elected and thus do not face national electoral scrutiny. Only the President (and Vice-President) face nationwide electoral accountability. And if an electoral majority of the voters determine that they want a certain individual as Chief Executive, regardless of alleged or even actual past transgressions, that is their national choice under the Constitution. In short, the President and his role is different in a way that matters.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment Is Not a Self-Executing Authority for State Courts and Litigants to Use as a Sword Against Presidential Candidates.

The decision below suffers from many flaws. But, as Justice Samour observed in his dissent, "the majority's ruling that Section Three is self-executing [is] the most concerning misstep." Pet. App. 249a-250a. Congress, and Congress alone, can enforce Section Three. Yet Congress has not provided a private cause of action under Section Three. And the only current enforcement mechanism even arguably available is 18 U.S.C. § 2383, a criminal statute banning insurrection and providing a penalty of disqualification. But President Trump has not been indicted under Section 2383, let alone tried and convicted as would be required to trigger application of Section Three. In fact, after nearly three years of investigation—first by the United States Attorney for the District of Colombia and then by a Special Counsel specifically tasked with investigating and prosecuting the events of January 6—President Trump, although indicted on several charges, has not been accused of violating Section 2383. Indeed, adding insult to injury, the only time President Trump actually faced a formal allegation of insurrection—in the context of an impeachment proceeding appropriate to political questions such as this—he was acquitted after a trial in the U.S. Senate. A lawsuit cannot provide an end-run around the mechanisms that Congress establishes for enforcing the Constitution.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This Court has repeatedly held that the Fourteenth Amendment does not itself create a self-executing cause of action. Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment explicitly confers the enforcement power on Congress to determine "whether and what legislation is needed to" enforce the Fourteenth Amendment. Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641, 651 (1966). Accordingly, it is Congress that enforces the Fourteenth Amendment by positive legislation. "It is the power of Congress which has been enlarged. Congress is authorized to enforce the prohibitions by appropriate legislation. Some legislation is contemplated to make the amendments fully effective." Ex parte Va., 100 U.S. 339, 345 (1879); Ownbey, 256 U.S. at 112 ("[I]t cannot rightly be said that the Fourteenth Amendment furnishes a universal and self-executing remedy.").

The Colorado Supreme Court misunderstood this fundamental point. In support of its assertion that the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing, it cited The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 20 (1883). Pet. App. 79a-80a. But, as the Fourth Circuit carefully explained in Cale v. Covington, 586 F.2d 311, 316-17 (4th Cir. 1978) in direct response to the same argument, The Civil Rights Cases addressed whether the Fourteenth Amendment provides a self-executing defense, which it does. In some circumstances the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing as a shield, providing a constitutional defense even if not explicitly provided for by law. But in no circumstance is the Fourteenth Amendment a self-executing sword. As the court thoroughly explained:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> It is true that in The Civil Rights Cases, the Court referred to the Fourteenth Amendment as self-executing, when discussing the Fifteenth, but it is also true that earlier in the opinion, discussing § 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment, the court stated: "in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation." The Civil Rights Cases did not overrule Ex Parte Virginia, and any apparent inconsistency between the two just quoted statements in the Civil Rights Cases may be resolved, we think, by reference to the protection the Fourteenth Amendment provided of its own force as a shield under the doctrine of judicial review.

Cale, 586 F.2d at 316-17 (rejecting the argument that there is an implied cause of action under the Fourteenth Amendment because the Amendment is self-executing). The Cale court observed, "the Congress and Supreme Court of the time were in agreement that affirmative relief under the amendment should come from Congress." Id. at 316. As Justice Samour explained in his dissent, based in large part on his analysis of Cale, "I do not think [self-executing] means what [my colleagues in the majority] think it means." Pet. App. 247a (quoting

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Princess Bride (20th Century Fox 1987); see also Pet. App. 269a-270a.

The Colorado Supreme Court also relied on City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 524 (1997), to support its assertion that the Fourteenth Amendment is self-executing. However, City of Boerne did not suggest that a Fourteenth Amendment case could proceed without Congress creating a cause of action. Instead, it cited with approval, Katzenbach, 384 U.S. at 651, which recognized both the existence of a self-executing defensive right and that, for an affirmative remedy to exist under the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress must create a cause of action.[4]

In the seminal Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. 7, 22 (C.C.D. Va. 1869), Chief Justice Salmon Chase, riding circuit, specifically held that only Congress can provide the means of enforcing Section Three. Although not binding on this court, Griffin's Case nonetheless represents strong persuasive authority from one of this Court's most significant Chief Justices, an individual with close-in-time knowledge of the Fourteenth Amendment's meaning. No court before the recent debates over ballot eligibility has [4] The Colorado Supreme Court also reasoned from the fact that Section Two of the Fourteenth Amendment, eliminating the counting of enslaved persons as three-fifths of a person, appears to be self-executing. The most significant problem with this argument is that Congress did in fact, by reapportionment, enforce that provision. The Apportionment Act of 1872, 17 Stat. 28 (42d Cong.) (apportioning Representatives to the various states based on Section Two's command.) Because Congress did enforce Section Two, there was never a need to address whether it could have been enforced through a private cause of action.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

formally disagreed with Chief Justice Chase's analysis of this issue or held that Section Three is self-executing.

In Griffin, defendant Ceasar Griffin filed a federal action against Judge Sheffey, former Confederate Officer and judge in Griffin's trial, arguing that the Fourteenth Amendment automatically acted to remove Judge Sheffey from office, "operating directly, without any intermediate proceeding whatever, upon all persons within the category of prohibition, and as depriving them at once, and absolutely, of all official authority and power." Id. at 23. The federal district court agreed and ordered Griffin's immediate discharge from custody.

On appeal, Chief Justice Chase observed that "it is obviously impossible to [disqualify] by a simple declaration . . . . [I]t must be ascertained what particular individuals are embraced by the definition, before any sentence of exclusion can be made to operate." Id. Chase concluded that the Due Process Clause foreclosed the argument that Section Three automatically disqualifies someone from offense without a trial:

> Now it is undoubted that those provisions of the constitution which deny to the legislature power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto, are inconsistent in their spirit and general purpose with a provision which, at once without trial, deprives a whole class of > persons of offices held by them, for cause, however grave.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Id. at 26. Accordingly, Chief Justice Chase held that the provisions of Section Three can only be enforced by Congress. "To accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable; and these can only be provided for by Congress." Id. It was the very language of the Fourteenth Amendment, Chief Justice Chase continued, that put this proposition beyond doubt: "Now, the necessity of this is recognized by the amendment itself, in its fifth and final section, which declares that 'congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provision[s] of this article.'" Id. (quoting U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 5). He concluded that > the intention of the people of the United States, in adopting the Fourteenth Amendment, was to create a disability, to be removed in proper cases by a two-thirds vote, and to be made operative in other cases by the legislations of congress in its ordinary course.

Id.

Subsequent cases recognized the reasoning of Griffin. See, e.g., Hansen v. Finchem, 2022 Ariz. Super. LEXIS 5 (Maricopa Cnty. Sup. Ct. 2022) ("[G]iven the current state of the law and in accordance with the United States Constitution, Plaintiffs have no private right of action to assert claims under the Disqualification Clause"), aff'd on other grounds, 2022 Ariz. LEXIS 168 (Ariz. S. Ct. May 9, 2022); Rothermel v. Meyerle, 136 Pa. 250, 254 (1890) (citing Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26) ("[I]t has also been held that the Fourteenth Amendment, as indeed is shown by the provision made in its fifth section, did not execute itself."); State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599, 616 (Ala. 1875) (Stone, J.) (same). The Colorado Supreme Court tried to distinguish these cases, pointing out that in some of them, such as Rothermel, the court's analysis was limited and instead simply acknowledged Griffin's holding. Pet. App. 94a. But that has it backward. Rothermel and the like cases did not need to independently analyze Griffin, not because its holding was dubious, but because its holding was clear and well established. Needlessly reciting Griffin's analysis would have been superfluous. Instead, the courts simply acknowledged Griffin's unassailable conclusion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The challengers here present Griffin as an outlier, but it is not. Griffin reflects this Court's repeated emphasis on the need for Congress to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment. No one at the time rejected or attacked Griffin. On the contrary, as the cases cited above indicate, it was repeatedly treated as authoritative.

Moreover, as Justice Samour discussed in his dissent below, implementing legislation is also critical for due process reasons. Without implementing legislation, there can be no clarity as to what standards may be required:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Section Three doesn't spell out the procedures that must be followed to determine whether someone has engaged in insurrection after taking the prerequisite oath. That is, it sheds no light on whether a jury must be empaneled, or a bench trial will suffice, the proper burdens of proof and standards of review, the application of discovery and evidentiary rules, or even whether civil or criminal proceedings are contemplated. This dearth of procedural guidance is not surprising: Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment specifically gives Congress absolute power to enact legislation to enforce Section Three.

Pet. App. 246a.

Likewise, immediately after Griffin, Congress enacted the Enforcement Act of 1870 for the specific purpose of enforcing Section Three. Enforcement Act of 1870, ch. 114, 16 Stat. 140, 143-44. The Enforcement Act provided a civil quo warranto action (that has now been abolished and is no longer in force), specifically for the purpose of enforcing Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Senator Trumbull, discussing the provision in Congress, explained, "The Constitution provides no means for enforcing itself, and this is merely a bill to give effect to the fundamental law embraced in the Constitution." Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess. 626 (1869). He later reiterated this point, explaining that "[s]ome statute is certainly necessary to enforce the constitutional provision." Id. There does not appear to be any evidence of someone arguing in response at those debates that a congressional enforcement mechanism was unnecessary. As Justice Samour explained, Pet. App. 281a-283a, the fact that Congress adopted enforcement legislation almost immediately after Chief Justice Chase concluded enforcement legislation was necessary is strong evidence that Griffin was correctly decided and accepted by the people of his day, people who had just adopted Section Three.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

That this legislation is no longer in place does not alter the fact that Congress recognized legislation was necessary when it adopted it in 1870. If there exists any current descendant of the Enforcement Act, it is 18 U.S.C. § 2383, which defines insurrection and provides a penalty of disqualification. As noted above, not only has President Trump not been convicted of violating § 2383, he never has been charged under that statute. State courts lack authority to nonetheless rule him disqualified.

Justice Samour explained:

> Chief Justice Chase presciently observed that to "ascertain what particular individuals are embraced" by Section Three's disqualifying function, and to "ensure effective results" in a disqualification case, considerable "proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions . . . are indispensable." Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. at 26. In my view, the unwieldy experience of the instant litigation proves beyond any doubt the foresight of Chief Justice Chase's pronouncements . . . , Section Three > disqualification necessarily requires substantial procedural and normative mechanisms to ensure a fair and constitutionally compliant outcome.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Pet. App. 294a-295a.

In footnote 11 of its opinion, the Colorado Supreme Court argued that > [t]he question of 'self-execution' that we confront here is not whether Section Three creates a cause of action or a remedy, but whether the disqualification from office defined in Section Three can be evaluated by a state court when presented with a proper vehicle (like section 1-1-113), without prior congressional authorization.

Pet. App. 78a. This is fundamentally flawed. There is no authority "permitting state legislatures to do that which, though delegated to it, Congress has declined to do." Pet. App. 298a (Samour, J., dissenting). As this Court has previously explained, although states in general retain broad authority, that authority does not extend to setting new qualifications for federal office. United States Term Limits v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 832-33 (1995) ("The Framers intended the Elections Clause to grant States authority to create procedural regulations, not to provide States with license to exclude classes of candidates from federal office.").

Despite all its lengthy arguments, the error of the decision below is basic. The court feared "the absurd results" that would follow from not reaching a conclusion that Section Three is self-executing. Pet. App. 87a. But the true absurdity here would be rejecting 150 years of precedent to disqualify a former president for the first time in our history based on untested, novel Fourteenth Amendment theories. Ownbey 256 U.S. at 112 ("[I]t cannot rightly be said that the Fourteenth Amendment furnishes a universal and self-executing remedy."). Congress alone can enforce Section Three. Indeed, the whole point of the Fourteenth Amendment was to reign in rebellious states. To read Section Three as giving states veto power over presidential candidates would be to turn that amendment upside down.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III. The Colorado Supreme Court's Decision Violates the Colorado Republican Party's First Amendment Associational Right to Choose Its Own Political Candidates.

The Colorado Supreme Court's unprecedented decision violates the Colorado Republican Party's First Amendment associational right to place the political candidates of its choice on both the primary and general electoral ballots. As this Court recognized in Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567, 575 (2000):

> In no area is the political association's right to exclude more important than in the process of selecting its nominee. That process often determines the party's positions on the most > significant public policy issues of the day, and even when those positions are predetermined it is the nominee who becomes the party's ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party's views.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Id. See also Duke v. Cleland, 954 F.2d 1526, 1531 (11th. Cir. 1992).

The Colorado Supreme Court thus exceeded its authority in directing the removal of the Party's nominee from the ballot. As the Minnesota Supreme Court recently recognized in an analogous situation, Growe v. Simon, No. A23-1354 (Minn. Nov. 8, 2023), "although the Secretary of State and other election officials administer the mechanics of the election, this is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes."

To more clearly elucidate the First Amendment violation that occurred here, consider the backdrop against which it occurred: The Colorado Election Code. On its face, the Election Code recognizes the rights of political parties and erects guardrails to constrain the Secretary of State from making discretionary (i.e., political, arbitrary) determinations that would violate those rights. These guardrails are critical, yet the Colorado Supreme Court crashed through them like a runaway truck. And the resulting legal disaster extends beyond misapplication of state law by a state's highest court. This disaster presents a constitutional crisis, national in scope. The Colorado Republican Party urges this Court to vindicate its First Amendment associational right disregarded below, and in so doing, avert the disaster.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Colorado Election Code says what it says for a reason—state political parties have well-established First Amendment rights. As the Colorado Republican Party explained below, > [t]he First Amendment to the United States Constitution, and Colorado law, C.R.S. § 1-4-1204(1), work in tandem to protect the Party's and candidates' rights to freely associate for purposes of engaging in political advocacy and expression – with certain enumerated, non-discretionary, compliance-confirming authorities reserved to the Secretary of State, and the discretionary authority reserved to the political parties.

CO GOP's Mot. to Dismiss 12-13. Specifically, under C.R.S. § 1-4-1204(1)(b) and the First Amendment, the Colorado Republican Party, not the Secretary of State, has the ultimate authority to determine whether an individual is a "bona fide candidate for president of the United States pursuant to political party rules." Id. The Colorado Republican Party, not the Secretary, sets its internal rules and determines the requirements for Republican nominees. By directing the Secretary of State to disqualify candidates based on amorphous and contested factual findings subject to deferential review, Pet App. 160a, the Colorado Supreme Court violated the Republican Party's right to freely associate and choose its political standard bearer. While there may be limited circumstances not at issue here in which a state official might properly adjudicate straightforward, nonpolitical matters like age or residency, the First Amendment surely does not permit state authorities to go beyond and determine the complex, political question of insurrection.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Political speech is indispensable to a free society, and as such is afforded the broadest and most sacred First Amendment protections. Political speech includes "discussions of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated or should be operated, and all such matters relating to political processes." Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 218-19 (1966). It embraces "[a]dvocacy of the election or defeat of candidates for federal office," "political policy," and "advocacy of the passage or defeat of legislation." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 48 (1976). A party's selection of a candidate is core political speech, further described as "interactive communication concerning political change." Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414, 422 (1988).

As this Court has recognized, the "exclusion of candidates . . . burdens voters' freedom of association, because an election campaign is an effective platform for the expression of views on the issues of the day, and a candidate serves as a rallying point for like-minded citizens." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 787-88 (1983).

> We have repeatedly held that freedom of association is protected by the First Amendment. And of course, this freedom protected against federal encroachment by the First Amendment is entitled under the Fourteenth Amendment to the same protection from infringement by the States.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Similarly, we have said with reference to the right to vote: "No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live. Other rights, even the most basic, are illusory if the right to vote is undermined." . . .

Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 30-31 (1968) (quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964). As this Court explained in Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, "[t]he First Amendment protects the right of citizens to associate and to form political parties for the advancement of common political goals and ideas." 520 U.S. 351, 357 (1997). States may not enact "unreasonably exclusionary restrictions" on ballot access. Id. at 369.

The Colorado Supreme Court paid lip service to this principle, recognizing the Republican Party's "claim that it has a right to select its own candidate is uncontroversial, so far as it goes." Pet. App. 65a (citing Timmons, 520 U.S. at 359). But after recognizing the existence of the principle, the court failed to appropriately apply it, resulting in the instant constitutional error. "The right to form a party for the advancement of political goals means little if a party can be kept off the election ballot and thus denied an equal opportunity to win votes." Williams, 393 U.S. at 31 (1968).

The Colorado Supreme Court properly recognized that certain appropriate and reasonable ballot exclusions may be permissible. For example, limiting ballot access "to those who have complied with state election law requirements is the prototypical example of a regulation that, while it affects the right to vote, is eminently reasonable." Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 440 n.10 (1992). However, the imposition of an "insurrection disqualification" here is a horse of a different color.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, with respect to primary elections, the associational rights of political parties are at their apex. Parties are free to make their own choices, and courts rightly refuse to deny parties the opportunity to set their own requirements. Jones, 530 U.S. 567 (2000) (statute providing that any voter could vote in a party's primary unconstitutional); Tashjian v. Republican Party, 479 U.S. 208 (1986) (statute's requirement that voters in a primary be members of that party unconstitutional). As the Minnesota Supreme Court correctly explained, a primary "is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes." Growe v. Simon, No. A23-1354 (Minn. Nov. 8, 2023). The cases cited by the Colorado Supreme Court as upholding an exclusion from the ballot, such as Timmons, 520 U.S. at 358, all involved an exclusion from the general ballot. This interference with the Party's internal decision-making during the primary election process is unprecedented.

Second, this Court is clear that even in the general elections, a political party retains First Amendment rights. States may not enact "unreasonably exclusionary restrictions." Timmons, 520 U.S. at 367. Laws regarding general ballot access must be "reasonable, politically neutral regulations." Burdick, 504 U.S. at 438. "[T]he State's asserted regulatory interests need only be 'sufficiently weighty to justify the limitation' imposed on the Party's rights." Timmons, 520 U.S. at 364 (citing Norman v. Reed, 502 U.S. 279, 288-89 (1992)). Timmons does not give carte blanche to any purported election regulation. Instead, it explicitly requires that the State's proposed justification be both "reasonable" and "politically neutral." So, for example, courts have deemed age and residency requirements permissible under this standard. See, e.g., Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061, 1063 (9th Cir. 2014) ("Distinctions based on undisputed ineligibility due to age do not "limit political participation by an identifiable political group whose members share a particular viewpoint, associational preference or economic status." Bates v. Jones, 131 F.3d 843, 847 (9th Cir. 1997))

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

By contrast, the requirement imposed by the Colorado Supreme Court here is heavily political, non-neutral, and not-generally-applicable. The state cannot impose its own, politically charged, interpretation of Section Three, when no congressional enactment has given it authority to do so. Congress defines the parameters of the enforcement of Section Three. Colorado exceeds its authority and violates the First Amendment by claiming the authority to remove a party's candidates from the ballot, absent a properly established adjudication of insurrection.

The Colorado Supreme Court reasoned that, "nothing in the U.S. Constitution expressly precludes states from limiting access to the presidential ballot to such candidates." Pet. App. 45a. But a state cannot purport to justify an infringement on a party's First Amendment rights by arguing from the absence of a parallel constraint on state's rights.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Republican Party has been irreparably harmed by the decision below. The state has interfered in the primary election by unreasonably restricting the Party's ability to select its candidates. As a natural and inevitable result, the state has interfered with the Party's ability to place on the general election ballot the candidate of its choice. And it has done so based on a subjective claim of insurrection the state lacks any constitutional authority to make.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

This Court should grant certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

MICHAEL W. MELITO
MELITO LAW LLC
ROBERT A. KITSMILLER
PODOLL & PODOLL, P.C.
[redacted]

CHRISTINA A. COMPAGNONE
OLIVIA F. SUMMERS
GARRETT A. TAYLOR
AMERICAN CENTER FOR LAW & JUSTICE
[redacted]

JAY ALAN SEKULOW
Counsel of Record
JORDAN A. SEKULOW
STUART J. ROTH
ANDREW J. EKONOMOU
JANE SERENE RASKIN
WALTER M. WEBER
BENJAMIN P. SISNEY
NATHAN MOELKER
AMERICAN CENTER FOR LAW & JUSTICE
[redacted]

Counsel for Petitioner

December 27, 2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/3/2024 10:43:56 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://static01.nyt.com/newsgraphics/documenttools/9a52ab1adf471cda/dfe18fa1-full.pdf

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:33:34 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Ok, also I am hearing that Trump has filed.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:08 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will have comments to you this evening. As you may have seen, Secretary Griswold is not opposing cert., except on the First Amendment issue about parties' rights to have whomever they want on the ballot.

https://www.supremecourt.gov/search.aspx?filename=/docket/docketfiles/html/public/23-696.html

---

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 12:17 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Hi Jonathan,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/4/2024 8:13:30 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

FYI - The Colorado State Republican Central Committee just filed its reply.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, January 4, 2024 at 2:00 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>, Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Will call you

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, January 4, 2024 1:39 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

I'm around this afternoon if you'd like to chat.

Best,

Jonathan

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, January 4, 2024 at 10:04 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>, Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Sounds good, thank you.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, January 4, 2024 9:29 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 6:28 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>, Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 6:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Victoria Bassetti <victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Erik and Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 5:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

https://static01.nyt.com/newsgraphics/documenttools/9a52ab1adf471cda/dfe18fa1-full.pdf

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:33:34 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Ok, also I am hearing that Trump has filed.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:08 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will have comments to you this evening. As you may have seen, Secretary Griswold is not opposing cert., except on the First Amendment issue about parties' rights to have whomever they want on the ballot.

https://www.supremecourt.gov/search.aspx?filename=/docket/docketfiles/html/public/23-696.html

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 12:17 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Hi Jonathan,

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/29/2023 2:31:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Maine 14.3 decision--privileged Attachments: Decision in Challenge to Trump Presidential Primary Petitions.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather and Erik,

As you may have already seen, Maine Secretary of State Shenna Bellows determined yesterday that Donald Trump is disqualified from serving as president under the Fourteenth Amendment and therefore may not run in the presidential primary in Maine. (Unlike in Michigan, Maine law provides authority for the Secretary of State to make this kind of eligibility determination.) The 34-page ruling is attached and also available at https://www.maine.gov/sos/news/2023/Decision%20in%20Challenge%20to%20Trump%20Presidential%20Primary%20Petitions.pdf.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Maine law provides for review in the Superior Court (trial court) and then in the Law Court (the highest court). Trump's deadline to seek review in the Superior Court is January 2. Like the Colorado Supreme Court, Secretary Bellows provided that her ruling would be stayed pending review.

Please let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MAINE
SECRETARY OF STATE

In re: Challenges of Kimberley Rosen, Thomas Saviello, and Ethan Strimling; Paul Gordon; and Mary Ann Royal to Primary Nomination Petition of Donald J. Trump, Republican Candidate for President of the United States	RULING OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

On December 15, 2023, I held a hearing under 21-A M.R.S. § 337 on three challenges to the nomination petition of Donald J. Trump, for the Republican primary for President of the United States. The first two challenges—one filed by Mary Ann Royal (the "Royal Challenge") and one (the "Rosen Challenge") filed by Kimberley Rosen, Thomas Saviello, and Ethan Strimling (the "Rosen Challengers")—contest Mr. Trump's qualification for office under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The third challenge, filed by Paul Gordon (the "Gordon Challenge"), contests Mr. Trump's qualification under the Twenty-Second Amendment. For the reasons set forth below, I conclude that Mr. Trump's primary petition is invalid. Specifically, I find that the declaration on his candidate consent form is false because he is not qualified to hold the office of the President under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Procedural History

The Secretary of State's Office received three challenges to the nomination petition of Donald J. Trump, each filed under 21-A M.R.S. §§ 336 and 337. The deadline for filing those challenges was 5:00 pm on Friday, December 8, 2023. See 21-A M.R.S. § 337(2)(A). Each challenge was timely.

In the first challenge, Mary Ann Royal, a registered voter of Winterport, alleged that Mr. Trump violated his oath of office because he engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or has given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. While Ms. Royal did not explicitly identify Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment as the basis of her challenge, it clearly underpins the disqualification argument she set forth.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the second challenge, Attorney Paul Gordon, a registered voter of Portland, argued that because Mr. Trump has expressly stated that he won the 2020 election, he is barred from office under the Twenty-Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which sets a two-term limit on Presidents.

In the third challenge, Kimberley Rosen, a registered voter of Bucksport and former Republican State Senator; Thomas Saviello, a registered voter of Wilton and former Republican State Senator; and Ethan Strimling, a registered voter of Portland and former Democratic State Senator, collectively contended that Mr. Trump is barred from office because he engaged in insurrection as defined by Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

On Monday, December 11, 2023, I issued a Notice of Hearing to all parties, indicating that a consolidated hearing would be held at 10:00 am on December 15, 2023, in Augusta. The Notice informed the parties that the hearing would be conducted in accordance with 21-A M.R.S. § 337 and the Maine Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"). The parties exchanged exhibit and witness lists during the afternoon of December 13, 2023, and the Secretary of State's Office received timely applications to intervene from the Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington ("CREW"); John Fitzgerald of Sedgwick; State Representative Mike Soboleski; Professor Mark A. Graber; and Michael Lake of Belgrade.

At the start of the hearing, I denied the intervention petitions of Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Lake because they were not present for the hearing. However, without objection from the parties, I ultimately accepted their submissions as amicus briefs. I also granted, without timely objection, the intervention requests of CREW and Representative Soboleski, who were present for the hearing, and the intervention request of Professor Graber, who intervened solely for the purpose of submitting an amicus brief.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

At the start of the hearing, I noted for the parties that the following were already part of the administrative record:

- Mr. Trump's original petition
- Mr. Trump's candidate consent form, dated October 20, 2023
- The challenge of Mary Anne Royal, dated December 6, 2023
- The challenge of Paul Gordon, dated December 8, 2023
- The challenge of Kimberley Rosen, Thomas Saviello, and Ethan Strimling, dated December 8, 2023
- The Notice of Hearing sent by email and U.S. mail to the challengers and the candidate, dated December 11, 2023

Without objection from the parties, I admitted the Rosen Challengers' first five exhibits. They consist of Mr. Trump's signed consent form (identical to Mr. Trump's first and only exhibit[1]); the Rosen Challenge; and voter registration records for each Rosen challenger.[2] I provisionally admitted the Rosen Challengers' remaining exhibits, exhibits 6 through 112,[3] at the hearing pending resolution of any objections. I also provisionally admitted Attorney Gordon's three exhibits, all articles pertaining to Mr. Trump's claims regarding the 2020 election, as well as [1] Mr. Trump attached additional exhibits to a brief he submitted after the hearing, which I have addressed below.

[2] No party has challenged the voter registration status of any challenger, and I therefore find that each challenge complies with 21-A M.R.S. § 337(2)(A).

[3] Exhibit 111 is a file folder containing a series of additional exhibits. For ease of reference, I have renumbered those exhibits as Rosen Ex. 111-1 through Ex. 111-56.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Representative Soboleski's single exhibit, a YouTube video concerning Mr. Trump's role in the events of January 6, 2021.

At the hearing, Ms. Royal and Attorney Gordon testified under oath. The Rosen Challengers called one witness, Professor Gerard M. Magliocca, a law professor at the Indiana University School of Law. Mr. Trump called no witnesses. I also heard argument on the scope of my authority under state and federal law.

Without objection of the parties, I set a deadline of 5:00 pm on Monday, December 18, for articulation and briefing of objections to any provisionally admitted exhibits, and I therefore held the hearing record open. Mr. Trump timely filed a brief articulating objections, and the Rosen Challengers timely responded by the deadline I set at the hearing: 5:00 pm on Tuesday, December 19. No other party filed objections.

I likewise permitted the parties to submit final legal briefs regarding the merits of the challenges by Tuesday, December 19, at 5:00 pm. The Rosen Challengers and Mr. Trump chose to waive closing statements at the hearing, deferring instead to their legal briefs. I received timely closing briefs from the Rosen Challengers and Mr. Trump.

Following the Colorado Supreme Court's decision in Anderson v. Griswold, Case No. 23SA300, 2023 CO 63, 2023 WL 8770111 (Dec. 19, 2023), I invited additional briefing from the parties regarding the significance of that decision, if any, to this case by 8:00 pm on Thursday, December 21, 2023. The Rosen Challengers and Mr. Trump filed briefs by the deadline.

On Wednesday, December 27, sixteen days after he learned that I would preside over the hearing in this matter and shortly before issuance of my decision, Mr. Trump filed a Motion requesting that I disqualify myself due to alleged bias. That Motion is denied as untimely. See 5 M.R.S. § 9063(1) (requiring "timely charge of bias"). Moreover, had the Motion been timely, I would have determined that I could preside over this matter impartially and without bias. My decision is based exclusively on the record before me, and it has in no way been influenced by my political affiliation or personal views about the events of January 6, 2021.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Legal Requirements

Under Section 443 of Title 21-A, the Secretary of State is responsible for preparing ballots for a presidential primary election. The Secretary must "determine if a petition meets the requirements of," as relevant here, Section 336 of Title 21-A, "subject to challenge and appeal under section 337." 21-A M.R.S. § 443.

Section 336 requires that a candidate consent form be filed with the primary petition or at any earlier time during which signatures may be collected. Id. § 336. That form, which is prepared by the Secretary of State, "must include a list of the statutory and constitutional requirements of the office sought by the candidate." Id. § 336(1). The submitted form must also contain a "declaration of the candidate's place of residence and party designation and a statement that the candidate meets the qualifications of the office the candidate seeks, which the candidate must verify by oath or affirmation . . . that the declaration is true." Id. § 336(3).

"If, pursuant to the challenge procedures in section 337, any part of the declaration is found to be false by the Secretary of State, the consent and the primary petition are void." Id. To prevail on a challenge to a candidate's nomination petition, "the challenger has the burden of providing sufficient evidence to invalidate the petitions or any names upon the petitions." Id. § 337(2)(B).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

I have reviewed the exhibits submitted in this case. I also have carefully considered the arguments proffered by the parties. I take my role in this proceeding extremely seriously, given both the stakes and the novel constitutional questions at issue. For the reasons that follow, I conclude that Mr. Trump's primary petition is invalid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. Most of the Evidence Submitted by the Rosen Challengers, and Objected to by Mr. Trump, Is Admissible Under 5 M.R.S. § 9057.

Title 5, Section 9057 sets forth the governing standard for admissibility of evidence in Section 337 proceedings. It is more permissive than the Maine Rules of Evidence, see 21-A M.R.S. § 9057(1), and directs that "[e]vidence shall be admitted if it is the kind of evidence upon which reasonable persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs," id. § 9057(2). I "may," though by no means must, "exclude irrelevant or unduly repetitious evidence." Id. This "relaxed evidentiary standard," State v. Renfro, 2017 ME 49, ¶ 10, 157 A.3d 775, affords me substantial latitude to decide what evidence to admit, though it generally favors admissibility.

Mr. Trump first makes a blanket objection, on Due Process grounds, to the fact that he was unable to review the Rosen Challengers' exhibits before the hearing. As discussed on the record, due to a technical difficulty suffered by the Rosen Challengers, a Dropbox link provided to the parties before the hearing and containing many of the Rosen Exhibits was inoperative. With assistance from my office, copies of the evidence were provided to counsel during the hearing.

This delay does not amount to a Due Process violation. There is no requirement under the APA that evidence be shared prior to an administrative hearing. The APA mandates that parties be permitted to "present evidence and arguments on all issues, and at any hearing to call and examine witnesses and to make oral cross-examination of any person present and testifying." 5 M.R.S. § 9056(2). Mr. Trump was afforded those opportunities at the hearing.

Further, at my instruction, the Rosen Challengers circulated an exhibit list before 5:00 pm on Wednesday, December 13, that identified Rosen Exhibits 1 through 87. Additional exhibits that the Rosen Challengers entered into evidence at the hearing were identified by Intervenor

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CREW by email during the afternoon of Thursday, December 14. Therefore, by early evening on December 14, Mr. Trump was fully aware of all of the exhibits that would be offered against him at the hearing.

This was ample notice, in part because the majority of the evidence that the Rosen Challengers offered at the hearing had already been presented and litigated in Anderson v. Griswold. Scott Gessler, Mr. Trump's lead counsel here, is lead counsel for Mr. Trump in that case, too. See generally Anderson, 2023 CO 63. I also afforded all parties three additional days after the hearing to organize and file their objections to any exhibits, minimizing any disadvantage that may have resulted from the delay in the exhibits being shared. Mr. Trump's Due Process objection to the Rosen Challengers' exhibits is therefore overruled.

The notice the Rosen Challengers provided stands in stark contrast to how Mr. Trump has handled 25 exhibits,[4] never before referenced in this proceeding, that he cites in footnotes to his evidentiary objections brief. Mr. Trump has not requested that I enter these exhibits into evidence, nor would it be fair to do so over an objection three days after the hearing. Mr. Trump submitted an exhibit list prior to the hearing containing only one exhibit, and he could have supplemented the record with additional exhibits at the hearing. He chose not to do so, and I accordingly sustain the objection of the Rosen Challengers, as articulated in their response brief, to those exhibits. They will not be admitted.[5]

[4] The exhibits are numbered 26-51. Mr. Trump has never identified exhibits 1-25.

[5] Mr. Trump also attached a single exhibit to his closing brief, namely a report of the Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Defense on the events of January 6, 2021. Mr. Trump does not cite the exhibit in his brief, nor has its admission been objected to by the Rosen Challengers. I find that the exhibit is relevant and reliable and, without objection, will admit it into evidence as Trump Exhibit 2.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Trump also makes a blanket challenge to the relevance of the Rosen Challengers' evidence, claiming that none pertains to the truth or falsity of Mr. Trump's declaration under Section 336(3). As discussed further below, I conclude that the evidence is relevant. See 5 M.R.S. § 9057(2). I accordingly overrule the objection.

The meat of Mr. Trump's objection brief is focused on the Rosen Challengers' Exhibit 7, the Final Report of the Select Committee to Investigate the January 6 Attack on the United States Capitol (the "January 6 Report"). Mr. Trump's objections to the admissibility of the report are overruled.

As an initial matter, Mr. Trump's objections hinge largely on rules of evidence that do not govern this proceeding. The fact that a report includes hearsay, contains irrelevant facts, or lacks foundation does not automatically render it inadmissible under the APA. Rather, the central question is whether, under Section 9057(2), it is the type of evidence on which reasonable persons are accustomed to rely in serious affairs.

I rule that that the January 6 Report meets this standard. Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, government investigative reports, including reports of Congress, are presumed admissible, with the party challenging admissibility bearing the burden of showing the report is untrustworthy. See Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Rainey, 488 U.S. 153, 167 (1988); Barry v. Trustees of Int'l Ass'n Full-Time Salaried Officers & Emps. of Outside Loc. Unions & Dist. Counsel's (Iron Workers) Pension Plan, 467 F. Supp. 2d 91, 96 (D.D.C. 2006). Trustworthiness is assessed according to a non-exhaustive list of four factors: "(1) the timeliness of the investigation; (2) the special skill or expertise of the investigating official; (3) whether a hearing was held and the level at which it was conducted; and (4) possible motivation problems." Barry, 467 F. Supp. 2d at 97; see also Beech Aircraft, 488 U.S. at 167 n.11. Similarly, in Maine, "factual findings from a legally authorized investigation" are admissible under the Maine Rules of Evidence unless "sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness. See Me. R. Evid. 803(8)(a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I am not bound by either the federal or Maine rules of evidence because this is an APA proceeding. However, the four factors outlined above provide a useful framework for assessing the trustworthiness of the January 6 Report. The first three factors plainly counsel in favor of admissibility. Mr. Trump's objections focus primarily on the fourth factor, namely the motivation of the authors. But all Congressional reports are to some degree political, and many of the facts contained in the Report are corroborated by other documentary and video evidence in the record. I accordingly see no reason to exclude the January 6 Report in its entirety under 5 M.R.S. § 9057(2). That said, Mr. Trump's concerns are valid insofar as the Report reflects a curated view of the evidence and contains characterizations of that evidence. These limitations influence the weight that I assign to the Report.

Mr. Trump also objects to the records and evidence that the Rosen Challengers seek to admit from the proceedings in Anderson.[6] Mr. Trump's reliance on Cabral v. L'Hereux, 2017 ME 50, 157 A.3d 795, to support his objection is misplaced. In that case, the Law Court instructed that courts cannot of their own accord take judicial notice of testimony and exhibits from separate proceedings. See id., 2017 ME 50, ¶ 11, 157 A.3d 795. But that is not what the Rosen Challengers have requested here. They have sought to admit each and every exhibit individually, and have provided a copy of each to me and to the parties.[7] The fact that the exhibits are associated with Anderson is, in other words, beside the point, as it is the evidence itself that the Rosen Challengers have identified as exhibits. That is sufficient under 5 M.R.S. § 9057(2), and the objection is overruled.[8]

[6] Mr. Trump likewise objects to inclusion of the final order issued in New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin. See Rosen Ex. 36. The objection is overruled. I may properly consider the legal analysis of a court on relevant legal issues to the extent the analysis is persuasive.

[7] Moreover, as noted above, testimony included in those exhibits was subject to cross-examination by Mr. Trump during the Anderson proceedings.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Trump also levies a number of individual objections to particular exhibits proffered by the Rosen Challengers.[9] I sustain these objections in part. Specifically, while I am not obligated to exclude irrelevant evidence, see 5 M.R.S. § 9057(2), I conclude that Rosen Exhibits 38-48, videos of speeches, town halls, and conferences from 2015-2019 and 2023, are too remote in time from the events of January 6, 2021, to be relevant, and I therefore will exclude them. I likewise sustain Mr. Trump's objection as to Rosen Exhibits 78 and 79—my predecessor's November 2017 press release, and letter of August 2018—for the same reason.

Otherwise, Mr. Trump's objections are overruled. Insofar as he has concerns about authenticity, foundation, completeness, hearsay, or improper legal argument, they do not render the challenged exhibits automatically inadmissible under the APA, and I find them reliable given they themselves contain sufficient indicia of reliability and are corroborated by other evidence in the record. I will consider Mr. Trump's concerns when assigning weight to these exhibits.[10]

In sum, I sustain Mr. Trump's objections as to Rosen Exhibits 38-48 and 78-79. I likewise sustain the Rosen Challengers' objection to the exhibits attached to Mr. Trump's evidentiary objections brief. Otherwise, Rosen Exhibits 6-112, which I admitted provisionally at the hearing,

---

[8] Mr. Trump also makes a puzzling res judicata argument, suggesting that because he prevailed in a lower Colorado court, the Rosen Challengers cannot introduce evidence from that case against him. Putting aside the lack of any legal basis for this argument, I will assume that Mr. Trump no longer wishes to press it given the subsequent decision of the Colorado Supreme Court.

[9] The First Amendment argument that Mr. Trump included in his objections brief, and which has no bearing on the admissibility of evidence, is addressed in Part D.4, below.

[10] As to the legal briefs objected to—e.g., Rosen Exhibit 81, the amicus brief of Professor Magliocca in Growe v. Simon—I agree that they are not evidence of any fact and I admit them solely to consider their analysis of the applicable law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

are admitted. All other exhibits that were provisionally admitted at the hearing are now admitted given no party filed an objection to their admission. With this ruling, the hearing record is now closed.

B. As a General Matter, the Secretary of State Has Authority to Keep Unqualified Candidates Off the Primary Election Ballot.

As a general matter, states have inherent authority over their ballots. Consistent with state authority to regulate the "Times, Places and Manner" of congressional elections under Article I, Section 4 of the U.S. Constitution, and to manage the selection process for presidential electors, see U.S. Const. art. II, § 1 ("Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors . . . . "); McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 35 (1892 ("[T]he appointment and mode of appointment of electors belong exclusively to the states under the constitution of the United States."), "the States have evolved comprehensive . . . election codes regulating . . . . [the] selection and qualification of candidates." Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724, 730 (1974).

The inevitable result of States managing their own elections is that each has different requirements and procedures for ballot access, even with respect to presidential candidates. President Biden, for example, will not appear on New Hampshire's 2024 Democratic presidential primary ballot, even though he has qualified for Maine's 2024 Democratic presidential primary ballot. At the same time, Mr. Chris Christie will not appear on the Maine's 2024 Republican presidential primary ballot, even though he will appear on New Hampshire's 2024 Republican presidential primary ballot.

Similarly, while state legislatures cannot create new qualifications for holding presidential office, they can choose to establish a process to exclude candidates who fail to meet the qualifications set forth in the U.S. Constitution. See, e.g., Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 53-56. As now-Justice Gorsuch observed in Hassan v. Colorado, 495 F. App'x 947 (10th Cir. 2012), "a state's legitimate interest in protecting the integrity and practical functioning of the political process permits it to exclude from the ballot candidates who are constitutionally prohibited from assuming office." Id. at 948; see also Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061, 1065 (9th Cir. 2022) (excluding age-ineligible candidate for president because "a state has an interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies" (quoting Bullock v. Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972))); Socialist Workers Party of Ill v. Ogilvie, 357 F. Supp. 109, 113 (N.D. Ill. 1972) (holding state was not obligated to place presidential candidate on the ballot who did not meet age requirement).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is that authority that the Maine Legislature has delegated to me. As the Rosen Challengers note, under Section 443 of Title 21-A, the Secretary of State is statutorily obligated to determine if a nomination petition meets the requirements of Section 336. See, e.g., Christie v. Bellows, No. AP-23-42 (Me. Super. Ct., Ken. Cnty., Dec. 21, 2023) (affirming Secretary's decision to reject candidate petition of presidential candidate for lacking sufficient certified signatures). Section 336, in turn, requires all candidates, including presidential candidates, to submit a written consent containing a declaration of residency and party designation, and a statement that the candidate "meets the qualifications of the office the candidate seeks." 21-A M.R.S. § 336(3). Section 336 also renders any primary petition void where I find, pursuant to a challenge like those filed in this case, that "any part of the declaration is . . . false." Id.

Maine's election laws thus contemplate that I review the accuracy of a candidate's declaration that they meet the qualifications of the office they seek. I therefore disagree with Mr. Trump's contention that only Congress can adjudicate the qualifications of a Presidential candidate. The State's authority, and that delegated by the Legislature, require me to limit access to the primary ballot to qualified candidates See, e.g., Christie, No. AP-23-42; Carey v. Sec'y of State, No. CV-2022-09 (Me. Super. Ct., Oxford Cnty., May 10, 2022) (affirming decision to exclude candidate for District Attorney from primary ballot because "Maine election law required that [the candidate] certify . . . that he was qualified to serve as a District attorney" but he failed to so certify because by statute he was not qualified).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Two further aspects of my authority to exclude unqualified candidates from the primary ballot warrant mention. First, that authority is not limited to the specific qualifications set forth on a given year's candidate consent form. While Section 336 requires that the consent form list the statutory and constitutional requirements of the office sought by the candidate, 21-A M.R.S. § 336(1), the declaration refers not to the form, but to the qualifications: the candidate must "verify by oath or affirmation" that they "meet the qualifications of the office the candidate seeks." 21-A M.R.S. § 336(3); accord Carey, No. CV-2022-09. The statute reflects that the Legislature's principal concern was not whether a candidate is truthful on the form, but more fundamentally whether the candidate is qualified for office.

For this reason, the declaration on the 2024 consent form, which asks candidates to confirm that they "meet the qualifications to hold this office as listed above," Rosen Ex. 1 (signed consent), is not, as Mr. Trump claims, limited to the qualifications listed on that form. The word "as" in the declaration is significant. Absent the word "as," the phrase "meet the qualifications to hold this office listed above" would limit the scope of the declaration as Mr. Trump claims. Its presence, however, underscores that the qualifications are listed on the consent form as a convenience—the qualifications "as listed above"—consistent with my obligation to print them under Section 336(1).

Any alternative interpretation would suggest that I can pick and choose which qualifications are applicable in designing a candidate consent form, which I straightforwardly cannot do. See Doane v. Dep't of Health & Hum. Servs., 2017 ME 193, ¶ 13, 170 A.3d 269 ("If a regulation conflicts with an existing statute, the statute controls."). The form, for example, omits reference to the Twenty-Second Amendment prohibition of serving as President for more than two terms, but that qualification plainly still applies. Similarly, if my office did not list the Article II qualifications on the form, I would not consequently be required to place a teenager on the presidential primary ballot. The declaration is instead applicable to all qualifications of the office sought, and there is nothing unfair about holding a candidate to them, as Section 336(3) contemplates.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, the fact that Section 336(3) separately refers to a "declaration of the candidate's place of residence and party designation and a statement that the candidate meets the qualifications of the office the candidate seeks" is of no moment. Counsel for Mr. Trump—who, before his co-counsel said the opposite, admitted at the hearing that the declaration and statement were legally indistinguishable—points to no aspect of the legislative history of Section 336 suggesting that the distinction is meaningful. Section 336(3) requires that both the declaration and statement be verified by oath or affirmation, and Section 355, which incorporates analogous requirements for nomination petitions of non-party candidates, collapses the distinction entirely and directly requires a declaration "that the candidate meets the qualifications of the office the candidate seeks." 21-A M.R.S. § 355(3).

That said, even if there were a distinction between the declaration and statement identified in Section 336(3), that would not meaningfully limit my obligation to keep unqualified candidates off the ballot. The Rosen Challenge, for example, cites both Section 336 and Section 337. While Section 336(3) addresses the declaration—and directs that the petition is invalid should I find that declaration false in any way—Section 337(2) authorizes challenges to the validity of primary petitions more broadly, underscoring my authority as Secretary of State to keep clearly unqualified candidates off the primary ballot. Cf. Arsenault v. Sec'y of State, 2006 ME 11, 905 A.2d 285 (reviewing whether Secretary properly interpreted relevant statute in disqualifying replacement candidate without questioning Secretary's authority to disqualify unqualified candidates).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C. Mr. Trump's False Claims Regarding the 2020 Election Do Not Disqualify Him Under the Twenty-Second Amendment.

The Twenty-Second Amendment provides that "[n]o person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice." U.S. Const. amend. XXII, § 1. Attorney Gordon claims that given Mr. Trump won the 2016 election, and has repeatedly claimed to have won the 2020 election, he is disqualified. See Gordon Challenge 2 ("When a candidate makes a factual representation that disqualifies him from the office he seeks, he cannot appear on the ballot."); see also Gordon Exs. 1-3 (newspaper articles quoting Mr. Trump making these claims).

Attorney Gordon cites no authority for his interpretation of the Twenty-Second Amendment, which is contrary to the Amendment's plain meaning. Application of the term limit turns on whether an individual has actually been elected President twice, not on beliefs or assertions about that fact. Cf. Nader v. Butz, 398 F. Supp. 390, 397 (D.D.C. 1975) ("Having been elected to [the presidency] twice, [Richard Nixon] is precluded from serving again."). That Mr. Trump has falsely asserted that he won the 2020 election is no more disqualifying than it would be for him to proclaim that he is not a United States citizen. In other words, political grandstanding does not trigger the bar of the Twenty-Second Amendment.

When questioned at the hearing, Attorney Gordon admitted that, as a factual matter, Mr. Trump did not win the 2020 election. In fact, there appears to be no dispute between any of the parties that President Biden prevailed over Mr. Trump. Therefore, given Mr. Trump has only won a single election for President, he is not barred from being elected to the same office again under the Twenty-Second Amendment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

D. Mr. Trump Engaged in Insurrection Against the United States Such that He Is Not Qualified to Hold the Office of President.

1. Section 337 is an appropriate process by which to adjudicate a candidate qualification challenge based on Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The exercise of state authority to keep unqualified candidates off the ballot is contingent on the state creating a process by which to do so. See Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 53-56. Sections 336, 337, and 443 of Title 21-A describe that process in Maine. There is no other mechanism of which I am aware by which a Maine voter can challenge the qualifications of a candidate for office. It is the means by which I am authorized, and indeed duty-bound under the terms of the oath of office to which I swore, see Me. Const. art. IX, § 1, to enforce Maine's election laws.

The question of whether a petition is valid under Title 21-A is typically straightforward. If there is a dispute about the validity of signatures, or a candidate is underage or not a resident of the correct jurisdiction, the taking of extensive evidence may be unnecessary. Discharge of my duty in such cases requires little interpretation of governing law or the corresponding record. Rather, I am tasked with determining whether a statutory or constitutional requirement is met according to well-established standards.

As the Rosen Challengers have pointed out, however, my role in determining whether a candidate has qualified for the ballot is not always so simple. The Secretary of State has, for example, wrestled with complex evidentiary records regarding potential fraud of petition circulators. See Boyer v. Dep't of the Sec'y of State, Docket No. AP-18-20 (Me. Super., Ken. Cty., Apr. 26, 2018). The Secretary has also had to consider novel and difficult questions of state and federal constitutional law. See, e.g., Jones v. Sec'y of State, 2020 ME 113, 238 A.3d 982.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This case presents similar hurdles. See Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 7 (recognizing that a challenge under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is "uncharted territory" and presents "several issues of first impression"). But complexity is not a limitation on my authority under Sections 336, 337, or 443. These statutes do not suggest that I am restricted to adjudicating straightforward questions of law or fact. Nor do I have the discretion to decline to rule in ballot qualification cases simply because they present difficult issues. The statutes instead reflect that Maine has joined other states in choosing to enforce Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, and in doing so the Maine Legislature has delegated that authority to me. See, e.g., Anderson, 2023 CO 36, ¶ 56; New Mexico ex rel. White v. Griffin, No. D-101-CV-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619, at *16 (N.M. Dist. Ct. Sept. 6, 2022); Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 202 (1869); In re Tate, 63 N.C. 308, 308 (1869); Louisiana ex rel. Sandlin v. Watkins, 21 La. Ann. 631, 632 (1869).

Mr. Trump's concerns about the adequacy of this proceeding are therefore without merit. He has had the opportunity to present evidence; to call witnesses; to cross-examine; and to argue at length both the legal and factual issues germane to my decision. And while the timeline of the proceedings has, by necessity, been compressed, this is hardly the first time that Mr. Trump—or Attorney Gessler—has confronted the applicability of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment to a presidential candidate. It likewise is not the first time that Mr. Trump has had to grapple with whether the evidence presented here, which almost directly mirrors that which was offered in Anderson, demonstrates that he engaged in insurrection.[11] And Mr. Trump has the opportunity to appeal my decision, providing him with additional process in both the Superior Court and the Law Court. See M.R. Civ. P. 80C; 21-A M.R.S. § 337(D)-(E); Amsden v. Moran, 904 F.2d 748, 755

[11] In Anderson, Trump had the opportunity to engage in discovery, litigate dispositive motions, and present his full case at a five-day trial, obviating any concern that the speed of this proceeding is unfair. Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 79-86. In fact, both Mr. Trump and the Rosen Challengers heavily rely on the arguments and evidence from the Anderson proceeding.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(1st Cir. 1990) (recognizing that the "existence of state remedies" is "highly relevant" to claims of due process violations).

While I am cognizant of the fact that my decision could soon be rendered a nullity by a decision of the United States Supreme Court in Anderson, that possibility does not relieve me of my responsibility to act. Nor do the deadlines set forth in Section 337 give me the option to delay my decision until the Supreme Court has ruled. I therefore conclude that I have the authority to adjudicate the Rosen and Royal Challenges, and that this Section 337 proceeding is appropriate for doing so.

2. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment Is Self-Executing Without Congressional Action and Applies to the President.

Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, ratified in 1868, provides, in relevant part, that:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States . . . who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of congress, or as an officer of the United States . . . to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. Const. amend XIV, § 3.

As a threshold matter, the fact that Section Three refers to holding office, rather than running for office, is not noteworthy. Article II's qualifications do not refer to running for office, either, but rather are phrased in terms of eligibility "to the office." See U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5. My obligation, here triggered by the Rosen and Royal Challenges, is to keep candidates unqualified to take office from Maine's presidential primary ballot. See 21-A M.R.S. § 336(3); see also Lindsay, 750 F.3d at 1065; Hassan, 495 F. App'x at 948; Ogilvie, 357 F. Supp. at 113.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Turning then to the principal question of whether Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to candidates for president, I conclude that it does, for the following reasons.

First, no Congressional action is necessary to render effective the qualification set forth in Section Three. The Supreme Court has described the Fourteenth Amendment as "undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation, so far as its terms are applicable to any existing set of circumstances." Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 20 (1883). Contemporary evidence suggests the same is true, specifically, of Section Three. See, e.g., Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:46:50-5:48:52 (Magliocca). Both the military and states themselves, for example, began enforcing Section Three soon after adoption without any Congressional authorization. See Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:26:50-5:27:20, 5:46:55-5:47-10 (Magliocca); see also Worthy, 63 N.C. at 202; In re Tate, 63 N.C. at 308; Watkins, 21 La. Ann. at 632; State ex rel. Downes v. Towne, 21 La. Ann. 490 (1869). Congress also began granting amnesties pursuant to its ability to "remove [the] disability" imposed by Section Three, which only would be necessary if Section Three had taken effect. See Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:29:56-5:30:18, 5:47:35-5:47:58 (Magliocca).

I recognize that Section Five of the Fourteenth Amendment provides that "[t]he Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 5. But that does not mean that action pursuant to Section Five is a prerequisite to the substantive provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment having any legal force. Indeed, champions of the Section Three enforcement mechanism that Congress briefly authorized questioned whether it was necessary at all. See Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 626-28. It stands to reason that, like Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment, which the Supreme Court has recognized is self-executing, see City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 524 (1997); see also Cong. Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess., pp. 1095, 2459, 2498 (highlighting desire to ensure Section

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

One could not functionally be repealed by a future Congress); the Thirteenth Amendment, which also contains an enforcement provision and is self-executing, see U.S. Const. amend. XIII; see The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. at 20; and the qualifications of Article II, which are not contingent on enforcement legislation, Section Three requires no Congressional action in order to become effective. See Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 88-106.

On this point, I find Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. 7 (C.C.D. Va. 1869), to be unpersuasive. It is not binding in Maine, does not assess whether states can enforce Section Three without Congressional authorization, and has been discredited. See, e.g., Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 103; Amicus Br. of Constitutional Law Professor Mark A. Graber 7-8 (Dec. 14, 2023).[12]

Second, the presidency is covered by Section Three. It is an "office, civil or military, under the United States," and the President is an "officer of the United States." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3.

The U.S. Constitution repeatedly refers to the presidency as an office. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 3; art. II, §§ 1, 4; U.S. Const. amends. XII, XXII, XXV; see also Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 133 (noting Constitution refers to the presidency as an office 25 times). At first blush, it would seem odd to interpret the text of Section Three to incorporate the President through a catchall provision that follows the enumeration of Senators, Representatives, and presidential and vice-presidential electors. But none of those enumerated positions are "offices" under the Constitution. The Constitution does not refer to Senators and Representatives as such, see, e.g., U.S. Const. art. I, § 5, cl. 1 (referring to "[m]embers" of Senate and House); id. art. I, § 6, cl. 2 (same); id. art. II, § 1, [12] Dicta from Robinson v. Bowen, 567 F. Supp. 2d 1144 (N.D. Cal 2008), cited by Mr. Trump, is likewise unpersuasive. That case involved an attempt to obtain an order from a federal court barring John McCain from the ballot, rather than the enforcement of state laws designed to keep individuals unqualified for the office they seek off the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

cl. 2 (distinguishing Senators and Representatives from those holding office under the United States),[13] and electors are "no more officers or agents of the United States than are . . . the people of the States when acting as electors of representatives in congress," Fitzgerald v. Green, 134 U.S. 377, 379 (1890).

The history of Section Three firmly supports the idea that it covers the presidency. Professor Magliocca testified that Members of Congress believed the presidency to constitute an office when debating the language of Section Three,[14] as did contemporaries outside of Congress, including those who sought to keep Jefferson Davis from the presidency. See Dec. 15, 2013 Hearing 5:36:16-5:41:40; see also Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 140 (highlighting this understanding in debates around adopting the Fourteenth Amendment); cf. District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 577 (2008) (prioritizing normal and ordinary usage of words over "secret or technical meanings that would not have been known to ordinary citizens in the founding generation"). Opinions issued by then–U.S. Attorney General Stanbury echoed this understanding, confirming the breadth of Section Three's reference to "officer under the United States." See 12 U.S. Op. Att'y Gen. 182, 203, 1876 WL 2127 (1867); 12 U.S. Op. Att'y Gen. 141, 158 (1867); see also Dec. 15, 2013 Hearing 5:42:50-5:44:00 (Magliocca).

---

[13] While the Court in U.S. Terms Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995), referred to both the President and Members of Congress as "federal officers," see id. at 805 n.17, that offhand statement in a footnote is hardly authoritative, never mind more persuasive than contemporaneous accounts of the meaning of Section Three. Additionally, references in the Constitution to offices in the House and Senate that Mr. Trump cites only support the Rosen Challengers' view, in that they distinguish offices like Speaker from the elected position of Representative or Senator. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 5 ("The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers . . .").

[14] Members of Congress likewise did not distinguish between officers "of" and officers "under" the United States. See, e.g., Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3939.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Trump cites an early draft of Section Three that referred to the "office of President or Vice President," Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 919 (1866), as evidence that the adopted language was not intended to be as expansive. But the Rosen Challengers persuasively argue that (1) the early draft confirms that the drafters both intended the presidency to be covered by Section Three and considered the presidency an office; and (2) the adopted language of Section Three contains a much broader catchall than that which was included in the draft Mr. Trump cites, suggesting it was broadened to incorporate the office of the presidency. This makes good sense; it is implausible that the drafters of Section Three chose to exempt the highest office in our government from an amendment designed to keep confederates from positions of power. See Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2505 (1866) (drafter of Section Three noting that his proposal would ensure "the loyal alone shall rule the country which they alone have saved" and that traitors would be "cut[] off . . . from all political power in the nation."); see also Dec. 15 Hearing 5:23:10-5:23:55 (Magliocca).

The uniqueness of the president's oath does not change the calculus, either.[15] While the Article II oath requires the President to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution," U.S. Const. art. II, § 8, which is technically different than Article VI's command that officers take an oath to "support this Constitution," id. art. IV, cl. 3, that is a distinction without a difference. See, e.g., Cong. Globe 39th Cong., 1st Sess. App'x, p. 234 (statements of Kentucky Senator Garrett Davis referencing both oaths in listing constitutional protections against insurrection); accord Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:25:41-5:26:33, 5:44:14-5:46:28 (Magliocca). To preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution is, necessarily, to support it. See Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 156-58.

[15] The parties do not contest that Mr. Trump took the presidential oath. See Rosen Ex. 6.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In sum, the text, history, and context of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment make clear that it covers the President, and that it is a qualification enforceable by the states.

3. The record demonstrates that the events of January 6, 2021 were an insurrection.

The parties do not meaningfully dispute the events of January 6, 2021. Multiple government reports that the Rosen Challengers entered into evidence confirm that a large group of people violently attacked the Capitol with the intent of preventing the certification of the presidential election. This resulted in a lockdown of the Capitol complex, an evacuation of the Vice President and congressional leaders, an interruption of official House and Senate proceedings, and multiple deaths and injuries. As described in a United States Government Accountability Report:

> Over the course of about 7 hours, more than 2,000 protestors entered the U.S. Capitol on January 6, disrupting the peaceful transfer of power and threatening the safety of the Vice President and members of Congress. The attack resulted in assaults on at least 174 police officers, including 114 Capitol Police and 60 D.C. Metropolitan Police Department officers. These events led to at least seven deaths and caused about $2.7 billion in estimated costs.

Rosen Ex. 60 (GAO, Report to Congressional Requestors, Capitol Attack: Federal Agencies Identified Some Threats, but Did not Fully Process and Share Information Prior to January 6, 2021 (GAO-23-106625) (Feb. 2023) ("GAO Report")), at 1.

In making their case that the events of January 6, 2021 constitute an insurrection, the Rosen Challengers rely heavily on the proceedings in—and evidence from—the Anderson case. Much of that evidence is in the record here, and I find the reasoning of the Colorado Supreme Court compelling.[16] That said, even without the benefit of the Anderson decision, I have little trouble concluding that the events of January 6, 2021 were an insurrection within the meaning of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Professor Magliocca defined an insurrection as a public use of violence by a group of people to hinder or prevent the execution of the Constitution. See Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:30:30-5:31:08 (Magliocca). This definition is well supported by the historical record. See id. 5:31:12-5:33:04 (Magliocca); see also Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language 613 (1860) (defining insurrection as distinct from rebellion, and as "[a] rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state").

Mr. Trump criticizes Professor Magliocca's definition as based on sources too "weak" and disparate in time, but he offers no workable alternative definition. See President Donald J. Trump's Closing Argument (Dec. 19, 2023) at 38. Specifically, Mr. Trump's claim that insurrection must be "violent enough, potent enough, long enough, and organized enough to be considered a significant step on the way to rebellion," id. at 39, is both ambiguous as a standard and poorly supported by the evidence he cites. Accord Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 183. An insurrection need not involve military-style weaponry, see Case of Fries, 9 F. Cas. 940 (C.C.D. Pa. 1800) ("[M]ilitary weapons" like "guns and swords" "are not necessary to make such insurrection or rising amount to levying of war"), involve bloodshed, see In re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 F. 828, [16] In their supplemental brief, the Rosen Challengers go even further, arguing that the doctrine of collateral estoppel mandates that I accept the Anderson Court's factual determinations. But as the Challengers also recognize, non-mutual collateral estoppel is not mandatory in this case. See Van Houten v. Harco Constr., 655 A.2d 331, 333 (Me. 1995) (nonmutual collateral estoppel is permissible only on a case-by-case basis where it serves the interests of justice) (Me. 1995); State Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bragg, 589 A.2d 35, 37 (Me. 1991). I conclude that it would be antithetical to the interests of justice to prohibit Mr. Trump, in this proceeding, from arguing that the Rosen Challengers did not demonstrate that Mr. Trump engaged in insurrection.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

830 (N.D. Ill. 1894), or even be highly organized, see Home Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Davila, 212 F.2d 731, 736 (1st Cir. 1954).

Nonetheless, even if insurrection under Section Three were so limited, the evidence here shows that the events of January 6, 2021 meet that standard. As demonstrated by videos and documentary evidence in the record, a large and angry crowd entered the U.S. Capitol near midday on January 6 and assaulted the capitol police officers charged with defending it, vandalized and stole property, and ransacked offices. See Rosen Ex. 62 (Staff Report, Examining the U.S. Capitol Attack: A Review of the Security, Planning, and Response Failures on January 6, Committee on Homeland Security and Government Affairs & Committee on Rules and Administration ("Senate Staff Report")), at 1; Rosen Exs. 67-72, 75 (video of attack on Capitol). Many of those involved were armed with weapons—some brought to the Capitol, some wrested from police officers, and some repurposed items looted from inside the Capitol itself—and over a few hours they used them to breach barriers and attack those who resisted. See Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 28-29; see also Rosen Exs. 67-72, 75 (video of attack on Capitol). The crowd ultimately entered the Capitol as Members of Congress were meeting to certify the Electoral College vote count. See Trump Ex. 2 (Review of the DOD's Role, Responsibilities, and Actions to Prepare for and Respond to the Protest and Its Aftermath at the U.S. Capitol Campus on January 6, 2021, Inspector General, U.S. Dep't of Defense, Report No. DODIG-2022-039 ("DOD Report")), at 5. In other words, the attack was violent enough, potent enough, and long enough to constitute an insurrection.

It also cannot reasonably be disputed that the rioters were organized behind a common purpose. That purpose is evident not only from the context, discussed in more detail below, but also from the very chants and recitations of the rioters themselves. They were present to "stop the steal," i.e., prevent by force the certification of the results of the 2020 presidential election that was scheduled to occur in the halls of Congress that afternoon. See, e.g., Rosen Ex. 7 (Final Report, Select Committee to Investigate the January 6th Attack on the United States Capitol, (Dec. 22, 2022), 117th Cong., 2d Sess., H. Rep. 117-663) ("Jan. 6 Report")) at 57, 105-07, 533; Rosen Ex. 37 at 75, 80 (tweets claiming then–Vice President Pence could reject electors).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This violent disruption of Congress's duty, through a transparently public use of force, meets both Professor Magliocca's historically accurate definition of an insurrection, and Mr. Trump's alternative definition. See Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:49:18-5:51:08 (Magliocca); accord Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 186-89. I therefore conclude that the events of January 6, 2021, the "most significant breach of the Capitol in over 200 years," Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 21, constituted an insurrection.

4. The record demonstrates that Mr. Trump engaged in the insurrection of January 6, 2021.

The question of whether Mr. Trump engaged in insurrection is a closer one. It would not be difficult to answer had Mr. Trump had been found guilty—or not guilty—of insurrection in a court of law pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2883 (criminalizing insurrection). The applicability of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not turn on whether an office-seeker has been convicted of a crime, however. Instead, under Sections 336 and 337, I am obligated to assess the record before me and make a determination based on the preponderance of the evidence, just as my predecessors have in other ballot access cases. See Douglas v. Bd. of Trustees of Me. State Retirement Sys., 669 A.2d 177, 179 (Me. 1996) (applying preponderance standard in APA proceeding).[17]

[17] The usual standard in an APA proceeding is preponderance of the evidence, and the parties have not argued that any other standard should apply.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Professor Magliocca defined "engaged in" as a voluntary act, by word or deed, in furtherance of an insurrection, including words of incitement. Dec. 15 2023 Hearing 5:34:30-5:34:44 (Magliocca). The support for this interpretation is robust, as succinctly summarized by Professor Magliocca himself at the hearing. Id. 5:35:02-5:35:37 (Magliocca). Contemporaneous decisions from Attorney General Stanbury suggest that engaging in insurrection did not require "having actually levied war or taken arms," but rather was understood broadly to include official action "in furtherance of the common unlawful purpose" or "any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion," including "incit[ing] others" to act accordingly "by speech or by writing." 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 141, 161-62 (1867); 12 Op. Att'y Gen. 182, 205 (1867); see also Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 192.[18] Judicial decisions of the time likewise interpreted Section Three as covering "a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection or Rebellion," United States v. Powell, 27 F. Cas. 605, 607 (C.C.D. N.C. 1871); accord Worthy, 63 N.C. at 203; Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619, at *19; United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 55, 178 (C.C.D. Va. 1807 ("[I]n treason, all are principals." (quoting 4 Tuck Bl. Comm. Append. 40-47)), and even defined "levying war" as including "inciting and encouraging others" to commit treason, In re Charge to Grand Jury, 30 F. Cas. 1032, 1034 (C.C.S.D. N.Y. 1861); accord In re Charge to Grand Jury-Treason, 30 F. Cas. 1047, 1048-49 (C.C.E.D. Pa. 1851); Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. 75, 126 (1807) (Marshall, C.J.).

On this basis, I adopt the definition outlined by Professor Magliocca and concur that "engaged in insurrection" under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment includes "incitement." Accord Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 194. The central question, then, is whether Mr.

[18] Mr. Trump's interpretation of these sources as suggesting that engagement is limited to official action that causes something more serious than an insurrection is unsupported by the record.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump's statements and other conduct leading up to and including January 6, 2021—the essential facts of which are once again not in dispute—constitute incitement of insurrection.

Before the 2020 presidential election, Mr. Trump sowed doubt in its legitimacy. He declared, for example, at a campaign rally in Wisconsin that the only way he would lose "is if the election is rigged." See Rosen Ex. 53. A month later, at a White House Press Briefing on September 23, 2023, he refused to commit to a peaceful transfer of power, instead demurring that he would "have to see." See Rosen Ex. 55.

Consistent with this characterization, on Election Day and thereafter, and most prominently on social media, Mr. Trump repeatedly claimed that there had been widespread election fraud and that the presidency was being stolen from him. See, e.g., Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 10-16, 32-33, 38-40; Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 3, 18. He attacked the election's validity and pressured Republicans, in Georgia and elsewhere, to overturn its results. See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 2, 23, 29-31, 49. Mr. Trump simultaneously implored his supporters to "SAVE AMERICA" and "fight on!" See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 25, 35.

In response to Mr. Trump's inflammatory rhetoric, Gabriel Sterling, a Republican election official in the state of Georgia, publicly warned President Trump to "stop inspiring people to commit potential acts of violence" or "[s]omeone's going to get killed." See Rosen Ex. 59 (video) at 1:50. Mr. Trump responded by retweeting a video of the press conference, proclaiming "Rigged Election" and "Expose the massive voter fraud in Georgia." See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 27. And when a November 14, 2020 rally in Washington, D.C. inspired by his continued attempts to "stop the steal" turned violent—there was a stabbing, numerous injuries, and multiple arrests—Mr. Trump justified the violence as self-defense against "ANTIFA SCUM." Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 17; Ex. 60 (GAO Report) at 88-91; Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 18.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On December 19, 2020, fully aware of how his words and deeds had bred violence and threatened more, Mr. Trump announced a rally in Washington on January 6, 2021, to protest certification of the election results. See Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 3. He tweeted:

> Peter Navarro releases 36-page report alleging election fraud 'more than sufficient' to swing victory to Trump https://washex.am/3nwaBCe. A great report by Peter. Statistically impossible to have lost the 2020 Election. Big protest in D.C. on January 6th. Be there, will be wild!

See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 41. Multiple permit requests for rallies on January 5th and 6th followed, though none permitted a march from the Ellipse to the Capitol. See Rosen Ex. 7 (Jan. 6 Report) at 703-04. Mr. Trump apparently intended to call for such a march spontaneously. Id. at 704.

As the election machinery marched toward certification of the presidential election results on January 6, 2021, as required by the U.S. Constitution, see U.S. Const. art. II, § 1; id. amend. XII, Mr. Trump continued to press his case that the election was illegitimate. See, e,g., Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 47-48, 50. He repeatedly referenced the January 6, 2021 joint session of Congress at which the Electoral Votes would be counted on social media, and he reminded his supporters of the rally he had planned at the same time in Washington. See, e.g., id. at 47, 50, 55, 60, 62-63, 66, 72, 74-75; Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 22; Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 19.

The language Mr. Trump used was oftentimes inflammatory, too. On December 26, 2020, for example, Mr. Trump tweeted:

> If a Democrat Presidential Candidate had an Election Rigged & Stolen, with proof of such acts at a level never seen before, the Democrat Senators would consider it an act of war, and fight to the death. Mitch [McConnell] & the Republicans do NOTHING, just want to let it pass. NO FIGHT!

Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 49. That same day, Mr. Trump characterized the election as "the biggest SCAM in our nation's history" and told his reporters "History will remember. Never give up. See everyone in D.C. on January 6th." Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 50. Far right militias interpreted Mr. Trump's tweets as a call to arms. See Rosen Ex. 7 (January 6 Report) at 499, 521.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A week later, on January 1, 2021, Mr. Trump retweeted a post from an organizer of the January 6 March for Trump stating "the calvary [sic] is coming, Mr. President!" calling it "[a] great honor!" See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 64. And as his supporters arrived in Washington on January 5, Mr. Trump again tweeted that the election had been "stolen," that the country "won't take it anymore!", and that "the thousands of people pouring into D.C. . . . won't stand for a landslide election victory to be stolen!" See Rosen Ex. 37 (Tweets) at 76.

On the morning of January 6, 2021, Mr. Trump implored then–Vice President Pence to block certification of the election. See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 80. A few hours later, in a speech that began at about noon following a variety of other speakers, see id. at 78; Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 5, 44, Mr. Trump in no uncertain terms urged Mr. Pence to "do the right thing," and asked his supporters to go to the Capitol; "show strength"; and demand that Congress not certify the election for President Biden. See Rosen Ex. 63 (speech) at 16:15-16:30; see also Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 22. The crowd chanted "fight for Trump." Rosen Ex. 63 (speech).

At the conclusion of his speech around 1:10 pm, minutes after the joint session of Congress to certify the election results had begun, see Rosen Ex. 7 (January 6 Report) at 461, 577; Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 23-24, Mr. Trump implored his supporters to > [F]ight like hell. And if you don't fight like hell, you're not going to have a country anymore . . . So we're going to, we're going to walk down Pennsylvania Avenue. I love Pennsylvania Avenue. And we're going to the Capitol, and we're going to try and give . . . . We're going to try and give them the kind of pride and boldness that they need to take back our country. So let's walk down Pennsylvania Avenue.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Rosen Ex. 63 (speech) at 1:09:30-1:11:19. As the President concluded his speech, a large crowd marched toward the Capitol and forced their way past security barricades. See Rosen Ex. 7 (Jan. 6 Report) at 638; Rosen Ex. 62 (Senate Staff Report) at 22; Trump Ex. 2 (DOD Report) at 5, 44.

Mr. Trump learned that the Capitol was under attack by 1:21 pm. See Rosen Ex. 7 (Jan. 6 Report) at 577. Yet Mr. Trump made no effort to mobilize federal law enforcement or the National Guard, nor for hours did he ask his supporters to leave the area. See id. Instead, an hour later, and minutes after the Capitol building itself had been breached, see id. at 708, Mr. Trump tweeted that "Mike Pence didn't have the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution, giving States a chance to certify a correct set of facts, not the fraudulent or inaccurate ones which they were asked to previously certify. USA demands the truth!" See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 83. Thereafter, on social media, Mr. Trump asked those at the Capitol to support law enforcement and stay peaceful, see Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 83-84, but he neither denounced the violence nor intervened to stop it, see Rosen Ex. 7 (Jan. 6 Report) at 110.

Finally, at 4:17 pm, Mr. Trump released a video telling the assembled rioters to go home, but rather than condemning them or their actions he noted his sympathy, calling them "very special." See Rosen Ex. 76. Thereafter, Mr. Trump tweeted:

> These are the things and events that happen when a sacred landslide election victory is so unceremoniously & viciously stripped away from great patriots who have been badly & unfairly treated for so long. Go home with love & in peace. Remember this day forever!

See Rosen Ex. 37 (tweets) at 84.

This is a compelling narrative, the facts of which are not in serious dispute. I conclude, as did the Colorado Supreme Court, see Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶ 221, that the record establishes that Mr. Trump, over the course of several months and culminating on January 6, 2021, used a false narrative of election fraud to inflame his supporters and direct them to the Capitol to prevent certification of the 2020 election and the peaceful transfer of power. I likewise conclude that Mr. Trump was aware of the likelihood for violence and at least initially supported its use given he both encouraged it with incendiary rhetoric and took no timely action to stop it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mr. Trump's occasional requests that rioters be peaceful and support law enforcement do not immunize his actions. A brief call to obey the law does not erase conduct over the course of months, culminating in his speech on the Ellipse. The weight of the evidence makes clear that Mr. Trump was aware of the tinder laid by his multi-month effort to delegitimize a democratic election, and then chose to light a match.

The events of January 6, 2021 notwithstanding, Mr. Trump also claims that he cannot be disqualified from the presidency for his conduct because his public statements and speeches are protected by the First Amendment. But Mr. Trump cites no precedent—and I am unaware of any—that permits the First Amendment to override a qualification for public office. Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is not a criminal penalty, as in Federal Election Commission v. Wisconsin Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 468-69 (2007), nor is it a punishment, cf. Dec. 15, 2023 Hearing 5:24:08-5:24:30 (Magliocca) (describing historical understanding of Section Three). It is simply a qualification for office.

Additionally, because I conclude that Mr. Trump intended to incite lawless action, his speech is unprotected by the First Amendment. See Anderson, 2023 CO 63, ¶¶ 230-56; accord Thompson v. Trump, 590 F. Supp. 3d 46, 115 (D.D.C. 2022) (Ellipse speech "plausibly [contained] words of incitement not protected by the First Amendment"); see also Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447-48 (1979) (incitement of lawless action unprotected by the First Amendment). Principles of free speech do not override the clear command of Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, namely that those who orchestrate violence against our government may not wield the levers of its power.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Conclusion

I do not reach this conclusion lightly. Democracy is sacred, and the highest court of this State has repeatedly recognized that "no right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live." Melanson v. Sec'y of State, 2004 ME 127, ¶ 14, 861 A.2d 641 (quoting Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 441 (1992) (cleaned up)). I am mindful that no Secretary of State has ever deprived a presidential candidate of ballot access based on Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. I am also mindful, however, that no presidential candidate has ever before engaged in insurrection. The oath I swore to uphold the Constitution comes first above all, and my duty under Maine's election laws, when presented with a Section 336 challenge, is to ensure that candidates who appear on the primary ballot are qualified for the office they seek.

The events of January 6, 2021 were unprecedented and tragic. They were an attack not only upon the Capitol and government officials, but also an attack on the rule of law. The evidence here demonstrates that they occurred at the behest of, and with the knowledge and support of, the outgoing President. The U.S. Constitution does not tolerate an assault on the foundations of our government, and Section 336 requires me to act in response.

I conclude that the Rosen and Royal Challengers have met their burden under 21-A M.R.S. § 337(2)(B). They have provided sufficient evidence to demonstrate the falsity of Mr. Trump's declaration that he meets the qualifications of the office of the presidency. Therefore, as required by 21-A M.R.S. § 336(3), I find that the primary petition of Mr. Trump is invalid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Given the compressed timeframe, the novel constitutional questions involved, the importance of this case, and impending ballot preparation deadlines, I will suspend the effect of my decision until the Superior Court rules on any appeal, or the time to appeal under 21-A, Section 337 has expired. Cf. In re Maine Clean Fuels, Inc., 310 A.2d 736, 744 (Me. 1973) (noting administrative agencies are free to fashion their own rules of procedure).

Dated: December 28, 2023

Shenna Bellows
Secretary of State

NOTICE OF APPEAL RIGHTS

The challenger or candidate may appeal this decision by commencing an action in the Superior Court within 5 days of this date, pursuant to 21-A MRSA section 337, subsection 2, paragraph D.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/3/2024 11:07:09 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief
Attachments: Colorado SCOTUS amicus 1.3.23_SUDC[8].docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Erik and Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 5:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

https://static01.nyt.com/newsgraphics/documenttools/9a52ab1adf471cda/dfe18fa1-full.pdf

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:33:34 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Ok, also I am hearing that Trump has filed.

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 5:08 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Re: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will have comments to you this evening. As you may have seen, Secretary Griswold is not opposing cert., except on the First Amendment issue about parties' rights to have whomever they want on the ballot.

https://www.supremecourt.gov/search.aspx?filename=/docket/docketfiles/html/public/23-696.html

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, January 3, 2024 at 12:17 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Attorney Client Privilege - Attorney Work Product - DRAFT amicus brief

Hi Jonathan,

A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 12/29/2023 2:41:21 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: 14.3 updates -- privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Below is our weekly 14.3 update. I've covered all of this in separate, more in-depth emails. We'll be back with an updated tracker next week.

Colorado:

Anderson v. Griswold now Colorado Republican State Central Committee v. Anderson:

- The Colorado Republican Party filed a petition for a writ of certiorari in the U.S. Supreme Court asking for review of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision barring Trump from the state's primary ballot.
- Both the Colorado Republican Party and the Anderson Respondents (petitioners below) asked for expedited briefing on the petition and expedited merit briefing if the petition is granted.

Maine

- Secretary of State Shenna Bellows ruled that Trump is not eligible to rule in the presidential primary in Maine because he is disqualified under 14.3. In Maine, the secretary of state makes an initial decision regarding disqualification—based on petitions challenging eligibility—and the decision can then be appealed to the state's superior court.

Michigan

LaBrant v. Benson:

- On Wednesday, December 27, the Michigan Supreme Court declined to review the Court of Appeal's decision that Trump may appear on the primary ballot in Michigan. The decision below held only that Michigan law does not make eligibility to hold office a requirement for appearing on a presidential primary ballot. It did not address whether Trump is disqualified under 14.3.
- Secretary Benson said in a statement that the court correctly found she lacked authority to prevent Trump from appearing on the primary ballot but called on the U.S. Supreme Court to provide clarity on the issues going forward.

As always, please let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/5/2024 2:27:08 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Colorado amicus

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks, Heather DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, January 5, 2024 at 9:07 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: FW: Colorado amicus

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG)
Sent: Friday, January 5, 2024 12:48 AM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) <BradyM@michigan.gov>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>; Brater, Jonathan (MDOS) <BraterJ@michigan.gov>
Subject: Colorado amicus
Importance: High

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Thanks,

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/5/2024 6:32:34 PM
To: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG) [HammoudF1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Aboona, Rebecca (AG) [AboonaR1@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
Subject: National Archives ECA guidance

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good afternoon. As you may have seen, the National Archives and Records Administration recently posted ECA guidance on its website: https://www.archives.gov/electoral-college/state-officials/so-instructions. One very helpful resource mentioned is the Archives' Office of the Federal Register's email list, which provides announcements and reminders from OFR. You can sign up by sending an email from your government email account to election.officials+subscribe@nara.gov.

We will be providing guidance and a checklist for general use later this year, but of course feel free to reach out with any questions for us in the meantime.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/5/2024 8:39:13 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
CC: Victoria Bassetti [victoria@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: PA -- privileged

Importance: High

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/5/2024 10:19:56 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Order granting Trump petition

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://www.supremecourt.gov/orders/courtorders/010524zr2_886b.pdf

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/16/2024 11:12:36 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: 14.3 update--Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

We are stopping the litigation tracker given the cert. grant. Below is a summary of the case and amicus briefs of interest as of Friday.

***

The Supreme Court granted Trump's petition for a writ of certiorari seeking review of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision disqualifying Trump from the primary ballot based on Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment (Trump v. Anderson). Trump's petition was not limited to the Colorado Supreme Court's construction of the Fourteenth Amendment. The petition raises the following issues:

- Whether Congress is the exclusive judge of whether a presidential candidate is disqualified;
- Whether Section 3 applies to the President;
- Whether Trump engaged in insurrection within the meaning of Section 3;
- Whether the Colorado Supreme Court violated the Electors Clause by interpreting state law to allow a presidential candidate to be barred from the ballot based on Section 3 and failing to adhere to statutory deadlines; and
- Whether Section 3 can be the basis for barring a presidential candidate from the ballot.

The Court set an aggressive schedule with oral arguments on February 8. Petitioner's merits brief and any amicus briefs in support or in support of neither party must be filed by January 18. Respondents' merits briefs as well as amicus briefs in support must be filed by January 31. Reply briefs must be filed by 5pm on February 5.

The Colorado Republican State Central Committee filed a separate petition for a writ of certiorari, which the Supreme Court has not acted on.

The cases attracted significant amicus interest at the cert. stage, particularly from amici supporting Trump. Some of the main amicus briefs are summarized below—with a focus on issues not raised by Trump—including a multi-state brief from 27 states supporting cert. and reversal.

As always, please let us know if you have any questions, including potential amicus opportunities.

Amicus Briefs in Trump v. Anderson

Filed at Cert Stage:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- States of Indiana, West Virginia, 25 Other States, and the Arizona Legislature
  - The petition should be granted to avoid nationwide chaos and confusion
  - Congress should decide who is qualified to hold office under 14.3
  - The Colorado Supreme Court's definition of insurrection is "standardless and vague" and courts should not be the ones to define insurrection under 14.3

- Steve Daines (Montana Senator, Chairman of NRSC) & National Republican Senatorial Committee (NRSC)
  - The Colorado Supreme Court erred by modifying the qualifications for the office of president
  - By excluding Trump from the primary ballot, the Colorado Supreme Court violated the associational rights of Republican Party members protected by the First Amendment

Filed at Merits Stage:

- Vivek Ramaswamy
  - President Trump's opponents are using 14.3 because they don't think they can beat him in an election
  - Adopting the Colorado Supreme Court's theory requires the Court to adjudicate political questions
    - Under the Colorado Supreme Court's interpretation of 14.3, Presidents Carter, Reagan, Clinton, Obama, and Biden could (or could have) faced questions of eligibility based on actions taken during their presidencies

Amicus Briefs in Colorado Rep. State Central Committee v. Anderson

Filed at Cert Stage:

- Public Interest Legal Foundation ("PILF") & Hans Von Spakovsky
  - The continued legal viability of Section 3 is suspect
    - Congress removed disabilities imposed by 14.3 through the Amnesty Acts of 1872 and 1898
    - 14.3 is cabined to the "insurrection or rebellion upon which it was based, namely only the American Civil War"
  - State courts cannot overrule the Senate's acquittal of Trump for "incitement of insurrection"

- Colorado Electors
  - The Colorado Election Code does not vest Colorado courts with jurisdiction to adjudicate questions relating to 14.3
  - Congress removed any electoral disability via the 1872 and 1898 Amnesty Acts

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/11/2024 5:05:18 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Trump amicus brief - DRAFT

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks. Will review now.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, January 11, 2024 at 11:57 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Trump amicus brief - DRAFT

Hi Jonathan,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/11/2024 7:17:53 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Grill, Erik (AG) [GrillE@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Trump amicus brief - DRAFT
Attachments: Colorado SCOTUS amicus Jan 11 REV eag2 HSM_JW.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, January 11, 2024 at 11:57 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Grill, Erik (AG) <GrillE@michigan.gov>
Subject: Trump amicus brief - DRAFT

Hi Jonathan,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingastH@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/16/2024 11:09:44 PM
To: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Erick Kaardal 14.3 brief

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

FYI – Argues that the DC federal court's power to issue writ of "quo warranty" preempts states' power to determine qualifications of a presidential candidate.

https://www.supremecourt.gov/DocketPDF/23/23-719/295833/20240116172438239_AC%20Brief%20-%201-16-24.pdf

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/11/2024 4:29:14 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Amanda Carberry [amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Democracy check in times

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks. Would anyone else attend? As I recall, Christina generally attended in 2022.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, January 11, 2024 at 9:46 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Democracy check in times

Either day likely works. I have a standing meeting at 9:30 on Mondays, so other than that I'm pretty flexible.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, January 11, 2024 9:02 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Democracy check in times

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

For renewing the bi-weekly call, beginning 1/22 both Christina and Dan could do Mondays at 1:30p OR beginning 1/25 Thursdays at 10:30a. Could either of those times work for you and any others in your office who would attend? We will check with Mike separately.

Thanks.

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/25/2024 9:57:27 PM
To: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG) [HammoudF1@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Electors and Elections Clauses Litigation Memo -- Privileged Attachments: SUDC Elections Clause Litigation Memo (MDAG).docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 1/30/2024 2:33:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: New Kaardal ISL lawsuit--privileged Attachments: Keefer complaint.pl.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

In case you don't have it, I've attached a complaint that Eric Kaardal filed last week in Pennsylvania. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

As in Lindsey, Kaardal represents a (very small) group of Pennsylvania legislators asserting claims under the Elections and Electors clauses. They allege that the federal government and Pennsylvania Governor Shapiro have usurped the plaintiffs' legislative authority related to voter registration practices: automatic voter registration instituted by Governor Shapiro and Biden's Executive Order 14019, which directs federal agencies to take action to facilitate voter registration. As in Lindsey, the legislator plaintiffs claim standing based on their status as legislators, taxpayers, and voters, so its resolution of standing issues will likely be informative if decided more promptly.

The lawsuit is in its very early stages. The plaintiffs haven't sought preliminary relief, nor does the complaint appear to have been served. We'll keep you updated on its progress.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Investigative Docs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

REPRESENTATIVES DAWN KEEFER, TIMOTHY BONNER, BARRY JOZWIAK, BARBARA GLEIM, JOSEPH HAMM, WENDY FINK, ROBERT KAUFFMAN, STEPHANIE BOROWICZ, DONALD (BUD) COOK, PAUL (MIKE) JONES, JOSEPH D'ORSIE, CHARITY KRUPA, LESLIE ROSSI, DAVID ZIMMERMAN, ROBERT LEADBETER, DANIEL MOUL, THOMAS JONES, DAVID MALONEY, TIMOTHY TWARDZIK, DAVID ROWE, JOANNE STEHR, AARON BERSTINE, KATHY RAPP, SENATOR CRIS DUSH—ALL PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATORS, Plaintiffs,

COMPLAINT

FILE NO:_____

-vs-

JOSEPH R. BIDEN, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, OR HIS SUCCESSOR; JOSH SHAPIRO, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA, OR HIS SUCCESSOR; AL SCHMIDT, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH, OR HIS SUCCESSOR; JONATHAN MARKS, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS THE DEPUTY SECRETARY FOR ELECTIONS AND COMMISSIONS, OR HIS SUCCESSOR,

Defendants

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA (1:24-cv-00147)

Erick G. Kaardal (MN No. 229647)
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, PA
150 South Fifth Street
Suite 3100
Minneapolis, MN 55402
kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

Karen DiSalvo (PA No. 80309)
Election Research Institute
Of Counsel, Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson
1451 Quentin Road, Suite 232
Lebanon, PA 17042
kd@election-institute.com
Attorney for Plaintiffs

Plaintiffs, by and through their undersigned counsel, respectfully allege and represent the following for their Complaint.

1. The Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory and injunctive relief to establish their federal rights under the Electors Clause and Elections Clause of the U.S. Constitution against the above-named Defendants, who are federal and state executive branch officials, to exercise their Constitutional rights to be participants in the law-making process regulating federal elections for President and Congress.

2. The Defendants have each unconstitutionally excluded Plaintiffs from the law-making process regulating federal elections for President and Congress as further explained below.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

3. This action arises under the Constitution of the laws of the United States.

4. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to Article III of the United States Constitution, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, 28 U.S.C. § 1343(a)(3), 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(2), and 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

5. Plaintiffs' claims for declaratory and injunctive relief are authorized by 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and 2202, by Rules 57 and 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and by the general legal and equitable powers of this Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA Request

6. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) because all events giving rise to Plaintiffs' claims against Defendants occurred in the state of Pennsylvania.

PARTIES

7. Plaintiffs are all Pennsylvania Legislators. All Plaintiffs are elected officials who represent constituents within their respective legislative districts, and each is responsible, on behalf of their constituents, for the drafting or passage of laws for enactment, including election laws affecting elections of federal officials. Plaintiffs are also voters and taxpayers in Pennsylvania.

8. As state legislators, plaintiffs have particular civil rights that are specifically granted to only 253 "real persons" in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

9. Defendant Joseph R. Biden is the President of the United States. He is the chief executive officer for the United States of America. As such, he is responsible for implementing and enforcing the laws written by Congress.

10. Defendant Josh Shapiro is the Governor of Pennsylvania. He is the chief executive officer for the State of Pennsylvania with the duty to execute and enforce the law.

11. Defendant Al Schmidt is the Secretary of State. He is designated as the Commonwealth's Chief Election Official and thus has certain duties imposed upon him by the election code which are established by the legislature.

12. Defendant Jonathan Marks is the Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions.

13. Defendant Al Schmidt and Defendant Jonathan Marks are both within the executive office of the Pennsylvania Department of State.

14. The above-named Defendants or their successors are sued in their official capacity only. The above-named Defendants are not sued for damages, but for prospective declaratory and injunctive relief only.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA Request

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

15. The Electors Clause of the U.S. Constitution, Article II, Section 1, Clause 2, states:

> Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States shall be appointed an Elector.

16. The election for President and Vice President will be held on November 5, 2024.

17. At the Constitutional Convention of 1787, one of the most important decisions made was the incorporation of the Electors Clause which involved the appointment of electors to elect the President and Vice President.

18. The Constitutional Convention delegates adopted the Electors Clause late in the Convention, having reached no agreement regarding direct election by the people for president and vice-president.

19. The Electors Clause was a compromise between selecting the President pursuant to a popular election or leaving Congress to determine the President.

20. Justice Joseph Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, explained that the Framers viewed having an electoral college select the President rather than Congress would commit the decision "to persons, selected for that sole purpose . . . instead of persons, selected for the general purposes of legislation," --Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution 3: § 1450 (1833).

21. The Electors Clause of the U.S. Constitution is a direct grant of federal authority to state legislatures to determine the manner of conducting presidential selection in their respective states.

22. The Electors Clause is similar to the U.S. Elections Clause in they both grant a particular federal power to state legislatures.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA Request

23. The Elections Clause authorizes the state legislatures to regulate times, places and manners of Congressional elections, but subject to Congressional enactments:

> The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

U.S. Const., Art. I, Sec. 4, Cl. 1.

24. The Electors Clause, applying only to presidential elections, does not make the federal authority granted to state legislatures subject to Congressional enactments like the Elections Clause does. Accordingly, the Electors Clause grants state legislatures the vested plenary federal authority to enact statutes governing presidential elections.

25. The state legislature under the Elections Clause and the Electors Clause is the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution.

26. It is the legislature that must provide a complete code for congressional elections including regulations relating to registration of voters.

27. The Pennsylvania Constitution, Article II, Section 1, provides that legislative power is vested in the Senate and House of Representatives which are two associations of elected legislators who enact laws subject to the Governor's veto.

28. Article VII, Section 1 of the PA Constitution provides:

> Every citizen 21 years of age, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections subject, however, to such laws requiring and regulating the registration of electors as the General Assembly may enact.[1]

29. Therefore, under the Electors Clause, the Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislators, as part of two associations called the senate and the

[1] The age at which a citizen is entitled to vote was subsequently changed from 21 to 18 years of age.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Investigative FOIA house of representatives, respectively, must enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto, to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

30. Thus, Plaintiffs, as state legislators, have federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places, and manner of federal Presidential and Congressional elections.

31. Under the Elections Clause, but not the Electors Clause, Congress can enact federal laws preempting state legal provisions regulating the times, places, and manner of Congressional elections.

32. But, Congressional enactments are the only exception in the Elections Clause to the state legislators' federal rights to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places, and manner of federal Congressional elections.

33. Article VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution clearly places the duty of passing laws involving the registration of electors on the General Assembly.

34. The Defendants have all violated the legislators' rights by unconstitutionally excluding Plaintiffs from the law-making process regulating federal elections for President and Congress as further explained below.

35. First, on March 7, 2021, President Biden signed Executive Order 14019 on "Promoting Access to Voting."

36. Executive Order 14019 is not legally authorized by any Congressional enactment.

37. The President of the United States does not have the power to regulate the time, place, and manner of Presidential or Congressional elections in Pennsylvania.

38. The PA state legislators have, through proper legislative acts, passed a law that prohibits the influence of third party entities in elections – Biden's Executive order contradicts Pennsylvania state election laws.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA (1-2025)

39. President Biden does not have the unilateral power to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regarding the time, place, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections, including the registration of electors in Pennsylvania.

40. The President of the United States does not have the power to usurp the authority of Pennsylvania legislators with regard to the registration of Pennsylvania voters, as Article VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution clearly places the duty of "regulating the registration of electors" on the General Assembly.

41. Second, on September 19, 2023, Governor Shapiro announced that he was unilaterally implementing automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania.

42. Governor Shapiro's automatic voter registration is not legally authorized by any state law.

43. Pennsylvania state legislators have, through proper legislative acts, declined to pass a law authorizing automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania.

44. Governor Shapiro does not have the power to regulate the time, place, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

45. The Governor does not have the power to legislate or to make law, to abrogate law, or even to interpret law. The function of the executive branch is to execute in a manner that is consistent with constitutional and statutory provisions.

46. Governor Shapiro's edict instituting automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania is inconsistent with existing Pennsylvania law.

47. Governor Shapiro does not have the unilateral power to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regarding the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections, including the registration of electors in Pennsylvania.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Investigative Docs

48. Governor Shapiro does not have the power to usurp the authority of Pennsylvania legislators with regard to regulating the registration of Pennsylvania voters, as Article VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution clearly places the duty of "regulating the registration of electors" on the General Assembly.

49. Third, the Pennsylvania Department of State has issued and continues to issue numerous directives that contradict laws established by the legislators, including a 2018 "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications."

50. The Pennsylvania Department of State does not have the power to regulate the time, place, and manner of Presidential or Congressional elections.

51. The Secretary of the Commonwealth and other members of the executive branch, do not have the power in Pennsylvania to interpret law but simply must execute it.

52. Pennsylvania state legislators have, through proper legislative acts, passed a law regarding verification of information on voter registration applications. Directives issued by the executive branch through the Department of State contradict state election laws.

53. The Pennsylvania Department of State does not have the unilateral power to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regarding the times, places, and manner of Presidential or Congressional elections, including the registration of electors in Pennsylvania.

54. The Pennsylvania Department of State does not have the power to usurp the authority of Pennsylvania legislators with regard to regulating the registration of Pennsylvania voters, as Article VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution clearly places the duty of "regulating the registration of electors" on the General Assembly.

55. In summary, the U.S. Constitution assigns the legal authority of regulating the time, place, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections to state legislators.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA Request

56. The US Constitution operates as a limitation upon the State in respect to any attempt to circumscribe legislative power to regulate federal elections. Rule changes by executive officials who lack authority to do so are severely damaging the separation of powers and the electoral system on which our self-governance so heavily depends.

57. The President, the Governor, the Department of State through the Secretary of the Commonwealth and the Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions, have repeatedly violated and continue to violate the Electors Clause and Elections Clause by usurping the rights of the state legislators by changing Pennsylvania election laws via Executive Orders, edicts, and directives without the state legislators' participation.

58. Plaintiffs seek to protect their Constitutional rights and put an end to these unlawful executive actions "before the consequences become catastrophic."

COUNT I

President's Violations of the State Legislators' Federal Rights Under the U.S. Constitution's Electors Clause and Elections Clause

59. Plaintiffs hereby incorporate by reference the above paragraphs as if fully restated herein.

60. On March 7, 2021, President Biden signed Executive Order 14019 which is not legally authorized by any Congressionally-enacted law.

61. Executive Order 14019 requires all federal agencies to develop a plan to increase voter registration, and increase voter participation, or get out the vote (hereinafter GOTV) efforts.

62. In 2022, in response to EO 14019, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services announced that federal health centers located across the country, including in the state of Pennsylvania, "have discretion to participate in activities, including voter registration activities, that are outside the scope of the Health Center Program project, so long as the health centers' efforts in carrying out the Health Center Program project are not impaired." HHS, Voter Registration and Health Centers (See https://bphc.hrsa.gov/compliance/scope-project/voter-requirements)(last visited: Jan. 20, 2024). "Such voter registration activities may include making available voter registration materials to patients, encouraging patients to register to vote, assisting patients with completing registration forms, sending completed forms to the election authorities, providing voter registration materials in waiting rooms, and allowing private, non-partisan organizations to conduct on-site voter registration." Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Freedom of Info

63. In response to EO 14019, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development likewise instructed more than 3000 public housing authorities, which manage approximately 1.2 million public housing units, across the country, including in the state of Pennsylvania, to run voter registration drives in those units. See Fred Lucas, HUD Pushes Voter Registration Drives in Public Housing Under Biden's Executive Order, The Daily Signal (2022), https://www.dailysignal.com/2022/04/27/hud-pushes-voter-registration-drives-in-public-housing-under-bidens-executive-order/ (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024). Federal housing officials also advised the local agencies on how to apply to become a "voter registration agency under the National Voter Registration Act," and how to set up drop boxes for ballots on the premises. Id.

64. In response to EO 14019, the U.S. Department of Education, which last year sent a "dear colleague" letter to universities, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, directing them to use Federal Work Study funds "to support voter registration activities," whether they occur "on or off-campus." Federal Student Aid, (GEN-22-05) Requirements for Distribution of Voter Registration Forms, https://fsapartners.ed.gov/knowledge-center/library/dear-colleague-letters/2022-04-21/requirements-distribution-voter-registration-forms (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

65. In response to EO 14019, the U.S. Department of Agriculture has issued letters to state agencies administering SNAP and WIC programs, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, instructing them to carry out voter-registration activities with federal funds. See The White House, https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/statements-releases/2022/03/24/fact-sheet-biden-harris-administration-releases-report-on-native-american-voting-rights/ (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

66. Additionally, in response to EO 14019, the U.S. General Services Administration has announced that federally-owned buildings, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, are now available for voter registration drives by third-party organizations, regardless of whether the agency or agencies that own or operate out of those buildings have received an NVRA designation. See GSA, Federal Meeting Facilities: Use by federal agencies, https://www.gsa.gov/policy-regulations/policy/real-property-policy-division-overview/federal-meeting-facilities#vote (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

67. EO 14019 directs all non-independent executive agencies to engage in voter registration and to solicit and facilitate third-party organizations to conduct voter registration on agency premises, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, so it is certain that other agencies are carrying out similar efforts without disclosing their unlawful activities to the public or to the Pennsylvania state legislature.

68. EO 14019 requires all federal agencies to identify and partner with specified partisan third party organizations chosen by the Biden administration whose names and roles are not transparent but are willfully withheld from the public.

69. Under Executive Order 14019, taxpayer resources can be used to support the efforts of the third-party partners to do voter registration drives and GOTV activities.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

70. The Executive Order requires agencies to distribute voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms.

71. The Executive Order directs agencies to assist applicants in completing voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms.

72. The Executive Order directs agencies to solicit third-party organizations and directs state officials to provide voter registration services on agency premises.

73. Typically, private parties – including plaintiffs, campaigns, political parties, and organizations – conduct voter registration drives as acknowledged and regulated by federal campaign finance laws.

74. Federal campaign finance laws apply to private parties' voter registration activities. 11 C.F.R. § 100.133.

75. Voter registration drives and GOTV are a federally recognized private function, not a government function.

76. But, Biden's Executive Order requires agencies to develop plans for government-sponsored voter registration drives run by federal agencies and undisclosed third-party organizations.

77. The U.S. Election Assistance Commission has issued an advisory opinion that states that election officials are prohibited from using federal funds to conduct "voter registration drives."

> Neither Section 101 nor 251 funds may be used to conduct voter registration drives or get out the vote efforts; including advertising for the event, setting up booths, and paying salaries of employees who register new voters.

U.S. Election Assistance Commission Funding Advisory Opinion FAO-08-005. (Exhibit 1)

78. Since FY 2006, Office of Inspector General (OIG) audits of HAVA grants have resulted in 19 recommendations and just over $1 million dollars in questioned costs related to government-sponsored voter registration drives and GOTV activities.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Freedom of Info

79. Mississippi expended HAVA funds for GOTV and voter registration forms, which are not allowable under the award's terms and conditions or HAVA. (Exhibit 2)

80. Florida charged salaries and benefits for poll workers serving at voter registration drives to HAVA grants, resulting in $139,056 in questioned costs. (Exhibit 3)

81. South Dakota spent $1,474 in HAVA funds for letters containing a sample voter registration form to be distributed to K-12 students for voter education. Students in grades K-12 are not eligible voters, making the expense unallowable. (Exhibit 4)

82. Colorado charged $315,830 to its HAVA grant for contractual services associated with a voter registration campaign, which included only an incidental educational component. As a result, the charges were questioned. (Exhibit 5)

83. Further, federal campaign finance laws are premised on voter registration drives being conducted by private parties, not the government. See 11 C.F.R. Section 100.133.

84. In 2022, Pennsylvania lawmakers passed Senate Bill 982 (also known as Act 88).

85. Senate Bill 982 was designed, in part, to ban outside, third party financial support for Pennsylvania elections and to eliminate the influence of nongovernmental third party organizations from elections in the Commonwealth.

86. Senator Phillips-Hill, in introducing the bill (SB 982) said, "No matter how well-intended, such outside support has the potential to unduly influence election procedures, policies, staffing, and purchasing, which in turn may unfairly alter election outcomes. Even more importantly, it stands to erode voter confidence in a pillar of our beloved democracy." See https://www.legis.state.pa.us//cfdocs/Legis/CSM/showMemoPublic.cfm?chamber=S&SPick=20210&cosponId=36370 (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

87. Act 88 amended the Pennsylvania Election Code by adding Section 107 "Public Funding of Elections" prohibiting private funding:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Freedom of Info

(a) The cost and expense to State and local governments relating to the registration of voters and the preparation, administration and conduct of elections in this Commonwealth shall be funded only upon lawful appropriation of the Federal, State and local governments, and the source of the funding shall be limited to money derived from taxes, fees and other sources of public revenue.

(b) State and local governments, including their public officers, public officials, employees and agents, acting in their official capacity, may not solicit, apply for, enter into a contract for or receive or expend gifts, donations, grants or funding from any individual, business, organization, trust, foundation, or any nongovernmental entity for the registration of voters or the preparation, administration or conducting of an election in this Commonwealth. (Emphasis added).

88. The state legislators voted to prevent outside organizations from potentially influencing government administration of elections including the registration of voters through large donations from private donors and NGOs.

89. Certainly, outside organizations including campaigns and nonprofit organizations can and should –without collaboration with government agencies -- do compliant campaign related GOTV and voter registration drives.

90. To ensure this separation and prevent outside influence, the Pennsylvania legislature has specifically stated that any costs incurred by the government relating to the registration of voters "shall" be funded "only" through lawful appropriations. Thus, ensuring the oversight of the state legislature. No funds have been appropriated to support Biden's Executive Order 14019. Therefore, it is a violation of Pennsylvania law.

91. The law prohibits public officials from entering into agreements with third party entities for the registration of voters or the administration of elections.

92. Biden's EO 14019, which was largely drafted by a third party, nongovernmental organization, requires public officials to solicit and enter into partnership agreements with third-party

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

nongovernmental organizations to conduct voter registration drives and get-out-the-vote activities. See: https://www.demos.org/policy-briefs/executive-action-advance-democracy-what-biden-harris-administration-and-agencies-can (last visited: Jan. 23, 2024)

93. The executive action taken by the President, nullifies the votes of the individual legislators, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, and deprives the legislators of their particular rights.

94. The legislators have suffered and continue to suffer an injury-in-fact because the President has denied them a voting opportunity to which the Constitution entitles them.

95. The injury is traceable to the President's conduct because he has taken actions to impact the conduct of his own election and in doing so has denied the legislators their Constitutional rights.

96. The injury can only be redressed by a favorable judicial decision which restores their authority to determine the manner of elections in the Commonwealth.

97. Biden's Executive Order 14019 gives agencies the ability to select third-party organizations, using unappropriated taxpayer funding, to register voters, distribute vote-by-mail ballots, and engage in get out the vote activities.

98. The Pennsylvania Constitution provides that the legislative power is vested in the senate and the house of representatives. Pa. Const., Art. II, Sec. 1.

99. The Pennsylvania Constitution vests the legislative power in the state senate and the house of representatives to regulate the registration of electors in Pennsylvania. Pa. Const., Art. VII, Sec. 1.

100. Therefore, under the Electors Clause, Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

101. Under the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the manner in which voters are registered to vote.

102. Accordingly, President Biden's Executive Order 14019 attempting to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors is unlawful. The order should not be permitted to nullify the state legislators' power to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto power, regarding the regulation of the times, places, and manner of federal elections.

103. Plaintiffs have standing under applicable federal statutes and rules of civil procedure to seek a declaratory judgment and related injunctive relief.

104. Plaintiffs, as legislators, are injured by Defendants when they support or enforce election laws that circumvent or usurp the authority of the legislature.

105. Plaintiffs under the Pennsylvania Constitution and state law have individual legislator standing to challenge usurpation of state legislative powers.

106. Plaintiffs, as state legislators have federal rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

107. Under the Elections Clause, but not the Electors Clause, Congress can enact federal laws preempting state legal provisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

108. But, Congressional enactments are the only exception in the Elections Clause to the state legislators' federal rights to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

109. Executive Orders announced unilaterally by the President which affect the times, places, and manner of federal elections, without legislative participation, including the debate and acts or actions of state legislators, is not an exception contemplated under the Electors Clause nor Elections Clause.

110. Defendant Biden caused injury to Plaintiffs with his Executive Order No. 14019 changing Pennsylvania election law, which usurps the state legislature's powers and violates the state legislators' federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

111. Plaintiffs who draft, author, and support bills for passage in the state legislature are injured because the President's Executive Order is constitutionally invalid under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

112. A controversy exists between Plaintiffs and Defendants on the issue of whether President Biden's Executive Order 14019 involving the regulating of registration of Pennsylvania electors is a legally valid regulation of federal elections. The implementation and effect of the Executive Order is ongoing. Moreover, if permitted to stand, similar executive orders can be signed in the future, hence, the controversy is continuing.

113. Defendant Biden causes injury to Plaintiffs when he supervises, misuses federal funds, or otherwise supports statewide unconstitutional Executive Orders.

114. Plaintiffs as state legislators are uniquely injured by such illegal disbursement or illegal use of taxpayer funds because through this unconstitutional order, there is a violation of the state legislators' federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

115. Alternatively, Plaintiffs are also candidates on the ballot who will be impacted by the legally unauthorized changes made by President Biden.

116. Alternatively, the Plaintiffs also have standing as voters to bring this lawsuit as Defendant caused injury by unnecessarily burdening Plaintiffs' voting rights when he signed Executive Order 14019 giving federal agencies and third-party organizations, unprecedented power to make changes unilaterally and illegally to the manner of elections in Pennsylvania.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

117. Alternatively, the Plaintiffs also have standing as taxpayers to bring this lawsuit as Defendants use taxpayer funds to support and enforce his unconstitutional executive order governing federal elections, without legislative involvement.

118. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory and injunctive relief against Executive Order 14019.

COUNT II

Governor's Violations of the State Legislators' Federal Rights Under the U.S. Constitution's Electors Clause and Elections Clause

119. Plaintiffs hereby incorporate by reference the above paragraphs as if fully restated herein.

120. Through a Press Release on September 19, 2023, Governor Shapiro announced automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania. (Exhibit 6). See: https://www.governor.pa.gov/newsroom/governor-shapiro-implements-automatic-voter-registration-in-pennsylvania-joining-bipartisan-group-of-states-that-have-taken-commonsense-step-to-make-voter-registration-more-streamlined-and-secure/ (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

121. Beginning on September 19, 2023, Commonwealth residents obtaining new or renewed driver licenses and ID cards are automatically registered to vote unless they opt out of doing so.

122. The Governor's change is legally unauthorized because state legislative approval was not obtained for this change to Pennsylvania's voter registration process.

123. The Governor, by edict, created automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

124. Under the Electors Clause, Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

125. The Pennsylvania Constitution provides that legislative power is vested in the senate and the house of representatives. Pa. Const., Art. II, Sec. 1.

126. The Pennsylvania Constitution vests the legislative power in the state senate and the house of representatives to regulate the registration of electors in Pennsylvania. Pa. Const., Art. VII, Sec. 1.

127. Under the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the manner in which voters are registered to vote.

128. Policy decisions regarding how one registers to vote in Pennsylvania have been clearly addressed by the Pennsylvania legislature.

> An individual qualified to register to vote under section 1301(a) (relating to qualifications to register) may apply to register as follows:
>
> (1) Under section 1322 (relating to in-person voter registration).
> (2) Under section 1323 (relating to application with driver's license application).
> (3) Under section 1324 (relating to application by mail).
> (4) Under section 1325 (relating to government agencies).

25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1321.

129. 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1323(a)(1) provides:

> The Department of Transportation shall provide for simultaneous application for voter registration in conjunction with the process under 75 Pa.C.S. § 1510. An application under this subsection shall serve as an application to register to vote unless the applicant fails to sign the voter registration application. The secretary has the primary responsibility for implementing and enforcing the driver's license voter registration system created under this section. The secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, may promulgate regulations for implementing this section.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

130. Section 1321 clearly requires an application for the registration process, whether relating to in-person voter registration, application with driver's license application, or application by mail.

131. Through Section 1323, the Pennsylvania legislature appointed "the secretary" as the party responsible for "implementing and enforcing" the system that the legislature "created under this section."

132. The process "relating to application with driver's license application" is defined in §1323(b) which states:

> 1)The Department of Transportation shall provide for an application for voter registration as part of a driver's license application.
> 2)The format of the driver's license/voter registration application shall be determined and prescribed by the secretary and the Secretary of Transportation.
> 3)The voter registration application portion of the application shall contain all the requirements of an official voter registration application specified in section 1327 (relating to preparation and distribution of applications).
>
> 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1323(b).

133. Under 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1327(a)(1) the "secretary" is to prescribe the form for the official "voter registration application."

134. The official voter registration application must contain a registration declaration and "the applicant" is required to affirm the information provided under penalty of perjury. See 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1327(b)(2)(ii)(B) and 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1327(b)(4).

135. An application, by definition, is a formal request to an authority. It requires an overt action by the person.

136. According to Merriam-Webster Dictionary, the term "apply" is defined as "to make an appeal or request especially in the form of a written application."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

137. Although not specifically defined in the Election Code, the General Assembly has defined the term "application" in other contexts. Specifically, in 7 Pa.C.S.A. § 6102, the term application is defined as "a request…"

138. Moreover, the PA legislature has already established that failure to check a box is considered a declination to register.

> 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1325(c) states:
> Effect.—Failure to check either box under subsection (b)(3) shall be considered a declination to register to vote.

139. Pennsylvania jurisprudence requires that the basic policy choices involved in legislative power actually be made by the legislature as constitutionally mandated. This constraint serves two purposes. First, it ensures that duly authorized and politically responsible officials make all of the necessary policy decisions, as is their mandate per the electorate. And second, it seeks to protect against the arbitrary exercise of unnecessary and uncontrolled discretionary power.

140. Governor Shapiro's edict is inconsistent with existing laws, and as such, is not legally authorized.

141. Although "the secretary" was given the task of "implementing and enforcing" the driver's license voter registration system, the legislature clearly mandated that a voter register through an application process.

142. According to Merriam-Webster Dictionary, the term "implement" is defined as to carry out or to accomplish. It does not mean to change or modify – but simply put into practice the lawfully enacted decisions made by the Pennsylvania legislature.

143. The Governor does not have the power to legislate or to make law, to abrogate law, or even to interpret law. The function of the executive branch is to execute in a manner that is consistent with constitutional and statutory provisions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

144. Pennsylvania's constitution clearly gives the responsibility for regulating the registration of electors to the legislative branch.

145. Pennsylvania law regarding voter registration is clear. "An individual qualified to register to vote…may apply to register…" 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1321.

146. Where provisions of a statute are unambiguous, the agency charged with administering cannot amend statutory provisions through interpretation.

147. Accordingly, Governor Shapiro's edict attempting to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors is unlawful. This edict should not be permitted to nullify the state legislators' power to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto power, regarding the regulation of the times, places, and manner of federal elections.

148. Governor Shapiro's edict is an abusive and capricious exercise of executive power which usurps the function of the Pennsylvania legislature.

149. Automatic registration is inconsistent with existing requirements that individuals must "apply" to register in Pennsylvania.

150. Through the years, several bills establishing automatic voter registration have been introduced but failed in the Pennsylvania legislature.

151. For example, in January 2023, PA State Senator Hughes introduced Senate Bill 20 Amending Title 25 Elections of the PA Consolidated Statutes in an effort to enact automatic voter registration. Like similar bills in prior legislative sessions, the bill failed because the legislature and the citizens of Pennsylvania do not support automatic voter registration.

152. Governor Shapiro circumvented the rights of the legislators and violated the U.S. Constitution and the Pennsylvania Constitution.

153. Plaintiffs have standing under applicable federal statutes and rules of civil procedure to seek a declaratory judgment and related injunctive relief.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

154. Defendants are responsible for enforcement of laws governing elections, including federal elections.

155. Plaintiffs, as legislators are injured by Defendants when they support or enforce election laws that circumvent or usurp the authority of the legislature.

156. Defendants support and enforce laws edicts/announcements that violate the Electors Clause and Elections Clause because such edicts/announcements are not law and are legally null and void under the Electors Clause and Elections Clause when they directly or indirectly regulate federal elections.

157. Plaintiffs have individual legislator standing under the Pennsylvania Constitution and law to challenge usurpation of state legislative powers.

158. Plaintiffs, as state legislators, have federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause, to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

159. Under the Elections Clause, Congress can enact federal laws preempting state legal provisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

160. But, Congressional enactments are the only exception in the Elections Clause to the state legislators' federal rights to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

161. There is no such exception under the Electors Clause.

162. Edicts announced by the Governor which affect the times, places, and manner of federal elections, without legislative participation, including the debate and acts or actions of state legislators, is not an exception contemplated under the Electors Clause nor the Elections Clause.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

163. Defendants caused injury to Plaintiffs when they announced changes to Pennsylvania laws regarding elections that usurped the state legislature's powers and violated the state legislator's federal rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

164. Plaintiffs who draft, author, and support bills for passage in the state legislature are injured because the Governor's edict is constitutionally invalid under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

165. The Governor's edict was not constitutionally enacted under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause because state legislative approval and state legislator participation were not involved.

166. A controversy exists between Plaintiffs and Defendants on the issue of whether Governor Shapiro's edict involving automatic voter registration is a legally valid regulation of federal elections. The implementation and effect of the edict is ongoing. Moreover, if permitted to stand, similar edicts can occur again in the future, hence, the controversy is continuing.

167. Defendants cause injury to Plaintiffs when they supervise, fund, or otherwise support statewide unconstitutional edicts unilaterally announced by the Governor.

168. Plaintiffs as state legislators are uniquely injured by such illegal disbursement or illegal use of taxpayer funds because through this unconstitutional edict, there is a violation of the state legislators' federal rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

169. Alternatively, Plaintiffs are also candidates on the ballot who will be impacted by the legally unauthorized changes made by the Governor.

170. Alternatively, the Plaintiffs also have standing as voters to bring this lawsuit as Defendants cause injury by unnecessarily burdening Plaintiffs' voting rights when they supervise, fund, or otherwise support statewide automatic voter registration illegally.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

171. Alternatively, the Plaintiffs also have taxpayer standing to bring this lawsuit because Defendants use taxpayer funds to support and enforce this unconstitutional edict governing federal elections, without legislative involvement.

172. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory and injunctive relief against the Governor's edict mandating automatic voter registration.

COUNT III

Department of State's Violations of the State Legislators' Federal Rights Under the U.S. Constitution's Electors Clause and Elections Clause

173. Plaintiffs hereby incorporate by reference the above paragraphs as if fully restated herein.

174. The Secretary of the Commonwealth acting through the Pennsylvania Department of State issues "guidance" and "directives" that usurp the legislature's authority including a 2018 "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers For Voter Registration Applications." (Exhibit 7). See https://www.dos.pa.gov/VotingElections/OtherServicesEvents/Documents/HAVA%20Matching%20Directive%202018.pdf (last visited: Jan. 20, 2024).

175. This guidance, issued by the Department of State, instructs Pennsylvania counties to register applicants even if an applicant provides invalid identification.

176. Based on the Department of State's directive, if an applicant simply affirms that they meet the age, citizenship, and the residency requirements to become a qualified elector, the applicant must be registered – regardless of verification of identity.

177. The Department of State's Directive specifically states:

> Counties must ensure their procedures comply with state and federal law, which means that if there are no independent grounds to reject a voter registration application other than a non-match, the application may not be rejected and must be processed like all other applications.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

178. This directive is in direct contravention of clearly established Pennsylvania law, which requires verification of both identity and eligibility.

179. 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1328(a)(1) and (2)(i) and (ii) relating to the "Approval of Registration Applications" states:

> (a) Examination.—Upon receiving a voter registration application, a commissioner, clerk or registrar of a commission shall do all of the following:
>
> (1) Initial and date the receipt of the application.
>
> (2) Examine the application to determine all of the following:
>
> (i) whether the application is complete.
>
> (ii) whether the applicant is a qualified elector.

180. Under Pennsylvania law, an application must be rejected if incomplete or inconsistent.

181. 25 Pa.C.S.A. § 1328(b) specifically states:

> (b) Decision.—A commission shall do one of the following:
>
> (1) Record and forward a voter registration application to the proper commission if the commission finds during its examination under subsection (a) that the applicant does not reside within the commission's county but resides elsewhere in this Commonwealth.
>
> (2) Reject a voter registration application, indicate the rejection and the reasons for the rejection on the application and notify the applicant by first class nonforwardable mail, return postage guaranteed of the rejection and the reason if the commission finds during its examination under subsection (a) any of the following:
>
> (i) the application was not properly completed and after reasonable efforts by the commission to ascertain the necessary information, the application remains incomplete or inconsistent.
>
> (ii) The applicant is not a qualified elector.

182. When the Department of State unilaterally issued guidance to Pennsylvania counties, directing the counties to register voters regardless of whether the driver's license numbers or the last four digits of the social security number match the records of PennDOT or the records of the Social Security Administration, thus eliminating any requirement for verification or confirmation of identity for new voters, it violated federal and state law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

183. In its illegal directive, the Department of State references a district court case from the state of Washington as the justification for its overreach.

184. Washington Association of Churches v. Reed, 492 F.Supp 2d 1264 (W.D. Wash. 2006), does not, however, stand for the proposition asserted by the Department of State.

185. According to Washington Association of Churches, if the state is unable to match an applicant's driver's license or social security number, then the applicant "shall be provisionally registered to vote." Id. See Stipulated Final Order and Judgment of March 15, 2007, Paragraph (1)(c), (Exhibit 8).

186. The Department of State's directive requires counties to process incomplete and inconsistent applications "like all other applications" and register the applicants with invalid identification.

187. The Department of State's attempt to circumvent state and federal law through this directive is a per se violation of the legislators' federal rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause because the state legislators are not and were not involved.

188. The directive, unilaterally issued by the Department of State to Pennsylvania counties undermines the state legislature as "the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution" to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections.

189. The directive, unilaterally issued through the Department of State to Pennsylvania counties, directing the counties to process incomplete or inconsistent voter registration applications like all other applications violates clear provisions of Pennsylvania law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

190. The Pennsylvania Constitution provides that the legislative power is vested in the senate and the house of representatives. Pa. Const., Art. II, Sec. 1.

191. The Pennsylvania Constitution vests the legislative power in the state senate and the house of representatives to regulate the registration of electors in Pennsylvania. Pa. Const., Art. VII, Sec. 1.

192. Therefore, under the Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the times, places, and manner of federal elections subject only to Congressional enactments.

193. Under the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislature, defined as senate and house of representatives, has the exclusive authority to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto to regulate the manner in which voters are registered to vote.

194. In contravention of clearly established Pennsylvania law regarding the regulation of elections, the Pennsylvania Department of State has issued a directive to counties to disregard state law in verifying the identify and eligibility of electors.

195. Accordingly, the Department of State's "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" attempting to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors is unlawful. This directive should not be permitted to nullify the state legislators' power to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto power, regarding the regulation of the times, places, and manner of federal elections.

196. Plaintiffs have standing under applicable federal statutes and rules of civil procedure to seek a declaratory judgment and related injunctive relief.

197. Defendants are responsible for enforcement of laws governing all elections, including federal elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

198. Plaintiffs, as legislators are injured by Defendants when they support or enforce election laws that circumvent or usurp the authority of the legislature.

199. Defendants support and enforce directives that violate the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause because such directives are not law and are legally null and void under the Electors Clause and Elections Clause when they directly or indirectly regulate federal elections.

200. Plaintiffs have individual legislator standing under the Pennsylvania Constitution and law to challenge usurpation of state legislative powers.

201. Plaintiffs, as state legislators have federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause, to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

202. Under the Elections Clause, but not the Electors Clause, Congress can enact federal laws preempting state legal provisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

203. But, Congressional enactments are the only exception in the Elections Clause to the state legislators' federal rights to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places and manner of federal elections.

204. Directives issued by the Department of State which affect the times, places, and manner of federal elections, without legislative participation, including the debate and acts or actions of state legislators, is not an exception contemplated under the Elections Clause—nor under the Electors Clause.

205. Defendants caused injury to Plaintiffs when they announced changes to Pennsylvania elections that usurped the state legislature's powers and violated the state legislator's federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

206. Plaintiffs who draft, author, and support bills for passage in the state legislature are injured because the Department of State's "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' License or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" is constitutionally invalid under the Electors Clause and Elections Clause.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

207. The Department of State's Directive was not constitutionally enacted under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause because state legislative approval and state legislator participation were not involved.

208. A controversy exists between Plaintiffs and Defendants on the issue of whether the Department of State's "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' License or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" is a legally valid regulation of federal elections. The implementation and effect of the directive is ongoing. Moreover, if permitted to stand, similar directives can occur again in the future, hence, the controversy is continuing.

209. Defendants cause injury to Plaintiffs when they supervise, fund, or otherwise support statewide unconstitutional directives unilaterally issued by the Department of State.

210. Plaintiffs as state legislators are uniquely injured by such illegal disbursement or illegal use of taxpayer funds because through this unconstitutional edict, there is a violation of the state legislators' federal civil rights under the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause.

211. Alternatively, Plaintiffs are also candidates on the ballot who will be impacted by the legally unauthorized changes made by President Biden.

212. Alternatively, the Plaintiffs also have standing as voters to bring this lawsuit as Defendants cause injury by unnecessarily burdening Plaintiffs' voting rights when they supervise, fund, or otherwise support statewide illegal directives regarding voter registration applications.

213. Plaintiffs also have taxpayer standing to bring this lawsuit because Defendants use taxpayer funds to support and enforce unconstitutional directives which govern federal elections without legislative involvement.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

214. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory and injunctive relief against Executive Order 14019.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

For the reasons stated in this complaint, the Plaintiffs, Pennsylvania Legislators, request that this Court grant the following relief:

1. Enter a declaratory judgment that President Biden's Executive Order 14019 is unconstitutional and violates the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause as it seeks to regulate the times, places and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections, and seeks to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors without the state legislature's approval and the state legislators' participation.

2. Issue an order granting injunctive relief enjoining President Biden from any actions funding, supporting, or facilitating Executive Order 14019 as it violates the Electors and Elections Clause and Art. VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution which gives the Pennsylvania General Assembly the power to "regulate the registration of electors…"

3. Enter a declaratory judgment that the edict or announcement by Governor Shapiro for the regulation of times, places, and manner of federal elections is unconstitutional and violates the Electors Clause and the Elections Clause because the state legislature's approval and the state legislators' participation are required.

4. Issue an order granting injunctive relief enjoining Defendants Shapiro, Schmidt, or Marks from any actions funding, supporting, or facilitating the edict or announcement regarding automatic voter registration as it violates the Electors and Elections Clause and Art. VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution which gives the General Assembly the power to "regulate the registration of electors…"

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

5. Enter a declaratory judgment that the directive issued by the Department of State in 2018 regarding the verification of the identity and eligibility of Pennsylvania voters is unconstitutional, violates the legislators' federal rights, and violates established laws; and,

6. Issue an order granting injunctive relief enjoining Defendants Shapiro, Schmidt, or Marks from any actions funding, supporting, or facilitating the "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" as this directive violates the Electors and Elections Clause and Art. VII, Section 1 of the Pennsylvania Constitution which gives the General Assembly the power to "regulate the registration of electors…"

7. Issue a declaratory judgment that Plaintiffs have prevailed on a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim;

8. Grant Plaintiffs their reasonable attorney fees, costs, and expenses incurred and authorized under 42 U.S.C. § 1988; and

9. Issue an order that prohibits the Defendants, all non-legislative executive officials, from making future changes to the election process in Pennsylvania without following the proper, lawful, legislative process.

10. Grant such other and further relief as is just and appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

Dated: January 24, 2024

/s/Erick Kaardal
By: Erick G. Kaardal (MN No. 229647)
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
(612) 341-1074
kaardal@mklaw.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dated: January 24, 2024

/s/Karen DiSalvo
By: Karen DiSalvo (PA No. 80309)
Election Research Institute
Of Counsel, Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
1451 Quentin Road, Suite 232
Lebanon, PA 17042
717-281-1776
kd@election-institute.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 2/4/2024 12:00:49 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: America First/social media—privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Not urgent but passing along because I just saw this.

The article below discusses America First Legal's public records requests to Arizona offices, including SOS, presumably to set up First Amendment litigation. Flagging for awareness and let me know if you would like to discuss.

https://aflegal.org/america-first-legal-continues-fight-against-unlawful-censorship-files-records-requests-with-the-center-for-internet-security-and-arizona-agencies-and-counties-regarding-social-media-censorship-in-ari/

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Teegardin, Rachel [TeegardinR1@michigan.gov]
Sent: 2/26/2024 5:41:01 PM
To: Grossi, Christina [GrossiC1@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Totten, Mark (USAMIW) [Mark.Totten@usdoj.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Phan, Shayla (USAMIW) [Shayla.Phan@usdoj.gov]

Subject: Elections Meeting
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 3/6/2024 4:30:00 PM
End: 3/6/2024 5:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Required Attendees: Grossi, Christina; Osher, Daniel; Meingast, Heather (AG); Brady, Mike (MDOS); Totten, Mark (USAMIW); Jonathan Williams; Christine Sun
Optional Attendees: Phan, Shayla (USAMIW)

Briefing/Purpose:
A/C Priv MCL 15.243(1)(g)

Attendees:
Christina Grossi
Dan Osher
Mike Brady
Heather Meingast
Mark Totten
Jonathan Williams
Christine Sun

Meeting Location:
*TEAMS

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer, mobile app or room device
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, Pontiac

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
Sent: 2/22/2024 11:33:26 PM
To: Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Caroline [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; CO [co@isdglobal.org]; Dax [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Greg [greg@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Grossi, Christina [GrossiC1@michigan.gov]; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; Janae [janae@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; JD [jd@isdglobal.org]; JDC [jdc@isdglobal.org]; JH [jh@isdglobal.org]; Jonathan [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; 'JR' [jr@isdglobal.org]; Katie [katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kerrin [kerrin@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kk [kk@isdglobal.org]; LC [lc@isdglobal.org]; Lizzie [lizzie@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; LJ [lj@isdglobal.org]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Rollow, Jake (MDOS) [RollowJ@michigan.gov]; Sargent, Aubrey (AG) [SargentA1@michigan.gov]; Sharon [sharon@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS) [SittsJ@michigan.gov]; SLA [sla@isdglobal.org]; Weare, Jessica [WeareJ@michigan.gov]; Aboona, Rebecca (AG) [AboonaR1@michigan.gov]
CC: ranjana@statesuniteddemocracy.org; tiger@statesuniteddemocracy.org; lucy@statesuniteddemocracy.org; zoe@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Anderson, Christina (MDOS) [AndersonC42@michigan.gov]; Benander, Angela (MDOS) [BenanderA1@michigan.gov]; Edevbie, Aghogho (MDOS) [EdevbieA@michigan.gov]; Craine, Khyla (MDOS) [CraineK@michigan.gov]; El-Sulayman, Halima (MDOS) [ElSulaymanH1@michigan.gov]; Hardmon, Cheri (MDOS) [HardmonC@michigan.gov]; jr@strongcitiesnetwork.org

Subject: States United - Additional Briefing Meeting
Attachments: New Monday meeting.msg
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 2/26/2024 10:00:00 PM
End: 2/26/2024 10:30:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Required Attendees: Brady, Mike (MDOS); Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG); Caroline; CO; Dax; Greg; Grossi, Christina; Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG); Janae; JD; JDC; JH; Jonathan; JR; Katie; Kerrin; Kk; LC; Lizzie; LJ; Meingast, Heather (AG); Rollow, Jake (MDOS); Sargent, Aubrey (AG); Sharon; Sitts, Jennifer (MDOS); SLA; Weare, Jessica; Aboona, Rebecca (AG)
Optional Attendees: ranjana@statesuniteddemocracy.org; tiger@statesuniteddemocracy.org; lucy@statesuniteddemocracy.org; zoe@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Osher, Daniel; Anderson, Christina (MDOS); Benander, Angela (MDOS); Edevbie, Aghogho (MDOS); Craine, Khyla (MDOS); El-Sulayman, Halima (MDOS); Hardmon, Cheri (MDOS); jr@strongcitiesnetwork.org

---

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer, mobile app or room device
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, Pontiac
Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Tiger Mar [tiger@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 2/22/2024 9:54:45 PM
To: King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
CC: Caroline Chambers [caroline@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: New Monday meeting

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Pier—I'm Tiger from States United, filling in for Janae while she's out of office. Janae kindly surveyed the group that usually meets for our regular briefings about times to meet for an additional briefing next week, and we've settled on next Monday, Feb. 26, from 5:00-5:30 ET. Would you be able to send out an invitation?

Thanks!

Tiger Mar (he/him) | Project Assistant
States United Democracy Center
(781) 800-3581 | @statesunited
tiger@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/4/2024 7:14:10 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Trump v. Anderson analysis
Attachments: 23-719_19m2[80].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged and Confidential

Hi Heather,

As you have surely seen, in Trump v. Anderson, the Supreme Court this morning issued an unsigned per curiam decision reversing the Colorado Supreme Court and holding that former President Donald Trump cannot be excluded from the Republican primary ballot in Colorado under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

According to the Court, "responsibility for enforcing Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates rests with Congress and not the States." (Slip op. at 12). This means not only that States cannot enforce Section 3 against federal candidates and officeholders but also that no part of the federal government may enforce Section 3 absent specific legislation from Congress providing for enforcement of the disqualification.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Per Curiam

NOTICE: This opinion is subject to formal revision before publication in the United States Reports. Readers are requested to notify the Reporter of Decisions, Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D. C. 20543, pio@supremecourt.gov, of any typographical or other formal errors.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–719

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
NORMA ANDERSON, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

[March 4, 2024]

PER CURIAM.

A group of Colorado voters contends that Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution prohibits former President Donald J. Trump, who seeks the Presidential nomination of the Republican Party in this year's election, from becoming President again. The Colorado Supreme Court agreed with that contention. It ordered the Colorado secretary of state to exclude the former President from the Republican primary ballot in the State and to disregard any write-in votes that Colorado voters might cast for him.

Former President Trump challenges that decision on several grounds. Because the Constitution makes Congress, rather than the States, responsible for enforcing Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates, we reverse.

I

Last September, about six months before the March 5, 2024, Colorado primary election, four Republican and two unaffiliated Colorado voters filed a petition against former President Trump and Colorado Secretary of State Jena Griswold in Colorado state court. These voters—whom we refer to as the respondents—contend that after former

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Per Curiam

President Trump's defeat in the 2020 Presidential election, he disrupted the peaceful transfer of power by intentionally organizing and inciting the crowd that breached the Capitol as Congress met to certify the election results on January 6, 2021. One consequence of those actions, the respondents maintain, is that former President Trump is constitutionally ineligible to serve as President again.

Their theory turns on Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Section 3 provides:

> "No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."

According to the respondents, Section 3 applies to the former President because after taking the Presidential oath in 2017, he intentionally incited the breaching of the Capitol on January 6 in order to retain power. They claim that he is therefore not a qualified candidate, and that as a result, the Colorado secretary of state may not place him on the primary ballot. See Colo. Rev. Stat. §§1–1–113(1), 1–4–1101(1), 1–4–1201, 1–4–1203(2)(a), 1–4–1204 (2023).

After a five-day trial, the state District Court found that former President Trump had "engaged in insurrection" within the meaning of Section 3, but nonetheless denied the respondents' petition. The court held that Section 3 did not apply because the Presidency, which Section 3 does not mention by name, is not an "office . . . under the United States" and the President is not an "officer of the United States" within the meaning of that provision. See App. to Pet. for Cert. 184a–284a.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In December, the Colorado Supreme Court reversed in part and affirmed in part by a 4 to 3 vote. Reversing the District Court's operative holding, the majority concluded that for purposes of Section 3, the Presidency is an office under the United States and the President is an officer of the United States. The court otherwise affirmed, holding (1) that the Colorado Election Code permitted the respondents' challenge based on Section 3; (2) that Congress need not pass implementing legislation for disqualifications under Section 3 to attach; (3) that the political question doctrine did not preclude judicial review of former President Trump's eligibility; (4) that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence portions of a congressional Report on the events of January 6; (5) that the District Court did not err in concluding that those events constituted an "insurrection" and that former President Trump "engaged in" that insurrection; and (6) that former President Trump's speech to the crowd that breached the Capitol on January 6 was not protected by the First Amendment. See id., at 1a–114a.

The Colorado Supreme Court accordingly ordered Secretary Griswold not to "list President Trump's name on the 2024 presidential primary ballot" or "count any write-in votes cast for him." Id., at 114a. Chief Justice Boatright and Justices Samour and Berkenkotter each filed dissenting opinions. Id., at 115a–124a, 125a–161a, 162a–183a.

Under the terms of the opinion of the Colorado Supreme Court, its ruling was automatically stayed pending this Court's review. See id., at 114a. We granted former President Trump's petition for certiorari, which raised a single question: "Did the Colorado Supreme Court err in ordering President Trump excluded from the 2024 presidential primary ballot?" See 601 U. S. ___ (2024). Concluding that it did, we now reverse.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II

A

Proposed by Congress in 1866 and ratified by the States in 1868, the Fourteenth Amendment "expand[ed] federal power at the expense of state autonomy" and thus "fundamentally altered the balance of state and federal power struck by the Constitution." Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U. S. 44, 59 (1996); see also Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 345 (1880). Section 1 of the Amendment, for instance, bars the States from "depriv[ing] any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law" or "deny[ing] to any person . . . the equal protection of the laws." And Section 5 confers on Congress "power to enforce" those prohibitions, along with the other provisions of the Amendment, "by appropriate legislation."

Section 3 of the Amendment likewise restricts state autonomy, but through different means. It was designed to help ensure an enduring Union by preventing former Confederates from returning to power in the aftermath of the Civil War. See, e.g., Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., 2544 (1866) (statement of Rep. Stevens, warning that without appropriate constitutional reforms "yelling secessionists and hissing copperheads" would take seats in the House); id., at 2768 (statement of Sen. Howard, lamenting prospect of a "State Legislature . . . made up entirely of disloyal elements" absent a disqualification provision). Section 3 aimed to prevent such a resurgence by barring from office "those who, having once taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, afterward went into rebellion against the Government of the United States." Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess., 626 (1869) (statement of Sen. Trumbull).

Section 3 works by imposing on certain individuals a preventive and severe penalty—disqualification from holding a wide array of offices—rather than by granting rights to all. It is therefore necessary, as Chief Justice Chase concluded and the Colorado Supreme Court itself recognized, to "'ascertain[] what particular individuals are embraced'" by the provision. App. to Pet. for Cert. 53a (quoting Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. 7, 26 (No. 5,815) (CC Va. 1869) (Chase, Circuit Justice)). Chase went on to explain that "[t]o accomplish this ascertainment and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable." Id., at 26. For its part, the Colorado Supreme Court also concluded that there must be some kind of "determination" that Section 3 applies to a particular person "before the disqualification holds meaning." App. to Pet. for Cert. 53a.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Constitution empowers Congress to prescribe how those determinations should be made. The relevant provision is Section 5, which enables Congress, subject of course to judicial review, to pass "appropriate legislation" to "enforce" the Fourteenth Amendment. See City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U. S. 507, 536 (1997). Or as Senator Howard put it at the time the Amendment was framed, Section 5 "casts upon Congress the responsibility of seeing to it, for the future, that all the sections of the amendment are carried out in good faith." Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess., at 2768.

Congress's Section 5 power is critical when it comes to Section 3. Indeed, during a debate on enforcement legislation less than a year after ratification, Sen. Trumbull noted that "notwithstanding [Section 3] . . . hundreds of men [were] holding office" in violation of its terms. Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess., at 626. The Constitution, Trumbull noted, "provide[d] no means for enforcing" the disqualification, necessitating a "bill to give effect to the fundamental law embraced in the Constitution." Ibid. The enforcement mechanism Trumbull championed was later enacted as part of the Enforcement Act of 1870, "pursuant to the power conferred by §5 of the [Fourteenth] Amendment." General Building Contractors Assn., Inc. v. Pennsylvania, 458 U. S. 375, 385 (1982); see 16 Stat. 143–144.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B

This case raises the question whether the States, in addition to Congress, may also enforce Section 3. We conclude that States may disqualify persons holding or attempting to hold state office. But States have no power under the Constitution to enforce Section 3 with respect to federal offices, especially the Presidency.

"In our federal system, the National Government possesses only limited powers; the States and the people retain the remainder." Bond v. United States, 572 U. S. 844, 854 (2014). Among those retained powers is the power of a State to "order the processes of its own governance." Alden v. Maine, 527 U. S. 706, 752 (1999). In particular, the States enjoy sovereign "power to prescribe the qualifications of their own officers" and "the manner of their election . . . free from external interference, except so far as plainly provided by the Constitution of the United States." Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 570–571 (1900). Although the Fourteenth Amendment restricts state power, nothing in it plainly withdraws from the States this traditional authority. And after ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, States used this authority to disqualify state officers in accordance with state statutes. See, e.g., Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199, 200, 204 (1869) (elected county sheriff); State ex rel. Sandlin v. Watkins, 21 La. Ann. 631, 631–633 (1869) (state judge).

Such power over governance, however, does not extend to federal officeholders and candidates. Because federal officers "'owe their existence and functions to the united voice of the whole, not of a portion, of the people,'" powers over their election and qualifications must be specifically "delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States." U. S. Term

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U. S. 779, 803–804 (1995) (quoting 1 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States §627, p. 435 (3d ed. 1858)). But nothing in the Constitution delegates to the States any power to enforce Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates.

As an initial matter, not even the respondents contend that the Constitution authorizes States to somehow remove sitting federal officeholders who may be violating Section 3. Such a power would flout the principle that "the Constitution guarantees 'the entire independence of the General Government from any control by the respective States.'" Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 800 (2020) (quoting Farmers and Mechanics Sav. Bank of Minneapolis v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 521 (1914)). Indeed, consistent with that principle, States lack even the lesser powers to issue writs of mandamus against federal officials or to grant habeas corpus relief to persons in federal custody. See McClung v. Silliman, 6 Wheat. 598, 603–605 (1821); Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. 397, 405–410 (1872).

The respondents nonetheless maintain that States may enforce Section 3 against candidates for federal office. But the text of the Fourteenth Amendment, on its face, does not affirmatively delegate such a power to the States. The terms of the Amendment speak only to enforcement by Congress, which enjoys power to enforce the Amendment through legislation pursuant to Section 5.

This can hardly come as a surprise, given that the substantive provisions of the Amendment "embody significant limitations on state authority." Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U. S. 445, 456 (1976). Under the Amendment, States cannot abridge privileges or immunities, deprive persons of life, liberty, or property without due process, deny equal protection, or deny male inhabitants the right to vote (without thereby suffering reduced representation in the House). See Amdt. 14, §§1, 2. On the other hand, the Fourteenth Amendment grants new power to Congress to enforce the provisions of the Amendment against the States. It would be incongruous to read this particular Amendment as granting the States the power—silently no less—to disqualify a candidate for federal office.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The only other plausible constitutional sources of such a delegation are the Elections and Electors Clauses, which authorize States to conduct and regulate congressional and Presidential elections, respectively. See Art. I, §4, cl. 1; Art. II, §1, cl. 2.[1] But there is little reason to think that these Clauses implicitly authorize the States to enforce Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates. Granting the States that authority would invert the Fourteenth Amendment's rebalancing of federal and state power.

The text of Section 3 reinforces these conclusions. Its final sentence empowers Congress to "remove" any Section 3 "disability" by a two-thirds vote of each house. The text imposes no limits on that power, and Congress may exercise it any time, as the respondents concede. See Brief for Respondents 50. In fact, historically, Congress sometimes exercised this amnesty power postelection to ensure that some of the people's chosen candidates could take office.[2] But if States were free to enforce Section 3 by barring candidates from running in the first place, Congress would be

---

[1] The Elections Clause directs, in relevant part, that "[t]he Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." Art. I, §4, cl. 1. The Electors Clause similarly provides that "[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors," who in turn elect the President. Art. II, §1, cl. 2.

[2] Shortly after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, for instance, Congress enacted a private bill to remove the Section 3 disability of Nelson Tift of Georgia, who had recently been elected to represent the State in Congress. See ch. 393, 15 Stat. 427. Tift took his seat in Congress immediately thereafter. See Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 2d Sess., 4499–4500 (1868). Congress similarly acted postelection to remove the disabilities of persons elected to state and local offices. See Cong. Globe, 40th Cong., 3d Sess., 29–30, 120–121 (1868); ch. 5, 15 Stat. 435–436.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

forced to exercise its disability removal power before voting begins if it wished for its decision to have any effect on the current election cycle. Perhaps a State may burden congressional authority in such a way when it exercises its "exclusive" sovereign power over its own state offices. Taylor, 178 U. S., at 571. But it is implausible to suppose that the Constitution affirmatively delegated to the States the authority to impose such a burden on congressional power with respect to candidates for federal office. Cf. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 436 (1819) ("States have no power . . . to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress").

Nor have the respondents identified any tradition of state enforcement of Section 3 against federal officeholders or candidates in the years following ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.[3] Such a lack of historical precedent is generally a "'telling indication'" of a "'severe constitutional problem'" with the asserted power. United States v. Texas, 599 U. S. 670, 677 (2023) (quoting Free Enterprise Fund v. Public Company Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U. S. 477, 505 (2010)). And it is an especially telling sign here, because as noted, States did disqualify persons from holding state offices following ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. That pattern of disqualification with respect to state, but not federal offices provides "persuasive evidence of a general understanding" that the States lacked enforcement power with respect to the latter. U. S. Term Limits, 514

[3]We are aware of just one example of state enforcement against a would-be federal officer. In 1868, the Governor of Georgia refused to commission John Christy, who had won the most votes in a congressional election, because—in the Governor's view—Section 3 made Christy ineligible to serve. But the Governor's determination was not final; a committee of the House reviewed Christy's qualifications itself and recommended that he not be seated. The full House never acted on the matter, and Christy was never seated. See 1 A. Hinds, Precedents of the House of Representatives §459, pp. 470–472 (1907).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

U. S., at 826.

Instead, it is Congress that has long given effect to Section 3 with respect to would-be or existing federal officeholders. Shortly after ratification of the Amendment, Congress enacted the Enforcement Act of 1870. That Act authorized federal district attorneys to bring civil actions in federal court to remove anyone holding nonlegislative office—federal or state—in violation of Section 3, and made holding or attempting to hold office in violation of Section 3 a federal crime. §§14, 15, 16 Stat. 143–144 (repealed, 35 Stat. 1153–1154, 62 Stat. 992–993). In the years following ratification, the House and Senate exercised their unique powers under Article I to adjudicate challenges contending that certain prospective or sitting Members could not take or retain their seats due to Section 3. See Art. I, §5, cls. 1, 2; 1 A. Hinds, Precedents of the House of Representatives §§459–463, pp. 470–486 (1907). And the Confiscation Act of 1862, which predated Section 3, effectively provided an additional procedure for enforcing disqualification. That law made engaging in insurrection or rebellion, among other acts, a federal crime punishable by disqualification from holding office under the United States. See §§2, 3, 12 Stat. 590. A successor to those provisions remains on the books today. See 18 U. S. C. §2383.

Moreover, permitting state enforcement of Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates would raise serious questions about the scope of that power. Section 5 limits congressional legislation enforcing Section 3, because Section 5 is strictly "remedial." City of Boerne, 521 U. S., at 520. To comply with that limitation, Congress "must tailor its legislative scheme to remedying or preventing" the specific conduct the relevant provision prohibits. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Ed. Expense Bd. v. College Savings Bank, 527 U. S. 627, 639 (1999). Section 3, unlike other provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, proscribes conduct of individuals. It bars persons from holding office after taking a qualifying oath and then engaging in insurrection or rebellion—nothing more. Any congressional legislation enforcing Section 3 must, like the Enforcement Act of 1870 and §2383, reflect "congruence and proportionality" between preventing or remedying that conduct "and the means adopted to that end." City of Boerne, 521 U. S., at 520. Neither we nor the respondents are aware of any other legislation by Congress to enforce Section 3. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 123.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Any state enforcement of Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates, though, would not derive from Section 5, which confers power only on "[t]he Congress." As a result, such state enforcement might be argued to sweep more broadly than congressional enforcement could under our precedents. But the notion that the Constitution grants the States freer rein than Congress to decide how Section 3 should be enforced with respect to federal offices is simply implausible.

Finally, state enforcement of Section 3 with respect to the Presidency would raise heightened concerns. "[I]n the context of a Presidential election, state-imposed restrictions implicate a uniquely important national interest." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U. S. 780, 794–795 (1983) (footnote omitted). But state-by-state resolution of the question whether Section 3 bars a particular candidate for President from serving would be quite unlikely to yield a uniform answer consistent with the basic principle that "the President . . . represent[s] all the voters in the Nation." Id., at 795 (emphasis added).

Conflicting state outcomes concerning the same candidate could result not just from differing views of the merits, but from variations in state law governing the proceedings that are necessary to make Section 3 disqualification determinations. Some States might allow a Section 3 challenge to succeed based on a preponderance of the evidence, while others might require a heightened showing. Certain evidence (like the congressional Report on which the lower courts relied here) might be admissible in some States but inadmissible hearsay in others. Disqualification might be possible only through criminal prosecution, as opposed to expedited civil proceedings, in particular States. Indeed, in some States—unlike Colorado (or Maine, where the secretary of state recently issued an order excluding former President Trump from the primary ballot)—procedures for excluding an ineligible candidate from the ballot may not exist at all. The result could well be that a single candidate would be declared ineligible in some States, but not others, based on the same conduct (and perhaps even the same factual record).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The "patchwork" that would likely result from state enforcement would "sever the direct link that the Framers found so critical between the National Government and the people of the United States" as a whole. U. S. Term Limits, 514 U. S., at 822. But in a Presidential election "the impact of the votes cast in each State is affected by the votes cast"—or, in this case, the votes not allowed to be cast—"for the various candidates in other States." Anderson, 460 U. S., at 795. An evolving electoral map could dramatically change the behavior of voters, parties, and States across the country, in different ways and at different times. The disruption would be all the more acute—and could nullify the votes of millions and change the election result—if Section 3 enforcement were attempted after the Nation has voted. Nothing in the Constitution requires that we endure such chaos—arriving at any time or different times, up to and perhaps beyond the Inauguration.

* * *

For the reasons given, responsibility for enforcing Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates rests with Congress and not the States. The judgment of the Colorado

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Supreme Court therefore cannot stand.

All nine Members of the Court agree with that result. Our colleagues writing separately further agree with many of the reasons this opinion provides for reaching it. See post, Part I (joint opinion of SOTOMAYOR, KAGAN, and JACKSON, JJ.); see also post, p. 1 (opinion of BARRETT, J.). So far as we can tell, they object only to our taking into account the distinctive way Section 3 works and the fact that Section 5 vests in Congress the power to enforce it. These are not the only reasons the States lack power to enforce this particular constitutional provision with respect to federal offices. But they are important ones, and it is the combination of all the reasons set forth in this opinion—not, as some of our colleagues would have it, just one particular rationale—that resolves this case. In our view, each of these reasons is necessary to provide a complete explanation for the judgment the Court unanimously reaches.

The judgment of the Colorado Supreme Court is reversed.

The mandate shall issue forthwith.

It is so ordered.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–719

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
NORMA ANDERSON, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

[March 4, 2024]

JUSTICE BARRETT, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join Parts I and II–B of the Court's opinion. I agree that States lack the power to enforce Section 3 against Presidential candidates. That principle is sufficient to resolve this case, and I would decide no more than that. This suit was brought by Colorado voters under state law in state court. It does not require us to address the complicated question whether federal legislation is the exclusive vehicle through which Section 3 can be enforced.

The majority's choice of a different path leaves the remaining Justices with a choice of how to respond. In my judgment, this is not the time to amplify disagreement with stridency. The Court has settled a politically charged issue in the volatile season of a Presidential election. Particularly in this circumstance, writings on the Court should turn the national temperature down, not up. For present purposes, our differences are far less important than our unanimity: All nine Justices agree on the outcome of this case. That is the message Americans should take home.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–719

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
NORMA ANDERSON, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

[March 4, 2024]

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR, JUSTICE KAGAN, and JUSTICE JACKSON, concurring in the judgment.

"If it is not necessary to decide more to dispose of a case, then it is necessary not to decide more." Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization, 597 U. S. 215, 348 (2022) (ROBERTS, C. J., concurring in judgment). That fundamental principle of judicial restraint is practically as old as our Republic. This Court is authorized "to say what the law is" only because "[t]hose who apply [a] rule to particular cases . . . must of necessity expound and interpret that rule." Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177 (1803) (emphasis added).

Today, the Court departs from that vital principle, deciding not just this case, but challenges that might arise in the future. In this case, the Court must decide whether Colorado may keep a Presidential candidate off the ballot on the ground that he is an oathbreaking insurrectionist and thus disqualified from holding federal office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Allowing Colorado to do so would, we agree, create a chaotic state-by-state patchwork, at odds with our Nation's federalism principles. That is enough to resolve this case. Yet the majority goes further. Even though "[a]ll nine Members of the Court" agree that this independent and sufficient rationale resolves this case, five Justices go on. They decide novel constitutional questions to insulate this Court and petitioner from future controversy. Ante, at 13. Although only an individual State's action is at issue here, the majority opines on which federal actors can enforce Section 3, and how they must do so. The majority announces that a disqualification for insurrection can occur only when Congress enacts a particular kind of legislation pursuant to Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. In doing so, the majority shuts the door on other potential means of federal enforcement. We cannot join an opinion that decides momentous and difficult issues unnecessarily, and we therefore concur only in the judgment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I

Our Constitution leaves some questions to the States while committing others to the Federal Government. Federalism principles embedded in that constitutional structure decide this case. States cannot use their control over the ballot to "undermine the National Government." U. S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U. S. 779, 810 (1995). That danger is even greater "in the context of a Presidential election." Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U. S. 780, 794–795 (1983). State restrictions in that context "implicate a uniquely important national interest" extending beyond a State's "own borders." Ibid. No doubt, States have significant "authority over presidential electors" and, in turn, Presidential elections. Chiafalo v. Washington, 591 U. S. 578, 588 (2020). That power, however, is limited by "other constitutional constraint[s]," including federalism principles. Id., at 589.

The majority rests on such principles when it explains why Colorado cannot take Petitioner off the ballot. "[S]tate-by-state resolution of the question whether Section 3 bars a particular candidate for President from serving," the majority explains, "would be quite unlikely to yield a uniform answer consistent with the basic principle that 'the President

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

. . . represent[s] all the voters in the Nation.'" Ante, at 11 (quoting Anderson, 460 U. S., at 795). That is especially so, the majority adds, because different States can reach "[c]onflicting . . . outcomes concerning the same candidate . . . not just from differing views of the merits, but from variations in state law governing the proceedings" to enforce Section 3. Ante, at 11.

The contrary conclusion that a handful of officials in a few States could decide the Nation's next President would be especially surprising with respect to Section 3. The Reconstruction Amendments "were specifically designed as an expansion of federal power and an intrusion on state sovereignty." City of Rome v. United States, 446 U. S. 156, 179 (1980). Section 3 marked the first time the Constitution placed substantive limits on a State's authority to choose its own officials. Given that context, it would defy logic for Section 3 to give States new powers to determine who may hold the Presidency. Cf. ante, at 8 ("It would be incongruous to read this particular Amendment as granting the States the power—silently no less—to disqualify a candidate for federal office").

That provides a secure and sufficient basis to resolve this case. To allow Colorado to take a presidential candidate off the ballot under Section 3 would imperil the Framers' vision of "a Federal Government directly responsible to the people." U. S. Term Limits, 514 U. S., at 821. The Court should have started and ended its opinion with this conclusion.

II

Yet the Court continues on to resolve questions not before us. In a case involving no federal action whatsoever, the Court opines on how federal enforcement of Section 3 must proceed. Congress, the majority says, must enact legislation under Section 5 prescribing the procedures to "'"ascertain[] what particular individuals"'" should be disqualified.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ante, at 5 (quoting Griffin's Case, 11 F. Cas. 7, 26 (No. 5,815) (CC Va. 1869) (Chase, Circuit Justice)). These musings are as inadequately supported as they are gratuitous.

To start, nothing in Section 3's text supports the majority's view of how federal disqualification efforts must operate. Section 3 states simply that "[n]o person shall" hold certain positions and offices if they are oathbreaking insurrectionists. Amdt. 14. Nothing in that unequivocal bar suggests that implementing legislation enacted under Section 5 is "critical" (or, for that matter, what that word means in this context). Ante, at 5. In fact, the text cuts the opposite way. Section 3 provides that when an oathbreaking insurrectionist is disqualified, "Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability." It is hard to understand why the Constitution would require a congressional supermajority to remove a disqualification if a simple majority could nullify Section 3's operation by repealing or declining to pass implementing legislation. Even petitioner's lawyer acknowledged the "tension" in Section 3 that the majority's view creates. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 31.

Similarly, nothing else in the rest of the Fourteenth Amendment supports the majority's view. Section 5 gives Congress the "power to enforce [the Amendment] by appropriate legislation." Remedial legislation of any kind, however, is not required. All the Reconstruction Amendments (including the due process and equal protection guarantees and prohibition of slavery) "are self-executing," meaning that they do not depend on legislation. City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U. S. 507, 524 (1997); see Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 20 (1883). Similarly, other constitutional rules of disqualification, like the two-term limit on the Presidency, do not require implementing legislation. See, e.g., Art. II, §1, cl. 5 (Presidential Qualifications); Amdt. 22 (Presidential Term Limits). Nor does the majority suggest otherwise.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It simply creates a special rule for the insurrection disability in Section 3.

The majority is left with next to no support for its requirement that a Section 3 disqualification can occur only pursuant to legislation enacted for that purpose. It cites Griffin's Case, but that is a nonprecedential, lower court opinion by a single Justice in his capacity as a circuit judge. See ante, at 5 (quoting 11 F. Cas., at 26). Once again, even petitioner's lawyer distanced himself from fully embracing this case as probative of Section 3's meaning. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 35–36. The majority also cites Senator Trumbull's statements that Section 3 "'provide[d] no means for enforcing'" itself. Ante, at 5 (quoting Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess., 626 (1869)). The majority, however, neglects to mention the Senator's view that "[i]t is the [F]ourteenth [A]mendment that prevents a person from holding office," with the proposed legislation simply "affor[ding] a more efficient and speedy remedy" for effecting the disqualification. Cong. Globe, 41st Cong., 1st Sess., at 626–627.

Ultimately, under the guise of providing a more "complete explanation for the judgment," ante, at 13, the majority resolves many unsettled questions about Section 3. It forecloses judicial enforcement of that provision, such as might occur when a party is prosecuted by an insurrectionist and raises a defense on that score. The majority further holds that any legislation to enforce this provision must prescribe certain procedures "'tailor[ed]'" to Section 3, ante, at 10, ruling out enforcement under general federal statutes requiring the government to comply with the law. By resolving these and other questions, the majority attempts to insulate all alleged insurrectionists from future challenges to their holding federal office.

* * *

"What it does today, the Court should have left undone."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bush v. Gore, 531 U. S. 98, 158 (2000) (Breyer, J., dissenting). The Court today needed to resolve only a single question: whether an individual State may keep a Presidential candidate found to have engaged in insurrection off its ballot. The majority resolves much more than the case before us. Although federal enforcement of Section 3 is in no way at issue, the majority announces novel rules for how that enforcement must operate. It reaches out to decide Section 3 questions not before us, and to foreclose future efforts to disqualify a Presidential candidate under that provision. In a sensitive case crying out for judicial restraint, it abandons that course.

Section 3 serves an important, though rarely needed, role in our democracy. The American people have the power to vote for and elect candidates for national office, and that is a great and glorious thing. The men who drafted and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment, however, had witnessed an "insurrection [and] rebellion" to defend slavery. §3. They wanted to ensure that those who had participated in that insurrection, and in possible future insurrections, could not return to prominent roles. Today, the majority goes beyond the necessities of this case to limit how Section 3 can bar an oathbreaking insurrectionist from becoming President. Although we agree that Colorado cannot enforce Section 3, we protest the majority's effort to use this case to define the limits of federal enforcement of that provision. Because we would decide only the issue before us, we concur only in the judgment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/18/2024 4:46:31 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: New RNC lawsuit
Attachments: Letter.to.Jim.Jordan.03.17.24.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Will call you at 2.

Can also discuss the attached.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, March 18, 2024 at 12:38 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Sure, anytime works.

H

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Monday, March 18, 2024 12:29 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Is there a good time to check in about this briefly this afternoon, ideally between 2 and 4 pm?

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Barry County Sheriff's Office

1212 West State Street • Hastings, Michigan 49058

Sheriff Dar Leaf

March 17, 2024

The Honorable Jim Jordan
2056 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, DC, 20515-3504

Dear Congressman Jordan,

My office is investigating criminal acts related to elections in Barry County, the State of Michigan, and the United States. I am in possession of evidence involving voting machines. Additionally, I have recently received a subpoena from Prosecutor D.J. Hilson of Muskegon County for my file. D.J. Hilson worked with the Michigan Attorney General to bury the Muskegon fraud investigation that was initially reported by the Muskegon local clerk. Not one person was charged related to the Muskegon fraud despite confessions, and physical evidence. Considering this, I am going to provide portions of my file to Congress for immediate review and investigation.

My office has come into possession of evidence that foreign nationals have accessed electronic voting machines in Michigan and other states. This evidence demonstrates that electronic voting machines and electronic election systems used for elections in Michigan and throughout the United States are not secure and an immediate investigation is needed by Congress.

Business (269) 948-4805 • Jail (269) 948-4804 • Fax (269) 948-4831

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I have evidence in my file of Serbian foreign nationals entering our election system while the votes were being counted, and prior to certification. The election vendor, Dominion, hired these Serbian employees and disclosed in emails that they are not able to provide backgrounds on these individuals due to law in Serbia. It has only been a mere 25 years since conflict involving Serbia. Therefore, the United States has allowed a scenario where potentially Serbian military criminals are running our elections and remotely entering our election equipment.

I am investigating the role that some individuals inside the United States have played in conspiring with these foreign nationals, and who have even directed and instructed them to access and interfere with electronic voting machines and electronic voting systems during past elections, including the November 2020 election. Multiple false assurances from state and federal agencies, and private companies that our elections were secure and not compromised through remote network access or otherwise. Moreover, I have evidence that U.S. Dominion and its affiliates (Dominion) instructed its employees to alter or otherwise falsify the integrity of the software and hardware in its voting machines and systems to attain certification by the Election Assistance Commission (EAC), even when they knew that the systems could not be properly verified and certified. Additionally, I have evidence that the voting machines and systems are vulnerable to alteration and manipulation, i.e., interference, by the use of thumb drives and external devices that can be surreptitiously connected to voting machines before, during, and after elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As a result of this information, my office is also investigating conspiracy crimes, wire services fraud, honest services fraud, and perjury charges, among other criminal acts. The perjury charges stems from assurances by Dominion's CEO during sworn testimony before the Michigan Legislature that its voting machines and voting systems could not be accessed or connected to by outside networks and sources, and that it was a "US based company."

As I now have evidence that our election equipment is not secure and because election voting machines prevent transparency, and vendors have more oversight and authority to have them examined than the officials that are charged with the constitutional duty to insure our elections are secure, transparent, and fulfill our promise to each and every American that their votes will count, and will be properly tabulated, and not diluted, deleted or otherwise altered, I am presenting you with this letter and an initial tranche of this evidence so that you will review it, and be compelled to investigate this matter and call those responsible for this breach of our Constitution to give testimony concerning these criminal acts and breach of our national security. These matters impact not only us here in the State of Michigan, but every citizen voter in the country who relies on the Constitution's promise that each legal registered citizen voter should have one vote, and that vote should correctly reflect his or her will and choice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As a constitutional officer, my duties are defined by my oath of office, the Constitution, the statutes governing my office, and those powers at common law that were recognized as being attached to my position. In light of this evidence, I am suggesting that every election official consider an emergency back-up plan for upcoming elections to prepare to verify all ballots and voters, and to hand count actual paper ballots at the end of elections to confirm the accuracy of the vote, the voters, and that our election machines are working properly. There is no harm in confirming results to ensure that the will of the people is reflected.

Thank you, in advance, for your prompt attention to this matter. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions or would like additional information concerning my investigation. As it stands, I have no faith in the federal institutions that allowed this garbage in the first place therefore, I am attaching unredacted documents for your review. More importantly, for review by the American people. This should allow for Congress to issue subpoenas in an expedited fashion. I look forward to Congress working for the American people, and quickly addressing these election security problems while I pursue the criminal investigation with sheriffs across the country.

Sincerely,

/s/ Dar Leaf

Barry County Sheriff Dar Leaf

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/20/2024 4:56:38 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Gillian Feiner [Gillian@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Beth Stevens [beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Dar Leaf tweets/document
Attachments: Dar Leaf - tweets 3.18.24 - MI Share.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Dan and Heather,

We've reviewed nearly all the documents that appear to be from the Dominion litigation posted on a new Twitter account purporting to belong to Dar Leaf over the weekend. Attached is a summary description of those documents. Let me know if you'd like anything more from us on this. Thanks!

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/20/2024 12:59:45 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Subject: SUDC update re social media litigation
Attachments: Social Media Memo Updates 3.19.24 .pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather and Linus,

I've attached a States United client update regarding recent Supreme Court developments related to the First Amendment and social media content moderation:

- The Court's decision last Friday in Lindke v. Freed (a case originating in Michigan) that addresses when individual government employees (and, by analogy, elected officials) using social media are treated as state actors susceptible to First Amendment lawsuits when they block users or delete comments.

- Oral arguments Monday in Murthy v. Missouri and Vullo v. NRA—two cases that concern when government efforts to persuade cross the line into potentially unlawful coercion. Murthy concerns efforts to combat disinformation on social media. Vullo concerns efforts to dissuade businesses from doing business with the NRA.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/11/2024 6:34:18 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: United Sovereign Americans - New MD Case
Attachments: Complaint - United Sovereign Americans.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

We wanted to flag for you a Maryland case filed last week that may be coming down the pike in Michigan.

A Missouri-based nonprofit called "United Sovereign Americans" sued the Maryland State Board of Elections seeking to enjoin the Board from certifying future elections until the Board, among other things, updates its voter rolls, decertifies its voting systems, and follows the guidance of a court-appointed Special Master to implement suggested programs to improve monitoring and transparency in the voting systems. The lawsuit alleges: (1) the state's voter registration database contains nearly 80K registration violations in violation of the NVRA; (2) the number of voting systems errors exceeds HAVA's maximum allowable error rate; (3) the state failed to properly certify its voting systems; (4) the state's voting systems improperly use modems to transmit results; (5) the state failed to appropriately respond to public information requests; and (6) the state's voting systems fail to give voters the ability to correct certain undervotes in violation of HAVA. The complaint claims that the Board is violating HAVA and the NVRA, as well as state election law. The full complaint is attached. As of now, the group has not filed for a preliminary injunction, but we will keep monitoring the docket.

Media reports indicate that this is the first of many suits the group plans to file across the country. The group says that it is "actively preparing litigation in 23 states," though it has not mentioned which specific states.

We will let you know if/when the group files suit in any other states.

Best,
Zack

Zack Goldberg (he/him) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
917.656.6234 | @statesunited
zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MARYLAND

Maryland Election Integrity LLC 116 Defense Highway, Annapolis, MD 21401 Plaintiff	*
United Sovereign Americans, Inc. 167 Lamp and Lantern Village Suite 194 Chesterfield, MO 63017 Plaintiff	*
v.	*	Case No.:
Maryland State Board of Elections 151 West Street #200 Annapolis, MD 21401 SERVE ON: Michael G. Summers, In his representative capacity as the Chairman of the Maryland State Board of Elections 151 West Street #200 Annapolis, MD 21401 Defendant	*

****

COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Maryland Election Integrity LLC, a Maryland limited liability company, and United Sovereign Americans, Inc., a Missouri nonprofit corporation, Plaintiffs, by Hartman, Attorneys at Law, and C. Edward Hartman, III, hereby bring this Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief, and plead as follows:

PARTIES

1. Maryland Election Integrity LLC is a Maryland limited liability company. Its principal office is located in Maryland.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. United Sovereign Americans, Inc. is a nonprofit corporation incorporated in the state of Missouri.

3. Maryland State Board of Elections (hereinafter referred to as "MDSBE") is a government agency that administers elections in Maryland.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

4. This action seeks declaratory and injunctive relief from deficient voter registration rolls leading to violations of Federal and state laws, the certification of results from a provably flawed, inaccurate, and obscure process outside the view of impartial witnesses or the public, including the use of voting systems in Maryland that are believed to have void EAC certifications in violation of federal law, and the refusal of the Maryland State Board of Elections to comply with Public Information Act (PIA) requests and Federally required transparency. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this complaint because the case presents substantial questions of federal law, and the state claims are so related to the federal claims that they form part of the same case or controversy. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1367.

5. This court has authority to issue a declaratory judgment and to order injunctive and other relief that is necessary and proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§2201 and 2202 as there exists a case of actual controversy.

6. This court has personal jurisdiction as the Defendant is a Maryland Agency.

7. Venue is proper in this district under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

STANDING

8. Maryland Election Integrity LLC is an organization comprised of members who are registered voters in the state of Maryland.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9. The members have been and are currently harmed by the MDSBE and the ES&S voting systems currently and formerly in use in Maryland elections. The violations of Maryland election laws, the US Constitution, and Federal civil rights laws pertaining to voter registration rolls, transparency, compliance, and certification of the voting systems, and the serious issues hereinafter discussed with the overall voting systems exemplify their injury. The lack of transparency by MDSBE with respect to the voting systems and the reports generated by them has resulted in Plaintiffs being denied lawful Public Information Act (PIA) requests and the Federally mandated preservation of auditable items.
10. If the Court grants Plaintiffs' requested relief, the injury to the Plaintiffs' members would cease to exist.
11. The Supreme Court has indicated that if one party to a lawsuit has standing, other entities can join as parties without having to satisfy independently the demands of Article III, provided those parties do not seek a distinct form of relief from the party with standing. E.g., Horne v. Flores, 557 U.S. 433, 446 (2009).
12. United Sovereign Americans is not seeking a distinct form of relief and, therefore, has standing.

BACKGROUND

13. Article 1 Section 2 of the US Constitution grants the right to choose representatives to the people of the several states, according to the voting eligibility requirements of the state.
14. The Fourteenth Amendment Section 1 defines a citizen as all people born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.
15. The Fourteenth Amendment Section 2 protects the eligible citizen voters of a state against both denial, or abridgment in any way, of their vote.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

16. The National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) was passed for the purpose of ensuring accurate, current voter registration rolls. Congress' power to pass NVRA comes from Article 1, Section 8, Clause 18 of the US Constitution, the Necessary and Proper Clause, making accurate voter rolls a requirement to uphold the right of the people to choose their representatives.

17. Of the three components of an election, voters, votes, and counts, in that order, each relies on the accuracy of the preceding component(s) in order to be trustworthy. Without all being intact, the system will not meet the requirements for certifying the vote, plainly needing the ability to prove both accuracy and compliance.

18. It is a settled legal principle that dilution of a qualified voter's vote is a form of disenfranchisement, Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371 (1879), United States v. Saylor, 322 U. S. 385 (1944), Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964).

19. The Help America Vote Act requires that voter roll databases contain only the registrations of qualified citizen voters residing in that state. 52 USC § 21083(a). Each qualified voter is granted a unique statewide identifier in the database, averting the risk of double-voting, or extra ballots being cast in the name of a particular voter. Further, the constitutional mandate is that the election system must only count eligible voters. Maryland cannot demonstrate that there is effective control of eligibility in Federal or State dimensions of those requirements and has implemented a system that does not guarantee accuracy or compliance with only allowing eligible voters to register and vote.

20. The Help America Vote Act requires that federal elections adhere to an accuracy standard, "…set at a sufficiently stringent level such that the likelihood of voting system errors affecting the outcome of an election is exceptionally remote even in the closest of elections." United States. (2002) U.S. Federal Election Commission FEC. United States. [Web Archive] Retrieved from the Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/28/Voting_System_Standards_Volume_I.pdf.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

21. For a voting system, accuracy is defined as the ability of the system to capture the intent of the voters without error. United States. (2002) U.S. Federal Election Commission FEC. United States. [Web Archive] Retrieved from the Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/28/Voting_System_Standards_Volume_I.pdf.

FACTS

Voter Rolls

22. The National Voter Registration Act of 1993 (NVRA) states that "[t]he purposes of this act are to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained." 52 USC § 20501(b)(4).

23. Meticulous analysis of the official Maryland State Voter Registration Database reveals a minimum of 79,392 current apparent registration violations (Voter Registration Database snapshots were purchased 8/2021, 12/2021, 7/2022, 8/2022, 12/2022, 1/2023, 2/2023, 3/2023, 4/2023, 5/2023, 6/2023, and 7/2023).

24. The analysis revealed 1,699 instances of duplicate registrations, 25,084 instances of registrants with questionable inactive status, 3,366 instances of active registrations without a certified US Post Office mailing address, 5,680 instances of active registrants who moved at least 4 years ago, 605 instances of registrations with no residential address, 296 instances of active registrants with a nonstandard address, 1,218 instances of active registrants who are deceased, 883 instances of age discrepant registration (younger than 18 or older than 115), and 40,518 instances of questionable registration date. A spreadsheet with the apparent registration violations is attached as Exhibit A.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

25. Exhibit A shows the registration type, the number of apparent violations, and the Maryland election law/rule in violation.

26. The apparent violations are pursuant to Md. Election Law Code Ann. §§ 3-101, 102, 502, 503 & 504.

27. These numbers clearly show the voter rolls in Maryland are not accurate and current as required by the NVRA: 52 USC § 20501(b)(4) and violate specific Maryland laws pertaining to voter registration, i.e. §§ 3-101, 102, 502, 503 & 504.

28. Inaccurate voter rolls have significant downstream consequences in elections.

29. The purpose of a voting system is to accurately record, store, consolidate and report the specific selections, and absence of selections, made by the voter as well as to accurately measure the intent of the total body of eligible voters that voted.

30. The definition of a voting system is found in HAVA Section 301. 52 USC § 21081.

31. Under HAVA, a voting system is defined as "the total combination of mechanical, electromechanical, or electronic equipment (including software, firmware, and documentation required to program, control, and support the equipment) that is used to define ballots; to cast and count votes; to report or display election results; and to maintain and produce any audit trail information." 52 USC § 21081(b)(1)(A)-(D).

32. The ability to "cast and count votes" begins with establishing eligibility, including citizenship, and registering only qualified citizens into voter registration databases, thus assuring that all ballots granted, and thereby all votes cast and counted, are lawfully cast and counted according to the US Constitution.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

33. Voter registrations are used to create pollbooks, which can either be networked or non-networked. "Networked pollbooks are electronic pollbooks with a connection to an external database, and may include a direct connection to the voter registration database or a separate server." Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, Critical Infrastructure Security and Resilience Note, Jul. 28, 2020, at 2-3, https://www.cisa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/cisa-election-infrastructure-cyber-risk-assessment_508.pdf.

34. Maryland is a state in which all local jurisdictions use E-Poll books, meaning the pollbooks have a direct connection to the voter registration database.

35. Following pollbook preparation is ballot preparation. Ballot preparation "generates the data necessary for tabulating votes within a voting machine, and aggregating tabulated votes within a jurisdiction or state." Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, Critical Infrastructure Security and Resilience Note, Jul. 28, 2020, at 3, https://www.cisa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/cisa-election-infrastructure-cyber-risk-assessment_508.pdf.

36. Voting machines are used following ballot preparation. "Voting machines encompass both technology and processes used by election officials to prepare voting machines for ballot tabulation, and in some cases presentation. Specifically, this includes loading the ballot files created during ballot preparation onto voting machines." Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, Critical Infrastructure Security and Resilience Note, Jul.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

28, 2020, at 3, https://www.cisa.gov/sites/default/files/publications/cisa-election-infrastructure-cyber-risk-assessment_508.pdf.

37. The U.S. election process seen above shows the link between voter registration and the ballot files being loaded onto voting machines.

38. It also shows voter registration is encompassed in the definition of a voting system as defined in 52 USC § 21081(b) because a voting system consists of documentation required to program the voting machines.

39. As voter registration is part of the voting system, it is subject to the allowable error rates of voting systems as set forth in 52 USC § 21081(a)(5).

Error Rates

40. Section 301 of HAVA regarding "Voting System Standards," states that the "error rate of [a] voting system in counting ballots…shall comply with the error rate standards established under section 3.2.1 of the voting systems standards issued by the Federal Election Commission[.]" 52 USC § 21081(a)(5)

41. The accuracy requirements set under the Federal Election Commission (FEC) voting systems standards section 3.2.1 establish that "the system shall achieve a target error rate of no more than one in 10,000,000 ballot positions, with a maximum acceptable error rate in the test process of one in 500,000 ballot positions." United States. (2002) U.S. Federal Election Commission FEC. United States. [Web Archive] Retrieved from the Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/28/Voting_System_Standards_Volume_I.pdf.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

42. The Voluntary Voting System Guidelines, Version 1.1, Section 4.1.1 – Accuracy Requirements states in part, "[a]ll systems shall achieve a report total error rate of no more than one in 125,000." United States. (2015) U.S. Election Assistance Commission. United States. [Web Archive] Retrieved from the Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/28/VVSG.1.1.VOL.1.FINAL1.pdf.

43. The Voluntary Voting System Guidelines, Version 1.1, Section 4.1.1 – Accuracy Requirements then states, "[t]he benchmark of one in 125,000 is derived from the "maximum acceptable error rate" used as the lower test benchmark in the 2005 Voluntary Voting System Guidelines Version 1.0. That benchmark was defined as a ballot position error rate of one in 500,000. The benchmark of one in 125,000 is expressed in terms of votes, however, it is consistent with the previous benchmark that the estimated ratio of votes to ballot positions is ¼." United States. (2015) U.S. Election Assistance Commission. United States. [Web Archive] Retrieved from the Election Assistance Commission, https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/28/VVSG.1.1.VOL.1.FINAL1.pdf.

44. Maryland voting systems are subject to the error rates defined in the FEC Voting System Standards 3.2.1 and explained in the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines (VVSG).

45. The number of apparent voting system errors in counting votes in the 2020 General Election, according to MDSBE raw data, was 62,075. A spreadsheet is attached showing the apparent voting violations in the 2020 and 2022 General Election as Exhibit B.

46. The number of apparent voting system errors in counting votes in the 2022 General Election, according to MDSBE raw data, was 27,623. This can also be seen in Exhibit B.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

47. The allowable number of voting system errors in counting votes to comply with HAVA is calculated by dividing the total number of Maryland voters who voted in a given election by 125,000.

48. For the 2020 General Election this is ~3,000,000 votes/125,000 = 24. For the 2022 General election this is ~2,000,000 votes/125,000 = 16.

49. The number of voting system errors in counting votes for the 2020 General election (62,075) greatly exceeded the maximum allowable error rate (24).

50. The number of voting system errors in counting votes for the 2022 General election (27,623) greatly exceeded the maximum allowable error rate (16).

51. In sum, the voting system error rates are exponentially above the maximum allowable error rates. Inaccuracy and the specter of fraud have irretrievably damaged the reliability and credibility of results.

52. The Members of Plaintiff exhausted every administrative remedy known to them in advance of the 2022 general election, to have these issues repaired. Plaintiffs continued in 2023 to seek redress and repair for these egregious violations through democratic means.

53. The Maryland State Board of Elections dismissed these concerns without any meaningful review or response and intends to administer and certify Maryland's 2024 general election under the same inaccurate conditions.

Requirements for Certifying Voting Systems

54. The requirement for certifying voting systems is set forth in Section 231 of the Help America Vote Act ("HAVA"). 52 USC § 20971.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

55. Under HAVA there is a requirement for providing "for the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting systems hardware and software by accredited laboratories." 52 USC § 20971(a)(1)

56. While HAVA does allow for the "optional use by states," Maryland has adopted the certification requirements: "The State Board may not certify a voting system unless the State Board determines that…the voting system is (i) examined by an independent testing laboratory that is approved by the U.S. Election Assistance Commission; and (ii) shown by the testing laboratory to meet the performance and test standards for electronic voting systems established by the Federal Election Commission or the U.S. Election Assistance Commission[.]" Md. Code Ann., Elec. Law § 9-102

57. Md. Code Ann., Elec. Law § 9-102 requires voting systems to conform with standards set by the Federal Election Commission and the U.S. Election Assistance Commission. Maryland also has received HAVA grants; therefore, the State is subject to the requirements set forth by HAVA.

58. Under HAVA, states that receive payments for improving the administration of elections must use the funds "in a manner consistent with each of the laws described in section 21145…and the proposed uses are not inconsistent with the requirements of title III." 52 USC § 20901(c).

59. HAVA also sets forth the requirements for accrediting testing labs that perform certification tests on voting systems.

60. HAVA states that the requirements to be met by testing labs to become accredited are found in the Voluntary Voting Systems Guidelines ("VVSG").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

61. Maryland has also adopted guidelines for certification, which are governed by the Code of Maryland Regulations (COMAR), Title 33, and the Election Law of the Annotated Code of Maryland.

62. COMAR 33.09.03.04 requires that applicants submit a Technical Data Package, a Business Information Package, anti-bribery and anti-debarment affidavits, as well as voting equipment.

63. COMAR 33.09.03.05 details the requirements for the Technical Data Package.

64. Under COMAR 33.09.03.05(A) Required Information "[t]he technical data package shall contain all documentation previously submitted for the qualification testing of the system, including each of the following…(5) Software Source Code (both in the form of a listing and in a machine-readable form on media acceptable to the evaluation agent)[.]"

65. Election Systems & Software (ES&S) is the manufacturer of the voting systems currently in use in Maryland.

66. Page 4 of the ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 Maryland State Board of Elections (MDSBE) certification report (the "Report"), dated December 4, 2014, states that the Technical Data Package was submitted.

67. Page 20 of the Report says that all listed requirements were provided except the Software Source Code. An excerpt of this report is attached as Exhibit C.

68. Under COMAR 33.09.03.05 requirements, Maryland was required to review the source code of the voting systems.

69. Maryland did not review the source code for ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 as they were required to under Maryland Law and evidenced by the Report.

Modem Use

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

70. In January 2020, the EAC received complaints about ES&S marketing to their customers that the use of a modem on the voting system is optional. The correspondence between the EAC and ES&S is attached as Exhibit D.

71. The EAC determined that ES&S violated Sections 5.14 and 5.15.1 of the EAC Testing and Certification Program Manual Version 2.0 by representing or implying that the DS200 with modem configuration is EAC certified when in fact attachment of a modem is disqualifying.

72. The EAC also determined that ES&S violated Section 5.16 by failing to warn purchasers that adding a modem to the DS200 would void the EAC certification of the voting system in its entirety.

73. This violation led to a number of states using modems on the ES&S voting systems.

74. Eleven of these states acknowledged using ES&S voting systems with attached modems while others have not admitted to using modems.

75. The voting systems with modems attached were likely used for years with void EAC certification.

76. ES&S created a proposal that was used for the purpose of persuading Colorado to use its voting system on December 4, 2013 (the "Colorado Proposal") the relevant portions of which are attached as Exhibit E.

77. In the Colorado Proposal, ES&S sets forth questions and answers.

78. One such question, on page 13 of Section 9.0 - General Questions, asks "[i]s there any remote communication technology associated with your proposed solution?"

79. In response to the question, they state in part "[t]he DS200 Tabulators use wireless modems to connect to the SFTP Server via the Internet."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

80. ES&S unequivocally admits that the voting systems use modems.

81. Contained in the ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 certification report issued by the EAC, dated July 2, 2014, is a table titled "2005 VVSG Supported Functionality Declaration." The table states that modems are not a supported functionality of the voting machine. The relevant table from the certification report is attached as Exhibit F.

82. Page 10 of the Report for Maryland certification (December 2014) states that "[r]esults can be transferred by modem to the EMS server." The relevant portions of which are attached as Exhibit G.

83. Results in fact are not permitted to be transferred by modem as the EAC has never certified a voting system with a modem; further, simply attaching a modem will void the EAC certification.

84. Any voting system with an attached modem has a void EAC certification and is not allowed to be used according to the EAC.

85. The meeting minutes of the MDSBE meeting on July 16, 2015 show that in prior elections, three local boards – Baltimore, Montgomery, and Prince George's Counties – transmitted unofficial election results from either a polling place or a regional transmission center. The relevant portion of the meeting minutes is attached as Exhibit H.

86. Transmitting unofficial election results is typically accomplished by the use of a modem or email.

87. The only way to determine whether Maryland used modems to accomplish the transmission of the unofficial election results in this situation is to examine the various DS200 audit logs and configuration reports the machines generate. The logs and reports were requested from MDSBE and the Local Boards of Election, in at least 22 out of the 23 counties in Maryland, through PIA requests but not produced. The PIA requests and/or responses are attached as Exhibit I.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

88. Transmitting unofficial election results from a polling place leaves the system vulnerable to cyber-attacks.

89. In an MDSBE meeting dated July 27, 2017, they stated "approximately 1,400 of the DS200 scanners have non-functioning modems installed that have not been used since delivery. ES&S has started removing these modems, which they wish to put back into their own inventory. Once each modem is removed, acceptance testing will be performed on the unit under SBE and local board supervision prior to returning to service." The relevant portion of the meeting minutes is attached as Exhibit J.

90. A voting system with a modem installed on it has a void EAC certification.

91. Approximately 1,400 voting systems being used in Maryland prior to 2017 had void EAC certifications.

92. Maryland. Code, Elec. Law § 9-103 states MDSBE ("(2) shall decertify a previously certified voting system if the voting system no longer meets one or more of the standards in § 9 102(d)(1)(i) through (iii) of this subtitle.") (emphasis added)

93. Md. Code, Elec. Law § 9-102 says ("(d) The State Board may not certify a voting system unless the State Board determines that: (1) the voting system will: (i) protect the secrecy of the ballot; (ii) protect the security of the voting process; (iii) count and record all votes accurately;")

94. The voting machines did not comply with Md. Code, Elec. Law § 9-102(d)(1)(i) and (ii) considering the transmission of the unofficial results is susceptible to cyber risks.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

95. In 2017 machines in Maryland had modems attached which were to be removed prior to "returning to service." This creates the presumption that the modems on the machines were in use, despite MDSBE claiming the modems were non-functioning and had not been used since delivery. This shows the machines were used in elections with attached modems. Whether the modems were functioning is irrelevant as attachment of a modem voids the EAC certification.

96. Once again, numerous PIA requests were made for the DS200 audit logs and configuration reports which would tend to show the modems were functioning or non-functioning, but not produced.

97. According to ES&S the configuration reports are automatically printed upon login to the machines; therefore, the PIA requests for these documents should have been fulfilled with responsive documents.

98. The systems were being used in elections with void EAC certifications.

Maryland Public Information Act

99. Maryland's Public Information Act ("PIA") gives the public the right to access government records without unnecessary cost and delay.

100. GP § 4-103(a) provides that "[a]ll persons are entitled to have access to information about the affairs of government and the official acts of public officials and employees."

101. In response to numerous PIA requests in most Maryland counties, MDSBE and the local Boards of Elections stated that they do not have any responsive documents.

102. The information being requested, audit logs, system logs, error logs, configuration reports, etc. of voting systems, is information that should be available because of the audit requirements set under HAVA and COMAR.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

103. ES&S also represents that these reports and logs are either automatically generated by the machines or easily accessed in their Colorado Proposal.

104. In Section 12.0 – UVS System Requirement of The Colorado Proposal ES&S goes into great detail about the audit logs the machines generate. The relevant portions of the Proposal are attached as Exhibit K.

105. Req. ID H-1 requires the systems to "Store sufficient data in an unalterable system audit log file to allow the auditing of all operations related to election setup, ballot creation, ballot tabulation, results consolidation and report generation."

106. ES&S's response states "[e]ach application has its own audit log to allow the auditing of all operations relating to the election setup, ballot creation, ballot tabulation, results consolidation and report generation. The ES&S proposed voting system audit log provides sufficient information to allow the auditing of all operations related to ballot tabulation, results consolidation, and report generation."

107. The rest of the response from ES&S goes through the system audit capabilities of all the components of the voting system.

108. ES&S responded to an inquiry for their audit trail techniques and reports in the Colorado Proposal. "Please explain what audit trail techniques and audit reports are incorporated in your proposed system."

109. For the DS200 Tabulator ES&S stated "[i] n addition to the audit log described previously that records all use operation and substantial application operations or errors, the DS200 has various configuration reports, ballot accounting reports, and results reports, all of which can be used forensically for auditing."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

110. These reports are created by the voting machines and were requested through PIA requests but not produced.

111. ES&S responded to an inquiry into their audit logs files, location, and access to them. "Please provide a list of all audit log files, the file location within the voting system, and the procedures to navigate to and retrieve them from the voting system."

112. For the DS200 Tabulator ES&S states "[t] he signed audit logs are written to the log directory on the removable media. The audit log events can be accessed on the DS200 onscreen or through a printed report. When the media is read back into the EMS the audit logs are also retrievable from the EMS through a machine audit log report or exported in a comma separated format."

113. These audit logs are created and were requested through PIA requests but not produced.

114. Next, ES&S addresses Req. ID H-15 in the Colorado Proposal which requires the systems to "[c]reate audit records prior to the initiation of ballot counting to verify hardware and software status. These particular audit records shall include the identification of the software release, the identification of the election to be processed and the results of hardware and software diagnostic tests."

115. ES&S's response states in part "[o]n power up, a configuration report is automatically printed to create a hard copy record of the relevant configuration and settings of the particular DS200."

116. The fact that the configuration reports are automatically printed is confirmed by the Dorchester County Board of Elections Chief Judges' Manual. The relevant portion of the manual is attached as Exhibit L.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

117. The configuration reports are automatically printed and were requested through PIA requests but not produced. To state there are no responsive documents to this request is clearly false as the voting machines automatically print them.

118. The Election Law of the Annotated Code of Maryland § 9-102(d) says that the "State Board may not certify a voting system unless the State Board determines that: (1) the voting system will… (vi) be capable of creating a paper record of all votes cast in order that an audit trail is available in the event of a recount, including a manual recount[.]"

119. Pages 15 and 16 of the Report for Maryland certification (December 2014) analyze the voting system with respect to COMAR 33.09.02.07.

120. COMAR 33.09.02.07 explains the audit trail requirement stating that: "[t]he voting system shall be capable of providing an audit trail of all ballots cast so that, in a recount, the election can be reconstructed, starting with the individual votes of all eligible voters."

121. The Board of Elections states in the Report that ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 satisfied the audit requirements: "[a]ll tabulators and the EMS system maintain an audit log for each election."

122. The information Plaintiffs requested through the PIA requests is not new information that must be created. There are responsive documents to the requests, as opposed to Defendant's contentions.

123. The information is already available on the voting systems and ES&S details how to print the reports in Chapter 20 of their Electionware Volume V: Results User's Guide. The relevant portions of the guide are attached as Exhibit M.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

124. The information is stored in the course of an election on the voting systems and, if not, the systems do not conform to the representations made about their capabilities to create audit logs.

125. The PIA requests have been denied, notwithstanding the laws that were clearly drafted to allow for public review.

Blank Ballots, Undervotes, and Overvotes

126. HAVA Section 301 requires voting systems to "provide the voter with the opportunity (in a private and independent manner) to change the ballot or correct any error before the ballot is cast and counted (including the opportunity to correct the error through the issuance of a replacement ballot if the voter was otherwise unable to change the ballot or correct any error.)" 52 USC §21081(a)(1)(A)(ii).

127. Maryland creates a Cast Vote Records report for each county in Maryland for each election, which contains the total number of registered voters, the total number of ballots cast, and the results in that county.

128. The Cast Vote Records EL45a report shows the total number of blank ballots cast in each county in the state of Maryland for each election.

129. Upon calculation, the total number of blank ballots cast in the 2022 General Election in Maryland was 82,356.

130. Some counties had much higher percentages of blank ballot than others. Possible reasons for this can be explained below.

131. It is believed that many people did not intend to cast blank ballots in the 2022 General Election, and the settings of the machines were the reason for the ballots being cast blank.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

132. Upon further inquiry, it has been discovered that the ES&S DS200 tabulator can be configured to accept blank ballots, undervotes, and overvotes instead of rejecting them and notifying the voter to cure the mistake.

133. According to a DS200 Operators Guide dated July 18, 2019, an admin can establish the ballot handling options. The relevant portions of the guide are attached as Exhibit N.

134. Section 7.4.1 – Establishing Ballot Handling Options Page 108 of the DS200 Operators Guide states, "[w]hen you create your election definition, your Electionware settings determine for each ballot style how the DS200 handles specific types of ballot conditions. For each of these ballot condition, you can set the DS200 to always accept or always reject ballots with a specified conditions. For some of those conditions, you can instead have the DS200 query the voter to ascertain a voter's intent. You can set the DS200 to always accept, always reject, or query the voter for the following ballot conditions: Undervoted ballot; Blank Ballot; Overvoted Ballot; and Unreadable Marks on Ballot."

135. The DS200 operator's guide then goes to state, "Selecting Always Accept for any of these conditions causes the DS200 to skip the voter query function for that condition. The DS200 will not display the query screen for those conditions."

136. The DS200 operator's guide then goes through each of the conditions (blank ballots, overvoted ballots, undervoted ballots) to show what the query looks like on the machine if the settings allow for a query.

137. If Always Accept is selected on voting machines, voters are not provided the opportunity to change the ballot or correct the error before the ballot is cast and counted. This violates 52 USC §21081(a)(1)(A)(ii) because voters are not notified of their deficient ballot and given a chance to cure the error before the machine accepts it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

138. Section 7.11.3 – Report Options Page 124 of the DS200 Operators Guide details the reports and audit logs the machine generates.

139. It states that the Configuration Report, Event Log Report and Summary Event Log, and System Log can be generated.

140. Section 9.1 – Reports Overview Page 150 of the DS200 Operators Guide states "the DS200 can automatically print the Configuration, Zero Totals, and Ballot Status Accounting reports as part of the poll opening process."

141. At the bottom of this section Page 151 of the guide states, "[y]ou can also manually request additional copies of any reports that are generated automatically."

142. Section 9.6 – Configuration Report on Pages 158-160 of the DS200 Operators Guide contains a sample Configuration Report. The sample configuration report is attached as Exhibit O.

143. The configuration report shows if there is a modem attached on the DS200, whether the Event log will be printed on poll close, as well as the settings for accepting blank ballots, overvotes, and undervotes.

144. As stated previously, and emphasized by this section's findings, the configuration reports that the machines automatically print will confirm whether modems were in use and if the blank ballots were the product of machine settings.

145. COMAR 33.10.01.03(B) Auditability. "The tabulators shall provide a vote cast record of all ballots cast and audit log of alerts provided to voters and tabulator events and errors."

146. COMAR 33.10.01.03(B) proves the machine generates audit logs that would show alerts to voters. These alerts would show up for voters if they cast a blank ballot, undervoted, or overvoted. If there are no alerts for these conditions in the audit logs, the machines were set to automatically accept these deficient ballots.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

147. The audit logs were, again, requested through PIA requests, which were not fulfilled despite statutory language stating the machines generate them.

148. COMAR 33.10.01.03(g) – Actions Taken to Change Conditions is relevant to the blank ballot and PIA issues.

149. COMAR 33.10.01.03(g)(1)(a),(b) states, "The system shall be capable of printing from its audit trail: actions taken by operators to change conditions; and the time of the occurrence."

150. COMAR 33.10.01.03(g)(2) then states, "System operators shall record in a logbook all actions to change conditions that cannot be printed from the audit trail. That logbook, as well as all reports produced by the printer, shall be retained by the local board."

151. This unequivocally shows that the reports and logbook must be retained by the local board under Maryland law.

152. These reports were requested from the Local Boards of Elections, they responded stating they had no responsive records.

153. Stating they have no responsive records for reports they are required to retain goes to show they either violated Maryland law and Federal law by failing to retain those records, or they are unlawfully denying PIA requests for the reports.

Count I

Declaratory Judgment - 28 U.S.C. § 2201

154. Plaintiffs incorporates by reference and realleges the averments of paragraphs 1 through 153.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

155. 28 U.S.C. § 2201 requires a case of actual controversy.

156. There exists an actual controversy of a justiciable issue between the Maryland State Board of Elections (MDSBE) and Maryland Election Integrity, LLC within the jurisdiction of this Court concerning the interpretation of The National Voter Registration Act of 1993: 52 USC §20501(b)(4), Maryland. Code, Elec. Law §§ 3-101, 102, 502, 503 & 504, HAVA: 52 USC §21081, COMAR 33.09.03.05, Maryland. Code, Elec. Law § 9-103, Md. Code, Gen. Provisions § 4-103, The Election Law of the Annotated Code of Maryland § 9-102(d), COMAR 33.09.02.07, and COMAR 33.10.01.03.

157. Despite mandatory statutory language requiring current and accurate voter rolls, which shall include only the names and registration information of eligible citizen voters, and Maryland law specifying processes to do so, Maryland has failed to keep voter rolls accurate.

158. Despite mandatory statutory language stating the maximum allowable error rate of voting systems, the voting systems in Maryland are still in use in violation of the statutory scheme.

159. Despite mandatory statutory language stating the technical data package shall/must contain all documentation previously submitted, including the software source code, the Board of Elections did not receive and analyze the source code in violation of the statutory scheme.

160. Despite mandatory statutory language stating the MDSBE shall decertify machines that do not protect the secrecy of the ballot and protect the security of the voting process, the Board of Elections did not decertify the machines in violation of the statutory scheme.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

161. Despite mandatory statutory language stating all persons are entitled to have access to information about the affairs of government, and in particular, access to an audit trail from elections, the MDSBE is denying PIA requests for this information in violation of the statutory scheme.

162. Despite mandatory statutory language stating voters shall have the opportunity to change their ballot or correct any error before the ballot is cast, Maryland voters have been denied this in violation of the statutory scheme.

163. In accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 2201 claims are present between the parties involved which indicate imminent and inevitable litigation.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully requests that this Honorable Court:

A. Determine and adjudicate the rights and liabilities of the parties with respect to Maryland laws and Federal laws in the context of voting systems and public access to voting system logs.

B. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring it did not properly comply with The National Voter Registration Act of 1993: 52 USC § 20501(b)(4) and Md. Election Law Code Ann. §§ 3-101, 102, 502, 503 and 504 in maintaining accurate voter rolls.

C. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring the voting machines and the voting system being used in Maryland Elections exceed the maximum allowable error rate as set forth in HAVA: 52 USC § 21081.

D. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring the certification of the ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 voting system violates COMAR 33.09.03.05.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

E. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring they failed to decertify a voting system that did not protect the secrecy of the ballot and security of the voting process, thus violating Maryland. Code, Elec. Law § 9-103.

F. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring it did not properly comply with Md. Code, Gen. Provisions § 4-103, The Election Law of the Annotated Code of Maryland § 9-102(d), COMAR 33.09.02.07, and COMAR 33.10.01.03. in refusing to produce election-related documents requested through PIA requests.

G. Enter a declaratory judgment order against Defendant declaring the configuration of the voting systems did not comply with 52 USC § 21081(a)(1)(A)(ii).

H. Grant such other and further relief as the nature of this cause may require.

COUNT II

Injunction

164. Plaintiffs incorporates by reference and realleges the averments of paragraphs 1 through 163.

165. There is a balancing test that courts typically employ in determining whether to issue an injunction. To seek a permanent injunction, the plaintiff must pass the four-step test: (1) that the plaintiff has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for the injury; (3) that the remedy in equity is warranted upon consideration of the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant; and (4) that the permanent injunction being sought would not hurt public interest. See, e.g., Weinberger v. Romero—Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311–313, 102 S.Ct. 1798, 72 L.Ed.2d 91 (1982); Amoco Production Co. v. Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 542, 107 S.Ct. 1396, 94 L.Ed.2d 542 (1987).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

166. Plaintiffs, as Maryland voters and interested citizens with standing, have been irreparably injured by the voting systems currently in use in Maryland and the MDSBE. Plaintiffs allege that voter rolls are highly inaccurate, error rates on the voting systems exceed the maximum allowable error rates, voting systems were not certified correctly, machines have been used that have VOID EAC certifications, large numbers of blank ballots were cast, and the MDSBE is unlawfully withholding evidence of such. This has caused abridgement to their right to vote "[a]nd the right of suffrage can be denied by a debasement or dilution of the weight of a citizen's vote just as effectively as by wholly prohibiting the free exercise of the franchise" Reynolds v. Sims, (377 U.S. 533). The right to vote is paramount "[e]specially since the right to exercise the franchise in a free and unimpaired manner is preservative of other basic civil and political rights, any alleged infringement of the right of citizens to vote must be carefully and meticulously scrutinized." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533 (1964). Inaccurate voter registration practices have led to voting system error rates well above the statutory threshold causing dilution of eligible voter's votes. Use of the ES&S Voting Systems in a noncompliant manner has resulted in dilution of Plaintiff's votes and has resulted in an impaired election process resulting in concrete harm to Plaintiff's rights to vote. Denial of Plaintiff's PIA requests resulted in Plaintiffs not being able to access information in which they are entitled.

167. The remedies available at law are wholly inadequate to compensate Plaintiffs for the injuries to their right to vote in a free and unimpaired manner and their statutory right to access public information.

168. Plaintiffs' harms are to basic rights and the interests are clear whereas Defendant's interest in using the ES&S voting system is simply for ease of use, despite the inaccuracies and deficiencies. Defendants have no interest in failing to keep accurate voter rolls. Defendants' interest in not fulfilling PIA requests is unknown. Any abridgment to the right to vote needs to be meticulously scrutinized and this weighs in favor of Plaintiffs.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

169. This injunction is necessary for public interest as it would notify millions of Maryland voters their rights are being abridged, and that they will no longer be, thus restoring trust in the voting process. Also, it would definitively give Marylander's access to certain public information, rather than the illusion of having access.

170. The Defendant failed to follow the statutory scheme requiring them to provide accurate and current voter rolls. The Defendant should be mandated to cure and address any discrepancies in the voter rolls; ensure votes counted are from qualified citizen voters; ensure the number of votes counted is equal to the number of voters who voted; adhere to the accuracy requirements for federal elections; and ensure systems, machines, security measures, procedures, infrastructure, policy, and conduct are compliant with the law regarding certification, testing, operational validation, and operational implementation.

171. The error rates of the voting system in place in the 2020 and 2022 General Election greatly exceeded the maximum acceptable error rate. The Defendant should be mandated to decertify the machines used in the 2020 and 2022 General Election in Maryland and enjoined from using them in subsequent elections.

172. The Defendant failed to follow the statutory scheme put in place by the state of Maryland which details the procedure to be followed in certifying voting systems. The nonadherence to the statutory scheme creates grounds for the decertification of the voting system ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0. Defendant should be mandated to decertify the voting system ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 and enjoined from using it in subsequent elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

173. The Defendant failed to follow the statutory scheme requiring them to protect the secrecy and security of an election. The Defendant should be mandated to decertify the voting system ES&S EVS 5.2.0.3 and enjoined from using it in subsequent elections.

174. The Defendant failed to produce requested documents in response to numerous PIA requests. The Defendant should be mandated to produce, including but not limited to, audit logs, system logs, error logs, configuration reports, etc. of voting systems.

175. The Defendant failed to allow voters the opportunity to change their ballot or correct any error before the ballot is cast. The Defendant should be mandated to configure voting machines to notify voters they are casting blank ballots, overvotes, and undervotes instead of automatically accepting them.

176. The Defendant has shown willful and gross negligence in assuring the system of processes, procedures, human conduct and machines are unable to produce reliable, accurate or compliant measurements of voter intent. The Defendant should be mandated to fix the entire voting system to ensure legal compliance and required functionality. Further, the Defendant should implement a system of comprehensive testing, monitoring and auditing by a certified and accredited independent auditor to ensure the repaired system functions as required. If the electoral process cannot be proven to be accurate and compliant, the election shall not be certified, and a special election shall be held within 30 days correcting any deficits in conduct.

177. The Defendant has flaunted the Constitutional requirement to only allow known citizens eligible to vote, to vote. Registrations, mail-in and in person voting must be required to prove identity, eligibility, and citizenship.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

178. Since it is impossible to guarantee that ballots mailed in are not tampered with or lost in transit, the Defendant should be ordered to implement a tracking system first from the printer to the voter, and then from the voter to the tabulator, so that no ballots are lost or tampered with or destroyed. In such cases the voter must be actively notified their ballot is lost and given a chance to submit a new ballot.

179. Since a large number of unexplained blank ballots have been registered, and a larger number of votes were counted than voters that were counted as having voted, the Defendant shall be ordered to implement control mechanisms to insure chain of custody of all ballots is maintained, and forgery protection at least equal to financial security standards with bonds and currency are maintained on ballots and with ballot handling.

180. As demonstrated by irrefutable statistics, the Defendant has lost control of the voting system. The Defendant should be mandated to use comprehensive batch control systems, as in the financial industry with item processing.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully requests that this Honorable Court:

A. Issue an injunction mandating Defendant update and keep accurate the voter rolls in Maryland as well as address the discrepancies previously shown.

B. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from administering or certifying any election wherein the voter registration database is not certified to contain only qualified citizen voters, with compliant registration records.

C. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from administering or certifying any election where the entire voting system, from the qualified voters' hands to the tabulated count, is not provably secure and compliant.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

D. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from administering or certifying any election wherein all system steps and all components thereof are not fully auditable on a transaction/action by action basis.

E. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from administering or certifying any election wherein the entire system is not monitored effectively to detect real time variances from legal conduct.

F. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from administering or certifying any election wherein the entire system is not open and transparent for auditing by trusted parties outside the control of the state election boards and state executives, from qualified voters' hands to the certified count.

G. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from certifying any election wherein the results do not accurately and provably reflect voter intent, individually and collectively, in compliance with the law.

H. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from using the voting systems used in the 2020 and 2022 General Elections in future elections in Maryland due to the exceptionally high error rates and mandating the decertification of the system or systems.

I. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from using the ES&S EVS 5.2.0.0 voting system in future elections in Maryland and mandating the decertification of the system.

J. Issue an injunction enjoining Defendant from using the ES&S EVS 5.2.0.3 voting system in future elections in Maryland and mandating the decertification of the system.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

K. Issue an injunction mandating Defendant comply with PIA requests for, including but not limited to, audit logs, system logs, error logs, configuration reports, etc. of voting systems.

L. Issue an injunction mandating Defendant to program voting machines to query voters in the case they are attempting to cast a blank ballot, undervote, or overvote instead of automatically accepting such ballots.

M. Establish a Special Master to guide the Maryland State Board of Elections to institute change prior to the November 2024 election and subject to the approval of this court to:

i. Insure we know who is voting and that each voter is provably a U.S. citizen.

ii. Insure that the entire system from the Voter's hands to the tabulated count is provably secure including ballots from printer to storage.

iii. Insure that all system steps and all components thereof are fully auditable on a transaction/action by action basis.

iv. Implement a monitoring system able to effectively detect real-time variances from legal conduct.

v. Implement a system that allows end to end insured and certified audits by trusted parties outside the control of the State Election bureaucrats and executives, from the voters' hands to the certified count. such audits to be paid for by the State. Such audits will be done at sufficient scale to prove the intent of the voters was determined accurately and in compliance with the law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

vi. Prevent elections from being certified that are unable to prove they accurately determine voter intent; individually and collectively, in compliance with the law.

N. Grant such other and further relief as the nature of this cause may require.

Respectfully submitted,

HARTMAN, Attorneys at Law

Date: March 6, 2024

By: /s/ C. Edward Hartman, III

C. Edward Hartman, III, No. 07716
116 Defense Highway, Suite 300
Annapolis, Maryland 21401-8962
Telephone: (410) 266-3232
Facsimile: (410) 266-5561
Email: Ed@Hartman.law
Attorneys for Plaintiff

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

AFFIDAVIT

I have personal knowledge of the facts alleged in this Complaint. Based on my personal knowledge I verify that the matters stated in this Complaint are true.

I declare under penalties of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

Dated: 3/6/2024

Katherine A Sullivan

Class A Member of Md Election Integrity LLC

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/18/2024 9:51:36 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Nevada lawsuit
Attachments: 1. Complaint.pdf; 1-1. Compl. Ex. A.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Nevada was sued by the RNC, as well.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

Jeffrey F. Barr (NV Bar No. 7269)
8275 South Eastern Avenue, Suite 200
Las Vegas, NV 89123
(702) 631-4755
barrj@ashcraftbarr.com

Thomas R. McCarthy* (VA Bar No. 47145)
Gilbert C. Dickey* (VA Bar No. 98858)
Conor D. Woodfin* (VA Bar No. 98937)
1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
(703) 243-9423
tom@consovoymccarthy.com
gilbert@consovoymccarthy.com
conor@consovoymccarthy.com

Counsel for the Republican National Committee, the Nevada Republican Party, and Scott Johnston
Pro hac vice application forthcoming*

Sigal Chattah (NV Bar No. 8264)
5875 S. Rainbow Blvd #204
Las Vegas, NV 89118
(702) 360-6200
sigal@thegoodlawyerlv.com

Counsel for the Nevada Republican Party

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, NEVADA REPUBLICAN PARTY, and SCOTT JOHNSTON, Plaintiffs,

v.

FRANCISCO AGUILAR, in his official capacity as Nevada Secretary of State; LORENA PORTILLO, in her official capacity as the Registrar of Voters for Clark County; WILLIAM "SCOTT" HOEN, AMY BURGANS, STACI LINDBERG, and JIM HINDLE, in their official capacities as County Clerks, Defendants.

No. _____

COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

Plaintiffs the Republican National Committee, the Nevada Republican Party, and Scott Johnston bring this action under the National Voter Registration Act of 1993 (NVRA), 52 U.S.C. §20507, against Defendants for declaratory and injunctive relief. Plaintiffs allege as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. Section 8 of the NVRA requires States to maintain clean and accurate voter registration records.

2. Nevada has failed to live up to the NVRA's requirements.

3. At least five counties in Nevada have inordinately high voter registration rates.

4. At least three Nevada counties have more registered voters than they have adult citizens who are over the age of 18. That number of voters is impossibly high.

5. An additional two counties have voter registration rates that exceed 90 percent of adult citizens over the age of 18. That figure far eclipses the national and statewide voter registration rate in recent elections.

6. Based on this and other evidence, Defendants are failing to make a reasonable effort to conduct appropriate list maintenance as required by the NVRA.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

7. The Court has subject-matter jurisdiction because this case alleges violations of the NVRA. See 28 U.S.C. §1331; Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908).

8. Venue is proper because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in this District and because some Defendants "reside" here. 28 U.S.C. §1391.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA 2024

PARTIES

9. Plaintiff, the Republican National Committee (RNC), is the national committee of the Republican Party, as defined by 52 U.S.C. §30101(14), with its principal place of business at 310 First Street S.E., Washington, DC 20003.

10. The RNC represents over 30 million registered Republicans in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. territories. It is comprised of 168 voting members representing state Republican Party organizations, including three members who are registered voters in Nevada.

11. The RNC works to elect Republican candidates to state and federal office. In November 2024, its candidates will appear on the ballot in Nevada for numerous federal and state offices.

12. The RNC has vital interests in protecting the ability of Republican voters to cast, and Republican candidates to receive, effective votes in Nevada elections and elsewhere. The RNC brings this suit to vindicate its own rights in this regard, and in a representational capacity to vindicate the rights of its members, affiliated voters, and candidates.

13. The RNC and its members are concerned that Defendants' failure to comply with the NVRA's voter-list maintenance obligations undermines the integrity of elections by increasing the opportunity for ineligible voters or voters intent on fraud to cast ballots. The RNC thus monitors state and local election officials' compliance with their NVRA list maintenance obligations through publicly available records from jurisdictions across the nation.

14. In addition, the RNC relies on voter registration lists to determine its plans and budgets. The RNC relies on registration lists to estimate voter turnout, which informs the number of staff the RNC needs in a given jurisdiction, the number of volunteers needed to contact voters, and how much the RNC will spend on paid voter contacts. If voter registration lists include names of voters who should no longer be on the list, the RNC may spend more resources on mailers, knocking on doors, and otherwise trying to contact voters, or it may misallocate its scarce resources among different jurisdictions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

15. Plaintiff Nevada Republican Party (NVGOP) is a political party in Nevada with its principal place of business at 2810 West Charleston Blvd. #69, Las Vegas, NV 89102. The Nevada Republican Central Committee (NRCC) is the NVGOP's governing body. The NVGOP and NRCC exercise their federal and state constitutional rights of speech, assembly, petition, and association to "provide the statutory leadership of the Nevada Republican Party as directed in the Nevada Revised statutes," to "recruit, develop, and elect representative government at the national, state, and local levels," and to "promote sound, honest, and representative government at the national, state and local levels." NRCC Bylaws, art. II, §§1.A-1.C.

16. The NVGOP represents over 550,000 registered Republican voters in Nevada.

17. The NVGOP has the same interests in this case as the RNC and seeks to vindicate those interests in the same ways.

18. Plaintiff Scott Johnston is a registered Nevada voter and 60-year resident of Nevada. He regularly votes in Nevada's primary and general elections. He plans to vote in Nevada's upcoming elections, including for U.S. President, U.S. Congress, and other federal, local, and statewide offices and ballot measures.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

19. Because Defendants do not maintain accurate voter rolls, Mr. Johnston reasonably fears that ineligible voters can and do vote in Nevada elections. Those votes will dilute his legitimate vote. And Nevada's inaccurate rolls undermine Mr. Johnston's confidence in the integrity of Nevada elections, which also burdens his right to vote.

20. Mr. Johnston is an active member of the Republican Party. He works in Nevada to advance conservative policies and to help elect Republican candidates. He is a member of the Washoe Central Committee, which is the governing body of the Washoe County Republican Party. Mr. Johnston has served as a precinct captain for the Galena Forest Estates area since 2020, and a Nevada State Central Committee person since 2021.

21. Because Defendants do not maintain accurate voter rolls, Plaintiffs must spend more of their time and resources monitoring Nevada elections for fraud and abuse, mobilizing voters to counteract it, educating the public about election-integrity issues, and persuading elected officials to improve list maintenance.

22. Plaintiffs have expended substantial time and resources investigating Defendants' failure to comply with their list-maintenance obligations. They have communicated with Nevada officials and concerned members about Defendants' failures, and they have researched statements made by Defendants in their correspondence.

23. Were it not for Defendants' failure to comply with their list-maintenance obligations, Plaintiffs would have expended those resources on other activities or would not have expended them at all. Instead, they diverted their scarce resources to counteract Defendants' noncompliance and to protect the rights of their members and supporters.

Obtained by Document Watch March 18, 2024

24. Defendant Francisco Aguilar is the Secretary of State of Nevada. He serves "as the Chief Officer of Elections" for Nevada and "is responsible for the execution and enforcement of the provisions of title 24 of NRS and all other provisions of state and federal law relating to elections in" Nevada. Nev. Rev. Stat. §293.124. He is sued in his official capacity.

25. Defendant Lorena Portillo is the Registrar of Voters for Clark County. She is the county's chief election officer and plays a direct role in list maintenance. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §§244.164, 293.530. Defendant Portillo is sued in her official capacity.

26. Defendant William "Scott" Hoen is the Clerk for Carson City. He is the county's chief election officer and plays a direct role in list maintenance. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §§293.503, 293.530. Defendant Hoen is sued in his official capacity.

27. Defendant Amy Burgans is the Clerk for Douglas County. She is the county's chief election officer and plays a direct role in list maintenance. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §§293.503, 293.530. Defendant Burgans is sued in her official capacity.

28. Defendant Staci Lindberg is the Clerk for Lyon County. She is the county's chief election officer and plays a direct role in list maintenance. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §§293.503, 293.530. Defendant Lindberg is sued in her official capacity.

29. Defendant Jim Hindle is the Clerk for Storey County. He is the county's chief election officer and plays a direct role in list maintenance. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §§293.503, 293.530. Defendant Hindle is sued in his official capacity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

BACKGROUND

I. Federal law requires States to maintain accurate voter rolls.

30. Congress enacted the NVRA "to protect the integrity of the electoral process." 52 U.S.C. §20501(b)(3). Specifically, section 8 was enacted "to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained." Id. §20501(b)(4).

31. Retaining voter rolls bloated with ineligible voters harms the electoral process, heightens the risk of electoral fraud, and undermines public confidence in elections. "Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is," in turn, "essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy." Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

32. Section 8 obligates States to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters" due to death or change of residence. 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4). "[F]ederal law makes this removal mandatory." Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Inst., 138 S. Ct. 1833, 1842 (2018).

33. Each State's program for maintaining voter-registration lists must be "uniform, non-discriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act." 52 U.S.C. §20507(b)(1).

34. Specifically, section 8 requires States to "remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of (A) the death of the registrant or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant" to outside her current voting jurisdiction. 52 U.S.C. §20507(4)(A)-(B).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

35. The Help America Vote Act (HAVA) also mandates that states adopt computerized statewide voter registration lists and maintain them "on a regular basis" in accordance with the NVRA. 52 U.S.C. §21083(a)(2)(A).

36. States must "ensure that voter registration records in the State are accurate and are updated regularly," an obligation that includes a "reasonable effort to remove registrants who are ineligible to vote from the official list of eligible voters." 52 U.S.C. §21083(a)(4).

37. HAVA's list-maintenance requirements include coordination with "State agency records on death" and "State agency records on felony status" to facilitate the removal of individuals who are deceased or rendered ineligible under state law due to a felony conviction. 52 U.S.C. §21083(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I)-(II).

38. According to the bipartisan Carter-Baker Commission, "registration lists lie at the root of most problems encountered in U.S. elections." Comm. on Federal Election Reform, Building Confidence in U.S. Elections 10 (Sept. 2005) (Carter-Baker Report). Inaccurate voter rolls that contain "ineligible, duplicate, fictional, or deceased voters" invite "fraud." Id. Although voter fraud is often difficult to detect, "the risk of voter fraud [is] real," and can "affect the outcome of a close election." Crawford v. Marion Cnty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 196 (2008) (op. of Stevens, J.). And regardless of whether fraud is detected, "the perception of possible fraud contributes to low confidence in the system." Carter-Baker Report, supra, at 18. The Supreme Court agrees. See Crawford, 553 U.S. at 193-97.

39. Other courts and experts have likewise recognized that voter fraud is both real and notoriously "difficult to detect and prosecute." Tex. Democratic Party v. Abbott, 961 F.3d 389, 396 (5th Cir. 2020); see also Griffin v. Roupas, 385 F.3d 1128, 1130-31 (7th Cir. 2004) ("Voting fraud is a serious problem in U.S. elections … and it is facilitated by absentee voting."); Veasey v. Perry, 71 F. Supp. 3d 627, 641 (S.D. Tex. 2014) (finding broad "agreement that voter fraud actually takes place in abundance in connection with absentee balloting"); Tex. Democratic Party, 961 F.3d at 414 (Ho, J., concurring) ("[C]ourts have repeatedly found that mail-in ballots are particularly susceptible to fraud.").

Obtained by Document Match from PACER 2024

40. Voter fraud is very real in Nevada. Several recent elections have suffered from voter fraud. See, e.g., Nev. Att'y Gen., Attorney General Ford Announces Guilty Plea of Las Vegas Man Charged with Voter Fraud (Nov. 16, 2021), https://perma.cc/WN9D-T9V2; Nev. Att'y Gen., Attorney General Ford Announces Guilty Plea of Las Vegas Man for Voting Twice in 2016 Election (Feb. 17, 2021), https://perma.cc/XP2E-EDWE.

41. Maintaining accurate voter rolls is especially important given Nevada's recent transition to universal mail-in voting. Since the passage of Assembly Bill 321 in 2021, all active registered voters in Nevada receive a ballot by mail unless they submit an opt-out form to their respective county clerks. Mailing ballots based on inaccurate registration lists further damages the integrity of Nevada's elections.

42. To help address voter fraud and ensure compliance with federal election law, the NVRA includes a private right of action. It empowers any "person who is aggrieved by a violation" to "provide written notice of the violation to the chief election official of the State involved." 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1). "If the violation is not corrected within 90 days after receipt of a notice, … the aggrieved person may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court for declaratory or injunctive relief." Id. §20510(b)(2).

II. Defendants have specific obligations under the NVRA.

43. Federal and state law make Nevada's Secretary of State primarily responsible for list maintenance.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Muckrock 6/24

44. The NVRA requires each State to "designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for coordination of State responsibilities under" the law. 52 U.S.C. §20509.

45. Nevada law designates the Secretary of State as the State's chief election officer charged with overseeing and maintaining voter registration. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §293.124.

46. Ultimate responsibility for coordinating and overseeing all list maintenance activities rests with the Secretary. A chief election official "may not delegate the responsibility to conduct a general program to a local official and thereby avoid responsibility if such a program is not reasonably conducted." United States v. Missouri, 535 F.3d 844, 850 (8th Cir. 2008).

47. Indeed, "the NVRA's centralization of responsibility counsels against ... buck passing." Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 839 (5th Cir. 2014). Courts have rejected the view that, "once the state designates" a local entity to assist with complying with federal law, "her responsibility ends." Harkless v. Brunner, 545 F.3d 445, 452 (6th Cir. 2008). "[I]f every state passed legislation delegating" their responsibilities "to local authorities, the fifty states would be completely insulated from any enforcement burdens." Id.

III. Defendants have failed to comply with their list-maintenance obligations.

48. Just a decade ago, "24 million voter registrations in the United States—about one in eight—[were] either invalid or significantly inaccurate." Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Inst., 584 U.S. 756, 760 (2018) (citing Pew Center on the States, Election Initiatives Issue Brief (Feb. 2012)). Nevada is no exception, and the evidence underscores the *in*accuracy of Nevada's registration records.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

49. Based on data gathered from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2022 American Community Survey and the most up-to-date count of registered active voters available from the Nevada Secretary of State, three counties have more active registered voters than voting-eligible citizens, and two other counties have suspiciously high rates of active voter registration.

50. Comparing the registered active voter count to the 2022 Census data reveals that these three counties have voter registration rates at or above 100 percent: Douglas (104%), Lyon (105%), and Storey (113%).

51. An additional two counties have voter registration rates of 90 percent or greater: Carson City (92%) and Clark (91%).

52. These voter registration rates are abnormally or, in the case of counties with greater than 100 percent registration, impossibly high.

53. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, only 69.1% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2022 election.

54. Similarly, only 72.7% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2020 election.

55. The U.S. Census Bureau further reported that Nevada's statewide voter registration rates for the 2022 and 2020 elections were 65.1% and 66.2% of the citizen voting-age population, respectively.

56. Thus, these five counties are significant outliers, touting voter registration rates 18 to 44 percentage points higher than the national figures from 2022 and 2020, and 25 to 48 percentage points above the State figures for the same period. Discrepancies on this scale cannot be attributed to above-average voter participation and instead point to deficient list maintenance.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

57. There is no evidence that these counties experienced above-average voter participation compared to the rest of the country or State. The only explanation for these discrepancies is substandard list maintenance.

58. "[S]ignificantly high registration rates" such as these "give rise to the inference" that election officials are "not properly implementing a program to maintain an accurate and current voter registration roll, in violation of the NVRA." Am. C.R. Union v. Martinez-Rivera, 166 F. Supp. 3d 779, 791 (W.D. Tex. 2015).

59. Nevada's maintenance efforts are especially deficient when it comes to removing voters who have changed residence. See 52 U.S.C. §20507(d)(1).

60. In 2023, the U.S. Election Assistance Commission published its biannual report covering the registration period between the 2020 and 2022 general elections. See U.S. Election Assistance Comm'n, Election Administration and Voting Survey 2022 Comprehensive Report (June 2023), https://perma.cc/28SQ-T24L.

61. Among other things, the EAC's survey requests data concerning the number of registrations removed for voters' failure to respond to an address confirmation notice.

62. The most recent census data shows that more than 15% of Nevada's residents were not living in the same house as a year ago.

63. In response to the EAC's survey for the 2020-2022 period, Mineral County and Esmeralda County reported removing less than 2% of their registration lists for residency changes during that period. That is, registrations removed because the voter moved away or failed to respond to an address confirmation notice represented just 2% of the total number of registrants in those counties. And those removals are spread out over a two-year period, which means that these counties removed on average less than

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Muckrock 6/24

1% of their registration lists per year for residency changes. Larger counties such as Washoe experienced high relocation rates (16%) but relatively low removal rates (2%).

64. In fact, Esmeralda, Lincoln, Mineral, and Storey Counties removed no voters for failing to respond to an address-confirmation notice and then not vote over two election cycles, and Elko and Pershing Counties removed only two voters for that reason. Those numbers are implausibly low.

65. In addition, several Nevada counties have inordinately high inactive registration rates, indicating that Defendants do not make a reasonable effort to remove outdated registrations.

66. The EAC report indicates that in 2022 Nevada reported 359,403 inactive registrations, representing 16.3% of the total registrations. The number is well above the national average of 11.1%.

67. Over 5,000 inactive registrations currently on the rolls were listed as inactive in the June 10, 2019 voter file, which means they should have been removed after the 2022 election.

68. In addition, several Nevada counties currently have inactive registration rates of 17% or greater, well above the state and national averages. Those counties are Elko (31%), Eureka (23%), Humboldt (26%), Lincoln (25%), Mineral (30%), Nye (31%), Washoe (17%), and White Pine (23%).

69. Having a high percentage of inactive registrations is an indication that a state or jurisdiction is not removing inactive registrations after two general federal elections.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

70. Nevada's impossibly high registration rates, large rates of inactive registered voters, low numbers of removals, and inconsistent enforcement across counties indicate an ongoing, systemic problem with its voter-list maintenance efforts.

71. Defendants' failure to maintain accurate voter rolls violates federal law and jeopardizes the integrity of the State's upcoming elections.

72. Similarly bloated voter rolls in other States have led to litigation that exposes these NVRA violations.

73. For example, the United States sued Indiana for violating the NVRA in 2006, noting in its complaint that "25 counties had registration totals of 90-95%" of their voting-age population. Indiana quickly confessed to violating the NVRA in a consent decree.

74. Private organizations sued Indiana in 2012, explaining that "26 counties … have voter registration rolls that contain between 90% and 100% of TVAP." The court denied the defendants' motion to dismiss, and Indiana agreed to conduct a significant, statewide process to clean up its voter rolls.

75. Ohio was sued on the same grounds, and it ultimately agreed to implement heightened review of the accuracy of its voter rolls.

76. In December 2019, another organization sued Detroit under the NVRA, alleging that "Detroit has more registered voters than adult citizens of voting age (106%)." The suit was dismissed on June 29, 2020, because Detroit removed substantial numbers of invalid registrations.

77. In June 2020, a voter sued Michigan's Secretary of State and Direct of Elections for violating the NVRA. The complaint alleged that one county had more registered voters than adult citizens over the age of 18, and an additional 15 counties had voter registration rates that exceeded 90 percent of adult citizens over the age of 18. The court denied the defendants' motion to dismiss, and Michigan agreed to slate 177,000 erroneous registrations for cancellation and implement other list-maintenance reforms.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

78. In September 2021, voters sued North Carolina, alleging that "40 counties in North Carolina have registration rates that far eclipse the national and statewide voter-registration rate in recent elections." The district court denied the defendants' motion to dismiss, and the case is now in discovery.

IV. Plaintiffs provided Defendants notice of their statutory violations.

79. Under the NVRA, "Plaintiffs have [statutory] standing assuming they provided proper notice within the meaning of 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)." Bellitto v. Snipes, 221 F. Supp. 3d 1354, 1362 (S.D. Fla. 2016).

80. On December 4, 2023, Plaintiffs mailed a statutory notice letter to Secretary of State Francisco Aguilar, notifying him of these NVRA violations and formally requesting that he correct the violations within 90 days. See Exh. A.

81. Plaintiffs have since received updated comparisons based on recently available data. Those numbers are reflected in the allegations above.

82. The notice stated that Plaintiffs "hope[d] to avoid litigation and would welcome immediate efforts by your office to bring Nevada into compliance with Section 8."

83. Plaintiffs asked that Defendants ensure they have a "comprehensive, nondiscriminatory" list maintenance program in place that complies with federal law, and to "identify and remove" several categories of ineligible individuals "from the official lists of eligible voters."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Muckrock FOIA

84. Plaintiffs also asked that Defendants "respond in writing within 45 days of the date of this letter," "fully describ[ing] the efforts, policies, and programs [they] are taking, or plan to undertake before the 2024 general election to bring Nevada into compliance with Section 8," as well as when they "plan to begin and complete each specified measure and the results of any programs or activities [they] have already undertaken."

85. Additionally, Plaintiffs asked Defendants to state "what policies are presently in place, or will be put in place, to ensure effective and routine coordination of list maintenance activities," and "a description of the specific steps [Defendants] intend to take to ensure routine and effective list maintenance on a continuing basis beyond the 2024 election."

86. Finally, Plaintiffs requested that Defendants take steps to preserve documents as required by section 8(i) of the NVRA, 52 U.S.C. §20507(i)(1)-(2), and other federal law. See, e.g., In re Enron Corp. Sec., Derivative & Erisa Litig., 762 F. Supp. 2d 942, 963 (S.D. Tex. 2010) ("The obligation to preserve evidence arises when the party has notice that the evidence is relevant to litigation or when a party should have known that the evidence may be relevant to future litigation.").

87. The notice letter stated that Plaintiffs would file a lawsuit under 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(2) if the identified violations were not corrected within 90 days of receipt of the letter.

88. Defendants have failed to correct the violations of the NVRA identified in the notice letter and this complaint.

89. Plaintiff Scott Johnston and all individual members of the RNC and NVGOP who are lawfully registered to vote in Nevada have rights under both the U.S.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Constitution and the Nevada Constitution to vote in federal and state elections, as well as statutory rights under both federal and state law to the safeguards and protections set forth in the NVRA.

90. Defendants' failure to comply with their NVRA voter-list maintenance obligations burdens the right to vote of Mr. Johnston and the individual members of the RNC and NVGOP who are lawfully registered to vote in Nevada by undermining their confidence in the integrity of the electoral process, discouraging their participation in the democratic process, and instilling in them the fear that their legitimate votes will be nullified or diluted by unlawful votes.

91. Defendants' failure to satisfy their list-maintenance obligations also infringes the federal and state statutory rights of Mr. Johnston and the individual members of the RNC and NVGOP who are lawfully registered to vote in Nevada. These individuals have a statutory right to vote in elections for federal office that comply with the procedures and protections required by the NVRA.

92. Defendants' NVRA violations have also caused economic, financial, and political injury to the Plaintiffs. Defendants' inaccurate voter rolls have forced Plaintiffs to allocate additional resources and misallocate their scarce resources in ways they otherwise would not have.

COUNT
Violation of the NVRA

93. Plaintiffs incorporate all their prior allegations.

94. Defendants have failed to make reasonable efforts to conduct voter-list maintenance as required by 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

95. Plaintiffs have suffered irreparable injuries as a direct result of Defendants' violation of section 8 of the NVRA.

96. Plaintiffs will continue to be injured by Defendants' violations of the NVRA until Defendants are enjoined from violating the law.

97. Plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs ask this Court to enter judgment in their favor and provide the following relief:

A. A declaratory judgment that Defendants are in violation of section 8 of the NVRA;

B. A permanent injunction barring Defendants from violating section 8 of the NVRA;

C. An order instructing Defendants to develop and implement reasonable and effective registration list-maintenance programs to cure their failure to comply with section 8 of the NVRA and to ensure that ineligible registrants are not on the voter rolls;

D. Plaintiffs' reasonable costs and expenses of this action, including attorneys' fees; and

E. All other further relief that Plaintiffs may be entitled to.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dated: March 18, 2024

Respectfully submitted,

Thomas R. McCarthy*
VA Bar No. 47145
Gilbert C. Dickey*
VA Bar No. 98858
Conor D. Woodfin*
VA Bar No. 98937
CONSOVOY MCCARTHY PLLC
1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
(703) 243-9423
tom@consovoymccarthy.com
gilbert@consovoymccarthy.com
conor@consovoymccarthy.com

pro hac vice application forthcoming*

Counsel for Plaintiffs

/s/ Jeffrey F. Barr

Jeffrey F. Barr
NV Bar No. 7269
ASHCRAFT & BARR LLP
8275 South Eastern Avenue
Suite 200
Las Vegas, NV 89123
(702) 631-4755
barrj@ashcraftbarr.com

Sigal Chattah
NV Bar No. 8264
CHATTAH LAW GROUP
5875 S. Rainbow Blvd #204
Las Vegas, NV 89118
(702) 360-6200
sigal@thegoodlawyerlv.com

Counsel for the Nevada Republican Party

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

EXHIBIT A

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Consovoy McCarthy PLLC

1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
703.243.9423
www.consovoymccarthy.com

December 4, 2023

Francisco V. Aguilar
Nevada Secretary of State
101 N Carson Street, Suite 3
Carson City, NV 89701

Dear Secretary Aguilar:

As you are aware, the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) requires States to maintain an accurate and current voter registration roll for elections for federal office. Based on our analysis, Nevada is in violation of Section 8 of the NVRA. By comparing publicly available voter registration records with the U.S. Census Bureau's 2021 citizen voting age population data, we have determined that three counties have more registered active voters than adult citizens over the age of 18. We have identified five other counties that have voter registration rates that exceed 90 percent of adult citizens over the age of 18, a figure that far eclipses the voter registration rate nationwide in recent elections. This evidence shows that your office and officials in these counties are not conducting appropriate list maintenance to ensure that the voter registration roll is accurate and current, as required by federal law.

Congress enacted the NVRA "to protect the integrity of the electoral process." 52 U.S.C. §20501(b)(3). Specifically, it enacted Section 8 "to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained." Id. §20501(b)(4). Retaining voter rolls bloated with ineligible voters harms the electoral process, heightens the risk of electoral fraud, and undermines public confidence in elections. After all, "[c]onfidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy." Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006) (per curiam). Section 8 of the NVRA obligates States to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters" due to death or change of residence. 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4). And as the U.S. Supreme Court has recently confirmed, "federal law makes this removal mandatory." Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Institute, 138 S. Ct. 1833, 1842 (2018).

This letter provides statutory notice that the Republican National Committee, Nevada Republican Party, and Scott Johnston, acting as political parties and a registered Nevada voter with substantial interests in secure elections, will bring a lawsuit against you and, if appropriate, against the counties named in this letter, if you fail to take specific actions to correct these violations of Section 8 within the 90-day timeframe specified in federal law. See Green v. Bell, No. 321-cv-00493, 2023 WL 2572210, at *3 (W.D.N.C. Mar. 20, 2023). Furthermore, while we hope to avoid litigation, we still formally request that the Nevada Secretary of State and the eight counties named in this letter (if they maintain separate records) act to preserve documents as required by Section 8(i) of the NVRA. 52 U.S.C. §20507(i)(1)-(2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As the Secretary of State, you are responsible for coordinating the required statewide list maintenance under the NVRA. The NVRA requires each State to "designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for coordination of State responsibilities under" the law. Id. §20509. Nevada law designates the Secretary of State as the State's chief election officer charged with overseeing and maintaining voter registration. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §293.675. This letter explains how we concluded that Nevada and the eight named counties are violating Section 8 of the NVRA, and the curative steps needed to avoid litigation.

I. The NVRA protects election integrity by requiring States to make reasonable efforts to maintain accurate and current lists of registered active voters.

Nevada's voter registration list maintenance program must be "uniform, non-discriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act." 52 U.S.C. §20507(b)(1). Section 8 requires that States "remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of (A) the death of the registrant; or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant" to outside of his or her current voting jurisdiction. Id. §20507(4)(A)-(B).

Additionally, the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) mandates that States adopt computerized statewide voter registration lists and maintain them "on a regular basis" in accordance with the NVRA. Id. §21083(a)(2)(A). States must "ensure that voter registration records in the State are accurate and are updated regularly," a process which must include making a "reasonable effort to remove registrants who are ineligible to vote from the official list of eligible voters." Id. §21083(a)(4). HAVA's list maintenance mandates include coordination with "State agency records on death" and "State agency records on felony status" to facilitate the removal of individuals who are deceased or rendered ineligible under State law due to felony conviction. Id. §21083(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I)-(II).

As the chief election official for Nevada, the responsibility rests with you to coordinate and oversee the list maintenance activities of local and county election officials. See, e.g., Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 839 (5th Cir. 2014) ("[T]he NVRA's centralization of responsibility counsels against … buck passing."); United States v. Missouri, 535 F.3d 844, 850 (8th Cir. 2008) (explaining that a State or chief election official "may not delegate the responsibility to conduct a general program to a local official and thereby avoid responsibility if such a program is not reasonably conducted"); see also, e.g., Nev. Rev. Stat. §293.675 (setting forth requirements for the Secretary of State to conduct regular voting list maintenance activities).

II. Three Nevada counties have more registered active voters than voting-eligible citizens, and five others have suspiciously high rates of voter registration.

Based on data gathered from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2021 citizen voting age population data and the most up-to-date count of registered active voters available from the Nevada Secretary of State, Nevada is failing to meet its list maintenance obligations. Comparing the registered active voter count to the 2021 Census data reveals that these three counties have greater than 100 percent voter registration: Douglas (105%), Lyon (106%), and Storey (114%).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In other words, there are more registered voters than eligible voters. This impossible statistic shows that voter registration records are not being maintained. Meanwhile, five other counties across the State have voter registration rates of 90 percent or greater: Carson City (92%), Churchill (90%), Clark (92%), Eureka (91%), and Washoe (92%).

These voter registration rates are abnormally or, in the case of counties with greater than 100 percent registration, impossibly high. This constitutes strong evidence that Nevada's voter rolls are not being properly maintained. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, only 69.1% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2022 election. See U.S. Census Bureau, Voting and Registration in the Election of November 2020, Table 4a, Reported Voting and Registration of the Total Voting-Age Population, for States: November 2022, perma.cc/XQ3R-E4FT. Similarly, only 72.7% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2020 election. See U.S. Census Bureau, Voting and Registration in the Election of November 2020, Table 4a, Reported Voting and Registration, for States: November 2020, perma.cc/7BUT-ZLDA. The U.S. Census Bureau further reported that Nevada's statewide voter registration rates for the 2022 and 2020 elections were 65.1% and 66.2% of the citizen voting-age population, respectively. Id. Thus, these eight counties are significant outliers, touting voter registration rates 17 to 45 percentage points higher than the national figures from 2022 and 2020, and 23 to 49 percentage points above the State figures for the same period. Discrepancies on this scale cannot be attributed to above-average voter participation and instead point to deficient list maintenance.

Nevada's failure to provide accurate voter rolls violates federal law, jeopardizes the integrity of the upcoming 2024 federal election, and signals to voters that elections in Nevada are not being properly safeguarded.

III. Avoiding litigation

The NVRA includes a private right of action, empowering any "person who is aggrieved by a violation" of the statute to bring a civil action in federal district court for declaratory or injunctive relief. 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)-(2); see Green, 2023 WL at *1-*7. If the violations we have identified are not corrected within 90 days of receipt of this letter, we will have to file a lawsuit. See 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(2).

We hope to avoid litigation and would welcome immediate efforts by your office to bring Nevada into compliance with Section 8. We ask that you evaluate your current list maintenance procedures and protocols to identify the cause of the compliance failures discussed in this letter. We also ask that you modify your current list maintenance program to ensure that it is comprehensive, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with federal law. Your list maintenance program must identify and remove these categories of individuals from the official lists of eligible voters:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. All persons who are ineligible to vote by reason of a change in residence;
2. Deceased individuals;
3. Persons who are incarcerated;
4. All other ineligible voters.

We also ask that you, and should they want to respond separately, each named county, respond in writing within 45 days of the date of this letter. This response should fully describe the efforts, policies, and programs you are taking, or plan to undertake before the 2024 general election to bring Nevada into compliance with Section 8. This response should also note when you plan to begin and complete each specified measure and the results of any programs or activities you have already undertaken. We also ask you to advise us what policies are presently in place, or will be put in place, to ensure effective and routine coordination of list maintenance activities with the federal, state, and local entities outlined below. Finally, we seek a description of the specific steps you intend to take to ensure routine and effective list maintenance on a continuing basis beyond the 2024 election. To avoid litigation, we may seek certain reasonable assurances that you will affirmatively undertake these efforts, including the execution of a settlement agreement.

Should you refuse to comply with Section 8 and thus require legal action, you should know that the NVRA authorizes courts to award "reasonable attorney fees, including litigation expenses, and costs" to the prevailing party. 52 U.S.C. §20510(c). Therefore, if litigation ensues, you risk bearing the financial burden of the full cost of the litigation.

IV. Preservation of records

We also ask that you act to preserve certain records as required under the NVRA, should they be needed in the future or for possible litigation. 52 U.S.C. §20507(i). These documents and records include, but are not limited to:

1. A copy of the most recent voter registration database for the State of Nevada and for each named county, including pertinent information on each voter (name, date of birth, home address, voter activity, and active or inactive status);
2. Internal communications and emails of the Nevada Secretary of State's office, applicable county boards of elections, and any divisions, bureaus, offices, third party agents, and contractors relating to voter list maintenance;
3. All emails or other communications between the Nevada Secretary of State and county elections officials concerning their list maintenance activities, their duties to maintain accurate and current lists, and any consequences arising from a failure to do so;
4. All email or other communications between the Nevada Secretary of State and any State or federal offices and agencies, in which the Nevada Secretary of State seeks or obtains information about registered voters who have moved, been convicted and imprisoned, died, or are otherwise ineligible, for use in list maintenance activities; and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

5. All email or other communications between the Nevada Secretary of State and any other State, as well as email and communications with the Electronic Registration Information Center, the American Association of Motor Vehicle Authorities, and the National Association for Public Health Statistics and Information Systems, regarding obtaining information about voters who are deceased or who have moved for use in list maintenance activities.

We look forward to working with you in a productive fashion to ensure the accuracy and currency of Nevada's voter rolls and to protect the integrity of its voting process. While we hope to avoid litigation, if we do not receive the requested response, and if Nevada fails to take the necessary curative steps to resolve the issues identified in this letter, you will be subject to a lawsuit seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

We look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

/s/ Thomas R. McCarthy

Gilbert C. Dickey
Tiffany H. Bates
Conor D. Woodfin
CONSOVOY MCCARTHY PLLC
gilbert@consovoymccarthy.com tiffany@consovoymccarthy.com
conor@consovoymccarthy.com

Thomas R. McCarthy
CONSOVOY MCCARTHY PLLC
1600 Wilson Boulevard
Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
(703) 243-9423
tom@consovoymccarthy.com

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/22/2024 8:32:24 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Curling litigation guidance
Attachments: MDAG - Curling v. Raffensperger.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather,

Here's the memo on the Curling v. Raffensperger litigation that I mentioned earlier today. Have a great weekend.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/27/2024 11:17:19 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
CC: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: CA bar court recommends disbarring Eastman
Attachments: SBC-23-O-30029_-_Decision_-_Trial.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

He can appeal but will not be able to practice during the appeal. Will review decision (attached) for references to Michigan tomorrow. Please let Mike know. Thank you.

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FILED
3/27/2024
STATE BAR COURT
CLERK'S OFFICE
LOS ANGELES

Public Matter

STATE BAR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

HEARING DEPARTMENT - LOS ANGELES

In the Matter of JOHN CHARLES EASTMAN, State Bar No. 193726.	))))))	Case No. SBC-23-O-30029-YDR DECISION AND ORDER OF INVOLUNTARY INACTIVE ENROLLMENT

Introduction

In this contested disciplinary proceeding, the Office of Chief Trial Counsel of the State Bar of California (OCTC) charged John Charles Eastman (Eastman) with 11 counts of misconduct arising from certain activities surrounding his representation of former president Donald J. Trump and the 2020 presidential election. Eastman is charged with one count of failing to support the Constitution and laws of the United States (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068, subd. (a));[1] two counts of seeking to mislead a court (§ 6068, subd. (d)); six counts of moral turpitude by making various misrepresentations (§ 6106); and two additional counts of moral turpitude (§ 6106).

After full consideration of the record, the court finds that OCTC has satisfied its burden of proving all charges except for count eleven, which the court dismisses with prejudice.[2] In [1] All further statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code, unless otherwise indicated.

[2] OCTC has the burden of proving the charges by clear and convincing evidence. Clear and convincing evidence leaves no substantial doubt and is sufficiently strong to command the view of the circumstances surrounding Eastman's misconduct and balancing the aggravation and mitigation, the court recommends that Eastman be disbarred.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Significant Procedural History

On January 26, 2023, OCTC initiated this proceeding by filing a Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC). Eastman filed a response to the NDC on February 15. Thereafter, the court held an initial status conference wherein the court set trial to commence on May 10.

On March 30, 2023, OCTC filed its motion in limine No. 1, to exclude the testimony of two witnesses. The court granted the motion on May 23.[3]

On April 12, 2023, the court granted the parties' joint motion to continue trial; continuing the trial to June 20.

Thereafter, the court made numerous rulings regarding various motions in limine, requests for judicial notice, and abatement of the proceedings, including: a June 16, 2023 ruling on motion in limine No. 2;[4] a June 16 ruling on motion in limine No. 3;[5] a June 16 ruling on unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind. (Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 Cal.4th 519, 552.) This "standard of proof . . . which requires proof making the existence of a fact highly probable—falls between the 'more likely than not' standard commonly referred to as a preponderance of the evidence and the more rigorous standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt." (Conservatorship of O.B. (2020) 9 Cal.5th 989, 995.)

---

[3] The court precluded Eastman from offering the testimony of the Honorable Janice Rogers Brown and Rebecca Roiphe regarding: (1) whether OCTC is entering "unchartered territory" in charging Eastman with ethical violations under the facts and circumstances presented in this case; and (2) whether Eastman's statements are constitutionally protected or if he may be disciplined for such statements.

[4] Eastman was precluded from offering expert testimony from Joseph Fried regarding whether it was proper to certify the 2020 election based on the professional standards for certified audits in certain states.

[5] Eastman was permitted to offer the expert testimony of Stanley Young.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

motion in limine No. 4;[6] a June 20 ruling on motion in limine No. 5;[7] a June 21 ruling on request for judicial notice; an August 16 ruling on motion in limine No. 6;[8] an August 23 ruling on motion in limine No. 7;[9] and an August 25 ruling on Eastman's motion to abate the disciplinary proceeding.[10]

The parties filed a stipulation to undisputed facts on June 12, 2023. A 34-day, in-person trial commenced on June 20.[11] OCTC was represented by Supervising Attorney Duncan Carling, Deputy Trial Counsel Samuel Beckerman, and Deputy Trial Counsel Christina Wang. Eastman

---

[6] Eastman was precluded from offering expert testimony from John Valentine regarding his findings about voter registration anomalies he found while searching the voter rolls for numerous states and whether there was voter fraud in the 2020 election.

[7] Eastman was precluded from offering expert testimony from John Yoo regarding "whether it would be frivolous to assert that Vice President Pence had the authority to unilaterally adjourn the Joint Session of Congress" and "that [Eastman]'s argument that Pence could refuse to count certain electoral votes was non-frivolous."

[8] Eastman was precluded from offering the testimony of William M. Briggs, Anthony Cox, Jr., Mark Finchem, Heather Honey, Sandy Juno, Jeffrey O'Donnell, and Wendy Rogers. Joseph Fried and Bruce Patrick Colbeck were permitted to testify as percipient witnesses—excluding any expert opinion testimony. Kurt Olsen was permitted to testify as a percipient witness as specified on page 64 of the June 5, 2023 joint pretrial statement regarding his involvement with the Texas v. Pennsylvania case—excluding any expert opinion testimony. The court clarified its ruling on October 2. In a later October 12 order, the court precluded Joseph Fried's testimony as a percipient witness.

[9] OCTC was not precluded from offering evidence that Eastman conspired to create alternative slates of electors to those that certified the 2020 presidential election.

[10] Eastman sought to abate the case based on the August 1, 2023, federal indictment of former president Donald J. Trump for conspiracy to defraud the United States and other crimes. Eastman maintained that abatement is necessary because although currently unnamed, the potential exists that he may be charged as a co-conspirator and indicted in the criminal case against former president Trump. Eastman argued that abatement was necessary to protect his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination. Subsequently, Eastman was indicted in Fulton County, Georgia on August 14. The court denied the abatement motion, finding that Eastman was aware of his possible criminal exposure and his right to plead the Fifth Amendment before he testified during the disciplinary proceeding, he waived his Fifth Amendment rights, and the factors outlined in rule 5.50 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar did not weigh in Eastman's favor.

[11] Trial took place on June 20 – 23; June 29 – 30; August 24 – 25; September 5 – 8; September 12 – 15; September 26 – 29; October 3 – 6; October 17 – 20; October 23 – 24; October 30; November 2 – 3; November 8; and November 13.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

was represented by Randall A. Miller, Zachary Mayer, and Jeanette Chu of Miller Law Associates, APC.

On October 3, 2023, Eastman filed a request for judicial notice that was granted, in part, and denied, in part, on October 23. Both parties filed closing argument briefs on December 1 and the case was submitted for decision on the same date.

Thereafter, on December 26, 2023, OCTC filed a notice of errata seeking to correct an error in its closing brief. On December 28, Eastman filed a response to OCTC's notice of errata. As a result, on February 15, 2024, the court issued an order accepting for consideration OCTC's notice of errata and Eastman's response, vacating the December 1, 2023 submission for decision and taking the matter under submission for decision, nunc pro tunc, as of December 28.

Jurisdiction

Eastman was admitted to the practice of law in California on December 15, 1997, and has been a licensed attorney of the State Bar of California at all times since that date.

Findings of Fact[12]

The NDC alleges misconduct surrounding Eastman's involvement in the efforts to reject, delay and/or obstruct the electoral vote after the 2020 presidential election. Despite the depth, breadth, and complexity of the case law and historical context cited by the parties, this [12] The following findings of fact are based on the parties' stipulation to undisputed facts and the testimonial and documentary evidence admitted at trial.

---

Pursuant to the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, "[a]ny relevant evidence must be admitted if it is the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs, regardless of the existence of any common law or statutory rule which might make improper the admission of the evidence over objection in civil actions." (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.104(C).) It follows that even hearsay evidence must be admitted so long as it is relevant and reliable. However, it may only be "used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence, but over timely objection will not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions." (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.104(D).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

disciplinary proceeding boils down to an analysis of whether or not Eastman, in his role as the attorney for then-President Donald Trump (hereinafter referred to as President Trump) and his re-election campaign, acted dishonestly in his comments and advice given regarding the issue of whether then-Vice President Mike Pence (hereinafter referred to as Vice President Pence) had authority to unilaterally reject certain states' slate of electors and/or delay or recess the electoral count during the Joint Session of Congress on January 6, 2021, and the manner in which he pursued legal action aimed at obstructing the lawful electoral process.

Pertinent Background re Election Law and the Electoral Process[13]

Several provisions of the United States Constitution (Article II and the Twelfth Amendment), along with certain statutory provisions (including the Electoral Count Act), govern the election of the President of the United States, which involves numerous steps before, during, and after Election Day.

After Election Day, as determined by popular vote for a presidential candidate, electors are appointed by the States. As stated in the United States Constitution: "Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector." (U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 2.)

[13] In the context of this disciplinary proceeding, the court only addresses some of the most significant constitutional issues relevant to the 2020 presidential election and the charges alleged against Eastman. The court does not set forth a detailed constitutional analysis of election law or election law-related issues.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Electoral Count Act (ECA), which was enacted in 1887 and until 2022, had only minor revisions, further details the electoral process.[14] Section 7 of the ECA requires State electors to meet "the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December" to vote for the President and Vice President as determined by State law. (3 U.S.C. §7.) Furthermore, as set forth in Section 6, it is the duty of the Governor of each State, as the "executive of each State", to provide as soon as practicable after ascertainment, the final certificate of ascertainment of the electoral votes to the Archivist of the United States and the President of the Senate, among others. (3 U.S.C. § 6.)

Section 15 of the ECA, addresses the Joint Session of Congress, including the manner in which, on January 6, each state's governor-certified electoral votes contained in the certificate of ascertainment will be counted and how objections shall be resolved:

> Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted according to the rules in this subchapter provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcements shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States…[If objections are raised as to any vote from a State], the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of [14] See Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2023, Pub. L. No. 117-328 (December 29, 2022) 136 Stat. 4459, 5233-5241. Here, the court addresses the ECA as it existed at the time of Eastman's alleged misconduct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given[15] by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 of this title to have been appointed…."

(3 U.S.C. § 15, italics and emphasis added.)

Section 15 of the ECA further details the procedures to be followed by each chamber in connection with its individual and joint consideration of objections to a State's votes and, the procedure to be followed if the two Houses disagree: "if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted." (3 U.S.C. § 15.) Significantly, section 15 of the ECA provides "[n]o votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of." (Id.)

Section 15 of the ECA is replete with references to electoral votes that must be "certified" and "ascertained" and clearly reflects that when electoral slates are disputed, those electoral votes contained within a certificate of ascertainment executed by the governor of a State, are to be prioritized in the counting and tabulating of votes for President of the United

---

[15] Eastman contends that the contested states' votes were not "regularly given" due to illegalities that resulted in the appointment of former Vice President Biden electors and under the ECA, that could include electoral votes certified after an election that was conducted in violation of state electoral law. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp.123-125.) However, as Congressional Record 52 reflects, in 1886, Representative Adams explained that "[r]egularly given" referred to actions of the elector, not the way in which the elector was appointed. (Exh. 34, p. 7.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States. So, whether they are called alternate, contingent, or "dual" slates, those slates of electors that are not certified by the governor of the State they purport to represent, are constitutionally invalid and they are not to be counted when a State has final a slate certified by its governor.

Finally, as relevant here, the ECA specifically provided that either chamber could call a recess during the January 6 joint meeting of Congress but does not provide that the President of the Senate could "direct a recess." (3 U.S.C. §16.) Between 1789 and 2016, Congress initiated or controlled every recess or adjournment of an electoral count. (Exh. 179, p. 84.) Section 16 of the ECA also imposed restrictions on the period of each chamber's recess, limiting each House of Congress from recessing "beyond the next calendar day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of 10 o'clock," but "if the counting of the electoral votes and the declaration of the result shall not have been completed before the fifth calendar day next after such first meeting of the two Houses, no further or other recess shall be taken by either House."[16] (Ibid.) It also unequivocally stated that the "joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared." (Ibid.)

Importantly, the Twelfth Amendment contains the following language: "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." (U.S. Const., 12th Amend.)[17]

---

[16] Limits were also imposed on the period of time to debate objections while each House of Congress was meeting in separate sessions; "each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question five minutes, and not more than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House to put the main question without further debate." (3 U.S.C. §17.)

[17] The Twelfth Amendment, ratified in 1804, required that electors cast two sets of votes for President and Vice President, and changed the requirement previously set forth in Article II, section 1, clause 3, that allowed the candidate with the second most number of electoral votes to assume the role of Vice President, sometimes resulting in a President and Vice President who represented opposing parties. (See exh. 179, p. 11.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's Relationship with President Trump and Trump's Re-Election Campaign

On September 3, 2020, Eastman was invited to join an Election Integrity Working Group, formed in anticipation of post-election litigation, in connection with the upcoming November 3 presidential election, and organized at President Trump's request. Eastman began his representation of President Trump, as a presidential candidate, and his campaign at or around that time.

On December 6, 2020, Eastman received a formal engagement letter for legal services, dated December 5, from President Trump's 2020 presidential re-election campaign committee (Trump's Campaign). The engagement letter was between Eastman and President Trump, in his capacity as a presidential candidate, and Trump's campaign. It defined the scope of the legal representation as follows: "[Eastman] agrees to represent [President Trump and Trump's Campaign], as its interests may appear, in connection with the 2020 presidential general election, including potential litigation matters and matters related to the Electoral College." (Exh. 1, p. 1.)

Eastman's Involvement in Texas v. Pennsylvania (filed December 7, 2020)

Subsequent to the 2020 presidential election, but prior to the deadline for the certification of the states' electors, Eastman participated in various election challenges which disputed the results of the 2020 presidential election, including a lawsuit filed by the State of Texas.

Texas v. Pennsylvania

On December 7, 2020, the State of Texas filed, in the United States Supreme Court, a motion for leave (Motion for Leave) to file a bill of complaint (Bill of Complaint) against defendant states Georgia, Michigan, Wisconsin and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (Texas v. Pennsylvania). Texas sought expedited consideration of its Motion for Leave on the grounds that "[a]bsent some form of relief, the defendants will appoint electors based on unconstitutional and deeply uncertain election results, and the House will count those votes on January 6, tainting the election and the future of free elections." (Exh. 260, p. 96.) In its brief in support of the Motion for Leave, Texas asserted that the central question revolved around whether Georgia, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania (the Defendant States) violated the Electors Clause of the U.S. Constitution[18] by implementing non-legislative actions to alter their state election rules governing the appointment of 2020 presidential electors. (Id. at p. 60.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Texas argued that the Defendant States used the COVID-19 pandemic as a ruse or justification to "[usurp] their legislatures' authority and unconstitutionally [revise] their state's election statutes" by "executive fiat or friendly lawsuits thereby weakening ballot integrity" while "flood[ing] the Defendant States with millions of ballots to be sent through the mails, or placed in drop boxes, with little or no chain of custody and, at the same time, weaken[ing] the strongest security measures protecting the integrity of the vote—signature verification and witness requirements." (Id. at pp. 8-9, footnote omitted.) Texas contended that there were significant grounds to question the legitimacy of the election outcomes in the Defendant States and urged the United States Supreme Court to extend the December 14, 2020 deadline for certification of presidential electors in those states to allow for thorough investigations to take place. Texas further argued that its citizens "have the right to demand that all other States abide by the constitutionally set rules in appointing presidential electors to the electoral college" (*id.*at p. 69) because "[i]f Defendant States' unconstitutionally appointed electors vote for a presidential candidate opposed by [Texas]'s electors, that operates to defeat [Texas]'s interests," (id. at p. 71)[19] the State of Texas and the citizens of Texas would suffer injury from the Defendant States' alleged unconstitutional non-legislative actions.

---

[18] See United States Constitution, Article II, Section 1, Clause 2, discussed supra.

[19] For example, Texas argued that "[u]nlike Defendant States, [Texas] neither weakened nor allowed the weakening of its ballot-integrity statutes by non-legislative means." (Id. at p. 71, fn. 5.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Factual Allegations in Support of Texas's Motion for Leave and Bill of Complaint

Texas's Bill of Complaint contained 127 paragraphs of factual allegations. The Motion for Leave and Bill of Complaint contained the following generalized allegations which are relevant in this disciplinary proceeding:

- "Rampant lawlessness arising out of Defendant States' unconstitutional acts" and irregularities in the electoral process that "[t]aken together, these flaws affect an outcome-determinative numbers (sic) of popular votes in a group of States that cast outcome-determinative numbers of electoral votes." (Exh. 260, pp. 4, 11.)

- "The probability of former Vice President Biden winning the popular vote in the four Defendant States—Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin—independently given President Trump's early lead in those States as of 3 a.m. on November 4, 2020, is less than one in a quadrillion, or 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000. For former Vice President Biden to win these four States collectively, the odds of that event happening decrease to less than one in a quadrillion to the fourth power (i.e., 1 in $1,000,000,000,000,000^4$). [Citation]." (Id. at pp. 13-14.)

- "The same less than one in a quadrillion statistical improbability of Mr. Biden winning the popular vote in the four Defendant States—Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin—independently exists when Mr. Biden's performance in each of those Defendant States is compared to former Secretary of State Hilary Clinton's performance in the 2016 general election and President Trump's performance in the 2016 and 2020 general elections. Again, the statistical improbability of Mr. Biden winning the popular vote in these four States collectively is 1 in $1,000,000,000,000,000^5$. [Citation.]" (Id. at p. 14.)

- "Put simply, there is substantial reason to doubt the voting results in the Defendant States." (Id.)

- "The number of absentee and mail-in ballots that have been handled unconstitutionally in Defendant States greatly exceeds the difference between the vote totals of the two candidates for President of the United States in each Defendant State." (Id. at p. 15.)

Texas's Claims of Outcome-Determinative Fraud

Texas alleged "rampant lawlessness arising out of Defendant States' unconstitutional acts" described in unidentified, pending lawsuits filed in Defendant States, which included: "the physical blocking and kicking out of Republican poll challengers; thousands of the same ballots run multiple times through tabulators; mysterious late night dumps of thousands of ballots at tabulation centers; illegally backdating thousands of ballots; signature verification procedures ignored; more than 173,000 ballots in the Wayne County, MI center that cannot be tied to a registered voter [footnote omitted]"; "[v]ideos of: poll workers erupting in cheers as poll challengers are removed from vote counting centers . . . [and] suitcases full of ballots being pulled out from underneath tables after poll watchers were told to leave"; and "a laptop and several USB drives, used to program Pennsylvania's Dominion voting machines, were mysteriously stolen from a warehouse in Philadelphia." (Exh. 260, pp. 11-12.) Texas did not offer any support for the factual claims of widespread lawlessness and failed to elucidate how the alleged unconstitutional actions of any Defendant State were connected to the alleged rampant lawlessness it identified.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

According to Texas, Defendant States expanded absentee and mail-in voting opportunities for their voters and by so doing, "created a massive opportunity for fraud." (Id. at p. 20, italics added.) Citing to the Pew Research Center, Texas acknowledged that "in the 2020 general election, a record number of votes—about 65 million—were cast via mail compared to 33.5 million mail-in ballots cast in the 2016 general election—an increase of more than 94 percent." (Id. at p. 19.) Texas attributed that large increase in the number of mail-in ballots to the "public-health response to the COVID-19 pandemic [as well as] the urging of mail-in voting's proponents, and most especially executive branch officials in Defendant States." (Ibid.) Again, without support, Texas stated that "[s]ignificantly, in Defendant States, Democrat voters voted by mail at two to three times the rate of Republicans", which "unconstitutional usurpation of legislative authority, and the weakening of legislative mandated ballot security measures" greatly benefited former Vice President Biden. (Id. at p. 20.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Texas tiptoed around the issue of fraud. Although it alleged actions in Defendant States that resembled fraud,[20] it left the door open, arguing: "While investigations into allegations of unlawful votes being counted and fraud continue, even the appearance of fraud in a close election would justify exercising the Court's discretion to grant the motion for leave to file. Regardless, Defendant States' violations of the Constitution would warrant this Court's review, even if no election fraud had resulted." (Id at p. 90, italics added.)

Texas's Claims Specific to Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties

In its Bill of Complaint, Texas included factual claims asserting that election officials at both state and local levels in Philadelphia and Allegheny counties—aiming to benefit former Vice President Biden in the 2020 election—allegedly violated Pennsylvania's election code by failing to adhere to Pennsylvania Statutes, title 25, section 3146.8, subdivision (b).[21] Texas asserted that Pennsylvania, by adhering to the guidance issued by Pennsylvania Secretary of the Commonwealth Kathy Boockvar on September 11, 2020,[22] neglected the signature verification requirements outlined in its election code.

---

[20] E.g., according to Ethan J. Pease, who subcontracted with the United States Postal Service (USPS) to deliver mail-in ballots to the Madison, Wisconsin sorting center, employees in Wisconsin were allegedly backdating ballots received after November 3, 2020, as well as reporting that there were 100,000 missing ballots, which Texas stated would far exceed former Vice President Biden's margin of 20,565 votes over President Trump. (Exh. 260, pp. 42-43.)

[21] 25 P.A. § 3146.8, subd. (b) provides: "Watchers shall be permitted to be present when the envelopes containing official absentee ballots and mail-in ballots are opened and when such ballots are counted and recorded."

[22] Secretary Boockvar advised the county board of elections that it was responsible for approving ballots to be counted during pre-canvassing. She further advised that "[t]o promote consistency across the 67 counties, the county boards of elections should follow [certain] steps when processing returned absentee and mail-in ballots." (Exh. 125, p. 3) For returned absentee and mail-in ballots, the county board of elections was directed to examine the voter declaration on the envelope of the absentee or mail-in ballot return and "compare the information on the outer envelope, i.e., the voter's name and address, with the information contained in the 'Registered Absentee and Mail-in Voters File, the absentee voter's list and/or the Military Veterans' and Emergency Civilians Absentee Voters File.' [¶] If the Voter's Declaration on the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Without support, Texas further alleged "[a]pproximately 70 percent of the requests for absentee ballots were from Democrats and 25 percent from Republicans. Thus, this unconstitutional abrogation of state election law greatly inured to former Vice President Biden's benefit." (Exh. 260, p. 22.)

Texas also claimed that "[s]tatewide election officials and local election officials in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties, aware of the historical Democrat advantage in those counties, violated Pennsylvania's election code and adopted differential standards favoring voters in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties with the intent to favor former Vice President Biden. [Citation]" (Id. at p. 24.) Although Texas cited to its November 18, 2020 complaint in Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. v. Boockvar filing as support for some of these allegations, Texas did not reference the earlier Pennsylvania state and federal cases—all of which rejected those factual allegations outlined in the Bill of Complaint.

Notably, prior to the 2020 presidential election, Secretary Boockvar sought declaratory relief from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania (Middle District) regarding the guidance she provided. On October 14, 2020, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court granted Secretary Boockvar's request for declaratory relief, allowing it to examine the question of whether the guidance provided by Secretary Boockvar on September 11, 2020, was in accordance with the Pennsylvania Elections Code—specifically, whether the Pennsylvania Election Code authorizes return envelope is blank, that ballot return envelope must be set aside and not counted. . . . If the Voter's Declaration on the return envelope is signed and the county board is satisfied that the declaration is sufficient, the mail-in or absentee ballot should be approved for canvassing unless challenged in accordance with the Pennsylvania Election Code. [¶] The Pennsylvania Election Code does not authorize the county of board of elections to set aside returned absentee or mail-in ballots based solely on signature analysis by the county board of elections." (Ibid, italics added.)

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

county election boards to reject voter absentee and/or mail-in ballots during the pre-canvassing[23] and canvassing[24] period based on an alleged or perceived signature match variance. (Exh. 233, pp. 1-2.) On October 23, 2020, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court determined that "the Election Code does not authorize or require county election boards to reject absentee or mail-in ballots during the canvassing process based on an analysis of a voter's signature on the 'declaration' [the pre-printed statement] contained on the official ballot return envelope for the absentee or mail-in ballot." (Id. at p. 2.) Accordingly, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court directed "the county boards of elections not to reject absentee or mail-in ballots for counting, computing, and tallying based on signature comparisons conducted by county elections officials or employees, or as the result of third-party challenges based on such comparisons." (Ibid.)

Thereafter, on November 21, 2020, the United States District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania, in Donald J. Trump For President, Incl., et al. v. Kathy Boockvar, et al., case No. 4:20-CV-02078, granted Secretary Boockvar and certain Pennsylvania counties' motions to dismiss the Trump Campaign's action that sought "to disenfranchise almost seven million voters" by presenting "strained legal arguments without merit and speculative accusations, unpled in the operative complaint and unsupported by evidence." (Exh. 222, p. 2.)

Six days later, on November 27, 2020, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (Third Circuit) rejected the Trump Campaign's appeal from the Middle District of Pennsylvania., entitled Trump for President, Inc. v. Secretary Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, et

---

[23] The Pennsylvania Elections Code defines "pre-canvassing" as the "'inspection and opening of all envelopes containing official absentee ballots or mail-in ballots, the removal of such ballots from the envelopes and the counting, computing and tallying of the votes reflected on the ballots. The term does not include the recording or publishing of the votes reflected on the ballots.' 25 P.S. § 2602." (Exh. 233, p. 1, fn. 3.)

[24] Pursuant to the Pennsylvania Elections Code, "canvassing" is the 'gathering of ballots after the final pre-canvass meeting and the counting, computing and tallying of the votes reflected on the ballots." (Id. at pp. 1-2, fn. 3.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

al. The Trump Campaign's appeal was based on the narrow argument that it should be allowed to amend its complaint a second time and it requested that the Third Circuit issue "an injunction to prevent the [Pennsylvania] certified vote totals from taking effect." (Exh. 223, p. 9.) The Third Circuit rejected the Trump Campaign's "claim that, '[u]pon information and belief, a substantial portion of the approximately 1.5 million absentee and mail votes in Defendant Counties should not have been counted.' [Citation.]" The court found that "'[u]pon information and belief' is a lawyerly way of saying that the [Trump] Campaign does not know that something is a fact but just suspects it or has heard it." (Id. at p. 12.) The Third Circuit further stated that "'While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations.' Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. Yet the [Trump] Campaign offers no specific facts to back up these claims." (Ibid.) The Third Circuit's opinion also rejected other Trump Campaign claims regarding Pennsylvania as unfounded—stating, "[f]ree, fair elections are the lifeblood of our democracy. Charges of unfairness are serious. But calling an election unfair does not make it so. Charges require specific allegations and then proof. We have neither here." (Id. at p. 2.)

The Cicchetti Declarations Filed in Support of Texas's Motion for Leave

Texas filed two declarations by Charles J. Cicchetti, PhD,[25] in support of its Motion for Leave, on December 7 and 11, 2020, respectively. (Exhs. 260, pp. 115-122; 1034.)

---

[25] In his declaration filed December 7, 2020, Dr. Cicchetti described himself as an economist with three years of Post Graduate Research in applied economics and econometrics who "was formally trained [sic] statistics and econometrics and accepted as an expert witness in civil proceedings. (Exh. 260, p. 115.) He further stated that he has "been engaged to design surveys, draw random samples and analyze and test data for significance, and [has] conducted epidemiology analysis using logit models to determine the significance of relative odds of outcomes and relative risk" and that he has "also been tasked with evaluating the work of other experts on the data and methods used and to detect and opine on bias, particularly missing variable bias." (Ibid.) Econometrics is defined as "the application of mathematical and statistical techniques to economic problems and theories." (Merriam-Webster.com, Merriam-

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The December 7, 2020 Cicchetti Declaration was cited by Texas in support of several of its arguments, including the assertion that there was a one in a quadrillion statistical improbability of former Vice President Biden winning over President Trump in the Defendant States. (Exh. 260, pp. 13-14.) Texas did not argue that this statistical improbability was evidence of fraud, but instead advanced the statistical improbability argument on the assumption that in 2020, former Vice President Biden should have received the same vote share (or number of votes) that former Secretary of State Clinton received in 2016 and because former Vice President Joe Biden received more votes or vote share than former Secretary of State Clinton, the ballots that would have been invalid and rejected in 2020 were improperly handled and counted.[26] Dr. Cicchetti concluded: "There are many possible reasons why people vote for different candidates. However, I find the increase of Biden over Clinton is statistically incredible if the outcomes were based on similar populations of voters supporting the two Democrat candidates. The statistical differences are so great, this raises important questions about changes in how ballots were accepted in 2020 when they would be found to be invalid and rejected in prior elections." (Id. at p. 118.)

Dr. Cicchetti neither identified nor provided an analysis of what constituted the "similar populations of voters supporting the two Democrat candidates in 2016 and 2020" or why an anomaly would result if the two Democratic candidates did not have the same vote share. Dr. Cicchetti also failed to provide any support for that assumption (or null hypothesis). As

---

Webster, 2024, March 19, 2024.) Dr. Cicchetti did not identify any expertise, education, or experience in the analysis of elections, election data, or political methodology, which involves the application and development of statistical methods for the purpose of studying political science questions.

[26] For example, Dr. Cicchetti compared the number of votes cast in Georgia for former Secretary of State Clinton in 2016 (1,877,963) and former Vice President Biden in 2020 (2,474,507) with President's Trump in 2016 (2,089,104) and President Trump in 2020 (2,461,837). (Exh. 260, p. 117.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

testified to by Dr. Justin Grimmer,[27] not only did Dr. Cicchetti fail to establish that the probability of former Vice President Biden winning the 2020 election was one in a quadrillion, Dr. Cicchetti's conclusions were based on erroneous assumptions and a null hypothesis methodological error.[28] (R.T. Vol. V, pp. 175-176.)

In an April 2022 article published in Academia Letters, Dr. Cicchetti criticized and disavowed the Texas Bill of Complaint arguments which were purportedly based on his declarations. (Exh. 1181.) Dr. Cicchetti noted that antithetical to "various critiques the Cicchetti Declarations did not claim Trump won or any evidence of fraud was found." (Id. at p. 2.) Rather, he noted that "[s]ome critics base their statements on the Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton's complaint which erroneously claimed the December 7, 2020 Declaration placed exceptional odds in favor of Trump winning"[29] and pointedly stated that "[t]he Declarations do

---

[27] Dr. Grimmer, a tenured Stanford University professor in the Political Science Department and a Senior Fellow at the Hoover Institution thinktank at Stanford University, was designated as an expert by OCTC. Based on his educational experience as a Harvard University Department of Government graduate with master's and PhD degrees in political science; graduate coursework in American politics, political methodology and statistics; scholarly and peer-reviewed publications regarding statistical methods, statistical theory, election administration, congressional elections and claims of voter fraud, this court found Dr. Grimmer to be well-qualified to give and support the opinions he was offering. (R.T. Vol. V, pp. 117, 118-125.)

[28] As Dr. Grimmer explained: "[w]hat Cicchetti does in that analysis is he compares either the vote count or vote share between Biden and Clinton in 2020 and 2016, and flags it as anomalous that there's some difference, but a sort of basic logical assessment of that would say that there are lots of reasons we expect these things to be different across elections, and there's no established literature, empirical pattern, or even common knowledge that would say election results are the same in every state. In fact, if we took these tests to a logical extreme, if we think about Cicchetti's test, that says, if an election is not anomalous, then the results should be the same, it would imply we could just run one election, once when a state is founded, and then every election would subsequently be the same. Obviously, that's not the case. Things change. Times change. Voters' preferences may change. Conditions change that people are persuaded. And so that's a basic way we can make that sort of assessment." (R.T. Vol. VI, p. 50, italics added.)

[29] In an endnote, Dr. Cicchetti stated, "'Complaint 1 of the State of Texas aver, [T]he probability of former Vice President Biden winning . . . is less than one in a quadrillion. . . .' Texas cited Dr. Cicchetti without his knowledge of the filing or input to how Texas interpreted not support what Paxton claimed about Trump winning or the odds of this were overwhelmingly [sic]." (Ibid, italics added.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President Trump's Motion to Intervene in Texas v. Pennsylvania

On December 9, 2020, two days before the United States Supreme Court denied Texas's Motion for Leave, Eastman, as counsel of record for President Trump,[30] filed a Motion to Intervene and a Proposed Bill of Complaint in Intervention in Texas v. Pennsylvania (Motion to Intervene). President Trump sought the following relief in his proposed Bill of Complaint in Intervention: (1) a declaration that the Defendant States violated the Electors Clause; (2) a declaration that Electoral College votes cast by Defendant States' electors would not be counted; (3) to enjoin Defendant States from using 2020 election results to appoint electors unless their legislatures approve the use of those results in a constitutional manner; (4) if they had already appointed electors using 2020 election results, Defendant States would be directed to appoint new electors or not to appoint electors at all; (5) award costs to President Trump as plaintiff in intervention; and (6) grant other relief the court deemed proper. (Exh. 262, pp. 17-18.)

Before filing the Motion to Intervene, Eastman reviewed the entire Texas Motion for Leave and Bill of Complaint, including the attached Cicchetti Declaration, which Eastman did not analyze or seek the assistance of an expert to evaluate. In fact, Eastman did not have any communication with Dr. Cicchetti before filing the Motion to Intervene. (R.T. Vol. XXV, pp. 208-209.) Instead, Eastman reviewed Dr. Cicchetti's declaration, including the one in a his Declaration. The following discussion repeatedly demonstrates that Dr. Cicchetti did not reach such a conclusion in his statistical analyses, and he also states he found no evidence of fraud in the analysis he performed or reviewed." (Exh. 1181, p. 4, endnote 7.)

---

[30] President Trump sought to intervene in his personal capacity as a candidate for re-election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

quadrillion statistical improbability reference and considered it to be sufficient as, in his view, the remark was "preliminary" and not particularly material to the main claims in the intervenor brief.[31] Eastman assumed that Dr. Cicchetti's declaration and the analysis therein was accurate because he considered the attorneys who drafted the Motion for Leave to be very competent and "very scrupulous in the evidence." (R.T. Vol. I, pp. 111-112.)

Despite his reliance on the work of other attorneys and Dr. Cicchetti, Eastman had conducted extensive reviews of factual information that related to what he considered election irregularities and created a spreadsheet on which he recorded and tracked 2020 election litigation challenges found in court documents available on Westlaw, PACER, and other databases.[32] The District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania opinion and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court opinions were specifically analyzed and placed in Eastman's spreadsheet. (Exh. 1055.) While Eastman acknowledged his responsibility to ensure the accuracy of statements presented in court, he refrained from verifying the validity or invalidity of the Texas arguments and the [31] Eastman testified: "I think I have a duty to try and verify, given the time constraints and materiality, everything to the extent a reasonable lawyer would, and when I saw that clause there, and looked at Mr. Cicchetti's thing, on the quick 24-hour turnaround we had to do for this brief, it looked accurate on first blush, and because it wasn't more substantive for the allegations that were being made in the rest of the brief, it was more preliminary, setting the stage type of assessment. That was sufficient." (R.T. Vol. V, p. 20.) Nonetheless, Eastman agreed that he had an obligation to verify the substance of preliminary and all other material in his filings. (Id. at p. 21.)

---

[32] Eastman testified: "let me catalog the things that I have done, and see if I can think of anything that I—we haven't already talked about . . . And then the case law through Westlaw, the state case law through various state court dockets, to the extent they were available. They're disappointingly not as widely available or as easily available as federal court dockets. The federal court cases, I would look at those dockets, either via Pacer or most often, via CourtListener, which replicates the Pacer – the Pacer dockets and provides access, public access to the pleadings in the federal cases.… For the court cases that I was able to obtain access to, I frequently also pulled up the exhibits to look at the various sworn affidavits that were being submitted, or the expert reports that were being submitted in those cases, to try and make my best assessment of the validity of the claims that were being filed." (R.T. Vol. XXVII, pp. 172-173.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

purported supporting facts. Rather, with few modifications, the Motion to Intervene joined and adopted by reference the purported factual allegations and arguments asserted in the Texas Bill of Complaint. (Exh. 262, p. 13.)

Among the most notable difference between the Motion to Intervene and Texas's Motion for Leave, is Eastman's inclusion of additional facts and allegations regarding "non-legislative changes to State election law by executive-branch election officials of the State, or by judicial officials, in Defendant States . . . in violation of the Electors Clause." (Id. at pp. 16-17.) The additional facts stated that Georgia's Secretary of State entered into a settlement agreement with the Democratic Party of Georgia to materially alter Georgia's statutory requirements for signature verification. This allowed absentee ballots to be counted if the signature matched only the signature on the absentee ballot application rather than requiring the absentee ballot signature match the absentee ballot application and the voter registration card signature. Eastman argued that this change resulted in a drastically reduced number of invalid absentee ballots with an invalid rate reduction from three percent to .37 percent, resulting in the counting of about 40,000 ballots that based on historical rejection rates, should not have been counted. The additional facts also provided that Georgia's legislature did not ratify this material statutory change or the statutory change regarding the early opening of ballots. (Id. at pp. 15-16.) Eastman further argued that the constitutional issue was not whether voters committed fraud but whether state officials loosened ballot integrity so that fraud became undetectable. (Id. at p. 37.)

Without explanation or support for any partisan malfeasance regarding the Georgia absentee ballots, Eastman argued that an "unconstitutional change in Georgia law appeared to materially benefit Vice President Biden. According to the Secretary of State's office, Vice President Biden had almost double the number of absentee votes (849,729) as President Trump (451,157) and that the change in signature verification measures "made it more likely that ballots without matching signatures would be counted, [and] had a material impact on the outcome of the election." (Id. at p. 16.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Similar to Texas's Motion for Leave, Eastman attempted to finesse a discussion about fraud by pointing to the following examples of Defendant States allegedly weakening ballot security and integrity:

> Pennsylvania's Secretary of State issued guidance purporting to suspend the signature verification requirements, in direct violation of state law. In Michigan, the Secretary of State illegally flooded the state with absentee ballot applications mailed to every registered voter despite the fact that state law strictly limits the ballot application process. In Wisconsin, the largest cities all deployed hundreds of unmanned, unsecured absentee ballot drop boxes that were all invalid means of returning absentee votes under state law. In Georgia, the Secretary of State instituted a series of unlawful policies, including processing ballots weeks before election day and destructively revising signature and identity verification procedures.

(Id. at p. 11.)[33]

Although Eastman did not explicitly label any of these actions as fraud, he argued that these (and other) actions invited fraud or were "drastic and fraud-inducing." (Exh. 262, p. 12, italics added.) In general, Eastman argued that President Trump "did not have to prove that fraud occurred. . . it is only necessary to demonstrate that elections in the Defendant States materially deviated from the 'manner' of choosing electors established by their respective state Legislatures." (Id. at p. 13.) Eastman speculated that actions taken in Georgia "made it more likely that ballots without matching signatures would be counted, [sic] had a material impact on the outcome of the election." (Id. at p. 16.)

[33] Contrary to Eastman's claims, in Davis v. Secretary of State, LC No. 20-000099-MM, Michigan's lower court, the Court of Claims, considered the issue of whether it was lawful for the Secretary of State to mail absentee ballot applications to all registered voters and in an August 25, 2020 decision, concluded that the Secretary of State had authority to do so. (Exh. 276, pp. 1-2.) By a decision filed September 16, 2020, the Court of Appeal affirmed the lower court's decision and, as Eastman acknowledged at trial, the Michigan Supreme Court denied review. (Ibid.; R.T. Vol. IX, pp. 88-90.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

However, as Eastman confided in his long-time friend, attorney Cleta Mitchell, on November 29, 2020, Eastman knew that there was no actual evidence of outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election in any of the Defendant States, even though the statistical analyses he was aware of (a number of which were cited in the Texas v. Pennsylvania briefs), may draw that conclusion.[34] Specifically, Eastman stated, in relevant part:

> Main thing, and extremely important, is that the legal/constitutional trigger for legislative action after the fact has to be a failure to conduct the election on Nov 3 in accord with the statutory requirements. Article II, in my view, just doesn't allow the Legislature to reclaim the power to choose electors after the fact if the election has been conducted in accord with the statutes.
>
> Second key issue is going to be political. I can't imagine a legislature, particularly one with enough never-Trump republicans to make a difference, taking this step—which would be viewed as rather extraordinary—absent pretty compelling evidence of fraud. The statistical analyses that have been done might get you there, but it would be nice to have actually hard documented evidence of the fraud in the areas to which the analyses pointed.

(Exh. 39, italics added.) At trial, Eastman explained that in this email he was conveying that he had seen "significant statistical evidence that there might be fraud" and that the "statistical evidence points to where to look." (R.T. Vol. X, p. 163.)

The United States Supreme Court Denies Leave in Texas v. Pennsylvania

The United States Supreme Court disagreed with Texas. Without addressing the alleged "facts" or the merits of Texas's Bill of Complaint, the United States Supreme Court, by order [34] Among other statistical analyses, the Texas brief cited the Ryan Report's findings which found a discrepancy of about 400,000 ballots based on a flawed analysis of mail-in ballots in Pennsylvania which Texas determined was outcome-determinative. (Exh. 260, pp. 25-27.) The only copy of the Ryan Report lodged with the court was exhibit 1156, a five-page American Thinker article which referenced the Ryan Report and its conclusions but provided no support or documentation regarding those conclusions.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

dated December 11, 2020, denied the State of Texas leave to file the Bill of Complaint[35] and dismissed all other pending motions.[36] (Exhs. 356, 1376.)

Eastman's Involvement in Litigation Related to the 2020 Election Results in Georgia

Around the same time that Texas v. Pennsylvania was being litigated, Eastman got involved in several other election challenges to the 2020 presidential election results in Georgia.

Georgia's Presidential Election Results

Based on the machine tally of the 2020 presidential election votes cast in Georgia, Vice President Biden won in Georgia by a narrow margin.[37] By law, Georgia was required to conduct a statewide post-election risk limiting audit of the election results (Risk Limiting Audit). The Risk Limiting Audit ordered by Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger was a manual tally of votes cast and originally tabulated by machine count and was conducted from November 11-19, 2020. (Exhs. 86, 87.) While the Risk Limiting Audit did not confirm or correct the original stated margin of victory, it did confirm the original results; specifically, that former Vice President Biden won the 2020 presidential election in Georgia.

On November 20, 2023, Governor Brian Kemp certified Georgia's sixteen 2020 presidential state electors as former Vice President Biden electors (Biden electors). On November 21, 2023, Ray Smith III, counsel for President Trump, forwarded a vote recount

---

[35] The denial provided, "The State of Texas's motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied for lack of standing under Article III of the Constitution. Texas has not demonstrated a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections. All other pending motions are dismissed as moot." (Exh. 356, italics added.) Justices Alioto and Thomas dissented, stating "[i]n my view, we do not have discretion to deny the filing of a bill of complaint in a case that falls within our original jurisdiction. See Arizona v. California, 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020). . . . I would therefore grant the motion to file the bill of complaint but would not grant other relief, and I express no view on another issue." (Id.)

[36] The dismissal of the pending motions as moot included President Trump's Motion to Intervene and motions to intervene filed by Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Utah. (R.T. Vol. XXV, p. 209.)

[37] The margin of victory in Georgia was 0.3%. (Exh. 87.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

demand to Secretary of State Raffensperger. (Exh. 1048, p. 65.) A statutory recount was conducted.

On December 7, 2020, Governor Kemp amended the original Certificate of Ascertainment and re-certified the Georgia Biden electors. (Exh. 11.)

Trump v. Raffensperger

Amid a flurry of Georgia election challenges, Eastman provided legal advice on Trump v. Raffensperger, which was filed on December 4, 2020, in Fulton County Superior Court.[38] (Exhs. 2, 1048.) In sum, President Trump alleged that "the November 3, 2020, Presidential Election in Georgia (the "Contested Election") was not conducted in accordance with the Election Code and that the named Respondents [election officials], deviated significantly and substantially from the Election Code." (Exh. 1048, p. 4.) Trump further alleged "[d]ue to significant systemic misconduct, fraud, and other irregularities occurring during the election process, many thousands of illegal votes were cast, counted, and included in the tabulations from the Contested Election for the Office of the President of the United States, thereby creating substantial doubt regarding the results of that election." (Ibid.)

Trump v. Raffensperger had a short but tortured procedural history before the parties reached a publicly filed settlement agreement[39] and Trump v. Raffensperger was voluntarily dismissed on January 7, 2021.

---

[38] Trump v. Raffensperger, Fulton County Superior Court, case No. 2020cv343255, was an election contest challenge filed pursuant to O.C.G.A. §21-2-522.

[39] In the agreement, one of the defense counsel noted, on January 3, 2021, "we are still willing to cooperatively share information with you outside the pending litigation on the condition that all currently pending suits against the Governor, the Secretary of State and/or the members of the State Election Board be voluntarily dismissed. . . . The allegations and evidence in the Petition related to the November 3, 2020 Election have been thoroughly examined. That examination shows the claims: (1) are factually wrong; (2) are based on improper speculation and faulty data and data analysis; (3) lack substantive legal merit; (4) are moot; and (5) are procedurally deficient. As you know, even one of your 'experts,' Mr. Braynard, recanted many

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Additional relevant Trump v. Raffensperger allegations are set forth below.

Trump v. Kemp

While Trump v. Raffensperger was pending, Georgia attorney Kurt Hilbert, on December 31, 2020, filed in the United States District Court, Northern District of Georgia, a Verified Complaint for Emergency Injunction and Declaratory Relief on behalf of President Trump (Verified Complaint) in Trump v. Kemp, Case No. 20-CV-5310. As Eastman's pro hac vice admission was pending at the time, Eastman signed the Verified Complaint as proposed co-counsel for President Trump. (Exh. 270.)

On December 31, 2020, Eastman's client, President Trump, signed a verification in support of the Verified Complaint.[40] By the Verified Complaint, President Trump sought a temporary restraining order and preliminary and permanent injunction directing defendants Governor Kemp and Secretary of State Raffensperger, to de-certify the November 3, 2020 election results. President Trump also sought declaratory relief stating that certification of the election results could not be deemed valid due primarily to November 3, 2020 election violations of the Georgia state law election code and, due to the failure of Georgia state courts to afford of the positions relied upon in your lawsuits in his testimony before the Georgia House of Representatives Government Affairs Committee. Your other main 'expert,' Mr. Geels admits his positions are speculative at best." (Exhs. 275, p. 3; 358, p. 2.) Defense counsel also noted that "[t]here have already been three state election challenges contesting the Presidential Election that have been finally dismissed by Georgia courts." (Id. at p. 2, italics in original.) Mr. Hilbert responded: "after speaking with all clients, and their respective counsel, we hereby accept the terms of your settlement proposal dated January 3, 2021" and stated that they would voluntary dismiss four of their election challenge lawsuits. (Id. at pp. 4-5.)

---

[40] The verification stated: "Personally appeared before me, a Notary Public, duly authorized by law to administer oaths, President Donald J. Trump, solely in his capacity as a candidate for President of the United States, who on oath says he has reviewed the Verified Complaint for Emergency Injunctive and Declaratory Relief and with regard to the facts contained therein, states that to the best of his knowledge and belief, and relying on the representations contained therein, the facts are true and correct where derived from his own knowledge and are believed to be true and correct where derived from the knowledge of others or from documents that are maintained in the course of business or are public records." (Exh. 270, pp. 33-34.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump his statutory right to challenge the results of the election. (Id. at pp. 28-29.) The Trump v. Kemp Verified Complaint incorporated in its entirety, the Trump v. Raffensperger Verified Petition and its exhibits. (Id. at p. 13.)

Of the numerous factual allegations set forth in Trump v. Kemp (and the incorporated Trump v. Raffensperger allegations), the court addresses below only those factual allegations which relate to Eastman's alleged misconduct in this disciplinary proceeding.

a.) State Farm Arena Ballots Counted Without the Public's Open Viewing

One of the most serious factual allegations in the Trump v. Kemp Verified Complaint was the allegation that, late on November 3, 2020, Fulton County election officials at the State Farm Arena vote tabulation center stopped the ballot counting. The Verified Complaint alleged that after poll observers and members of the media had left, "several election officials then proceeded to remove suitcases full of ballots from under a table where they had been hidden, and processed those ballots without open viewing by the public in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-483. . . . This illegal activity was captured on video tape [sic]. This is but one example of such misconduct by election officials and corruption of the process." (Exh. 270, pp. 10-11.)

To provide transparency about the alleged illegal State Farm Arena activities, Secretary of State Raffensperger had the entire State Farm Arena video posted to the securevotega.com website for viewing by members of the public.

The Georgia Secretary of State conducted an investigation and on December 5, 2020, Frances Watson, Chief Investigator in the Office of the Georgia Secretary of State, executed a declaration under penalty of perjury setting forth the conclusions reached by the Georgia Secretary of State as a result of its investigation into the State Farm Arena vote tabulation center activities on November 3 (the State Farm Arena investigation).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The State Farm Arena investigation centered around the complaints Secretary of State Raffensperger received on November 3, 2020; specifically, "that Fulton County Board of Registrations and Elections directed clerks, public observers, and media personnel to leave the State Farm Arena location where ballots were being tabulated due to a water leak at the State Farm Arena, but Fulton County staff continued to scan ballots in the tabulation center at the State Farm Arena." (Exh. 98, p. 2.) Based on witness interviews and a thorough review of the State Farm Arena security footage, the investigators concluded that observers and media were not asked to leave. Rather, they left when they saw other workers depart who had completed their task of opening the envelopes. The investigators' review of the 24-hour security footage "revealed that there were no mystery ballots that were brought in from an unknown location and hidden under the tables as reported by some." (Id. at p. 3.) Around 10:00 p.m., in the presence of official monitors and the media, the videotape reflects that opened but not counted ballots were placed in the boxes, sealed, and stored under the table because employees thought they had finished for the night. (Ibid.) As of December 5, 2020, the Secretary of State investigators were continuing their inquiry.

On January 4, 2021, Robert Gabriel Sterling, Statewide Voting System Implementation Manager for the Secretary of State, held a press conference on C-Span that addressed the State Farm Arena election day activities. (Exh. 99.) According to Sterling, at around 9:45 p.m., "the cutters began putting their stuff away because everybody was under the impression they were going to get home" and "while the monitors and the press are still in the room" the opened absentee ballots were placed in the ballot carriers (not suitcases), the lids were placed on the carriers, and about 10:30 p.m. everyone was preparing to leave. (Id. at p. 3.) However, the Elections Director of Fulton County vetoed their request to finish for the evening because others were going to work through the night. After that directive, the ballot carriers were removed from under the table and those who remained were told "we've got to keep on scanning" and they did. (Id. at p. 4.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Before filing Trump v. Kemp on December 31, 2020, Eastman had watched only portions of the State Farm Arena security footage. (R.T. Vol. V, p. 77.) Eastman believed "that people were sent home, and then that boxes of ballots or suitcases of ballots were then pulled out and continued to be processing [sic] outside of public view." (R.T. Vol. XI, p. 108.) However, as Eastman acknowledged, "[the Georgia Election Code] statute gives people the opportunity to be there for public [viewership]—for the canvassing. It doesn't mandate that people be there." (Id. at p. 109, italics added.)

Eastman read information from the Office of Georgia's Secretary of State about the State Farm Arena video before filing the Trump v. Kemp complaint and at some point (but he didn't recall when), Eastman saw Frances Watson's December 5, 2020 declaration. (Id. at pp. 79-80.) During December 2020, Eastman recalled watching a Georgia Secretary of State press conference or press release which discussed the State Farm Arena.

b.) Georgia Election Officials Allowed Unqualified Individuals to Register and Vote

In Trump v. Kemp, President Trump also alleged that the Georgia election officials violated the State's Election Code by allowing unqualified voters to register and vote, resulting in "more than 11,779 'illegal' votes to be counted in the State of Georgia which is sufficient to change the outcome of the election or place the outcome in doubt as determined by the Legislature and set forth in the Election Code." (Exh. 270, pp. 5-6.) Some alleged Election Code violations included: (1) convicted felons still serving their sentence were allowed to vote in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-216(b); (2) "allowing underage individuals to register and then vote in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-216(c)"; (3) unregistered or late-registered individuals voted in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-224 (a); (4) voting in Georgia by out-of-state registered individuals

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(some of whom voted in another state as well), in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-217; (5) voting by individuals who had moved across county lines, in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-218 (b); (6) voting by individuals registered with a domicile at a post office box, church, or courthouse, in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-217 (a)(1); and (7) accepting votes cast by individuals who were deceased, in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-23 (a)-(b) and (d). (Id. at p. 5.)

At trial, Eastman did not recall the basis for each of these Trump v. Kemp allegations but contended they were supported by certain Trump v. Raffensperger allegations and the affidavits of retained experts Bryan Geels,[41] Matthew Braynard,[42] and Mark Davis, which were filed in support of the Trump v. Raffensperger Verified Complaint. (R.T. Vol. V, pp. 65-66, 74-77.)

Eastman received the Geels affidavit around December 3, 2020. (R.T. Vol. I, p. 99.) Between the time Eastman received the Geels affidavit and December 31, 2020, when Eastman caused the Trump v. Kemp complaint to be filed, Eastman reviewed the Geels affidavit, and decided that it looked credible to him, based on what he knew about voter rolls "and things like [41] Geels prepared two expert reports which were filed in support of the Trump v. Raffensperger and Trump v. Kemp verified petitions. (Exh. 1048, pp. 545, 613.) Geels described himself as "a licensed CPA, and I own a data analytics consultancy firm, Geels Consulting, based in Seattle, Washington. Before starting Geels Consulting, I worked for 9 years in public accounting at a large CPA firm. Based on my experience as an auditor working as a Senior Manager at a large CPA firm, I am an established data analytics and risk assessment expert." (Id. at p. 549.) Geels identified no experience or education involving the analysis of election data.

---

[42] According to Braynard's resume attached to his affidavit, he earned a Bachelor of Business Administration degree from George Washington University in 2000 and graduated from Columbia University with a Master of Fine Arts in 2018. His most recent employment included working as the Senior Analyst with Election Data Services, Inc. from 2001-2005; Director of the Data Division of Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. from October 2015 to March 2016; President of Look Ahead America, Inc. from March 2017 to the December 2020 and Principal of External Affairs, Inc. (Exh. 1048, p. 84). Braynard stated that he has "worked to build and deploy voter databases for the Republican National Committee, five Presidential campaigns and no less than 100 campaigns and election-related organizations." (Id. at p. 71.) Braynard had not authored any publications within the 10-year period before his affidavit was filed and he had not provided expert testimony at trial or in deposition between 2016 and 2020. (Ibid.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that." (R.T. Vol. I, pp.100-101.) Eastman took no affirmative measures to determine the reliability of the information in the Geels affidavit. Rather, Eastman assumed the Trump v. Raffensperger attorneys had assessed and determined that the information in Geels' affidavit was reliable since he believed the Trump v. Raffensperger lawyers to be "competent and adamant about not submitting anything they could not verify." (Id. at pp. 100-101.)

The declaration of Charles Stewart III,[43] the expert retained by the Georgia election official respondents, was filed on January 4, 2021. (Exh. 202.) Stewart's declaration critiqued the analysis of each Trump v. Raffensperger retained expert and his summary of certain relevant specific shortcomings in each "expert" analysis is set forth below. Stewart stated that all of the Trump "experts" lacked training and professional experience in database matching and election administration and failed to acknowledge election science literature and the inherent limitations in the analyses they performed. Eastman read Stewart's declaration by December 30 or December 31, before the filing of Trump v. Kemp. (R.T. Vol. I, p. 102.)

In a December 31, 2020 email to co-counsel Hilbert, Eastman acknowledged that some of the evidence cited in the Trump v. Raffensperger complaint was inaccurate: "Here's the issue. The complaint incorporates by reference the state court challenge [Trump v. Raffensperger]. Although the President signed a verification for that back on December 1, he has since been made aware that some of the allegations (and evidence proffered by experts) has been inaccurate. For him to sign a new verification with that knowledge (and incorporated by [43] According to Stewart's declaration, he is a Distinguished Professor of Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), where he had been on the faculty since 1985. During that time, he has "done research and taught classes at the graduate and undergraduate levels in the fields of American politics, research methodology, elections, and legislative politics." (Exh. 202, p. 1.) In January 2016, he became the founding director of the MIT Election Data and Science Lab which was "devoted to impartial, scientific analysis of elections and election administration" in the United States. (Id. at p. 2.) Stewart also authored and co-authored numerous peer-reviewed publications and books on election administration and election science and has served as an expert witness in three federal district court cases.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

reference) would not be accurate." (Exh. 51, italics added.) Even though Eastman knew that some of the Trump v. Raffensperger allegations and evidence proffered by experts in support of those allegations were incorrect, he failed to identify the inaccurate accusations or evidence for the Northern District of Georgia court in his Trump v. Kemp filing. Nor did Eastman object to co-counsel Hilbert's attempt to camouflage the inaccurate and misleading information that formed the basis of the outcome-determinative vote allegations: "I took out numbers from the complaint, left them in the memorandum [of law]." (Exh. 52, p. 5.)

Instead of candidly addressing the erroneous evidence, Eastman and co-counsel Hilbert inserted an ambiguous and disingenuous footnote in the Trump v. Kemp complaint seeking to distance President Trump from the allegations and evidence which Eastman knew contained false and inaccurate statements.[44] (Exh. 270, p. 6.)

c.) Convicted Felons Still Serving a Sentence Were Allowed to Vote

According to the Geels Declaration, Geels compared the Inmates File and Georgia's November 3, 2020 voter database and determined "there could have been up to 2,560 individuals who cast ballots that were accepted and counted but who were inmates." (Exh. 1048, pp. 556, 570.) Geels stated that those 2,560 individuals in the Active Inmate File, identified by First [44] The footnote read: "The facts and figures set forth in the [Trump v. Raffensperger]'s Verified Petition was presented to Plaintiff through the affidavits and expert opinions/reports attached to the Verified Petition and such information was presented to that lower court in affidavit form based on information publicly available to said experts, and without having access to the actual information being withheld and kept private by the Georgia Secretary of State and other governmental entities. Open Records requests have been timely submitted to attempt to obtain such information, but no records have been timely produced or made available. Accordingly, as a state court election contest is required to be verified, the facts and figures submitted by affidavits and experts reports/opinions in the lower court and incorporated herein by reference, have been relied upon by Plaintiff only to the extent that such information has been provided to Plaintiff, and which are subject to amendment, adjustment, and cure through expert opinion and final reports based on actual data and completion of ongoing government investigations (which the Secretary of State and other agencies are currently conducting). Plaintiff has not sworn to any facts under oath for which he does not have personal knowledge or belief." (Exh. 270, pp. 6-7, fn. 4.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Name, Last Name, and Birth Year, matched exactly to the Georgia Voter History File. However, Geels acknowledged that there may have been imperfect matches resulting in false positives because only the Birth Year was available in Georgia's voter record files. Stewart confirmed that Geels's matching methodology was "guaranteed to produce a result in which the number of false positives vastly exceeds the number of true positives." (Exh. 202, p. 22.) Stewart explained that a lack of unique identifiers across large databases creates a greater likelihood of false positive matches.[45] Geels did not state that he had created unique identifiers that would avoid the likelihood of false positive matches or utilized a more reliable matching method. Geels's calculations regarding the number of convicted felons who voted in the November 3, 2020 election were not reliable.

d.) Underaged Individuals Register and Then Vote

The Trump v. Kemp complaint alleged that Georgia election officials "allowed underage individuals to register and then vote, in violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-216 (c)."[46] (Exh. 270, p. 5.) Similarly, in Trump v. Raffensperger, the parties alleged that "[i]n violation of O.C.G.A. §21-2-216(c), Respondents, jointly and severally, allowed at least 66,247 underage—and therefore ineligible—people to illegally register to vote, and subsequently illegally vote." (Exh. 1048, p. 17, italics added.) It was further alleged that "[i]n violation of Georgia law, Respondents, jointly and severally, counted these illegal votes in the Contested Election." (Id. at p. 18.) According to Eastman, each 66,247 "underage individual" registration and voter allegation was based on and

---

[45] Stewart illustrated this concept by stating that "[i]n September 2020, I purchased a copy of the Georgia voter file from the Secretary of State, to use in my academic research. That file, dated September 9, 2020, contains 7,346,219 records. Of these, 7,280,948 are unique name + birth year combinations, leaving the remaining 65,271 registrants sharing a first name, middle name, last name, and birth year with at least one other voter." (Exh. 202, p. 8.)

[46] According to Eastman, Georgia allows an individual to register to vote when they reach the age of 17 ½. (R.T. Vol V, p. 67.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

supported by the same Geels expert report filed as an affidavit in Trump v. Raffensperger. (R.T. Vol. V, pp. 65-66.)

However, Geels's expert report was flawed. Although Geels initially stated in his report that he compared Registration Dates and Birthdates in Georgia's Voter Registration File and Absentee Early Votes and concluded that 66,247 underaged individuals were allowed to register to vote, that was not true. As Eastman acknowledged, Geels actually compared data from the Georgia Voter Data "Date Added" field instead of using the "Registration Date" field in performing his analysis. (Id. at pp. 73-74.)

Moreover, as Geels subsequently admitted, his use of the wrong data field in his December 1, 2020, declaration resulted in a gross miscalculation. (Exh. 1271.) Instead of 66,247 underaged individuals who allegedly registered to vote in Georgia, Geels determined that the correct number should have been much lower—2,047. Later, after an additional reassessment of his analysis, Geels, using the "Registration Date" field instead of the "Date Added" field, further lowered the number of underage individuals he contended to have registered in Georgia to 778. (Ibid.)

However, as Eastman knew when Trump v. Kemp was filed on December 31, 2020, Geels neither analyzed data for, nor quantified, the number of purported underage individuals who actually voted in the 2020 presidential election.[47] (R.T. Vol. V. 68; see also Exh. 1048, pp. 565-[47] "Court: Is it your understanding that the Geels analysis included underage individuals who were not only registered to vote, but who did vote? Is that your understanding?

---

Eastman: No. The Geels analysis never asserts that underage people voted." (R.T. Vol. V., p. 68.)

It is Eastman's view that if an underage person registered to vote and if, by the time s/he voted, that individual is legal voting age, that individual's vote would be illegal (but not fraudulent), due to that individual's underage registration and his/her post-registration vote would continue to be an illegal vote until that individual re-registered. (Id. at p. 69.) Eastman had no information from Geels and identified no other source which identified the number of 566.) Therefore, the allegation of any underaged individuals that registered and voted in the 2020 presidential election was unsupported and false.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

e.) Unregistered or Late Registered Individuals Vote

Geels stated that 98 absentee and early voters registered to vote in Georgia after October 5, 2020, the last date to legally register and to vote in the November 3, 2020 election. (Exh. 1048, p. 562.) Geels applied a general filter to an unidentified database and concluded that the 98 voters registered after the October 5, 2020 deadline to legally register to vote.

f.) Individuals Allowed to Vote Across County Lines

Eastman incorporated into Trump v. Kemp, the Trump v. Raffensperger the allegation that 40,279 individuals voted who had moved across county lines at least 30 days prior to November 3, 2020, and voted in their old county without re-registering to vote in their new county. (Exh. 1048, p. 22.) President Trump supported that allegation with the affidavit of Mark Alan Davis. According to Davis, Georgia allows a 30-day grace period for an individual who has relocated to a new county to vote in the old county of residence. Davis stated that based on his review of the USPS National Change of Address (NCOA) records, 312,971 Georgians moved within the state during an undefined time frame. Davis did not clearly explain how he reached the 40,279 cross-county relocation figure but speculated: "[I]t appears to me we probably had tens of thousands of illegal votes cast in our last election. Worse, that has probably been happening for many, many years." (Id. at p. 580, italics added.)

---

these purported underage individuals who may have re-registered to vote. (Id. at p. 74 ["My understanding is that Mr. Geels never identified people who were underage when they voted"].)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

g.) Individuals Registered to Vote with Non-Residential Addresses

Based on his review of Georgia's Voter Absentee Files and the USPS Owned and Leased Facilities Reports, Braynard stated that 1,043 early and absentee ballots were cast by voters who registered their primary residential address as a post office box. (Exh. 1048, pp. 79, 81.)

However, as Stewart opined, Braynard's analysis is unreliable because some voters do actually live in commercial facilities that conform to local building codes; other voters may have been uncertain about how to properly fill out the voter registration materials and "Braynard relies on unreliable algorithms to conduct the matching and provides no information about how he confirmed that his matches were precise enough to warrant his conclusions." (Exh. 202, p. 13.)

h.) Acceptance of Votes of Deceased Individuals

Geels opined that as many as 10,315 individuals cast ballots but were deceased prior to the November 3, 2020 presidential election and 8,718 of those individuals passed prior to the date Georgia accepted their ballot. Geels pointed out that "only the Birth Year is available for records of voters in the [Georgia] database" and "[b]ecause only a Birth Year is provided, there may indeed be false positives in the population—for example, due to the match of multiple people with a common name who were also born in the same year or to the omission of a suffix." (Exh. 1048, p. 556.)

Stewart agreed that there was a likelihood of false positive matches, noting that "1,091,659 Georgia voters share an exact match on first name, last name, and birth year" and by applying Georgia's 1.06% death rate to the number of Georgians with first and last name and birth year matches, he "would expect 11,572 registered voters in Georgia to share the same first and last name of another voter in the state who died." (Exh. 202, p. 21.)

Grimmer also agreed that Geels's faulty methodology rendered many false positives, which would seem to render Geels's analysis unreliable. (R.T. Vol. VI, pp. 26-27.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's Testimony Regarding Outcome-Determinative Fraud in Georgia

On several occasions, Eastman stated that there was outcome-determinative absentee ballot fraud in Georgia. When asked, at trial, about evidence he had of outcome-determinative absentee ballot fraud that he was aware of as of January 2, 2021, Eastman responded that he had evidence that "the weakening of signature verification in Georgia and Pennsylvania caused a dramatic decline in the disqualification of ballots" and "the declined disqualification rates in both of those states was significant enough to have affected the outcome of the election." (R.T. Vol. X, p. 79.) Eastman also contended "[w]hen a ballot comes in and the signature does not even remotely look like the signature on file, that's evidence of potential voter fraud." (Ibid.) In other words, in Georgia, Eastman equated absentee ballot fraud with lax signature verification and lax signature matching by election officials in the 2020 presidential election.

According to Eastman, the evidence of outcome-determinative fraud in Georgia could also be established by the number of "people voting after they had moved out of the jurisdiction,"[48] and the failure to perform signature verification when "absentee ballot applications were brought in." (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 89.) He also speculated that "if the signature on the absentee ballot application or on the absentee ballot bears no resemblance to the signature on file in the registration card, that's a pretty good indication of fraud." (Ibid.) Eastman pointed to a forensic audit performed by Garland Favorito[49] supposedly showing "about 5,000 votes fraudulently counted multiple times—and the vote flipping that went on in Ware County" which

---

[48] Eastman characterized this as evidence of fraud and illegality. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 89.)

[49] Garland Favorito is an IT consultant who formed his consulting company in the 1980s and by 2002, he began to focus on voting machines. He co-founded VoterGA (Voters Organized for Trusted Election Results in Georgia) in 2006. (R.T. Vol. XIV, p. 50.) VoterGA is comprised of volunteers who are involved in giving legislative advice, addressing election integrity issues surrounding "verifiability" and "auditability." (Id. at pp. 51-52.) It also filed several lawsuits involving the 2020 general election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

taken together he believed were "outcome-determinative." (Ibid.) However, Favorito's "multiple counting" and "vote flipping" conclusions were debunked by Halderman and Harry Hursti and Dr. Phillip Stark, and other computer scientists and election security experts who stated on November 16, 2020, that claims regarding technical vulnerabilities were unsubstantiated. (Exh. 187.)

As further evidence of outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 Georgia presidential election, Eastman relied on the absentee ballot analyses performed by Geels, Braynard, and Dr. Cicchetti—none of which actually concluded that there was outcome-determinative fraud in the Georgia 2020 presidential election. Eastman nonetheless believed fraud was evidenced by a decline in the disqualification rate of 2020 absentee ballots as compared to the 2016 presidential election. (R.T. Vol. X, pp. 80-82.) Eastman didn't recall whether any of these analyses addressed the disqualification rate based on category or reason for disqualification. Nor did Eastman recall whether, in Georgia, the reason for rejection of an absentee ballot was publicly available information in the absentee voter file. (Id. at pp. 79-82.)

Eastman's conclusion that there had been a notable change in the absentee rejection rate in Georgia was correct, as there was a 3.1 percentage point decline from 2018 to 2020. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 226.) However, that decline was a decline in overall ballot rejections—not just a decline in the signature verification or signature match rejection rate and it did not equate to absentee ballot fraud. Based on information publicly available in 2020, the decline in Georgia rejected absentee ballots was not primarily due to signature match issues as about 90 percent of this decline resulted from both a decrease in the percentage of ballots arriving after the deadline and a decrease in the percentage of ballots rejected due to issues with the oath envelope. (Ibid.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's Dual Slate of Electors Theory

Alongside the aforementioned legal challenges, from at least early December 2020 through December 14, 2020, Eastman worked mightily (meeting and conferencing with contested state legislators and various individuals and groups, speaking publicly and forwarding emails to Eric Herschmann, President Trump's White House advisor), to encourage Republicans in the seven "contested states" to meet and vote on Trump electors by December 14, 2020, and then to transmit those non-certified slates to Vice President Pence and the Archivist of the United States. (Exhs. 40, 42, 44, 45; R.T. Vol. X, pp. 165-169.) Eastman believed that by creating a non-certified "contingent" slate of electors on December 14, and with pending election challenge lawsuits (many of which he coordinated or filed), uncertainty would be created in some states as to both the certified and "contingent" slates of electors. Eastman also believed that he may then have time to expose illegality that might prompt legislatures to act. (Id. at p. 168.)

Eastman asserted that his belief was rooted in historical precedent in the 1960 presidential election in Hawaii, which involved competing slates of electors for John F. Kennedy and Vice President Richard Nixon when the State of Hawaii forwarded three slates of electors to then President of the Senate, Vice President Nixon.[50] However, Eastman ignored the fact that [50] The first slate of electors for Hawaii were electors for Vice President Nixon that were certified as electors by the acting Governor of the State on November 28, 1960. They met on the date designated by Congress, cast their votes, and transmitted those votes to the President of the Senate. The group of Kennedy electors from Hawaii also met on the designated date and, without having been certified by any authority in the State, the Kennedy electors from Hawaii cast votes and transmitted those votes to the President of the Senate. (Exhibit 1011.) A recount of Hawaii's votes, ordered by a Hawaii court in response to a petition filed by 30 Hawaii voters, was pending at the time the Nixon and Kennedy electors met and cast votes. On December 28, 1960, the recount concluded, and the state court determined that Kennedy won the State of Hawaii, instead of Vice President Nixon. On January 4, 1961, the newly-elected Democratic Governor of Hawaii, based on the results of the recount conducted pursuant to the court order, certified the Kennedy electors and the Governor of Hawaii transmitted his certification of ascertainment, along with the Kennedy elector votes, to the President of the Senate.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the 1960 Hawaii presidential election involved competing slates of electors, two certified by the Governor of Hawaii and one non-certified, which resulted in the counting of the more recent certified slate of electors, which was certified by the Governor of Hawaii due to a recount. Moreover, no member of Congress objected to the counting of the second certified slate of electors and Vice President Nixon expressly stated that his actions were not intended to establish any precedent outside of this particular set of circumstances.

Eastman, as a constitutional scholar, understood that alternate, contingent or "dual" slates of non-certified electors would carry no import on January 6 during the counting of electoral votes. Eastman knew that there was no constitutionally mandated provision allowing for any non-certified, non-ascertained "dual" or "contingent" slates to be considered in conjunction with the voting or counting of presidential electoral votes. As Eastman stated in his email of December 19, 2020, to Bruce Colbert, "[a]s for the Legislatures—not a one has acted. Electors did in 7 states, but unless those electors get a certification from their State Legislators, they will be dead on arrival in Congress. With such a certification, we will have a deadline that will invoke sec. 15, but the textual claim that the 'executive' certification would prevail in such an instance over the legislature-certified slate is contrary to Article II. And at that point, we might

---

On January 6, 1961, Vice President Nixon, in his capacity as President of the Senate, stated; "The Chair has received three certificates from persons claiming to be the duly appointed electors from the State of Hawaii. The Chair will hand these certificates one at a time to the tellers who will read the certificates and the attached papers in full." (Exh. 1012, p. 3.) After consideration of the certificates by the tellers, Vice President Nixon stated, "[t]he Chair has knowledge, and is convinced that he is supported by the facts, that [the Kennedy certificate issued by the Governor, dated January 4, 1961,] properly and legally portrays the facts with respect to the electors chosen by the people of Hawaii. (Id. at p. 4.) He then stated, "[i]n order not to delay the further count of the electoral vote here, the Chair, without the intent of establishing a precedent, suggests that the electors named in the certificate of the Governor of Hawaii dated January 4, 1961, be considered as the lawful electors from the State of Hawaii. (Ibid.) Vice President Nixon continued: "If there be no objection in this joint convention, the Chair will instruct the tellers—and he now does—to count the votes of those electors named in the certificate of the Governor of Hawaii dated January 4, 1961." (Ibid.) No objection being registered, the votes were counted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

well have the opportunity for a Supreme Court resolution without the need to trigger the Pelosi scenario." (Exh. 380, p. 2; see also exh. 6, p. 30.)[51]

Eastman's view on this issue did not change. In his January 10, 2021 response to Valerie Moon's emailed inquiry—"[t]ell us in layman's language, what the heck happened with the dual electors? Please?" (Exh. 61.) Eastman reiterated his view that "[n]o legislature certified them (because governors refused to call them into session), so they had no authority. Alas." (Ibid., italics added.)

Eastman's trial constitutional expert, Dr. John Yoo,[52] agreed with the characterization that the Trump Campaign's dispute over the 2020 presidential electors, specifically, the appointment of Trump electors, was "a made-up dispute, rather than a real one" (R.T. Vol. XVIII, p. 62), reasoning that each contested state had only one certified set of electors, "[n]o branch of any state government challenged its electors in 2020," and "[n]o state or federal court and no legislature or executive had found fraud"; as such, there was no "factual predicate" to trigger Vice President Pence's dispute resolution role with regard to the elector slates. (Id. at pp. 63-64). Dr. Yoo concluded that not only did Vice President Pence not have authority to reject elector votes on January 6 on the grounds that the elector appointments were invalid but,

---

[51] According to Eastman, "Section 15 of the same Title [3 of the U.S. Code] provides in part that, in the case of a disagreement between the House and Senate as to which slate of electors to count if two or more have been received, then 'the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted,' even if the alternate slate was certified by the Legislature of the State." (Id., italics added.)

[52] Dr. Yoo is a Harvard University graduate who earned a Juris Doctor degree from Yale Law School in 1992. As an Acting Professor (1993-1999), Professor of Law (1999-2013) and in his present role as Emanuel S. Heller Chair in Law & Distinguished Professor of Law, he has taught Constitutional Law at the University of California at Berkeley School of Law since 1993. Dr. Yoo has been a Visiting Scholar (2003-2021) and Nonresident Senior Fellow (2021-present) at American Enterprise Institute. He has been a Visiting Fellow at Stanford University Hoover Institute from 2018 to the present. Dr. Yoo has authored or co-authored about 100 scholarly articles and 10-12 books on Constitutional Law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

under the circumstances present, Vice President Pence was on "unassailable" grounds for not overturning the electoral results of the 2020 presidential election. (R.T. Vol. XVIII, p. 47:17; p. 66:20-25.)

Eastman's Two-Page and Six-Page Memos Detailing January 6 Scenarios

On December 23, 2020, Eastman drafted and sent a two-page legal memorandum to Boris Epshteyn and Kenneth Chesebro, attorneys and strategic advisors to President Trump and the Trump Campaign (two-page memo). (Exh. 6, p. 26; R.T. Vol. X, p. 69.) The two-page memo outlined Eastman's suggested "January 6 scenario," detailing a strategy and plan of action for Vice President Pence to declare President Trump as the re-elected president. (Exh. 3.)

Central to Eastman's new two-page memo strategy was his belief that it was "hugely important" for Republican electors in the "contested states"—Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, Pennsylvania, New Mexico and Wisconsin to meet and to vote for a Trump slate of electors on the constitutionally set date of December 14 and then transmit those slates of Trump electors in accordance with federal law. (Exh. 40; R.T. Vol. X, p. 165-166.)

The first sentence of the two-page memo states, "7 states have transmitted dual slates of electors to the President of the Senate." (Exh. 3, p. 1, italics added.) The seven states are referring to Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, Pennsylvania, New Mexico and Wisconsin (the contested states). Before December 23, 2020, the date Eastman forwarded the two-page memo, Eastman was aware that Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, Pennsylvania, New Mexico and Wisconsin had each forwarded as required, at least one official Certificate of Ascertainment[53] referencing presidential electors who had been certified by the governor of that state. (Exhs. 10-17.)

---

[53] The states of Arizona (exh. 10, p. 6), Nevada (exh. 14, p. 3), and Wisconsin (exh. 17, p. 3), stated in their respective final Certificates of Ascertainment, that an election challenge had

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The major premise underlying Eastman's two-page memo was that under the Twelfth Amendment, Vice President Pence in his role as President of the Senate, had the authority to not only open and count each state's elector certificates of ascertainment but he also had the authority to unilaterally resolve "disputed" or "contested" electoral votes. Essentially, the two-page memo provided that on January 6, Pence would proceed as follows:

1) beginning with Alabama, Pence would begin to open and count the ballots;
2) when Arizona was called, Pence would announce that he had multiple slates of electors so he would "defer decision" on Arizona until he finished calling the other States;
3) declare that due to the "ongoing disputes in the 7 States," none of their electors would be deemed validly appointed, resulting in none of the 7 States' electors' votes being counted (according to Eastman's calculation, President Trump would prevail with 232 elector-appointed votes and Vice President Biden would only have 222 so "Pence then gavels Trump as re-elected";
4) after Democrats complain, Pence declares that no candidate has the required majority, sending the matter to the House "where 'the votes shall be taken by the states,'" and Trump would win under this scenario as well because Republicans controlled 26 of the state delegations; the bare majority needed to win;
5) if the ECA protocol was followed and there were objections to the Arizona slates, the two chambers convene separately and a senator would demand normal rules, creating a stalemate that might give sufficient time for the state legislatures to generate support for the alternate slate of electors; and
6) Vice President Pence should not ask for permission from members of the Joint Session of Congress or from the court since his position is "that the Constitution assigns this power to the Vice President as the ultimate arbiter." Eastman acknowledged that several steps in this two-page memo scenario represent a violation of the Electoral Count Act, e.g. deferring Arizona's electoral count until the end of the electoral count and refusing to adhere to the ECA time constraint on debating objections.

(Exh. 3, p. 2.)

---

been filed in their state and judicially rejected before December 23, 2020. Arizona filed a supplemental Certificate of Final determination of Presidential Electors on January 6, 2021, which stated that a final determination of an election challenge regarding Arizona's electors had been resolved in Burk v. Ducy, case No. CV-20-0349-AP-EL, on January 5, 2021, and that case upheld the previously certified list of electors filed with the Archivist. (Exh. 10, p. 7.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

However, Eastman has not always supported this position. For example, in November 2000, when Eastman testified before the Florida state legislature in connection with the Bush v. Gore presidential election, Eastman explained that Congress counts the votes, Congress is the ultimate arbiter as to any disputes regarding the count and, Congress answers to no one on this issue. (R.T. Vol. IX, p. 27; Exh. 25.)

Twenty years later, in a mid-October 2020 exchange between Eastman and Colbert discussing their post-election recommendations to President Trump, Eastman emphatically supported this position when Colbert suggested "[t]hat the President of the Senate decides authoritatively what 'certificates' from the states to 'open' and what electoral votes are 'counted,' under the 12th Amendment and the Electoral Count Act of 1887, 3 U.S.C. §15." (Exh. 38, p.1.) Eastman replied, "I don't agree with this. The 12th Amendment only says that the President of the Senate opens the ballots in the joint session and then, in the passive voice, that the votes shall then be counted. 3 U.S.C. §12 says merely that he is the presiding officer, and then it spells out specific procedures, presumptions, and default rules for which slates will be counted. Nowhere does it suggest that the President of the Senate gets to make the determination on his own. §15 doesn't either." (Exh. 38, pp. 1-2, italics added.)

Eastman also disagreed with Colbert's interpretation of Article II regarding two or more conflicting slates of electoral votes authorizing the Legislature, not the governor or the popular vote to determine the appointment of the electors, stating: "I don't agree with this either. Article II says the electors are to be appointed 'in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct,' but I don't think that entitles the Legislature to change the rules after the election and appoint a different slate of electors in a manner different than what was in place on election day. And 3 U.S.C. §15 gives dispositive weight to the slate of electors that was certified by the Governor in accord with 3 U.S.C. §5." (Id. at p. 2, italics added.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Acknowledging that these were positions Eastman held for over 20 years, positions which were contrary to the two-page memo scenario which stated Vice President Pence had unilateral authority to count and resolve disputed votes, Eastman claimed that his change of position between October 2020 and December 2020 was due to a significant amount of additional research.[54] (R.T. Vol. IX, pp. 23-25, 27.)

Approximately 11 days later, on January 3, 2021, Eastman drafted and sent a six-page legal memorandum to Epshteyn, an attorney and strategic advisor to Trump's campaign (six-page memo). Eastman composed this memo to outline a range of scenarios or options he was recommending to President Trump and the Trump campaign regarding the January 6th strategy they should pursue. It delineated the course of action Vice President Pence should take in relation to the electoral vote during the Joint Session of Congress on January 6, 2021.

As with the two-page memo, this six-page memo sets forth Eastman's proposed "January 6 scenario," which Eastman summarized in four sections: (1) a sampling of illegal conduct by election officials in Georgia, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Michigan, Arizona and Nevada; (2) a brief analysis of the 12th Amendment and Electoral Count Act of 1887 relating to the constitutional and statutory process of opening and counting electoral votes; (3) discussion of a proposed strategy and course of action (framed as War Gaming the Alternatives), for Vice President Pence to one way or the other, declare President Trump as re-elected president; and (4) justification for taking the BOLD action he recommended in the six-page memo. (Exh. 4.)

Eastman also claimed in the six-page memo that "this Election was Stolen by a strategic Democrat plan to systemically flout existing election laws for partisan advantage;

[54] The Court does not find that explanation credible as this new position seems to correlate more closely with the time frame of Eastman's representation of President Trump and the Trump Campaign than it does with time frame of the published research that Eastman relied upon, almost all of which pre-dated Eastman's newly articulated view by several years.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

we're no longer playing by Queensbury Rules, therefore." (Id. at pp. 3, 5, emphasis in original.)

Eastman's sampling of alleged illegalities set forth in the six-page memo contained one which Eastman acknowledged to be false—his statement that Michigan mailed out absentee ballots to every registered voter contrary to statutory requirements. This statement was false because Michigan's Secretary of State had mailed absentee ballot applications, not absentee ballots, to Michigan's registered voters.[55] (R.T. Vol. IX, pp. 87-88.) Despite acknowledging the falsehood of the statement, Eastman tried to justify it by stating that the Michigan Supreme Court's review of the Davis decision, discussed supra, had been denied amidst "significant dissent" and pointing out that members of the Michigan legislature vigorously contested the validity of those court decisions. (Id. at pp. 89-90.)

Although Eastman described the six-page memo as a compilation of nine January 6 scenarios that had been publicly discussed and intended for internal deliberation among Trump strategists, he disavows that it includes any explicit recommendations. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, pp. 40-41.) However, Eastman made several recommendations in reference to the action(s) called for by the scenarios which he labeled as "BOLD, certainly." (Exh. 4, p. 5, bold in original.) Eastman recommended that, for the purpose of counting the electors, Vice President Pence should, among other actions, unilaterally consider the validity (or invalidity) of certain ballots and adjourn the Joint Session of Congress, "determining that the time restrictions in the Electoral County [sic] Act are contrary to his [Vice President Pence's] authority under the 12th

---

[55] "Q: You had mentioned three violations of state law in the six-page memo regarding Michigan. The first one is that: 'Michigan mailed out absentee ballots to, every registered voter, contrary to statutory requirement that voter apply for absentee ballots. Do you recall that? Eastman: Yes. Q: And you have subsequently acknowledged that that statement is incorrect. Is that right? Q: Yes. They didn't mail out absentee ballots. They mailed out absentee applications for ballots." (R.T. Vol. IX, pp. 87-88.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Amendment and therefore void." (Ibid.) Moreover, Eastman directed, "[t]he main thing here is that VP Pence should exercise his 12th Amendment authority without asking for permission—either from a vote of the joint session or from the Court." (Ibid., italics added.)

In both the two-page and six-page memos, Eastman stated that the ECA was "likely unconstitutional" because contrary to the 12th Amendment, which provides for a Joint Session of Congress, the ECA states that the two chambers of Congress, "acting separately" will decide the question of which votes of the electors shall be counted. (Exh. 3, p. 1.) As Eastman stated, "there is no court case holding either that the Electoral Count Act is constitutional or unconstitutional." (Exh. 6, p. 29, fn. 29.)

In the memos, Eastman also stated, falsely, that "[t]here is very solid legal authority and historical precedent, for the view that the President of the Senate does the counting, including the resolution of disputed electoral votes (as Adams and Jefferson did while Vice President, regarding their own election as President), and all the Members of Congress can do is watch." (Id. at p. 3, italics added.) However, as Eastman knew before, during and subsequent to the time that he drafted and advocated implementation of certain of the January 6th scenarios, there was no solid legal authority regarding this issue and the only legal authority upon which he relied in drafting the memo consisted of four law review articles.[56] (R.T. Vol. IX, p. 159:8-161.)

---

[56] The "solid legal authority" Eastman relied upon in the six page memo included the following law review articles: 1) Bruce Ackerman and David Fontana, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself Into the Presidency, 90 Va. L. Rev. 551 (2004); 2) Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653 (2002); 3) Edward B. Foley, Preparing for A Disputed Presidential Election: An Exercise in Election Risk Assessment and Manaaement, 51 Loyola Chi. L. J. 309(2019); and 4) Nathan Colvin and Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb (2010). (Exh. 6, pp. 5-6; see also exhs. 1014, 1019, 1020, 1212.) Eastman testified that he also considered the Jack Beermann and Gary Lewis article, The Electoral Count Mess: The Electoral Count Act of 1887 Is Unconstitutional, and Other Fun Facts (Plus a Few Random Academic Speculations) About Counting Electoral Votes. However, the Beermann and Lewis article was published March 1, 2021—almost 2 months after the January 3, 2021 six-page memo was circulated. The Robert Delahunty and John Yoo article,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Moreover, Eastman contended that the question as to whether Vice President Pence had unilateral authority to resolve disputed electoral votes or to delay the electoral counting, was an "open question" and he knew there was no real judicial or primary legal authority, much less controlling legal authority on the issue.[57] (Exh. 31, p. 6.) During a January 4, 2021 meeting in the Oval Office, Eastman discussed and provided candid advice regarding the six-page memo scenarios to his client, President Trump. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, pp. 40-41.) President Trump was aware of the scenarios as early as December 2020.

Eastman's Appearance on the Bannon's War Room

Just before drafting and sending the six-page memo, on January 2, 2021, Eastman appeared as a guest on the "Bannon's War Room" radio program. Eastman was introduced as "one of the great thinkers about the Constitution" and repeatedly referred to by Steven Bannon as "the President's constitutional lawyer." (Exh. 28, pp. 1, 4.) Eastman spoke regarding the "failed" and "illegally conducted" 2020 presidential election, where, "in a number of state [sic] and most egregiously in Georgia, and Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, partisan elected officials, and in some cases partisan judicial officials, ignored or altered those legislative commands [regarding election laws requiring signature verification on absentee ballots and voter ID

Who Counts?: The Twelfth Amendment, the Vice President, and the Electoral Count, 73 Case W. Rsrv. L. Rev., 27 was published in 2022. Dr. Yoo and Delahunty's article, What Happens If No One Wins? published in American Mind on October 17, 2020, was not a law review article.

[57] Many constitutional scholars will agree with Eastman's constitutional law expert, Dr. Yoo, that there are no Supreme Court cases that directly address whether Congress, the President of the Senate, the United States Supreme Court, or any other entity has authority to resolve a dispute arising over electoral votes – although, as Dr. Yoo noted, in Bush v. Gore the Supreme Court did discuss the Electoral College. (R.T. Vol. XIII, p. 46.) The dearth of judicial and legal authority on this issue has not impeded its vigorous discussion among constitutional scholars who debated it in a handful of law review articles that Eastman read and, for some reason considered not only as solid scholarship but also as precedent supporting the view that the President of the Senate does the counting, including the resolution of disputed electoral votes.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

requirements] and conducted the election in violation of the manner that the legislature had set out." (Id. at p. 4.)

Eastman urged listeners to put pressure on their respective state legislators (especially in Georgia, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Arizona) to demand that they convene a session to "either decertify the existing slate of [Biden] electors if there's just too much uncertainty about the results of the election, or certify the correct slate of electors if the number of ballots that are shifted if you get rid of the illegal ones are enough to effect the outcome, as we believe they are." (Id. at p. 5, italics added.) Eastman proposed that listeners pressure their state legislators because "there was illegal conduct, and that likely opened the door for voter fraud that may have affected the outcome of the election." (R.T. Vol. X, p. 84.)

In discussing the power that the Constitution affords to state legislatures in the electoral process, Eastman stated that state legislators needed to act promptly because "what we have here is massive evidence that this election was at least conducted illegally. In violation of the state statutes. But, lots of evidence, as well, that as a result of that illegal conduct, removing checks against fraud in the absentee ballot process that we have absentee fraud. More than enough to have affected the outcome of the election. And, I think the duty of these legislators to fix this egregious conduct and make sure that we're not putting in the White House some guy that didn't get elected." (Exh. 28, p. 2, italics added.)

Although Eastman stated that illegality opened the door for fraud, Eastman acknowledged at trial that he did not know the extent to which there was any outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election in Arizona, Michigan, Nevada, New

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mexico or Wisconsin. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, pp. 87 [Wisconsin];[58] 88 [Nevada];[59] 90 [Arizona];[60] 93 [New Mexico and Michigan][61].)

---

[58] Eastman initially testified that the report prepared by Justice Gableman regarding the Wisconsin election confirmed the illegality of steps taken by the Secretary of State that "opened the door for fraud," in a manner which affected as many of 200,000 ballots, (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 86.) Eastman then acknowledged that Justice Gableman did not make a determination as to how many ballots were fraudulently cast, and Eastman agreed with Gableman's view that there was more than an outcome-determinative number of ballots cast as a result of illegality even though Eastman could not quantify that number of fraudulent votes:

Q: "What is your view as to whether there was outcome-determinative fraud? Not asking about Justice Gableman.

Eastman: Well, you know, as I've said, I think, a number of times, once the ballots are separated from the envelopes it's hard to determine with proof—dispositive proof how much fraud was. That's why I've focused pretty regularly on the question of illegality. I don't know the extent to which fraud affected the outcome." (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 87, italics added.)

[59] Q: "But I didn't hear you say that you believe there was outcome-determinative fraud in Nevada. Is it fair to stay you don't know whether there was outcome-determinative fraud in Nevada?

Eastman: I don't know the extent of the fraud versus the illegality. I've not looked at that detail—and I said several times now. The illegality is sufficient in my view. To the extent that that actually produced fraudulent votes rather than illegal votes, I don't know, and it's a very hard thing to assess after the fact." (Id. at pp. 88-89.)

[60] Q: "I'm asking if you believe whether there was, in fact, outcome-determinative voter fraud in Arizona in the 2020 presidential election.

Eastman: Well, in Arizona, I had seen evidence—and again, I didn't have any involvement with Arizona, so I don't know the detail of that particularly. But I had seen evidence of a 35,000 vote injection at the third-party processor of votes. That's greater than the margin. If that occurred, that is evidence of fraud greater than the margin.

Q: If that occurred. But do you know whether that occurred or not?

Eastman: I don't." (Id. at p. 90, italics added.)

[61] Q: "What about New Mexico? Do you believe there was outcome-determinative fraud in New Mexico in the 2020 election?

Eastman: I hadn't looked at New Mexico at all." (Id. at p. 93.)

Q: "What about Michigan?

Eastman: I don't know. There's a lot of evidence of—there's a lot of evidence of fraud in Michigan. I've not put together a spreadsheet identifying how many votes in Michigan may have been affected by fraud as opposed to illegality. I just don't know the answer to that." (Ibid.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nevertheless, up to the date of trial, Eastman adhered to his false belief that "lots of evidence" of outcome-determinative fraud existed in the Pennsylvania 2020 presidential election, as he had emphatically stated during the Bannon radio program on January 2, 2021:

> Q: Were you alleging that there had been outcome-determinative absentee voter fraud to suggest that the election results were illegitimate?" [Objection overruled.]
>
> Eastman: I was alleging primarily there was illegal conduct, and that that likely opened the door for voter fraud that may have affected the outcome of the election.
>
> Q: But you didn't say that it may have affected the outcome of the election. You said that there was lots of evidence of fraud, and that there was more than enough to have affected the outcome of the election, right?
>
> Eastman: That's correct.
>
> Q: Okay. And that was your belief at the time, correct?
>
> Eastman: That was my belief at the time.
>
> Q: And is that still your belief?
>
> Eastman: Yes, it is.

(R.T. Vol. X, pp. 84-85.)

He characterized those "illegalities" as including the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's decision, In re November 2, 2020 General Election, which he said allowed removal of signature verification, the use of drop boxes and changing the deadline for mail-in ballots, providing advance notice of disqualified ballots in the pre-canvassing phase to "undermine" the Pennsylvania election law. (R.T. Vol. XXIX, p. 51.) Citing to the Pennsylvania State Representative Ryan's December 4, 2020 letter (the Ryan Report), Eastman contended that 58,200 absentee ballots were returned only one day after the mail date which was "near impossible." (Id. at p. 53; Exh. 1155.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Yet, there was no massive evidence of outcome-determinative fraud related to these alleged "illegalities" or any absentee voter fraud in connection with the Pennsylvania 2020 presidential election. The Ryan Report did not reference or set forth the data that supported its inaccurate claims, some of which seemed to be based on a misunderstanding of the publicly available data.[62] (Id.; R.T. Vol. III, pp. 121-123.)

None of the counties in Pennsylvania opened and counted mail-in or absentee ballots during the pre-canvassing period (before 7:00 a.m. on election day) or disclosed the vote totals prior to 8:00 p.m. on election day, contrary to Pennsylvania election laws.[63] (R.T. Vol. III, pp. 175, 151-153.) As the Pennsylvania Deputy Secretary of Elections and Commissions stated, there was no systemic insecurity or inaccuracy regarding Pennsylvania's 2020 presidential election based on the publicly available information posted by the county elections boards, the two-percent statistical sampling performed by each county three weeks after election day, and the statewide risk-limiting audit performed after the counties had certified their results of the November 2020 presidential election. (Id. at pp. 112-114.)

Moreover, pursuant to the Pennsylvania Election Code, the county boards of election and county district attorneys investigated 2020 presidential election-related complaints and claims of

---

[62] Among other allegations, the Ryan Report calculated 400,000 missing votes, based on an erroneous analysis of the publicly available mail-in ballot data and a discrepancy between the number of ballots issued and the number of ballots received, which seemed to be based on a misunderstanding of Pennsylvania Act 77, enacted in 2019 regarding traditional absentee ballot voting and mail-in voting. (R.T. Vol. III, pp. 121-122.)

[63] As clarified by Pennsylvania's Deputy Secretary of Elections and Commissions, a 20 plus year employee whose duties included overseeing election administration at the Pennsylvania Department of State, the pre-canvassing of absentee and mail-in ballots refers to the handling of ballots "no earlier than 7:00 a.m. on election day, up to 8:00 p.m. on election day, there's canvassing of absentee and mail-in ballots that occurs after 8:00 p.m., and then there's the official canvass, which actually, pursuant to state law, begins on Friday after election day, when the county basically starts to accumulate all of the vote totals and adjudicate provisional ballots, et cetera." (R.T. Vol. III, pp. 146-147.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

fraud and subsequently reported the outcome to the Elections and Commissions office with the Department of State, which learned of "individual cases of fraud prosecuted in various counties, but no indication that there was widespread fraud." (Id. at p. 117.)

January 4, 2021 Oval Office Meeting

On January 4, 2021, an Oval Office meeting at the White House was convened, with Eastman present as President Trump's counsel,[64] alongside President Trump, Greg Jacob, and Vice President Pence's Chief of Staff, Marc Short (the Oval Office meeting). (R.T. Vol. X, p. 86.) The purpose of the Oval Office meeting was to discuss Vice President Pence's role during the electoral count and Joint Session of Congress on January 6, 2021.

Starting from early December 2020, Vice President Pence had maintained the stance that he lacked the authority to reject electors on January 6th. By the time he attended the Oval Office meeting, Vice President Pence had participated in numerous discussions with Jacob, his White House Counsel,[65] reviewed a memo prepared by Jacob which analyzed constitutional and historical authority on the topic; read law review articles; obtained information from the parliamentarian; and sought and obtained the advice of constitutional scholar, Dr. Yoo, on the issue of whether Vice President Pence had the authority to unilaterally delay the electoral count or to disregard and/or reject electoral votes. (R.T. Vol. II, pp. 41-44; exh. 71.) Neither Dr. Yoo, nor any of these other sources, supported the view that Vice President Pence had the authority to delay the electoral count, disregard or reject the electoral votes under the circumstances present in January 2021, as the contested states had each provided a single set of executive-certified slate

---

[64] This Court concludes that Eastman did not attend the Oval Office meeting as a private citizen petitioning for redress of a grievance. The meeting was scheduled at President Trump's request and during the meeting, President Trump asked and Eastman provided legal advice regarding the constitutionality of Vice President Pence rejecting certain elector votes.

[65] At the time, Jacob was serving as Counsel to the Vice President and Deputy Assistant to the President.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of electors and no state legislature had challenged them. Vice President Pence also came to the conclusion that he lacked the authority to preside over the Joint Session of Congress in the manner Eastman and President Trump were pressuring him to because Vice President Pence believed his role as President of the Senate was a ministerial role that did not involve rejecting, delaying or counting electoral votes.

Eastman recalled that during the Oval Office meeting, President Trump asked whether Eastman agreed that Vice President Pence could "simply reject electors if he [Pence] had information that they were not legally certified" and Eastman responded, "[i]t's more nuanced than that" and "it's an open question in these circumstances that, namely, [with] only one set of certified electors—whether you have that power." (R.T. Vol X, p. 86-87.) Eastman suggested that even if Vice President Pence had that power, that he should refrain from exercising it, since the state legislatures had not provided an alternative certified elector slate. (Id. at pp. 86-87.) During the Oval Office meeting, Eastman stated that Vice President Pence "had unilateral authority to determine the validity of the electoral vote certificates" but proposed that Vice President Pence exercise the option to "delay" the electoral count for 10 days, rather than to reject certain electoral votes. (Ibid.) The meeting ended with President Trump requesting, and Vice President Pence agreeing, that Jacob would meet with Eastman again the next day however, Vice President Pence and Jacob thought that President Trump and Eastman were no longer pressuring Vice President Pence to reject electoral votes.

Events of January 5, 2021

On January 5, 2021 at 8:06 am., President Trump tweeted, "The Vice President has the power to reject fraudulently chosen electors." (Exh. 297.)

That same day, Jacob sent Vice President Pence a memo Jacob had prepared which outlined and analyzed some of Eastman's January 6 proposals that had been discussed during the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

January 4 Oval Office meeting (Jacob's Jan. 5 Memo). (Exh. 71; R.T. Vol. II, p. 80.) In the memo, Jacob characterized Eastman's proposals as requiring Vice President Pence to "skip opening and reading the electoral certificates for any state for which an alternate but uncertified slate of electors has been submitted"; open and read the Arizona, Georgia, New Mexico, Nevada and Pennsylvania electoral certificates at the end of the Joint Session rather than reading the certificates for those states in alphabetical order; and to refrain from counting the electoral certificates for these states until their state legislature determines whether to certify a competing slate of electors. (Exh. 71, p. 1.) Jacob outlined how each proposed step violated the Electoral Count Act and was also in conflict with Wisconsin Voters Alliance, a Washington D. C. district court decision filed the day before. Jacob noted that Wisconsin Voters Alliance held that "'[p]laintiffs' theory that [the Electoral Count Act is] unconstitutional and that the Court should instead require state legislatures themselves to certify every Presidential election lies somewhere between a willful misreading of the Constitution and fantasy.'"[66] (Id. at p. 3.)

Meeting Between Eastman, Jacob, and Short

Later that day, Jacob and Short met with Eastman in Short's office between 11:00 and 11:30 a.m. (January 5 meeting). However, Eastman's "ask" during the January 5 meeting differed from his "ask" at the end of the day before. Initially, during the January 5 meeting, Eastman asked that Vice President Pence reject the electoral votes from Arizona, Georgia, Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania and, possibly Nevada and New Mexico as well.[67] That [66] The court notes that the District Court's denial of preliminary injunction was also based on plaintiffs' failure to demonstrate standing, personal jurisdiction, or service on defendant Vice President Pence. In sum, plaintiffs did not establish a likelihood of success on the merits. (See Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al. v. Pence et al. (2021) 514 F.Supp. 3d 117, 120-122). The notice of errata filed by OCTC on December 26, 2023 and Eastman's December 28 response, addressed the District Court's January 4, 2021 decision in Wisconsin Voters Alliance.

---

[67] Eastman contends that during the January 5 meeting, he did not propose that Vice President Pence should reject the elector slates from the contested slates. However, that is not request precipitated a robust, almost 2 hour discussion regarding historical precedent, the fact that no vice president in the entire history of the country ever actually exercised authority to reject electoral vote certificates and, how courts would likely deny Eastman's rejection theory. (R.T. Vol. X, pp. 57-58.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

During the January 5 meeting, Jacob and Eastman discussed a number of law review articles regarding the authority of a vice president, including a 2004 law review article entitled "Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency" by Bruce Ackerman and David Fontana which addressed actions taken by Vice Presidents John Adams in connection with the election of 1796;[68] and Thomas Jefferson in connection with the election of 1800.[69] Eastman agreed with credible as during the January 5 meeting Jacob made handwritten notes, indicating "John Eastman meeting 1/5/21… Requesting VP reject…" (Exh. 65.) Moreover, certain January 6 emails (4:29 p.m. by Jacob) and Eastman (6:09 p.m.) acknowledge that elector rejection the "most aggressive position (the elector rejection option) had been raised and not "retreated to" until the night of January 5. Therefore, this court finds Jacob's testimony credible that Eastman did initially, during the January 5 meeting, request that Vice President Pence reject electoral votes from the contested states rather than delay the counting until it became apparent that Eastman's rejection request didn't gain traction with Jacob; then Eastman changed his request to a delay of the electoral count. (R.T. Vol. X, pp.77-78.)

---

[68] The election of 1796 was the first contested presidential election in the United States. The leading candidates were John Adams (the sitting Vice President) and Thomas Jefferson. Adams presided over the electoral count on February 8, 1797. Vermont was a pivotal state in the 1796 election and although contemporaneous sources rumored that Vermont's electors were appointed in violation of state law, the Annals of Congress reflect that Adams handed the certificate with the four Vermont votes cast for Adams to the teller for counting, and, hearing no objection, Adams sat down for a moment and then stood up and announced that in obedience to the commands of Congress and pursuant to the joint resolutions—John Adams was elected President of the United States. (Exhs. 179, pp. 32-35; 1358, pp. 72-73.)

However, as Dr. Yoo pointed out, the Vermont electoral votes were the only votes certified by Vermont and for that reason, Vice President Adams may have thought he was required to count them and that he had no authority to look past the certification he had received in order to identify possible irregularities. (Exh. 1358, p. 74.)

[69] The electoral count for the 1800 presidential election was held on February 11, 1801 and lasted almost a week. The leading presidential candidates were President John Adams who was seeking re-election and Thomas Jefferson. There were technical deficiencies in Georgia's certificate for four electors which could have supported rejection and that potentially could have been outcome determinative, even though the deficiencies did not affect the validity of the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jacob that the actions taken by Jefferson, basically ignoring defects in Georgia's certificate, crediting Georgia with its three electoral votes and proceeding with the electoral count, did not give rise to a rejection of electors or represent an incident where a vice president asserted any authority involving a substantive determination about an electoral certificate. (R.T. Vol. II, p. 63-65.) After further discussion about the 1796 incident involving Adams, Eastman agreed that neither the Adams nor Jefferson examples reflected that either vice president had rejected electoral vote certificates, claimed any authority to do so or claimed they had authority to make any substantive decisions about electoral vote certificates. (Id. at pp. 65-67.) Jacob concluded that neither Congress nor a vice president has authority to reject electors and, as Vice President Pence stated all along and articulated clearly in his Dear Colleague letter the next day, Vice President Pence had reached the same conclusion.

Jacob and Eastman had a further discussion about whether the United States Supreme Court would agree with Eastman's view that a vice president could reject electoral votes and they subsequently agreed that although there may be one or two dissenting opinions, a majority of the justices would likely vote against it. (Id. p. 70.)

Eastman and Jacob ultimately agreed that during the 130 years that the Electoral Count Act had been in effect, there was never a departure from its procedures, not even when Nixon, as President of the Senate on January 6, 1961, announced that with no objections, the third slate, which was the last slate certified and ascertained by the Governor of Hawaii, was the operative slate of electors for Hawaii. (Id. at p. 61.)

---

appointment of the electors. Yet, the Georgia votes were counted and neither the Annals of Congress, the House Journal nor the Senate Journal reflect any dispute, resolution of a dispute by the President of the Senate or others during or after the electoral count. Although Eastman contends that Jefferson exercised unilateral authority to resolve a Georgia electoral vote dispute, the historical records do not support that contention. (Exh. 179, pp. 37-42; see also exh. 1358, pp. 75-77.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Following that hearty discussion during the January 5 meeting, Eastman requested that Vice President Pence delay rather than reject the contested state electors, based in part, on requests made for a delay by some individual state legislators. (Id. at pp. 72-73.) However, as Jacob noted, "[t]here was no dual slates of electors where there was an imprimatur of state authority that would cause them to have legal status under the Electoral Count Act that would trigger its procedures," no state legislature had sought a delay of the electoral count and no state legislative majorities indicated an intent to do so. (Id. at p. 76; exh. 71, p. 3.)

Eastman's Discussions with Trump and Jacob After the Jan. 5th Meeting

After Eastman met with Jacob and Short in Short's office, Jacob and Eastman had two more phone calls that day – the first of which took place at 5:00 or 5:30 p.m. and included President Trump, Eastman, and another attorney. During that call, they acknowledged that Vice President Pence was not going to agree to reject electors so they asked whether Vice President Pence "would reconsider the possibility of the procedural option of sending it back to the states" – in other words, to opt for an adjournment, recess, or delay for some period of time. (R.T. Vol. II, p. 169.)

The second phone call Jacob had with Eastman on the evening of January 5th involved a renewed discussion about a delay for further consideration by the state legislatures and that while some individual Republican state legislators forwarded letters seeking a delay of the electoral count, numerous state legislature leaders stated they had no interest in taking further action and that "no legislative body in any of the states where a majority of that body had indicated that that they were interested in revisiting the question of who had won that state in the [2020 presidential] election." (R.T. Vol. II, pp. 74, 169-170.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Neither the January 5 meeting nor the subsequent two phone calls caused Jacob or Vice President Pence to alter their position that as President of the Senate, Vice President Pence did not have authority to reject electoral votes, to recess or delay the electoral count.

Eastman emailed Jacob at 9:32 p.m. that night, stating: "This is huge, as it looks like PA legislature will vote to recertify its electors if Vice President Pence implements the plan we discussed. Give me a call once you've had your sit-down with the VP and let me know where we stand." (Exh. 66, p. 2) Jacob and Vice President Pence were not swayed.

According to the White House Presidential Call Log, Eastman and President Trump spoke from 9:54 p.m. to about 9:58 p.m. on January 5. (Exh. 386, p. 3) Two minutes later, at 10:00 p.m., President Trump tweeted "If Vice President@Mike Pence comes through for us, we will win the Presidency. Many States want to decertify the mistake they made in certifying incorrect & fraudulent numbers in a process NOT approved by their State Legislatures (which it must be). Mike can send it back!" (Exh. 298.) Eastman knew that contrary to the statements he made in his email about Pennsylvania, no state legislature was going to certify a Trump slate of electors.

The White House Presidential Call Log further reflects that from 11:23 to 11:37 p.m. and then from 11:39-11:50 p.m., President Trump spoke with Giuliani. (Exh. 386, p. 5.)

Eastman's Discussions with Russell Ramsland and Joe Oltmann

Also on January 5, 2021, Eastman had conversations with a few people among the Willard Hotel Save America rally organizers whom he believed had varying levels of technical expertise and who had been involved with analyses of the systems, among them Russell Ramsland and Joe Oltmann. Eastman met Ramsland and Oltmann for the first time the evening of January 5, 2020. (Id. at pp. 52-5.) During a reception, they discussed a single page chart compiled by Ramsland and Oltmann (Ramsland/Oltmann diagram). (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 93-94; see also exh. 1217.) The Ramsland/Oltmann diagram was a flow chart suggesting that phantom and fake ballots[70] were introduced into the voted stream of ballots at multiple points by manipulating Dominion voting machine vulnerabilities. (Id.; R. T. Vol. XI, pp. 91-92.)[71]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman had never heard of Oltman, and he did not conduct any background Internet or other research regarding either Ramsland or Oltman.[72] (Id. at pp. 55, 99.) As a matter of fact, Eastman did not recall inquiring about Oltmann's credentials, e.g., educational or professional background or professional experience, that would qualify Oltmann to competently render the analysis of the Dominion voting machine vulnerabilities set forth in the Oltmann diagram. (Id. at pp. 88-89, 96.) Eastman did not recall Oltmann providing any support for the purported Dominion machine vulnerabilities or quantifying the number of pre-loaded ballots/suspense folder ballots that were allegedly counted due to Dominion machine vulnerabilities.

Eastman did recall, however, that none of the individuals with whom he discussed this issue provided any documentation, research or data regarding the credibility of the alleged Dominion machine vulnerabilities set forth in the Ramsland/Oltmann diagram. And Eastman did not make any effort to obtain information from Dominion regarding the Ramsland claims about the Dominion voting machines. (Id. at p. 59.)

Nevertheless, Eastman found the Ramsland/Oltmann diagram to be credible because some unnamed individuals who he believed had technical expertise, told him that there were

---

[70] Eastman was told that phantom ballots were ballot images copied/replicated within the system and fake ballots were ballots pre-loaded into the system. Both phantom and fake ballots would have occurred after the initial processing of verified paper ballots. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 91-92.)

[71] A credible study of Dominion voting machines concluded that there was no evidence to suggest that Biden exceeded voting expectations in counties where these machines were utilized. (Exh. 174, p. 4.)

[72] Eastman did recall learning that Ramsland was consulted by Texas at some point when it was trying to determine which voting machines to purchase.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

vulnerabilities in the system and, because he believed he saw the diagram predictions play out as he was watched the Georgia Senate runoff election returns on January 5, 2021.[73] (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 95-96.) The Ramsland/Oltmann prediction was that as a share of the counted votes would no longer increase, the estimated vote total would continue to increase. However, on January 5, 2021, the Ramsland/Oltmann prediction did not occur.[74] (Id. at pp. 255-256, 259-260.)

Events of January 6, 2021

Trump's Early Morning Tweet

At 8:17 a.m., President Trump tweeted that "States want to correct their votes . . . . All Mike Pence has to do is send them back to the States, AND WE WIN. Do it Mike, this is a time for extreme courage." (Exh. 299, p. 1.)

Vice President Pence's January 6, 2021 Letter

On January 6, 2021, shortly before the Joint Session of Congress, Vice President Pence forwarded a public letter to Congress (Dear Colleague Letter), which stated in pertinent part: [73] Specifically, Eastman believes he saw the number of votes cast (the denominator in the vote total estimates) change unexpectedly and then the counting or the reporting of the counting of ballots shutting down for an hour or two. (R.T. Vol. XI, p. 98.) When Eastman observed this phenomenon during the Georgia Senate race, he believed that as the reported vote totals reached 100%, that number would not change but more ballots were reported because pre-loaded ballots were being withdrawn from the suspense folders in the Dominion machines and were added into the vote tally. (Resp's closing brief – incorrectly cited p. 31.) Eastman was mistaken.

---

By October 2021, Eastman came to understand that the Associated Press characterized the fractional number to which Eastman referred, was actually an estimate which the Associated Press adjusted as they learned more during vote tabulation. (Id. at p. 101.) However, even after learning of that explanation, Eastman still believed the results were disputed, indicative of fraud and warranted further review since he was told by statistician Eric Quinnell that it was unlikely that the Associated Press estimate was so far off the actual figure.

[74] "The estimated vote count is just that, an estimate. It's going to change over the course of the evening. And there's no literature that indicates that movement in the estimated vote count from media companies like Edison is an indication that fraud of any kind or illegality of any kind is happening, let alone that there's machine manipulation occurring." (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 260.) Moreover, a gap in the reporting of votes did not mean that the counting of votes stopped. (Id. at p. 261.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Dear Colleague:
>
> Today, for the 59th time in our Nation's history, Congress will convene in Joint Session to count the electoral votes for President of the United States. Under our Constitution, it will be my duty as Vice President and as President of the Senate to serve as the presiding officer.
>
> After an election with significant allegations of voting irregularities and numerous instances of officials setting aside state election law, I share the concerns of millions of Americans about the integrity of this election. . . . [¶]
>
> During the 130 years since the Electoral Count Act was passed, Congress has, without exception, used these formal procedures to count the electoral votes every four years. . . .
>
> Some believe that as Vice President, I should be able to accept or reject electoral votes unilaterally. Others believe that electoral votes should never be challenged in a Joint Session of Congress.
>
> After a careful study of our Constitution, our laws, and our history, I believe neither view is correct. [¶]. . . [¶]
>
> [I]t is my considered judgment that my oath to support and defend the Constitution constrains me from claiming unilateral authority to determine which electoral votes should be counted and which should not.

(Exh. 64, pp. 2-3, italics added.)[75]

Eastman's Speech at the Ellipse

On January 6, 2021, Eastman spoke to a crowd on the National Mall Ellipse at a televised "Save America" rally, better known as the "Stop the Steal" rally. Eastman estimated that there were between 250,000 and 500,000 people in attendance. (Eastman's Answer, pp. 38-39.) During the rally, speakers and attendees protested the results of the 2020 presidential election, which most of them characterized as having been stolen from President Trump.

---

[75] Jacob did not believe that these allegations of voting irregularities or election law officials setting aside state election law gave Vice President Pence authority to unilaterally reject any electors. (R.T. Vol. II, p. 84.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Before he spoke, Eastman was introduced to the crowd by Rudy Giuliani, one of President Trump's lawyers, who stated, "I have Professor Eastman here with me to say a few words about that [everything outlined for the day being perfectly legal]. He's one of the preeminent constitutional scholars in the United States. . . ." (Exh. 30, p.1.) Giuliani contended that given the "questionable constitutionality" of the Electoral Count Act of 1887 (ECA), Vice President Pence could "cast it aside" and "can send it" back to the legislatures to give them five to ten days to find proof that the 2020 election was stolen—"over the next 10 days, we get to see the machines that are crooked. The ballots that were fraudulent." (Ibid.) Giuliani stated "let's have trial by combat," noting that Giuliani was willing to stake his reputation and "the President is willing to stake his reputation on the fact we're gonna find criminality there." (Ibid.) Giuliani went on to rail about his proof that the 2020 presidential election had been stolen;[76] "last night, one of the experts that has examined these crooked Dominion machines has absolutely what he believes is conclusive proof that in the 10%, 15% of the vote counted, the votes were deliberately changed by the same algorithm that was used in cheating President Trump and Vice President Pence. . . . You noticed they were ahead until the very end, right?" (Id. at p. 2.) Giuliani then asked Eastman to explain how "they" cheated in the January 5, 2021 Georgia Senate run-off and the November 3, 2020 [presidential] elections.

Eastman picked-up where Giuliani left off, alleging illegalities, election fraud, fraud involving Dominion voting machines[77] and demanding that Vice President Pence unilaterally delay the 1:00 p.m. electoral count to allow state legislatures to investigate these issues:

> Look, we've got petitions pending before the Supreme Court that identify it, chapter and verse, the number of times state election

---

[76] According to Giuliani, the 2020 presidential election had been stolen in seven states with "crooked Democratic cities where they could push everybody around." (Id. at p. 2.)

[77] Eastman's comments regarding the purported vulnerabilities of the Dominion voting machines were based in large part on his discussions with Ramsland and Oltmann.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> officials ignored or violated the state law in order to put Vice President Biden over the finish line. We know there was fraud. Traditional fraud that occurred. We know that dead people voted. But, we now know because we caught it live last time in real time how the machines contributed to that fraud.
>
> And, let me, as simply as I can, explain it. . . . They put those ballots in a secret folder in the machines. Sitting there waiting until they know how many they need. And then, the machine, after the close of polls, we now know whose [sic] voted and we know who hasn't. And, I can now, in that machine, match those unvoted ballots with an unvoted voter and put them together in the machine.
>
> And, how do we know that happened last night [January 5, 2021] in real time? You saw when it got to 99% of the vote total, and then it stopped. The percentage stopped, but the votes didn't stop. What happened, and you don't see this on Fox or any of the other stations, but the data shows that the denominator, how many ballots remain to be counted. How else do you figure out the percentage that you have? How many remain to be counted? That number started moving up. That means they were unloading the ballots from that secret folder, matching them to the unvoted voter, and voila. We have enough votes to barely get over the finish line.
>
> We saw it happen in real time last night, and it happened on November 3rd, as well. And, all we are demanding of Vice President Pence is this afternoon at 1:00, he let the legislators of the state look into this so we get to the bottom of it, and the American people know whether we have control of the direction of our government or not. We no longer live in a self-governing Republic if we can't get the answer to this question.
>
> This is bigger than President Trump. It is the very essence of our Republican form of government, and it has to be done. And, anybody that is not willing to stand up to do it does not deserve to be in the office. It is that simple.

(Exh. 30, pp. 2-3, italics added.)

Eastman knew that any votes cast in the name of a deceased person were not outcome-determinative in any state. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 49-50.) Eastman knew that his statements made during his January 6th speech on the Ellipse implied that there was fraud related to electronic voting. (R.T. Vol. XXXI, p. 84 ["Q: And you don't believe that your statements on January 6th at the Ellipse implied that there had been fraud related to electronic voting? A: It's quite possible it implied that"].) Eastman gave no consideration to the effect that his statements would have on the crowd. (Id. at p.85 [Q: Did you give any consideration to the effect that your statements would have on the crowd? A: I did not. I think I've testified earlier I was asked at the last minute to speak, and I spoke a lot less than three minutes"].)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman made the damning statements at the Ellipse regarding purported Dominion voting machine vulnerabilities even though he had not seen conclusive proof that Dominion voting machines were used to fraudulently flip votes in the 2020 presidential election. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 33-34.)

Significantly, about two months before Eastman made the damning Dominion voting machine vulnerabilities remarks on the Ellipse, Eastman had become aware that the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) stated on November 12, 2020, "[t]he November 3rd election was the most secure in American history," notwithstanding the "many unfounded claims and opportunities for misinformation about the process of our elections." (Exh. 201.) CISA further stated "[w]e can assure you we have the utmost confidence in the security and integrity of our elections and you should, too. When you have questions, turn to the elections officials as trusted voices, as they administer elections." (Ibid.) Eastman found the CISA statement to be "rather implausible" and did not reach out to any election officials regarding the Dominion voting machines or the reliability of the election in their state. (R.T. Vol. X, pp. 121-124.) Eastman was also aware of the Election Infrastructure Government Coordinating Council and the Election Infrastructure Sector Coordinating Executive Committees, bipartisan groups which prepared a November 16, 2020 statement by 59 computer scientists and election security experts[78] which stated there was no credible evidence that supports claims that the 2020 election outcome in any state was altered through technical compromise.[79] (Exh. 187.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

President Trump's Speech at the Ellipse

President Trump was the last speaker during the Stop The Steal rally. He complimented Giuliani[80] and thanked Eastman for a fantastic job, commenting that Eastman "is one of the most brilliant lawyers in the country and he looked at this and he said, what an absolute disgrace that this could be happening to our Constitution." (Exh. 322, p. 3.) Stating that "[w]e will never give up. We will never concede", President Trump for almost an hour railed about illegalities, election fraud in the contested states, "overwhelming evidence about a fake election", how he had won the 2020 presidential election by a "landslide" and numerous other false election denier troupes. (Id. at p. 2.) During his speech, President Trump repeatedly pressured Vice President Pence to act unilaterally to reject the electoral votes by sending them back to the states to re-certify their votes.[81]

---

[78] Notably, Eastman found credible the work of J. Alex Halderman, who Eastman mistakenly claims supported Eastman's views on election irregularities (particularly with regard to the election in Antrim County, Michigan), and who was one of the computer scientists and election security experts who signed the November 16, 2020 statement. (Exhs. 206, p. 3; 187.) (See also discussion infra, re Antrim County and Halderman's forensic conclusions re its election.) Halderman commented that Ramsland's report on Antrim County "contain[ed] an extraordinary number of false, inaccurate or unsubstantiated statements and conclusions, the most serious of which I refute below." (Exh. 1062, p. 40; see also R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 56-58.)

[79] On January 11, 2021, Eastman sent an email to Giuliani, requesting to be included on President Trump's pardon list. This request stemmed from Eastman's apprehension that some individuals perceived his remarks at the Ellipse during the Save America rally as potentially influencing the events of the January 6 riots at the Capitol. (Exh. 62; R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 106-107.)

[80] "And Rudy, you did a great job. He's got guts." (Exh. 322, p. 3.)

[81] "And he [Eastman] looked at Mike Pence, and I hope Mike is going to do the right thing. I hope so. I hope so, because if Mike Pence does the right thing, we win the election. All he has to do, all—this is—this is from the number one or certainly one of the top Constitutional

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump encouraged his supporters to march down Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol and concluded by urging them to "fight like hell" to save the country. (Id.)

After the speeches at the Ellipse, at 2:24 p.m., President Trump tweeted that "Mike Pence didn't have the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution, giving States a chance to certify a corrected set of facts, not the fraudulent or inaccurate ones which they were asked to previously certify. USA demands the truth!" (Exh. 300.)

Assault On The Capitol

Toward the end of the Stop The Steal rally on the Ellipse, some members of the crowd, protestors, rioters, and members of militia groups marched to the Capitol and began to riot around 2:00 p.m. EST; overwhelming the 800 deployed Metropolitan police, attacking the Capitol police, breaching the Capitol, breaking windows, entering and damaging Capitol offices and the chambers of Congress. Vice President Pence, members of Congress and their staff had to be evacuated to other locations for their safety. (R.T. Vol. II, pp. 86-89; exh. 165, pp. 31-33.)

---

lawyers [Eastman] in our country. He [Pence] has the absolute right to do it. . . . States want to revote." (Exh. 322, p. 3)

"The states got defrauded…. Now they want to recertify. They want it back. All Vice President Pence has to do is send it back to the states to recertify, and we become president. . . . I just spoke to Mike. I said, Mike, that doesn't take courage. What takes courage is to do nothing. That takes courage, and then we're stuck with a president who lost the election by a lot. . . . We're just not going to let that happen." (Ibid.)

"And Mike Pence is going to have to come through for us, and if he doesn't, that will be a sad day for our country, because you're sworn to uphold our Constitution. Now it is up to Congress to confront this egregious assault on our democracy, and after this, we're going to walk down, and I'll be there with you." (Id. at p. 6.)

"And they want to recertify their votes. They want to recertify, but the only way that can happen is if Mike Pence agrees to send it back. Mike Pence has to agree to send it back." (Id. at p. 14.) [The crowd chanting, "Send it back!"] (Id. at p. 14.).

"And Mike Pence, I hope you're going to stand up for the good of our Constitution and for the good of our country, and if you're not, I'm going to be very disappointed in you, I will tell you right now." (Id. at p. 18.)

"When you catch somebody in a fraud, you're allowed to go by very different rules. So, I hope Mike has the courage to do what he has to do." (Id. at p. 22.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The violence and turmoil at the Capitol resulted in a cessation of the electoral count, which had started when the Joint Session of Congress convened at 1:00 p.m. Congress eventually reconvened and began to continue with the electoral count around 8:30 p.m. Eastern time.

Communications Between Jacob and Eastman

During the morning of January 6th and the violent attack on the Capitol, Jacob and Eastman continued to argue regarding the scope of Vice President Pence's unilateral authority as raised in the six-page memo, during the meetings and calls with President Trump and others. At 10:44 a.m., Jacob responded to Eastman's January 5th email sent at 9:32 p.m. by inquiring whether Eastman's proposal was constitutional in light of the ECA constitutional imperative regarding the process for addressing objections. (Exh. 66, p. 1.) Eastman's 1:33 p.m. email was dismissive: "I'm sorry Greg, but this is small-minded. You're sticking with minor procedural statutes while the Constitution is being shredded." (Ibid.)

Jacob retorted by pointing out that he did not believe a single Justice on the United States Supreme Court of a Courts of Appeal would be as "broad minded" as Eastman "when it comes to the irrelevance of statutes enacted by the United States Congress, and followed without exception for more than 130 years. They cannot be set aside except when in direct conflict with the Constitution . . . . I want election integrity fixed. But I have run down every legal trail placed before me to its conclusion, and I respectfully conclude that as a legal framework, it is a results oriented position that you would never support if attempted by the opposition and essentially entirely made up. And, thanks to your bullshit, we are now under siege." (Exh. 66, p. 1.)

A few minutes later Eastman pushed back—"My 'bullshit' ---seriously? You think you can't adjourn the session because the ECA says no adjournment, while the compelling evidence that the election was stolen continues to build and is already overwhelming. The 'siege' is because YOU and your boss did not do what was necessary to allow this to be aired in a public way so the American people can see for themselves what happened." (Exh. 67, p. 1.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jacob's 1:05 p.m. email was pointedly but accurately critical of Eastman and his advice to President Trump:

> Respectfully, it was gravely, gravely irresponsible for you to entice the President with an academic theory that had no legal viability, and that you well know we would lose before any judge who heard and decided the case. And if the courts decline to hear it, I suppose it could only be decided in the streets. The knowing amplification of that theory through numerous surrogates, whipping large numbers of people into a frenzy over something with no chance of ever attaining legal force through actual process of law, has led us to where we are.
> I do not begrudge academics debating the most far-flung theories. I love doing it myself, and I view the ferment of ideas as a good and helpful thing. But advising the President of the United States, in an incredibly constitutionally fraught moment, requires a seriousness of purpose, an understanding of the difference between abstract theory and legal reality, and an appreciation of the power of both the office and the bully pulpit that, in my judgment, was entirely absent here.

(Exh. 69, pp. 2-3.)

Between 4:29 p.m. and 4:45 p.m., Eastman and Jacob exchanged emails regarding the nature of the advice that Eastman gave to President Trump; specifically, whether Eastman had advised President Trump that "Vice President Pence 'DOES NOT have the power to decide things unilaterally? Because that was pushed publicly, repeatedly, by the President and by his surrogates this week. And without apparent legal correction." (Exh. 68, emphasis in original.) Eastman confirmed that he had given Trump that advice when Jacob was on the phone presumably, the evening of January 5th. (Ibid.)

Eastman emailed Jacob again at 6:09 p.m., advocating for an adjournment and criticizing Vice President Pence's Dear Colleague statement regarding his unilateral authority to accept or reject electoral votes as "the most aggressive position that was discussed and rejected." (Exhs.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

68, p. 1; 69, p. 2.) Eastman noted that "we had given a much more limited option, merely to adjourn to allow state legislatures to continue their work. I remain of the view not only would that have been the most prudent course as it would have allowed for the opportunity for this thing to be heard out, but also had a fair chance of being approved (or at least not enjoined) by the Courts. Alas." (Id. at p. 2, italics added.)

At 9:44 p.m., after the electoral count had resumed, Eastman again emailed Jacob, stating that the ECA had been violated that evening by both the Senate and House by debating the Arizona objections longer than the 3 U.S.C. §17 period of two hours and Vice President Pence had allowed debate after the question had been voted upon. Relentlessly, Eastman stated that with these purported ECA violations, "I implore you to consider one more relatively minor violation and adjourn for 10 days to allow the legislatures to finish their investigations, as well as to allow a full forensic audit of the massive amount of illegal activity that has occurred here." (Id.)

The American Mind Article

On January 18, 2021, the American Mind, an online publication of the Claremont Institute, published an article written by Eastman regarding the November 3, 2020, presidential election, entitled "Setting the Record Straight on the POTUS 'Ask'." Eastman wrote this article to dispute statements made by Vice President Pence in his January 6 "Dear Colleague" letter regarding President Trump's requests that Vice President Pence exercise unilateral authority to accept, reject, dispute, count and/or not count certain electoral votes during the Joint Session of Congress. Eastman contended that "when all was said and done" President Trump had not asked Vice President Pence to take these actions regarding the electoral count. (Exh. 31, p. 2.) Rather, according to Eastman, Vice President Pence was asked by both President Trump and by Eastman to merely "pause" the proceedings long enough to give the few states whose legislators had asked for more time to assess whether there was illegal conduct by their state election officials sufficient to warrant revoking the certified election results. (Id. at p. 7.) However, this Court notes, that the 10-day "pause" Eastman sought from Vice President Pence would, in and of itself, violate the Electoral Count Act and the evening of January 6, and Eastman himself acknowledged that fact.[82] (Exh. 69, p. 2.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the January 18, 2021 American Mind article, Eastman set forth a brief constitutional analysis of a hypothetical scenario, 3 U.S.C. §15 of the Electoral Act, the 12th Amendment and the vice president's role vis-a-vis Congress in the opening and counting of electoral votes, as analyzed by certain constitutional scholars. Amazingly, and contrary to statements made in his two-page and six-page memos and all of his post mid-October 2020 public statements, Eastman concluded "[a]ll this by way of background to show that whether or not Vice President Pence had the constitutional authority to determine that certain slates of electors were invalid remains an open question." (Exh. 31 p. 6, italics added.)

In the January 18, 2021 American Mind article Eastman further proclaimed:

> A large portion of the American citizenry believes the illegal actions by partisan election officials in a few states have thrown the election. They saw it with their own eyes—in Fulton County, Georgia, where suitcases of ballots were pulled from under the table after election observers had been sent home for the night; in parts of Wayne County (Detroit), Michigan, where there are more absentee votes cast than had been requested; . . . in Antrim County, Michigan, where votes were electronically flipped from Trump to Biden.

(Exh. 31, pp. 9-10.) These statements were false.

---

[82] After claiming that the Senate, the House, and Vice President Pence had violated the Electoral Count Act during the night of January 6 by extending the debate after Congress resumed its session following the assault on the Capitol, Eastman emailed Jacob: "I implore you to consider one more relatively minor violation and adjourn for 10 days to allow the legislatures to finish their investigations. . . ." (Exh. 69, p. 2.) This would have been a violation of the ECA that would have been unprecedented in American history.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

According to Jonathan Brater, Director of the Michigan Bureau of Elections,[83] the voter turnout in Detroit for the 2020 presidential election was about 4 percent higher in 2020 than it was in 2016 but, it was still less than the overall voter turnout which was about 15 percent higher. (R.T., Vol. VI, p. 169.)

As discussed previously, Eastman and others erroneously stated that the Michigan Secretary of State mailed absentee ballots to all registered voters. Moreover, absentee ballot applications were widely available in Michigan and could even be downloaded from the Michigan Department of State website. (Id. at p. 180.) In fact, according to Michigan Secretary of State Benson, over 174,000 absentee ballots were cast in Detroit in the 2020 presidential election. (Exh. 112, p. 20.) However, the Wayne County Absentee Voting Counting Boards displayed the data on a spreadsheet that reflected that there were no absentee ballots; and the City of Detroit reported a tally of zero absentee ballots, creating the impression that 100 percent of the absentee ballots cast were illegally or fraudulently cast. (R.T. Vol. XXXII, pp. 69-71.)

Although Eastman stated in the American Mind article that in parts of Wayne County, Michigan, more absentee votes were cast than had been requested, at trial Eastman stated he was unsure about the origin of this "information." Furthermore, because he was unable to retrace the information, he did not know if it was true. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 110-111.)

Secretary of State Benson congratulated the 1,600 local and county election officials who helped with Michigan's 2020 presidential election record-breaking turnout of 5.5 million voters. From October 2020 through mid-January 2021, Secretary of State Benson and her staff [83] Mr. Brater supervised the Bureau of Elections which supports Michigan's chief election official, the Secretary of State, in administrating Michigan's election laws and supervising election city and local clerks.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

publicized numerous and ongoing statements regarding various election-related issues surrounding the 2020 presidential election in Michigan.[84]

In an effort to be transparent, Secretary Benson's November 11, 2020 press release acknowledged that there had been an "erroneous reporting of unofficial results from Antrim County [which] was a result of accidental error on the part of the Antrim County Clerk. The equipment and software did not malfunction, and all ballots were properly tabulated. However, the clerk accidently failed to update the software used to collect voting machine data and report unofficial results." (Exh. 100, p. 1, italics added.) Secretary Benson explained that "even though the tabulators counted all the ballots correctly, those accurate results were not combined properly when the clerk reported unofficial results" and "this was an honest mistake and did not affect any actual vote totals." (Ibid.)

In a December 17, 2020 press release, Secretary Benson stated that Michigan had conducted a full hand count audit of Antrim County 2020 presidential electoral votes and found that the Dominion vote tabulation machines accurately calculated the final votes: 9,759 for Trump and 5,959 for Biden. (Exhs. 109, 110.) According to the audit, the net difference between the hand-tallied audited votes and the Dominion tabulated votes was 12 votes—12 votes out of 15,718 total votes.

Eastman learned by November or December 2020, that Michigan state officials had analyzed the Antrim County software issue and determined that it was human error. (R.T. Vol. X, pp. 112-113.)[85] Nonetheless, Eastman stated in the American Mind article in mid-January 2021, that during the 2020 presidential election, Antrim County, Michigan votes for [84] See exhs. 100-112.

---

[85] Eastman incorrectly commented that expert Alex Halderman's March 26, 2021 Analysis of the Antrim County, Michigan report supported his statement lacks merit, given the publication date of the report. (Id. at pp. 112-115.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump had been electronically flipped to Biden. At trial, Eastman shied away from stating that any of those "electronically flipped" unofficial votes had been improperly counted for Biden. (R.T. Vol. XI, pp. 111-112.) But, Eastman affirmed his belief that his statement was true, noting that "experts" on both sides confirmed the statement[86] but there was a dispute as to whether this happened due to machine software. Eastman equivocated by stating that in the article he did not mean that Antrim County votes had been counted for Biden, but rather that he "was simply

---

[86] Eastman commented that the report prepared by one of the experts, Alex Halderman, supported his statement. But, as Halderman's report, Analysis of the Antrim County, Michigan November 2020 Election Incident, predated Eastman's January 18, 2021 American Mind article by about two months, Eastman was incorrect. (See exh. 1062.) Moreover, Halderman summarized his findings as follows: "the Antrim County incident was not caused by a security breach. There is also no credible evidence that it was caused deliberately. . . . The major discrepancies in Antrim's results have been fully corrected. The final results match the poll tapes printed by the individual ballot scanners, and there is no evidence that the poll tapes are inaccurate, except for in specific precincts where particular circumstances I explain affected small numbers of votes, mainly in down-ballot races. . . . In Antrim, several layers of protections that were supposed to ensure accuracy broke down due to human errors on multiple levels…." (Exh. 1062, pp. 3-4, italics added.)

The other "expert" who prepared a declaration that addressed the use of the Dominion voting machines in Michigan was Russell Ramsland—one of the two individuals that Eastman collaborated with the evening of January 5 when Eastman, Ramsland and Oltmann fabricated the Dominion allegations (and Oltmann provided the one page diagram) that Eastman based some of Dominion-related remarks the next day at the Ellipse. Ramsland clearly lacked any election-related expertise and his declaration filed in the King v. Whitmer lawsuit erroneously stated that in two counties in Michigan, the Dominion machines were not functioning properly. Ramsland's analysis was actually based on election results from Minnesota, not Michigan and the Michigan counties that he referenced did not even utilize Dominion voting machines in the 2020 presidential election. (See R.T. Vol. VI, pp. 162-165.)

As to Antrim County, Ramsland prepared the "Antrim Michigan Forensics Report" (exh. 1047), which concluded that the Antrim County results should not have been certified and "that the Dominion Voting System is intentionally and purposefully designed with inherent errors to create systemic fraud and influence election results. The system intentionally generates an enormously high number of ballot errors. The electronic ballot errors are then transferred for adjudication" with no oversight, no transparency and no audit trail. (Id. at p. 1.) Ramsland's claims were not credible and reflected a fundamental misunderstanding of Michigan election administration. (R.T. Vol. VI, pp. 172-173.)

After an extensive analysis using "rigorous specifications," election expert, Grimmer did not find that Vice President Biden outperformed expectations in counties where Dominion voting machines were used. (Exh. 174, p. 4.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

stating there was fact, that votes that had been case [sic] for Trump were recorded for Biden." (Ibid.) Eastman testified that he did not think that any flipped votes or that the missed Dominion machine software upgrade was deliberate or fraudulent. (R.T. Vol. X, pp. 119-120.)

Eastman's statement about "electronically flipped" Trump to Biden votes was a misrepresentation of the facts because, as Eastman knew, what he characterized as "electronically flipped" votes were not votes that were counted in the final results.[87]

Conclusions of Law

Eastman's First Amendment Defense

During these proceedings, Eastman has consistently asserted that his statements, specifically his interview at the Bannon War Room (count 5), his public statements at the Ellipse on January 6 (counts 1 and 7), his article in the American Mind (count 9), and his statements to Vice President Pence (counts 8 and 10), are protected expressions of his rights under the First Amendment, including freedom of speech and the right to petition the government for a redress of grievances. As such, he contends that these statements cannot be used as grounds for professional disciplinary action. The court disagrees.

The First Amendment provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." It is well-established that the "First Amendment protects the freedom of expression of all citizens, including lawyers." (Jacoby v. State Bar (1977) 19 Cal.3d 359, 368; In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775, 781 ["Like all other citizens, attorneys are entitled to the protection of the First Amendment, even as participants in the administration of justice"].) Therefore, this court cannot discipline an attorney for speech that is protected by the First Amendment. (In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23, 30 ["Disciplinary rules governing the legal profession cannot punish activity protected by the First Amendment"].)

[87] Moreover, although the mistake had been disclosed and any presidential candidate could have requested a recount of the Antrim County votes, no recount was requested. (Exh. 105.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

At the same time, the First Amendment rights of attorneys are linked to the critical role that they perform within the judicial system. While these rights are fundamental, they must be calibrated to align with the unique role attorneys play in the administration of justice. As the Review Department has stated, "attorneys occupy a special status and perform an essential function in the administration of justice. Because attorneys are officers of the court with a special responsibility to protect the administration of justice, courts have recognized the need for the imposition of reasonable speech restrictions upon them." (In the Matter of Anderson, supra, 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at p. 781, citing to Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar (1975) 421 U.S. 773, 792.) Even the United States Supreme Court has emphasized that "'States have a compelling interest in the practice of professions within their boundaries, and . . . as part of their power to protect the public health, safety, and other valid interests they have broad power to establish standards for licensing practitioners and regulating the practice of professions.'" (Florida Bar v. Went For It, Inc. (1995) 515 U.S. 618, 625, citations omitted.) "The interest of the States in regulating lawyers is especially great since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been 'officers of the courts.'" (Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, supra, 421 U.S. at p. 792.)

For these reasons, "speech otherwise entitled to full constitutional protection may nonetheless be sanctioned if it obstructs or prejudices the administration of justice." (Standing Comm. on Discipline v. Yagman (9th Cir. 1995) 55 F.3d 1430, 1442, citing Gentile v. State Bar of Nevada (1991) 501 U.S. 1030, 1074-1075.) Because lawyers are "an intimate and trusted and essential part of the machinery of justice, an officer of the court in the most compelling sense,"

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(id. at p. 1072, citations and internal quotations omitted), it is contemplated that a lawyer's right to free speech is especially limited in the courtroom. (Id. at p. 1071 ["It is unquestionable that in the courtroom itself, during a judicial proceeding, whatever right to 'free speech' an attorney has is extremely circumscribed"].) Even beyond the confines of the courtroom or the pendency of a case, attorneys are not necessarily "protected by the First Amendment to the same extent as those engaged in other businesses." (Id. at p. 1073.) For example, in evaluating restrictions on attorney solicitation or advertising, the Supreme Court has typically "engaged in a balancing process, weighing the State's interest in the regulation of a specialized profession against a lawyer's First Amendment interest in the kind of speech at issue." (Ibid.)

Eastman is charged with making false and misleading public statements in his capacity as an attorney in violation of section 6106 (moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption), as charged in counts 5, 7, and 9. It has been established that the provisions of section 6106 satisfy Gentile's balancing test. (See Canatella v. Stovitz (N.D. Cal. 2005) 365 F.Supp.2d 1064, 1072-1073 [applying Gentile's balancing test for in-court and out-of-court attorney speech charged as violation of section 6106].)[88] There is little doubt that the State's interest in section 6106, i.e., to protect the public, maintain the highest professional standards by attorneys, and preserve public confidence in the legal system, outweighs any potential free speech rights attorneys may assert in making false and misleading statements. It follows then that Eastman does not have a First Amendment right to make statements that violate the provisions of section 6106.

---

[88] Attorney speech under the First Amendment can be understood as speech made by an attorney in the course of their professional duties. (See Jacobson v. Schwarzenegger (C.D. Cal. 2009) 650 F.Supp.2d 1032, 1054 [attorney's pursuit of administrative remedies, cross-examinations, and letters to state officials were part of his duties as appointed counsel for parolees and were not protected by the First Amendment as they were not made in his capacity as a private citizen but rather in his professional role].)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Separately, the protections of the First Amendment are not absolute and certain categories of speech are subject to less constitutional protection. For example, false statements made knowingly or with reckless disregard of the truth are not protected speech. (Garrison v. State of Louisiana (1964) 379 U.S. 64, 75 ["the knowingly false statement and the false statement made with reckless disregard of the truth, do not enjoy constitutional protection"];[89] In the Matter of Anderson, supra, 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at p. 782 ["Neither a false statement made knowingly nor a false statement made with reckless disregard of the truth enjoys constitutional protection because there is no constitutional value in such false statement of fact"].)[90] To evaluate whether an attorney's false speech involves reckless disregard for the truth, the court applies an objective standard; it must determine "what the reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar

---

[89] Eastman cites to United States v. Alvarez (2012) 567 U.S. 709, for the proposition that even if his statements were false (which he disputes), they are protected by the First Amendment. The court disagrees. In Alvarez, a majority of the Justices agreed that the Stolen Valor Act, which criminalized false claims of military honors, violated the First Amendment. A shared theme by the opinions was that the Act in question prohibited false statements only because of their falsity, stating that falsity alone is not sufficient to bring the speech outside the First Amendment. Alvarez does not hold that false statements are always protected speech, it merely holds that false speech is not, as a bright line rule, unprotected by the First Amendment. (Id. at p. 722 [rejecting the notion that "false speech should be in a general category that is presumptively unprotected"].) At the same time, the Court acknowledged that certain false speech could be restricted under the First Amendment and emphasized that its ruling did not suggest vulnerability in targeted prohibitions on such speech; "there are instances in which the falsity of speech bears upon whether it is protected," and "[t]his opinion does not imply that any of these targeted prohibitions are somehow vulnerable." (Id. at p. 721.) One such recognized exception to the First Amendment is making knowingly false statements and false statements made with reckless disregard of the truth. (Garrison v. State of Louisiana, supra, 379 U.S. at p. 75.) Further, Eastman's reliance on New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, is equally misguided. There, the court also acknowledged a specific restriction on speech that was knowingly false or made with reckless disregard of the truth. (See id. at p. 280 [prohibiting recovery of damages for defamation unless the statement was made "with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not"].)

[90] In the attorney discipline context, OCTC bears the burden of proving the falsehood of any statement that serves as basis for culpability. (In the Matter of Anderson, supra, 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at pp. 778, 786.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

circumstances." (U.S. Dist. Court v. Sandlin (9th Cir. 1993) 12 F.3d 861, 867.) "The inquiry focuses on whether the attorney had a reasonable factual basis for making the statements, considering their nature and the context in which there were made." (Standing Committee v. Yagman, supra, 55 F.3d at p. 1437.) In assessing reckless disregard for the truth, the court "may take into account whether the attorney pursued readily available avenues of investigation." (Id. at p. 1437, fn 13; In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370, 375.)

In sum, attorneys have a First Amendment right to make statements in public in the course of their professional duties. However, this right does not extend to making knowing or reckless false statements of fact or law. Here, as shown below, Eastman made multiple false and misleading statements in his professional capacity as attorney for President Trump in court filings and other written statements, as well as in conversations with others and in public remarks. As further shown below, Eastman knowingly made these false statements or had no reasonable factual or legal basis for making them. Hence, Eastman's First Amendment defense fails.

Likewise, the First Amendment does not protect speech that is employed as a tool in the commission of a crime. (See United States v. Hansen (2023) 599 U.S. 762, 783 [the First Amendment does not protect "speech integral to unlawful conduct"]; United States v. Williams (2008) 553 U.S. 285, 298 ["Many long established criminal proscriptions—such as laws against conspiracy, incitement, and solicitation—criminalize speech (commercial or not) that is intended to induce or commence illegal activities"].) Count 1 of the NDC charges Eastman with conduct and statements made in furtherance of a criminal scheme, i.e., conspiring to promote and assist President Trump in executing a strategy to overturn the legitimate results of the 2020 presidential election by obstructing the count of electoral votes of certain states, in violation of 18 U.S.C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

§ 371. Attorneys do not have a constitutional right to collaborate with clients for purposes that are unlawful, criminal, or fraudulent. (Cf. Rules Prof. Conduct, rule 1.2.1 [prohibiting an attorney from advising or assisting the violation of law].) It follows then that Eastman can face disciplinary action for his speech in assisting and advising President Trump in illegal, criminal, or fraudulent activities.[91]

Finally, although the First Amendment protects the right "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances," which includes the right of access to the courts as with freedom of speech, the right to petition for redress of grievances has never been absolute. (Schroeder v. Irvine City Council (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 174, 195 ["The right to petition for redress of grievances includes the right to sue . . . private as well as governmental entities. . . . However, 'the right to petition has never been absolute'. . . . [C]onstitutional rights to petition have been subjected to reasonable restrictions to prevent abuse of the right, and narrowly drawn restrictions on that right can be valid"].) In fact, it is "generally subject to the same constitutional analysis" as the right to free speech. (Wayte v. United States (1985) 470 U.S. 598, 610, fn. 11 ["Although the right to petition and the right to free speech are separate guarantees, they are related and generally subject to the same constitutional analysis"]; see also Mejia v. City of Los Angeles (2007) 156 Cal.App.4th 151, 162 ["Restrictions on the right to petition generally are subject to the same analysis as restrictions on the right of free speech"].) Since the court finds that Eastman's free speech argument fails, so must his petition clause argument. (See Canatella v. Stovitz, supra, 365 F.Supp.3d at pp. 1077-1078.)

---

[91] A separate category of speech subject to no constitutional protection is "advocacy of the use of force" where it is "directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." (Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 447.) Although Eastman asserts that OCTC must prove that he intended to incite lawless action and his statements were likely to incite lawlessness, OCTC did not charge Eastman with inciting lawlessness except for count 11, which for the reasons stated below, this court has dismissed. Thus, the Brandenburg analysis does not apply in this case.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

What is more, because the right to petition the government for redress of grievances is a personal right, an attorney does not have the right to claim a personal right to petition based on the representation of a client. (DePaoli v. Carlton (E.D. Cal. 1995) 878 F. Supp. 1351, 1355 ["In the context of a court proceeding the right to petition is the client's, not the attorney's. An attorney may not claim a right to petition based upon representation of a client"].) So, Eastman cannot claim this right as part of his representation of President Trump or the Trump Campaign.

Based on the foregoing, the court rejects Eastman's First Amendment defense, and now turns to assessing the charges of professional misconduct brought against him.

Count Two – Seeking to Mislead a Court (§ 6068, subd. (d))[92]

OCTC charged Eastman with willfully violating section 6068, subdivision (d), by seeking to mislead the United States Supreme Court when he knowingly adopted certain false and misleading factual allegations contained in the Bill of Complaint filed in Texas v. Pennsylvania.

Section 6068, subdivision (d), provides that an attorney has a duty to employ those means only as are consistent with the truth and never to seek to mislead a judge or any judicial officer by an artifice or false statement of fact or law. "The statute requires an attorney to refrain from misleading and deceptive acts without qualification." (Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300, 315, italics added.) Moreover, "[c]oncealment of a material fact misleads a judge just as effectively as a false statement." (In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166, 174.) "No distinction can therefore be drawn among concealment, half-truth, and false statement of fact." (Grove v. State Bar (1965) 63 Cal.2d 312, 315.)

The Supreme Court has explained that whether an attorney has violated section 6068, subdivision (d), "depends first upon whether his representation to the . . . court was in fact [92] The court will address Count One last due to its extensive overlap with some of the allegations in the other counts.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

untrue, and secondly, whether he knew that his statement was false and he intended thereby to deceive the court." (Vickers v. State Bar (1948) 32 Cal.2d 247, 252-253; accord, In the Matter of Chestnut, supra, 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at p. 174.) Willful blindness is equivalent to actual knowledge. (See In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427, 433.) "The conduct denounced by [section 6068, subdivision (d)] is not the act of an attorney by which he successfully misleads the court, but the presentation of a statement of fact, known by him to be false, which tends to do so. It is the endeavor to secure an advantage by means of falsity which is denounced." (Pickering v. State Bar (1944) 24 Cal.2d 141, 144-145.)

OCTC contends that Eastman knew that the factual allegations in Texas's Bill of Complaint were false and misleading, in violation of section 6068, subdivision (d). These allegations are separately considered below.

Allegation of Outcome-Determinative Voting Irregularities

OCTC argues that Eastman misled the court by adopting, in his Motion to Intervene, the following factual allegation contained in Texas's Bill of Complaint: "Citing 'rampant lawlessness arising out of Defendant States' unconstitutional acts,' the lawsuit asserted that '[t]aken together, these flaws affect an outcome-determinative numbers of popular votes in a group of States that cast outcome-determinative numbers of electoral votes.'" (NDC, p. 17.) OCTC alleges that Eastman knew there "was no evidence upon which a reasonable attorney would rely of fraud in any state election in sufficient numbers that could have affected the outcome of the election." (Id. at p. 18.)

Eastman's allegation of "outcome-determinative" voting irregularities was false and misleading. At the time Eastman filed the Motion to Intervene, it was evident, and known to Eastman, that federal courts had already considered and dismissed claims of outcome-determinative irregularities affecting the 2020 presidential election. The District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania had specifically ruled that these claims were "unsupported by evidence." (Exh. 222, p. 2.) Furthermore, the Third Circuit had concluded that the allegations lacked both specificity and proof of unfairness in the election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman knew about the federal court decisions because, at the time Eastman filed the Motion to Intervene, he had already undertaken a comprehensive examination of cases and factual information pertaining to what he perceived as election irregularities. He compiled this information into a spreadsheet, where he documented and monitored 2020 election litigation challenges he found in court documents. (Exh. 1055.) The Pennsylvania District Court case was included in his database, proving he was aware of the court's "unsupported by evidence" finding. Yet, although prior courts considered and rejected the claims of outcome-determinative irregularities, he continued to raise them in the Supreme Court.

Eastman's convenient failure to acknowledge the federal court cases that had already considered and rejected the factual allegations regarding outcome-determinative voting irregularities in his Motion to Intervene is evidence of his intent to mislead the court. Attorneys have a duty to provide courts with complete information, which includes prior adverse rulings, and to identify adverse authorities. (See Ainsworth v. State Bar (1988) 46 Cal.3d 1218, 1224-1225, 1233 [attorney violated § 6068, subd. (d), after filing complaint that cited Supreme Court decision as authority without disclosing the grant of a rehearing—rendering the opinion invalid]; see also Perry v. Kia Motors of America, Inc. (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 1088, 1095-1096 [citing § 6068, subd. (d), plaintiff lost opportunity for appellate review because appellate counsel made misleading claim in her brief—incorrectly asserting that trial court found defendant improperly concealed evidence while, in truth, the court stated no concealment occurred]; Di Sabatino v. State Bar (1980) 27 Cal.3d 159, 172 [attorney violated section 6068, subd. (d), by concealing from commissioner who granted client's bail that bail had twice been previously denied]; In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211, 219 [attorney had duty to disclose death of client to court, especially considering court's inquiries that should have prompted attorney to reveal information].) This duty is part of an attorney's overarching ethical obligation to utilize methods that employ only such means as are consistent with the truth.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's omission of relevant case decisions was misleading as it excluded vital information about prior court rulings rejecting the unfounded outcome-determinative claims—creating the false impression that such matters had not been considered and decided. As the court in Perry v. Kia Motors of America, Inc. states: "'Counsel should not forget that they are officers of the court, and while it is their duty to protect and defend the interests of their clients, the obligation is equally imperative to aid the court in avoiding error and in determining the cause in accordance with justice and the established rules of practice.' [Citations.]" (Perry v. Kia Motors Am., Inc., supra, 91 Cal. App.5th at p. 1096.)

Additionally, Eastman's contemporaneous email to Cleta Mitchell is further proof of his intent to mislead the court. He told Mitchell there was no documented evidence of fraud that existed but expressed optimism in the potential discovery of such evidence. His repeated claims of fraud with the knowledge that such assertions lacked support serve as compelling proof of Eastman's intent to mislead the court.

In his defense, Eastman claims he cannot be found culpable of this charge unless he was sanctioned under Rule 11 of the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, which he was not. The court rejects this argument. There is no requirement that an attorney be sanctioned by the civil court for this court to find the attorney violated ethical standards. (Cf. Franklin v. State Bar (1986) 41 Cal.3d 700, 709 [violation of § 6068, subd. (d), without imposition of sanctions]; see also Di Sabatino v. State Bar, supra, 27 Cal.3d at pp. 162-164.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Based on the foregoing, the court finds Eastman willfully violated section 6068, subdivision (d), with respect to this allegation.

Allegations of Election Code Violations in Pennsylvania

Next, OCTC argues that Eastman misled the court when he adopted the following factual allegation in his Motion to Intervene: "Statewide election officials and local election officials in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties, aware of the historical Democrat advantage in those counties, violated Pennsylvania's election code and adopted the differential standards favoring voters in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties with the intent to favor former Vice President Biden." (NDC, p. 17.) OCTC maintains that Eastman knew the factual allegations in the Bill of Complaint were false and misleading and "[t]here was no evidence upon which a reasonable attorney would rely that the election officials in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties had acted with the intent to favor Biden in the election through the alleged violations of election codes or adoptions of differential standards, or that the alleged violations of election codes or adoptions of differential standards 'affect[ed] an outcome-determinative numbers [sic] of popular votes.'" (Id. at p. 18.)

When the Bill of Complaint was filed, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court had considered and already rejected the argument that the Pennsylvania Secretary of State's guidance regarding the prohibition against rejecting absentee or mail-in ballots violated Pennsylvania election laws. Yet, Eastman adopted those false statements contained in the Bill of Complaint. Moreover, as stated above, when Eastman filed the Motion to Intervene, he created a matrix where he recorded and tracked legal challenges related to the 2020 election that he had identified in court documents. The matrix contained an analysis of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's opinion—demonstrating that Eastman knew what the court had considered and decided. The contentions asserting non-legislative modifications to state election regulations by election officials within the executive branch were both material and false.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's failure to disclose, in his Motion to Intervene, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court opinion is strong evidence of his intent to mislead the court. A duty existed to reveal that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court had already determined that Pennsylvania's election laws had not been violated, but Eastman purposely omitted this information. (Cf. Di Sabatino v. State Bar, supra, 27 Cal.3d at p. 172.) Once again, Eastman left the impression that no court had resolved an important issue in the Bill of Complaint when that was not accurate.

So, Eastman's culpability for willfully violating section 6068, subdivision (d), has been clearly and convincingly established with respect to this allegation as well.

Allegation of Statistical Probability of Vice President Biden Winning the Popular Vote

Finally, OCTC argues that Eastman violated section 6068, subdivision (d), by adopting the factual allegation in the Bill of Complaint that the odds of Biden winning the popular vote in the Defendant States was less than 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000 (one quadrillion)—an allegation that was false.[93] As there is no clear and convincing evidence that Eastman knew the statements were false, the court does not find Eastman culpable of violating section 6068, subdivision (d),

---

[93] Specifically, OCTC alleged that the following statements were false: "'The probability of former Vice President Biden winning the popular vote in the four Defendant States—Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin—independently given President Trump's early lead in those States as of 3 a.m. on November 4, 2020, is less than one in a quadrillion, or 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000. For former Vice President Biden to win these four States collectively, the odds of that event happening decrease to less than one in a quadrillion to the fourth power (i.e., 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000^4)"; and "The same less than one in a quadrillion statistical improbability of Mr. Biden winning the popular vote in the four Defendant States—Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin— independently exists when Mr. Biden's performance in each of those Defendant States is compared to former Secretary of State Hilary Clinton's performance in the 2016 general election and President Trump's performance in the 2016 and 2020 general elections. Again, the statistical improbability of Mr. Biden winning the popular vote in these four States collectively is 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000^4." (NDC, pp. 17-18.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

by adopting the statements regarding the statistical probability of former Vice President Biden winning the popular vote in the Defendant States.

The statistical analysis in the Bill of Complaint was supported by the declaration of Dr. Cicchetti. Eastman reviewed Dr. Cicchetti's declaration but never questioned him about his methodology or analysis—believing the information to be accurate.

OCTC presented evidence during the trial from its expert, Dr. Grimmer, who pointed out flaws in Dr. Cicchetti's analysis and methodology. And Dr. Cicchetti later criticized the utilization of his declaration to bolster the filing, noting it did not effectively support the argument that President Trump's odds of winning were significantly high. Dr. Cicchetti contested the interpretation of his declaration, which arguably suggests that the assertions regarding the likelihood of Biden winning the popular vote in the Defendant States were false. Nonetheless, OCTC has not furnished any proof indicating that Eastman was aware of the inaccuracy or falsehood of the statements when he endorsed them, nor has it demonstrated any intent on Eastman's part to mislead or deceive. Once it was established that the statements were untrue, the Bill of Complaint had already been dismissed. Thus, the court does not find Eastman violated section 6068, subdivision (d), by adopting the statements regarding the probability of former Vice President Biden winning popular vote in the Defendant States.

In sum, the court finds clear and convincing evidence that Eastman violated section 6068, subdivision (d), by adopting the false and misleading allegations and contentions in the Bill of Complaint with the intent to mislead the Supreme Court, as stated above.

Count Three – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

Section 6106 provides, in part, that the commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Broadly, any act contrary to honesty and good morals involves moral turpitude. (See Stanford v. State Bar (1940)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

15 Cal.2d 721, 727.) Acts of moral turpitude include an attorney's concealment as well as affirmative misrepresentations. (See Grove v. State Bar, supra, 63 Cal.2d at p. 315.) Indeed, as stated previously "[n]o distinction can . . . be drawn among concealment, half-truth, and false statement of fact." (Ibid; see also In the Matter of Chesnut, supra, 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at p. 174.) While neither evil intent nor injury to a client is necessary for moral turpitude, some level of guilty knowledge or at least gross negligence is required. (See Fitzsimmons v. State Bar (1983) 34 Cal.3d 327, 331; see also In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234, 241.) Furthermore, an attorney's knowledge or intent can be established by direct or circumstantial evidence. (See Zitney v. State Bar (1966) 64 Cal.2d 787, 792.) Finally, willful blindness is tantamount to actual knowledge. (See In the Matter of Carver, supra, 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. At pp. 432-433.)

In count three, OCTC charged Eastman with willfully violating section 6106 by drafting a two-page memo dated December 23, 2020, which falsely stated that seven states (Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Nevada, New Mexico, and Wisconsin) "have transmitted dual slates of electors to the President of the Senate." (NDC, p. 19.) The court agrees and finds Eastman is culpable as charged.

The evidence shows that Eastman's "dual slates of electors" statement was false and misleading. Eastman knew that there were no legitimate dual slates of electors in the seven contested states because the Trump electors lacked certification and could not be legally considered on January 6, 2021. Moreover, Eastman was aware that Vice President Pence lacked the authority to decide which slate of electors would be counted because his sole responsibility was simply to open the ballots. Yet, Eastman used the false assertion concerning dual slates of electors to provide an alternative strategy for Vice President Pence to declare President Trump as the winner of the 2020 presidential election. The two-page memo was designed to provide legal support and convince Vice President Pence to carry out that strategy.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's claims, in this proceeding, that he believed "the slates were legitimate as a matter of historical precedent" are unbelievable and not supported by the record. (Eastman's Closing Brief, p. 56.) Likewise, the court finds no support for Eastman's purported belief, at the time, that the supposed Trump electors qualified for recognition by Vice President Pence under the ECA because it directs the Vice President to open and acknowledge all "papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes." (Ibid.)

As a constitutional expert, Eastman knew that the only slates of electors which Vice President Pence could lawfully consider, were those included in the certificates of ascertainment executed by the governor of each state. Eastman understood that the so-called dual electors lacked legitimacy and would not be tallied on January 6, 2021, and he also knew that there was no constitutional provision permitting counting of uncertified, unascertained dual slates of electors. None of the contested states' officials had submitted a certificate of ascertainment naming Trump electors, thereby lacking any semblance of authority or official endorsement. In fact, Eastman conceded so much in his December 19, 2020 email to Colbert, acknowledging that, without certification from state legislatures, the Trump electors would not be recognized by Congress. Even Dr. Yoo, Eastman's constitutional expert and friend, affirmed that despite the ambiguity in language and scholarly opinions, the absence of certification by state executive officers meant there was no constitutional dilemma on January 6, 2021, necessitating any purported unilateral action from Vice President Pence.

In defending his actions, Eastman incorrectly attempts to draw an analogy between the events of the 2020 presidential election and the 1960 presidential election in Hawaii. Eastman misconstrues the circumstances regarding the Hawaii slates of electors by ignoring the fact that the third and final slate of electors in Hawaii was certified by the Governor after a recount. It was that third certificate that Vice President Nixon considered without objection or dispute. Here, in the 2020 presidential election, each of the contested states had only one slate of electors certified by the governor of that state and, as Eastman knew, section 15 of Title 3 of the United States Code is clear—the officially certified slate is the one certified by the governor in the certificate of ascertainment.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman also argues that he cannot be found culpable of moral turpitude because his statement amounted to no more than zealous advocacy in his representation of President Trump's interests. It is true that an attorney has a duty to engage in zealous advocacy on behalf of a client. (See Rules Prof. Conduct, rule 1.3 [duty to perform with diligence].) However, Eastman's inaccurate assertions were lies that cannot be justified as zealous advocacy. Eastman failed to uphold his primary duty of honesty and breached his ethical obligations by presenting falsehoods to bolster his legal arguments. Finally, the court notes that acts of moral turpitude are a departure from professional norms and are unequivocally outside the realm of protection afforded by the First Amendment and the obligation of vigorous advocacy. (Lebbos v. State Bar (1991) 53 Cal.3d 37, 45.)

In sum, Eastman's claim that there were dual slates of electors was knowingly false and made with the intent to deceive, given that Eastman knew the purported Trump electors lacked the proper certification and official approval mandated by law. As such, Eastman is culpable of willfully violating section 6106, as charged in count three.

Count Four – Seeking to Mislead a Court (§ 6068, subd. (d))

In count four, OCTC alleges that Eastman willfully sought to mislead the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, by making statements in the Verified Complaint filed in Trump v. Kemp about the administration of Georgia's election, which

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman knew to be false and misleading. Specifically, OCTC charges Eastman with making the following false statements: "Georgia election officials allowed unqualified individuals to register and vote, allowed convicted felons still serving their sentence to vote, allowed underaged individuals to register and then vote, allowed unregistered or late registered individuals to vote, allowed individuals to vote who had moved across county lines, allowed individuals to vote who had registered at a P.O. Box, church, or courthouse rather than their residence, and accepted votes cast by deceased individuals." (NDC, pp. 20-21.) The court agrees.

All of the statements above allege that individuals lacking the necessary qualifications were permitted to register and vote. However, at the time Eastman filed Trump v. Kemp on December 31, 2020—incorporating by reference the complaint and exhibits in Trump v. Raffensperger—Eastman knew these allegations were false because he was aware that the information upon which he relied in making these assertions, i.e., the declarations of Braynard and Geels, contained inaccurate and unreliable data. After the declarations were filed in Trump v. Raffensperger, and before Trump v. Kemp was filed, it was determined that the analysis and conclusions in the Braynard and Geels declarations contained inaccurate information and were unreliable. The Georgia official's expert, Stewart, scrutinized the evaluation conducted by Braynard and Geels, highlighting particular deficiencies found in the analysis of each expert and summarizing relevant shortcomings identified in their analyses. Eastman was aware that Stewart had undermined Braynard's and Geels's findings, causing Eastman to doubt the accuracy of the information they provided. This was evident from the filing of the Trump v. Kemp complaint, which omitted any mention of numerical values.

As further evidence that Eastman was aware of the inaccuracies in the allegations and evidence in support thereof, he consented to adding a footnote in the Verified Complaint and amending President Trump's Verification, disclaiming personal knowledge regarding the facts and figures stated therein, while keeping the allegations unchanged.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Furthermore, regarding the specific assertion that underage individuals were allowed to register and vote, Eastman acknowledged that he understood Geels's declaration to support the claim that underage individuals had been permitted to register, but the analysis "never asserts that underage people voted." (R.T. Vol V, p. 68.) Eastman also acknowledged that if an underaged person registered to vote, but did not actually vote, that person's registration would not be outcome-determinative. By knowingly presenting false and misleading information in the pleadings of Trump v. Kemp, Eastman's intent to deceive is established. (See Vickers v. State Bar, supra, 32 Cal.2d 247 at pp. 252-253.)

In addition to the statements alleging that unqualified individuals were permitted to vote in Georgia, OCTC alleges that the following statement in the Trump v. Kemp complaint was false and misleading: "Fulton County election officials 'remove[d] suitcases of ballots from under a table where they had been hidden, and processed those ballots without open viewing by the public in violation of [state law].'" (NDC, p. 21.) This statement was also false.

The State Farm Arena investigation revealed, as early as December 5, 2020, that there were no ballots "hidden" under a table. Moreover, Eastman acknowledges that Georgia law did not require public viewing of ballot canvassing at the State Farm Arena. Rather, the law merely gives the public the opportunity to view the process. Eastman also acknowledged that he did not view the entire video of the activities in the State Farm Arena, and he could not recall if he read Investigator Watson's declaration providing that there were no mystery ballots hidden under a table. Nevertheless, the entire video was available for review, and Eastman read information from Georgia's Secretary of State about the legitimacy of the activities at the State Farm Arena before the complaint in Trump v. Kemp was filed.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Enough information existed which revealed that the statements about the activities at the State Farm Arena were false, but Eastman never actively sought out information that might challenge his narrative nor considered any available accurate information. Eastman cannot avoid culpability through his willful blindness—willful blindness that is tantamount to Eastman's actual knowledge that the allegations regarding hidden ballots were false. (See In the Matter of Carver, supra, 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at p. 433 [attorney's willful blindness to ineligibility to practice law culpable of moral turpitude for the unauthorized practice of law; willful blindness equivalent to having actual knowledge of his ineligibility].)

In his defense, Eastman argues that OCTC failed to prove he had actual knowledge that the allegations in Trump v. Kemp regarding outcome-determinative illegal votes were false and that he intended to deceive the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia. Eastman's argument fails. He knew there was no hard evidence of outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election. He explained to Mitchell in November 2020 that the statistical analyses were not enough to demonstrate fraud and that he was hoping the statistical analyses would assist with uncovering hard documented evidence of fraud. Moreover, as stated above, Eastman knew that the supporting evidence offered by the experts was faulty and inaccurate. "'The presentation to a court [in a complaint] of a fact known to be false presumes an intent to secure a determination based upon it and is a clear violation of [§ 6068].'" (Davis v. State Bar (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 231, 239-40; see also Pickering v. State Bar, supra, 24 Cal.2d at p. 144.)

Next, Eastman argues that he had a reasonable and good faith belief, based on the evidence that the combined tally of votes impacted by violations of state election statutes exceeded the 11,779-vote margin of victory. As detailed earlier, the evidence in support of the alleged violations of state election laws was flawed and invalidated. The inclusion of the footnote distancing Trump from the allegations and supporting evidence did not make the allegations in the complaint true, as Eastman asserts. Rather, it strongly demonstrates knowledge of the falsity of the allegations, otherwise such a footnote would not be needed.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman also contends that he is not culpable of this charge because he relied on Hilbert, who was lead counsel, as well as credentialed, qualified experts. The argument fails because every attorney, including Eastman, bears an individual responsibility for their actions to ensure compliance with ethical obligations. Relying on the work of others, even attorneys, does not exempt a lawyer from discipline for a breach of ethics. Each attorney has a responsibility to uphold their professional duties and adhere to their ethical commitments, irrespective of the actions of others.

Finally, Eastman argues that the claims about the hidden ballots in the State Farm Arena were supported by witness affidavits and that he viewed a portion of the video during a Georgia Senate subcommittee hearing that occurred on December 3-4, 2020, thereby supporting his claims. Even if there was no information that the allegations regarding hidden ballots were false when Trump v. Raffensperger was filed, by the time Trump v. Kemp was initiated, evidence of the falsity of those allegations existed. Eastman chose to ignore that evidence.

Based on the foregoing, the court finds that the evidence clearly and convincingly establishes Eastman's violation of section 6068, subdivision (d), as charged in count four.

Count Five – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

OCTC charged Eastman with willfully or gross negligently violating section 6106 – by aiming to foster doubt about the legitimacy of the election results in making statement on Bannon's War Room radio program that: (1) "there was massive evidence of fraud involving absentee ballots in the November 3, 2020 presidential election, 'most egregiously in Georgia and Pennsylvania and Wisconsin'"; and (2) "there had been more than enough absentee ballot fraud

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

'to have affected the outcome of the election.'" (NDC, p. 22.) The court finds that Eastman is culpable of this charge.

Despite Eastman's assertions, there was no credible evidence of widespread absentee ballot fraud that impacted the outcome of the 2020 presidential election, as affirmed by federal and state courts that dismissed related claims due to lack of proof. While Eastman claimed that various illegalities provided opportunities for fraud, he admitted to having uncertainty regarding the degree of outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election in Arizona, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, or Wisconsin. Furthermore, none of the analyses by the individuals Eastman relied upon established the presence of outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election.

Next, Eastman's allegations of widespread absentee voter fraud in Pennsylvania during the 2020 presidential election were baseless and contradicted by official investigations, audits, and court rulings. During Pennsylvania's 2020 presidential election, no counties opened, counted, or disclosed mail-in or absentee ballots before the pre-canvassing period or before 8:00 p.m. on Election Day. The Pennsylvania Deputy Secretary of Elections and Commissions affirmed that—according to publicly available data, county election board postings, statistical sampling, and a statewide risk-limiting audit—there was no systemic insecurity or inaccuracy in the election outcomes. Additionally, in accordance with the Pennsylvania Election Code, county boards of election and district attorneys investigated complaints and allegations of fraud related to the 2020 presidential election, reporting their findings to the Department of State's Elections and Commissions office, which found no indication of pervasive fraud. Eastman relied on a report that failed to cite or present the data backing its erroneous assertions, some of which appeared to stem from a misinterpretation of publicly accessible information. Also, the Third

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Circuit rejected the claim that 1.5 million absentee and mail-in votes in Defendant Counties should not have been counted as there were no specific allegations of proof.

Eastman's claims of widespread absentee ballot fraud in Georgia during the 2020 election were also unfounded and contradicted by available data and analyses. Eastman's claims regarding signature matching did not equate to absentee ballot fraud. According to data accessible in 2020, the decrease in rejected absentee ballots in Georgia was not predominantly attributable to signature match discrepancies. Instead, approximately 90% of this decline stemmed from two main factors: a reduction in the proportion of ballots arriving after the deadline and a decrease in the percentage of ballots rejected due to problems with the oath envelope. As stated in count four, the various analyses Eastman relied upon were found to be inaccurate, and the individuals responsible for drafting the reports never actually concluded that fraud was established in the 2020 election in Georgia. Eastman himself acknowledged that he lacked evidence of outcome-determinative fraud, instead attributing any potential irregularities to illegalities that could enable fraud.

In sum, Eastman exhibited gross negligence by making false statements about the 2020 election without conducting any meaningful investigation or verification of the information he was relying upon. His interpretation of absentee ballot data was flawed; yet, had he sought the expertise of a professional to review his analysis, the inaccuracies could have been identified. Eastman made no inquiries into the studies, audits, or other information he received, which served as the foundation for his erroneous statements. He never verified the accuracy of the information received from others; rather, he simply accepted it as valid. In addition, Eastman never reached out to any Secretary of State in the contested states to inquire about or dispute their election findings. Once courts determined that there were no illegalities in the execution of the elections in the contested states, Eastman nevertheless continued to insist there was outcome-determinative fraud. Eastman's false statements regarding absentee voter fraud were significant and material, as they were intended to sow doubt about the legitimacy of the 2020 presidential election. He urged Bannon's audience to exert pressure on their legislators to invalidate former Vice President Biden's victory due to alleged uncertainties surrounding the election outcome—uncertainties that he assisted with creating. Eastman aimed to instill doubt about the election, prompting listeners to advocate for certifying Trump's electors over Biden's as part of his strategy to delay the electoral count. Despite knowing that the methodologies and reports he relied on were flawed and inaccurate, and being aware that federal courts had concluded there was no evidence of outcome-altering voter fraud, Eastman chose to appear on Bannon's War Room and perpetuate these false claims, showing a disregard for the truth and a willingness to mislead the public.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman argues that his speech was protected by the First Amendment. But, as discussed above, Eastman does not have a First Amendment right to make false and misleading statements that violate the provisions of section 6106. Eastman also claims that he did not engage in moral turpitude as his statements were not made with "'baseness, vileness or depravity' or intended to mislead anyone." (Eastman's Closing Brief, p. 76.) However, Eastman overlooks case law indicating that moral turpitude can also be established through gross negligence. (Fitzsimmons v. State Bar, supra, 34 Cal.3d at p. 331; In the Matter of Respondent H, supra, 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.at p. 241.) Eastman also claims that his statements were based on his zealous advocacy of his client and his intent was to "try to identify problems with the conduct of the election and to try to investigate them and identify whether the problems and illegality may have affected the outcome of the election. . . ." (Eastman's Closing Brief, pp. 76, 77.) He ignored credible evidence that did not support his position of fraud, and as stated above, he failed to investigate or challenge the secretaries of state regarding the election results in the contested states. He turned a blind eye to any information that would not support his position of election fraud.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, Eastman maintains that he had an honest, sincere belief in his statements at the time he made them. A defense against an accusation of moral turpitude through gross negligence arises when an attorney genuinely, albeit unreasonably, believes their actions are justifiable. (In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, 9-11.) As the court found previously (count two) Eastman had no actual knowledge or hard evidence of outcome-determinative voter fraud and the analyses he relied on lacked credibility (count four). In addition, the day before and the morning of his appearance on the Bannon War Room, Eastman was still searching for but had no evidence of fraud in Michigan, Arizona, and Nevada—demonstrating that he knew that he had no basis to state that there was evidence of outcome-determinative fraud. Despite Eastman's claim of an honest belief in his statements, the evidence demonstrates that he knew he lacked a factual basis for making any claims of outcome-determinative fraud, and he recklessly made these false claims during the Bannon's War Room interview.

Therefore, the court finds Eastman culpable of willfully violating section 6106, as charged in count five.

Count Six – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

OCTC charged Eastman with moral turpitude and willful violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106 by stating the following in his January 3, 2021, six-page memo:

- There had been "outright fraud" through "electronic manipulation of voting tabulation machines;"
- There were "dual slates of electors from 7 states," because the Trump electors in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin had met on December 14, 2020, cast their electoral votes for Trump, and transmitted those votes to Pence;[94]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- The State of Michigan "mailed out absentee ballots to every registered voter, contrary to statutory requirement that voter (sic) apply for absentee ballots"; and
- "This election was stolen by a strategic Democrat plan to systemically flout existing election laws for partisan advantage."

(NDC, p. 23.)

Despite the absence of substantiated evidence, Eastman knowingly made false claims of fraud in the 2020 presidential election, suggesting manipulation of electronic voting machines to bolster his case for Vice President Pence to adjourn the Joint Session of Congress. A thorough examination of the data using strict criteria revealed no evidence to suggest that former Vice President Biden did better than expected in counties where Dominion voting machines were used. In addition, the Election Infrastructure Government Coordinating Council and the Election Infrastructure Sector Coordinating Executive Committees found no credible evidence supporting claims that the 2020 election results in any state were changed due to technical compromise. In fact, CISA confirmed that the 2020 presidential election was the most secure in American history. Eastman was informed by November 2020, that CISA had determined the November 3 election to be the most secure in U.S. history, contradicting the numerous baseless claims and potential for misinformation surrounding the electoral process. Nevertheless, Eastman chose to ignore credible sources indicating there was no voting machine manipulation.

Eastman's assertion that every registered voter in Michigan received a ballot by mail was also untrue. As Eastman acknowledged, every registered voter was mailed an absentee ballot application, not the ballot itself. The fact that there was dissent regarding the Supreme Court's refusal to review the case establishing the Secretary of State's authority to send absentee ballot [94] The court has already determined in count three that Eastman's statement that dual slates of electors had been transmitted to Vice President Pence was false.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

applications to all registered voters and that the Michigan legislature disagreed with the decision, does not make Eastman's statement true. The misrepresentations about the manipulation of voting machines and Michigan absentee ballots were significant and material. Eastman used them to bolster the argument for Vice President Pence to reject electoral votes and/or delay or adjourn the Joint Session of Congress.

Regarding the fourth alleged false statement about the election being stolen by a "Democrat Plan", numerous facts related to this representation are detailed within or closely connected to the facts outlined in other counts, i.e., election officials across Pennsylvania, particularly in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties (where Democrats historically hold an advantage) knowingly violated the state's election laws by implementing biased standards to favor voters in these counties, aiming to benefit former Vice President Biden (count two); and Fulton County officials removed ballots from under a table, where they were concealed, and processed them without public observation, breaking state law (count four). Nevertheless, the court finds that Eastman's fourth statement was a statement of opinion rather than a statement of fact. In context, his statement reflected his opinion on summarizing what the purported "facts" revealed.

As it relates to the allegations in the six-page memo, Eastman contends that he did not violate section 6106 because Kurt Olsen, an attorney who worked with Eastman, concluded that it was illegal for Michigan Secretary of State, Jocelyn Benson, to distribute ballot applications to all registered voters. The court dismisses this argument because Eastman was aware, as of December 28, 2020, that the Michigan Secretary of State had such authority. Furthermore, the crucial falsehood that Eastman stated was that the Secretary of State sent ballots, not ballot applications to all registered voters. As such, Olsen's opinion concerning ballot applications is immaterial.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman next asserts that he held a sincere, honest good faith belief in the truth of his statements based on his knowledge and understanding at the time. The court does not consider Eastman's beliefs to be sincere, honest, or credible. He knowingly ignored any evidence contradicting the notion of voting machine manipulation; was aware that the Michigan Secretary of State had not distributed ballots to all registered voters; and as a constitutional scholar, understood that no conflicting dual slates of electors had been transmitted.

Finally, as determined above, the court rejects Eastman's claim that he was vigorously representing President Trump, as he exceeded ethical boundaries by transitioning from an impassioned advocate to engaging in deception.[95]

The evidence presented demonstrates that Eastman, despite claiming sincere belief, deliberately propagated false claims about the 2020 presidential election, thereby breaching his ethical duty as an attorney to prioritize honesty and integrity. With the exception of Eastman's opinion regarding the election being "stolen by a strategic Democrat plan," the court finds Eastman culpable of willfully violating section 6106 as alleged in count six.

Count Seven – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

Eastman is charged with violating section 6106 by stating that "Dominion electronic voting machines had fraudulently manipulated the election results during the November 3, 2020, presidential election and during the January 5, 2021, run-off election in Georgia for its two Senate seats." (NDC, p. 25.)

During his speech on the Ellipse, Eastman was addressing a television audience and a live crowd that he estimated to include 250,000 to 500,00 individuals in his capacity as a lawyer. (R.T. Vol. XI, p. 49.) Giuliani introduced him as one of the preeminent constitutional scholars in [95] Eastman employs the "zealous advocate" defense for counts seven through ten, all of which fail because, as stated above, zealous advocacy cannot excuse a section 6106 violation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

the United States, who intended to explain how the Dominion machines were manipulated. Eastman claimed that during the 2020 presidential and the Georgia runoff elections, ballots were allegedly placed in a hidden folder within voting machines until it was determined how many votes were needed and after the polls closed, these ballots were used to manipulate the election results in favor of former Vice President Biden and other Democratic candidates. Eastman stated that an analysis of vote percentages indicated that these ballots were unloaded from the secret folder and fraudulently matched with unvoted voters, thereby tipping the election outcome in favor of the Democrats.

Eastman's statements were false. The court has previously determined that there was no voting machine manipulation (count six) and that Eastman ignored readily available evidence demonstrating that his statements were false. As such, the record demonstrates that Eastman willfully violated section 6106 by making intentionally false statements on January 6, 2021, at the Save America rally at the Ellipse.

Even if Eastman's false representations were not intentional, at a minimum, he is culpable of violating section 6106 by gross negligence. Eastman's statements about the Dominion voting machines were based on the theories of Ramsland and Oltmann and others he met on January 5, 2021. Before making the misrepresentations on January 6, 2021, Eastman failed to vet Ramsland and Oltmann, their theories, and their credentials. He never determined the credibility of the Ramsland/Oltmann diagram but accepted its conclusions because certain individuals (whose names he could not recall and whom he perceived to possess technical expertise) informed him about alleged potential vulnerabilities in the Dominion voting machine system. He ignored CISA's unwavering confidence in the security and integrity of the 2020 election. Eastman recklessly relied on Ramsland, Oltmann, and others without verifying the validity of their findings.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman maintains that he is not culpable of willfully violating section 6106 because he held a sincere, honest belief that his representations were true at the time. The court disagrees. Eastman deliberately disregarded information from credible sources confirming the security of the election and the absence of any credible evidence supporting allegations that the 2020 election results in any state were altered due to technical compromise. Eastman also claims his speech is protected by the First Amendment. The court has already determined Eastman did not have a constitutional right to make false and misleading statements in violation of section 6106.

The court finds that Eastman, at a minimum, acted with gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude by recklessly relying on unverified sources and unverified information while deliberately disregarding credible information about the security of the 2020 election, thereby violating section 6106. (See In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151, 155 [gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude where attorney filed verification that his clients were out of the county without first confirming that fact]; see also In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [culpability under section 6106 for act of moral turpitude where attorney was found to be grossly negligent in reporting her MCLE compliance without making any effort to confirm its accuracy].)

Count Eight – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

In count eight, Eastman is charged with willfully violating section 6106 by sending an email to Greg Jacob on January 6, 2021, with the intent to pressure Vice President Pence to adjourn the Joint Session of Congress, wherein he wrote: "'You think you can't adjourn the session because the [Electoral Count Act] says no adjournment, while the compelling evidence that the election was stolen continues to build and is already overwhelming?'" The court finds Eastman culpable of willfully violating section 6106.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As previously established, there was no outcome-determinative fraud in the 2020 presidential election (counts four, five, six, and seven), and Eastman was aware or should have known that there was no affirmative proof of fraud (counts five, six, and seven). This lack of outcome-determinative fraud evidence indicates that there was no compelling or overwhelming evidence that the 2020 presidential election was stolen as Eastman claimed.

During the violent attack on the Capitol and while the electoral vote count remained unfinished, Eastman persisted in his attempts to persuade Vice President Pence to postpone the Joint Session of Congress, despite the ongoing crisis and the incomplete democratic process. Eastman continued to pressure Jacob and Vice President Pence even though Eastman, a constitutional scholar, knew that Vice President Pence had no authority to recess, delay, or adjourn the electoral count because as provided by 3 U.S.C. section 16, only the House or Senate may direct a recess—not a President of the Senate. Moreover, as the scholarship and history reflect and as Eastman, a constitutional scholar, had to know, from 1789 to 2016, all recesses and adjournments were initiated and controlled by Congress and "no President of the Senate has ever unilaterally declared a recess." (Exh. 179, p. 84.)

Once again, Eastman contends that his statements are protected by the First Amendment. As stated above, this defense fails because Eastman's false statements are not protected speech. Eastman also argues that he had a sincere, honest belief in his statements. Eastman's defense fails because a sincere, unreasonable belief in one's actions does not excuse intentional misconduct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In sum, despite substantial evidence disproving his claims, Eastman made false statements in his January 6, 2021 email with the intent to deceive and pressure Vice President Pence to violate the ECA, thereby demonstrating his willful violation of section 6106.[96]

Count Nine – Moral Turpitude [Misrepresentation] (§ 6106)

In count nine, OCTC charged Eastman with making the following three statements in the January 18, 2021 "Setting the Record Straight on the POTUS 'Ask'" article, which Eastman knew were false and misleading:

- "[I]n Fulton County, Georgia, where suitcases of ballots were pulled from under the table after election observers had been sent home for the night;"
- "[I]n parts of Wayne County (Detroit) Michigan, where there were more absentee votes cast than had been requested;" and
- "[I]n Antrim County, Michigan, where votes were electronically flipped from Trump to Biden."

(NDC, p. 28.)

First, the court has previously determined that Eastman's statement regarding the alleged hidden "suitcases of ballots" was false and that Eastman ignored any evidence of its falsity (count four). Eastman cannot evade responsibility for his "ostrich-like" behavior once he was aware that information existed showing there were no hidden ballots or evidence of improper activity. (In the Matter of Carver, supra, 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at pp. 432-433; see also In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382, 388.)[97]

---

[96] Although the facts that support culpability in count eight also support culpability in other counts, i.e., counts two and five, the court does not find the counts duplicative as Eastman made the misrepresentations to different individuals, in different situations, and at different timeframes.

[97] In both Carver and Pierce, the attorneys changed their official membership addresses to evade receiving notices from the State Bar and purposefully failed to retrieve or review mail from the State Bar. By avoiding the notices, each attorney remained willfully blind to their ineligible status to practice law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Wayne County, Michigan

Eastman also intentionally misrepresented that votes in Michigan were electronically flipped from President Trump to former Vice President Biden. Eastman's half-truth assertion was deceptive and intellectually dishonest since he was well aware that any human error that occurred only affected the initial unofficial results and this error had been rectified before the final results were tallied. Furthermore, according to experts, and Eastman himself, there were no instances where Trump votes were flipped and tallied as Biden votes. Eastman became aware of the falsehood of the statement and acknowledged that he had learned about the comments made by Michigan election officials regarding this matter in November or December 2020. Eastman's false representations were significant and material. He persisted in misrepresenting the validity the 2020 presidential election to sow doubt among the public regarding the legitimacy of the results.

Eastman contends that he genuinely believed in the accuracy of his misrepresentations. As stated previously, Eastman's willful ignorance and refusal to consider evidence contrary to his assertions do not excuse him from responsibility for spreading falsehoods. The court also rejects Eastman's First Amendment defense since the court has already concluded that Eastman did not have a constitutional right to make false and misleading statements that violate section 6106.

Count Ten – Moral Turpitude (§ 6106)

In count ten, OCTC charges Eastman with moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, by repeatedly proposing and seeking to encourage Vice President Pence to exercise authority to disregard the electoral votes of certain states or delay the counting of electoral votes.

The evidence establishes that shortly before the counting of electoral votes on January 6, 2021, Eastman prepared a two-page memo and a six-page memo that falsely asserted that the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Vice President was the "ultimate arbiter" to resolve disputes regarding electoral votes, and claiming that the Vice President had the power to take various unilateral actions, including determining the validity of electoral votes and adjourning the Joint Session of Congress.

The court has already determined, in counts three and six, that Eastman's statements in his two memos regarding the powers of the Vice President were false. No law or provision in the Constitution confers on the Vice President the power to reject electoral votes or delay the counting of votes. Eastman knew this. He knew, but didn't disclose, that there were only a handful of law review articles, not historical or legal precedent (such as the ECA or the Twelfth Amendment), which supported his contention that such unilateral authority was vested in the Vice President as President of the Senate. As further discussed under count six, Eastman also knew that the factual assertions of fraud and dual slate of electors underpinning the need for his unsupported plan were false. Still, he promoted this wild theory for the benefit of his client's desire to retain the presidency. Notably, the course of action Eastman proposed for Vice President Pence to take on January 6, 2021, was directly contrary to what he told Colbert just a few months prior—that nowhere in the law does it say that the President of the Senate (i.e., the Vice President) has the power to determine what electoral votes are counted. Eastman's scheme also faced criticism from his own expert, Dr. Yoo, who testified that not only did Vice President Pence not have authority to reject elector votes on the grounds that the elector appointments were invalid but, under the circumstances present, Vice President Pence was on "unassailable" grounds for not overturning the electoral results of the 2020 presidential election. (R.T. Vol. XVIII, pp. 47, 66.)

Still, Eastman persisted with his plan. At the January 4, 2021 Oval Office meeting with President Trump, Vice President Pence, Jacob, and Short, Eastman discussed his unfounded theory outlined in his memos, and presented Vice President Pence two options: reject electors or delay the count. He made the same request to Jacob and Short at another meeting the following day. In his conversations with Jacob, however, he conceded that his position would likely be unanimously rejected by the Supreme Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After attempts to convince Vice President Pence during the meetings failed, Eastman resorted to applying additional pressure on Vice President Pence through several emails sent to Jacob requesting that Vice President Pence follow his strategy. In a 6:09 p.m. email on January 6, 2021, Eastman told Jacob that "adjourn[ing] to allow state legislatures to continue their work" was the "most prudent course." (Exh. 68, p. 1.) Later that evening, at 9:44 p.m., Eastman insisted that the Vice President adjourn the counting of electoral votes, stating: "I implore you to consider one more relatively minor violation and adjourn for 10 days . . ." (Exh. 69, p. 2.).

Eastman was aware, or should have been aware, that the course of conduct he proposed in his memos was factually and legally unsupported. Eastman's dubious strategy to influence Vice President Pence to take unilateral action to determine the validity of slate of electors in the contested states or delay the Joint Session of Congress constitutes moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, as charged in count ten. No additional weight in discipline is assigned to this violation, however, because the same facts support culpability under count one below. (See In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511, 520 [no dismissal of charge where same misconduct proves culpability for another charge but no additional weight assigned for discipline purposes].)

Count Eleven – Moral Turpitude (§ 6106)

In count eleven, Eastman is charged with violating section 6106 by telling the crowd of protesters at the Ellipse on January 6, 2021, "that fraud had occurred in the election, that dead people had voted, that electronic voting machines had been used to fraudulently alter the election results, that Pence had authority to delay the counting of votes, and that [Vice President] Pence did not deserve to be in office if he did not delay the counting of votes." (NDC, p. 33.) OCTC alleged that these statements were false and misleading and "contributed to provoking the crowd to assault and breach the Capitol in an effort to intimidate [Vice President] Pence and prevent the electoral count from proceeding, when such harm was foreseeable." (Ibid.) The court does not find Eastman culpable of the misconduct alleged in this count.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The court has already determined that the following statements made by Eastman were false and deceptive: (1) that fraud occurred in the 2020 presidential election (count two); (2) that dead people voted (counts two and four); (3) that electronic voting machines were used fraudulently to alter the election results (count seven); and (4) that Vice President Pence had the authority to delay the vote counting (count ten). Regarding the fifth statement, Eastman did not expressly declare that Vice President Pence did not merit holding office if he refrained from delaying the vote counting but stated that "anybody" unwilling to postpone the vote tallying was unworthy of office. In the context of the speech, it suggests that Eastman was alluding to Vice President Pence. Nevertheless, a "'reasonable factfinder could [not] conclude that the contested statement implies an assertion of objective fact.' [Citation.]" (Lieberman v. Fieger (9th Cir. 2003) 338 F.3d 1076, 1079.) Therefore, the court finds that Eastman's statement regarding Vice President Pence is one of opinion and does not imply a factual assertion and it is thus protected by the First Amendment. (Ibid.)

Although four of the five statements made at the Ellipse were false and misleading, OCTC failed to provide any evidence that Eastman's statements "contributed to provoking the crowd to assault and breach the Capitol . . . when such harm was foreseeable." (NDC, p. 33.) Eastman's statements followed Giuliani's comments—"let's have trial by combat"—and preceded President Trump's comments—"fight like hell" to save the country—but OCTC presented no evidence to show that Eastman's statements contributed to the assault on the Capitol.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As such, count eleven is dismissed with prejudice.

Count One – Failure to Support the Laws of The United States (§ 6068, subd. (a))

Section 6068, subdivision (a), places a duty on attorneys to support the Constitution and laws of the United States and of this state. OCTC is required to specifically identify the underlying provision of law allegedly violated. (See In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476, 486.) "The requirement of specification of the underlying provision of law allegedly violated means that the Supreme Court interprets section 6068(a) as a conduit by which attorneys may be charged and disciplined for violations of other specific laws which are not otherwise made disciplinable under the State Bar Act." (Id. at p. 487.)

Here, OCTC charges Eastman in count one with failure to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States in violation of section 6068, subdivision (a), by violating three provisions of the law; (1) 3 U.S.C. § 15; (2) Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 and the Twelfth Amendment of the United States Constitution; and (3) 18 U.S.C. § 371.

The 3 U.S.C. § 15 of the ECA outlines the precise procedure for the counting of electoral votes in Congress on January 6 following every meeting of the electors. Related to this statute, Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution provides that each state shall appoint electors, and the Twelfth Amendment specifies that, on January 6, the votes submitted by the electors for each state shall be counted, with the President determined by the winner of a majority of electoral votes. OCTC fails to assert, let alone prove, that Eastman violated either 3 U.S.C. § 15; Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution; or the Twelfth Amendment. OCTC merely alleges that Eastman intended to violate these provisions, which falls short of establishing culpability under section 6068, subdivision (a). (See In the Matter of Lilley, supra, 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at pp. 486-487 [section 6068, subd. (a), is a "a conduit by which attorneys may be charged and disciplined for violations of other specific laws" (italics added)].)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

By contrast, OCTC has shown that Eastman conspired with President Trump to obstruct a lawful function of the government of the United States; specifically, by conspiring to disrupt the electoral count on January 6, 2021, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. To prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371, it must be established that: (1) at least two people entered into an agreement to obstruct a lawful function of the government; (2) by deceitful or dishonest means; and (3) there was at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. (See United States v. Meredith (9th Cir. 2012) 685 F.3d 814, 822.) "An agreement to commit a crime 'can be explicit or tacit, and can be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence, including inferences from circumstantial evidence.'" (United States v. Kaplan (9th Cir. 2016) 836 F.3d 1199, 1212.)

The evidence clearly and convincingly proves that Eastman and President Trump entered into an agreement to obstruct the Joint Session of Congress by unlawfully having Vice President Pence reject or delay the counting of electoral votes on January 6, 2021. Specifically, on December 23, 2020, and January 3, 2021, respectively, Eastman wrote two-page and six-page memos outlining a detailed plan of action for Vice President Pence to declare President Trump the re-elected president. On January 2, Eastman appeared on the Bannon War Room and publicly spoke about the illegal conduct of the 2020 presidential election and claimed that more than enough fraud had occurred to affect the outcome of the election.

On January 4, 2021, President Trump, Vice President Pence, Eastman, Jacob, and Short met at the Oval Office to discuss Eastman's memo, at which time Eastman presented Vice President Pence with two options: reject electors or delay the count. On January 5, Eastman met with Jacob and Short and asked again that Vice President Pence reject the electors and later, only after Jacob (Vice President Pence's counsel) refused to capitulate to Eastman's requests, in an evening phone call with President Trump and Jacob on January 5th, Eastman proposed that the Vice President delay the count of electoral votes the following day. A second phone call Eastman had with Jacob on the evening of January 5th involved a renewed discussion about a delaying to allow for further consideration by the state legislatures, in which it was noted that while some individual Republican state legislators forwarded letters seeking delay of the electoral count, numerous state legislature leaders had stated they had no interest in taking further action and no legislative body in those states had indicated that they were interesting in revisiting the question of who had won the state in the 2020 presidential election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On January 6, 2021, at 1:00 a.m., President Trump tweeted "If Vice President @Mike_Pence comes through for us, we will win the Presidency . . . Mike can send it back." (Exh. 298.) At 8:17 a.m., President Trump tweeted again that "States want to correct their votes . . . All Mike Pence has to do is send them back to the States, AND WE WIN. Do it Mike, this is a time for extreme courage." (Exh. 299, p. 2.) Later that day, Eastman gave his remarks at the Ellipse, where he made false claims about the conduct of the election to the large crowd of protestors that had gathered. Eastman also told the crowd that they were "demanding" that at 1:00 p.m. Vice President Pence delay the electoral count so states could investigate.

Eastman's speech was followed by President Trump, who not only made similarly false and misleading statements to the crowd but who made multiple statements about Vice President Pence "doing the right thing" by unilaterally delaying the electoral count. Then, at 2:24 p.m., President Trump tweeted that "Mike Pence didn't have the courage to do what should have been done to protect our Country and our Constitution, giving States a chance to certify a corrected set of facts, not the fraudulent or inaccurate ones which they were asked to previously certify. USA demands the truth!" (Exh. 300.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Later that day, while the Capitol was under attack, Jacob emailed Eastman stating, "thanks to your bullshit, we are now under siege." (Exh. 67.) Eastman responded to Jacob at 2:25 p.m.:

> My 'bullshit'—seriously? You think you can't adjourn the session because the ECA says no adjournment, while the compelling evidence that the election was stolen continues to build and is already overwhelming. The 'siege' is because YOU and your boss did not do what was necessary to allow this to be aired in a public way so the American people can see for themselves what happened.

(Ibid.)

In another email to Eastman that same day, Jacob highlighted the gravity of Eastman's conduct:

> Respectfully, it was gravely, gravely irresponsible for you to entice the President with an academic theory that had no legal viability, and that you well know we would lose before any judge who heard and decided the case. And if the courts decline to hear it, I suppose it could only be decided in the streets. The knowing amplification of that theory through numerous surrogates, whipping large numbers of people into a frenzy over something with no chance of ever attaining legal force through actual process of law, has led us to where we are. . . [A]dvising the President of the United States, in an incredibly constitutionally fraught moment, requires a seriousness of purpose, an understanding of the difference between abstract theory and legal reality, and an appreciation of the power of both the office and the bully pulpit that, in my judgment, was entirely absent here.

(Exh. 69, pp. 2-3.)

Eastman pressed on. He emailed Jacob again at 6:09 p.m., advocating for an adjournment and criticizing Vice President Pence's Dear Colleague letter. (Exhs. 68, p.1; 69, p. 2.) At 9:44 p.m., after the electoral count had resumed, Eastman again emailed Jacob, stating: "I implore you to consider one more relatively minor violation and adjourn for 10 days to allow the legislatures to finish their investigations, as well as to allow a full forensic audit of the massive amount of illegal activity that has occurred here." (Id.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Upon consideration of the totality of the facts, the court finds weighty circumstantial evidence demonstrating a collaborative effort between Eastman and President Trump to impede the counting of elector votes on January 6, 2021, as articulated in Eastman's memos. (See United States v. Kaplan, supra, 836 F.3d at p. 1212 [an agreement to commit a crime "'can be explicit or tacit, and can be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence'"].) There is also extensive direct evidence demonstrating that each party involved in this plan actively participated in overt acts through in person meetings, communications with Vice President Pence and his counsel, and in public remarks to advance their shared objective—i.e., to have Vice President Pence reject or delay the counting of electoral votes on January 6. Furthermore, the court has previously determined, in the aforementioned counts, that Eastman's actions were carried out with deceit or dishonesty, as he was aware that his plan was unlawful and lacked any factual or legal support. Here, all elements of 18 U.S.C. § 371 are established.

Based on this evidence, the court finds that OCTC has met its burden of showing by clear and convincing evidence that Eastman violated section 6068, subdivision (a), by violating 18 U.S.C § 371 as charged in count one.

Aggravation and Mitigation

The parties must prove aggravating or mitigating factors by clear and convincing evidence. (Stds. 1.5 and 1.6.)[98]

Aggravating Circumstances

The court finds aggravation for three factors: multiple acts of wrongdoing, lack of candor and indifference.

[98] All references to standards (std.) are to the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Multiple acts of Wrongdoing (Std. 1.5(b)): Substantial Weight

Eastman is culpable of multiple acts of misconduct, including seeking to mislead the United States Supreme Court in Texas v. Pennsylvania and seeking to mislead the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia in Trump v. Kemp. Eastman has engaged in other misconduct including six counts of moral turpitude by making numerous false and misleading statements to the general public and others, as well as one count of moral turpitude by encouraging Vice President Pence to disregard properly certified electoral votes and delay or adjourn the electoral count. Eastman is also culpable of failing to support the laws of the United States by violating 18 U.S.C. § 371. Given the numerous and serious transgressions, the court affords this aggravating factor substantial weight. (See In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498, 555 [multiple acts of misconduct as aggravation are not limited to the counts pleaded]; see also In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160, 168 [53 threatening and abusive messages made over an approximately 8-month period found to be multiple acts of wrongdoing in aggravation]; In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308, 317 [24 counts of misconduct assigned significant weight in aggravation].)

Intentional Misconduct, Bad Faith or Dishonesty (Std. 1.5(d)): No Weight

Standard 1.5(d) provides that aggravating circumstances may include intentional misconduct, bad faith, or dishonesty. OCTC argues that Eastman's actions were aggravated by his bad faith in pursuing a course of conduct to overturn the 2020 presidential election, which he knew lacked factual or legal merit. However, OCTC has not presented additional facts, separate and distinct from Eastman's misconduct leading to culpability, to support this aggravating circumstance. Therefore, the court assigns no aggravation as Eastman's alleged acts of bad faith were already considered in establishing culpability under sections 6068, subds. (a) and (d), and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

6106. (In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402, 409, fn. 13 [improper to consider in aggravation factual findings already used to determine culpability].)

Significant Harm (Std. 1.5(j)): No Weight

Standard 1.5(j) allows for aggravation when an attorney's actions result in "significant harm to the client, the public, or the administration of justice." OCTC contends that Eastman's misconduct contributed to the violent attack on the Capitol on January 6, 2021. Additionally, OCTC claims that documents and testimony from multiple current and former state election officials demonstrate the harm caused by Eastman's misconduct, including the expenditure of resources to counter election disinformation, increased security measures, wasteful audits of the 2020 presidential election results, erosion of trust in election integrity, turnover in election offices, and harassment and threats against officials and their offices.

While the court acknowledges that there has been significant harm to the general public as evidenced by ongoing distrust in some of our democratic institutions and the electoral process, OCTC has not presented specific evidence to establish that the alleged harm occurred as a result of Eastman's actions. OCTC did not provide any witness or other evidence showing that Eastman's statements or actions, such as his speech on January 6, contributed to the attack on the Capital or that Eastman's peddling of disinformation regarding the 2020 presidential election specifically caused the harm unfortunately experienced by election workers, state election officials or the institutions they serve. The court rejects OCTC's argument that it is exempt from proving that Eastman was the cause of the harm. Under standard 1.5, OCTC must show aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Here, the connection between Eastman's actions and the alleged harm remains speculative. (Calvert v. State Bar (1991) 54 Cal.3d 765, 784-785 [significant harm to client was not appropriate factor in aggravation without evidence that client suffered harm attributable to the attorney's misconduct].)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

OCTC's other argument that Eastman bears responsibility for the actions of others—presumably referring to then President Trump and Giuliani—based on a "concert of action" theory, is unpersuasive. OCTC cites to Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal.3d 588, which examined the principle of group liability in tort when multiple parties collaboratively commit a tortious act. The court declines to adopt a theory of tort liability applied in civil cases under a different standard of proof than that required in a disciplinary proceeding. Extending such a theory of liability from tort law to this case would burden Eastman for the independent actions of others without OCTC meeting the requisite burden of proof for aggravation in disciplinary cases.

Based on this record, OCTC has not shown by clear and convincing evidence that Eastman caused the alleged harm. Therefore, the court assigns no aggravation under this factor.

Indifference (Std. 1.5(k)): Substantial Weight

"Indifference toward rectification or atonement for the consequences of the misconduct" is an aggravating circumstance. (Std. 1.5(k).) This case presents a clear instance of such indifference by Eastman. While the law does not require false penitence, it does require that an attorney accept responsibility for wrongful acts and come to grips with culpability. (In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502, 511.) Eastman has failed to do so.

Despite the compelling evidence against him, as established in the culpability findings above, Eastman remains defiant, refusing to acknowledge any impropriety whatsoever in his actions surrounding his efforts to dispute the 2020 presidential election results. His lack of insight into the wrongfulness of his misconduct is deeply troubling. For instance, he testified he gave no consideration to the effect his televised statements made on January 6, 2021, at the Ellipse—implying electoral fraud from electronic voting—would have on the crowd, which he estimated to include one-half to a quarter million people. Eastman continues to hold the view that his statements were factually and legally justified. He demonstrated distain for these proceedings by characterizing them as a political persecution, claiming that the disciplinary charges against him contained false and misleading statements, and that those who brought them should themselves be disbarred.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman's complete denial of wrongdoing, coupled with his attempts to discredit legitimate disciplinary proceedings are concerning. While Eastman is entitled to defend himself, his conduct goes beyond this, revealing a complete failure to understand the wrongfulness of his actions. His unwillingness to consider the impropriety of his conduct goes "beyond tenacity to truculence." (In re Morse (1995) 11 Cal.4th 184, 209 [unwillingness to consider appropriateness of legal challenge or acknowledge its lack of merit is aggravating].) Accordingly, the court assigns substantial weight in aggravation under this factor. (In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366, 380-381 [ongoing failure to acknowledge wrongdoing instills concern that attorney may commit future misconduct].)

Lack of Candor (Std. 1.5(l)): Limited Weight

Aggravating circumstances in disciplinary proceedings may include lack of candor to the State Bar or State Bar Court during disciplinary investigations or proceedings. OCTC argues that Eastman demonstrated a lack of candor at trial because his testimony was evasive, inconsistent, and untruthful with respect to numerous issues such as whether there was outcome-determinative fraud in the seven states he contested and whether he urged Vice President Pence to reject certified slates of electors.

The court, in determining culpability, has rejected certain aspects of Eastman's unconvincing testimony in favor of more compelling evidence in the overall record. Eastman's testimony seemed evasive and inconsistent at times and there is limited clear and convincing evidence to establish that Eastman was dishonest in his testimony. (See In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61, 67 [this factor must be supported by finding that testimony lacked candor or was dishonest].) Nonetheless, the court finds that Eastman lacked candor when he falsely testified that he did not exert pressure on Jacobs to reject the certified Biden electors. Jacob's records from January 5, 2021, revealed that Eastman urged Vice President Pence to reject the Biden electors, and Eastman's January 6, 2021 email acknowledged that the option of rejecting the electors had been discussed and dismissed the day before. Accordingly, the court affords limited weight in aggravation for this factor.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mitigating Circumstances

The court finds mitigation for three factors; no prior discipline, cooperation, and good character.

No Prior Record of Discipline (Std. 1.6(a)): Moderate Weight

The absence of any prior record of discipline over many years of practice, coupled with present misconduct which is not likely to recur, is a mitigating circumstance. (Std. 1.6(a).)

Eastman was admitted to the State Bar of California in 1997. At the time of his misconduct, he had practiced law for approximately 23 years without discipline. This length of discipline-free practice satisfies the first prong of the standard—no prior record of discipline over many years of practice—and generally warrants substantial mitigation. (See, e.g., Hawes v. State Bar (1990) 51 Cal.3d 587, 596 [significant weight for more than 10 years of practice].) However, the misconduct at issue is quite serious and, in consideration of his ongoing lack of insight or remorse, the facts of this case do not reflect aberrational misconduct, thus diminishing the mitigating weight of this factor. (Cooper v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 1016, 1029 [where misconduct is serious, long-term discipline-free practice is most relevant where misconduct is aberrational].) Under these circumstances, the court affords moderate weight in mitigation for Eastman's lack of prior discipline.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Good Faith (Std. 1.6(b)): No Weight

Eastman may be entitled to mitigation if he can establish a "good faith belief that is honestly held and objectively reasonable." (Std. 1.6(b).) Eastman contends that he is entitled to mitigation for his good faith belief that his statements and conduct did not violate any ethical standards.

As discussed, ante, the court finds among other things that Eastman made multiple false and misleading statements regarding the conduct of the 2020 presidential election and Vice President Pence's powers to refuse to count or delay counting properly certified slates of electoral votes on January 6, 2021. Even if Eastman honestly believed he acted in good faith, it was not objectively reasonable for him to have such belief. The circumstances of this case preclude any finding of good faith mitigation. (Sternlieb v. State Bar (1990) 52 Cal.3d 317, 331 [attorney's honest belief not mitigating because belief was unreasonable].) Therefore, the court assigns no weight in mitigation for Eastman's assertion of good faith belief.

Lack of Harm (Std. 1.6(c)): No Weight

Standard 1.6(c) provides for mitigation where lack of harm to clients, the public, or the administration of justice can be established.

Eastman argues that OCTC failed to present evidence demonstrating that his actions caused any harm; and by implication that there is no harm. This argument is fundamentally flawed. The absence of evidence of harm does not constitute evidence of lack of harm. Eastman bears the burden to show mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. (Std. 1.6). He cannot simply shift the burden of proof onto OCTC without providing any evidence to support his assertion that no harm occurred. While it is true that OCTC did not present evidence to establish that Eastman's actions caused significant harm, this does not absolve him of his responsibility to demonstrate that his actions did not cause harm to his client, the public, or the administration of justice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Without meeting this burden, his argument for mitigation on the grounds of a lack of harm fails. The court declines to assign any credit for this factor.

Cooperation (Std. 1.6(e)): Limited Weight

Mitigation may be assigned under standard 1.6(e) for cooperation with the State Bar. Eastman demonstrated cooperation with OCTC by entering into a stipulation as to facts. Eastman, however, did not admit culpability and "more extensive weight in mitigation is accorded those who, where appropriate, willingly admit their culpability as well as the facts." (In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179, 190.) Also, the nature of the stipulation, which admitted facts that were easily proven, obviated very little in terms of OCTC's preparation for trial. (In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41, 50 [stipulation to easily provable facts mitigating if facts assisted prosecution of case].) Thus, the court affords limited weight for Eastman's cooperation.

Extraordinary Good Character (Std. 1.6(f))—Substantial Weight

Eastman may obtain mitigation for "extraordinary good character attested to by a wide range of references in the legal and general communities, who are aware of the full extent of the misconduct." (Std. 1.6(f).)

Eastman presented 14 witness declarations and five live witnesses (four of whom also provided declarations) in support of his good character from a wide range of references in the legal and general communities, including a priest, an attorney, a writer, the Director of Administration at Claremont Institute, an associate professor at Benedictine College, a senior fellow and member of the board of directors of the Claremont Institute and Professor Emeritus at Azusa Pacific University, a managing editor of a magazine, the Director of the Claremont

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Institute, a retired attorney and former law clerk to former Supreme Court Justice Byron White, a former Attorney General of the United States, an Emeritus Dean and Professor at Michigan State University, a former justice of the California Supreme Court and United States Court of Appeals, a retired judge of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, a Professor Emeritus of Law at Cleveland State University and an attorney and adjunct professor at Trinity Law School. The court gives serious consideration to the attorney declarations in support of Eastman's character. (In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309, 319 [attorneys and judges have "strong interest in maintaining the honest administration of justice"].)

Further, the court finds that the majority of these witnesses, who have known Eastman professionally for a period ranging from eight to 45 years, have shown understanding and familiarity with these disciplinary proceedings and the claims leveled against Eastman. Despite their awareness of the pending charges, the witnesses consistently and uniformly attested to Eastman's positive character traits, such as his professionalism, integrity, honesty, fairness, and respect. The court finds strong evidence of Eastman's good character and accords substantial weight in mitigation. (See In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576, 591–592 [significant mitigation for good character for three witnesses who had longstanding familiarity with attorney and broad knowledge of good character, work habits, and professional skills].)

Discussion

Professional discipline aims to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to preserve public confidence in the profession; and to maintain high standards for attorneys. (Std. 1.1.) In its analysis, the court first considers the standards, which are not binding but entitled to great weight. (In re Silverton (2005) 36 Cal.4th 81, 91-92.) Although not mandatory, a compelling, well-defined reason must be articulated for any deviation from the standards. (Aronin v. State Bar (1990) 52 Cal.3d 276, 291.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Standard 1.7 provides that any aggravating or mitigating circumstance should be considered alone and in balance with other factors. If two or more acts of misconduct are present, the sanction shall be the most severe applicable. (Std. 1.7(a).) Several standards apply here. Standard 2.11 provides that "[d]isbarment or actual suspension is the presumed sanction for an act of moral turpitude, dishonesty . . . intentional or grossly negligent misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact. The degree of sanction depends on the magnitude of the misconduct; the extent to which the misconduct harmed or misled the victim, which may include the adjudicator; the impact on the administration of justice, if any; and the extent to which the misconduct related to the [attorney's] practice of law." Standard 2.12(a) also applies, and similarly provides that disbarment or actual suspension is the presumed sanction for a violation of section 6068, subdivisions (a) and (d). OCTC argues that Eastman should be disbarred, while Eastman disputes all charges and seeks dismissal.

As an initial matter, the court rejects Eastman's contention that this disciplinary proceeding and Eastman's resultant discipline is motivated by his political views or his representation of President Trump or President Trump's Campaign. Rather, Eastman's wrongdoing constitutes exceptionally serious ethical violations warranting severe professional discipline. As stated by Earl C. and others, "there is no right way to do the wrong thing." As counsel for President Trump during a disputed presidential election, Eastman made multiple patently false and misleading statements in court filings, in public remarks heard by countless Americans and to others regarding the conduct of the 2020 presidential election and Vice President Pence's authority to refuse to count or delay counting properly certified slates of electoral votes on January 6, 2021. These statements, made with varying degrees of intent, were improperly aimed at casting doubt on the legitimate election results and support for the baseless claim that the presidency was stolen from his client—all while relying on his credentials as an attorney and constitutional scholar to lend credibility to his unfounded claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Even after courts in key states authoritatively rejected unsupported allegations of outcome-determinative fraud in the election, Eastman persisted in proposing a legally unsustainable strategy. From November 2020 forward, as his many legal challenges failed, Eastman substantively advanced the false narrative that widespread fraud had tainted the election, and that Vice President Pence possessed the power to contravene the constitutional electoral process. His demonstrated intent was to foment loss of public confidence in the integrity of the 2020 election and persuade Vice President Pence to refuse to count or delay the counting of electoral votes on January 6. Most of his misconduct occurred squarely within the course and scope of Eastman's representation of President Trump and culminated with a shared plan to obstruct the lawful function of the government.

While attorneys have a duty to advocate zealously for their clients, they must do so within the bounds of ethical and legal constraints. Eastman's actions transgressed those ethical limits by advocating, participating in and pursuing a strategy to challenge the results of the 2020 presidential election that lacked evidentiary or legal support. Vigorous advocacy does not absolve Eastman of his professional responsibilities around honesty and upholding the rule of law. While his actions are mitigated by his many years of discipline-free practice, cooperation, and prior good character, his wrongdoing is substantially aggravated by his multiple offenses, lack of candor and indifference. Given the serious and extensive nature of Eastman's unethical actions, the most severe available professional sanction is warranted to protect the public and preserve the public confidence in the legal system.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After careful review, the court could not find any controlling case law directly on point or substantially analogous to the facts of this case. OCTC cites to Segretti v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 878, and argues that, here, disbarment is warranted because the misconduct in this case exceeds that of Segretti—who received a two-year actual suspension. The court agrees.

In Segretti, the attorney pleaded guilty to two federal offenses related to his work on President Richard Nixon's 1972 reelection campaign, including violating 18 U.S.C. section 612 (publication or distribution of political statements) and 18 U.S.C section 371 (conspiracy). Among other things, Segretti distributed letters containing false accusations about other candidates for president in order to create confusion among the candidates. The court found Segretti's actions involved moral turpitude as he "repeatedly committed acts of deceit designed to subvert the free electoral process." (Id. at p. 887.) Segretti had significant mitigation. He was only 30 years old at the time of the misconduct and thought he was acting under the umbrella of the White House. The court emphasized that Segretti's misconduct "was not committed in his capacity as an attorney" and that he recognized the wrongfulness of his acts, expressed regret, and cooperated with the investigating agencies. (Id. at p. 888.) Segretti received a two-year actual suspension.

The scale and egregiousness of Eastman's unethical actions far surpasses the misconduct at issue in Segretti. Unlike Segretti whose offenses occurred outside his role as an attorney, Eastman's wrongdoing was committed directly in the course and scope of his representation of President Trump and the Trump Campaign. This is an important factor, as it constitutes a fundamental breach of an attorney's core ethical duties. Additionally, while the Segretti court found compelling mitigation based on his expressed remorse and recognition of his wrongdoing, no such mitigating factor is present with Eastman. To the contrary, Eastman has exhibited an unwillingness to acknowledge any ethical lapses regarding his actions, demonstrating an apparent inability to accept responsibility. This lack of remorse and accountability presents a significant risk that Eastman may engage in further unethical conduct, compounding the threat to the public. Given the greater magnitude of Eastman's transgressions compared to Segretti and the heightened risk of future misconduct from his complete denial of wrongdoing, imposing greater discipline than in Segretti is appropriate to protect the public and uphold public confidence in the legal system.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Guided by the standards, case law, and the purposes of attorney discipline, the court recommends that Eastman be disbarred.

Monetary Sanctions are Warranted

As the NDC, filed after April 1, 2020, provided Eastman with notice that he could be subject to monetary sanctions, the court must make a recommendation to the Supreme Court regarding monetary sanctions. (See Rules Proc. of State Bar,[99] rule 5.137(E)(1), (H).) Here, the court recommends that Eastman pay $10,000 in monetary sanctions.

The court recognizes that the recommended amount is a deviation from rule 5.137(E)(2)(a), which provides for monetary sanctions up to $5,000 for disbarment. However, rule 5.137(E)(3) authorizes the court, in its discretion, to deviate from the range set forth in subdivision (E)(2)(a) "to a maximum of $5,000 for each violation, and $50,000 for each disciplinary order." (Rule 5.137(E)(3), italics added.) Here, a deviation from the range provided in subdivision (E)(2)(a) is appropriate under the facts and circumstances of this case given the gravity of Eastman's misconduct involving multiple acts of moral turpitude and the substantial aggravation, including his refusal to acknowledge any impropriety in his actions. Specifically, the court recommends that Eastman pay $5,000 in sanctions for his misconduct in connection with filing several pleadings seeking to mislead the courts. The court also recommends that [99] Further references to rules are to this source, unless otherwise specified.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Eastman pay another $5,000, for a total of $10,000, for making numerous false and misleading statements regarding the conduct of the 2020 presidential election and Vice President Pence's authority to refuse to count or delay counting properly certified slates of electoral votes and for his collaborative efforts with President Trump to impede the counting of electoral votes.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is recommended that John Charles Eastman, State Bar Number 193726, be disbarred from the practice of law in California and that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys.

CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, RULE 9.20

It is recommended that John Charles Eastman be ordered to comply with California Rules of Court, rule 9.20, and to perform the acts specified in (a) and (c) of that rule within 30 and 40 calendar days, respectively, after the date the Supreme Court order imposing discipline in this matter is filed.[100] (Athearn v. State Bar (1982) 32 Cal.3d 38, 45 [the operative date for identification of clients being represented in pending matters and others to be notified is the filing date of the Supreme Court order imposing discipline].)

MONETARY SANCTIONS

It is further recommended that John Charles Eastman be ordered to pay monetary sanctions to the State Bar of California Client Security Fund in the amount of $10,000 in accordance with Business and Professions Code section 6086.13 and rule 5.137 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. Monetary sanctions are enforceable as a money judgment and may be collected by the State Bar through any means permitted by law. Monetary sanctions must be

---

[100] John Charles Eastman is required to file a rule 9.20(c) affidavit even if he has no clients to notify on the date the Supreme Court files its order in this proceeding. (Powers v. State Bar (1988) 44 Cal.3d 337, 341.) In addition to being punished as a crime or contempt, an attorney's failure to comply with rule 9.20 is, inter alia, cause for disbarment, suspension, revocation of any pending disciplinary probation, and denial of an application for reinstatement after disbarment. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.20(d).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

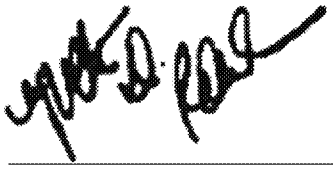
paid in full as a condition of reinstatement or return to active status, unless time for payment is extended pursuant to rule 5.137 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar.

COSTS

It is further recommended that costs be awarded to the State Bar in accordance with Business and Professions Code section 6086.10, and are enforceable both as provided in Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 and as a money judgment, and may be collected by the State Bar through any means permitted by law. Unless the time for payment of discipline costs is extended pursuant to subdivision (c) of section 6086.10, costs assessed against an attorney who is actually suspended or disbarred must be paid as a condition of applying for reinstatement or return to active status.

INVOLUNTARY INACTIVE ENROLLMENT

John Charles Eastman is ordered transferred to involuntary inactive status pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4). His inactive enrollment will be effective three calendar days after this order is served and will terminate upon the effective date of the Supreme Court's order imposing discipline herein, or as provided for by rule 5.111(D)(2) of the State Bar Rules of Procedure or as otherwise ordered by the Supreme Court pursuant to its plenary jurisdiction.



Dated: March 27, 2024

YVETTE D. ROLAND
Judge of the State Bar Court

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/29/2024 12:00:00 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Michael Pomante [michael@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Review of RNC list maintenance allegations
Attachments: (Doc 001) 2024-03-13 Complaint[10].pdf; Michigan NVRA Letter[81].pdf; Works Cited for MI Voter List Lawsuite.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

If you'd like to discuss any of this with us, let us know.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/27/2024 4:16:31 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]
Subject: AFPI letter

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heads up re AFPI letter on non-citizen voting if you haven't received it.

https://dailycaller.com/2024/04/26/america-first-policy-institute-battleground-elections/

Get Outlook for iOS

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 4/29/2024 8:57:29 PM
To: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Keefer v. Biden (PA Kaardal case)--privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Dan and Heather,

I hope you had a good weekend. On Friday, the Supreme Court docketed a petition for certiorari before judgment from Erick Kaardal on behalf of the group of Pennsylvania legislators he represents. (Docket is here.) DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

We'll keep you apprised of developments. Please let me know if you have any questions or would like to discuss in the meantime.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/2/2024 5:41:38 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: RNC MTD response in NV--privileged
Attachments: 40. Response to SOS MTD.pdf; S REP 103-6.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

I've attached the RNC's April 29 response to the motion to dismiss in its Nevada NVRA list maintenance case, in case it's helpful to you to get a head start. The reply is due on May 20.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/2/2024 5:41:38 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: RNC MTD response in NV--privileged
Attachments: 40. Response to SOS MTD.pdf; S REP 103-6.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

I've attached the RNC's April 29 response to the motion to dismiss in its Nevada NVRA list maintenance case, in case it's helpful to you to get a head start. The reply is due on May 20.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jeffrey F. Barr (NV Bar No. 7269)
8275 South Eastern Avenue, Suite 200
Las Vegas, NV 89123
(702) 631-4755
barrj@ashcraftbarr.com

Thomas R. McCarthy* (VA Bar No. 47145)
Gilbert C. Dickey* (VA Bar No. 98858)
Conor D. Woodfin* (VA Bar No. 98937)
1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
(703) 243-9423
tom@consovoymccarthy.com
gilbert@consovoymccarthy.com
conor@consovoymccarthy.com

Sigal Chattah (NV Bar No. 8264)
5875 S. Rainbow Blvd #204
Las Vegas, NV 89118
(702) 360-6200
sigal@thegoodlawyerlv.com

Pro hac vice application pending*

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, NEVADA REPUBLICAN PARTY, and SCOTT JOHNSTON, Plaintiffs,

v.

FRANCISCO AGUILAR, in his official capacity as Nevada Secretary of State; LORENA PORTILLO, in her official capacity as the Registrar of Voters for Clark County; WILLIAM "SCOTT" HOEN, AMY BURGANS, STACI LINDBERG, and JIM HINDLE, in their official capacities as County Clerks, Defendants.

No. 2:24-cv-00518-CDS-MDC

RESPONSE IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO DISMISS [ECF NO.26]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

INTRODUCTION

The arguments in the Secretary's motion to dismiss are often raised, and equally often rejected. Most recently, the Western District of North Carolina denied a motion to dismiss NVRA claims brought by voters in Green v. Bell, 2023 WL 2572210, at *7 (W.D.N.C. Mar. 20, 2023). Before that, the Western District of Michigan denied motions to dismiss in two different cases. See Pub. Int. Legal Found. v. Benson [PILF], 2022 WL 21295936, at *13 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 25, 2022); Daunt v. Benson, Doc. 376 at 19, No. 1:20-cv-522 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 3, 2020) (oral opinion, attached as Ex. A). And these recent cases rest on a body of precedent discussed in this brief. The Green case was for North Carolina what the Daunt case was for Michigan, and what this case is for Nevada.

All of these cases involved similar plaintiffs, raising a similar claim, based on similar evidence, in a similar complaint, following similar pre-suit notice. When North Carolina's and Michigan's chief election officials moved to dismiss on the three grounds raised here—lack of pre-suit notice, lack of Article III standing, and failure to state a claim—the district courts denied the motions in full. Instead of stopping this case before it starts, this Court should follow the well-established caselaw before it, deny the Secretary's motion to dismiss, and allow this case to proceed.

BACKGROUND

Nevada has stopped maintaining clean and accurate voter rolls. Five of Nevada's seventeen counties have registration rates over 90%. Compl. (Doc. 1) ¶¶50-51. Although registering 90% of eligible voters is a laudable goal, registration rates across the State and nation are closer to 70%. ¶¶53-56. Inflated rolls like these are a telltale sign that officials are failing to remove voters who have become ineligible. ¶57. In fact, three of the five counties with inflated rolls have registration rates over 100%—a mathematical impossibility. ¶50. The Justice Department and others have sued jurisdictions with similarly inflated registration rates, and those jurisdictions quickly admitted liability or agreed to clean up their rolls. ¶¶73-78.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The impossibly high registration rates are not the only indicators that Nevada is failing to maintain its rolls. Several counties have experienced high rates of residency changes in recent years, but they failed to remove voters for residency changes during that period. Compl. ¶63. Some counties removed none at all. ¶64. In addition, the State as a whole reports far more inactive voters than the national average, suggesting that Nevada is keeping inactive voters on the rolls rather than removing them. ¶66. Individual counties have rates of inactive voters that are double or triple the national and state averages, which is strong evidence that they are not making a reasonable effort to remove outdated registrations. ¶¶65, 68-69. In fact, 5,000 inactive registrations currently listed have been on the rolls for two full election cycles, which means they should have been removed after the 2022 election. ¶¶67. They weren't removed, which is direct evidence that Nevada is failing to fulfill its obligations under the NVRA.

Nevada is violating federal law. One of the NVRA's "main objectives" is to force States to "remov[e] ineligible persons from [their] voter registration rolls." Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Inst., 138 S. Ct. 1833, 1838 (2018). According to the bipartisan Carter-Baker Commission, inaccurate rolls are "the root" cause of "most problems encountered in U.S. elections." Compl. ¶38. Bloated rolls invite unlawful voting, dilute lawful votes, and decrease voters' confidence in elections. ¶¶38-41. Fraud, in particular, "is a real risk" that "has had serious consequences" in various States. Brnovich v. DNC, 141 S. Ct. 2321, 2348 (2021). The NVRA thus requires States to "conduct" a program that makes a "reasonable effort" to "remove the names of ineligible voters" who move or die from the rolls. 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4). Congress created a private right of action that allows individuals who serve a pre-suit notice to sue States that violate the NVRA. Id. §20510(b). According to Congress, this scheme "ensure[s] that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained," which safeguards both the "fundamental right" to vote and the "integrity of the electoral process." Id. §20501(a)(1), (b)(3)-(4).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiffs—the Republican National Committee, the Nevada Republican Party, and Scott Johnston—brought this suit to remedy Nevada's violations. The RNC is the national committee of the Republican Party and represents over 30 million registered Republicans throughout the country. Compl. ¶¶9-10. The Republican Party of Nevada is a political party in Nevada that represents over 550,000 registered Republicans in the State. ¶¶15-16. Together, the RNC and the NVGOP represent the interests of the Republican Party and its members throughout the country and the State. They rely on voter rolls daily. Inflated rolls cause the party to waste resources recruiting and communicating with ineligible voters, which diverts resources from other mission-critical activities. ¶¶13-14. And to fulfill its mission, the Republican Party must monitor States to ensure they are properly maintaining their voter rolls. ¶13. When States such as Nevada fail to maintain their rolls, the RNC is forced to divert resources to combat the presence of ineligible voters on the registration lists. ¶¶12-13, 21-23.

The RNC and NVGOP are joined in this suit by Scott Johnston, a registered voter in Washoe County. Compl. ¶18. Mr. Johnston is a resident of Nevada who votes in local and statewide elections. ¶¶18-19. He is also active in electoral politics and has held various leadership roles in the Republican Party. ¶20. Nevada's sloppy list maintenance undermines Plaintiffs' confidence in elections and risks diluting the votes of their members and individual voters such as Mr. Johnston. To redress their injuries, Plaintiffs sued the Secretary of State—the chief election official responsible for list maintenance in Nevada. Compl. ¶24. Plaintiffs also sued the registrars and clerks of five counties with particularly problematic voter rolls. Compl. ¶¶25-29. Those county officials play a direct role in maintaining accurate voter registration records. ¶¶25-29.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Before suing, Plaintiffs served the Secretary with a pre-suit notice. Compl. ¶¶79-82. The notice was fairly detailed. See Notice (Doc. 1-1). It identified the RNC, the NVGOP, and Mr. Johnston by name. Id. at 1. It reminded the Secretary that the NVRA obligates Nevada "'to conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters' due to death or change of residence." Id. (quoting 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4)). It offered a wide range of statistics, including U.S. census data, to show that voter registration rates in many counties are abnormally or impossibly high. Id. at 3. It identified those counties by name and alleged that, as a result, Nevada is "violating Section 8 of the NVRA." Id. at 2. It addressed "the curative steps needed to bring the state into compliance" and warned that doing so was needed to "avoid litigation." Id. The Secretary responded one month later, denying any liability under the NVRA. Compl. ¶22. When Nevada failed to remedy its violation within the statutory timeframe, Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit. The Secretary now moves to dismiss this case under Rules 12(b)(6) and 12(b)(1). See Mot. (Doc. 26).

LEGAL STANDARDS

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) "tests" whether the complaint satisfies Rule 8. Thomson v. Caesars Holdings Inc., 661 F. Supp. 3d 1043, 1052 (D. Nev. 2023) (Silva, J.). Rule 8 in turn requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). "Specific facts are not necessary; the statement need only give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93 (2007) (cleaned up). This standard is "liberal." Id. at 94. Courts must accept the complaint's factual allegations as true, allow all reasonable inferences from those allegations, and construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Edwards v. Signify Health, Inc., No. 2:22-cv-95, 2023 WL 3467558, at *2 (D. Nev. May 12, 2023) (Silva, J.).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

After drawing all those inference in Plaintiffs' favor, the question is whether the complaint states a claim that is "'plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009). Plausible means a "reasonable inference that the defendant is liable." Id. It does not mean that liability is "probable," id., or even that Plaintiffs are "likely to succeed," Produce Pay, Inc. v. Izguerra Produce, Inc., 39 F.4th 1158, 1166 (9th Cir. 2022). "If there are two alternative explanations, one advanced by defendant and the other advanced by plaintiff, both of which are plausible, plaintiff's complaint survives a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)." Starr v. Baca, 652 F.3d 1202, 1216 (9th Cir. 2011). To the extent the "parties proffer evidence" in their filings, "the court may not weigh [that] evidence in deciding a motion to dismiss." Neilson v. Union Bank of Cal., N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1151 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (collecting cases).

When assessing a claim's plausibility, courts generally "'may not consider any material beyond the pleadings.'" Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001). Courts can consider "'the face of the complaint [and] materials incorporated into the complaint by reference,'" such as Plaintiffs' pre-suit notice. See In re Sorrento Therapeutics, Inc. Sec. Litig., 97 F.4th 634, 641 (9th Cir. 2024). Courts also can take judicial notice of official documents for their "existence," but not for their "truth." Lee, 250 F.3d at 690. And in no event can the court take "judicial notice of disputed facts," id., or use outside materials to contradict the factual allegations or inferences in the complaint. Khoja v.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 1003, 1014 (9th Cir. 2018). An outside document that "merely creates a defense to the well-pled allegations in the complaint" cannot "defeat otherwise cognizable claims." Id.

The same rules apply to the Rule 12(b)(1) motion. "When 'standing is challenged on the basis of the pleadings,'" the Court "must 'accept as true all material allegations of the complaint' and 'construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party.'" Cal. Rest. Ass'n v. City of Berkeley, 89 F.4th 1094, 1100 (9th Cir. 2024) (amended op.) (quoting Pennell v. City of San Jose, 485 U.S. 1, 7 (1988)). At this stage, "general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice," because the court must "presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim." Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992) (cleaned up).

ARGUMENT

I. Plaintiffs Provided Pre-Suit Notice.

The NVRA allows individuals to sue once the State's chief election official receives "written notice of the violation." 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)-(2). No one disputes that, before filing this lawsuit, Plaintiffs gave the Secretary written notice of the violation. The Secretary says that pre-suit notice did not "plausibly allege any violation." Mot. 11-12. But the "[n]otice is an 'announcement,'" not a pleading. Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *3. No court requires the notice letter to satisfy a Rule 8 pleading standard. "Plaintiffs' pre-suit notice announces a violation of the NVRA, so it satisfies the statute's notice requirement." Id.

Plaintiffs' notice satisfied the NVRA. It expressly put the Secretary on "statutory notice" that litigation was forthcoming. Notice 1, 4, 5. It identified the three plaintiffs here by name. Id. at 1. It identified the exact provision of the NVRA that the State is violating: section 8's requirement to conduct a program that reasonably removes ineligible voters who have moved or died. Id. at 1, 2. The notice identified counties by name that had unusually or impossibly high registration rates. Id. And it explained what data Plaintiffs used—a comparison of U.S. Census data to the State's list of registered voters—to make that determination. Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Courts have consistently upheld notices nearly identical to Plaintiffs'. In Green, Plaintiffs' counsel filed a virtually identical notice for voters in North Carolina. Compare Notice, with Green v. Bell, Doc. 1-1, No. 3:21-cv-493 (W.D.N.C. Sept. 17, 2021) (attached as Ex. B). When the defendants moved to dismiss for insufficient notice, the district court denied the motion. Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *3. The court emphasized that "the statute requires notice of 'the violation,'" and "does not require notice of the violation's cause." Id. (quoting 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)). In Michigan, the court in Daunt reached the same conclusion for a nearly identical letter. Doc. 44, No. 1:20-cv-522 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 28, 2020). And in PILF v. Benson, a different Michigan judge explained in detail why the Secretary's arguments here are wrong. 2022 WL 21295936, at *6-9. There, as here, the Secretary "challenge[d] the quality of the notice," which the court rejected because the notice "set forth the manner in which" the Secretary "failed to comply with the NVRA's list maintenance requirements" and stated that the plaintiffs "would commence litigation if the purported violation was not timely addressed." Id. at *7, 9.

Yet another court upheld a notice that simply identified "the provision of section 8 that the Defendant was allegedly violating," cited "evidence" for that violation (that one county's rolls had more registered voters than eligible voters), and "warn[ed] that the failure" to remedy this violation "could result in a lawsuit." ACRU v. Martinez-Rivera, 166 F. Supp. 3d 779, 795 (W.D. Tex. 2015). Plaintiffs did at least that much here. As the Secretary admits, the NVRA requires him to make "a reasonable effort to remove voters who become ineligible based on death or change of residence," but it "does not provide a numerical threshold." Mot. 13. It is thus "not surprising" when a letter "does not contain any detailed allegations, inasmuch as the NVRA provision at issue does not contain any detailed requirements; it simply requires 'reasonable effort' on the part of the State." Jud. Watch, Inc. v. King, 993 F. Supp. 2d 919, 922 (S.D. Ind. 2012).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary suggests that the information in the notice letter must satisfy a Rule 8 pleading standard, Mot. 12, but neither Congress nor any court requires such a high bar. The one case the Secretary cites undercuts his argument. See Nat'l Council of La Raza v. Cegavske, 800 F.3d 1032 (9th Cir. 2015). In La Raza, the Ninth Circuit reversed the dismissal of NVRA claims because the district court imposed too high a bar on the notice letter. Id. at 1043. That the plaintiffs could have notified the Secretary of "some of the violations [they] uncovered" earlier did not defeat the "reasonable possibility" that "the violations were continuing" at the time of the complaint. Id. at 1044. The Secretary seizes on dicta that "[a] plaintiff can satisfy the NVRA's notice provision by plausibly alleging" an "ongoing, systematic violation," id. (emphasis added), but nothing about that brief sentence requires a plaintiff to meet a Rule 8 pleading standard in the notice letter. See Brown v. Davenport, 596 U.S. 118, 141 (2022) ("This Court has long stressed that 'the language of an opinion is not always to be parsed as though we were dealing with [the] language of a statute.'").

A pre-suit notice need only state the "general requirement" that the State is violating and the basic "reasons" for that conclusion. King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 922. Courts consistently reject calls for more. E.g., La Raza, 800 F.3d at 1044 (notice need not "specify that the violation has been actually observed" or identify a "'discrete violation'");

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MichiganFOIA

Action NC v. Strach, 216 F. Supp. 3d 597, 619-20 (M.D.N.C. 2016) (rejecting the State's argument that a pre-suit notice must contain "'sufficiently particularized information'"); Voter Integrity Proj. NC, Inc. v. Wake Cty. Bd. of Elections, 301 F. Supp. 3d 612, 617-18 (E.D.N.C. 2017) (similar); Nat'l Coal. for Students with Disabilities Educ. & Legal Def. Fund v. Scales, 150 F. Supp. 2d 845, 852 (D. Md. 2001) (conclusory allegation that a public assistance office "failed to provide voter registration services to its clients" was sufficient notice under the NVRA). The Secretary does not cite a single case deeming a notice like Plaintiffs' insufficient.

As for the statistics, the Secretary's criticisms of that data are irrelevant. Plaintiffs' statistics are enough to state a plausible claim under the Federal Rules, see infra Section III.A, so they are "more than sufficient" to provide pre-suit notice under the NVRA, Ga. State Conf. of NAACP v. Kemp, 841 F. Supp. 2d 1320, 1334 (N.D. Ga. 2012). Notice is given even if the State disputes that "the information offered" suggests a violation of the NVRA, and even if the State believes the notice does not provide "'an adequate basis upon which to investigate possible violations.'" Id. The NVRA does not require Plaintiffs to win their case—before it is even filed—in a battle of letters with the State.

II. Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged Article III standing.

Standing requires injury, causation, and redressability. Importantly, Congress created a private right of action for violations of the NVRA, including section 8's list-maintenance requirement. See 52 U.S.C. §20510(b). Courts evaluating Article III standing "must afford due respect to Congress's decision." TransUnion LLC v. Ramirez, 141 S. Ct. 2190, 2204 (2021) (citing Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 330, 340-41 (2016)). Congress's judgment is "instructive and important" because the legislature is "well positioned to identify intangible harms that meet minimum Article III requirements." Spokeo,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

578 U.S. at 341. In fact, Congress can "'articulate chains of causation that will give rise to a case or controversy where none existed before.'" Id. And Congress can "'elevate to the status of legally cognizable injuries concrete, de facto injuries that were previously inadequate in law." TransUnion, 141 S. Ct. at 2204-05. Because all Plaintiffs here seek the same relief under the same claim, "the Article III injury requirement is met if only one plaintiff has suffered concrete harm." Juliana v. United States, 947 F.3d 1159, 1168 (9th Cir. 2020). Plaintiffs have standing under a variety of theories, any one of which is sufficient to deny the Secretary's motion.

A. The RNC and the NVGOP have organizational standing.

There is ordinarily little question that political parties have standing to challenge a State's failure to comply with federal election laws. Fair Fight Action, Inc. v. Raffensperger, 413 F. Supp. 3d 1251, 1266 (N.D. Ga. 2019) (holding that the "need to divert resources from general voting initiatives or other missions of the organization" establishes standing "[i]n election law cases"). The complaint alleges that Defendants' violation of the NVRA inflates the voter rolls and causes Plaintiffs to divert their resources to address the fallout. Compl. ¶¶13-14, 17, 21-23 "[T]here can be no question" that diversions of resources are an "injury in fact." Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363, 379 (1982). The diversion injures Plaintiff because they "would have spent" their resources on "some other aspect" of their mission had the defendant "complied with the NVRA." La Raza, 800 F.3d at 1040. It is therefore "sufficient to confer standing" that a defendant's misconduct causes the plaintiff to, for example, spend resources registering additional voters. Id.; Action NC, 216 F. Supp. 3d at 616-18. In these circumstances, courts "have no difficulty concluding that Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that the injury they suffer is attributable to the State." La Raza, 800 F.3d at 1041.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary's counterarguments are unavailing. The Secretary first argues that the resource-diversion allegations are "general, not specific to Nevada." Mot. 9. That misreads the complaint, which explicitly alleges that Plaintiffs "would have expended" their resources "on other activities," "[w]ere it not for Defendants' failure to comply with their list-maintenance obligations." Compl. ¶23 (emphasis added); id. ¶¶21-22. Regardless, "even when it is 'broadly alleged,'" a diversion-of-resources injury is sufficient "at the pleading stage." La Raza, 800 F.3d at 1041; PILF, 2022 WL 21295936, at *6 (allegations that the plaintiff organization "diverted resources that could have been expended in other states to address Michigan's alleged voter roll deficiencies" were sufficient); League of Women Voters of Ariz. v. Reagan, 2018 WL 4467891, at *4 (D. Ariz. Sept. 18) (allegation that plaintiffs "diverted resources to register voters rather than … other activities … due to Defendant's alleged noncompliance with the NVRA" was "sufficiently plausible to meet the low bar" of alleging standing at the pleading stage (cleaned up)); Nat'l Press Photographers Ass'n v. McCraw, 504 F. Supp. 3d 568, 581 (W.D. Tex. 2020) (explaining that the complaint need not identify "man-hours expended or specific activities resources were diverted away from" at the pleading stage (cleaned up)).

Though unnecessary at the pleading stage, the complaint provides significant detail on how Defendants' violations affect Plaintiffs' scarce resources. Plaintiffs use "voter registration lists to determine [their] plans and budgets" and to "estimate voter turnout." Compl. ¶14. Political parties rely on accurate registration records to determine "the number of staff" and the "number of volunteers" needed "in a given jurisdiction," as well as how much they "will spend on paid voter contacts." ¶14. Bloated voter rolls cause political parties to "misallocate their scarce resources" in ways that damage their mission. ¶92. In addition, Plaintiffs must divert additional resources to educating voters, increasing confidence in the election, monitoring Nevada's elections for fraud and abuse, persuading election officials to improve list maintenance, and other activities. ¶¶22-23. These allegations show "that it is plausible" that Plaintiffs have "suffered injury because of the Defendants' alleged failure to comply with the NVRA and therefore [have] standing to bring [their] List Maintenance Claim." King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 925.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Secretary also argues that "costs of litigation" are insufficient to support standing, but the argument is a strawman. Mot. 10-11. Nothing in the complaint cites litigation costs as an injury. The Secretary misconstrues other costs as litigation costs, but courts have rejected that bait-and-switch. See ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 790 ("Defendant remains free to present evidence" that certain monitoring and compliance activities "merely amount to 'litigation costs' … on a motion for summary judgment," but "such an argument on a motion to dismiss is premature"). Here, Plaintiffs' costs monitoring voter rolls and communicating with election officials are a consequence of Defendants violating the NVRA, not of Plaintiffs filing this lawsuit. These costs are "paired with an allegation that such costs are fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct," id. at 788, and thus sufficient to allege standing. See PILF, 2022 WL 21295936, at *5 (costs incurred "reviewing and analyzing Michigan's voter roll, investigating Defendant's list maintenance practices, and purchasing copies of the [voter files] and analyzing them against verifiable death records" satisfied organizational standing).

Defendants' NVRA violations also directly harm Plaintiffs' mission. This as an independent injury in NVRA cases. Id. at *6 (allegation that the Secretary's "failure to comply with the NVRA impairs [plaintiff's] essential and core mission of fostering compliance with federal election laws and promoting election integrity"). Plaintiffs' core mission includes electing Republican candidates, representing the interests of Republican voters, and maintaining confidence in the integrity of elections. Compl. ¶¶12-13. Ensuring States have clean voter rolls is essential to those goals. ¶¶19, 21, 31, 38. At "this stage," a "plausible allegation" that Plaintiffs' "ability to carry out [their] mission of cleaning up voter registration rolls has been 'perceptibly impaired' by the Defendants' alleged statutory violation" is sufficient to plead standing. King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 925.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock

B. Voters have standing under the NVRA.

Mr. Johnston and Republican voters also have independent bases for standing.

First, Defendants' violations undermine their "confidence in the integrity of Nevada elections." Compl. ¶¶19, 90. Voter confidence has "'independent significance'" according to the Supreme Court because it "'encourages citizen participation in the democratic process.'" Jud. Watch, Inc. v. Griswold, 554 F. Supp. 3d 1091, 1104 (D. Col. 2021) (quoting Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 197 (2008) (op. of Stevens, J.)); accord Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006). Undermining voter confidence thus burdens the right to vote, and "[t]here can be no question that a plaintiff who alleges that his right to vote has been burdened by state action has standing to bring suit to redress that injury." King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 924.

Courts have repeatedly recognized this injury as a basis for standing in section 8 cases. E.g., Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *4; Daunt, Ex. A at 18-21; Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *7; King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 924. This injury is not "generalized" because "there is no indication that undermined confidence and discouraged participation are 'common to all members of the public.'" Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *7 (quoting Lance v. Coffman, 549 U.S. 437, 440 (2007)). Mr. Johnston is a registered voter in Nevada who votes in the very local and statewide elections that are suffering from bloated rolls. See Compl. ¶¶18, 20, 63, 68. The RNC and the NVGOP represent hundreds of thousands of voters like him. ¶10, 16. Their injuries are not "speculative or hypothetical": they "already exist[]" because their "confidence is undermined now." Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *7.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If there were any doubt that these injuries are sufficient, this Court should defer to Congress's judgment that inflated rolls undermine the "integrity of the electoral process." 52 U.S.C. §20501(b)(3)-(4). "When Congress 'elevates intangible harms into concrete injuries,' a plaintiff need not allege 'any additional harm beyond the one Congress has identified.'" PILF v. Boockvar, 370 F. Supp. 3d 449, 455 (M.D. Pa. 2019) (quoting Spokeo, 578 U.S. at 341; In re Horizon Healthcare Servs. Inc. Data Breach Litig., 846 F.3d 625, 633 (3d Cir. 2017)). Courts have thus found these congressionally designated injuries sufficient to satisfy Article III.

Second, Defendants' violations injure Plaintiffs by risking the dilution of their right to vote. Burdens on the right to vote are concrete, particularized injuries that support standing. King, 993 F. Supp. 2d at 924. That right "'can be denied by a debasement or dilution of the weight of a citizen's vote just as effectively as by wholly prohibiting the free exercise of the franchise.'" Id. (quoting Purcell, 549 U.S. at 4). Courts thus recognize that "vote dilution can be a basis for standing." Wood v. Raffensperger, 981 F.3d 1307, 1314 (11th Cir. 2020). Bloated voter rolls dilute the votes of eligible voters by facilitating fraudulent or otherwise ineligible votes. Compl. ¶¶19, 90. This injury is not a generalized grievance, contra Mot. 7-8, even though it's suffered by many Nevada voters, and even though the amount of dilution might be relatively slight. See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 208 (1962); Spokeo, 578 U.S. at 339 ("The fact that an injury may be suffered by a large number of people does not of itself make that injury a nonjusticiable generalized grievance."). And their injuries are "particularized because the Plaintiffs allege that their votes are being diluted." Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *4. The "harm of vote dilution is concrete and actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Kravitz v. Dep't of Com., 336 F. Supp. 3d 545, 558 (D. Md. 2018) (cleaned up).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This injury is also not "speculative." Mot. 8. While the Secretary focuses on intentional voter fraud, Mot. 8, bloated voter rolls invite all kinds of ineligible voting—fraudulent, intentional, accidental, and innocent—all of which dilute Plaintiffs' lawful votes. Nor is the link between inflated rolls and voter fraud overly speculative. It has been observed by the Carter-Baker Commission, Compl. ¶38, a well-respected authority relied on by the Supreme Court. E.g., Brnovich, 141 S. Ct. at 2347-48; Crawford, 553 U.S. at 193-94, 197 (op. of Stevens, J.). Regardless, Plaintiffs are seeking "forward-looking, injunctive relief," so Article III allows them to sue over not just actual fraud, but also the "risk of" fraud. TransUnion, 594 U.S. at 435. "Fraud is a real risk" in Nevada and elsewhere, as courts have reiterated many times. Brnovich, 141 S. Ct. at 2348; see Compl. ¶¶38-39 (collecting cases). The complaint even details specific, recent instances of voter fraud in Nevada. Compl. ¶40. The link between inflated voter rolls and increased risks of illegal voting is not attenuated. Contra Mot. 8. It is obvious and well established.

Even if these events would be too speculative in a vacuum, "'Congress has the power'" to make it satisfy Article III, as it did here by enacting a private right of action for violations of the NVRA. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at 341. The Secretary relies on other, non-NVRA cases questioning vote dilution as "'speculative' at this juncture." Mot. 7 (quoting Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. v. Cegavske, 488 F. Supp. 3d 993, 1000 (D. Nev. 2020)). But those cases did not "arise under a situation like the National Voter Registration Act where Congress has articulated the private right of action." Daunt, Ex. A at 20. Congress's judgment warrants respect, especially because harm to voters under the NVRA bears "a close relationship to a harm traditionally recognized as providing a basis for a lawsuit in American courts." Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *4 (quoting TransUnion, 141 S. Ct. at 2213). Plaintiffs "are asserting 'a plain, direct and adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes,' not merely a claim of 'the right possessed by every citizen to require that the government be administered according to law.'" Baker, 369 U.S. at 208 (quoting Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 438 (1939)). Courts have long recognized that vote dilution and losses of voter confidence burden the right to vote. And burdens on constitutional rights are classic examples of "intangible injuries" that satisfy Article III. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at 340.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

* * *

Any of these theories demonstrates standing at the pleading stage. Plaintiffs' allegations are even stronger in light of Congress's creation of a private right of action for violations of the NVRA. So long as the Court finds that at least one Plaintiff "has standing," it "need not consider whether the [other parties] also have standing to do so." Horne v. Flores, 557 U.S. 433, 446 (2009). Courts confronting similar NVRA claims have approved every theory of injury suffered by Plaintiffs here. This Court likewise should recognize that at least one of these injuries is adequately pleaded and proceed to the merits.

III. Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged NVRA violations.

Section 8 of the NVRA "requires States to 'conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names' of voters who are ineligible 'by reason of' death or change in residence." Husted, 138 S. Ct. at 1838 (quoting 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4)). The law makes the removal of dead or relocated voters "mandatory." Id. at 1842. Plaintiffs plausibly alleged that Nevada is not complying with this duty.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

A. Courts have held that inordinately high active voter registration rates plausibly suggest an NVRA violation.

The allegations regarding high registration rates alone raise a reasonable inference of liability. The complaint alleges that at least five counties have registration rates that are abnormally or impossibly high compared to the rest of the State and the rest of the country. Compl. ¶¶3-5, 50-56. These "unreasonably high registration rate[s]" create a "strong inference of a violation of the NVRA" that is "sufficient," on its own, to survive a motion to dismiss. ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 805. "Other courts" agree that "a registration rate in excess of 100%" indicates that a jurisdiction is "not making a reasonable effort to conduct a voter list maintenance program in accordance with the NVRA." Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *10; e.g., Voter Integrity Proj. NC, 301 F. Supp. 3d at 620; Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *5; ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 793; Daunt, Ex. A at 16.

The Secretary deems these allegations insufficient for three main reasons. First, he claims that the NVRA permits States to rely on the U.S. Postal Service's change-of-address information as a "safe harbor." Mot. 13. Second, the Secretary claims that, instead of poor list maintenance, the inflated rolls could be caused by population growth or the NVRA's limits on how fast voters can be removed. Mot. 13-14. And third, the Secretary disputes the data. Mot. 15-19. None of these arguments are a reason to dismiss a complaint at the pleading stage. Notably, the Secretary's primary authority for why Defendants haven't violated the NVRA is a case that was decided at trial, after the court received "extensive expert testimony." Bellitto v. Snipes, 935 F.3d 1192, 1207-08 (11th Cir. 2019). Earlier in the litigation, the district court denied the defendant's motion to dismiss, rejecting the same arguments the Secretary makes here. Bellitto v. Snipes, 221 F. Supp. 3d 1354, 1365 (S.D. Fla. 2016).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, the so-called "safe harbor" for USPS data is not a reason to dismiss the complaint. The NVRA allows a State to "meet the requirement of subsection (a)(4)" by relying on "change-of-address information supplied by the Postal Service." 52 U.S.C. §20507(c)(1). The Secretary suggests the USPS data may be inaccurate, Mot. 13, but courts have found that argument "unconvincing" at this early stage. ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 793-94. If the USPS data were the sole cause of inflated rolls, the counties named in the complaint would not be outliers among the rest of the State. Compl. ¶¶55-57. Rather, "it is more likely that the Defendant's failure to maintain the voter rolls caused the registration rate to climb," which raises a "'strong inference'" that "is adequate to survive a motion to dismiss." ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 794.

Even if the argument were sound, the Secretary doesn't back it up with evidence. The Secretary doesn't even claim that the State or counties actually rely on USPS information. See Nev. Rev. Stat. §293.530(1) (counties may "use any reliable and reasonable means" to determine whether a voter has moved residences). And even if the Secretary were to introduce new evidence in reply showing that some counties use USPS data, that would not prove that the Defendants consistently and accurately apply that data, or that they follow through in removing voters. The USPS data is meaningless unless States actually use it, and ensure that county officials are using it, too. See 52 U.S.C. §20507(c)(1)(A) (requiring that the change-of-address information "is used"). Whether the State is complying with "subsection (c)(1)" and whether that compliance "defeats Plaintiff[s'] claims" is a "fact-based argument more properly addressed at a later stage of the proceedings." Bellitto, 221 F. Supp. 3d at 1366; accord Voter Integrity Proj. NC, 301 F. Supp. 3d at 620 (similar); Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *11 (similar).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The provision is also not a "safe harbor," at least not in the way that the Secretary means. The NVRA requires States to remove voters who have moved, 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4)(B), and restricts how States can remove those voters, id. §20507(d). The process in subsection (c)(1) is thus a "permissible" way to satisfy these "mandates and accompanying constraints." A. Philip Randolph Inst. v. Husted, 838 F.3d 699, 707 (6th Cir. 2016), rev'd, 138 S. Ct. 1833. It is not a sufficient way to satisfy section 8's list-maintenance requirements. A process that admittedly permits "a substantial number of voters who have moved out of the jurisdiction" to remain on the rolls and fails to reach "40 percent of people who move," Mot. 13, is hardly a "reasonable effort" to conduct list maintenance, 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4)(B). Even if the provision were a safe harbor, it only pertains to a States' "obligations regarding change of address." Bellitto, 935 F.3d at 1210. Section 8 also requires States to remove voters who become ineligible due to "death," 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4)(A), and USPS data does not ensure Defendants are complying with that separate duty. Bellitto v. Snipes, 302 F. Supp. 3d 1335, 1356-57 (S.D. Fla. 2017).

Second, Plaintiffs do not have to disprove possible alternative explanations for Nevada's inflated rolls at this stage. See Starr, 652 F.3d at 1216. The Secretary argues that Plaintiffs must rebut "the possibility that the alternative explanation is true," Mot. 16, but he relies on a case in which "only one" of two "possible explanations" could be true, and "only one of which results in liability," In re Century Aluminum Co. Sec. Litig., 729 F.3d 1104, 1108 (9th Cir. 2013). But the allegations here are "plausible," not merely "possible," and this case does not present two alternative scenarios, "only one of which can be true." Id. Even if the NVRA or population growth were responsible for some inflation of the rolls—and the Secretary does not say how much—that does not exclude the plausibility that deficient list-maintenance is responsible for the rest. To the extent there is "a potentially reasonable explanation for the high registration rate, … the validity of that explanation is not appropriate for determination at this early stage of the litigation, where the court views the factual allegations and inferences drawn therefrom in favor of [Plaintiffs]." Voter Integrity Proj. NC, 301 F. Supp. 3d at 619. The Secretary's alternative explanations are especially unpersuasive because they are contradictory. On one hand, he claims that the rolls are inflated because the NVRA does not allow counties to quickly remove ineligible voters. Mot. 14. On the other hand, he claims that the rolls are not inflated because he reads the data differently. Mot. 15-18. These theories cannot render Plaintiffs' contrary inference of "substandard list maintenance" implausible. Compl. ¶57.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock

Third, the Secretary's criticisms of Plaintiffs' data are irrelevant. Again relying on the post-trial Bellitto case, he argues that census data is "insufficient to prove an NVRA violation." Mot. 15 (citing Bellitto, 935 F.3d at 1207-08). But at this stage, Plaintiffs don't need to "prove" anything. Even if the evidentiary disputes could be considered at this stage, they are unpersuasive. The Secretary disputes the census data, Mot. 15-18, but the U.S. Election Assistance Commission uses the census numbers to estimate voter turnout and registration "because of its availability for the majority of jurisdictions … and because it provides a more accurate picture of the population covered by the [survey]." U.S. Election Assistance Comm'n, Election Administration and Voting Survey 2022 Comprehensive Report 7 (June 2023), perma.cc/28SQ-T24L; see also Compl. ¶¶60-63.

The Secretary next quibbles with Plaintiffs' use of the five-year census estimate instead of the one-year estimate. Mot. 16-17. But the Census Bureau says that five-year estimate is the "[m]ost reliable" of the American Community Surveys.[1] In contrast, the one-year estimate is more "current" but "[l]less reliable," and it only has "[d]ata for areas

[1] U.S. Census Bureau, When to Use 1-year or 5-year Estimates (Sept. 2020), perma.cc/LJ8K-WJYQ with populations of 65,000+," id., which excludes all but two of Nevada's counties.[2] Next, the Secretary's use of old registration rates from 2019 and 2020 is self-defeating. Mot. 16.-17. Plaintiffs challenge the registration practices of today, not those of five years ago. To the extent there is disagreement about which data best measures those practices, "the fact-intensive dispute about the accuracy and significance of the Plaintiffs' statistics must be resolved at the summary-judgment stage or at trial." Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *5.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Plaintiffs' methodology has been repeatedly upheld. Their "census data is reliable," ACRU, 166 F. Supp. 3d at 791, especially since Plaintiffs used "the most recent census data available at the time of the filing of [their] complaint," Voter Integrity Proj. NC, 301 F. Supp. 3d at 619. Regardless, this Court cannot dismiss the complaint even if it suspects that the "registration numbers may not be unreasonably high in context or there may be a reasonable explanation for them." Griswold, 2021 WL 3631309, at *11. At "the motion to dismiss stage, the Court does not 'weigh potential evidence that the parties might present'" in this manner. Id. The Secretary's disputes about "the reliability" and "significance" of "Plaintiffs' statistics" thus cannot defeat "a 'reasonable inference' that the defendant is liable." Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *5.

B. The many other allegations in the complaint plausibly allege an NVRA violation.

Although courts have held that Plaintiffs' voter-registration data states a claim, the complaint here does not rest on those numbers alone. The complaint documents examples of six jurisdictions with similarly high registration rates who, after they were sued, essentially agreed that their rolls were inflated. See Compl. ¶¶73-78. The complaint also rules out alternative explanations for these inflated rolls. ¶¶57-58. And it details

[2] Nev. Legislature Research Div., Population of Counties in Nevada (Aug. 2021), perma.cc/NY8M-RFP6.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

even more data demonstrating that certain counties are not keeping up with residency changes, ¶¶59-64, and not removing voters even after marking them inactive, ¶¶65-69.

Start with residency changes. The Secretary says little about this data, but courts have recognized that it alleges an NVRA violation. Compare Griswold, 554 F. Supp. 3d at 1108 ("the 2018 EAC Report shows that 30 Colorado counties reported removing fewer than 3% of voters," even though "18% of Coloradans were not living in the same house as a year ago"), with Compl. ¶¶62-63 (the 2020-2022 EAC Report shows that two counties "reported removing less than 2% of their registration lists for residency changes" even though "more than 15% of Nevada's residents were not living in the same house as a year ago"). The Secretary obfuscates by changing the words of the statute: he claims the State can't "systematically act" on residence changes in the 90 days before an election. Mot. 14. That's false. The provision he cites says that the State cannot "systematically remove" voters from the rolls 90 days before an election. 52 U.S.C. §20507(c)(2)(A). Nothing in the NVRA prohibits Defendants from moving voters to inactive status before an election. In any event, these alternative explanations are irrelevant, and even the Secretary can't explain why some counties removed no voters for failing to respond to an address-confirmation notice. Compl. ¶64. The complaint contrasts a highly mobile population with unusually stagnant list-maintenance for those moves. ¶¶62-64. That data raises a plausible inference of a violation. Griswold, 554 F. Supp. 3d at 1108.

Even if Nevada had a "reasonable program" to maintain its rolls, how Nevada treats the inactive registrations on the rolls shows that it is not implementing that program. The complaint alleges that Nevada's rate of inactive registrations (16%) is much higher than the national average (11%). Compl. ¶65-66. The Secretary argues that shows Nevada is aggressively canceling registrations, Mot. 20-21, but that makes no sense. At most, it shows that Nevada is effective at almost canceling registrations but fails to actually remove those voters from the rolls. In other words, a "high 'inactive registration rate'" is evidence that, even if the State is "availing itself of the NVRA's safe harbor," it may "not actually be implementing it." Griswold, 554 F. Supp. 3d at 1097, 1108.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

That inference must be drawn in Plaintiffs' favor, but the inference isn't even necessary: the complaint identifies some 5,000 inactive voters currently on the rolls that were listed in the June 10, 2019 voter file. Compl. ¶67. The Secretary compares these registrations to the total number of inactive voters, but that misses the point. Mot. 19-20. These 5,000 voters have been listed as inactive for two federal election cycles, which means that even by the Secretary's own data, these registrations should have been cancelled after the 2022 election. 52 U.S.C. §20507(b)(2). The NVRA requires States to "conduct" a list-maintenance program, not to simply have a list-maintenance program. Id. §20507(a)(4); see Bellitto, 935 F.3d at 1205-06 (defendants must demonstrate as a "factual" matter that they "reasonably used [the enacted] process"). Nevada's treatment of inactive registrations demonstrates it is failing to remove ineligible voters from the rolls.

In a final attempt to avoid plausible allegations, the Secretary demands the Court close its eyes to data that was not included in the notice letter. Mot. 19-21. But no court has held that the letter freezes the evidence or arguments that plaintiffs can rely on in a lawsuit. The Secretary cites a case in which the court declined to allow one plaintiff to "piggyback" on the notice provided by another plaintiff, Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 836 (5th Cir. 2014), but all Plaintiffs here were named in the notice. The NVRA requires only "written notice" of "the violation." 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1). Here, both the letter and the complaint allege a violation of section 8's requirement that States remove the names of ineligible voters. Id. §20507(4)(A)-(B). The notice need only state "[t]he general proposition" that a State is "not complying with the mandates of the NVRA"; the "statistics … simply serve as factual support for that general proposition." Ga. NAACP, 841 F. Supp. 2d at 1334. Regardless, because the NVRA's notice provision "is not jurisdictional," ACRU v. Phil. City Comm'rs, 2016 WL 4721118, at *4 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 9), courts can and have excused the requirement even in cases where the plaintiff provided no notice at all. E.g., ACORN v. Miller, 129 F.3d 833, 838 (6th Cir. 1997). The Secretary can show no prejudice from more data, particularly where he continues to maintain that none of the data—no matter when he learned of it—amounts to a violation. Mot. 19-20.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Citing nothing, the Secretary concludes by arguing that Plaintiffs should have requested records from the Secretary of State that could have shed light on why Nevada's voter rolls are deficient. Mot. 22-23. Neither Congress nor the courts have imposed such a requirement. The NVRA requires pre-suit notice, not pre-suit exhaustion. In fact, requesting records is a separate claim under the NVRA that is independent of the claim for failure to conduct list maintenance. See 52 U.S.C. § 20507(h)(i). Plaintiffs sometimes bring both claims, PILF, 2022 WL 21295936, at *1, but often they bring just the list-maintenance claim, Green, 2023 WL 2572210, at *6. Tying together a motion that disputes the facts, the Secretary cites Bellitto, the post-trial case, one final time for the proposition that "courts ultimately rely" on details about "counties' methodologies" to determine whether the State has violated the NVRA. Mot. 23. But whatever evidence this Court "ultimately" relies on is not what governs this motion. Plaintiffs plausibly state a claim with a plethora of allegations approved by numerous courts.

CONCLUSION

The court should deny the motion to dismiss. If the Court grants the motion, it should also grant leave to amend. Harris v. Amgen, 573 F.3d 728, 737 (9th Cir. 2009).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dated: April 29, 2024

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Jeffrey F. Barr

Thomas R. McCarthy*
VA Bar No. 47145
Gilbert C. Dickey*
VA Bar No. 98858
Conor D. Woodfin*
VA Bar No. 98937
CONSOVOY MCCARTHY PLLC
1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, VA 22209
(703) 243-9423
tom@consovoymccarthy.com
gilbert@consovoymccarthy.com
conor@consovoymccarthy.com

pro hac vice application pending*

Counsel for Plaintiffs

Jeffrey F. Barr
NV Bar No. 7269
ASHCRAFT & BARR LLP
8275 South Eastern Avenue
Suite 200
Las Vegas, NV 89123
(702) 631-4755
barrj@ashcraftbarr.com

Counsel for the Republican National Committee and Scott Johnston

/s/ Sigal Chattah

Sigal Chattah
NV Bar No. 8264
CHATTAH LAW GROUP
5875 S. Rainbow Blvd #204
Las Vegas, NV 89118
(702) 360-6200
sigal@thegoodlawyerlv.com

Counsel for the Nevada Republican Party

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

S. REP. 103-6, S. Rep. No. 6, 103RD Cong., 1ST Sess. 1993, 1993 WL 54278 (Leg.Hist.)
P.L. 103-31, NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION ACT OF 1993
*1 ESTABLISHING NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION PROCEDURES FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES
DATES OF CONSIDERATION AND PASSAGE
House: February 4, May 5, 1993
Senate: March 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, May 6, 7, 11, 1993
Cong. Record Vol. 139 (1993)
House Report (House Administration Committee) No. 103-9,
Feb. 2, 1993 (To accompany H.R. 2)
Senate Report (Rules and Administration Committee) No. 103-6,
Feb. 25, 1993 (To accompany S. 460)
House Conference Report No. 103-66,
Apr. 28, 1993 (To accompany H.R. 2)

SENATE REPORT NO. 103–6

February 25, 1993
[To accompany S. 460]

The Committee on Rules and Administration, having considered S. 460, an original bill to establish national voter registration procedures for Federal elections, and for other purposes, reports favorably thereon and recommends that the bill do pass.

CONTENTS

	Page
Purposes	1
Background	2
Committee Action	4
National Voter Registration Procedures for Elections for Federal Office	5
I. "Motor-Voter" Registration	5
II. Uniform Mail Registration	11
III. Agency Registration	14
IV. Voting List Confirmation Procedures and Standards	17
V. Enforcement and Regulation	20
A. The Federal Election Commission	20
B. Enforcement	20
Section-by-Section description and discussion	21
Cost Estimate	37

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Regulatory Impact..... 47

Committee Rollcall Vote..... 49

Minority Views of Messrs. Stevens, Helms, Warner, Dole, McConnell, and Cochran 50

Additional Views of Mr. Hatfield 58

Changes in existing law 59

PURPOSES

The purposes of the bill are to establish procedures which will increase registration of eligible citizens in elections for Federal office; to make it possible for Federal, State, and local governments to implement the Act in a manner that enhances the participation of eligible citizens as voters in elections for Federal office; to protect the integrity of the political process; and to assure an accurate and current voter registration roll.

To increase registration of eligible citizens, this bill would require States that require registration to vote in elections for Federal office, to permit voter registration by the following means, in addition to any other method provided by State law: (a) by application simultaneous with an application for a motor vehicle driver's license–so-called "motor-voter" registration; (b) by use of a uniform mail application; and (c) by application in person at an 2 agency designated to process registration applications in each State.

The bill would provide procedures and standards regarding the maintenance and confirmation of voter rolls to assure that voters' names are maintained on the rolls so long as they remain eligible to vote in their current jurisdiction and to assure that voters are not required to re-register except upon a change of voting address to one outside their current registration jurisdiction. The bill would not require a specific mandatory procedure for verifying or confirming voter rolls, but would establish standards for any such procedure a State might employ.

BACKGROUND

The declining numbers of voters who participate in Federal elections (only about half of the voting age population went to the polls in the 1988 Presidential election) spurred the Committee's search for possible remedies to this situation. It was noted that the national voter turnout in the 1990 Congressional elections was only 36 percent. Members were encouraged by the fact that the 1992 Presidential election turnout increased 4 percentage points over the 1988 election. Nevertheless, there are almost 70 million eligible citizens who did not participate in the election because they were not registered to vote. The Members are aware that there are multiple and complex factors that contribute to the decline in voter participation in Federal elections. While most contributing factors may not be affected by legislation, one–difficulties encountered by some who desire to register to vote–is susceptible to correction by legislation.

The Committee found that:

(1) The right of citizens of the United States to vote is a fundamental right;

(2) It is the duty of the Federal, State, and local governments to promote the exercise of that right; and

(3) Discriminatory and unfair registration laws and procedures can have a direct and damaging effect on voter participation in elections for Federal office and disproportionately harm voter participation by various groups, including racial minorities.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

While there may be no conclusive proof that an increase in the voter rolls will automatically or necessarily result in an increase in voter turnout, it is indisputable that it will increase the number of persons eligible to vote. There are also significant indications that most of those who are eligible to vote, do so. The most common excuse given by individuals for not voting is that they are not registered. The Congressional Research Service has indicated that only approximately 61 percent of those eligible to vote are registered, so that even with an enthusiastic electorate the participation rate by eligible voters would be unimpressive. It has been found, however, that over three-quarters of those who do register, do actually vote, at least in Presidential elections. The Bureau of the Census puts the figure for voter turnout of registered voters in Presidential elections at between 85 percent and 90 percent.

3 Several witnesses at the Committee's hearings in the 102d Congress testified that registration procedures in the United States are not uniform and that discriminatory and restrictive practices that deter potential voters are employed by some States. Throughout the history of this country there have been attempts to keep certain groups of citizens from registering to vote–which groups specifically depending on the decade and the locale. Among the techniques developed in the various localities to inhibit or exclude potential voters were annual registration, selective purging of the voter rolls, literacy tests and poll taxes. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 made most of these restrictive practices illegal, yet discriminatory and unfair practices still exist and deprive some citizens of their right to vote. This legislation will provide uniform national voter registration procedures for Federal elections and thereby further the procedural reform intended by the Voting Rights Act.

Some restrictive practices in the voting process arise from the attempts of States to respond to the legitimate administrative concerns of election officials, such as the detection and prevention of fraud, the maintenance of accurate and up-to-date voter rolls, and the removal of the names of ineligible persons from the rolls. These tasks are made particularly difficult by the mobility of our population.

In fashioning this bill, the Committee has been concerned with the impact of a regulation or practice on the exercise of the right to vote and not with the question of whether its impact was intentional or inadvertent. It must be remembered that the purpose of our election process is not to test the fortitude and determination of the voter, but to discern the will of the majority. Every effort has been made to produce a bill that balances the legitimate administrative concerns of the election administrators and the objectives of this legislation.

The Committee was also aware that some have questioned the Congress' constitutional authority to enact a measure on voter registration. This Act seeks to remove the barriers to voter registration and participation under Congress' power to enforce the equal protection guarantees of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. Nevertheless, these critics argue that traditionally, it has been the role of the States to regulate the manner in which elections are conducted. Contrary to this view, the States do not have exclusive authority over elections. Article I, Section 4, clause 1 of the United States Constitution states:

> The Times, Places and Manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

In United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941), the Supreme Court clearly held that the right of the people to choose representatives in Congress is "a right established and guaranteed by the Constitution." Id. at 314. It is a right derived from the States, only in the sense that the Constitution authorizes States to legislate on the subject under Article I, Section 2. The Court said, however, that this power of the States only exists to the extent that Congress 4 has not restricted State action by exercising its authority to regulate elections. Id. at 315. Moreover, in Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970), the Court supported the constitutional authority of Congress to enact election laws regulating Federal elections. In this case, the Court upheld the constitutionality of a Federal statute barring a State from denying the right to vote in any election because of a literacy test and of a Federal statute banning durational residency requirements. Justice Stewart wrote: " These cases and others establish that Congress brings to the protection and facilitation of the exercise of privileges of United States citizenship all of its powers under the Necessary and Proper Clause." Id. at 286. Justice Stewart concluded that the Constitution permits Congress to enact statutes protecting the fundamental right to vote.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress has the power to regulate Federal elections, including the establishment of national voter registration procedures for Presidential and congressional elections. Congress' power has been clearly established under the Times, Places and Manner Clause and the Necessary and Proper Clause of the Constitution. These provisions, as interpreted by the Supreme court, belie assertions by those who argue that the States have exclusive authority to regulate the manner in which Federal elections are conducted.

COMMITTEE ACTION

On January 21, 1993, Senator Ford and Senator Hatfield introduced S. 2, the National Voter Registration Act of 1993. S. 2 was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. On February 17, 1993, H.R. 2, the companion bill in the House of Representatives, was received in the Senate and referred to the Committee. H.R. 2 passed the House of Representatives on February 4, 1993.

The substance of both S. 2 and H.R. 2 is based on S. 250, which passed both houses of Congress in the 102nd Congress and which was subsequently vetoed. In the 102nd Congress, the Committee held hearings on the measure and heard from several witnesses representing State and local governments, civic and civil rights organizations, and the U.S. Postal Service. Because the text of both S. 2 and H.R. 2 were identical to a similar measure on which there was substantial Committee hearing record, the Committee proceeded to consider this legislation without further hearings. Consequently, references to testimony in this report correspond to the Committee's hearings from the 102nd Congress.

On February 18, 1993, the Committee considered these bills at a mark-up session of pending legislation. During the consideration of these measures, the Chairman noted that both S. 2 and H.R. 2 presented procedural considerations relating to possible point of order. After consideration of the measures and the procedural circumstances, the Chairman proposed for himself and for Senator Hatfield, that the Committee report an original bill.

After a brief discussion, the roll was called on the motion to approve and report the original bill. That motion was passed by a record vote of 7–5 and the bill was ordered reported favorably by the Committee. Senator Stevens requested that the report include minority views.

*5 NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION PROCEDURES FOR ELECTIONS FOR FEDERAL OFFICE

I. “MOTOR-VOTER” REGISTRATION

Two points made in testimony before the Committee are central to the Committee's consideration of this legislation, and to the “motor-voter” provisions in particular. First, voter turnout of registered voters in Presidential elections since 1968 has been quite high. Census Bureau figures indicate a range from a high of 91.2 percent in 1968 to a low of 86.2 percent in 1988. While figures from election officials put the totals somewhat lower (from a high in 1968 of 82.5 percent to a low in 1988 of 70.6 percent) they are not adjusted for ineligible and duplicate names on the registration rolls. In any case it is clear that more than three quarters of those who are registered to vote do vote, at least in Presidential elections. And in all but a few States, a person must be registered before election day in order to vote.

Second, between 85 percent and 90 percent of people of voting age nationwide have driver's licenses or identification cards issued by State motor vehicle offices. A voter registration system tied to the application for or the renewal of a motor vehicle driver's license would be an ideal way to register most people of voting age throughout the country.

The driver's license procedure appears to be ideally suited to the purpose of registering voters. A procedure for licensing motor vehicle drivers is in place in every State. The States have developed exacting procedures to assure proper and correct identification of all licensees and to assure that a person has but a single license. Driver license applications require most of the information needed to determine the eligibility of a voting registration applicant, and include the additional protection of a photograph. This provision for simultaneous motor-voter applications permits the voter registrars to piggy-back on the identification techniques developed to assure accuracy in the licensing process.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Washington Secretary of State Ralph Munro, one of the first proponents of the motor voter concept, observed during his testimony before the Committee that incorporating voter registration into the drivers licensing process provides a secure and convenient method for registering voters; an effective means of reaching groups of individuals generally considered hard-to-reach for voting purposes, such as the youngest voting age population who generally have drivers licenses; and a procedure for keeping rolls current through contact with licensees who change addresses, both within a State and from one State to another, and are required to report such changes to the motor vehicles department.

Also, most States already have moved into centralized record keeping, with their driver's license application as the key document. This provision of the bill affords the States the opportunity to build on that process and to include the registration of voters. Although the bill does provide a procedure for registration that is ideally suited for automation in conjunction with the drivers license records, it does, however, permit each State some discretion as to how to administer this process and how to integrate it with *6 its drivers license process. That discretion would range from a fully integrated, automated process, a single application form for use by both agencies requiring minimal duplication of information, or separate application forms to be completed as part of a single, simultaneous application process at the driver's license agency.

While the bill permits some discretion to States as to how the two systems may be related, ideally the system should be so designed as to include the voter registration application as a simultaneous, automatic part of the overall process with the duplication of information requested and forms to be completed held to an absolute minimum. The system now in place in the District of Columbia accomplishes this goal by use of a single application format in which information entered on that portion of the form dealing with licensing information prints through to the voting registration form so that only a few questions pertaining to voting eligibility and the person's signature remain to be inserted after completion of the license portion.

It would not be sufficient under the terms of this legislation for a State motor vehicles office merely to make a voter registration application available upon request to a license applicant or to simply put some forms on a table in the agency. Likewise, it would not be sufficient to provide a voter registration application separate from the license application. Although this bill permits separate forms, it stresses that there must be a single application process and that requires the simultaneous delivery of the entire application, consisting of both forms, to an applicant. After receipt of the entire application, the applicant may choose not to register to vote by so indicating in writing and by not completing the voter registration portion of the application. Where a single combined form is used, an applicant's failure to sign the portion of the form containing the oath or attestation of eligibility to vote, shall be interpreted as an applicant's decision to decline the opportunity to vote.

To assure that the voter registration process is incorporated into the licensing application process so as to make it simultaneous and as automatic as possible, it is the Committee's intent that all applicants for motor vehicle drivers licenses or renewal thereof receive an application that includes both forms, and that all applicants complete the voter registration application form as part of the application procedure, unless they decline in writing to register to vote. For each license application processed by the motor vehicle registry, that office should receive either a completed voter registration application form to forward to the voting registrar or a written declination to register. Other than the requirement that it be in writing, the bill does not specify any particular form for this declination. So long as it produces a written record of the declination, any format would be sufficient, such as a check-off box on the license application form or a separate form signed by the applicant.

The Committee recognizes that in some jurisdictions, the application process is fully computerized. In such cases, any form signed by an applicant during the process shall contain an attestation to the questions on the application, including any declination question. It will be sufficient for purposes of the requirement of a written declination if the signature of the applicant on the final document produced during the transaction incorporates by reference all *7 questions which are asked of the applicant, including any declination question.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Committee is aware that some concern has been expressed that this provision of the bill transfers voting registration authority from State voting registrars to State drivers licensing officers. That is not the intent of this bill and a close reading of its provisions should make that very clear. Under this bill, the role of the motor vehicle registrar is to provide forms to applicants and receive completed voter applications for transmittal to the appropriate State voting registration official. It is that official who determines whether or not to accept the application and place the name on the voting roll for the appropriate voting jurisdiction. The bill requires that the appropriate voting registration official notify each applicant of the disposition of his or her application. Nowhere does the bill suggest that that determination be made by anyone other than the appropriate voting registrar under State law. Also this bill does not give any authority to the motor vehicle agency with regard to the design of the voting registration application form. Although some cooperation would be required to integrate the two application forms to be processed by the motor vehicles agency, the bill leaves it to State law as to the officer who is responsible for the design, layout and contents of the voting registration application form, subject to the requirements of this bill.

Twenty-seven States and the District of Columbia now have a system of registration through the State's Department of Motor Vehicles. In some States, the voter registration process is done on the same form as the application for a drivers license. In other States, employees of the motor vehicle bureau are deputized to register voters. And in some states, the Department of Motor Vehicles will accept the mail registration application and forward the form on to the appropriate election official. Many of the motor-voter programs are part of a larger State agency-based system whereby voter registration applications are available at a State agency, and the agency will accept the completed forms and forward them to the appropriate election official. The type and degree of assistance given or required to complete and process the forms does vary.

States in which the Department of Motor Vehicles accepts applications for voter registration (either directly or through deputy registrars employed by the DMV office) and a brief description of their programs are as follows:

Alaska. Although the program was not formalized until 1989, informally Alaska's Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) has been accepting voter registration applications since 1983. A separate voter registration form is available at the State's DMV offices and must be filled out in front of and witnessed by DMV personnel. DMV will then forward the form to the State Election Office.

Arizona. The motor-voter program was established in 1982. A separate form is available in each DMV office and is accepted by a deputy registrar associated with the DMV office.

Colorado. The motor-voter program was first established in 1984. The single application form for both voter registration and driver's license was developed by April 1985.

8 Idaho. Legislation has recently been passed that as of July 1, 1991, DMV offices in buildings not adjacent to county clerks' offices will accept voter registration applications and forward them to the appropriate county clerk. This affects approximately 6 counties in the State.

Illinois. As of September 1990, at least one employee in each DMV office is designated to become a deputy voter registrar. As such, the employee can register voters and witness applications within the DMV offices. However, it is a separate application process.

Iowa. The motor-voter program was established in 1987. At that time, voters were allowed to register through the State's DMV using a separate form for voter registration. As of 1989, Iowa has developed a single unified form for both registering to vote and applying for a driver's license.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Louisiana. In 1989, the State legislature authorized a pilot project that would allow employees of the State's DMV office to volunteer to become deputy registrars and register persons to vote from within the DMV offices. However, few persons have volunteered for the program. In January 1991, the pilot project became law.

Maine. As of April 1990, Maine's DMV will accept applications for voter registration and forward them to the Secretary of State's office for further distribution. DMV employees are encouraged to ask all applicants for drivers licenses if they are registered to vote and direct them to the deputy registrar in the DMV if they wish to register. The program also covers drivers license renewals and changes of address.

Michigan. The motor-voter program was established in 1975. Voter registration requires completion of a separate form. DMV employees are trained to assist in voter registration and accept changes of address for purposes of voter registration.

Minnesota. The motor-voter program was established in 1987. While a separate form is required for voter registration, that form and the driver's license application are joined together. DMV personnel need only separate the two forms at a perforated line before sending the voter registration form to the appropriate voter registrar.

Montana. As of October 1, 1991, the State's DMV office began accepting voter registration applications and forwarding them to the appropriate election officials. In the future, a single combined drivers license/voter registration application form is planned.

Nevada. The motor-voter program was established in 1987. Persons desiring to register to vote must complete a separate form from that required to apply for a driver's license. DMV personnel will accept the voter registration application and forward it to the appropriate county registrar.

New Jersey. Motor-voter was established in 1989 by executive order. Employees of the State's DMV offices and other State agencies accept and forward on voter registration applications to the appropriate election officials. In 1991, legislation passed to implement parts of the executive order. Employees of the Department of Motor Vehicles and of Human Services of the 9 New Jersey Transit Corporation, and the Office of Disabilities, are required under the legislation to accept and forward applications for voter registration to appropriate election officials. In addition, other State agencies, originally covered by the executive order, are still required because of that executive order, to process voter registration applications.

New Mexico. As of June 1991, the State's DMV offices will have at least one deputy registrar available to register persons to voter when they come in to apply for a drivers license. The program covers new drivers license applicants as well as renewals and changes of address.

North Carolina. The motor-voter program was established in 1983. Persons desiring to register to vote must complete a separate form. DMV personnel will accept the voter registration application and forward it to the State Board of Elections, which will then forward it to the appropriate county registrar.

Ohio. The motor-voter program was established in 1977, but not implemented unit 1982 when a statewide voter registration form was authorized and developed. Persons desiring to register to vote must complete a separate form. DMV personnel will accept the voter registration application and forward it to the appropriate county registrar.

Oregon. In 1989, the State legislature enacted motor-voter provisions into law, conditional on the passage of Federal legislation. However, in 1991, it was decided to proceed and implement a motor-voter registration system. Persons who are applying for a drivers license are asked if they are registered to vote and if they wish to be registered to vote. If they respond "yes", a combined form is printed, part for the DMV application and part for the voter registration application. The forms are accepted by the DMV and picked up by the appropriate election officials at regular intervals.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Rhode Island. In January 1990, the legislature established a pilot project in the DMV to have a table occupied by a deputy registrar to register persons to vote. In 1991, this program was made permanent in the DMV where certain employees of the DMV were made deputy registrars. In 1992, the program was extended to several other State agencies. In all cases, selected employees of the agency are trained as deputy voter registrars, a separate voter registration form is used by the agency and the deputy registrar takes a sworn statement relating to the veracity of the information provided on the form.

Texas. In 1991, the State legislature passed a bill to implement a motor-voter registration program. The program automatically produces two forms if persons applying for a drivers license wish to be registered to vote. Both forms will be signed and the DMV will forward the voter registration forms to the appropriate election official.

Vermont. The motor-voter program was established in 1986. Persons desiring to register to vote must complete a separate form from the required to apply for a drivers license. DMV personnel will then administer an oath to the registrant, accept the voter registration application and forward it to the appropriate county registrar.

10 Washington. In January 1992, motor-voter registration became official in the State. DMV employees will accept voter registration applications.

West Virginia. As of July 1, 1991, employees of the State's DMV office will ask all applicants and persons renewing their drivers licenses if they would like to register to vote. If the person wishes to register, they will be sent to the DMV's deputy voter registrar who will accept the voter registration application and administer the oath.

District of Columbia. The motor-voter program was established in 1989. A single combined form is used to both register voters and apply for a driver's license. The section of the form containing information required for both processes has a carbon attached; that part of the firm containing only information required by the Department of Elections has no carbon. A license applicant who wishes to register to vote must complete and sign both application sections of the form.

It has been reported that in the first month of operation of the motor-voter registration program in the District of Columbia, voter registrations were four times the usual monthly rate and that increase was achieved with one-half of the license applicants declining to register to vote. According to Emmett H. Fremaux, Executive Director of the D.C. Board of Elections and Ethics, who administers the program, during the first 20 months the program has been in operation, 32,000 persons have been registered to vote through the motor-voter program. That program accounted for 45 percent of all voter registrations during that period. Mr. Fremaux concluded, based on the experience in the District of Columbia, that "motor voter is so immediately and dramatically productive in putting new registrants on the roll that implementing this program nationally will produce a quantum leap in the level of voter registration in this country in a surprisingly short period of time.  [I]t would mean adding more than 20 million persons to the national voter rolls from one presidential election to the next."

In addition to the States that accept or plan to accept voter registration applications and forward them to the appropriate election officials, a number of the States with mail registration make the forms available within the offices of public agencies, including the DMV office, and some (New York and Pennsylvania) specifically direct the persons visiting the office to where the forms are located. However, citizens still have to fill the forms out and mail them in themselves.

Although not the direct purpose of this bill, a side effect of its motor-voter and agency provisions will likely be to even out the work of voter registration offices throughout the year. Pre-election rushes of registrations caused by registration drives associated with an upcoming election will be minimalized. The continuous flow of drivers license applications throughout the year will result in a similar pattern of activity in the voting registration offices. Also, the voter rolls will be updated continuously throughout the year from renewals of licenses, notices of change of address and new applications by persons who move into the State and are required to obtain a State license within a prescribed period of time. All of these activities by the motor vehicle agency to comply with motor 11 vehicle drivers license requirements and assure accurate and current information on drivers licenses and identification cards will result in the transfer of information to the voting registrar to help keep the voting rolls current and correct, as well.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Some concern has been expressed concerning the issue of fraud in the application process as a result of it being tied to the drivers license application process. This concern centers on the possibility of the registration of license applicants who are under age or not citizens since the requirements for a drivers license are not the same as for voting registration. Two things should be noted in this regard. First, most drivers license agencies require proof of the applicant's date of birth in order to apply for a license. Therefore, although the age requirements may differ, that information will be readily available to the clerk processing the application. Second, the bill requires that the application include a statement as to voting eligibility requirements, including age and citizenship, which must be attested to by the applicant upon signing the application. Thus, the processing of voting registration applications at the motor vehicles agency would lessen the likelihood of such fraud and certainly would not make it greater than it is now. As noted during the Committee's hearings in the 102nd Congress by Ralph Munro, Secretary of State of Washington, if the same scrutiny of driver's license applications is applied to voting registrations, the likelihood of registering ineligible people is severely diminished.

In addition to these safeguards, the bill provides for Federal criminal penalties for knowing and willful offenses, including the submission of voter registration applications containing materially false information. This is a broader provision than current law. Under the "false information" provision of the Voting Rights Act, the false information must relate to one of three items that are listed in the statute; that is, the name, address, and/or period of residence in the voting district. Under the provisions of this bill, prosecution for false information would be expanded beyond these three items.

With regard to the registration of noncitizens, current law at 18 U.S.C. S 911 prohibits the knowing and false assertion of United States citizenship by an alien. Under the provisions of this bill, every application for voter registration must include a statement that sets forth all the requirements for eligibility, including citizenship, and requires that the applicant sign an attestation clause, under penalty of perjury, that the applicant meets those requirements. Together with the criminal penalties section of the bill, the Committee is confident that this Act provides sufficient safeguards to prevent noncitizens from registering to vote.

II. UNIFORM MAIL REGISTRATION

The second approach of the bill is the development of uniform mail registration. Under the provisions of the bill, the Federal Election Commission, in conjunction with the chief election officials of the 50 States, will develop a universal mail registration form. The form may only require such identifying information (including the signature of the applicant) as is necessary for election officials to determine the eligibility of the applicant. The form 12 must include a statement that specifies each eligibility requirement (including citizenship); contain an attestation that the applicant meets each such requirement; and require the signature of the applicant under penalty of perjury. The form may not include any requirement for notarization or other formal means of authentication, i.e. a witness requirement.

The bill provides flexibility by permitting States to develop and use their own mail registration form, as long as it meets the requirements of the Act. A registrant is permitted to use either the Federal form or the appropriate State form and the States would be required to accept either form.

Texas was one of the first States to institute a system of registration by mail–the person desiring to register mailed a card containing all pertinent information to a voter registrar. [1] Now, twenty-seven States and the District of Columbia have some form of mail registration program. Mail registration is an effective means for increasing the voter rolls because it relieves the voter of the need to appear in person at one central registration office during prescribed hours and it permits organizations to go to the voter with organized registration drives. Mail registration is convenient for the voter, for registration drive organizers and for voter registrars as well.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Some have expressed concern that mail registration would increase the potential for fraud. This concern was expressed by the Department of Justice in a letter to the Chairman of the Committee, in the 102nd Congress.[2] The letter states, in part, "because some of the registration techniques mandated by the bill are fraught with the potential for fraud if adequate verification methods are not used in light of local conditions,  the bill would present a serious potential for increased voting fraud and electoral corruption." In an accompanying memorandum, the Justice Department states that "[r]egistration by mail is much more susceptible to misuse because a would-be registrant never has to appear in person before a registrar for verification of identity and eligibility."

A study by the Congressional Research Service of States having mail registration procedures in 1984, found that "voter registration officials in all eighteen States for which data are available reported they have had little or no fraud with post care registration. Several said they have had no more fraud with post card registration than with in-person registration." In fact, Governor Barbara Roberts of Oregon testified that her State instituted mail registration in 1975, and that despite the fact that Oregon does not have a notarization or witness requirement, Oregon has not experienced any cases of fraud or fraudulent voting with mail registration. Governor Roberts stated that there was "Literally no abuse of the system."

13 The Governor stated that when Oregon adopted mail registration, opponents raised the issue of fraud. As a result, the mail registration form includes detailed information to the registrant in red lettering that abuse of the registration process is punishable by a substantial fine and prison sentence. Moreover, despite Oregon's large migrant worker population, there has not been any indication of non-citizens registering in the State.

In addition to Oregon, it is significant to note that the States with a mail registration procedure include the most populous ones of California, New York, Texas, Ohio, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Less than half of those States that have mail registration require a witness to thee applicant's signature and, of the more populous States, only New Jersey requires a witness. The most commonly used methods of confirming information on mail registration applications are a non-forwardable or forwardable mailing to the applicant after receipt of the application, and warnings of penalties for fraud on the application form. This bill requires a notice to each applicant as to the disposition of his or her application. Thus, it permits a State to use either a forwardable or non-forwardable mailing to confirm a registration. With regard to this notice requirement, States should be aware that such a notice should be drafted with regard to the purge provisions of this bill.

To address these concerns regarding fraud, the bill includes a provision which would permit the States to require by law that a first time voter who registered to vote by mail, and was not previously registered in that jurisdiction, make a personal appearance to vote.[3] This section of the bill again demonstrates the concern of the Committee that each State should develop mechanisms to ensure the integrity of the voting rolls. States may determine, based on their own circumstances, that a personal appearance for mail registrants is necessary to ensure the integrity of the voting rolls. Other States, based on their own experiences may determine that such a requirement is not necessary. Oregon is one such State which has mail registration and does not require a personal appearance to vote.

In addition, this bill requires that mail applications include a statement of voting qualifications and an attestation, which must be signed by the applicant under penalty of perjury, that the applicant meets all those requirements. All applicants must be informed of the penalties provided by law for submission of a false voter registration application and in the case of mail applications such notice would be on the form itself.

Mail registration provides a convenient method for reaching out to eligible voters. But while it makes registration convenient, the bill also provides that there will be sufficient safeguards to prevent an abuse of the system with fraudulent registrations.

14 III. AGENCY REGISTRATION

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Agency-based voter registration provides a useful supplement to motor-voter registration systems, enables more low income and minority citizens to become registered, and is cost effective. Under the provisions of the bill, States will be required to designate agencies to serve as voter registration offices. The program of registering voters at various agency locations mirrors the registration program of the "motor-voter" provisions of the bill, but does not require the same integration of the voter registration application form with the agency forms. The agency-based registration program is designed to reach out to those sectors of the population which are not likely to have driver's licenses or other identification cards issued by a motor vehicle agency.

The agency-based program of the Act is a two tiered program. In the first tier, the States are required to designate all offices in the State which provide public assistance, unemployment compensation and related services, and all offices which provide State-funded programs primarily engaged in providing services to persons with disabilities. Such programs would include vocational rehabilitation but would also include other programs which provide assistance or services to physically challenged persons. The second tier of the agency-based registration program compliments the first and although each State must have such a program, a State is given discretion in determining which agencies will be included, as well as at which agency's local offices registration will be made available. This second tier may be comprised of Federal, State, local government offices or private sector agencies in the State. Such offices and agencies may include public libraries, schools, offices of city and county clerks (including marriage license bureaus), fishing and hunting license bareaus, government revenue offices, and any office that provides services to persons with disabilities which are not included in the mandatory agency-based program. Within this second tier, a State has discretion to designate some or all of these offices, whichever is in the judgment of the State will serve the purposes of ensuring widespread voter registration opportunities.

Many persons will visit a public office or facility–a public assistance office, an unemployment office, a tax office, a library–in the course of a year. Agency-based voter registration provides a method whereby citizens may easily register to vote and fulfills the requirement that government should do all it can to make registration widely and easily available. Agency-based voter registration means that registration serivces–forms and assistance in completing such forms–will be available routinely and year round in many government and private sector offices.

As noted during the Committee's hearings last Congress, one of the advantages of the agency-based program is that it is an interactive registration. That is, there are individuals to assist registrants in completing the information on the registration application. Birgit Seifert of the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund noted that "mail registration is important, but perhaps more important are the agency registration procedures because [it is] ... an interactive form of registration. If you have a stack of mail registration 15 cards available, that does not necessarily mean that people are going to pick them up and send them in."

While mail registration procedures make registration convenient, in communities where resources are limited, it has been demonstrated to be ineffective in registering those who have historically been left out of the registration process. Thus, in some instances, mail registration is inferior to agency-based registration. As Ms. Seifert noted in her testimony:

> If you couple placing the burden on community leaders to register people, and then you have the State affirmatively purging people, you have got them putting all their resources into getting something that is not getting them very far. They are having to marshal all their resources just to maintain the status quo ... [I]n a country which prides itself on a representative form of government, it is crucial that the government task affirmative steps to register its citizenry and that the burden not fall on communities, especially communities ... which lack resources.

The experience in many States with registration at schools, at libraries, or in motor vehicle offices provided the precedents for agency voter registration programs. Five States (Alaska, Iowa, Minnesota, New Jersey, and Ohio) have, either through executive order or law, established some form of public agency voter registration system other than motor-voter registration procedures, often as an adjunct to other voter registration procedures. In addition, nine States either make voter registration forms available within offices of State agencies or have added language to agency application forms asking if the applicant would like to register to vote. In these States, an applicant is given a mail voter registration form or is directed to the appropriate office for registration.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

An agency registration program may also include private offices and locations throughout a State. An agency program that includes private places at which persons may register to vote may be organized through cooperative arrangements and agreements between the sponsoring agency and appropriate local or State election officials. A comprehensive agency-based program should include private locations and offices, as well as public agencies, in order to make registration available on as broad a basis as possible in a State and to make registration readily available in areas that experience low registration.

To make the agency-based program as comprehensive as possible, the bill requires all entities and agencies of the Federal government to cooperate as much as practicable with the States in carrying out this program by participating as designated voter registration agencies. No specific Federal agencies are designated in this bill to participate; rather, it is left to the States to negotiate such arrangements with appropriate Federal agencies.

A Department of Transportation study noted that almost 50 percent of those persons who do not have a driver's license have annual incomes of less than $10,000. As a result, motor-voter registration programs may not adequately reach low income citizens and minorities. Active public and private agency-based voter registration programs available through such public agencies as State 16 public assistance offices, State unemployment offices, or programs primiarly engaged in providing services to person with disabilities, as well as at private offices and locations in areas of low registration, are more likely to reach these eligible citizens, who are likely to have contact with a number of these agencies. Currently, most registration systems make it difficult for the low income citizen to qualify to participate in our nation's elections. Agency voter registration programs provide an institutional solution to the problem of unequal access to the voting booth.

Agency-based registration on a year-round basis may also indirectly minimize the necessity for periodic, large scale purges of voter registration lists by election registrars. With an effective agency-based registration system, voters would have the opportunity not only to register, but also to update their registrations each time they sought services at the government agency. Persons who receive social services–welfare, unemployment checks–must keep their addresses up-to-date in order to receive the benefit. Similarly, public housing recipients must keep their address information up-to-date. Like the motor-voter program, any application for renewal, recertification, or change of address would serve as an update for that person's registration to vote unless the applicant declines in writing.

The bill has a broad scope with regard to agency-based registration for persons with disabilities. As noted by a number of organizations representing the disabled community, particularly Disabled AND Able to Vote, there is no one agency which provides services to all, or even a large percentage of the disabled population. Vocational rehabilitation services, for example, reach no more than one disabled person out of 15 at any one time during their entire life. Independent living centers are overwhelmingly located in large cities and do not serve those persons with disabilities who live in suburbs, small towns, or rural areas. Thirty-seven percent of all persons with disabilities acquire the disability after the age of 55. As a result, employment, education and training programs rarely provide services to these individuals. In order to access this isolated population, it is essential that as many locations as possible which provide services to disabled Americans offer voter registration services: by making forms available, providing assistance with filling out the forms, and collecting and forwarding the registration forms to the appropriate election official.

Because many of these services may be offered by home visitations, the bill includes a provision which requires that any agency which provides services to persons with disabilities at the person's home must provide the same degree of assistance for voter registration in the home as an agency provides in the office.

Concerns have also been expressed that the agency-based registration programs risk various forms of intimidation of the public. However, this bill explicitly prohibits those engaged in registering voters from seeking to influence an applicant's political preference or party registration, displaying any political preference or party affiliation, or making any statement to an applicant the purpose of which is to discourage the applicant from voting. Agency personnel are also prohibited from intimidating a person to register who does not want to register, for fear of not receiving benefits. Moreover, 17 under the criminal penalties section of the bill, it is a Federal offense to intimidate any person who attempts to register to vote. The © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Committee believes that these provisions are a sufficient deterrent to any person who would seek to intimidate any person who is entitled to register through the agency-based registration program, or any other registration program established by this bill or any other law.

Like the motor-voter provisions of the bill, the Committee is aware that some concern has been expressed that this provision of the bill transfers voting registration authority from State voting registrars to agencies. That is not the intent of this bill. This bill provides only that the role of the agency-based registration program is to provide forms to applicants and receive completed voter applications for transmittal to the appropriate State voting registration official. It is the voter registration official who determines whether or not to accept the application and place the name on the voting roll for the appropriate voting jurisdiction. The bill requires that the appropriate voting registration office notify each applicant of the disposition of the application. There is no provision in this bill which would require or suggest that determination be made by anyone other than the appropriate voting registrar under State law.

In addition, this bill does not give any authority to the agencies with regard to the design of the voting registration application form. In fact, the bill encourages agencies to incorporate their forms to provide one form for the applicant, as an application for services and voter registration. Ideally, the agency-based program would work efficiently if one form were created. In that instance, some cooperation would be required to integrate the two application forms to be processed by the agencies. The bill leaves it to State law as to the officer who is responsible for the design, layout and contents of the voting registration application form, subject to the requirements of this bill.

IV. VOTING LIST CONFIRMATION PROCEDURES AND STANDARDS

One of the purposes of this bill is to ensure that once a citizen is registered to vote, he or she should remain on the voting list so long as he or she remains eligible to vote in that jurisdiction. The Committee recognizes that while voting is a right, people have an equal right not to vote, for whatever reason. However, many States continue to penalize such non-voters by removing their names from the voter registration rolls merely because they have failed to cast a ballot in a recent election. Such citizens may not have moved or died or committed a felony. Their only "crime" was not to have voted in a recent election. As the Reverend Jesse Jackson stated during the House hearings on voter registration reform in the 101st Congress: "No other rights guaranteed to citizens are bound by the constant exercise of that right. We do not lose our right to free speech because we do not speak out on every issue."

While most States use the procedure of removal for non-voting merely as an inexpensive method for eliminating persons believed to have moved or died, many persons may be removed from the election rolls merely for exercising their right not to vote, a practice 18 which some believe tends to disproportionately affect persons of low incomes, and blacks and other minorities.

Such purging for non-voting tends to be highly inefficient and costly. It not only requires eligible citizens to re-register when they have chosen not to exercise their vote, but it also unnecessarily places additional burdens on the registration system because persons who are legitimately registered must be processed all over again.

Although purge systems may be inefficient and costly, the Committee and other participants are well aware of the need for the States to maintain accurate voting rolls. An important goal of this bill, to open the registration process, must be balanced with the need to maintain the integrity of the election process by updating the voting rolls on a continual basis. The maintenance of accurate and up-to-date voter registration lists is the hallmark of a national system seeking to prevent voter fraud. These processes, however, must be scrutinized to prevent poor and illiterate voters from being caught in a purge system which will require them to needlessly re-register. Such processes must be structured to prevent abuse which has a disparate impact on minority communities. Unfortunately, there is a long history of such list cleaning mechanisms which have been used to violate the basic rights of citizens.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

One of the advantages of the bill is the fact that the motor-voter and agency-based programs are ongoing and that applications and renewals may serve as updating the addresses of registered voters. Thus, the need for large scale purges and list cleaning systems becomes superfluous. Nevertheless, the bill requires States to conduct a program to maintain the integrity of the rolls. The Act requires that any program or activity to protect the integrity of the electoral process by ensuring the maintenance of an accurate and current voter registration roll must be uniform, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Merely because a program was conducted under the National Voter Registration Act would not be a defense to any claim which might be asserted under the Voting Rights Act. The requirements of the two acts are distinct and complementary. The States must comply with the National Voter Registration Act in a manner which does not violate the Voting Rights Act.

These programs may not remove the name of a voter from the list of eligible voters by reason of a person's failure to vote. States are permitted to remove the names of eligible voters from the rolls at the request of the voter or as provided by State law by reason of mental incapacity or criminal conviction. [4]

In addition, States are required to conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists by reason of death or a change in residence. Any program which the States undertake to verify addresses must be completed not later than 90 days before a primary or general election. It is intended by this requirement that the State outreach 19 activity, such as the mailing of list verification notices or conducting a canvas, must be concluded not later than 90 days before an election, however, this would not prevent a State from making the appropriate changes to the official lists pursuant to the Act during the 90 day pre-election period.

A State or local subdivision may satisfy this requirement by using the National Change of Address program available through licensees of the U.S. Postal Service. The Committee strongly encourages all States to implement the NCOA program, which is efficient, is cost-effective once the start-up computerization expenses are absorbed, and properly implemented, is uniform and objective. Jurisdictions which choose not to use the NCOA program should implement another reasonable program which is designed to meet the requirements of the bill, i.e. that it be uniform, non-discriminatory and in conformance with the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

If in the course of using the NCOA program, it is determined that a voter has changed addresses within the jurisdiction of the same voting registrar, the registrar is directed to make the change on the official list of eligible voters and notify the voter of the change by sending a notice of the change by forwardable mail with a postage pre-paid return card for the registrant to verify or correct the information.

The Act allows the removal of a person's name from the official list by reason of a change of residence outside the jurisdiction of the registrar, only if the voter notifies the registrar of such a change or has failed to respond to a notice sent by the registrar and has failed to vote or appear to vote in two Federal general elections following date of the notice. [5] Under this notice requirement, the notice must be sent by forwardable mail, with a return postage prepaid and preaddressed card, on which the registrant may state his or her current address. This mailing must include a notice to the registrant that if he or she has not changed residence, or changed residence within the jurisdiction of the registrar, that the card should be returned no later than the time period provided for registration by mail. Further, if the card is not returned, confirmation or attestation may be required before the registrant is permitted to vote in the Federal election during the period between the date of the notice and ending after the second general election for Federal office that occurs after the date of the notice. If the registrant does not vote or appear to vote, his or her name will be removed from the list of eligible voters. This mailing must also give information to the registrant concerning how the registrant can continue to vote if he or she has moved outside the jurisdiction of the registrar. A voting registrar shall correct the roll based on information obtained through this program.

As previously noted, one of the guiding principles of this legislation to ensure that once registered, a voter remains on the rolls so long as he or she is eligible to vote in that jurisdiction. Thus, when a registrant fails to return a card to the voting registrar, the voter must be permitted to vote if he or she appears at the polls within 20 two general Federal elections after the date of the notice. While the bill secures the right of the voter to vote, it does not dictate the way in which the person is to vote. The State may establish its own requirements regarding the means of voting.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In response to the concerns of various witnesses representing civil rights organizations, these requirements of the bill were added to prevent the discriminatory nature of periodic voter purges, which they assert appear to affect blacks and minorities more than others. It should be noted that the bill does not mandate any specific time periods for when such list cleaning mechanisms must be used. While these provisions have been included to insure that voting rolls will be free from "deadwood", there will be less need for these mailing because the programs of voter registration include provisions for automatic updating of addresses. Thus, the process of updating registration rolls is an ongoing and continuous process.

V. ENFORCEMENT AND REGULATION

A. The Federal Election Commission

The Federal Election Commission (FEC) was created to oversee the campaign finance law authorized under the Federal Election Campaign Act and its amendments. The FEC officially became operative in 1975. Although known mostly for its regulatory activities in the area of Federal election campaign finance, the FEC is the only Federal agency uniquely set up to deal with Federal elections. Due to the politically sensitive nature of its role, the FEC was organized as an independent agency with members appointed with consideration of their political affiliations, but under restrictions designed to assure that no single political party would control its deliberations. Further, through its National Clearinghouse on Election Administration, the FEC has maintained an advisory role in election administration and has developed model election administration programs and information to assist States in conducting their elections. Given its composition and independent status, its experience in developing rules and regulations in the area of campaign finance, its unique position within the Federal government as the principal agency dealing with election administration, and its experience in developing model procedures for States, the Federal regulation of any national voter registration could best be administered from the FEC.

B. Enforcement

Many State and local election administrators expressed concern about the potential for an increase in voter fraud as a possible result of voter registration reform, and especially that registration by mail would make it easier for persons to vote fraudulently. This bill not only attempts to make voter registration convenient, but is also designed to prevent fraud and abuse of the electoral process.

The Committee is aware of the concerns regarding the potential for fraud in registrations. Throughout the bill, each registration program has been developed to assure the integrity of the voting rolls. One of the principle concerns expressed by critics of this bill is the use of mail registration. Based on the Congressional Research 21 Service's study, however, the experience of the States with mail registration appears to be that voter fraud is no more prevalent under a mail registration system than under other types of voter registration systems. Moreover, where States have investigated fraudulent registration and voting, there has never been a recommendation to repeal mail registration. [6] As previously noted elsewhere in this report, the provisions relating to mail registration permit the States to require by law that a person make a personal appearance to vote if that person registered by mail and had not previously voted in that jurisdiction.

Nevertheless, a uniform national voter registration system should make it a Federal offense to fraudulently register to vote. Voter fraud is a crime against the legitimate electoral process. On the other hand, others expressed concern that legitimate voters should be able to go to the polls without fear of intimidation or threat by either officials or other citizens. As much as it is a crime to attempt to fraudulently cast a ballot, it is equally a crime to try to prevent an eligible citizen from casting a ballot in an election. Any national voter registration measure should discourage equally both of these activities. Language was added to the criminal penalties section to make clear that the person charged must have actual knowledge that the registration forms contain materially false information and were submitted with the specific intent to fraudulently affect the outcome of an election.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In addition to criminal enforcement, an effective national voter registration program must also include private civil enforcement. Such private initiative can encourage action to assure that a reasonable effort is undertaken to achieve its objectives in all States and, indeed, it may be essential to the success of such a program in some areas. Private civil enforcement should be designed to assure and to encourage, to the fullest extent possible, the cooperation of local and State election officials responsible for implementation of the voter registration programs. An essential element of an effective civil enforcement program is a requirement for notice of any complaint regarding its implementation to the appropriate election officials together with a process for its administrative resolution before legal action may be commenced.

SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION AND DISCUSSION

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "National Voter Registration Act of 1993."

*22 SECTION 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

Section (a) sets forth the findings of the Congress that the right to vote is a fundamental right of citizens; that it is the duty of Federal, State, and local governments to promote the exercise of that right; and that discriminatory and unfair registration laws and procedures have a direct and damaging effect on voter participation in elections for Federal office and disproportionately harm voter participation by various groups, including racial minorities.

Section (b) sets forth the purposes of this Act, which are to increase the registration of voters, to make it possible for Federal, State, and local governments to implement the Act in a manner that enhances the participation of eligible citizens, to protect the integrity of the electoral process, and guarantee accurate and current voter registration rolls

SECTION 3. DEFINITIONS

Section 3 defines the term "motor vehicle driver's license" to include any personal identification document issued by a State motor vehicle authority, and applies the definitions of Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to election terms used in this Act. "State" is defined to be a State of the United States or the District of Columbia. A "voter registration agency" is any office designated under this Act's agency-based registration provisions to perform registration functions which include distributing registration forms simultaneously with applications for services or benefits, providing assistance to applicants similar to that provided in the completion of the office's own forms, and receipt and transmittal of such forms to the appropriate voter registrar.

SECTION 4. NATIONAL PROCEDURES FOR VOTER REGISTRATION FOR ELECTIONS FOR FEDERAL OFFICE

Section 4(a) requires that the States, in addition to any other methods for voter registration provided for under State law, establish procedures to permit voter registration in elections for Federal office: simultaneously with an application for a driver's license; by mail application; by application in person, either at an appropriate registration office, or at a Federal, State or private sector location ("agency registration").

Section 4(b) provides that this Act is not applicable to a State where either or both of the following apply: a State in which there is no voter registration requirement for any voter in the State with respect to a Federal election; or, a State in which all voters may register to vote at the polling place at the time of voting in a Federal general election.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The language of this section is specific as it relates to the exceptions. It is the intent of the Committee that these exceptions are narrowly drawn to assure that only those States in which any voter may vote either without registration or by registering at the polling place on election day would be exempt. A State would be exempt from the requirements of the bill if it meets either or both of these requirements. It is not the intent of this legislation to encourage the adoption of election day registration. Rather, the Committee believes that States which have implemented one or both of 23 these exceptions have lessened the impediments to registration which goes significantly beyond the requirements of the bill. A State would not be exempt if it merely granted local jurisdictions the option of providing for election day registration or no registration if local jurisdictions also had the option of requiring any other form of registration. The Committee does not believe such an option results in a significant reduction in registration barriers.

SECTION 5. SIMULTANEOUS APPLICATION FOR VOTER REGISTRATION AND APPLICATION FOR MOTOR VEHICLE DRIVER'S LICENSE

Subsections (a) and (b) require that each State motor vehicle driver's license application, including a renewal application, shall also serve as an application for voter registration for Federal elections. In addition, such an application will also serve as updating any previous voter registration by the applicant. An applicant for a motor vehicle driver's license may decline to register to vote and such information may not be used for any purpose other than voter registration.

Although the declination to register must be in writing, no particular format is required so long as a record of the declination is created and retained. The Committee recognizes that in some jurisdictions, the application process is fully computerized. In such cases, it would be sufficient to satisfy the requirement of a written declination if the form signed by an applicant at the conclusion of the process contains an attestation to all questions in the application, including any declination question. It is the intent of the Committee that the application procedure should require the affirmative act of an applicant but only after the applicant has received a complete application that includes both the drivers license and voter registration application forms. States are afforded latitude in this section to develop an application which will meet the needs of the particular jurisdiction. In some instances, a State may determine that the application should include a box in either form for a registrant to check if he or she declines to register. In other instances where the application for the driver's license and voting registration are combined into a single form, the failure of an applicant to sign the voting registration application portion could serve as a declination to register, if the drivers license portion contains a notice to the applicant that the failure to complete and sign the voter registration application portion of that form is a declination to register.

This requirement that there be a written declination to register serves two purposes: first, to prevent unnecessary paperwork where a person is already properly registered; and, two, to prevent the registration of ineligible persons. It is not the intent of this bill to generate needless paperwork for either the registry of motor vehicles or the voter registrar. The Committee would expect the registry of motor vehicles staff to instruct applicants who are already properly registered or those who are otherwise ineligible to vote decline to register. Such instructions should also be included in any written materials provided to applicants as well as in any instructions posted in motor vehicle agency offices. Some have claimed that the failure to decline to register will result in the automatic 24 registrations of such individuals. This is simply not true. This bill provides for simultaneous applications procedures, but still requires the intervening act of a review of the registration applications by the appropriate State or local election official.

Some have noted that the requirements for obtaining a driver's license are not the same as those for eligibility to vote, specifically, age and citizenship. The Committee would expect that any driver's license applicant who does not meet the requirements for eligibility to vote would decline to do so. It is important, therefore, that such applicant be advised of the voting requirements and the need to decline to register if he or she does not meet the requirements. The bill provides that all registration requirements should be set forth in the application to register to vote so that they will be readily available for each applicant to review during the application process. The applicant should be advised that there is no obligation to specify the particular reason for choosing to decline to register.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Since some of the reasons for declining to register to vote may involve matters of personal privacy, such as ineligibility under State law due to mental incompetence or a criminal conviction, an individual who declines to register to vote shall not be questioned as to the reasons for such action. If an individual reveals such information, it must be treated as confidential and may not be used for any other purpose. As discussed later, the Act contains a general prohibition against a State or entity from revealing any information relating to a declination to register or to the particular location or agency where a person registered.

Subsection (c) requires that each State shall include a voter registration application form as part of an application for a State motor vehicle driver's license. The voter registration application form may not require any information that duplicates information required in the driver's license portion of the form, other than a second signature and the minimum amount of information necessary to prevent duplicate voter registration and enable State election officials to assess the eligibility of the applicant for voter registration and other parts of the election process, and must include a means by which an applicant may decline to register to vote. The voter registration application form must include a statement that states each eligibility requirement, including citizenship, and attestation that the applicant meets each such requirement, and the signature of the applicant under penalty of perjury. In addition, where appropriate, such forms should include information requesting the applicant's mail address if it differs from the applicant's residence. Each completed voter registration application form must be made available to the appropriate State election official as provided by State law.

The terms “State election officials” and “appropriate State election official” refer to whatever election official under State law has the appropriate responsibility for the administration of voter registrations and elections. In some cases, this may be a local election official.

Although the application for voting registration is simultaneous with an application for a driver's license, it is not the intent of the bill to supplant the traditional role of voting registrars over the registration procedure. The bill makes it very clear that the motor 25 vehicle agency is responsible for forwarding voting registration applications to the appropriate State election official. It should be made very clear to any applicant in a driver's license bureau that the application for voter registration is an application which must be reviewed by the appropriate election officials. Only the election officials designated and authorized under State law are charged with the responsibility to enroll eligible voters on the list of voters. This bill should not be interpreted in any way to supplant that authority. Election officials should continue to make determinations as to an applicants eligibility, such as citizenship, as are made under current law and practice. Applications should be sent to the appropriate election official for the applicant's address in accordance with the regulations and laws of each State.

Although the Committee would encourage States to adopt a single form for a voter registration application and a motor vehicle driver's license application in order to expedite the process, to minimize the duplication of information, and to establish a truly simultaneous application process, it recognizes that administrative and funding considerations pose serious problems for some States. Thus, Section 5(c) is so drafted to describe an application process that permits the use of two forms, one for the motor vehicle driver's license application and one for the voting registration application, thereby avoiding any cost associated with revamping current procedures of computer programs. Where two forms are used, it is expected and intended that such forms will be used simultaneously as part of a single, integrated application process. All applicants appearing at the motor vehicle office must be given an application that includes both forms. If such an applicant does not wish to register to vote and so indicates by declining in writing to do so, such an applicant should not complete the voter registration portion of the application.

Subsection (d) provides that any change of address form submitted in accordance with State law for purposes of a State motor vehicle driver's license shall serve as notification of a change of address for voter registration unless the registrant states on the form that the change of address is not for voter registration purposes. The requirements of residency pertaining to driver's licenses may vary from those pertaining to voting; therefore, this provision will permit a person to indicate that a change of address notification to the motor vehicle agency is not intended to effect a change in the address for voting purposes and should not be forwarded to the voting registrar.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SECTION 6. MAIL REGISTRATION

Subsection (a) requires that all States accept and use the mail voter registration form prescribed by the Federal Election Commission. In addition, States are permitted to develop and use their own mail registration form, provided it meets the requirements of this Act. Mail registration forms may also be used for voter registration change of address.

The Federal Election Commission, in consultation with the chief election officials of the States, is required pursuant to Section 9 to promulgate a mail registration application form. That form shall 26 include a statement that specifies each eligibility requirement for voting, contain an attestation that the applicant meets each such requirement, including citizenship, and require the signature of the applicant, under penalty of perjury. Where appropriate, the application form should include information requesting the applicant's mail address if it differs from the applicant's residence. The form may not include any requirement for notarization or other formal authentication, such as witnessing. If a State chooses to develop and use its own form, that form must comply with the same criteria that applies to the Federal form promulgated by the Federal Election Commission.

The requirements that States use a uniform mail registration application form serves to augment the extensive outreach features of the "motor-voter" and agency-based registration procedures. Uniform mail forms will permit voter registration drives through a regional or national mailing, or for more than one State at a central location, such as a city where persons from a number of neighboring States work, shop or attend events. By permitting States to develop and use their own forms as well, the bill provides flexibility for the States. In those States that develop their own mail voter registration application, an applicant may use, and the State must accept, either the national form developed by the FEC or the State's own form.

Subsection (b) requires the chief State election official to make the mail registration forms available for distribution through governmental and private entities, with a particular emphasis on making such forms available to organized voter registration programs. Broad dissemination of mail application forms, when coupled with the other procedures of this bill, should reach most persons eligible to register to vote, and is, therefore, a key element of the voter outreach feature of the bill. Such forms may also be disseminated to agencies designated under the agency-based registration procedures for use by those agencies in their registration programs.

States that use mail registration application procedures generally employ a number of means to prevent fraud, such as including on the form a statement of voter qualification requirements or penalties for fraud, or a follow-up mailing. The form to be developed by the FEC is to include a statement setting forth the requirements to vote (including age and citizenship) and an attestation to be signed by the applicant under penalty of perjury. Mail registration forms developed by the State should contain the same statement and attestation.

The bill requires notice to each applicant of the disposition of his or her application. This requirement could be met by a follow-up mailing by any State that wishes to employ that procedure as a means of protecting against possible fraud in the mail registration process. With regard to this notice requirement, States should be aware that such a notice should be drafted with regard to the purge provisions of this bill.

The Committee believes that these provisions are sufficient to deter fraudulent registrations. Nevertheless, the bill includes an additional provision relating to first time voters which has been added to address the concerns that this process may be subject to 27 misuse. Subsection (c) provides that a State may require by law that a person who registers to vote by mail and has not previously voted in that jurisdiction, vote in person. This requirement would not be applicable to any person who is entitled to vote by absentee ballot under the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act, or who is provided the right to vote otherwise than in person by the Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped Act, or who is entitled to vote otherwise than in person by any other Federal law. States are permitted to employ any other fraud protection procedures which are not inconsistent with this bill.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SECTION 7. VOTER REGISTRATION AGENCIES

Subsection (a) requires that each State establish an agency-based registration program by designating various public private agencies or offices for the registration of voters for Federal elections. The Act requires that certain agencies must be included in such a program. Thus, each State must designate all public offices in the State of those agencies that provide public assistance, unemployment compensation, or related services and all agencies and offices in the State that provide State-funded programs primarily engaged in providing services to persons with disabilities. In addition the State must designate additional Federal, State or local governmental agencies as well as private sector offices as registration agencies, but each State is given discretion as which agencies and what offices of those agencies to include. The Act provides that such discretionary agency programs may include public libraries, public schools, offices of city and county clerks (including marriage license bureaus), fishing and hunting license bureaus, government revenue offices, and any agency or office that provides services to persons with disabilities that is not included in the mandatory agency-based voter registration program. Federal, State and private sector offices could also be included in this program.

A voter registration agency that provides service or assistance in addition to conducting voter registration shall distribute simultaneously with each application for service or assistance, and with each recertification, renewal, or change of address, a mail voter registration application form promulgated by the Federal Election Commission as provided for in the Act or its own form, if the agency has devised its own form in compliance with the requirements of this Act. The offices should to the greatest extent practicable, incorporate in application forms and other forms used for purposes other than voter registration, a means by which an applicant may decline in writing to register to vote. With this "incorporation to the greatest extent practicable in the agency's own forms," the bill attempts to provide flexibility to the agencies to develop a program that best fits the type of program. For example, in the case of a program such as unemployment compensation, where eligibility must be recertified on a frequent (i.e., weekly or biweekly) basis, the Committee intends that the agency be required to provide voter registration materials and assistance at the time of initial application, upon any change in the address or eligibility status of the applicant, and upon any extension in the eligibility for benefits. If an applicant does not decline to register, the office is 28 to provide the same type and degree of assistance in completing the registration application as it usually provides its applicants with regard to the completion of the offices own forms. Costs for registration application assistance for these offices should be considered matchable under the current Federal match rate for these programs.

A person who provides these voter registration services at an agency voter registration office shall not influence an applicant's political preference or party registration, display any political preference or party affiliation, or make any segment to an applicant the purpose or effect of which is to discourage the applicant from registering to vote.

While concerns have been raised that applicants will be coerced to affiliate with a particular political party or that the receipt of benefits is contingent upon the act of registering to vote, the Committee believes that these provisions, together with the criminal penalties provisions of the bill, are sufficient to deter any such activities. Moreover, no evidence has been presented that such abuses have occurred in a State which has implemented an agency-based registration program.

The mandatory portion of the agency-based registration program, which includes offices providing public assistance, unemployment compensation or related services and services primarily to persons with disabilities, is intended to supplement the motor-voter provisions of the bill by reaching out to those citizens who are likely not to benefit from the State motor-voter registration program. These agencies are included in the mandatory agency registration program because they are considered most likely to serve persons of voting age who may not have drivers licenses and therefore are not served by the motor-voter provisions. This mandatory portion provides a necessary balance to the motor-voter program, without unduly burdening State resources.

The second portion of a State's agency-based registration program includes other agencies and offices which the State may designate to extend its outreach to as many citizens of voting age as possible. While the States are required to have a discretionary agency registration program in addition to the mandatory one, the State is given latitude to determine which agencies, as well as which of their offices, should be included.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Each agency voter registration office is required to provide the following services: distribution of mail voter registration application forms (or the agency's own form), assistance to applicants in completing voter registration application forms, acceptance of completed voter registration application forms for transmittal to the appropriate State election official. The term "appropriate State election official" shall be interpreted in accordance with State law or practice and is intended to mean that official who is authorized under State law to register voters in the jurisdiction where the registrant resides.

Previous versions of this legislation included in the mandatory agency registration program offices that provide vocational rehabilitation services in an attempt to assure that persons with disabilities would be reached by some part of the State's registration programs. Representatives of programs that serve persons with disabilities 29 made it clear that vocational rehabilitation offices would not have extensive contact with such persons and that a broader designation of offices would be necessary if a State's agency program was to include a sufficient number of persons with disabilities. The Act now includes a definition that is intended to have more extensive out-reach to persons with disabilities. While it would include vocational rehabilitation offices, it would also extend to many other agencies that have more contact on a regular basis with persons with disabilities, such as, but not limited to, those agencies which provide transportation, job training, education counseling, rehabilitation or independent living services.

The Committee also recognizes that many persons with disabilities are less likely to visit offices in order to obtain services or benefits. As a result, the bill requires that if a voter registration agency designated by the State provides services to a person with a disability at the person's home, the agency shall provide the voter registration services at the person's home, as well. The Committee notes that the provisions referring to persons with disabilities are not intended to reach any person otherwise ineligible to register, such as by reason of a current judicial determination of mental incapacity to vote.

Since the requirements for services or assistance at agency offices may differ significantly from those for voting registration purposes, the Committee would expect that any applicant for services or assistance from such an agency who does not meet the requirements for eligibility to register to vote would decline to do so. It is important, therefore, that each applicant be advised of the voting requirements and the need to decline to register if he or she does not meet the requirements. The bill provides that all registration requirements should be set forth in the application to register to vote so that they will be readily available for each applicant to review during the application process. These requirements must include a statement of citizenship, an attestation that the applicant meets each such requirement, and the signature of the applicant under penalty of perjury. The applicant should be advised that there is no obligation to specify the particular reason for choosing to decline to register.

Since some of the reasons for declining to register to vote may involve matters of personal privacy, such as ineligibility under State law due to mental incompetence or a criminal conviction, an individual who declines to register to vote shall not be questioned as to the reasons for such action. If an individual reveals such information, it must be treated as confidential and may not be used for any purpose other than voter registration. As discussed later, the Act contains a general prohibition against a State or other entity, including an agency designated under this provision, from revealing any information relating to a declination to register or to the identification of the agency where a person registered.

Subsection (b) requires all entities of the Federal government to cooperate as much as possible with the States in carrying out this program by participating as designated voter registration agencies. This participation requirement is subject to the Federal agency agreeing to participate pursuant to subsection (a). No specific Federal agencies are designated in this bill to participate, it being left 30 to the States to negotiate such arrangements with the appropriate Federal agencies. It is the Committee's intention that any agency or organization providing assistance under the terms of this Act would negotiate a mutually satisfactory arrangement, which could include, where appropriate or required, reimbursement for services provided.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Subsection (c) requires that a completed registration application shall be transmitted to the appropriate State election official no later than 10 days after the date of acceptance. If a registration application is accepted within 5 days before the last day for registration to vote in an election, the application must be transmitted to the appropriate State election official no later than 5 days after the date of acceptance. An applicant may, if he or she chooses, mail the voter registration application directly to the appropriate State election official rather than returning it to the agency for transmittal. The agency providing voter registration services is prohibited from requiring a registrant to mail the form, and must accept it and forward it to the appropriate registration official if turned in by the applicant. Thus, the agency has an affirmative obligation to actively collect completed registration applications.

SECTION 8. REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ADMINISTRATION OF VOTER REGISTRATION

Subsection (a) provides that any person registered to vote not later than 30 days, or a lesser period as provided by State law, before a Federal election shall be permitted to vote. For these purposes, registration is complete upon submitting the form to the voting registrar, motor vehicle office, designated agency or office, or on date of postmark, if mailed. While the Act is clear with regard to the motor-voter and agency-based registration deadline requirement, the mail situation may be in need of some clarification. The reference, "or a lesser period as provided by State law" means, with regard to a mailed registration application, that the shorter State period would apply only if it is referenced to "date of postmark". If the shorter period provided by State law refers to the date of receipt in the registrar's office, the thirty day period provided for here would apply. It is not intended here to penalize a registration applicant; thus, if the application is postmarked after thirty days, but is received before the deadline specified by State law, it should be accepted. Also, one postmarked before thirty days but received after the deadline under State law, should also be accepted as timely.

Each State election official is required to give notice to each applicant regarding the disposition of his or her voter registration application. The means of notifying each applicant is not specified, so that each State may continue to use whatever means is required or permitted by State law or regulation. States should be aware that such notices should be drafted with regard to the purge provisions of the bill. States may adopt whichever procedure they deem best suited to provide notice to the applicant and to provide the registrar with verification of the accuracy of the information provided by the applicant. The Committee recognizes that such notices are sent by most States as a means of detecting the possibility of fraud 31 in voting registration and intends to give each State discretion to adopt a means of notification best suited to accomplish that purpose as well as providing a means for notifying an applicant, who has not had direct contact with the voter registrar's office, of the appropriate voting place for his or her residence. The Committee believes that accurate and current voter registration lists are essential to the integrity of the election process and for the protection of the individual.

This section also provides that the name of a registered voter may not be removed from the official list of eligible voters except: at the request of the registrant; as provided by State law, by reason of criminal conviction or mental incapacity; or, in accordance with the requirements of the Act, by reason of the death or a change in the residence of the registrant. Recognizing the essential need to maintain the integrity of the voter registration lists, the bill requires that States conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of death or by a change of residence.

A "request" by a registrant would include actions that result in the registrant being registered at a new address, such as registering in another jurisdiction or providing a change-of-address notice through the drivers license process that updates the voter registration.

States are required to inform applicants of voter eligibility requirements, the penalties provided by law for the submission of a false voter registration application, and ensure that the identity of the voter registration agency through which any particular voter is registered is not publicly disclosed.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Subsection (b) sets forth the standards for the confirmation of voter registration. Any State program or activity to protect the integrity of the electoral process by ensuring the maintenance of an accurate and current registration roll for Federal elections shall be (1) uniform, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act of 1965; and (2) shall not result in the removal of the name of any person from the official list because of a failure to vote.

The purpose of this requirement is to prohibit selective or discriminatory purge programs. This requirement may not be avoided by a registrar conducting a purge program or activity based on lists provided by other parties where such lists were compiled as the result of a selective, non-uniform, or discriminatory program or activity. The term "non-discriminatory" is intended to mean that the procedure complies with the requirements of the Voting Right Act of 1965.

The term "uniform" is intended to mean that any purge program or activity must be applied to an entire jurisdiction.

It is the intent of this section to impose the uniform, nondiscriminatory and conforming with the Voting Rights Act standards on any activity that is used to start, or has the effect of starting, a purge of the voter rolls, without regard to how it is described or to whether it also may have some other purpose. For example, the mailing of sample ballots is clearly a program that has another purpose but might provide the basis for a purge of voter rolls. It it 32 is to be used for that purpose and the registrar uses it to serve as his or her reason to send notices under subsection (d), that sample ballot mailing program must meet the standards of this section.

The Committee is mindful of the need to keep accurate and current voter rolls. The Committee is concerned that such programs can be abused and may result in the elimination of names of voters from the rolls solely due to their failure to respond to a mailing. Abuses may be found in the design of a program as well as in its implementation. In order to provide some guidance to the States, subsection (c) provides that a State may meet the requirements of conducting a general and comprehensive program that makes a reasonable effort to keep voting lists clean by establishing a program which uses the National Change of Address ("NCOA") program of the U.S. Postal Service. Use of the NCOA program by a State or any of its registration jurisdictions could be deemed to be in compliance with the requirements that the program be uniform, nondiscriminatory and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

By using the NCOA, a State may use change of address information to identify registrants whose addresses may have changed. If it appears from the information provided that a registrant has moved to a different address within the jurisdiction of the same voting registrar, the registrar is required to make the address change automatically and send the registrant a notice by forewardable mail and a postage prepaid pre-addressed return form by which the registrant may verify or correct the address information. If the registrant appears to have moved to an address outside of the jurisdiction of the registrar, the registrar may not remove the name of the voter until the registrar has sent a notice to the registrant as provided in subsection (d).

The section requires that a State complete any program the purpose of which is to systematically remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters at least 90 days before a primary or general election for Federal office. This requirement applies to the State outreach activity such as a mailing or a door to door canvas and requires that such activity be completed by the 90-day deadline. This section does not prohibit a State during that 90-day pre-election day period from removing names from the official list of eligible voters on the basis of the request of the registrant, as provided by State law for criminal conviction or mental incapacity, death, or any other correction of registration records pursuant to the Act.

Subsection (d) prohibits a State from removing the name of a registered voter by reason of a change in residence, unless the registered voter confirms in writing that he or she has changed residence outside the jurisdiction in which registered; or has failed to respond to a notice sent by the State and has not voted or appeared to vote within two general elections for Federal office since the date of the notice.

If a State determines that a registrant may have changed residence, the State may send by forwardable mail a postage prepaid return card on which the registrant may state his or her current address, together with a notice which states that: if the registrant has not changed residence or has changed residence within the 33 same jurisdiction, the registrant should return the card before the time for closing registrations for the next Federal election, i.e. 30 days before an election, or such lesser period as may be provided by State law. If the card is not returned, affirmation or confirmation of the registrant's address may be required before the registrant would be permitted to vote in a Federal election during the period beginning on the date of the notice and ending on the day after the second general Federal election that occurs after the date of the notice. If the registrant has not voted in an election during that period, the registrant's name will be removed from the list. If the registrant has moved to a residence outside the jurisdiction, the notice on the mailing must include information concerning how the registrant may continue to be eligible to vote.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Within the official list of eligible voters, notations (such as an asterisk or "I" for inactive status) may be made of those eligible voters who have failed to respond to a notice under Section 8(d)(2). The requirement that names with notations be maintained on the official list of eligible voters permits the State to decline to use these names in performing the type of routine, administrative responsibilities that do not impair the right of such voters to vote as set forth in the Act and as protected by the Voting Rights Act. For example, those who have failed to respond to a Section 8(d)(2) notice need not be included for administrative purposes in determining the number of signatures that may be required under State law for ballot access, the number of precincts that may be needed to service voters, or the number of ballots or voting machines that may be required in the administration of the voting process.

The term "registrar's jurisdiction", as used in connection with the NCOA program and with regard to the "affirmation" or "confirmation" requirements, is a term of art for the purpose of this Act and is not intended to dictate to the States their actual administrative structure for the purpose of registering voters. The Committee intends that a "registrar's jurisdiction" for the purposes of the Act be no smaller than a county, parish, city or town. This conforms to current practice. A State would be free, for example, to divide a very large county or city into 2 or more administrative units for registering voters as long as the county continued to be treated as the "registrar's jurisdiction" for those purposes of the Act hereinafter specified. First, that provision pertaining to a person who returns the postcard described in section 8(d) indicating that the registrant has moved to another residence within the jurisdiction of the same voter registrar must have his or her registration corrected to reflect the new address. Second, the provision that requires that a person who has not sent in the card is entitled to vote after affirming or confirming that his or her new residence is within the same congressional district and the same registrar's jurisdiction as that of his or her former residence. And third, the provision that use of the national change of address program could be considered to be in compliance with the requirements of the Act that pertain to list maintenance programs could protect the State if used State-wide or a registrar if used within the registrar's jurisdiction. As long as these protections are maintained a State would be free to alter its administrative structure and jurisdiction for the purpose of registering voters for Federal elections.

34 Subsection (e) establishes the procedures for voting in a Federal election where the registrant fails to return the card in accordance with the procedures outlined in subsection (d). If a registrant has moved from one residence to another within the jurisdiction of the same polling place, the person shall be permitted to vote at that polling place upon oral or written affirmation of the registrant's change of address, before an election official at the polling place. If a registrant has moved from a residence in one polling place to a residence in another polling place within the jurisdiction of the same voting registrar and the same congressional district, the registrant is provided three options. The registrant shall: (1) be permitted to correct the voting records and vote at the registrant's former polling place upon oral or written affirmation of the new address; or (2) be permitted to correct the voting records and vote at a central location within the same registrar's jurisdiction where a list of eligible voters is maintained upon written affirmation of the new address; or (3) be permitted to correct the voting records for purposes of voting in future elections at the appropriate polling place for the current address, and, if permitted by State law, shall be permitted to vote in the present election, upon confirmation of the new address by such means as are required by State law. If State law permits the registrant to vote in the current election upon oral or written affirmation of the new address at the appropriate polling place for the new address, voting at the old polling place and the central location do not have to be provided as alternative options.

If the registration records incorrectly indicate that a registrant has changed his or her residence, the registrant shall be permitted to vote upon oral or written affirmation that the registrant continues to reside at the same address.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This section of the bill attempts to incorporate an underlying purpose of the Act; that once registered, a voter should remain on the list of voters so long as the individual remains eligible to vote in that jurisdiction. This section ensures that if a registered voter moves within the jurisdiction of the same registrar, he or she should be permitted to vote. However, while this section sets out where an individual may vote, it is silent as to how that individual may be permitted to vote. Under certain circumstances it would be appropriate, and in compliance with the requirements of this Act, to require that such a person vote by some form of challenge ballot. It is not the intent of this provision to pre-empt any State requirement that a person whose eligibility to vote is challenged may be required to vote by a special ballot that is subject to post election rejection, where the challenge is sustained.

Subsection (f) provides that in the case of change of residence within the jurisdiction, the registrar shall correct the voting registration list accordingly, and the registrant's name may not be removed from the official list of eligible voters, nor may a registrant be required to re-register as a result of such a change of residence. The obligation of the registrar to change the rolls to reflect the new residence is triggered by notice to the registrar of such change, not the date of such change. The intent of this requirement is that it is the responsibility of a registrar, upon notification of a change of residence by a voter to another residence within the registrar's 35 jurisdiction, to make the necessary correction of the records. A registrar may not impose requirements, such as re-registration, upon such a voter. Although such notice of change of address might be made by the voter through the use of the motor-voter or agency-based registration process, the registrar's responsibility to make the correction is not dependent on the voter giving such notice; such notice may come through the Postal Service change of address program or other means conducted in conformance with the requirements of the Act, subject to verification by the voter.

Some State election officials expressed concern to the Committee that they had experienced difficulty in obtaining information regarding convictions for Federal offenses from the Federal courts which is needed to remove the names of persons convicted of certain offenses from the voter rolls under State law. Subsection (g) requires a United States Attorney to inform the appropriate State election official of the felony conviction of any person. Such notice must give the name, age, and address of the offender; the entry date of judgment; a description of the offenses on which the person was convicted; and the sentence imposed. Additional information may be provided at the request of the election official if necessary to determine whether a conviction affects the person's eligibility to vote. If such a conviction is overturned, the United States Attorney shall give notice to the appropriate election official.

Subsection (h) provides lower postal rates to a State or local voting registration official for any mailing which is certified to be required or authorized by the Act. This lower postal rate is the rate for any class of mail which is made available to a qualified nonprofit organization.

Subsection (i) provides that each State shall maintain for two years all records concerning the implementation of programs and activities conducted for the purpose of ensuring the accuracy and currency of addresses on the official list of eligible voters. The records must be made available for public inspection and, where available, photocopying at reasonable costs. the records shall include lists of names and addresses of all persons to whom notices were sent and information concerning whether or not each person has responded to the notice as of the date of inspection.

Provisions of this Act pertaining to voter registration programs require that information regarding a person's declination to register not be used for any purpose other than registration. There was also concern that information not be made public as to what voters registered at a particularly agency, such as a welfare or unemployment office. Therefore, these records may not contain any information relating to a declination to register or the identity of a voter registration agency through which any particular voter is registered, or a list of those persons registered through a particular agency.

SECTION 9. FEDERAL COORDINATION AND REGULATIONS

Subsection (a) provides that the Federal Election Commission shall prescribe appropriate regulations necessary to carry out this Act, consult with chief election officers of the States to develop a mail voter registration application form for Federal elections, and 36 submit by June 30 of each odd-numbered year, a report to the Congress assessing the impact of the Act on the administration of elections for Federal office and recommendations for improvements in Federal and State procedures, forms, and other matters, and provide information to the States with respect to the responsibilities of the States under this Act.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is the Committee's intent that the Commission should carefully determine which regulations are necessary and appropriate. In addition, nothing in the Act prohibits the Federal Election Commission from fathering the appropriate statistics necessary to meet its reporting requirements under the Act.

Subsection (b) sets forth the requirements of the mail registration form to be developed by the FEC. This form may only require such identifying information (including the signature of the applicant) and other information (including data relating to previous registrations) as is necessary to enable the appropriate State election official to assess the applicant's eligibility. The form must also include a statement that specifies each eligibility requirement (including citizenship); contain an attestation that the applicant meets such requirements, and require the signature of the applicant under penalty of perjury. This form may not include any requirement for notarization or other formal authentication, i.e., a witness requirement.

SECTION 10. DESIGNATION OF CHIEF STATE ELECTION OFFICIAL

Each State shall designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for the coordination of State responsibilities under this Act. Various provisions of this Act assign to this official certain responsibilities regarding the promulgation of regulations, the design of the Federal mail registration form, the receipt of notice of civil suits, and the distribution of mail registration forms.

SECTION 11. CIVIL ENFORCEMENT AND PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION

Subsection (a) provides that the Attorney General may bring a civil action for declaratory or injunctive relief as is necessary to carry out this Act.

Subsection (b) provides a private right of action to any person who is aggrieved by a violation of this Act by providing written notice of the violation to the chief State election official. If the violation is not corrected within 90 days after receipt of the notice, or within 20 days if the violation occurs within 120 days before the date of an election for Federal office, the aggrieved individual may bring a civil action in Federal court for declaratory or injunctive relief. If the violation occurred within 30 days before the date of an election for Federal office, the aggrieved individual may proceed to file a civil suit without notice to the chief State election official.

Section (c) permits a prevailing party (other than the United States) in a civil action to seek reasonable attorney fees, including litigation costs and expenses.

It should be noted that this section does not authorize the award of monetary damages. Rather, the civil remedies that are authorized are corrective action in the form of declaratory and injunctive 37 relief, plus reasonable attorney fees. The Committee does not believe that reasonable attorney fees will result in excessive awards in civil actions brought under this Act.

Subsection (d) provides that the right and remedies established by this Act are in addition to all other rights and remedies established by this section nor any other provision of this Act shall supersede, restrict, or limit the application of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Nothing in this Act authorizes or requires conduct that is prohibited by the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

SECTION 12. CRIMINAL PENALTIES

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This section would make a Federal offense, punishable by a fine and/or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, for any person, including an election official, who in any election for Federal office: (1) knowingly and willfully intimidates, threatens, or coerces, any person for registering to vote, or voting, or attempting to register or vote; urging or aiding any person to register to vote, to vote, or to attempt to register of vote: or exercising any right under this Act; or (2) knowingly and willfully deprives, defrauds, or attempts to deprive or defraud the residents of a State of a fair and impartially conducted election process by the procurement or submission of voter registrations that are known by the person to be materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent under the laws of the State in which the election is held; or the procurement, casting, or tabulation of ballots that are materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent under the laws of the State in which the election is held.

Concern has been expressed that these criminal provisions may be used to impede lawful political activities, such as distributing campaign literature, poll watching, and registration drives. Careful attention has been given to these concerns and this section has been specifically written to refer to acts which are "knowing and willful" and does not refer to inadvertent omissions or inaccuracies on voter registration forms or absentee ballots.

The second addresses the Federal criminal code only, and would not limit or restrict the availability of criminal penalties under State law.

SECTION 13. EFFECTIVE DATE

That Act will take effect on January 1, 1995. While this Act applies only to Federal elections and States are free to apply other regulations to State elections, many States will prefer to have the same requirements for both Federal and State elections. To accommodate those States that have constitutional obstacles to conforming State requirements to the Act, the effective date for such States will be January 1, 1996.

COST ESTIMATE

In compliance with paragraph 11(a) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the estimate of costs of this measure prepared by the Congressional Budget Office pursuant to section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act, is as follows:

38 U.S. Congress, Congressional Budget Office,
Washington, DC, February 25, 1993.

Hon. Wendell H. Ford,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the National Voter Registration Act of 1993. Because enactment of the legislation could affect revenues, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply to the bill.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

Robert D. Reischauer, Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill number: Not yet assigned.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Bill title: National Voter Registration Act of 1993.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration on February 18, 1993.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would create a national system of voter registration procedures for elections for federal office. Responsibility for implementing the system would fall largely to the states, with the federal government responsible for enforcement, as well as some financial and technical assistance.

REQUIREMENTS FOR STATES

Under the national system of voter registration, most states (except those with election day registration and those with no registration requirement at all) would be required to provide the following methods of registration:

Motor/voter.–When someone applies for a driver's license (new, renewal, or change of address) at the state motor vehicle authority, the application procedure would have to include the opportunity to register to vote. An individual would have to decline in writing on an application form to avoid registering by this means, or would have to sign an attestation, under penalty of perjury, that the individual is eligible to register to vote.

Mail registration.–Each state would make available through various sources a form, prescribed by the Federal Election Commission (FEC), that applicants could complete and mail to the election official to register for federal elections.

Agency registration.–Each state would have to designate some state and federal offices as well as private sector locations (such as public libraries, unemployment offices, banks, fishing and hunting license bureaus, or post offices) to distribute and collect applications for voter registration. Such locations would then forward the applications to the appropriate election official.

Currently, the federal government has little involvement with voter registration. Each state has its own laws governing registration, and in practice, registration practices vary widely even among 39 local election jurisdictions within a state. The bill would mandate that states provide the specific registration methods consistently in all jurisdictions.

In addition, the bill would mandate that any state programs used to update voter registration lists shall be uniform and nondiscriminatory and may not remove someone from the list for not voting. The bill would permit a state, if it determines a voter has moved, to remove the voter from the list only after sending a forwardable notice with a return card that would allow the voter to confirm the correct address.

Finally, each state would have to designate a chief state official responsible for implementing the state's functions under the bill.

REQUIREMENTS FOR THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The legislation would require the U.S. Postal Service to provide election officials with a postal rate subsidy for any mailings that it requires the officials to conduct, such as the registration confirmation notice and the registration update notice. The bill authorizes the appropriation of funds sufficient to reimburse the Postal Service for its losses in providing the subsidy. If the Congress does not appropriate the necessary amounts, then the Postal Service would no longer offer the subsidy.

The bill would require the FEC to provide information to the states regarding their responsibilities and to report to the Congress once every two years on the impact of the registration procedures required by the bill. The FEC also would have to develop a uniform application form to be used by states for mail registration.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In addition, the bill would authorize the Attorney General to bring civil actions in court to enforce its provisions. Individuals also would be allowed to ask the court for relief from any violations of the bill's provisions.

Finally, the bill would establish criminal penalties for persons who, in any election for federal office, interfere or seek to interfere with voting or voter registration, falsify voter registration applications, or knowingly cast or tabulate false or fraudulent ballots.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government:

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

40 The costs of this bill fall within budget functions 370 and 800.

Basis of estimate: The subsidized postal rates would be used primarily to update voter registration files and to confirm the receipt of voter registration applications. Based on the total number of change-of-address actions filed with the Postal Service, CBO expects that the postal subsidy would amount to no more than $3 million annually–probably in the vicinity of $2 million–to cover a portion of the cost of mailing registration update notices. In addition, CBO estimates that officials would mail about 25 million voter confirmation notices, based on election officials' reports that the number of registration applications typically amounts to 20 percent of the total number of registered voters in the jurisdiction. (There are about 130 million registered voters nationwide.) Assuming an average subsidy of 7.3 cents per piece of mail, subsidizing the mailing of these confirmation notices would cost about $2 million annually at current rates. The postal subsidy would first be available in January 1995, a year in which CBO assumes that an increase in postal rates will occur. Assuming rates will rise about 15 percent, CBO estimates that the total postal subsidy would be about $4.5 million annually. The subsidy for fiscal year 1995 would be less because the subsidized rates would become available three months into the fiscal year.

Based on information from the FEC, CBO estimates that the additional staff and associated expenses necessary to develop a mail registration form and to provide assistance to the states would cost approximately $200,000 annually, beginning in 1994. The requirements imposed on states and localities would become effective beginning January 1, 1995, unless provisions in a state's constitution conflict with implementing the bill. In such cases, a state would not have to comply with the bill until January 1, 1996.

The imposition of criminal penalties could cause an increase in governmental receipts from penalty collections, but CBO cannot estimate the amount of such an increase. Such fines would be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury.

6. Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts through 1995. Enactment of the bill could result in greater receipts from penalty collections, but CBO cannot estimate the amount of any such increase.

7. Estimated cost to State and local governments: The bill would require most states to provide three types of voter registration for federal elections beginning in 1995: motor/voter, mail-in, and agency registration. The bill also would mandate that states use a uniform and nondiscriminatory program for maintaining accurate lists of eligible voters.

Consistent with CBO's usual procedures for estimating the cost effects of legislation, this estimate compares the cost to states of complying with the bill's provisions to the cost of their current practices under existing law. Few state and local governments currently employ all the methods required by the bill for registering and maintaining voters on the rolls. In addition, without the bill, states and localities are unlikely to replace their existing practices with those outlined in the legislation. Therefore, the costs states 41 would incur in changing their registration procedures would be directly attributable to enactment of the bill.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUMMARY OF COSTS

Direct costs.–If the bill is enacted, state and local governments would have to pay for the cost of complying with the bill's registration provisions. For the additional staff, postage, and printing expenses associated with the expected increase in registrations, especially through motor/voter, CBO estimates that it would cost states and localities an average of about $20 million a year for the first five years of the program. Added costs would be somewhat lower than the average in federal election years, and above the average in other years, since the procedures required by the bill would have the effect of smoothing the current election-year peaks in registration costs. Some of these expenses would begin in 1994, the year before the bill's provisions take effect, as the states prepare to offer the new registration methods.

Although the bill would not directly require it, some states may decide to acquire, expand, or upgrade computer systems to facilitate implementation of the bill. To the extent that state and local governments make such changes in computer technology, their costs could increase further. For example, we estimate that one-time costs to computerize the registration lists of all the jurisdictions that currently do not have computers would amount to less than $25 million. We cannot predict how many jurisdictions would do so, or how many that now have computers would choose to change their system.

Another provision that would require most states to make a change from current practices affects the polling place where a registrant may be permitted to vote. Under the bill, if a registrant has changed addresses within a jurisdiction without notifying the registrar, but the new and old addresses have different polling places, then the registrant would have the option of voting at the old or new polling place, or some other polling place that has a list of registered voters. Election officials have indicated that this requirement would be quite difficult to implement without a computerized registration list. Without such a capability, it might not be possible to fully meet this requirement, so the cost to election officials of this provision cannot be estimated at this time.

Offsets to costs.–Because the bill would authorize the Postal Service to provide a rate subsidy to election officials for mailings it requires, state and local governments would be able to shift some of the costs they incur now to the federal government. The bill would require officials to notify registrants as to the outcome of their application and to contact those whom the officials plan to drop from the rolls because of a change in address. (Most officials already take both of these actions.) CBO estimates that the postal subsidy for these mailings would total about $4 million annually. Thus, upon enactment of the bill, state and local election officials would save approximately $4 million annually in postage costs.

Other costs.–To the extent that the legislation is successful in increasing the number of registered voters in all jurisdictions, state and local governments likely would face other costs that are not directly 42 associated with implementing the bill's provisions. For example, if more people are registered, then presumably voter turnout during elections would increase. Because election officials try to maintain a certain ratio of voters per polling place, officials might have to add new polling places, voting machines, and poll workers. However, these officials would take similar steps because of growth or migration patterns, and it would be difficult to separate the bill's effect on increased turnout from other contributing factors.

Certain states with specialized election laws would encounter some secondary effects of the bill. California law, for example, requires state and local officials to mail all voters on the registration list a sample ballot and an explanation of all ballot initiative issues before each election. If enactment of the bill results in more people registered, then the cost of such special mailings will be greater. On the other hand, the bill's provisions that encourage improved list-cleaning would result in more accurate voter registration lists, and election officials would save money by not having to mail voting materials to or prepare polling places for people who no longer would be on the lists. We have not estimated the total costs or savings from such effects in the various states, which would depend in part on how successful this legislation would be in accomplishing its goals. California, which has some of the most extensive requirements relating to communications with registered voters, has estimated that it costs between $4 and $5 per registered voter to print ballots, print labels, mail sample ballots, and provide polling places. Most other states have lower costs, because they do not have all these requirements mandated by law.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Because the legislation would allow individuals to sue for relief from violation of the bill's provisions, state and local governments and officials are potentially liable to pay fines and court and attorney fees if they lose a lawsuit. Such costs would not result directly from the bill, but rather from court cases that CBO cannot predict.

CURRENT LAW

Under current law, each state sets its own rules or guidelines for registering to vote in federal elections, and many states allow a wide range in practice among decentralized, local election jurisdictions (usually counties or cities and towns). About thirty states already have mail-in registration and about one-half of the states have some form of motor/voter registration. States and local jurisdictions pay the costs of registering voters, and the federal government does not currently assist them with these costs.

DATA COLLECTION

Because voting registration practices vary so widely, the incremental cost of implementing new procedures in the nation's 18,000 election jurisdictions is difficult to determine. In preparing this estimate, CBO assumed that local jurisdictions within a state generally follow registration guidelines set out by the state (even though there are some variations). We then compared the states' current guidelines with the requirements in the bill. (CBO relied on state-by-state summaries of registration practices prepared by various election information clearinghouses.)

43 In so doing, CBO surveyed the election officials in just over half of the states (as well as about two dozen counties of varying sizes). We collected cost information from some states that already provide one or more of the registration procedures mandated in the bill. In addition, some states provided CBO with the fiscal notes prepared for their state legislatures when they were considering one of these options. We also contacted about half of the 12 states that currently do not offer any of the bill's registration methods for their assessment of the bill's likely impact.

ASSUMPTIONS

Based on this information about the general registration practices in each state and the steps each state would have to take under the bill, CBO makes the following assumptions regarding implementation that could affect the costs to state and local governments:

In most states, motor/voter would become the primary method of registering voters. Because most people have a driver's license and are required to renew it periodically, a motor/voter system eventually would provide most people with a convenient opportunity to register, especially after a change of address.

Although completing a driver's license application at the state department of motor vehicles (DMV) would be the most common way people would apply for registration, local election officials would remain largely responsible for maintaining accurate voter lists.

The several states with constitutional provisions that would conflict with the bill such as requiring voters to sign an oath in person in front of a registrar, would change their laws to be consistent with the bill. Otherwise, those states would have to maintain separate registration rolls and conduct federal elections separately from other elections. This estimate does not include any cost for such separate elections.

COSTS OF REGISTRATION PROVISIONS

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Motor/voter: DMV costs.–The bill would require states to include a voter registration application form as part of an application for a state driver's license. The bill language suggests that states use a consolidated form, but also allows them the flexibility of using two forms. CBO assumes that states could use two forms if they desire, because the committee's report language indicates the committee's intent to allow this option to states. Thus, states that already have a two-form motor/voter process would not have to change, and states that would have to decide how to set up a motor/voter process could have a choice.

Based on the experience of the states that already have motor/voter, it appears that the additional cost to states of implementing motor/voter registration would result mainly from hiring additional staff to handle the extra paperwork. For example, state DMVs would need more employees at high traffic locations to continue to process applicants in the same amount of time as they currently do. For the 25 states that do not now have some form of motor/voter, 44 the cost of such additional employees and related expenses would probably be about $20 million annually during the first five years of implementation. Since most states require renewal of a driver's license every four years, costs would decrease in later years, because most people would have had an opportunity to register and only those who move would have to update their registration.

Motor/voter: Election official costs.–Once the DMV receives an application, it probably would forward a copy to the local election official to process the registration, as is current practice in the states that now have motor/voter. While CBO expects that officials in sparsely populated jurisdictions would be able to absorb small increases in the number of applications, others would face increased costs. In especially populous jurisdictions, election officials would have to hire more staff to handle the likely increase in applications and to check for duplicate registrations (although some states with motor/voter report these are less than they had originally anticipated). Counties we contacted report that the number of registration applications they handle annually amounts to about 20 percent of the number of registered voters in the county (there are about 130 million registered voters nationwide). Based on information from counties in states that currently have motor/voter, it appears that the workload could increase by 20 percent because of people registering who otherwise would not have registered, duplicate registrations, and ineligible applications.

Assuming the incremental cost for a county election office of handling an additional application is $1.50, then local jurisdictions, in aggregate, would have to pay an additional $5 million to $10 million annually. Some of these costs would only be incurred during the first few years. Once most people are on the rolls and the number of unregistered voters decreases, use of the motor/voter system would decrease as voters would only register if they have moved.

Such costs, however, would be somewhat offset by a reduction in the cost of part-time employees hired to handle the increased workload around each registration deadline. Officials in some states with motor/voter, such as Colorado and Michigan, report that receiving forms from the DMV evenly over the year rather than in a last-minute pre-election rush has allowed them to reduce their part-time hires and use their full-time staff more efficiently. Based on information from several localities that hire part-time staff during election years, we expect local officials nationwide could save about $10 million in a presidential election year and about $7 million in non-presidential election years by reducing part-time hires. (There would be no savings in non-election years because no part-time help is necessary.)

The total costs that election officials would face would be offset further by the postal rate subsidy authorized by the bill. While the legislation requires election officials to notify applicants of the outcome of their registration application, it also would provide a discount of about 43 percent for notices mailed by third class. Because most states already mail such notices to applicants, the notification requirement would not result in additional costs, but the subsidy 45 would shift about $2 million of postage costs currently incurred by election officials to the federal government.

Motor/voter: Computer costs.–Rather than forwarding an application from the DMV to a county registrar, a possible alternative, untested thus far, would be to transmit the voter information electronically. The cost of adding registrants to a jurisdiction's list would be lower if the voter data were transferred to computer by tape or other device rather than entered by hand. Some states have indicated that they would probably implement the motor/voter requirement by switching their record-keeping from paper to computers, and arranging for electronic transfer of data from the DMV system to the voter registration system. Some state officials have suggested that record-keeping would be improved if election officials used signature digitizers to store voters' signatures on computer, but this would cost extra. Although the bill would not mandate states to computerize, in some instances states or counties might decide computerization would be the best action, even though it would require a significant one-time investment in equipment.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CBO has no information on which to base an estimate of how many counties would computerize or how many more states would create a statewide registration system. (Currently, 21 states have one.) Based on data from Election Data Services, it appears that jurisdictions already use computers to maintain lists for at least 70 percent to 80 percent of the registered voters in the country. Aside from jurisdictions that might wish to change their existing computer systems, jurisdictions could potentially purchase new equipment to computerize the remaining one-fourth of the nation's voters.

We have examined the costs of existing registration and election systems and have determined that it costs less than one dollar per voter record for a computer system. Therefore, computerizing the registration lists for the 25 million to 35 million people in jurisdictions currently without computers would probably cost less than $25 million.

Mail in an agency registration.–Because most voters (we assume 80 percent to 90 percent) eventually would register through the motor/voter system, mail-in and agency registration would serve as alternate means for those few remaining voters who do not have a driver's license. In those states that currently provide one or both of these methods, the number of registrations received from these sources would decrease over time as voters register instead through the DMV, and would, after the first few years, eventually generate from $5 million to $10 million in annual savings, which would partially offset increased costs of motor/voter. If all states that currently do not have mail-in registration were to implement it along with the other two methods it would cost them $1 million to $2 million annually because they would not use mail-in registration as much as states that currently have mail-in registration do.

Almost all states report that they have some form of agency or satellite registration, which in some states means a voter has to swear an oath in front of a deputy registrar at one of several county offices. The bill envisions a somewhat expanded type of agency registration in which forms are available at a variety of locations where voters can complete and submit them (or else take 46 them home and mail them in). Again, this would not be a major source of registering voters, and the costs are not expected to be significant in aggregate, although some additional training costs might be necessary to expand the pool of people able to assist voters in completing the forms. Only those states that currently have just a deputy registrar system would have to print extra forms to be available throughout the jurisdiction, but these costs probably would be offset by the reduced amount of work for the registrars and clerks who would not have to register as many voters in persons.

COSTS OF VOTER CONFIRMATION PROVISIONS

Because voters usually do not notify election officials of address changes, the names and addresses of outdated registrants often accumulate on the rolls. Election officials revise registration lists to clean out those who have moved, died, or are otherwise ineligible to vote in that jurisdiction. The bill would prescribe that whatever method a state uses to maintain accurate registration rolls, it should be uniform and nondiscriminatory. Further, the bill would prohibit states from removing registrants from the list simply for not voting.

Current law.–Almost all states now employ some procedure for updating lists at least once every two years, though practices may vary somewhat from county to county. About one-fifth of the stats canvass all voters on the list. The rest of the states do not contact all voters, but instead target only those who did not vote in the most recent election (using not voting as an indication that an individual might have moved). Of these, only a handful of states simply drop the non-voters from the list without notice. These states could not continue this practice under the bill.

Whether states canvass all those on the list or just the non-voters, most send a notice to assess whether the person has moved. In a majority of states, election officials also provide voters with a way to update or prevent removal from the registration list.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

National change of address system.–The bill suggests, but does not require, an approach election officials can use to make sure that their list cleaning method is uniform and nondiscriminatory. Instead of using non-voting as an indication that a voter has changed addresses, an election official could contact only those who have actually moved, and at their new addresses. But using the National Change of Address (NCOA) system of the U.S. Postal Service, election officials could directly identify those who have moved and would send those people a forwardable notice with a pre-addressed, postage paid card that outlines the registration options available and allows people to respond to the officials. While an elections jurisdiction would have to pay a vendor licensed by the Postal Service to do a computer match of the registration list and the NCOA list (costing from $2 to $8 per 1,000 addresses matched), these costs probably would be offset by reducing the postage and printing costs that officials currently pay for less-focused canvassing. Several pilot studies of this system in California and Oregon, sometimes called Project MAIL, report that counties would save money by significantly reducing the number of notices sent out.

47 Postal rate subsidy.–Whether election officials decide to use this NCOA approach or choose their current or other method for list cleaning (as long as it is uniform, nondiscriminatory, and does not drop for nonvoting), their postal costs associated with this process would decrease if the legislation is enacted. The bill authorizes a postal rate subsidy for mailings associated with the list cleaning requirement, thereby shifting costs from the states to the federal government. The ultimate amount of this shift would depend on the number of notices mailed. We have no data on the amount of mail election officials currently send out to update their lists. However, if most state adopt the NCOA approach, the number of changes of address, about 40 million annually, would represent the maximum possible number of matches between the registration rolls and the NCOA list. With an average third class subsidy of about 7.3 cents per piece of mail at current rates, the cost of this subsidy is unlikely to exceed $3 million annually. In fact, it is likely to be less–probably in the vicinity of $2 million–because not everyone on the NCOA list will be on a registration list, some changes of address are temporary only, and officials will update their lists through other methods such as motor/voter. When voters move within a state and get a new driver's license, they also would be updating their voting registration, thereby reducing the number of voters that officials will have to contact to determine whether they are recorded on the rolls accurately.

8. Estimate comparison: None.

9. Previous CBO estimate: On February 1, 1993, CBO prepared an estimate for H.R. 2, the National Voter Registration Act of 1993, as ordered reported by the Committee on House Administration on January 27, 1993. That estimate showed direct spending from the Crime Victims Fund because fines mandated by the bill would result in greater deposits into the fund. The estimate for this bill does not include any direct spending because income from fines would go into the general fund of the Treasury. The cost estimates for the two bills are otherwise identical.

10. Estimate prepared by: James Hearn, Mickey Buhl, and John Stell.

11. Estimate approved by: C.G. Nuckols, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

REGULATORY IMPACT

Pursuant to paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee received the following information from the Federal Election Commission as to the regulatory impact of the bill, as reported by the Committee:

Federal Election Commission,
Washington, DC, February 25, 1993.

Hon. Wendell H. Ford,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dear Mr. Chairman: This letter responds to your inquiry of February 22, 1993, regarding the probable impact of regulatory and reporting responsibilities assigned to the Federal Election Commission 48 (FEC) under the terms of the National Voter Registration Act of 1993, ad reported out of Committee.

At this time, we anticipate that the regulations will be limited to specifying the contents of the national mail voter registration form and the data to be collected and reported by State and local election authorities, pursuant to the reporting requirements set out in Section 9.

In response to the individual items you specified:

1. An estimate of the numbers and classes of individuals and groups who would be regulated.–The Commission estimates that its regulations and reporting requirements would, like other provisions of the bill itself, have a direct impact on approximately 8,000 State and local election officials throughout the nation who are responsible for conducting voter registration for federal elections. Tangentially affected would be the 189,000,000 persons of voting age in the United States who might come in contact with the registration process.

2. The economic impact of the regulations.–We foresee regulations pertaining only to the contents of the mail registration forms and State reporting required by the bill. The latter would have associated costs beyond that inherent in the bill itself. This is addressed under item 4 below.

3. The impact on the personal privacy of the individuals involved.–The Commission's regulations would have no impact on the personal privacy of the election officials themselves. However, certain items that might have to appear on the proposed national mail registration application form could be perceived by some members of the public as an invasion of personal privacy. Three such items are questions regarding Social Security number (required by 13 States, optional in 14 States), political party preference (required by the 26 States that conduct closed primaries) and race (required by some States in carrying out the purposes of the Voting Rights Act). These questions could be viewed as especially intrusive in States that do not require this information for voter registration purposes.

4. An estimate of the time, additional paperwork, and financial costs of recordkeeping requirements.–The Commission anticipates that minimum reporting requirements may necessitate the collection of the following data from State and local election authorities:

The number, method, source, and disposition of registration applications received;

The method, frequency, and consequences of confirming the voter registration lists;

The number and reasons for other deletions from the voter registration lists;

The number of persons of voting age and the percentage of those that are registered;

The number and types of the various mailings required under the bill; and Costs of implementing the legislation, to include producing registration forms and other necessary materials, training, and maintaining records.

Although several jurisdictions, notably the large ones, routinely collect some or all of the data, a universal mandate to do so would 49 unquestionably placed some additional burden or many election offices. This burden would fall unevenly or local jurisdictions dependent on both the size of their populations and the extent of their computerization. We can estimate costs of such a reporting mechanism based on the model devised for the Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped Act wherein local jurisdictions report to the State, States to the FEC, and the FEC to the Congress.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Our assumption is that such reporting would require one-half (0.5) a staff month (on average) per local jurisdiction and two staff months per State. At $24,000 salary per person, the approximately 350 staff years would cost about $8,400,000 per year, to be borne by State and local governments. This figure would likely decrease over time with increased computerization. Furthermore, such data would prove useful to the State and local offices as well as to political parties, the Postal Service, and the Department of Justice.

Should you or your staff require any further information regarding these or other related matters, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Scott E. Thomas, Chairman.

COMMITTEE ROLLCALL VOTE

In compliance with paragraph 7 (b) and (c) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the record of the rollcall vote in the Committee on Rules and Administration during its consideration of the original bill, to report it favorably, was:

YEAS–7	NAYS–5
Mr. Pell	Mr. Stevens
Mr. Byrd	Mr. Helms
Mr. Moynihan	Mr. Warner
Mr. Dodd	Mr. McConnell
Mrs. Feinstein	Mr. Cochran
Mr. Mathews
Mr. Ford

Senator Stevens presented the proxy of Senator Hatfield in favor of the bill.

*50 MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATORS STEVENS, HELMS, WARNER, DOLE, MCCONNELL, AND COCHRAN ON THE NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION ACT OF 1993

Since this issue was last debated before the full Senate, two significant developments have occurred: (1) in the 1992 general election, voter turnout increased 5 percent over 1988; and (2) the financial condition of the Federal and State governments has worsened.

The first point clearly indicates that the National Voter Registration Act is not necessary to increase voter turnout. The key to increasing turnout is an electorate that feels they have something at stake and that there is a compelling reason to vote. Those elements were present in 1992.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On the second point, States, the vast majority of whom must balance their budgets, have their backs against the financial wall. The unfunded mandates established by this bill will exacerbate the situation and force many States to resort to offsets in the form of program cuts or tax increases. For them, deficit spending is not an option.

If, as the majority report contends, the costs of this bill are relatively modest, then it should not be difficult for the bill's proponents to provide funding to implement its provisions. Regardless of whose cost estimates are the most accurate, Congress should not impose this bill on the states as the latest in a long line of unfunded Federal mandates.

The National Voter Registration Act of 1903 would require State and local governments to register voters in three ways: (a) by simultaneous applications when applying for motor vehicle drivers' licenses; (b) by applications received through the mail; and (c) by applications through all public assistance, unemployment and vocational rehabilitation offices.

No hearings were held on this bill in the 103d Congress, but the Rules Committee hearings held in 1991 afforded an opportunity for both the proponents and opponents of this legislation to be heard.

The enthusiasm of the bill's supporters for registering people to vote when applying for a driver's license is shared at the state level. In fact, fully 27 States plus the District of Columbia now provide citizens who want to register to vote while visiting a Department of Motor Vehicles office an opportunity to do so. In 1991, legislation was introduced in the statehouses of an additional 17 States to establish some form of motor voter or agency based systems. [1]

While the enthusiasm for such programs at the State level continues to grow, it has not translated into enthusiasm for the strictures of this legislation. This reluctance is partly because States 51 are experiencing severe fiscal pressure and simply cannot afford the expensive and unnecessary costs this bill imposes.

State after State has insisted that the costs of motor voter will be substantial and they will have to curtail other programs such as education or child nutrition to come up with the funds needed to meet the unfunded mandates in the bill.

In fact, officials in 13 States with over 36 percent of the Nation's population are so concerned about the financial impact of this proposal they have taken the time to inform the committee of their objections to it. Ten of these States prepared cost estimates of the bill for their jurisdictions.

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

Alabama, Minnesota, Missouri and South Dakota also expressed concern over the impact of the requirements contained in motor voter.

Furthermore, the following organizations have criticized the National Voter Registration Act for the unfunded mandates it would impose on state and local governments:

American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators National Association of Counties.

National Governors Association.

National Association of Secretaries of State.

National Association of Towns and Townships.

National League of Cities.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Imposing these additional costs on state and local governments is particularly hard to justify when one considers that any causal link between the registration programs required by the bill and increased voter turnout is tenuous. The Congressional Research Service studied motor voter programs in states that have adopted them and produced the following findings.

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

52 Note that voter turnout dropped after the adoption of motor voter programs in 7 of these 10 states. Collectively, voter turnout declined in states that adopted motor voter programs by 2.68 percent. For the states that practice the active form of motor voter (similar to the requirements of this bill, turnout went down 6.21 percent in Presidential elections. For non-Presidential elections, turnout increased by just over half of one percent.

Given its lackluster effect at the state level, motor voter is a surprising prescription for arresting the decline in voter turnout nationally.

It should also be noted that this bill provides states with a way to escape the expenses and rigors of the bill: adoption of election day registration. The Department of Justice has said that election day registration "... would greatly impair the ability of the Department and the states to combat voting and election fraud.... [and] would totally preclude meaningful verification of voter eligibility, and thus allow easy corruption of the election process by the unscrupulous." [2]

Permitting registration on the day of the vote eliminates the ability of election officials to confirm the identity, address and eligibility of a prospective voter. Congress should be reluctant to provide economic incentives to states to adopt a procedure that undermines the very basis of democracy.

For the first time, this bill would subject voter registration systems to the regulatory control of the Federal Elections Commission–an entity many have criticized for being unable to satisfactorily carry out its current federally mandated duties.

MAIL REGISTRATION

The National Voter Registration Act mandates unsupervised registration by mail for all states and forbids precautions states may take to reduce the chance of the unscrupulous taking advantage of the system. The Department of Justice wrote in 1991:

> 53 [This proposal] would impose a sweeping requirement to allow mail-in registration while simultaneously limiting significantly the ability of the states to use a variety of techniques to verify the applicant's identity and eligibility. For this reason [the bill's] provision for registration by mail would entail a substantial and perhaps prohibitive risk of enhancing the opportunities for fraudulent registration and voting. [3]

Section 9(b)(3) of the bill states that a mail registration form "may not include any requirement or other formal authentication." Alaska requires registration applications received through the mail to be authenticated by the signatures of two adults. Other states require notarization of these applications. All of these precautions would be prohibited under the bill.

Mail registration also prohibits a requirement that registration applications be made in-person. By implication, states would be prohibited from asking applicants to supply identification to determine that persons registering are who they claim to be or live where they say they do. Currently, Connecticut requires a birth certificate, driver's license, or Social Security card to be shown at the time of registration. New Hampshire officials have the authority to require similar identification from applicants who are naturalized citizens.

In 1982, a New York Grand Jury reviewed widespread vote fraud charges in Kings County from 1968 to 1982. It observed:

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> The advent of mail-in registration in 1976 made the creation of bogus registration cards even easier and less subject to detection. ... According to testimony, mail-in registration has become the principal means of perpetrating election fraud and has apparently resulted in the abandonment of the pre-1976 election fraud methods. [4]

As a District Attorney in New York, Elizabeth Holtzman wrote the New York Times lamenting "how easy it is to vote illegally" there and called for implementation of the recommendations contained in this Grand Jury Report. Under motor voter New York would be prevented from ending what the Grand Jury said had now become "the principal means of perpetrating election fraud."

The Justice Department pointed out that verification of mail registration applications in states that now have it may be inadequate. Many states rely upon the mailing of non-forwardable letters to mail registration applicants when the application is received by the election office. The assumption is that the Postal Service will return notices if an individual does not actually live at the address.

This assumption is false. The Federal Election Commission's Advisory Committee on Election Administration pointed out that such non-forwardable notices are only returned to the sender if the addressee files a change of address with the Postal Service. The Postal Service never inquires whether an addressee actually lives 54 at an address. If no change of address form has been filed with the Post Office, the mail is delivered no matter who lives at an address.

The Department of Justice pointed out that because of this underlying assumption for verifying the authenticity of a mail registration application is false "... there may in fact be a great deal of fraudulent registration by mail that simply has gone undetected." Nevertheless, this bill mandates this suspect system of registration for all states while forbidding even modest verification procedures for it.

In an effort to reduce the fraud associated with mail registration, the bill has been changed to permit states to require that new voters who have registered by mail must vote in person the first time they vote. States could ask for identification at that time. However, the effectiveness of this requirement is greatly undermined by an exception in the bill that voids the provision if it conflicts with another law. Most states now have absentee balloting. Laying mail registration on top of absentee balloting would result in a complete mailbox voting system particularly susceptible to fraud.

The State of Illinois requires signatures on voter registration applications to be made in front of a registrar. On election day, the signature on the registration form is compared with the signature of the person seeking to vote under that registration form to guard against "ghost voting."

By implication, this bill would prohibit this verification procedure. The Chairman of the Illinois Board of Elections told the Committee that a mail registration program would prevent verification of the original voter application and "would destroy the signature verification process–a key factor in the prevention of vote fraud." [5]

This verification system helped a Grand Jury examining voter fraud in the 1982 Chicago election secure sixty-two indictments resulting in at least fifty-six convictions. [6] Much of the evidence in this case was based on the work of FBI handwriting experts who compared the signatures on authenticated voter registration cards with signatures made at the polling booths. Such detection would have been impossible if mail registration, as mandated by this bill, were in place.

With mail registration, the perpetrators could have easily escaped detection by simply sending in bogus registration forms, and on polling day, having the same person sign to cast a fraudulent ballot. The signatures would then have been identical.

Even with Chicago's signature verification system, a U.S. attorney has estimated that up to one hundred thousand fraudulent ballots were cast in each of the Chicago elections of 1982 and 1986. [7] It is difficult to imagine what the extent of the vote fraud problem in that city would be if its signature verification procedures were prohibited by this bill.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

55 In California, mail registration led to fraudulent filings with a phenomenon called "creative writing." This state experienced fake and duplicate registrations because of registration drives in which registrations were filed, often without knowledge of the "applicant," simply to fill a quota. The problem led this state to hire an investigator to guard against this kind of fraud.

Nationwide mail registration, as proposed by this bill, raises the very real specter of adding to America's illegal immigration problems. Illegal aliens have used easy availability of voter registration cards as a means to gain entry into the United States. Voter registration cards have also been used to gain access to federal and state benefits and even to obtain jobs with the federal government.

The Grand Jury sitting in Chicago reported:

> Another pool of potential votes for the unscrupulous precinct captain was that of aliens who were illegally registered. Many aliens register to vote so that they can obtain documents identifying them as U.S. citizens; however, the number of aliens who actually voted is undocumented. We have learned that these aliens used their voters' cards to obtain a myriad of benefits, from Social Security to jobs with the Defense Department. [8]

Although this Grand Jury did not document aliens actually voting, a survey [9] by the Immigration and Naturalization Service of ballots cast in a 1989 U.S. House of Representatives special election in Florida did. In that election, it was confirmed that fully 11 percent of all ballots of foreign born voters sampled were cast by non-citizens. Furthermore, the Immigration and Naturalization Service reported that there is reason to believe that in this federal election, the incidence of illegal alien voting among all ballots examined was as high as 24 percent.

This fraud might be combated by requiring proof of citizenship at the time of registration. However, mail registration under this bill would preclude such corrective action.

This bill would mandate that voter registration cards be accepted by states through the mail from any location in the U.S. (and even around the world for that matter). Therefore, there is the potential for citizens of one state to use mail registration to gain access to another state's benefits.

Alaska, in addition to witnessed signatures, requires all out-of-state mail registration applicants to provide "identification or other documentation that supports... a claim to Alaska residency." [10] This precaution would be prohibited under this legislation.

The bill would require all mail registration applications to be processed if postmarked up to thirty days before an election. The Alaska Division of Elections has reviewed absentee mail ballots and found that almost thirty percent of them had illegible postmarks. This would be a problem around the nation and could unintentionally disenfranchise many voters.

56 Election fraud disenfranchises voters. It erodes confidence in our democratic traditions. Unfortunately, it is not a problem confined to the past and, in some areas of the nation, it will continue to be a problem in the future. The mail registration provisions of this bill would strip the states of their ability to deal with these election fraud problems.

AGENCY BASED REGISTRATION

This bill would require all public assistance, unemployment, and vocational rehabilitation offices to register those who receive benefits from those offices.

In its letter to the Committee, the Department of justice wrote in 1991:

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Department's experience demonstrates that public officials sometimes use their power to dispense or withhold benefits in order to pressure citizens into voting a particular way or registering for a particular party. This bill would increase substantially the opportunities for such intimidation and coercion of the public. [11]

The Justice Department was not engaging in mere speculation. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported on an investigation into allegations that public assistance employees were routinely registering public assistance applicants, "suggesting" who they should vote for and taking them to the polls. [12]

Such exploitation of vulnerable public assistance recipients is not a new phenomena and continues today. This bill would require public assistance employees across the nation to become actively involved in the administration of elections and we think the results will mean more political manipulation and abuse of public recipients.

The threat of public employee misconduct is not the sole objection to the agency registration provisions of this bill. Even the appearance that a person's public assistance benefits are linked to registering to vote violates the American tradition of voluntary participation in the political system. It should not be required by the federal government.

CONCLUSION

Although greater voter participation is a goal shared by all Members of the Committee, state experience with motor voter programs demonstrate that such programs do not increase voter turnout. What will increase are the costs to state and local governments and opportunities for election fraud.

The lion's share of any new registration under this bill is expected to be done at Departments of Motor Vehicles. The supporters of the bill assume that both mail registration and agency based registration under this bill will account for only a small portion of the new registrations. The bill as written, therefore, risks significant 57 new opportunities for vote fraud and improprieties by governmental agencies for no significant increase in voter participation.

Rather than assisting state efforts to implement innovative voter registration program, this legislation will impose obligations that are impractical, ineffective and an expensive burden for states.

Ted Stevens.
Jesse Helms.
John Warner.
Bob Dole.
Mitch McConnell.
Thad Cochran.

58 ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR HATFIELD

The bill we report today is substantially similar to S. 250 of the 102nd Congress, the National Voter Registration Act. I supported this legislation last year after the Committee Chairman and I worked to improve its provisions related to protection of the electoral process from registration fraud.

During consideration of the bill last year, the Chairman and I worked to mandate an address verification system which makes a "reasonable" attempt to clean the voting rolls, as well as provisions to allow states to require mail registrants to vote in person the first time.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The goal embodied in this legislation, to improve accessibility to the voting process, deserves our careful consideration at the federal level. The National Voter Registration Act sets a national standard through a national system to provide equal access to the process for all Americans.

My own state's experience with "motor-voter" legislation attests to the merits of a national standard. Oregon enacted its own law in 1991 and from all accounts, its effects on voting habits are quite positive. The number of registered voters in Oregon jumped by 15 percent between the 1990 and 1992 general election. Of all the transactions that have occurred at offices of the Oregon Motor Vehicles Division (DMV) across the state since the "motor-voter" law took effect in October of 1991, 24 percent involved some sort of voter registration activity.

I have remaining concerns about the cost which may be borne by the states in implementing this legislation. The bill now includes a postal rate reduction for state registrars which will be a helpful tool for offsetting the cost to the states of mail registration. My state reports that from the onset of Oregon's law in late 1991 to January 1 of this year, the DMV has spent $86,135 on voter registration activities. The Division's 1991–1993 biennial budget for "motor-voter" services if $122,593. These are not exorbitant expenditures, because my state has actively sought methods to cut costs. For example, county clerks in several Oregon counties save postage by going to the local DMV offices in person to pick up the new registration cards. Clearly, the postal rate reduction will be a supportive addition, but it does not compensate for the total additional costs of "motor-voter" procedures. This tradeoff suggests the value we in the federal government place on opening access to the electoral process.

I support the National Voter Registration Act and encourage its swift passage by the Senate.

Mark O. Hatfield.

59 CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with paragraph 12 of rule XXVI of the Standing rules of the senate, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in [bold brackets], new matter is printed in italic, and existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

TITLE 39, UNITED STATES CODE

POSTAL SERVICE

PART I–GENERAL

CHAPTER 1–POSTAL POLICY AND DEFINITIONS

* * * * * * *

CHAPTER 24–APPROPRIATONS AND ANNUAL REPORT

Sec.

2401. Appropriations.

2402. Annual report.

S 2401. Appropriations

(a) There are appropriated to the Postal Service all revenues received by the Postal Service.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

* * * * * * *

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Postal Service each year a sum determined by the Postal Service to be equal to the difference between the revenues the Postal Service would have received if sections 3217, 3403–3406, [and 3626(a)–(h) and (j)–(k) of this title,] 3626(a)–(h), 3626(j)–(k), and 3629 of this title had not been enacted and the estimated revenues to be received on mail carried under such sections and Acts. In requesting an appropriation under this subsection for a fiscal year, the Postal Service shall (i) include an amount to reconcile sums authorized to be appropriated for prior fiscal years on the basis of estimated mail volume with sums which would have been authorized to be appropriated if based on the final audited mail volume; and (ii) calculate the sums requested in respect of mail under former sections 4452(b) and 4452(c) of this title as though all such mail consisted of letter shaped pieces, as such pieces are defined in the then effective classification and rate schedules.

* * * * * * *

60 CHAPTER 36–POSTAL RATES, CLASSES, AND SERVICES

SUBCHAPTER I–POSTAL RATE COMMISSION

Sec.

3601. Establishment.

3602. Terms of office.

3603. Rules; regulations; procedures.

3604. Administration.

SUBCHAPTER II–PERMANENT RATES AND CLASSES OF MAIL

3621. Authority to fix rates and classes.

3622. Rates and fees.

3623. Mail classification.

3624. Recommended decisions of Commission.

3625. Action of the Governors.

3626. Reduced rates.

3627. Adjusting free and reduced rates.

3628. Appellate review.

3629. Reduced rates for voter registration purposes.

S 3627. Adjusting free and reduced rates

If Congress fails to appropriate an amount authorized under section 2401(c) of this title for any class of mail sent at a free or reduced rate under section 3217, 3403–3406, [or 3626 of this title,] 3626, or 3629 of this title, the rate for that class may be adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this subchapter so that the increased revenues received from the users of such class will equal the amount for that class that the Congress was to appropriate.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

* * * * * * *

S 3629. Reduced rates for voter registration purposes

The Postal Service shall make available to a State or local voting registration official the rate for any class of mail that is available to a qualified nonprofit organization under section 3626 for the purpose of making a mailing that the official certifies is required or authorized by the National Voter Registration Act of 1993.

1 The procedure adopted by Texas was limited to military personnel. The first State to adopt such a procedure universally and as a principal method of registering voters was Alaska.

2 During the Committee's consideration of similar legislation in the 102nd Congress, the Committee received a letter dated April 17, 1991 to the Chairman and signed by W. Lee Rawls, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legislative Affairs, U.S. Department of Justice. Throughout this report, there are a number of references to this letter and the Committee's response. Because this letter serves as the basis for much of the arguments made by opponents to this legislation, the Committee was inclined to include references of the letter in this report, as well as the Committee's response. However, it should be noted, that the views expressed in the April 17, 1991 letter may not accurately reflect the views of the current Department of Justice.

3 The bill provides certain exemptions from the personal appearance to vote, including those who are entitled to vote through other means as provided by the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act, or those who are provided a right to vote otherwise than in person under the Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped Act; or as provided by any other Federal law.

4 The bill also includes a provision which requires the U.S. Attorney to give notice to the chief State election official information regarding the criminal convictions of any person. This notice requirement will permit States to make a determination if such criminal conviction is reason for the removal of the person's name from the list of eligible voters.

5 A “request” by a registrant would include actions that result in the registrant being registered at a new address, such as registering in another jurisdiction or providing a change of address notice through the drivers license process that updates the voter registration.

6 Opponents to the legislation have often referred to a footnote reference in the April 17, 1991 Justice Department letter, which refers to an Illinois Grand Jury investigation of voter fraud. However, it should be noted that the Grand Jury never recommended that mail registration should be repealed. In addition, a Grand Jury investigation in Kings County, New York which found substantial incidents of voting fraud never recommended a repeal of New York's mail registration system. The Grand Jury did not conclude that mail registration was the cause or a significant contributing cause to the specific incidence of fraud it investigated. It should be further noted that during the Committee's consideration of S. 250 in the last Congress, the New York State Assembly passed legislation revising its registration laws. Part of this legislation was to maintain and expand the mail registration system. Clearly, if the State of New York believed that the mail registration system resulted in fraudulent registrations, it would have sought to limit or abandon mail registration.

1 100 percent Vote, A Project of Human Serve, Memorandum, May 1, 1991.

2 W. Lee Rawls, Assistant Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice, Letter to the Honorable Wendell H. Ford, Chairman, U.S. Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, April 17, 1991, p. 10–11.

3 Ibid., p. 6.

 © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

 Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

4 Supreme Court of the State of New York, County of Kings: Criminal Term, "In the Matter of Confidential Investigation R84–11", pp. 11–12.

5 Theresa M. Petrone, Chairman, State Board of Elections, State of Illinois: Testimony to Senate Committee on Rules and Administration; May, 1989, p.3.

6 U.S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division: "Report of the Special January 1982 Grand Jury", pp. 3–6.

7 Mark Eissman, "Massive Fraud Found in Mayoral Primary", Chicago Tribune, March 8, 1986, p. 1, Section 1.

8 "Report of the Special January 1982 Grand Jury", op. cit., p. 8–9.

9 Richard Wallace, "INS: Noncitizens Voted in 1989 Election, State Doesn't Require Proof of Citizenship to Register to Vote", Miami Herald, March 9, 1991, p. 1B, Section Local.

10 6 Alaska Administrative Code 25.027 (c).

11 Rawls, op. cit., 7–8.

12 St. Louis Post-Dispatch, "State Investigating Centreville Township", August 29, 1990, p. 5a.

S. REP. 103-6, S. Rep. No. 6, 103RD Cong., 1ST Sess. 1993, 1993 WL 54278 (Leg.Hist.)

End of Document © 2024 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 3/26/2024 5:54:34 PM
To: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Keefer v. Biden -- Privileged Attachments: Keefer Opinion.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Happy to send you a summary later DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) but I wanted to send you now the decision from the Middle District of Pennsylvania dismissing Erick Kaardal's ISL lawsuit on behalf of a group of Pennsylvania legislators based on lack of standing. The analysis begins at page 15. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Docket Alarm Via Midnight Blue

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

DAWN KEEFER, et al.,	:	Civil No. 1:24-CV-00147
Plaintiffs,	:
v.	:
JOSEPH R. BIDEN, et al.,	:
Defendants.	:	Judge Jennifer P. Wilson

MEMORANDUM

This lawsuit, brought by twenty-six Pennsylvania State Representatives and one Pennsylvania Senator,[1] challenges certain executive actions regarding voter registration taken by both United States President Joseph R. Biden and various federal officials[2] and Pennsylvania Governor Joshua Shapiro and various state

[1] The Plaintiffs in this matter are Representatives Dawn Keefer, Timothy Bonner, Barry Jozwiak, Barbara Gleim, Joseph Hamm, Wendy Fink, Robert Kauffman, Stephanie Borowicz, Donald (Bud) Cook, Paul (Mike) Jones, Joseph D'Orsie, Charity Krupa, Leslie Rossi, David Zimmerman, Robert Leadbetter, Daniel Moul, Thomas Jones, David Maloney, Timothy Twardzik, David Rose, Joanne Stehr, Aaron Berstine, Kathy Rapp, Jill Cooper, Marla Brown, Mark Gillen, and Senator Cris Dush. They are referred to collectively as "Plaintiffs."

[2] The individual federal government Defendants, all sued in their official capacity, are as follows: President Joseph R. Biden, Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack, Secretary of Health and Human Services Xavier Becerra, Secretary of State Antony Blinken, Secretary of Department of Housing and Urban Development Marcia Fudge, Secretary of Energy Jennifer Granholm, and Secretary of Education Dr. Miguel Cardona. Plaintiffs also name the United States, U.S. Department of Agriculture ("USDA"), U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), U.S. Department of State ("State Department"), U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development ("HUD"), U.S. Department of Energy, and U.S. Department of Education as defendants. Collectively, the foregoing people and entities will be referred to as "Federal Defendants."

Obtained by Docket Alarm via Midnight 03/26

officials[3] on the ground that these executive actions violate both the Electors and Elections Clauses of the United States Constitution. (Doc. 18.) Before the court are the motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim and lack of jurisdiction filed by the Federal and State Defendants. (Docs. 40, 46.)[4] The motions to dismiss will be granted because this court does not have subject matter jurisdiction due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing to raise the claims at issue.[5]

BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiffs challenge an Executive Order issued by President Biden, an announcement by Governor Josh Shapiro, and a "directive" issued by Former Pennsylvania Governor Tom Wolf, all regarding various aspects of voter registration. (Doc. 18.) Plaintiffs allege that these three executive actions have violated their individual Constitutional rights under the Electors and Elections Clauses of the United States Constitution. (Id. at ¶67.)

The Electors Clause provides as follows:

---

[3] The individual state government Defendants, all sued in their official capacities, are Governor Joshua Shapiro, Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt, and Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions Jonathan Marks. They are referred to collectively as "State Defendants."

[4] State Defendants filed their motion to dismiss on March 20, 2024. (Doc. 46.) Although this motion is not fully briefed, the issue of standing has been fully addressed in the context of Plaintiffs' motion for injunctive relief, such that the court can address the issue of standing with no further briefing.

[5] The court also notes that Plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary injunction on February 16, 2024. (Doc. 19.) Because Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring the claims asserted in this lawsuit, the motion for preliminary injunction will be denied as moot in a separate order.

Obtained by Docket Alarm via Michigan Law

> Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2. The Elections Clause provides: "The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators." U.S. CONST. art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

Plaintiffs allege that:

> [U]nder the Electors Clause, the Elections Clause and the Pennsylvania Constitution, the Pennsylvania state legislators, as part of two associations called the senate and the house of representatives respectively, may enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto, to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections. Thus, Plaintiffs, as individual state legislators, have federal rights under the Elections Clause and the Electors Clause to oversee and participate in making legislative decisions regulating the times, places, and manner of federal actions.

(Doc. 18, ¶¶ 49, 50.)

Regarding the Federal Defendants, Plaintiffs challenge Executive Order 14019 ("EO 14019"),[6] which, they allege "requires all federal agencies to develop a plan to increase voter registration, and increase voter participation, or get out the vote . . . efforts." (Id. at ¶ 70.) Plaintiffs allege that HHS, HUD, Department of [6] EO 14019 went into effect on March 7, 2021.

Obtained by Docket Alarm Via Midnight Blue

Energy, USDA, and U.S. General Services Administration "GSA"),[7] have implemented voter registration plans in accordance with EO 14019 and have registered voters in Pennsylvania in accordance with these plans. (Id. at ¶¶ 72–84.) Plaintiffs contend that EO 14019 > directs all non-independent executive agencies to engage in voter registration and to solicit and facilitate third-party organizations to conduct voter registration on agency premises, including those located in the state of Pennsylvania, so it is certain that other agencies are carrying out similar efforts without disclosing their unlawful activities to the public or to the Pennsylvania Legislature.

(Id. at ¶ 85.) Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 requires all federal agencies to "identify and partner with specified partisan third party organizations[,]" "distribute voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms[,]" "assist applicants in completing voter registration and vote-by-mail ballot application forms[,]" "solicit third-party organizations and directs state officials to provide voter registration services on agency premises." (Id. at ¶¶ 86–90.)

Plaintiffs contend that "all agency action in conformity with [EO] 14019 is without congressional delegation or funding, and conducted merely by executive fiat[,]" and that "all federal agency actions in conformity with [EO] 14019 are unauthorized by law." (Id. at ¶¶ 102, 103.) Plaintiffs further allege that EO 14019

[7] GSA is not a named defendant in this action.

Obtained by Docket Alarm via Midnight Blue

is not in conformity with Pennsylvania's voter registration scheme, as provided by Pennsylvania law. (Id. at ¶¶ 107, 108.)

In Count I, Plaintiffs request a declaratory judgment that EO 14019 is unconstitutional because it "nullifies the votes of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactment of the Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 178.) Plaintiffs also allege that they are suffering "an injury-in-fact because the Executive Order denies them a voting opportunity to which the Constitution entitles them." (Id. at ¶ 179.) In sum, the Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 unlawfully attempts to regulate the registration of Pennsylvania electors and, thus, "[t]he order should not be permitted to nullify the state legislators' power to enact laws, subject to the Governor's veto power, regarding the regulation of the times, places, and manner of federal elections." (Id. at ¶ 186.) In Count II, Plaintiffs challenge EO 14019 under the Administration[8] Procedure Act ("APA") as substantively arbitrary and capricious and contrary to Constitution or statute. (Id. at ¶¶ 194–201.) In Count III, Plaintiffs challenge EO 14019 as procedurally

[8] The court notes that 5 U.S.C. § 706 is more commonly referred to as the Administrative Procedure Act.

Obtained by Docket Alarm Via Midnight Blue

arbitrary and capricious for failing to comply with notice and comment procedures under the APA. (Id. at ¶¶ 202–21.)

Regarding the State Defendants, Plaintiffs challenge two executive actions. First, Plaintiffs challenge Governor Shapiro's 2023 announcement that "he was unilaterally implementing automatic voter registration in Pennsylvania." (Id. at ¶ 109.) Plaintiffs allege that "[b]eginning on September 19, 2023, Commonwealth residents obtaining new or renewed driver licenses and ID cards have been and continue to be automatically registered to vote by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation unless they opt out of doing so." (Id. at ¶ 110.) Plaintiffs allege that the "regulatory schema of elections" set forth by the legislature requires an "application" to register to vote, which requires an overt action by the applicant. (Id. at ¶¶ 115–119.) In sum, Plaintiffs argue that Governor Shapiro's directive to the Department of Transportation to change the process for applying to vote in conjunction with applying for a driver's license violates Pennsylvania's established procedures, codified at 25 PA. CON. STAT. ANN. §§ 1321, 1323, 1327. Plaintiffs allege that "Governor Shapiro's directive to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, and its implementation, is inconsistent with existing laws, and as such, is not legally authorized." (Id. at ¶ 128.)[9]

[9] Plaintiffs also allege that the state legislature has previously declined to pass automatic voter registration laws, most recently in January 2023, as support for their claim that this action by the Governor nullifies their votes. (Id. at ¶¶ 132, 133.)

Obtained by Docket Alarm via Midnight 03/26

In Count IV, Plaintiffs bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Governor Shapiro seeking an injunction "enjoining and prohibiting [his] automatic voter registration regime" as unconstitutional because it nullifies the legislators' vote and the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors and Elections Clauses, "diminishes the influence of the individual legislators," and "deprives [them] of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an elections free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 215.) Plaintiffs also allege that the announcement "denies Plaintiffs a voting opportunity to the acceptance [or] rejection of a voter registration schema, that under the U.S. and Pennsylvania Constitutions can only originate in the Pennsylvania legislature or U.S. Congress." (Id. at ¶ 216.)

The second state executive action that Plaintiffs challenge is a 2018 "Directive Concerning HAVA-Matching Drivers' Licenses or Social Security Numbers for Voter Registration Applications" ("2018 Directive") issued under former Governor Tom Wolf. (Id. at ¶ 139.) This challenge is brought against Secretary of the Commonwealth Al Schmidt and Deputy Secretary for Elections Jonathan Marks. (Id.) The 2018 Directive "directs Pennsylvania counties to register applicants even if an applicant provides invalid identification." (Id. at ¶ 140.) Plaintiffs allege that this directive violates Pennsylvania law, specifically 25

Obtained by Docket Alarm via Midnight 03/26

PA. CONS. STAT. ANN § 1328. (Id. at ¶¶ 144–46.) Further, Plaintiffs allege that the directive, which "direct[s] the counties to process incomplete or inconsistent voter applications like all other applications violates clear provisions of Pennsylvania law[,]" and as such, "undermines the state legislature as the 'entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution' to regulate the times, places, and manner of Presidential and Congressional elections." (Id. at ¶¶ 154, 155.)

In Count V, Plaintiffs bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, asking the court to enjoin and prohibit the 2018 Directive "and similar guidance" as unconstitutional because it nullifies the legislators' vote and the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors and Elections Clauses, "diminishes the influence of the individual legislators" and "deprives [them] of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an elections free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 223.) Plaintiffs also allege that the 2018 Directive denied them "their U.S. constitutional right to vote on and direct election policy, established under both the Elections Clause and Electors Clause." (Id. at ¶ 226.)

Underlying all counts, Plaintiffs allege they have standing as state legislators because they "are injured by Defendants when [Defendants] exercise positive regulatory authority over election practices that circumvent or usurp the authority of the legislature." (Id. at ¶ 160.) Specifically, Plaintiffs allege they have "been denied the opportunity to exercise their constitutionally vested authority to cast their legislative vote on affirming or rejecting those new regulatory regimes." (Id. at ¶ 162.) Plaintiffs also allege they have standing as candidates who will suffer the harm of having to compete in "elections [that] have been interfered with by unlawful regulations" and "where their opponents have been provided an unlawful advantage." (Id. at ¶¶ 171, 172.) Finally, Plaintiffs allege they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Id. at ¶¶ 174, 175.)

Obtained by Docket Alarm Via Midland-Odessa

Plaintiffs initiated this lawsuit by filing a complaint on January 25, 2024. (Doc. 1.) Thereafter, they filed the operative amended complaint and simultaneously filed a motion for preliminary injunction. (Docs. 18, 19.)[10] Federal Defendants filed a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim and lack of jurisdiction on March 1, 2024. (Doc. 40.) Federal Defendants also filed a brief in opposition to the motion for preliminary injunction on the same date. (Doc. 41.) State Defendants filed a brief in opposition to the motion for preliminary injunction on March 1, 2024. (Doc. 42.) Plaintiffs filed reply briefs to State Defendants and Federal Defendants briefs in opposition on March 15, 2024. (Docs. 44, 45.) On March 20, 2024, State Defendants filed a motion to dismiss [10] On February 23, 2024, the Foundation for Government Accountability filed a motion for leave to file an amicus brief, which was granted on February 26, 2024. (Docs. 29, 33.) The amicus brief was filed on February 26, 2024, and the court reviewed the amicus brief in considering the motions to dismiss. (Doc. 34.)

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

and brief in support. (Docs. 46, 47.) Accordingly, the issue of standing is ripe for review.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Defendants seek dismissal of the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. The court, in determining whether it has subject-matter jurisdiction, must decide "whether the allegations on the face of the complaint, taken as true, allege facts sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of the district court." Taliaferro v. Darby Twp. Zoning Bd., 458 F.3d 181, 188 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting Licata v. U.S. Postal Serv., 33 F.3d 259, 260 (3d Cir. 1994)). Rule 12(b)(1) challenges may be "facial" or "factual." See Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977). A facial attack challenges whether jurisdiction has been properly pled and requires the court to "only consider the allegations of the complaint and documents referenced therein and attached thereto, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Gould Elecs., Inc. v. United States, 220 F.3d 169, 176 (3d Cir. 2000) (citing Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891.) Conversely, when a defendant sets forth a factual attack on subject-matter jurisdiction, "the Court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself whether it has power to hear the case. . . . 'no presumptive truthfulness attaches to plaintiff's allegations, and the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating for itself the merits of jurisdictional claims.'" Carpet Group Int'l v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, Inc., 227 F.3d 62, 69 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891).

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

In this instance, Defendants argue Plaintiffs do not have standing and present the court with a facial attack on subject matter jurisdiction. As a result, the court will "only consider the allegations of the complaint and documents referenced therein and attached thereto, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Gould Elecs. Inc., 220 F.3d at 176 (citing Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891.)

DISCUSSION

Both the Federal and State Defendants argue that the amended complaint must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their claims. Plaintiffs argue they have standing because the complaint alleges "that the Elections and Electors' Clauses' references to 'legislature' confer rights onto the individual state legislators." (Doc. 21, p. 10.) On this basis, Plaintiffs contend that their individual rights as state legislators are injured by the executive actions at issue because those actions are an "exercise [of] positive regulatory authority over election practices that circumvent[s] or usurp[s] the authority of the legislature." (Doc. 18, ¶ 160.) Essentially, Plaintiffs argue they have each been injured individually because they have "been denied the opportunity to exercise their constitutionally vested authority to cast their legislative vote on affirming or rejecting those new regulatory regimes." (Id. at ¶ 162.)

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

Plaintiffs present various arguments to support their theory of individual legislator standing. First, Plaintiffs analogize their membership in the legislature to various other types of entities, such as a corporation, arguing that as "the purpose of extending rights to corporations is to protect the rights of the people associated with the corporation[,]" so too the "purpose of the Elections Clause and Electors Clause . . . is to protect the privileges and rights of the individual state legislators." (Doc. 21, p. 9.) Plaintiffs also analogize a state legislature to a militia and the press, as "entities" made up of real persons who have the right to defend their participation in the entity. (Doc. 44, pp. 10, 11.)

Second, Plaintiffs rely on Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939), Moore v. Harper, 600 U.S. 1, 27 (2023),[11] and their assertion that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has authorized "individual state legislators to bring legislative usurpation claims." (Doc. 21, p. 10.) (citing Fumo v. City of Phila., 972 A.2d 487, 491 (Pa. 2009)). Plaintiffs also argue that they have standing as candidates for office who

[11] Plaintiffs' reliance on Moore v. Harper consists of quoting the language from the decision stating: "[t]he legislature acts both as a lawmaking body created and bound by its state constitution, and as the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution." 600 U.S. at 27. Plaintiffs rely on this quotation to support their theory that because they are members of "the entity assigned particular authority by the Federal Constitution [,]" they possess an individual right that gives them standing to vindicate that right in the federal courts. (Doc. 21, p. 10.)

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

potentially may run in an unlawfully-operated election. (Id. at 12.) Plaintiffs argue that they are injured by the executive actions because "it results in the registration of voters outside of [Pennsylvania's] carefully constructed and constitutionally-authorized registration regime." (Doc. 45, p. 14.) Finally, Plaintiffs argue they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Doc. 21, p. 13.)

In response, Federal Defendants argue that, under Supreme Court case law, "individual members [of a legislature] lack standing to assert the institutional interests of a legislature." (Doc. 41, p. 11.) (citing Va. House of Delegates v. Bethune-Hill, 139 S. Ct. 1945, 1954 (2019)). In support of this argument, Federal Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' alleged injury, usurpation of the authority to regulate elections conferred upon state legislatures, is not meaningfully distinguishable from the institutional injuries alleged in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997), Goode v. City of Phila., 539 F.3d 311 (3d Cir. 2008), and Yaw v. Delaware River Basin Comm., 49 F.4th 301 (3d Cir. 2022). In each of these cases, the Supreme Court and Third Circuit, respectively, found that individual legislators did not have standing to bring a challenge to an action that allegedly injured the legislature as a whole. (Doc. 41, pp. 11–13.) In sum, Federal Defendants argue that the alleged injury "concerns the right to vote of 'all Members of' the Pennsylvania Legislature 'equally,' and so it is precisely the type of nonparticularized, 'institutional injury' that is insufficient for legislator standing." (Id. at 13) (emphasis in original)).[12]

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

In response to Plaintiffs' argument regarding their potential standing as candidates, Federal Defendants argue that the amended complaint "contains no concrete allegations establishing that the EO will have a material impact on the votes cast in Plaintiffs' particular districts, and that this impact will harm Plaintiffs' electoral prospects." (Id. at 15.)

State Defendants' arguments regarding institutional injury and legislative standing largely mirror those of Federal Defendants and rely on the same body of case law. (See Doc. 42, pp. 12–19.) State Defendants additionally note that the declarations attached to the amended complaint simply state that Defendants have violated the law and provide no individualized allegation of injury, the amended complaint contains no allegation of "how any Plaintiff is affected by the conduct challenged in this case in a way that is any different from any other member of Pennsylvania's General Assembly [,]" and the amended complaint contains no allegation that "legislative powers have been usurped" because "[n]either changes to a registration application nor instructions to counties–both done under statutorily [12] Both Plaintiffs and Federal Defendants address standing globally and make no separate arguments based on the cause of action. Therefore, the court will do the same.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

assigned authority–stops the General Assembly from passing any laws regarding either topic." (Id. at 17–19.)

A. Article III Standing

Pursuant to Article III of the United States Constitution, federal courts are constrained to resolve only "Cases" and "Controversies." U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2, cl. 1. "No principle is more fundamental to the judiciary's proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies." Raines, 521 U.S. at 818 (quoting Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rts. Org., 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976)). Ensuring that a plaintiff has Article III standing "'serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches,' and confines the federal courts to a properly judicial role." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 330, 338 (2016) (citations omitted).

Article III standing requires that the plaintiff, who bears the burden of establishing these elements, prove: (1) an injury-in-fact; (2) that is fairly traceable to the defendant's conduct; and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. Id. (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992)). When standing is challenged at the pleading stage, "the plaintiff must 'clearly . . . allege facts demonstrating' each element." Id. (quoting Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 518 (1975)).

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

As to the first element, an injury-in-fact must be "'an invasion of a legally protected interest' that is 'concrete and particularized,' and 'actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.'" Id. (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560). A particularized injury must "affect the plaintiff in a personal and individual way." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 n.1. Further, any threatened injury must be "certainly impending." Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013).

1. Plaintiffs Lack Standing as Legislators

The seminal case regarding legislative standing is the Supreme Court's decision in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997). There, members of the U.S. Congress who voted against the Line Item Veto Act sued the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, asserting that the Line Item Veto Act was unconstitutional because it altered "the legal and practical effect of all votes [the members] may cast on bills[,]" divested the members "of their constitutional role in the repeal of legislation," and altered "the constitutional balance of powers between the Legislative and Executive branches[.]" Id. at 816.

The Supreme Court held that the members who filed suit did not have standing because they did not allege any "injury to themselves as individuals," rather "the institutional injury they allege is wholly abstract and widely dispersed, and their attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829 (citations omitted). The Court held that the members who filed suit failed to allege an injury to themselves as individuals because they had "not been singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies[,]" and they only alleged that the Act caused "a type of institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress and both House of Congress equally." Id. at 821. Further, the Court noted that the members did not allege a deprivation of "something to which they personally are entitled–such as their seats as Members of Congress after their constituents had elected them." Id.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

The Court also distinguished one prior case that addressed the issue of legislator standing, Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433 (1939). In Coleman, the Kansas State Senate was split twenty to twenty on the passage of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution. Id. at 436. The Lieutenant Governor then cast a tie-breaking vote, and the twenty losing Senators sued to challenge "the right of the Lieutenant Governor to cast the deciding vote in the Senate." Id. The Supreme Court held that the twenty senators who voted against ratification had standing to sue because they had "a plain, direct and adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes." Id. at 438. The Coleman Court further explained that the Kansas senators had "set up and claimed a right and privilege under the Constitution of the United States to have their votes given effect and the state court has denied that right and privilege." Id.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

The Raines Court limited the holding and application of Coleman, stating that Coleman stands "for the proposition that legislators whose votes would have been sufficient to defeat (or enact) a specific legislative Act have standing to sue if that legislative action goes into effect (or does not go into effect), on the ground that their votes have been completely nullified." Raines, 521 U.S. at 823. Thus, the Raines court held that the members in that case did not have standing under Coleman because they did not allege "that they voted for a specific bill, that there were sufficient votes to pass the bill, and that the bill was nonetheless deemed defeated." Id. at 824.

The Supreme Court has considered legislator standing twice since Raines. In Arizona State Legislature v. Arizona Independent Redistricting Comm., 576 U.S. 787, 792 (2015), the entire Arizona State Legislature sued to challenge the constitutionality of a voter-adopted initiative which established an independent commission charged with drawing and adopting redistricting maps, arguing that giving this authority to an independent commission is contrary to the Elections Clause's directive that the legislature of each state shall determine the times, places, and manner of elections. In Arizona, the defendants challenged the plaintiffs' standing under Raines, but the Supreme Court held that the legislature, as a whole and authorized by an internal vote, had standing to redress the alleged institutional injury suffered by the legislature as a whole. Id. at 802. Ultimately, the court held that the voter initiative at issue "would 'completely nullif[y]' any vote by the Legislature, now or 'in the future,' purporting to adopt a redistricting plan." Id. at 804 (citing Raines, 521 U.S. at 823–24).[13]

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

Conversely, in Va. House of Delegates, the Supreme Court held that only one house of a bicameral state legislature did not have standing to sue on behalf of the legislature as a whole. Va. House of Delegates, 139 S. Ct. at 1952. First, the Court noted that it is possible for a state to designate its House of Representatives as its agent, which would be sufficient to confer standing to vindicate the state's interests. Id. at 1951–52. Per the Va. House of Delegates Court, a state may authorize the "House to litigate on the State's behalf, either generally or in a defined class of cases." Id. at 1952. The Court held that Virginia had not done so in that case. Id. Second, the Court considered whether the House of Representatives had legislator standing under Raines. The Court held that the "Virginia constitutional provision the House [challenges] allocates redistricting authority to the 'General Assembly,' of which the House constitutes only a part." Id. at 1953. Thus, the Court held the case was more similar to Raines because [13] On the merits in Arizona, the Supreme Court held that "the Elections Clause permits the people of Arizona to provide for redistricting by independent commission[,]" and denied the Legislature's appeal. Id. at 813.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

"[j]ust as individual members lack standing to assert the institutional interests of a legislature, a single House of a bicameral legislature lacks capacity to assert interests belonging to the legislature as a whole." Id. at 1953–54 (citations omitted).

The Third Circuit has decided cases in line with Raines, most recently in Yaw v. Delaware River Basin Comm'n, 49 F.4th 302 (3d Cir. 2022). In Yaw, a group of Pennsylvania Senators sued the Delaware River Basin Commission, arguing that the ban on fracking at issue in that case "deprived [them] of their lawmaking authority relative to millions of Pennsylvanians residing within the 6,000 square miles of Sovereign territory subsumed by the Basin and any legislation, now or in the future, on this subject has been nullified." Id. at 311. Relying on a review of the same cases discussed above, the Third Circuit held that "this argument runs headlong into the well-established principle that individual legislators lack standing to assert institutional injuries belonging to the legislature as a whole." Id. The Third Circuit held that the alleged injuries were "classic examples of institutional injuries because they sound in a general loss of legislative power that is 'widely dispersed' and 'necessarily damages all [members of the General Assembly] ... equally.'"[14] Id. at 314 (citing Raines, 521 U.S. at 821)

[14] The alleged injuries in Yaw included suspending law in the Commonwealth, displacing/suspending the Commonwealth's "comprehensive statutory scheme," attempting to "exercise legislative authority exclusively vested in the General Assembly," wholly nullifying

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

(alterations in original). The Third Circuit noted that the plaintiffs "alleged no injury to themselves as individuals[,]" and had not "been authorized to represent the interests of these institutions in court." Id. at 314. Finally, the Third Circuit noted that, under the theory presented by plaintiffs, "any individual legislator would have standing to challenge any federal statute or regulation . . . that, under the Constitution's Supremacy Clause, has a preemptive effect on state lawmaking. Article III does not sweep so broadly." Id. at 315 (citation omitted).

Here, Plaintiffs attempt to circumvent the institutional injury issue by asserting that the Elections and Electors Clauses give them an "individual" right which they are seeking to vindicate. However, as the descriptions of their alleged injuries make clear, they are seeking to vindicate injuries that would be suffered by the Legislature as a whole.[15] Just as in the binding precedent described above,

---

"any present or future legislative action," depriving Commonwealth citizens of the "right to be governed by their duly-elected representatives," diluting the rights of the citizens of the Commonwealth "to choose their own officers for governmental administration," and diminishing the "legislative powers of the Senate Plaintiffs." Id. at 313–14.

[15] For example, Plaintiffs allege that EO 14019 "nullifies the votes of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactment of the Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Doc. 18, ¶ 178.) They allege the automatic voter registration announcement by Governor Shapiro "nullifies the votes and diminishes the influence of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights in exercising constitutional powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 215.) And, they allege the HAVA directive by Secretary Schmidt "nullifies the votes and diminishes the influence of the individual legislators, nullifies the enactments of the State Legislature, violates the Electors Clause, violates the Elections Clause, deprives the legislators of their particular rights in exercising constitutional

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

Plaintiffs here do not allege that they specifically, as individuals, are suffering a harm because of the executive actions at issue. Rather, the harm is to the authority of the Pennsylvania General Assembly to establish the times, places, and manner of elections as provided by the Constitution. Moreover, Plaintiffs claim that they, as "real persons who are part of an exclusive entity, the state legislature of Pennsylvania[, . . . have] a right to protect [their] individual [] constitutional rights and privileges to participate in making laws regarding the manner of elections []." (Doc. 44, p. 7.) Just as the Third Circuit concluded in Yaw, this claim sweeps too broadly. If every state legislator has an individual right to vindicate their right to "participate in making laws," then the standing requirement of a particularized injury would be rendered meaningless because every legislator would suffer an injury in the same way. See Yaw, 49 F.4th at 314.

Further, there is no allegation that these specific Plaintiffs have suffered an injury that is any different than any other member of the Pennsylvania General Assembly. Thus, Plaintiffs have alleged only an institutional injury resulting from "a general loss of legislative power[.]" Yaw, 49 F.4th at 314. Additionally, unlike in Coleman, Plaintiffs here have not suffered a complete nullification of their vote, such that they no longer can legislate in the election field. Plaintiffs' argument that powers specifically delegated to them, and jeopardizes candidates' rights to an election free from fraud and abuse." (Id. at ¶ 223.)

---

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

they "have no ability to undo the executive actions through ordinary legislation[,]" and that the laws they already have passed "have been nullified and overridden by the executive actions[,]" overstates the matter, as none of the executive actions challenged in this case remove or divest any authority from the legislature in creating voting regulations within the state, such as in Arizona. Should the General Assembly wish to counter any of the alleged effects of the challenged executive actions, the executive actions do not constrain them from doing so. Moreover, as in Arizona, should the Pennsylvania General Assembly, as a whole, wish to challenge these executive actions as contrary to law and usurping its authority, the General Assembly may do so. However, these twenty-seven Plaintiffs, may not seek to vindicate that institutional injury without the approval of the institution. Therefore, Plaintiffs are seeking to assert an injury to the institutional rights of the Pennsylvania General Assembly, which they cannot do as individual legislators.[16]

[16] The court notes that there is no allegation that they have been authorized to undertake this action on behalf of the General Assembly as a whole. Plaintiffs argue that they have been "authorized' by the State to undertake litigation in a "class of cases" under Va. House of Delegates. (Doc. 45, p. 11.) Plaintiffs claim that Pennsylvania case law holding that legislators "are granted standing to challenge executive actions when specific powers unique to their functions under the constitution are diminished or interfered with[,]" shows that they have been authorized to litigate on the state's behalf in "a defined class of cases." (Id. (citing Wilt v. Beal, 363 A.2d 876, 881 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1976) and Va. House of Delegates, 139 S. Ct. at 1952)). This is incorrect. The Supreme Court in Va. House of Delegates pointed to state statutes, such as in Indiana, where the legislature, through statute, had authorized itself to "employ attorneys other than the Attorney General to defend any law enacted creating legislative or congressional districts for the State of Indiana." 139 S. Ct. at 1952 (citing Ind. Code § 2-3-8-1 (2011)). Holding that a certain party has standing to pursue a certain case does not equate to the state authorizing that party to bring all actions on its behalf.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

The court recognizes that Plaintiffs rely on Kerr v. Hickenlooper, 744 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 2014) ("Kerr I") to support their argument that an individual legislator has standing to challenge a specific law that "has stripped the legislature of its rightful power." Id. at 1167. However, as noted by State Defendants, although Plaintiffs state that the judgment in Kerr I was "vacated on other grounds," it was, in fact, vacated on the issue of standing after the Supreme Court decided Arizona. See Hickenlooper v. Kerr, 576 U.S. 1079 (2015). On remand, the Tenth Circuit looked again at the issue of whether individual legislator plaintiffs had standing to claim that a state constitutional amendment "deprive[d] them of their ability to perform the 'legislative core functions of taxation and appropriation.'" Kerr v. Hickenlooper II, 824 F.3d 1207, 1215 (10th Cir. 2016) ("Kerr II"). In Kerr II, the Tenth Circuit explicitly held that "the legislator-plaintiffs assert only an institutional injury, and thus lack standing to bring this action." Accordingly, the decision in Kerr II provides no support to Plaintiffs.

Finally, to the extent that Plaintiffs argue they have standing based on Pennsylvania law, this same argument was dismissed by the Third Circuit in Yaw. Whether it is true or not that individual legislators have standing under Pennsylvania law, the Yaw court held that "[t]he fact that a party has standing in state court does not mean that they have standing in federal court. . . . Article III standing 'limits the power of federal courts and is a matter of federal law. It does not turn on state law, which obviously cannot alter the scope of the federal judicial power.'" Yaw, 49 F.4th at 316 (citing Protect Our Parks, Inc. v. Chi. Park Dist., 971 F.3d 722, 730–31 (7th Cir. 2020)).

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

Accordingly, the court concludes that, in reality, Plaintiffs allege an institutional injury to the power of the Pennsylvania General Assembly as a whole to legislate the times, places, and manner of elections. As such, Plaintiffs, as individual legislators, do not have standing because they have not alleged any particular injury that is not also suffered by each member of the Pennsylvania General Assembly.

B. Plaintiffs Lack Standing as Candidates

Plaintiffs also argue they have standing as candidates. (Doc. 18, ¶¶ 169–173; Doc. 21, pp. 11, 12; Doc. 45, pp. 12–15). Plaintiffs argue that "Defendants' actions collectively undermine the integrity of Pennsylvania's elections by introducing procedures that were not provided by the Legislature." (Doc. 21, p. 12.) They further argue that implementation of these executive actions results in "the pool of Pennsylvania voters [being] manipulated by legally unauthorized, deceptive practices, undermining the integrity of elections across the Commonwealth." (Doc. 45, p. 15.)

Federal Defendants argue that this injury is not "certainly impending[,]" as required by Article III and Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 401

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

(2013), and the "Complaint contains no allegations describing how Plaintiffs' candidacies will 'certainly' be harmed by the EO." (Doc. 41, p. 15.) State Defendants argue that "Plaintiffs fail to identify any concrete or particularized way that eligible electors registering to vote injures them in any of these [candidates, citizens, taxpayers, and voters] capacities." (Doc. 42, p. 19 n.6)

The court agrees with the Federal and State Defendants that Plaintiffs have not alleged any particular harm to their candidacies as a result of any executive actions taken by any defendant. A vague, generalized allegation that elections, generally, will be undermined, is not the type of case or controversy that this court may rule on under Article III. See Toth v. Chapman, 2022 WL 821175, at * 7 (M.D. Pa. March 16, 2022.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs do not have standing as candidates.[17]

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert the institutional injuries they raise here. Plaintiffs argue they have been granted an "individual" right in the Electors and Elections Clauses of the U.S. Constitution, but binding precedent obligates this court to reject this argument. The injuries that Plaintiffs allege are suffered equally [17] Plaintiffs also alleged they have standing as citizens, taxpayers, and voters. (Doc. 18, p. 29.) As noted by both Defendants, these claims are entirely speculative, and Plaintiff does not argue these bases of standing beyond their motion in support of preliminary injunction. (Doc. 41, p. 16; Doc. 47, p. 22 n.4.) Accordingly, the court concludes that Plaintiffs have not established standings on any of these grounds either.

Obtained by Document Cloud via Internet Archive

by each Pennsylvania legislator. As such, Plaintiffs have not alleged any individualized and particularized harm. Accordingly, Plaintiffs do not have standing to pursue their challenges to the executive actions at issue in this lawsuit, and their amended complaint is dismissed. An order follows.

s/Jennifer P. Wilson
JENNIFER P. WILSON
United States District Judge
Middle District of Pennsylvania

Dated: March 26, 2024

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
Sent: 5/11/2023 7:02:32 PM
To: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG) [HammoudF1@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Aaron@statesuniteddemocracy.org; christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Jonathan [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]

Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
Attachments:
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 5/12/2023 8:00:00 PM
End: 5/12/2023 8:30:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Required Attendees: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG); Meingast, Heather (AG); Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG); beth@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Aaron@statesuniteddemocracy.org; christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Jonathan

ATTENDEES:
Chief Deputy Hammoud
Heather Meingast, AAG
Linus Banghart-Linn, AAG

Jonathan Williams
Beth Stevens
Aaron Scherzer
Christine Sun (who will join if she is able)

Microsoft Teams meeting

Join on your computer, mobile app or room device
Click here to join the meeting

Meeting ID:
Passcode: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Download Teams | Join on the web

Or call in (audio only)
Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, Pontiac
Phone Conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Find a local number | Reset PIN

Learn More | Meeting options

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
Sent: 5/11/2023 7:00:00 PM
To: King-Piepenbrok, Pier (AG) [KingP1@michigan.gov]
Subject: Sidney Powell update - privileged
Attachments: Court Order on MTR.pdf

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, May 5, 2023 5:44 PM
To: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG) <HammoudF1@michigan.gov>
Cc: Christine Sun <christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Sidney Powell update - privileged

Fadwa,

As expected, the trial court denied the Texas Commission for Lawyer Discipline's motion to reconsider the court's order granting summary judgment for Sidney Powell. The order is attached. The Commission has until May 23 to appeal. Our understanding is that the Commission has not yet decided whether to appeal. We'll continue to keep you posted. Please let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FILED
5/4/2023 4:19 PM
FELICIA PITRE
DISTRICT CLERK
DALLAS CO., TEXAS
Rosa Delacerda DEPUTY

Cause No. DC-22-02562

COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DISCIPLINE,	§	IN THE DISTRICT COURT
Plaintiff,	§
v.	§	DALLAS COUNTY, TEXAS
SIDNEY POWELL,	§
Defendant.	§	116th JUDICIAL DISTRICT

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OR NEW TRIAL

Before the Court is "The Commission's Motion for Reconsideration and/or for New Trial." Following the hearing held on May 1, 2023, the Court rules as follows:

I. COMMISSION'S MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CONTINUANCE

The Commission seeks reconsideration of a motion for continuance filed November 21, 2022, which the Commission contends to have been denied. That motion pre-dated one dispositive motion and both of the dispositive settings that led to judgment, and in any event, was never presented to the Court, so no ruling was made on it. Rather, the Commission's response to Powell's dispositive motions contained, as alternative relief, a request for continuance. That motion was denied.

To the extent, if any, that the Commission's motion can be construed to request reconsideration of that ruling, the record reflects that: (a) the Commission had no motion for additional discovery pending before the Court until after the Commission's summary judgment responses were due;[1] (b) the case had been pending far in excess of 180 days beyond the respondent's answer by which time it (by rule) should have proceeded to trial; and (c) when asked at the May 1st hearing about evidence absent from the summary judgment record, counsel for the Commission argued that such evidence was accessible to all parties online, and had no explanation for its omission from the record. For these and other reasons, including failure to satisfy TRCP 251 and 252, reconsideration of the denial of a continuance is DENIED.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

With the Commission offering no explanation for its failure to respond to Powell's no-evidence motion challenging elements of the Commission's claims under Rules 3.01, 3.02, or 3.04, reconsideration of the no-evidence summary judgment as to those claims is DENIED.

As to summary judgment on the remaining claims on traditional and no-evidence grounds, reconsideration of summary judgment as to those claims is also DENIED.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Commission's motion is DENIED in its entirety.

Signed on May 4, 2023.

Andrea K. Bourussa
PRESIDING JUDGE

[1] At the May 1st hearing, the Court clarified that the Commission's joint response was deemed timely, despite being 5 days late for Powell's traditional summary judgment motion. The Commission confirmed its intent that the response was to be considered for both motions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Automated Certificate of eService

This automated certificate of service was created by the efiling system. The filer served this document via email generated by the efiling system on the date and to the persons listed below. The rules governing certificates of service have not changed. Filers must still provide a certificate of service that complies with all applicable rules.

Envelope ID: 75332293
Filing Code Description: Miscellanous Event
Filing Description: SIGNED ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OR NEW TRIALF
Status as of 5/5/2023 9:03 AM CST

Associated Case Party: COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DSICIPLINE

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
Kristin Brady	24082719	kristin.brady@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Brittany Paynton		brittany.paynton@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Robert H.Holmes		rhholmes@swbell.net	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Rachel Craig		rachel.craig@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Todd Hill		thill@collincountytx.gov	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT

Case Contacts

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
S. Michael McColloch	13431950	smm@mccolloch-law.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Karen Cook	12696860	karen@karencooklaw.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FILED
5/4/2023 4:19 PM
FELICIA PITRE
DISTRICT CLERK
DALLAS CO., TEXAS
Rosa Delacerda DEPUTY

Cause No. DC-22-02562

COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DISCIPLINE,	§	IN THE DISTRICT COURT
Plaintiff,	§
v.	§	DALLAS COUNTY, TEXAS
SIDNEY POWELL,	§
Defendant.	§	116th JUDICIAL DISTRICT

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OR NEW TRIAL

Before the Court is "The Commission's Motion for Reconsideration and/or for New Trial." Following the hearing held on May 1, 2023, the Court rules as follows:

I. COMMISSION'S MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CONTINUANCE

The Commission seeks reconsideration of a motion for continuance filed November 21, 2022, which the Commission contends to have been denied. That motion pre-dated one dispositive motion and both of the dispositive settings that led to judgment, and in any event, was never presented to the Court, so no ruling was made on it. Rather, the Commission's response to Powell's dispositive motions contained, as alternative relief, a request for continuance. That motion was denied.

To the extent, if any, that the Commission's motion can be construed to request reconsideration of that ruling, the record reflects that: (a) the Commission had no motion for additional discovery pending before the Court until after the Commission's summary judgment responses were due;[1] (b) the case had been pending far in excess of 180 days beyond the respondent's answer by which time it (by rule) should have proceeded to trial; and (c) when asked at the May 1st hearing about evidence absent from the summary judgment record, counsel for the Commission argued that such evidence was accessible to all parties online, and had no explanation for its omission from the record. For these and other reasons, including failure to satisfy TRCP 251 and 252, reconsideration of the denial of a continuance is DENIED.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

With the Commission offering no explanation for its failure to respond to Powell's no-evidence motion challenging elements of the Commission's claims under Rules 3.01, 3.02, or 3.04, reconsideration of the no-evidence summary judgment as to those claims is DENIED.

As to summary judgment on the remaining claims on traditional and no-evidence grounds, reconsideration of summary judgment as to those claims is also DENIED.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Commission's motion is DENIED in its entirety.

Signed on May 4, 2023.

Andrea K. Bourussa
PRESIDING JUDGE

[1] At the May 1st hearing, the Court clarified that the Commission's joint response was deemed timely, despite being 5 days late for Powell's traditional summary judgment motion. The Commission confirmed its intent that the response was to be considered for both motions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Automated Certificate of eService

This automated certificate of service was created by the efiling system. The filer served this document via email generated by the efiling system on the date and to the persons listed below. The rules governing certificates of service have not changed. Filers must still provide a certificate of service that complies with all applicable rules.

Envelope ID: 75332293
Filing Code Description: Miscellanous Event
Filing Description: SIGNED ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OR NEW TRIALF
Status as of 5/5/2023 9:03 AM CST

Associated Case Party: COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DSICIPLINE

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
Kristin Brady	24082719	kristin.brady@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Brittany Paynton		brittany.paynton@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Robert H.Holmes		rhholmes@swbell.net	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Rachel Craig		rachel.craig@texasbar.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Todd Hill		thill@collincountytx.gov	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT

Case Contacts

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
S. Michael McColloch	13431950	smm@mccolloch-law.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT
Karen Cook	12696860	karen@karencooklaw.com	5/4/2023 4:19:36 PM	SENT

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/14/2024 1:12:40 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) - Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Wonderful. We'll make sure you're both invited.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, June 13, 2024 at 1:03 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) - Privileged

Hi Jonathan (Dax and Kelsey),

Chief Legal Counsel Linus Banhart-Linn and I would like to participate in the multistate call. I have included Linus here. We also appreciate the information that was shared.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, June 12, 2024 10:21 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) - Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good to talk with you today, Heather. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) We're planning a multistate call on Monday, June 17, from 3:30-4 that we hope you can join. Let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Sent: 5/12/2023 8:49:35 PM
To: jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org
CC: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Michigan info
Attachments: Burkman Wohl AT Br.pdf; Burkman Wohl Corr AE Br.pdf

Jonathan,

Nice meeting you and your colleagues today!

You've asked for the briefing in Burkman/Wohl – those are attached, both the appellants' brief and our corrected brief filed this afternoon.

You also asked if there is a way to get those without "bothering" us. Since this case is headed for oral argument, it is on the cases awaiting oral argument page – our brief isn't on the page yet, but it should show up here: 164638-9, People of MI v John MacAuley Burkman, People of MI v Jacob Alexander Wohl (michigan.gov)

Once the case is scheduled for oral argument, I believe they will move it to a different section of the website, and you'll want to look for it here: Schedule of Oral Arguments (michigan.gov)

Unfortunately, although I think it used to be true that you could download briefs for any MCOA or MSC case, I think they have changed it so that you can only get opinions and orders now (other than cases the MSC has taken). If there's another case you're interested in in the future, the general search page is here: Cases, Opinions & Orders (michigan.gov).

You should be able to get opinions and orders there. I have a login that will let me download most documents, so if you see something you would like other than an opinion or order, don't hesitate to reach out. It's truly no bother.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Finally, the hearing is going to be held via Zoom on June 29 at 9:30 a.m. Only parties are allowed on the Zoom, but it is being streamed to YouTube. The links are:
https://www.youtube.com/@michiganattorneydiscipline3923

https://www.youtube.com/@michiganattorneydiscipline4603

(I'm not sure if it's going to be on both YouTube channels, or if they just don't know yet which channel it will be on. So I am planning to check in on both.)

If you need anything else, please let me know!

Thanks, and have a great weekend,

Linus Banghart-Linn (he/him)
Assistant Solicitor General

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Michigan Department of Attorney General
P.O. Box 30217
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 281-6677
Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE SUPREME COURT

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEALS
LETICA, P.J., AND REDFORD AND RICK, JJ.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN,

Plaintiff-Appellee,

v

JOHN MACAULEY BURKMAN,

Defendant-Appellant.

Supreme Court No. 164638

Court of Appeals No. 356600

Circuit Court No. 20-004636 FH

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN,

Plaintiff-Appellee,

v

JACOB ALEXANDER WOHL,

Defendant-Appellant.

Supreme Court No. 164639

Court of Appeals No. 356602

Circuit Court No. 20-004637 FH

DEFENDANT-APPELLANTS' BRIEF ON APPEAL

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED

GRABEL & ASSOCIATES
Scott A. Grabel (P53310)
Timothy A. Doman (P77811)
Attorneys for John Burkman
124 W. Allegan, Ste. 636
Lansing, MI 48933
(800) 342-7896

MCMANUS & AMADEO PLLC
William Amadeo (P76194)
Attorney for Jacob Wohl
2500 Packard, Ste. 106
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(800) 392-7311

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES iv

JURISDICTION ix

QUESTIONS INVOLVED x

INTRODUCTION 1

FACTS 3

ARGUMENT 8

I. Burkman and Wohl's conduct does not make out a violation of MCL 168.932(a) as that statute is correctly interpreted. 8

Issue Preservation 8

Standard of Review 9

Analysis 9

A. The robocall was not menacing, which requires a threat of physical assault. 10

B. A robocall disseminating false information cannot be a "corrupt means or device." 17

C. A robocall disseminating a person's opinion cannot be a "corrupt means or device." 31

D. A robocall disseminating plausibly true information cannot be a "corrupt means or device." 33

E. The robocall did not deter any voter from "giving his or her vote," it only deterred one method of voting. 34

F. The prosecution has not provided any evidence that Burkman and Wohl knew that the information in the robocall was false. 37

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

G. At best, whether Burkman and Wohl's conduct falls within the statute is ambiguous, and this Court should apply the rule of lenity. 39

II. MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional on its face and as applied to Burkman and Wohl. 40

Issue Preservation 40

Standard of Review 40

Analysis 41

A. FACIAL CHALLENGES 42

1. MCL 168.932(a) is void for vagueness because "other corrupt means or device" is insufficiently defined. 42

2. MCL 168.932(a) is overbroad because even false speech is constitutionally protected. 45

B. AS-APPLIED CHALLENGES 53

1. The robocall contains opinions, and opinions cannot beget criminal liability. 53

2. The statements in the robocall are plausibly true, and the First Amendment does not countenance prosecutions for conveying plausibly true facts. 53

3. Even if the robocall was knowingly false, the statements in the call are still constitutionally protected. 54

RELIEF REQUESTED 59

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Ashcroft v Free Speech Coalition,
535 US 234; 122 S Ct 1389; 152 L Ed 2d 403 (2002) 46

Buchanan v Crisler,
323 Mich App 163; 922 NW2d 886 (2018) 57

Burson v Freeman,
504 US 191; 112 S Ct 1846; 119 L Ed 2d 5 (1992) 23, 24

In re Chmura,
461 Mich 517; 608 NW2d 31 (2000) 52

GC Timmis & Co v Guardian Alarm Co,
468 Mich 416; 662 NW2d 710 (2003) 22, 23

Gertz v Robert Welch, Inc,
418 US 323; 94 S Ct 2997; 41 L Ed 2d 789 (1974) 50, 53

Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co,
336 US 490; 69 S Ct 684; 93 L Ed 2d 834 (1949) 56

Gitlow v New York,
268 US 652; 45 S Ct 625; 69 L Ed 1138 (1925) 41

Gompers v Buck's Stove & Range Co,
221 US 418; 31 S Ct 492; 55 L Ed 797 (1911) 25

Grayned v City of Rockford,
408 US 104; 92 S Ct 2294; 33 L Ed 2d 222 (1972) 42, 43

Hamlin v Mack,
33 Mich 103 (1875) 12

People ex rel Johnson v Coffey,
237 Mich 591; 213 NW 460 (1927) 20

Labelle Mgt v Treas Dep't,
315 Mich App 23; 888 NW2d 260 (2016) 16

Lewis v Few,
5 Johns 1 (NY 1809) 11

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

McCullen v Coakley,
573 US 464; 134 S Ct 2518; 189 L Ed 2d 502 (2014) 46

People v Bergevin,
406 Mich 307; 279 NW2d 528 (1979) 39

People v Boomer,
250 Mich App 534; 655 NW2d 255 (2002) 43, 44, 45

People v Chavis,
468 Mich 84; 658 NW2d 469 (2003) 9

People v Coutu,
235 Mich App 695; 599 NW2d 556 (1999) 22

People v Coutu,
459 Mich 348; 589 NW2d 458 (1999) 19

People v Denio,
454 Mich 691; 564 NW2d 13 (1997) 39

People v Doud,
223 Mich 120; 193 NW 884 (1923) 11

People v Dupree,
486 Mich 693; 788 NW2d 399 (2010) 8, 40

People v Ewald,
302 Mich 31; 4 NW2d 456 (1942) 18

People v Flick,
487 Mich 1; 790 NW2d 295 (2010) 11

People v Harris,
495 Mich 120; 845 NW2d 477 (2014) 43

People v Johnson,
336 Mich App 688; 971 NW2d 692 (2021) 52

People v Johnson,
407 Mich 196; 284 NW2d 718 (1979) 11, 37

People v Lockett,
295 Mich App 165; 814 NW2d 295 (2012) 28

People v Lyons,
197 Mich 64; 163 NW 484 (1917) 13

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

People v March,
499 Mich 389; 886 NW2d 396 (2016) 9, 40

People v McKinley,
496 Mich 410; 852 NW2d 770 (2014) 8

People v Peltola,
489 Mich 174; 803 NW2d 140 (2011) 13

People v Perkins,
468 Mich 448; 662 NW2d 727 (2003) 20

People v Pinkney,
501 Mich 259; 912 NW2d 535 (2018) 15, 16, 42

People v Plumsted,
2 Mich 465 (1853) 12

People v Randolph,
466 Mich 532; 648 NW2d 164 (2002) 12

People v Reeves,
458 Mich 236; 580 NW2d 433 (1998) 25

People v Ritholz,
359 Mich 539; 103 NW2d 481 (1960) 37

People v Shami,
501 Mich 243; 912 NW2d 526 (2018) 16, 38

People v Vronko,
228 Mich App 649; 579 NW2d 138 (1998) 28

People v Wakeford,
418 Mich 95; 341 NW2d 68 (1983) 39

People v Wood,
506 Mich 114; 954 NW2d 494 (2020) 11, 15, 16

RAV v City of St Paul, Minn,
505 US 377; 112 S Ct 2538; 120 L Ed 2d 305 (1992) 48

Rehaif v United States,
___ US ___; 139 S Ct 2191; 204 L Ed 2d 594 (2019) 37

Reno v ACLU,
521 US 844; 117 S Ct 2329; 138 L Ed 2d 874 (1997) 43, 44, 49

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

South Dearborn Envtl Improvement Assn, Inc v Dept of Envtl Quality,
502 Mich 349; 917 NW2d 603 (2018) 21

State v Seitz,
40 Del 572; 4 A2d 710 (1940) 20

United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Michigan Catastrophic Claims Ass'n,
484 Mich 1; 795 NW2d 101 (2009) 14

United States v Alvarez,
567 US 709; 132 S Ct 2537; 183 L Ed 2d 574 (2012) ..... passim

United States v Playboy Entmt Group, Inc,
529 US 803; 120 S Ct 1878; 146 L Ed 2d 865 (2000) 48

United States v X-Citement Video, Inc,
513 US 64; 115 S Ct 464; 130 L Ed 2d 372 (1994) 50

Virginia v Black,
538 US 343; 123 S Ct 1536; 155 L Ed 2d 535 (2003) 47

Virginia v Hicks,
539 US 113; 123 S Ct 2191; 156 L Ed 2d 148 (2003) 45, 46, 52

Washtenaw Cnty. v State Tax Comm'n,
422 Mich 346; 373 NW2d 697 (1985) 41

STATUTES

Ariz Rev Stat Ann 16-1006 12

Cal Penal Code 85 27

Fla Stat Ann 104.061 12

Idaho Code Ann 18-2305 13

Idaho Code Ann 18-4703 26

MCL 8.3a 11

MCL 168.83 21

MCL 168.293 21

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

MCL 168.733 ..... 13, 14

MCL 168.932 ..... passim

MCL 168.935 29

MCL 750.157a 3

MCL 750.337 ..... 43, 44

MCL 750.505 19

MCL 750.796 3

Miss Code Ann 97-7-53 26

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed) 11, 18, 25

CJS 20

Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed) 14, 18

Merriam-Webster's Dictionary of Law (2016) 11

Scalia & Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts (St. Paul: Thomson/West, 2012) 11, 14, 16, 23

Volokh, The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception, 101 Cornell L Rev 981 (2016) 56, 57, 58

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

JURISDICTION

John Burkman and Jacob Wohl filed a motion to quash their felony charges in circuit court. The court denied the motion. The Court of Appeals initially denied interlocutory applications for leave to appeal. People v Burkman, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, issued May 6, 2021 (Docket No. 356600); People v Wohl, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, issued May 6, 2021 (Docket No. 356602). But this Court remanded both cases for consideration as on leave granted. People v Burkman, 508 Mich 951; 964 NW2d 604 (2021); People v Wohl, 508 Mich 951; 964 NW2d 585 (2021).

The Court of Appeals consolidated the cases. People v Burkman, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, entered November 9, 2022 (Docket No. 356600); People v Wohl, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, entered November 9, 2022 (Docket No. 356602). In a published opinion released June 2, 2022, the Court of Appeals majority affirmed. People v Burkman, ___ Mich App ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket Nos. 356600, 356602). The defense timely applied for leave to appeal in this Court, which granted the application on November 2, 2022. People v Burkman, ___ Mich ___; 980 NW2d 715 (2022). Jurisdiction is proper in this Court. Const 1963, art VI, § 4; MCR 7.303(B)(1).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

QUESTIONS INVOLVED

This Court has asked the parties to address the following questions:

(1) whether the Court of Appeals properly interpreted MCL 168.932(a); and

(2) whether MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional on its face or as applied to the defendants.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

INTRODUCTION

A couple months before the November 2020 election, conservative provocateurs John Burkman and Jacob Wohl disseminated a 30-second "robocall" in the 313-area code. The call said,

> Hi, this is Tamika Taylor from Project 1599, a civil rights organization founded by Jack Burkman and Jacob Wohl. Mail-in voting sounds great, but did you know that if you vote by mail your personal information will be part of a public database that will be used by police departments to track down old warrants and be used by credit card companies to collect outstanding debts? The CDC is even pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people for mandatory vaccines. Don't be finessed into giving your private information to the man. Stay safe and beware of vote by mail.

Burkman and Wohl's aim—taking the evidence from the preliminary examination in the light most favorable to the prosecution—was to dissuade Blacks in the Detroit area from voting by mail. "Reprehensible," the district court judge called it. This Court will likely agree.

Reprehensible, though, is different from criminal. The Attorney General has charged Burkman and Wohl under MCL 168.932(a), which criminalizes deterring voters through "bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device." Square peg, meet round hole.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The defense moved to quash in the circuit court, raising two arguments. First, the defense argued that MCL 168.932(a), correctly interpreted, does not criminalize Burkman and Wohl's conduct. Second, under First Amendment principles, the defense argued that MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional on its face and as applied to Burkman and Wohl. The trial court denied the motion, and the Court of Appeals, deploying dubious reasoning, affirmed.

This Court should reverse. The Attorney General has overreached. Neither the language of MCL 168.932(a) nor our state and federal constitutions can abide the prosecution of Burkman and Wohl. It should end here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

FACTS

Burkman and Wohl are charged with four felonies: bribing or menacing voters, MCL 168.932(a); conspiracy to bribe or menace voters, MCL 750.157a; and two attendant counts of using a computer to commit a crime, MCL 750.796.[1] As the prosecution has conceded throughout, the latter three charges are derivative of the first charge of bribing or menacing voters under MCL 168.932(a), which provides:

> A person shall not attempt, by means of bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly, to influence an elector in giving his or her vote, or to deter the elector from, or interrupt the elector in giving his or her vote at any election held in this state.

The charges emanate from a "robocall" that Burkman and Wohl disseminated in the 313-area code. Again, the call said,

> Hi, this is Tamika Taylor from Project 1599, a civil rights organization founded by Jack

---

[1] The Court of Appeals gave a gratuitous account of the facts of the case, even venturing outside the record to portray Burkman and Wohl in a negative light. People v Burkman, ___ Mich App ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket Nos. 356600, 356602); slip op at 2-6. (192a-196a). The defense here offers the essential facts necessary to resolve the legal issues.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

> Burkman and Jacob Wohl. Mail-in voting sounds great, but did you know that if you vote by mail your personal information will be part of a public database that will be used by police departments to track down old warrants and be used by credit card companies to collect outstanding debts? The CDC is even pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people for mandatory vaccines. Don't be finessed into giving your private information to the man. Stay safe and beware of vote by mail.

At the preliminary examination, the only "victim" the prosecution presented was Derrick Thomas, a Detroiter who received the call. (11a, 15a). He testified that he was "appalled" and notified "news radio 950" after unsuccessfully trying to contact the Detroit Election Commission. (16a-17a). He was later contacted by the Attorney General's office. (20a). Thomas testified that he later voted and that he was not deterred from voting because of the robocall. (26a-27a). The Attorney General presented no witnesses who claimed that the call had deterred them from voting. (85a-86a).

To be sure, the message was intended to deter mail-in voting. And, as emails between Burkman and Wohl suggest, the robocall was targeted at Blacks. (55a-63a). But at the preliminary examination, the prosecution made no showing—directly or circumstantially—that Burkman and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Wohl knew that the representations in the call were in any way false.

Khyla Craine, an attorney with the Secretary of State (111a), admitted that when a person registers to vote, their name and address become publicly available (114a-115a, 122a-123a). But she claimed that there are other databases that the Secretary of State maintains that are more commonly used by law enforcement and creditors. (115a-116a). She claimed that the voter database, to her knowledge, had never been used by creditors or law enforcement agencies. (117a-118a). Nor had the CDC accessed the database. (119a). Still, Craine admitted that it was possible that law enforcement, creditors, or the CDC could use the database. (124a).

The Information charges that the robocall was an attempt to deter electors by means of menace or "the corrupt means of presenting false and misleading statements about mail-in voting in a telephone message."

After the case was bound over to circuit court, the defense filed a motion to quash. The defense raised two overarching arguments. First, the defense argued that the robocall was not a "menace" or "other corrupt means or device" under MCL 168.932(a). Second, the defense argued that even if MCL 168.932(a) did criminalize the robocall, the statute was unconstitutional on its face and as applied to Burkman and Wohl. The circuit court denied the motion in an oral opinion. (176a-181a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The defense applied for leave to appeal in the Court of Appeals, which that court denied "for failure to persuade the Court of the need for immediate appellate review." People v Burkman, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, issued May 6, 2021 (Docket No. 356600); People v Wohl, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, issued May 6, 2021 (Docket No. 356602). The defense then filed applications for leave to appeal in this Court. In lieu of granting leave, the Court remanded the cases to the Court of Appeals "for consideration as on leave granted." People v Burkman, 508 Mich 951; 964 NW2d 604 (2021); People v Wohl, 508 Mich 951; 964 NW2d 585 (2021).

On remand, the Court of Appeals consolidated the cases. People v Burkman, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, entered November 9, 2022 (Docket No. 356600); People v Wohl, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, entered November 9, 2022 (Docket No. 356602). In a split decision, the Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's denial of the quash motion. People v Burkman, ___ Mich App ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket Nos. 356600, 356602). As explored in more detail below, the court first rejected the defense's argument that menace requires a threat of physical harm. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 8. (198a). The court held that menace encompasses any kind of threat. Id. (198a). Judge REDFORD dissented on this point only, finding that menace requires a threat of physical injury. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___ (REDFORD, J., dissenting in part); slip op at 2-3. (207a-208a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Next, the Court of Appeals held that the evidence presented at the preliminary examination was sufficient to establish that the robocall was a corrupt means or device. The court interpreted that phrase to mean any intentional wrongful conduct. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 9. (199a). Here, according to the Court of Appeals, "A fact-finder could conclude . . . that defendants intentionally disseminated a dishonest message with the depraved motive of deterring voting." Id. at ___; slip op at 10. (200a). Additionally, the court said, "Regardless of whether the message was worded in the form of an opinion, possibly true, or unknowingly false, if defendants intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving his or her vote, MCL 168.932(a) is satisfied." Id. at ___; slip op at 11 (cleaned up). (201a).

Finally, addressing the defense's constitutional challenges, the Court of Appeals rejected the prosecution's argument that the robocall represented a "true threat" beyond First Amendment protection. Id. at ___; slip op at 13-14. (203a-204a). But the court held that MCL 168.932(a) criminalizes "speech integral to criminal conduct" and so was not being applied unconstitutionally to Burkman and Wohl. Id. at ___; slip op at 14-15. (204a-205a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

ARGUMENT

The defense raises two species of argument. First, the defense argues that the statute Burkman and Wohl are charged under does not cover their alleged conduct. Second, the defense argues that if the statute can be interpreted to reach Burkman and Wohl's conduct, it creates a constitutional free speech violation. Consistent with the rule of constitutional avoidance, the defense presents its statutory arguments before turning to its constitutional arguments. People v McKinley, 496 Mich 410, 415-416; 852 NW2d 770 (2014).

I. Burkman and Wohl's conduct does not make out a violation of MCL 168.932(a) as that statute is correctly interpreted.

Issue Preservation

This issue was raised before and decided by the trial court, so it is preserved for appellate review. People v Dupree, 486 Mich 693, 703; 788 NW2d 399 (2010).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Standard of Review

A trial court's decision on a motion to quash is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. People v March, 499 Mich 389, 397; 886 NW2d 396 (2016). But where "a lower court's decision on a motion to quash the information is based on an interpretation of the law, appellate review of the interpretation is de novo." Id.

Here, the facts are largely undisputed. The question is how the facts interact with MCL 168.932(a). So this Court's review is primarily de novo.

Analysis

This Court's goal when interpreting a statute is to discover and effectuate the intent of the Legislature. People v Chavis, 468 Mich 84, 92; 658 NW2d 469 (2003). The Court must begin, of course, by looking to the plain language of the statute. Id. If that language is clear, the statute must be enforced as written. Id.

The prosecution of Burkman and Wohl under MCL 168.932(a) is unprecedented in Michigan jurisprudence. The Court of Appeals' decision in this case is the first opinion explicating MCL 168.932(a), whose key statutory terms are undefined. The defense's arguments rely on general principles of statutory interpretation as well as logic and common sense. At bottom, the plain language of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

MCL 168.932(a) does not criminalize the robocall in this case.

A. The robocall was not menacing, which requires a threat of physical assault.

Regardless of whether the statements in the robocall should be regarded as fact, fiction, or something else, one thing is clear—they were not "menacing" as that term is defined in the law.

MCL 168.932—part of the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.1 et seq.—was enacted in 1954, 1954 PA 116, although it is a successor of 1846 RS, ch 19, § 2, whose language was substantively identical.[2] " 'If a word is obviously transplanted from another legal source, whether the

---

[2] 1846 RS, ch 19, § 2, stated:

> If any person shall by bribery, menace, or any other corrupt means or device whatever, either directly or indirectly, attempt to influence any elector in giving his vote, or deter him from, or interrupt him in giving the same, at any election held pursuant to the provisions of law, such person shall, on conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

common law or other legislation, it brings the old soil with it.'"[3] Scalia & Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts (St. Paul: Thomson/West, 2012), p 73, quoting Frankfurter, Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes, 47 Colum L Rev 527, 537 (1947). And where a word or phrase "may have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law," that word or phrase "shall be construed and understood according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning." MCL 8.3a. See also People v Flick, 487 Mich 1, 11; 790 NW2d 295 (2010).

Menace or menacing has a specific meaning in the law. Dictionaries serve as a starting point. People v Wood, 506 Mich 114, 122; 954 NW2d 494 (2020). Black's Law Dictionary defines menacing thus: "An attempt to commit common-law assault." Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed). Likewise, menace has been defined as "a show of an intention to inflict especially physical harm." Merriam-Webster's Dictionary of Law (2016). Michigan caselaw also referred to menace as creating a risk of bodily harm. People v Doud, 223 Mich 120, 127, 129, 130; 193 NW 884 (1923); People v Johnson, 407 Mich 196, 233-237, 241; 284 NW2d 718

---

[3] The earliest reference to "bribery, menace, or any other corrupt means or device"—searchable on Westlaw at least—is from more than 200 years ago. Lewis v Few, 5 Johns 1 (NY 1809). As explored below, many states have statutes with similar language. Yet there is a dearth of caselaw interpreting these statutes.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

(1979) (LEVIN, J., dissenting). In short, menace requires a threat with a physical component.

What's more, as a point of usage, Michigan caselaw has referred to menace and threat distinctly. See, e.g., Hamlin v Mack, 33 Mich 103, 106 (1875) (". . . there must be violent acts or menacing or threatening words."); People v Plumsted, 2 Mich 465, 466 (1853) ("Upon attempting to return, she was prevented by force, menaces, and threats of the defendants."). This is not superfluousness. The law recognizes menace as a specific kind of threat.

Here, whatever can be said about the robocall, it did not threaten its receivers with any physical harm. So the menace theory of liability should be quashed.

But the Court of Appeals, referring to lay dictionary definitions, held that menace encompasses any amorphous threat, even threats of nonphysical harm. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 8. (198a). But comparing MCL 168.932(a) to other states' voter bribery statutes disabuses this misapprehension. See People v Randolph, 466 Mich 532, 546; 648 NW2d 164 (2002) (comparing Michigan's armed robbery statute to other states' to discern its meaning). See also 2B Sutherland Statutory Construction (7th ed), § 52:3. Many statutes, along with bribery and menace, also list threat. See, e.g., Ariz Rev Stat Ann 16-1006 (referring to "force, threats, menaces, bribery or any corrupt means"); Fla Stat Ann 104.061 (referring to "bribery, menace, threat, or other corruption whatsoever");

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Idaho Code Ann 18-2305 (referring to "force, threats, menaces, bribery, or any corrupt means"). And other Michigan statutes have also referred to both threats and menace. See People v Lyons, 197 Mich 64, 66; 163 NW 484 (1917) (". . . who takes or detains a female with the intent to compel her by force, threats, menace or duress to marry him . . . ."). By the Court of Appeals' logic, this would be surplusage since menace incorporates any kind of nebulous threat. But when interpreting a statute, "every word should be given meaning, and we should avoid a construction that would render any part of the statute surplusage or nugatory." People v Peltola, 489 Mich 174, 181; 803 NW2d 140 (2011) (cleaned up). So the Court of Appeals' wide-ranging interpretation of menace is incorrect.

Plus, within the Election Law, the Legislature knew how to say threat when that's what it meant. MCL 168.733, for instance, prohibits threats by and against election challengers:

> A person shall not threaten or intimidate a challenger while performing an activity allowed under subsection (1). A challenger shall not threaten or intimidate an elector while the elector is entering the polling place, applying to vote, entering the voting compartment, voting, or leaving the polling place. [MCL 168.733(4) (emphasis added).]

Why not use menace rather than threaten consistent with MCL 168.932(a)? "When the Legislature uses different words, the words are generally intended to connote different meanings." United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Michigan Catastrophic Claims Ass'n, 484 Mich 1, 14; 795 NW2d 101 (2009). See also Reading Law, p 170. So reference to MCL 168.733(4) suggests that menace is distinct from threat in the Election Law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

And even accepting a broader definition of menace, communicating information about negative consequences for certain actions is not threatening. A threat is "an expression of intention to inflict evil, injury, or damage." Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed).[4] Warning someone of potential danger is not a threat. Take the following sentence: "Don't smoke cigarettes because they will kill you." No one would say that the speaker was threatening the recipient not to smoke. By the same token, telling voters that their information could be used to vindicate legal rights of creditors and the state cannot be deemed a threat. Nor is telling voters that the CDC is pushing to use information for mandatory vaccines a threat. In short, a warning is not a threat.

The Court of Appeals disagreed that menace had acquired a peculiar meaning in the law. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 8. (198a). The court found the [4] Threat can also mean "an indication of something impending," such as "the sky held a threat of rain." Id. But this definition is not synonymous with menace as interpreted by the Court of Appeals.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

defense's reliance on criminal cases "not persuasive." Id. According to the court, "There is no indication that the Legislature intended to limit the term 'menace' as applied in cases charging criminal assault to this election statute." Id. But as Judge REDFORD correctly observed, menace has acquired a distinct meaning throughout the law, not just in the "criminal assault" context. People v Burkman, ___ Mich App ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket Nos. 356600, 356602) (REDFORD, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); slip op at 2-3. (207a-208a). In other words, there's no indication that menace means one thing in criminal law and something else in election law.

The Court of Appeals majority also held—parroting an argument from the prosecution—that limiting menace to threats of physical violence would undermine the "purpose" of MCL 168.932(a), which is to prevent "the interference with the exercise of the right to vote as well as a breach of the integrity of the process through interference, i.e., the interruption of the elector in giving his vote." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___ (majority opinion); slip op at 8. (198a). This is a canard. When interpreting a statute, the text controls, not the legislative "purpose" as divined by the prosecution or the Court of Appeals. Wood, 506 Mich at 127; People v Pinkney, 501 Mich 259, 272; 912 NW2d 535 (2018) ("The Court of Appeals' reliance on the perceived purpose of the statute runs counter to the rule of statutory construction directing us to discern legislative intent from plain statutory language.") (cleaned up). To be sure, purpose can help decide "which of various textually permissible meanings should be adopted." Id. (emphasis in original), quoting Reading Law, p 57. But "no text pursues its purpose at all costs." Wood, 506 Mich at 127, quoting Reading Law, p 57 (cleaned up). And, importantly, voter interference that does not involve threats of physical violence could still be punished through the other corrupt means or device portion of the statute. So restricting menace to the defense's proposed definition would not, in fact, undermine the statutory purpose.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The Court of Appeals also pointed to "directly or indirectly" as used in the statute, saying, "By the Legislature's allowance for the menace to occur in a direct or indirect manner, the menace may be achieved with or without physical contact." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 8. (198a). The court observed that indirectly can be "defined as 'deviating from a direct line or course'; 'not straightforward and open'; and 'not directly aimed at or achieved.'" Id., quoting Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed). But indirectly has a more appropriate definition in this context: through an intermediary. See, e.g., Labelle Mgt v Treas Dep't, 315 Mich App 23, 36-37; 888 NW2d 260 (2016). See also People v Shami, 501 Mich 243, 254; 912 NW2d 526 (2018) (explaining that when a word in a statute is susceptible to multiple definitions, the "selection of the proper definition must be guided by the statutory context in which the term appears"). Under this definition, "directly or indirectly" would permit, for example, the leader of a crime syndicate who hatches a widespread voter bribery scheme to be punished the same as the underlings who carry it out. Remember, too, that indirectly applies to both other corrupt means or device and bribery. How could bribery be committed indirectly under the definition endorsed by the Court of Appeals? The defense cannot surmise. Through an intermediary is the only definition of indirectly that makes sense reading the statute as a whole. So "directly or indirectly" does not support the Court of Appeals' interpretation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

B. A robocall disseminating false information cannot be a "corrupt means or device."

Even if the robocall can be regarded as a knowingly false statement of fact, false statements—standing alone—are not a "corrupt means or device."

1. "Corrupt" does not mean "wrongful."

"Corrupt means or device" as used in MCL 168.932(a) has not been defined by caselaw. Corrupt, in the sense used in the statute, is defined by Black's as "having unlawful or depraved motives; given to dishonest practices, such as bribery." Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed) (cleaned up). See also Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed) (defining corrupt in this sense as "characterized by improper conduct (such as bribery or the selling of favors)"). Similarly, Black's defines corruptly as "in a corrupt or depraved manner; by means of corruption or bribery" and explains, "As used in criminal-law statutes, corruptly usu. indicates a wrongful desire for pecuniary gain or other advantage." Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed) (cleaned up). Likewise, a model jury instruction says, "An act is committed corruptly when it is done with the knowledge that it is wrong and with the intent to get money or to gain some other advantage." M Crim JI 22.12. This instruction defines "corruptly" as used in other bribery statutes. M Crim JI 37.1-37.2a. And this Court has previously approved a jury instruction defining a "corrupt act" as "an act characterized by an intent to gain advantage not consistent with one's official duty and the rights of others." People v Ewald, 302 Mich 31, 45; 4 NW2d 456 (1942). In short, corrupt is not a synonym for wrongful or improper; it is a specific kind of wrongdoing aimed at gaining some material advantage.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The Court of Appeals, though, gave a broader definition of corrupt, relying on caselaw explicating the crime of misconduct in office:

> This Court has previously explained in the context of misconduct in office that "corrupt behavior" refers to "intentional, purposeful, deliberate, and knowing wrongful behavior."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

> People v Waterstone, 296 Mich App 121, 138; 818 NW2d 432 (2012). Our Supreme Court has likewise described "corrupt intent" as a "sense of depravity, perversion or taint." People v Perkins, 468 Mich 448, 456; 662 NW2d 727 (2003). Additionally, both lay and legal dictionaries provide similar definitions of corrupt. See Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed) ("morally degenerate and perverted," "characterized by improper conduct (as bribery or the selling of favors)"; Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed) ("[h]aving unlawful or depraved motives; given to dishonest practices, such as bribery") (emphasis added). [Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 9. (199a).]

At this point, misconduct in office and its "corrupt intent" requirement require exploration.

"At common law, misconduct in office constituted 'corrupt behavior by an officer in the exercise of the duties of his office or while acting under color of his office.'" People v Coutu, 459 Mich 348, 354; 589 NW2d 458 (1999), quoting Perkins & Boyce, Criminal Law (3d ed), p 543. See also MCL 750.505 ("Any person who shall commit any indictable offense at the common law, for the punishment of which no provision is expressly made by any statute of this state, shall be guilty of a felony . . . ."). "An officer could be convicted of misconduct in office (1) for committing any act which is itself wrongful, malfeasance, (2) for committing a lawful act in a wrongful manner, misfeasance, or (3) for failing to perform any act that the duties of the office require of the officer, nonfeasance." People v Perkins, 468 Mich 448, 456; 662 NW2d 727 (2003), citing Perkins & Boyce, p 540. "In the case of malfeasance and misfeasance, the offender also must act with a corrupt intent, i.e., with a 'sense of depravity, perversion or taint.' " Perkins, 468 Mich at 456 (emphasis added), citing Perkins & Boyce, p 542.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Michigan's misconduct in office jurisprudence emanates almost entirely from Professors Perkins and Boyce's treatise. A closer look shows that they use "corrupt intent" in an idiosyncratically broad sense. For the proposition that "corruption" "is used in the sense of depravity, perversion or taint," Perkins and Boyce cite State v Seitz, 40 Del 572; 4 A2d 710, 711 (1940). But, as Perkins and Boyce note, p 542 n 65, Seitz speaks of "evil intent or corrupt motive." Seitz, 4 A2d at 712 (emphasis added). And elsewhere, Seitz holds that malfeasance can be committed with "a dishonest, oppressive or corrupt motive." Id. at 711 (emphasis added). So the intent element of misconduct of office is broader than corrupt. A more fitting phrase is bad faith. 67 CJS Officers § 446 ("Bad faith is the essence of the offense . . . ."), citing Commonwealth v Steinberg, 240 Pa Super 139, 153; 362 A2d 379 (1976). Or, alternatively, corrupt should be regarded as a term of art in the misconduct in office context. The point is that corrupt as normally understood does not encompass all wrongful conduct. See People ex rel Johnson v Coffey, 237 Mich 591, 601; 213 NW 460

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

(1927) (stating that "corruption or criminal intent is not necessarily implied" for malfeasance) (cleaned up). In other words, corrupt as used in the misconduct in office caselaw should not be imported to MCL 168.932(a).

This conclusion is buttressed by reference to other sections of the Election Law, which distinguish between misfeasance, malfeasance, and "corrupt conduct." South Dearborn Envtl Improvement Assn, Inc v Dept of Envtl Quality, 502 Mich 349, 367 n 16; 917 NW2d 603 (2018) ("Reviewing the entire text requires consideration of the relationship of text within a single statutory provision as well as its relationship to the text of other provisions within the same act."). Under MCL 168.83, "The governor shall have the power and it shall be his duty . . . to examine into the condition and administration of the public offices and the acts of the public officers enumerated herein, and to remove from office for gross neglect of duty or for corrupt conduct in office, or any other misfeasance or malfeasance therein . . . ." (Emphasis added). See also MCL 168.293 (containing identical language on removing members of education boards). So under the Election Law, "corrupt conduct" is a subset of wrongful behavior distinct from the broad categories of misfeasance and malfeasance. In other words, corruption is a particular kind of wrongdoing requiring—as argued above—an intent to gain some kind of material advantage.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

What's more, our Court of Appeals has distinguished misconduct in office from bribery. People v Coutu, 235 Mich App 695, 707; 599 NW2d 556 (1999). As the court explained, "The corrupt intent needed to prove misconduct of office does not necessarily require an intent for one to profit for oneself." Id. But MCL 168.932(a) uses corrupt by reference to bribery. This likewise counsels against importing corrupt as used in the misconduct in office caselaw to MCL 168.932(a).

2. False statements are not a corrupt means or device.

Moving past the idea that corrupt is synonymous with wrongful, the question becomes whether false statements qualify as a "corrupt means or device." This Court should answer no.

First, "corrupt means or device" should be interpreted in relation to its neighboring language in MCL 168.932(a). This implicates the associated words or noscitur a sociis cannon of statutory interpretation—the "familiar principle of statutory construction that words grouped in a list should be given related meaning." GC Timmis & Co v Guardian Alarm Co, 468 Mich 416, 421-422; 662 NW2d 710 (2003) (cleaned up). That is, "words in a statute should not be construed in the void, but should be read together to harmonize the meaning, giving effect to the act as a whole." Id. at 421 (cleaned up). So while "a phrase or a statement may mean one thing when read in isolation, it may mean something substantially different when read in context." Id. Here, then, "other corrupt means or device" should be interpreted by reference to "bribery" and "menace."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The history behind MCL 168.932(a) and its antecedents also illuminates its meaning. Reading Law, pp 400-401. Elections in the early years of this country bore little resemblance to modern elections. As recounted thoroughly in Burson v Freeman, 504 US 191, 200-206; 112 S Ct 1846; 119 L Ed 2d 5 (1992), in colonial times, many elections used public voice votes (viva voce) or shows of hands. Burson, 504 US at 200. These methods were eventually repealed given their susceptibility to bribery and intimidation. Id. After independence, most states used paper ballots. Id. "Individual voters made their own handwritten ballots, marked them in the privacy of their homes, and then brought them to the polls for counting." Id. Later, political parties began printing their own ballots for voters to use. Id. "These ballots were often printed with flamboyant colors, distinctive designs, and emblems so that they could be recognized at a distance." Id. Even when states attempted to standardize their ballots, "the vote buyer could simply place a ballot in the hands of the bribed voter and watch until he placed it in the polling box." Id. And so "the evils associated with the earlier viva voce system reinfected the election process; the failure of the law to secure secrecy opened the door to bribery and intimidation." Id. at 200-201 (cleaned up). "Approaching the polling place under this system was akin to entering an open auction place." Id. at 202. As one contemporary observer put it, "In earlier times our polling places were frequently, to quote the litany, 'scenes of battle, murder, and sudden death.'" Id. at 204 (cleaned up).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

It was within this chaotic milieu that the Legislature enacted 1846 RS, ch 19, § 2. Michigan did not adopt secret ballots until after 1888. Burson, 504 US at 202-203. Michigan's current constitution explicitly guards the right "to vote a secret ballot in all elections." Const 1963, art 2, § 4.

"Corrupt means or device" should be interpreted against this historical backdrop and by reference to the adjacent terms "bribery" and "menace." Doing so, it becomes clear that false statements are not a corrupt means or device.[5] Both bribery and menace are criminal acts in [5] The Information charges that the "menace" or "corrupt means or device" here were false statements made in a telephone message. And at oral argument in the Court of Appeals, in response to a question from one of the judges, the prosecution said that they could prosecute a person under MCL 168.932(a) for speaking the language from the robocall on the street.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

themselves[6] that involve overt, targeted interactions between the perpetrator (or an agent) and the specific victim. False statements, by contrast, are not in themselves criminal or targeted at any victims. Simply put, a robocall—even one containing knowingly false statements—is not in the same league as bribery and menace. It is not a "corrupt means or device" under the statute as that phrase is correctly understood. [7]

Nor is a false statement—standing alone—a means or device. A means is "something that helps to attain an end; an instrument; a cause." Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed) (cleaned up). A device is "a scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the law relating to fraud." Id. (cleaned up). Although both bribery and menace can be accomplished with speech, each contains an illicit stratagem beyond the speech (e.g., money for votes or threats of physical violence to influence votes). In other words, they are verbal acts. See, e.g., Gompers v Buck's Stove & Range Co, 221 US 418, 439; 31 S Ct 492; 55 L Ed 797 (1911). False statements, by contrast, are not a means or device in themselves.

---

[6] "Menace" is an apprehension-type assault. See People v Reeves, 458 Mich 236, 244; 580 NW2d 433 (1998).

[7] What would be "other corrupt means or device?" As just one example, blackmail, it seems, would fit neatly among bribery and menace.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

But the Court of Appeals "declined the request to apply noscitur a sociis in order to achieve defendants' goal of equating 'corrupt means or device' with menace or bribery." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 9 (cleaned up). (199a). But the defense didn't argue that other corrupt means or device should be equated with menace or bribery. Instead, the defense argued that other corrupt means or device needs to be similarly egregious to bribery and menace and that false statements—standing alone—don't fit the bill.

At bottom, when politicians or political operatives lie or tell half-truths, we call that dishonest. We don't call it corrupt, a label reserved for specific kinds of wrongdoing. If the Legislature had wanted MCL 168.932(a) to prohibit dishonest conduct of every sort, it could have said so. It didn't.

And other states have taken more direct steps toward curbing false statements in politics. Several statutes prohibit attempts to influence legislators through "deceit" and "suppression of truth" in addition to bribery, menace, and corrupt means. See, e.g., Idaho Code Ann 18-4703 ("Every person who gives or offers to give a bribe to any member of the legislature, or to another person for him, or attempts by menace, deceit, suppression of truth, or any corrupt means, to influence a member in giving or withholding his vote . . . ."); Miss Code Ann 97-7-53 ("Every person who gives or offers to give a bribe to any member of the legislature, or to another person for him, or attempts by menace, deceit, suppression of truth, or any corrupt means to influence a member in giving or withholding his vote . . . ."); Cal Penal Code 85 ("Every person who gives or offers to give a bribe to any Member of the Legislature, any member of the legislative body of a city, county, city and county, school district, or other special district, or to another person for the member, or attempts by menace, deceit, suppression of truth, or any corrupt means, to influence a member in giving or withholding his or her vote . . . ."). If false statements were naturally encompassed within "corrupt means," the inclusion of deceit and suppression of truth would have been needless.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Remember, too, that the prosecution alleges that the statements in the robocall are the "corrupt means or device," not the instrumentality of a robocall.[8] Robocalls, as a medium, are amoral. Although often annoying, they are not inherently corrupt. They can even be good. Imagine a robocall a week before the election saying, "The election is Tuesday, November 3; don't forget to vote." No one would call this a "corrupt means or device" for encouraging people to vote. Necessarily, then, the prosecution is seeking to punish Burkman and Wohl for the statements in the robocall, not the fact that they were made via a robocall.

---

[8] The prosecution concedes this point. (Pros MSC App Resp, p 8).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Another hypothetical further illustrates the point.[9] Imagine an organization that wants to turn the United States into a monarchy. Its members disfavor voting altogether because they believe it perpetuates the current democratic system. A week before the election, they release a robocall that says, "Don't vote. Bring monarchy to America. Learn more at AmericansForMonarchy.org." To be sure, the robocall is an attempt to deter people from voting, consistent with the aims of the organization. But would it be a "corrupt means or device?" No. It's a communication of a [9] The Court of Appeals declined to engage with any of the defense's hypotheticals, saying that it "must focus on the specifics of the case at hand" since "these hypotheticals were raised in the context of a statutory constructions challenge and not First Amendment freedoms." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 9 n 7. (199a). The court cited People v Lockett, 295 Mich App 165, 176; 814 NW2d 295 (2012), for this proposition. Id. But Lockett addressed a vagueness challenge to a criminal statute. Lockett, 295 Mich App at 173-174. In this context, "the proper inquiry is not whether the statute may be susceptible to impermissible interpretations, but whether the statute is vague as applied to the conduct allegedly proscribed in this case." People v Vronko, 228 Mich App 649, 652; 579 NW2d 138 (1998) (cleaned up). Here, though, the defense is using hypotheticals not as part of a vagueness challenge but to illuminate the meaning behind "other corrupt means or device" as a matter of statutory interpretation. So the Court of Appeals' refusal to interact with the defense's hypotheticals was misguided.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

viewpoint, an opinion. MCL 168.932(a) does not prohibit all deterrents to voting, only corrupt ones. So even a robocall discouraging people from voting is not, in itself, a "corrupt means or device." Instead, what makes a robocall potentially corrupt is its content. It's the content, not the medium, that matters.

From that premise, there's no reason why, under the prosecution's interpretation, "corrupt means or device"—i.e., false statements—couldn't equally apply to one-on-one communication in the privacy of one's home. Imagine two friends, a Republican and a Democrat, having a conversation. The Republican says he's unsure whether he'll vote in the upcoming election. The Democrat, hoping to dissuade the Republican from voting, says, "Don't vote. I'm not voting. Voting is a waste of time. They're all crooks." Suppose the Democrat does plan on voting, though. And, as the Democrat knows, while some politicians might be crooks, they're not all crooks. Under the prosecution's reading of the statute, there's no reason why the Democrat's false statement would not be punishable as a "corrupt means or device." In other words, there's no reason why the Democrat would not be liable for a felony and 5 years in prison. MCL 168.935. The statute cannot reasonably be interpreted to reach such quotidian hyperbole and chicanery.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

False statements, even made knowingly, do not qualify as "bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device." [10]

Even more acute dangers are posed by the prosecution's interpretation. Remember that the statute also prohibits a person from attempting "to influence an elector in giving his or her vote." MCL 168.932(a) (emphasis added). Imagine two coworkers who earn minimum wage. They begin to talk about politics. One coworker says to the other, "Don't vote for Joe Biden. He's going to raise your taxes." President Biden, though, has consistently said that he would not raise taxes on people making less than $400,000. See, e.g., Mengle, Will Joe Biden Raise Your Taxes?, Kiplinger, November 9, 2020, available at https://www.kiplinger.com/taxes/601524/will-joe-biden-raise-your-taxes. There's no reason why—under the prosecution's interpretation—the coworker could not be charged under MCL 168.932(a). Such an interpretation raises the specter of selective prosecutions and of prosecutors appointing themselves as arbiters of truth. This is not a credible interpretation of the statute.

Surveying the evidence from the preliminary examination, the Court of Appeals said, "A fact-finder could [10] The prosecution may respond that they are only prosecuting Burkman and Wohl because (1) the statements were false and (2) they were widely disseminated via a robocall. But that limiting principle is not self-executing.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

conclude from this evidence that defendants intentionally disseminated a dishonest message with the depraved motive of deterring voting." Id. at ___; slip op at 10. (200a). In other words, dishonest speech that deters or influences voting is a corrupt means or device. The Court of Appeals failed to acknowledge the startling consequences for political discourse that this interpretation of MCL 168.932(a) could wreak. Again, if a false statement is a corrupt means or device, MCL 168.932(a) criminalizes the mundane mendacity inherent in American politics. The man who says, "Biden will raise your taxes" is guilty of a felony. And who gets to decide what's true versus false speech? Prosecutors. Again, this is not a credible interpretation of the statute.

The district court called Burkman and Wohl's actions "reprehensible." (149a). This Court will likely agree. That doesn't make the robocall criminal. The prosecution of Burkman and Wohl under MCL 168.932(a) is the proverbial square peg in a round hole.

C. A robocall disseminating a person's opinion cannot be a "corrupt means or device."

The robocall in this case should be interpreted as a statement of opinion, not fact. The call explicitly states at the beginning that it is from an advocacy organization and merely gives predictions of what will happen if a person registers to vote by mail. The call ends by cautioning the listener to "beware of vote by mail." No reasonable person would interpret the call as a statement of absolute truth. Just like no reasonable person would interpret any political commentary as absolute truth. For example, "Donald Trump will ruin the country" is not a statement of fact, it's an opinion. And conveying an opinion cannot be a corrupt means or device. The prosecution has not suggested otherwise.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

According to the prosecution, though, because the robocall used the word "will" it purported to convey facts rather than opinions. (Pros MSC App Resp, p 7). So, by that logic, saying "Joe Biden will raise your taxes" is a statement of absolute fact rather than opinion. This Court knows better. Self-assured opinions don't lose their quality as such by using modal auxiliary verbs.

The Court of Appeals held that "for the robocall to be deemed a corrupt means or device, it must be established that defendants deliberately used a wrongful method with a depraved intent to interfere with voting." Burkman, ___ Mich App at __; slip op at 11. (201a). According to the court, "Regardless of whether the message was worded in the form of an opinion, possibly true, or unknowingly false, if defendants intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving his or her vote, MCL 168.932(a) is satisfied." Id. (cleaned up). So conveying opinions to influence voters is criminal according to the Court of Appeals. The implications of this holding are stunning. By the Court of Appeals' logic, someone who truly believes that Joe Biden will raise taxes (even though Biden has said he won't) and communicates that belief to another person in an attempt to influence that person to not vote for Biden has committed a felony. The Court of Appeals' decision holds the key to radically transforming political discourse in Michigan. Although the panel obviously took a dim view of Burkman and Wohl, it does not appear that they thought through the far-reaching ramifications of their decision.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

D. A robocall disseminating plausibly true information cannot be a "corrupt means or device."

If the Court disagrees that the robocall expresses opinion rather than statements of fact, the robocall still cannot be regarded as a corrupt means or device because it communicates information that is plausibly true, or at least not demonstrably false.

As established at the preliminary examination, it is possible for law enforcement and creditors to use the registered voter database in the manner alleged in the robocall.[11] While, according to Craine, the database had [11] The prosecution offered no evidence that the CDC was not "pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people for mandatory vaccines." In other words, there is no

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

never been used in these ways, this does not make the statements empirically false. "Joe Biden will raise your taxes" is plausibly true, but it could also turn out to be false. Again, "corrupt" refers to dishonesty used to get money or some other material advantage. Communicating plausibly true information cannot be corrupt.

As explored above, the Court of Appeals held, "Regardless of whether the message was worded in the form of an opinion, possibly true, or unknowingly false, if defendants intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving his or her vote, MCL 168.932(a) is satisfied." Burkman, ___ Mich App at __; slip op at 11 (cleaned up). (201a). For the reasons already discussed, that can't possibly be correct. Communicating plausibly true information cannot be corrupt, and the Court of Appeals erred.

E. The robocall did not deter any voter from "giving his or her vote," it only deterred one method of voting.

Again, MCL 168.932(a) prohibits—through bribery, menace, or other corrupt means—deterring a person from "giving his or her vote." Here, the robocall's purported evidence that this particular statement was false. The burden is not on the defense to prove that the information in the call was true. And something is not false simply because the prosecution says it is.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

purpose was not to deter voting in toto, it was to deter mail-in voting, one method of voting. As all the prosecution witnesses conceded, the message did not refer at all to in-person voting. (31a, 96a, 140a). This being so, the robocall does not violate the plain language of the statute.

The prosecution has argued that deterring only mail-in voting still violates the statute. That's incorrect. The statute refers broadly to "giving his or her vote." Here, the robocall's purpose was not to deter all voting but only mail-in voting, one method of voting. Any voters who received the message still had the traditional option of voting in person. By analogy, discouraging someone from, say, eating oranges would not be deterring them from eating fruit, only one variety of fruit.

Another hypothetical further illustrates why the prosecution's position is incorrect. Imagine that before the 2020 election, an organization worried about the spread of COVID-19 put out a robocall that advised prospective voters to vote by mail rather than in person. The call warns of the dangers of COVID-19—which would be a menace under the prosecution's and Court of Appeals' definition—and says that voting by mail is a safe alternative. "Don't vote in person, vote by mail," the robocall concludes. Criminal? By the prosecution's logic, the answer would have to be yes. By discouraging any method of voting, the statute is violated according to the prosecution. But common sense says otherwise. The call is not discouraging voters from casting a ballot in the election; it's only discouraging one way of casting a ballot. Here, by the same token, Burkman and Wohl's robocall did not discourage people from voting, only from voting by mail. So the call did not deter any voters "in giving his or her vote."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

According to the prosecution, though, the robocall deterred all voting because people were hesitant to vote in person during the COVID-19 pandemic. The trial court agreed, saying, "In the fall of 2020 when these were going out, we had a worldwide pandemic going on, where people were being encouraged to stay in their home and not leave their home if they don't have to." (179a). The Court of Appeals agreed, saying, "Our nation was in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic, such that in-person voting carried with it a serious risk to a voter's health." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 10. (200a).

But such musings—even if true—are not borne out by the record. Cases are decided on facts established on the record. Here, the prosecution presented no evidence that anyone anywhere declined to vote in person because of fear of catching COVID-19. If this fear were as widespread as the prosecution claims, it should have been easy to find a witness to testify to that effect at the preliminary examination. Instead, the prosecution has preferred to rely on its conception of "the political situation existing prior to the election." (Pros COA App Resp, p 15).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The Court of Appeals held that "whether defendants influenced, deterred, or interrupted electors from giving their votes under these circumstances is a question of fact." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 10. (200a). But the undisputed facts show that the message applied only to mail-in voting, not in-person voting. So there is no question of fact to resolve.

F. The prosecution has not provided any evidence that Burkman and Wohl knew that the information in the robocall was false.

MCL 168.932(a) does not have an explicit mens rea requirement. Still, it is presumed that criminal statutes require the defendant to have a culpable mental state. Rehaif v United States, ___ US ___, ___; 139 S Ct 2191, 2195; 204 L Ed 2d 594 (2019). Also, the acts proscribed by MCL 168.932(a)—bribery, menace, and other corrupt means or devices—by their very nature require knowledge and intent. There's no such thing as negligent bribery or unwitting menace.[12] And, as discussed above, corrupt and [12] Bribery requires a "corrupt intent." People v Ritholz, 359 Mich 539, 554; 103 NW2d 481 (1960). And an apprehension-type assault requires the intent to put the victim in fear. People v Johnson, 407 Mich 196, 210; 284 NW2d 718

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

corruptly require, at a minimum, dishonest or depraved motives, i.e., knowing and intentional wrongdoing. Here, then, the prosecution must show that Burkman and Wohl knew that the statements in the robocall were false.

This the prosecution has not done. Although the prosecution presented sufficient evidence at the preliminary examination to infer that Burkman and Wohl intended to deter mail-in voting, there was zero evidence demonstrating—directly or circumstantially—that they were aware of the purported falsity of the statements. Because the prosecution introduced no evidence on this element, the bindover should be quashed. Shami, 501 Mich at 250 (stating that a bindover requires sufficient evidence on each element or evidence from which each element can be inferred).

As explored above, the Court of Appeals held, "Regardless of whether the message was worded in the form of an opinion, possibly true, or unknowingly false, if defendants intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving his or her vote, MCL 168.932(a) is satisfied." Burkman, ___ Mich App at __; slip op at 11 (cleaned up). (201a). Again, this is not a credible interpretation of the statute.

(1979); M Crim JI 17.1(3) ("An assault cannot happen by accident.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

G. At best, whether Burkman and Wohl's conduct falls within the statute is ambiguous, and this Court should apply the rule of lenity.

As the foregoing discussion shows, at a minimum, whether MCL 168.932(a) applies to the robocall here is ambiguous. This being so, the Court should apply the rule of lenity. "The rule of lenity provides that courts should mitigate punishment when the punishment in a criminal statute is unclear." People v Denio, 454 Mich 691, 699; 564 NW2d 13 (1997) (cleaned up). The rule applies "in the circumstances of an ambiguity, or in the absence of any firm indication of legislative intent." People v Wakeford, 418 Mich 95, 113-114; 341 NW2d 68 (1983). The rationale for the rule is deeply rooted in our criminal law jurisprudence: " 'It may fairly be said to be a presupposition of our law to resolve doubts in the enforcement of a penal code against the imposition of a harsher punishment' " People v Bergevin, 406 Mich 307, 312; 279 NW2d 528 (1979), quoting Bell v United States, 349 US 81, 83; 75 S Ct 620; 99 L Ed 905 (1955).

For the reasons discussed above, at the very least, it is unclear whether statements—even knowingly false ones—fit the definition of "menace" or "other corrupt means or device." Applying the rule of lenity, the charges should be dismissed.[13]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

II. MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional on its face and as applied to Burkman and Wohl.

Issue Preservation

This issue was raised before and decided by the trial court, so it is preserved for appellate review. Dupree, 486 Mich at 703.

Standard of Review

A trial court's decision on a motion to quash is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. March, 499 Mich at 397. But where "a lower court's decision on a motion to quash the information is based on an interpretation of the law, appellate review of the interpretation is de novo." Id.

---

[13] Consistent with its analysis as discussed above, the Court of Appeals found MCL 168.932(a) unambiguous. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 11-12. (201a-202a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Here, the facts are largely undisputed. The question is the constitutionality of MCL 168.932(a). So this Court's review is primarily de novo.

Analysis

If this Court interprets MCL 168.932(a) to reach the robocall in this case, then MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional.[14]

Under the First Amendment of the United States Constitution, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." US Const, Am I. The right to free speech has been incorporated against the states. Gitlow v New York, 268 US 652; 45 S Ct 625; 69 L Ed 1138 (1925). The Michigan Constitution likewise protects the freedom of speech: "Every person may freely speak, write, express and publish his views on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of such right; and [14] Concomitantly, the constitutional problems posed by a broad reading of MCL 168.932(a) counsel in favor of endorsing a narrow reading, because "whenever possible, interpretations that result in constitutional invalidity will be avoided." Washtenaw Cnty. v State Tax Comm'n, 422 Mich 346, 371; 373 NW2d 697 (1985).

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

no law shall be enacted to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." Const 1963, Art I, § 5.

The defense raises two varieties of constitutional arguments here. First, the defense argues that MCL 168.932(a) is constitutionally invalid on its face. Second, the defense argues that if MCL 168.932(a) can be interpreted to cover the robocall in this case, it is unconstitutional as applied. As with the statutory interpretation arguments, finding caselaw on point has been challenging. The prosecution of Burkman and Wohl is unprecedented in Michigan and is seemingly without any analogue throughout the country.

A. FACIAL CHALLENGES

1. MCL 168.932(a) is void for vagueness because "other corrupt means or device" is insufficiently defined.

"It is a basic principle of due process that an enactment is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined." Grayned v City of Rockford, 408 US 104, 108; 92 S Ct 2294; 33 L Ed 2d 222 (1972). "A criminal statute ought to be so plain and unambiguous that 'he who runs' may read, and understand whether his conduct is in violation of its provisions." Pinkney, 501 Mich at 268 (cleaned up). Three rationales justify invalidating vague criminal statutes. First, the law must provide "fair warning": "because we assume that man is free to steer between lawful and unlawful conduct, we insist that laws give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly." Grayned, 408 US at 108. Second, vague laws beget "arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." Id. at 108-109. Third, and specific to the First Amendment context, vague laws can chill free speech. Id. at 109. So statutes that criminalize speech must be closely scrutinized. Reno v ACLU, 521 US 844, 871-872; 117 S Ct 2329; 138 L Ed 2d 874 (1997). See id. at 870-874 (statute criminalizing online transmission of "indecent" and "patently offensive" communications unconstitutionally vague).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Consider People v Boomer, 250 Mich App 534, 536; 655 NW2d 255 (2002).[15] There, the defendant "loudly uttered a stream of profanities" while canoeing on a popular river with children present. Boomer, 250 Mich App at 535-536. The defendant was prosecuted and convicted under MCL 750.337, which provides, "Any person who shall use any indecent, immoral, obscene, vulgar or insulting language in the presence or hearing of any woman or child shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Id. at 536. The Court of Appeals reversed, saying that "it would be difficult to conceive of a statute that would be more vague than [15] Boomer has been cited favorably by this Court. People v Harris, 495 Mich 120, 136; 845 NW2d 477 (2014).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

MCL 750.337." Id. at 540. The court explained, "There is no restrictive language whatsoever contained in the statute that would limit or guide a prosecution for indecent, immoral, obscene, vulgar, or insulting language." Id. The court found that the statute failed to provide fair notice of its prohibitions, encouraged arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement, and impinged on free speech. Id. at 540-542.

Here, the phrase "other corrupt means or device," in particular, is vague.[16] The statute gives no definition of the phrase. See Reno, 521 US at 865 (noting that "indecent" was not defined in the statute). And under the prosecution's theory, the statute could apply not only to robocalls but also one-to-one private speech. Should a person of ordinary intelligence know that false statements ("Joe Biden will raise your taxes") uttered to a friend in the privacy of his home are a "corrupt means or device," subjecting the speaker to felony liability and up to 5 years in prison? What about statements that are recklessly false? Or negligently false? Or true but misleading? What about unverifiable but plausibly true statements? Or political hyperbole and puffery? The language of MCL 168.932(a) does not answer these questions. "This uncertainty undermines the likelihood that the [law] has been carefully tailored to" its goal of protecting the integrity of elections. Reno, 521 US at 871.

---

[16] As argued above, menace should be interpreted to mean a threat of physical violence. If this Court disagrees, then menace is also vague.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

The phrase "corrupt means or device" is simply too vague. There is no restrictive language limiting or guiding prosecutors. Boomer, 250 Mich App at 540. It does not provide fair notice of what it entails, invites arbitrary enforcement, and chills free speech.

The Court of Appeals found that the statue is not vague because, based on the accepted definition of corrupt, "a person of reasonable intelligence should understand that he or she violates MCL 168.932(a) by using any intentional, purposeful, deliberate, and knowingly wrongful method with the depraved intent to interfere with voting." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 12 (cleaned up). (202a). But this is internally inconsistent with the panel's earlier finding that even unknowingly false speech is proscribed by the statute. Id. at ___; slip op at 11. (201a). That the Court of Appeals—within the same opinion—interpreted the statute to mean different things at different points is further evidence that the statute is vague.

2. MCL 168.932(a) is overbroad because even false speech is constitutionally protected.

A law is overbroad where it criminalizes "a 'substantial' amount of free speech." Virginia v Hicks, 539 US 113, 118; 123 S Ct 2191; 156 L Ed 2d 148 (2003). This inquiry is made without reference to the facts of the specific case at hand.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Id. In other words, even where a statute may have legitimate applications, if it sweeps too broadly, this "suffices to invalidate all enforcement of that law, until and unless a limiting construction or partial invalidation so narrows it as to remove the seeming threat or deterrence to constitutionally protected expression." Id. at 119 (cleaned up). The rationale is that overbroad laws chill constitutionally protected speech. See Ashcroft v Free Speech Coalition, 535 US 234, 244; 122 S Ct 1389; 152 L Ed 2d 403 (2002).

Here, assuming that "corrupt means or device" applies only to knowingly false speech, it is overbroad. MCL 168.932(a) is "content based," meaning it "requires enforcement authorities to examine the content of the message that is conveyed to determine whether a violation has occurred." McCullen v Coakley, 573 US 464, 479; 134 S Ct 2518; 189 L Ed 2d 502 (2014) (cleaned up). The United States Supreme Court has permitted content-based restrictions on speech in only a "few historic and traditional categories of expression long familiar to the bar." United States v Alvarez, 567 US 709, 717; 132 S Ct 2537; 183 L Ed 2d 574 (2012) (cleaned). These include true threats, obscenity, defamation, and fighting words. Id. at 717.

But, as established by Alvarez, not among these categories is false speech. In Alvarez, the defendant falsely claimed to have received the Congressional Medal of Honor. Id. at 713-714. In doing so, he violated the Stolen Valor Act, which made it a crime to lie about receiving a military medal or decoration. Id. at 715-716. The defendant argued that the act violated the First Amendment. Id. The Supreme Court agreed. The Court first held that "false speech" is not categorically unprotected: "Absent from those few categories where the law allows content-based regulation of speech is any general exception to the First Amendment for false statements." Id. at 718. As the Court explained, "Some false statements are inevitable if there is to be an open and vigorous expression of views in public and private conversation, expression the First Amendment seeks to guarantee." Id. The Court noted that the Stolen Valor Act "would apply with equal force to personal, whispered conversations within a home." Id. "And it does so," the Court added, "entirely without regard to whether the lie was made for the purpose of material gain." Id. at 723.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Here, the prosecution has relied on the true threat exception. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 6. (196a). " 'True threats' encompass those statements where the speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence to a particular individual or group of individuals." Virginia v Black, 538 US 343, 359; 123 S Ct 1536; 155 L Ed 2d 535 (2003). The Court of Appeals readily dispensed with the prosecution's reliance on the true threat exception, explaining that the robocall did not contain a threat of unlawful violence. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 13-14. (203a-204a). On this score at least, the panel was correct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

When a statute criminalizes protected speech, it must survive "strict scrutiny," that is, it must be narrowly tailored to fulfill a compelling governmental interest. See, e.g., United States v Playboy Entmt Group, Inc, 529 US 803, 813; 120 S Ct 1878; 146 L Ed 2d 865 (2000). Put differently, the restriction must be " 'actually necessary' to achieve its interest." Alvarez, 567 US at 725. This demands "a direct causal link between the restriction imposed and the injury to be prevented." Id. The government bears the burden of establishing that a content-based speech restriction is actually necessary. Id. at 716-717. "Content-based regulations are presumptively invalid." RAV v City of St Paul, Minn, 505 US 377, 382; 112 S Ct 2538; 120 L Ed 2d 305 (1992).

Once more, Alvarez is instructive. While the Court found that the government had a compelling interest in "protecting the integrity of the Medal of Honor," id. at 725, the Court concluded that the government had not shown that the Stolen Valor Act was actually necessary. First, the government had provided "no evidence to support its claim that the public's general perception of military awards is diluted by false claims such as those made by Alvarez." Id. at 726. Second, the government had not shown "why counterspeech would not suffice to achieve its interest." Id. In Alvarez's case, for instance, his lie was quickly exposed without government intervention, and he was widely "ridiculed." Id. at 726-727. "Indeed, the outrage and contempt expressed for respondent's lies can serve to reawaken and reinforce the public's respect for the Medal, its recipients, and its high purpose." Id. at 727. Finally, the Court found that there was at least one less restrictive means to protect the integrity of military honors—a government-maintained database of recipients. Id. at 729. At bottom, "the remedy for speech that is false is speech that is true. This is the ordinary course in a free society." Id. at 727 (cleaned up).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Here, there's no question that protecting the integrity of elections is a compelling governmental interest. But there has been no showing that criminalizing false speech is necessary to fulfill this interest. Again, the burden is on the government to show why imposing criminal liability is necessary in this context. Id. at 716-717. Remarkably, the government has not even attempted to argue that MCL 168.932(a) is narrowly tailored. (Pros Cir Ct Mot Resp, p 22-24; Pros COA Br, p 22-23). "[T]he mere fact that a statutory regulation of speech was enacted for [an] important purpose . . . does not foreclose inquiry into its validity." Reno, 521 US at 875.

Nor could the prosecution show that MCL 168.932(a) is actually necessary to protect the integrity of elections. First, "the Government has not shown, and cannot show, why counterspeech would not suffice to achieve its interest." Alvarez, 567 US at 726 (cleaned up). Here, for example, the robocall was quickly pilloried by the media, and there's nothing in the record to indicate that anyone was actually deterred from voting by mail. Instead, "the outrage and contempt expressed for" the robocall served "to reawaken and reinforce" the integrity of the election. Id. at 727.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Second, imposing criminal liability is not narrowly tailored. There has been no showing, for instance, why a civil sanction, as opposed to a criminal one, would not suffice. See United States v X-Citement Video, Inc, 513 US 64, 86; 115 S Ct 464; 130 L Ed 2d 372 (1994) (SCALIA, J., dissenting) ("I would find the statute, as so interpreted, to be unconstitutional since, by imposing criminal liability upon those not knowingly dealing in pornography, it establishes a severe deterrent, not narrowly tailored to its purposes, upon fully protected First Amendment activities."). For example, in Gertz v Robert Welch, Inc, 418 US 323, 350; 94 S Ct 2997; 41 L Ed 2d 789 (1974), the Court generally disallowed punitive damages for defamation cases, finding that punitive damages could be used "to punish expressions of unpopular views" and could also chill speech. If punitive damages infringe too far on free speech, so too can criminal penalties in certain cases. Here, given that this is apparently the first case ever prosecuted under MCL 168.932(a)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

or its antecedents to make its way to this Court, felony liability smacks of overkill.[17]

Because MCL 168.932(a) criminalizes protected speech, and because the government has not shown that MCL 168.932(a) is narrowly tailored to protect a compelling governmental interest, it is overbroad and unconstitutional.

Yet the Court of Appeals declined to address the defense's facial overbreadth challenge, relying on two propositions. First, the court claimed, "Defendants characterize this argument as a facial challenge, but only present arguments regarding the breadth of the statute as applied specifically to the robocall message." Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 13. (203a). Second, the court said, " 'A facial challenge attacks the statute itself, and requires the challenger to establish that no set of circumstances exist under which the act would be valid. The fact that the act might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is insufficient.' " Id., quoting People v Johnson, 336 Mich App 688, 692; 971 NW2d 692 (2021) (cleaned up). But neither proposition is correct.

First, the defense did not only present arguments on the scope of the statute as applied to the robocall. The defense very clearly argued that the statute was overbroad without [17] Bribing or menacing voters was originally a misdemeanor, not a felony. 1846 RS, ch 19, § 2.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

focusing solely on the robocall. (Def COA Brs, p 28-33). The defense even noted that a facial overbreadth challenge considers the statute "without reference to the facts of the specific case at hand." (Def COA Brs, p 28, citing Hicks, 539 US at 118). So, respectfully, the defense finds this portion of the Court of Appeals' analysis bewildering.

Second, the Court of Appeals stated the wrong test for facial overbreadth challenges in the First Amendment context. When a defendant argues that a criminal statute is overbroad, the defendant must ordinarily show that the law could not be validly applied under any set of circumstances. Johnson, 336 Mich App at 692. This is the test the Court of Appeals relied on here. But a different test is used when First Amendment concerns arise: "The First Amendment doctrine of overbreadth is an exception to our normal rule regarding the standards for facial challenges." Hicks, 539 US at 118. See also In re Chmura, 461 Mich 517, 530; 608 NW2d 31 (2000). The doctrine "allows a party to challenge a law written so broadly that it may inhibit the constitutionally protected speech of third parties, even though the party's own conduct may be unprotected." Chmura, 461 Mich at 530. So the Court of Appeals' refusal to entertain the defense's facial challenge to MCL 168.932(a) emanates from a fundamental misunderstanding of First Amendment jurisprudence.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

B. AS-APPLIED CHALLENGES

1. The robocall contains opinions, and opinions cannot beget criminal liability.

As argued above, the robocall was a statement of opinion and prediction rather than a statement of absolute truth. Conveying an opinion cannot form the basis for criminal liability. "Under the First Amendment there is no such thing as a false idea. However pernicious an opinion may seem, we depend for its correction not on the conscience of judges and juries but on the competition of other ideas." Gertz, 418 US at 339-340. So MCL 168.932(a) is being applied unconstitutionally to Burkman and Wohl, and the charges should be quashed.

Recall that the Court of Appeals held that conveying opinions can create liability under MCL 168.932(a). So that court has endorsed an unconstitutional interpretation of the statute.

2. The statements in the robocall are plausibly true, and the First Amendment does not countenance prosecutions for conveying plausibly true facts.

As argued above, if the Court disagrees that the robocall expresses opinion rather than statements of fact, the robocall communicates information that is plausibly true.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Under the First Amendment, a speaker cannot be prosecuted for disseminating information that is plausibly true. Only knowing or reckless falsehoods can potentially be proscribed. Alvarez, 567 US at 719. And even then, false statements are not categorically unprotected speech. Id. at 720. It follows that conveying information that is possibly true but turns out to be false cannot give rise to criminal liability.

Again, the Court of Appeals held that conveying plausibly true facts can be criminal under MCL 168.932(a), which is unconstitutional.

3. Even if the robocall was knowingly false, the statements in the call are still constitutionally protected.

Even if the robocall can be regarded as a knowingly false statement of fact, and even if false statements are a corrupt means or device under the statute, the statements in the robocall are still constitutionally protected. Again, the falsity of a statement is generally not enough to make it constitutionally unprotected. Alvarez, 567 US at 718. To be unprotected, the statement must otherwise fit within one of the traditional categories of unprotected speech. Id. at 717.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Here, the prosecution has relied on the true threat exception. But as explored above, the Court of Appeals correctly held that the true threat exception does not apply because the robocall does not contain threats of unlawful violence.

The Court of Appeals instead relied on the "speech integral to criminal conduct" exception. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 14. (204a). The court described this exception thus:

> Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co, 336 US 490; 69 S Ct 684; 93 L Ed 2d 834 (1949), the authority commonly cited for this exception, involved an injunction against peaceful picketing at an ice distribution facility by members of an ice peddlers union. Id. at 491-492. The union members' goal was to compel the ice distributor to stop selling to nonunion peddlers, contrary to a state statute prohibiting participation in any "pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition . . . ." Id. at 491 n 2, 492. Had the distributor agreed to stop selling ice to nonunion members, it too would have been in violation of the state antitrade restraint law. Id. at 493. The union peddlers argued, in part, that the injunction violated the First Amendment freedom of speech because they were merely publicizing truthful facts in a peaceful manner. Id. at 497-498. But the Supreme Court disagreed, reasoning that the "sole immediate object of the publicizing adjacent to the premises of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

> [the distributor] . . . was to compel [the distributor] to agree to stop selling ice to nonunion peddlers," contrary to state law. Id. at 498. The Court concluded that freedom of speech did not "extend[] its immunity to speech or writing used as an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid criminal statute." Id. "[I]t has never been deemed an abridgement of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written, or printed." Id. at 502. [Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 14-15. (204a-205a).]

Relying on this understanding of the speech integral to criminal conduct exception, the Court of Appeals said, "Here, the purpose of MCL 168.932(a) is to preserve and protect the right to vote, a compelling state interest." Id. at ___; slip op at 15. (205a). "The statute carries out this goal," the court continued, "by prohibiting influencing, deterring, or interrupting an elector from giving his or her vote by way of bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device." Id. "Like the picketing in Giboney," the court concluded, "the speech was an integral part of conduct criminalized by MCL 168.932(a) and should not be constitutionally protected merely because the conduct was 'carried out by means of language.' " Id.

Giboney and the speech integral to criminal conduct exception are controversial. See, e.g., Volokh, The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception, 101 Cornell L Rev

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

981 (2016). " 'Under the broadest interpretation, if the government criminalized any type of speech, then anyone engaging in that speech could be punished because the speech would automatically be integral to committing the offense.' " Buchanan v Crisler, 323 Mich App 163, 186; 922 NW2d 886 (2018), quoting United States v Matusiewicz, 84 F Supp 3d 363, 369 (2015). As Professor Volokh has explained:

> The Giboney doctrine can't justify treating speech as "integral to illegal conduct" simply because the speech is illegal under the law that is being challenged. That should be obvious, since the whole point of modern First Amendment doctrine is to protect speech against many laws that make such speech illegal. Yet many lower courts have indeed cited Giboney for the proposition that speech loses its protection just because it is made illegal. Giboney has thus become, at times, a tool for avoiding serious First Amendment analysis—a way to uphold speech restrictions as supposedly fitting within an established exception, without a real explanation of how the upheld restrictions differ from other restrictions that would be struck down. [The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception, 101 Cornell L Rev at 987-988 (cleaned up).]

This is precisely what happened here. Boiled down, the Court of Appeals' analysis goes like this: MCL 168.932(a) criminalizes false speech used to deter voting, so the robocall was integral to the criminal conduct proscribed by the statute. Burkman, ___ Mich App at ___; slip op at 15. (205a). But again, speech cannot be integral to criminal conduct simply because a statute prohibits it. Instead, the speech "must help cause or threaten other illegal conduct." The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception, 101 Cornell L Rev at 1011 (cleaned up). So the Court of Appeals' reliance on the speech integral to criminal conduct exception was misplaced.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

RELIEF REQUESTED

The defense asks this Court to reverse the lower courts' decisions and order that the charges against Burkman and Wohl be dismissed.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Timothy A. Doman
/s/ Scott A. Grabel
GRABEL & ASSOCIATES
Scott A. Grabel (P53310)
Timothy A. Doman (P77811)
Attorneys for John Burkman
124 W. Allegan, Ste. 636
Lansing, MI 48933
(800) 342-7896

/s/ William Amadeo
MCMANUS & AMADEO PLLC
William Amadeo (P76194)
Attorney for Jacob Wohl
2500 Packard, Ste. 106
Ann Arbor, MI 48104
(800) 392-7311

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 2/22/2023 5:24:44 PM

STATEMENT OF WORD COUNT

There are 13,551 countable words in this document according to the word count of the word-processing system used to prepare the document. This document uses 12-point Century Schoolbook typeface.

/s/ Timothy A. Doman
Timothy A. Doman (P77811)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

STATE OF MICHIGAN
IN THE SUPREME COURT
Appeal from the Michigan Court of Appeals
Letica, PJ., Redford and Rick, JJ.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN, Plaintiffs-Appellees, v JOHN MACAULEY BURKMAN, Defendant-Appellant. _____/	Supreme Court No. 164638 Court of Appeals No. 356600 Wayne County Circuit Court No. 20-004636-FH
PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN, Plaintiffs-Appellees, v JACOB ALEXANDER WOHL, Defendant-Appellant. _____/	Supreme Court No. 164639 Court of Appeals No. 356602 Wayne County Circuit Court No. 20-004637-FH

CORRECTED BRIEF ON APPEAL OF APPELLEES PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED

Dana Nessel
Attorney General

Ann M. Sherman (P67762)
Solicitor General
Counsel of Record

Richard L. Cunningham (P29735)
Assistant Attorney General
Attorney for Plaintiffs-Appellees
Criminal Trials & Appeals Division
3030 W. Grand Blvd., Ste 10-354
Detroit, MI 48202
(313) 456-0204

Dated: May 10, 2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Index of Authorities iii counter-Statement of Jurisdiction vii counter-Statement of Questions Presented viii

Constitutional Provisions and Statutes Involved ix

Introduction 1

COUNTER-Statement of Facts and Proceedings 4

Argument 17

I. The Court of Appeals properly interpreted MCL 168.932(a) and found there was adequate evidence to bind Burkman and Wohl over on this criminal charge. 17

A. The robocalls were both a "corrupt means or device" used to deter voting and a menacing method to do so. 18

1. The robocall was a "corrupt means or device" used to deter voting. 18

2. The robocall was a "menacing" method used to deter voting. 19

B. Whether or not the statements in the robocall were true, were plausible, were simply opinion, or were not known to be false, the critical point was that Burkman and Wohl acted corruptly, and with menace, to intimidate minority voters. 22

C. The rule of lenity simply does not apply in this case. 25

II. The crime of intimidating voters, MCL 168.932(a), is not unconstitutional, and the conduct of Burkman and Wohl was not constitutionally protected. 27

A. As the Court of Appeals ruled below, the "integral-speech" exception applies here. 27

B. The "true threat" exception also applies here. 31

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

C. The defendants' argument that the statute here is "vague" and "overbroad" is unavailing; Michigan's voter intimidation law is constitutional. 36

1. MCL 168.932(a) is not vague. 37

2. MCL 168.932(a) is not overbroad. 38

Conclusion and Relief Requested 40

Word Count Statement 41

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

INDEX OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Abela v Gen Motors Corp,
469 Mich 603 (2004) 39

Bonner v City of Brighton,
495 Mich 209, 223 (2014) 40

Brandenburg v Ohio,
395 US 444 (1969) 34

Chaplinsky v New Hampshire,
315 US 568 (1942) 28, 35

Cox v Louisiana,
379 US 559 (1965) 29

Crego v Coleman,
463 Mich 248, 269 (2000) 40

Estate of Grable v Brown (In re Dudzinski)
257 Mich App 96 (2003) 28

Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co,
336 US 490 (1949) 29, 30, 31, 32

In re Chmura,
461 Mich 517, 531–532 (2000) 40, 43

In re Request for Advisory Opinion Regarding Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich 1, 11 (2007) 41

Lambert v Sec'y of State,
COA No. 355266 (October 29, 2020) 22

Miller v California,
413 US 15 (1973) 35

Nat'l Org for Women v Operation Rescue,
37 F3d 646 (DC Cir, 1994) 30

New York v Ferber,
458 US 747 (1982) 30, 34

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

People v Arnold,
508 Mich 1 (2021) 26

People v Clark,
986 NW2d 602 (2023) 42

People v Coutu,
235 Mich App 695 (1999) 41

People v Drake,
246 Mich App 637 (2001) 16

People v Harris,
495 Mich 120 (2014) 16

People v O'Neal,
22 Mich App 432 (1970) 42

People v Perkins,
468 Mich 448 (2003) 19

People v Pickett,
339 Mich 294 (1954) 42

People v Seeburger,
225 Mich App 385 (1997) 22

People v Spann,
250 Mich App 527 (2002) 21

People v Waterstone,
296 Mich App 121 (2012) 19

People v Wood,
326 Mich App 561, 576 (2018) 39

People v. Harris,
495 Mich 120, 133–134 (2014) 41

RAV v City of St. Paul,
505 US 377 (1992) 28

TM v MZ,
326 Mich App 227 (2018) 16, 39

United States v Alvarez,
567 US 709 (2012) 31

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

United States v Coss,
677 F3d 278 (CA 6, 2012) 37

United States v Rowlee,
899 F2d 1275 (CA 2, 1990) 30

United States v Rundo,
990 F3d 7099 (CA 9, 2021) 37

United States v Sayer,
748 F3d 425 (CA 1, 2014) 32

United States v Turner,
720 F3d 411 (CA 2, 2013) 36

Virginia v Black,
538 US 343 (2003) 35, 36

Watts v United States,
394 US 705 (1969) 34, 35

Statutes

18 USC 115(a) 36

18 USC 2101(a) 37

18 USC 2102(a) 37

18 USC 875(d) 41

MCL 168.932(a) ..... passim

MCL 750.157a 4

MCL 750.213 ..... 24, 38, 42

MCL 750.505 41

MCL 752.796 4

MCL 752.797(3)(d) 4

Other Authorities

3 Gillespie Mich Crim Law & Procedure § 77:1 (2d ed) § 77:1 25

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Bouvier's Law Dictionary (Ed. 1926) 21

Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed) 20

Public Act 261 of 1995 21

The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception," 101 Cornell Law Review 981, 986–987 (2016) 29

Tuskegee Study of Untreated Syphilis 32

Webster's International Dictionary (Ed. 1921) 21

Webster's New World Dictionary (Ed. 1988) 22

Rules

MCR 7.215(J)(1) 39

Michigan Court Rules 7.212(B) 46

Michigan Court Rules 7.312(A) 46

MRE 801(D)(2) 12

MRE 902(11) 7

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Plaintiff-Appellee People of the State of Michigan accepts the statement of jurisdiction by Defendants-Appellants John Macauley Burkman and Jacob Alexander Wohl.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF QUESTIONS PRESENTED

This Court has directed the parties to address two specific questions:

1. Did the Court of Appeals properly interpret MCL 168.932(a)?

   Appellants' answer: No.

   Appellees' answer: Yes.

   Trial court's answer: Yes.

   Court of Appeals' answer: Yes.

2. Is MCL 168.932(a) unconstitutional on its face or as applied to the defendants-appellants?

   Appellants' answer: Yes.

   Appellees' answer: No.

   Trial court's answer: No.

   Court of Appeals' answer: No.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

First Amendment, U.S. Constitution:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

MCL 168.932(a) provides:

> A person who violates 1 or more of the following subdivisions is guilty of a felony:
>
> (a) A person shall not attempt, by means of bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly, to influence an elector in giving his or her vote, or to deter the elector from, or interrupt the elector in giving his or her vote at any election held in this state.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

INTRODUCTION

In a blatant attempt to suppress the minority vote during the 2020 Presidential Election, John Burkman and Jacob Wohl sent a robocall message into specific zip codes in cities with high Black populations. The robocall message implicitly threatened the liberty as well as the financial and physical harm of those voting by mail in the election.

Sent during the height of the pandemic, when public gatherings were being discouraged, the call warned recipients not to be finessed into giving their private information to "the man," and to beware of vote by mail. The message asserted that if a person votes by mail his or her personal information will be part of a public database that will be used by police departments to track down old warrants and be used by credit card companies to collect outstanding debts. It further asserted that the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) is pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people down for mandatory vaccination.

As a result of this robocall message, criminal and civil proceedings were initiated against Burkman and Wohl in several different jurisdictions. Based on this robocall message to Detroit voters, Burkman and Wohl were charged with violating Michigan's voter intimidation statute, MCL 168.932(a). That statutory provision makes it a crime by means of "menace" or "corrupt means or device" to influence an election or to deter someone from voting:

> A person shall not attempt, by means of bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly, to influence an elector in giving his or her vote, or to deter the elector from, or interrupt the elector in giving his or her vote at any election held in this state.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

The issues presented in this interlocutory appeal are (1) whether MCL 168.932(a) applies to the conduct demonstrated in this case, and (2) whether this robocall is constitutionally protected by the First Amendment. The answers are first, yes, the record developed at the preliminary examination is sufficient to establish the elements of the crime, and second, no, the false message by Burkman and Wohl is not constitutionally protected. Michigan's voter intimidation law is constitutional.

The targeting of minority voters, the defendants' stated goal of "hijacking this boring election," and other facts and circumstances surrounding the publishing of the robocall are sufficient to raise a question of fact as to whether Burkman and Wohl unlawfully intended to deter minority electors from voting in this election. Viewed in proper context, the common definitions of those terms establish that "menace" and "a corrupt means or device" were both used as methods to achieve the goal of deterring voting.

The term "menace" is generally defined as a show of an intention to inflict harm. While here there is a subtle threat to do physical violence in the assertion that voting records may be used to track people down for mandatory vaccinations, the threats to financial and liberty interests are also within the accepted definition of the term. "Menace" is not limited to threats of physical assault.

Likewise, the term "corrupt means or device" is generally viewed as intentional, purposeful, deliberate and knowingly wrongful behavior. Here, the record below establishes that the defendants acted with the intent to "hi-jack this boring election." That alone is sufficient to establish a question of fact as to whether the robocall message was a "corrupt means or device" used as a method to deter voting. The evidence here was more than sufficient to bind them over on this charge.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Furthermore, with regard to the second question, this robocall is outside of constitutional protection. While the First Amendment generally protects speech, there are certain well-established exceptions to its protections. There are at least two exceptions that apply in this case: (1) speech integral to criminal conduct; and (2) true threats. Based on each exception, the speech at issue here is not constitutionally protected. And MCL 168.932(a) is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad.

For the reasons stated and discussed in this brief, this Court should affirm the decision below and remand the case to the trial court for a trial on the merits.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

COUNTER-STATEMENT OF FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Defendants John Macauley Burkman and Jacob Alexander Wohl were charged in a complaint and warrant with the offenses of: (1) Election Law–Bribing/Intimidating Voters, in violation of MCL 168.932(a); (2) Conspiracy To Commit Election Law-Bribing/Intimidating Voters, in violation of MCL 750.157a and MCL 168.932(a); (3) Using a Computer to Commit Election Law-Bribing/Intimidating Voters, in violation of MCL 752.796, MCL 752.797(3)(d) and MCL 168.932(a); and (4) Using a Computer to Commit Conspiracy To Commit Election Law-Bribing/Intimidating Voters, in violation of MCL 752.796, MCL 752.797(3)(d), MCL 750.157a and MCL 168.932(a).

The gravamen of the charges is that the defendants attempted to unfairly affect the outcome of the 2020 General Election by suppressing the vote in minority communities. They conspired with each other to send a robocall message into communities with a high minority population. Their message falsely claimed that mail-in voting records would be used by law enforcement to execute outstanding warrants and by creditors to collect on outstanding debts. The caller also falsely implied that the CDC was seeking to use mail-in voting records to ensure mandatory vaccinations. The message warned against being finessed by "the man" into giving personal information. The defendants used computers and computer systems throughout the conspiracy, and as a vehicle to deliver their false and intimidating message to minority voters.

The matter came before a 36th District Court Judge for preliminary examination on October 29, 2020. The People presented three witnesses, one who received one of these false robocalls from Burkman and Wohl, the officer who investigated the matter and further linked the calls to the defendants (including their admissions in federal court), and an elections official from the Secretary of State, who explained that the information contained in the robocalls was false.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

To begin, Derrick Thomas testified that he was a 62-year-old retired firefighter who resides in the City of Detroit. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 11a, 35a). He is a qualified elector who has been voting for many years. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 11a–12a). He intended to vote in the 2020 General Election. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 26a). Mr. Thomas testified to receiving and listening to a robocall that was made to his land-line telephone at 11:16 a.m. on August 26, 2020. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 12a–14a, 23). He stated that he had caller ID on his telephone, and the number appearing on the caller ID was 703-795-5364. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 18a). Mr. Thomas identified an audio recording as a true and accurate recording of the robocall he received, and the recording was admitted into evidence as Exhibit 1. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 15a). The content of the recorded robocall is as follows:

> Hi, this is Tamika Taylor from Project 1599, a civil rights organization founded by Jack Burkman and Jacob Wohl. Mail-in voting sounds great, but did you know that if you vote by mail your personal information will be part of a public database that will be used by police departments to track down old warrants and be used by credit card companies to collect outstanding debts? The [Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC)] is even pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people for mandatory vaccines. Don't be finessed into giving your private information to the man. Stay safe and beware of vote by mail. [App'x, Exhibit 1, 192a–193a.]

Jeffrey Campbell testified that he is a Special Agent for the Michigan Department of Attorney General with over 25 years' experience in law enforcement.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

(App'x, PE 10/29/20, 43a, 81a). He was assigned to lead the investigation into the robocall that was admitted as Exhibit 1. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 44a–45a, 79a). After discussing the robocall with Mr. Thomas, he drafted a search warrant to U.S. Telecom, a trade association of the major telecommunication service providers, to trace the origin of the robocall. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 45a–46a). U.S. Telecom responded to the search warrant with information that caused him to draft a second search warrant for the records of Message Communications, a Los Angeles, California whose president was Robert Mahanian. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 46a).

Message Communications provides robocall services for paying clients. S/A Campbell described the process:

> The client can sign up for those services by way of online applications. They essentially can provide whatever recording that they wish to upload into the account. They pay for the services, either by check or by electronic transmission through that website. They can schedule the robo calls that they wish to go out. They can use databases as they upload or pick from existing databases by zip code and schedule the robo calls to go out that way, on their own. It, essentially, allows clients to manage their own campaign through the on-line service. [App'x, PE 10/29/20, 89a–90a.]

A search warrant regarding Message Communications was issued by a California judge. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 46a). S/A Campbell participated in the execution of that search warrant along with another Michigan Attorney General Special Agent and California law enforcement agents. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 46a–47a). During the execution of the warrant, the officers found electronic communications between Mahanian and JackBurkman2016@gmail.com and JacobWohl@gmail.com. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 48a). Based on this information S/A

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Campbell obtained a search warrant for subscriber information and records from Google. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 49a).

Google responded to the search warrant by providing records electronically through a portal available only to law enforcement. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 49a–50a). Along with the records, Google provided a Certificate of Authenticity attesting to the accuracy of the records kept in the normal course of business. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 50a–52a).

A series of documents was marked as proposed Exhibit 8. S/A Campbell identified this exhibit as some, but not all, of the emails provided by Google in response to the search warrant. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 52a). The documents in the proposed exhibit were Bates stamped for easy reference. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 54a). Exhibit 8 was admitted into evidence pursuant to MRE 902(11) as certified records of regularly conducted activity. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 53a). S/A Campbell then read portions of the exhibit into the record.

S/A Campbell identified Exhibit 8, Bates stamp 11 as an email chain:

> Okay. This email says in subject line regarding Dem dated August 19th, of 2020 at 11:49. It's from Jack Burkman 2016 Gmail, to Jacob Wohl Gmail.com first part of email, yes America needs W.B. This is in response to an email sent by Jacob Wohl email to Jack Burkman, 2061 (sic) at Gmail.com on Wednesday August 19th, that's 11:40 a.m. That message says Bill Clinton . . . dem convention speech viewership on-line stream total viewership, ABC, 727, CBS 424, NBC 196, no, I'm not missing any zeros. Our press conference is literally get [sic] 50 to a hundred times more views, which is why we must hi-jack this boring election. [App'x, PE 10/29/20, 55a–56a (emphasis added).]

S/A Campbell then went on to read into the record other emails that were part of Exhibit 8:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

This is an email, it says on the subject line, Robert and it's dated August 22nd, 2020, at 2:48. It's from Jack Burkman, 2016 at Gmail.com to Robert at MessageCommunications.Com and Jacob Wohl@gmail.com. It says want to make sure check arrived. We are ready to begin the robo calls. [Id. at 58a (emphasis added).]

This one also says in the subject line regarding Robert, it's dated August 23rd, 2020 at 332. It's from Robert at Message Communications.com to Jack Burkman 2016@gmail.com and Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com. It says Hi Jack. The check hasn't arrived yet, but I'll check again on Monday morning. Do you have a tracking number for it? As soon as I receive it, I'll send over the paid invoice showing both payments in 2020 for 2000 dollars. Thank you, again and signed by Robert Mahanian. [Id. at 58a–59a.]

This email says robo call tape in the subject line. It's dated August 25th, of 2020 and 0010. It's from Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com to Jack Burkman 2016@Gmail.com. It says attached is the audio file for the robo call. We should send it to black neighborhoods in Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia, Charlotte, Richmond, Atlanta and Cleveland . . . it showed down the bottom of the page, you see there was [sic] indications of attachments at the bottom that said 1599 vote by mail, robo call.wav. In the Google records provided to me, that is an actual attachment of an audio recording that is the mail in voting recording that went out on August 26th, 2020. [Id. at 59a (emphasis added).]

This email message on the subject line working on robo now. It's dated August 25th, of 2020 at 1751. It's from Burkman 2016@Gmail.com to Jacob Wohl@gmail.com. It says Cleveland, Philadelphia, Minnesota, Chicago, New York City and Detroit. [Id. (emphasis added).]

This one says subject line, robo, it's dated August 25th, 2020, 1848 hours from Jack Burkman 2016@gmail.com to Jacob Wohl@gmail.com. The message says data all loaded, ready. Many zip codes. We have two wavs, the 267,000 calls each. If you could do me one favor, just go in and upload the recording. Message Communications.Com account 12013, pass code 5202. Then I will enable, pick days and go in and hit go. [Id. at 60a (emphasis added).]

The emal (sic) regarding got call uploaded. It dated August 26th, 2020 at 10:47. It's fromRobert@Messagecommunications.com to Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com and Jack Burkman 2016@Gmail.com. The message

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

says yes, your campaign is currently running and recording, uploaded about 20 minutes ago, is running. I believe you are all set. It's signed Robert Mahanian and it's in response to the email message on this page just below it. [Id. at 60a (emphasis added).]

This one says on of [sic] the subject line regarding the got call uploaded, August 26th, 2020, 10:51 a.m. Jack Burkman2016@Gmail.com to Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com. It says great job in response to an email from Jacob Wohl at Gmail.com, that says I just uploaded the wav file. You can successfully update the calls per minute number to the maximum. We should be ready to go now. [Id. at 60a–61a (emphasis added).]

In the subject line robo. It's dated August 26th, 1527. It's from Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com to Jack Burkman@2016 Gmail.com. It says robo getting quite a bit of play on Twitter. I think they will have to write. [Id. at 61a.]

This one says in the subject line regarding protests dated August 26th, 2020 at 1236, it's from Jack Burkman2016@Gmail.com to Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com, it says let's leave Thursday 6:30 p.m. with Louis Thursday. I love these robo calls getting angry black call backs, win or lose, the black robo calls was a great idea. This is in response to an email sent by Jacob Wohl@ Gmail.com regarding, it says the writers are starting their mayhem tomorrow at 7 p.m. Black Lives Matter plaza formerly known as Lafayette Square. We should definitely get Louis and bull horns. [Id. (emphasis added.]

This one is an email that says in subject line Deny, it's dated August 27th of 2020 at 1234. It's from Jacob Wohl@Gmail.com to Jack Burkman2016@Gmail.com. It says deny to Will, ex cetera, regarding robo. That will make them write. [Id. at 61a–62a.]

This is in the subject line email that says regarding robo call to Michigan dated August 27th, 2020 at 1326. It's from Jack Burkman2016@Gmail.com to Tierney Sneed at Talking Points Memo.Com and it says in the message, we have no connection to those robo calls. Thank you. It's in response to an email sent to Jack Burkman2016@gmail, from Tierney Sneed. [Id. at 62a.]

This one says on the subject line regarding robo call in Michigan dated August 27th, of 2020 at 1338, it's from Jack Burkman2016@gmail.com to Tierney Sneed at Talking Points Memo.Com. It says couple points, one, no one in their right mind would put their cell on robo call. I bet a

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

> Soros Group is trying to embarrass us. Thirdly, we have been asked by the Trump Campaign to do robo calls and politely declined. We don't do that stuff. [Id. at 62a.]
>
> This is an email that says in the subject line regarding robo call, it's dated August 27th of 2020 at 1718 hours. It's from Jack Burkman2016@gmail.com to G. Edgards at 18.org, it is – it is a message, says no sir, not at all, in response to a question from David Edgards of the AP that says Hi Jack, I'm reaching out about this. Are you or Jacob Wohl involved? Thanks and then it also includes what appears to be a copy of a press release by Secretary of State Benson and Attorney General Nessel. [Id. at 62a–63a.]

After reading the emails into the record, S/A Campbell next identified a transcript of a proceeding in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Michigan. It was marked as proposed Exhibit 9. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 63a). The transcript was certified with the court reporter's signature. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 63a–64a). It was offered for only limited purposes and was admitted for only those limited purposes. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 63a–64a, 67a). The transcript contained separate admissions by each defendant. However, the entire transcript was offered into evidence for the sole purpose of giving meaning to the admission. Such was necessary to establish that the proceeding involved the same robocall as that in this case. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 63a–67a).

S/A Campbell then read into the record that portion of the transcript dealing with the admissions by Defendant Burkman:

> Starting with line 17, the Court says Mr. Burkman, my question was not whether they're true or false right now. My question was whether you, acting alone or with anyone else, prepared that message and caused it to be sent?
>
> Mr. Burkman responded oh, yes, your Honor. Yes, that is our call. Yes, yes.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

> The Court asked, you don't deny that you caused this call to be made and that you -- Mr. Burkman interrupts and says no. The Court says don't deny the content of it? Mr. Burkman says no, your Honor, we do not. [App'x, PE 10/29/20, 65a–66a.]

S/A Campbell next read into the record the statements made by Defendant Wohl during the federal court proceeding:

> Beginning line 20, it says let me then ask Mr. Wohl if he wishes to make any statement.
>
> Mr. Wohl answers yes, your Honor. I would second everything that Mr. Burkman just pointed out. I would also say and I would stress the point that there are no robo calls underway. There have not been any robo calls underway since the beginning of any sort of legal proceedings in Michigan and what we believe that this is not an effort to stop robo calls. No one, least of all the Plaintiffs, and no one else has alleged that any robo calls have taken place since the proceedings began in Michigan. So what this represents is an effort not to stop robo calls, but to stifle our constitutionally protected political speech and as to Miss Narvarro's mention of the bail conditions in Michigan and the like, that was examined by the Court, there was another hearing since the one that she referred – that she referenced and everything is all in good standing as it relates to the bail in Michigan. That's what I would conclude with, your Honor.
>
> The Court says all right. Thank you. Mr. Wohl you indicated that you echo all of what Mr. Burkman said. Does that include acknowledgement that you participated in the preparation of the content of the messages and it's communications to plaintiffs through the entity in California? Mr. Wohl answered yes, your Honor as to Mr. Burkman's specific representations, yes, yes. [App'x, PE 10/29/20, 67a–68a (emphasis added).]

Bowing to the inevitable, defense counsel then made a representative admission under MRE 801(D)(2) by stipulation that Mahanian was employed by the defendant to make a robocall. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 78a–79a). S/A Campbell subsequently testified that Mahanian's records show that the message was uploaded with directions that it be sent out to certain postal Zip Codes. (App'x, PE 10/28/20, 106a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

S/A Campbell identified proposed Exhibit 6 as series of emails that were seized during the execution of the search warrant at Mahanian's office. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 72a–73a). These were identified as emails between Mahanian and the conspirators. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 73a). Emails in Exhibit 8, which was provided by Google from the defendants' email accounts and shown by the records to have originated in Virginia, were the same emails found during the execution of the search warrant in California. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 78a). Exhibit 6 was thus offered as evidence that a computer system was used in furthering the conspiracy and carrying out the purpose of publishing the robocall. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 78a).

Finally, Khyla Craine testified she was a deputy to the Secretary of State. She serves as second in command of the Legal Services Administration and provides legal and policy advice to the Secretary. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 111a). As part of her duties, she serves as the Chief Privacy Officer of the Department. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 112a). She became aware of the robocall because of an accusation that it was a voter suppression call targeting Black citizens in the City of Detroit. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 113a). She was offended by the robocall because of her responsibility to ensure that voters are not given misinformation about the accuracy or security of their ballot. She saw the content of the robocall as false information. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 126a). During the 18 months that she has held her position, she has never seen law enforcement, credit card companies, or the CDC utilize voter records for the purposes stated in the robocall. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 142a).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Ms. Craine pointed out certain verbiage in the robocall that appeared to be directed to Black Americans and other people of color. She expressly noted the references to mandatory vaccinations and the warning to not give personal information to "the man." (App'x, PE 10/29/20, pp 141a–142a).

She testified that while the Qualified Voter File (QVF) is a public record, and that some parts of it are subject to disclosure, it would not make any sense for law enforcement, creditors or the CDC to use it for the purposes stated in the robocall. She stressed that telephone numbers and email addresses cannot be disclosed from the QVF. She noted that there are various other databases available to law enforcement, creditors and the CDC that would enable them to get much more information about any individual. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 111a–115a, 123a, 125a). She had a concern that people who listened to the robocall and got the misinformation might feel that mail-in voting was not safe. (App'x, PE 10/29/20, 120a).

After hearing the evidence, the district court judge bound both defendants over to the Wayne County Circuit Court on all four offenses charged in the complaint and warrant. The matter was ultimately assigned to a circuit court judge. Defendants then challenged the bindover by means of identical motions to quash. The parties submitted briefs on the issues and came before the court for oral argument on February 23, 2021. After considering the briefs and arguments, the trial court denied the motions to quash.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Defendants then sought leave to appeal that non-final order denying the motions to quash. On May 6, 2021, the Court of Appeals issued separate orders on each application denying relief for failure to persuade the Court of the need for immediate appellate review. Defendants then sought relief by method of separate applications for leave to appeal to the Michigan Supreme Court. In lieu of granting leave, the Michigan Supreme Court remanded both cases to the Court of Appeals for consideration as on leave granted. In an order dated November 9, 2021, the Court of Appeals consolidated the two cases to advance the efficient administration of the appellate process.

On November 9, 2021, the parties came back before the trial court for a special pre-trial on the still pending charges. After being apprised of the remand to the Court of Appeals the circuit court judge stayed further proceedings in the trial court pending a decision from the Court of Appeals.

Briefs were submitted and the Court of Appeals heard oral argument. On June 2, 2022, the Court of Appeals issued an opinion that rejected the arguments made by Burkman and Wohl and affirmed the denial of the motion to quash. The Court of Appeals' majority expressly held that the conduct established by the record satisfied the elements of the charged voter intimidation statute, and that the robocall fell within the statutory requirement that the method here used to deter voting fell within the proper definition of both "menace" and "corrupt means or device." In a partial concurrence and dissent, Judge Redford agreed that the evidence established probable cause of "corrupt means or device," but dissented on the bindover with regard to the "menace" theory of liability.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

The Court further determined without dissent that the robocall was outside of constitutional protection because it involved speech integral to criminal conduct. But the Court expressly rejected the People's argument that the robocall was also outside of First Amendment protection because it constituted a "true threat." In this regard, the Court determined that the "true threat" doctrine was limited to threats of physical violence.

The defendants then sought leave to appeal the June 2, 2022 decision by the Court of Appeals. On October 24, 2022, while the application for leave was still pending in the Supreme Court, Burkman and Wohl pled guilty to a felony telecommunications fraud charge in the Cuyahoga County (Ohio) Common Pleas Court. The charge was based on a robocall message sent to minority voters in Cleveland. But that was the exact same robocall message that was sent to Detroit voters in the present case.

On November 2, 2022, between the time of the Ohio plea and sentencing, this Court granted leave and directed the parties to address (1) whether the Court of Appeals properly interpreted MCL 168.932(a) and (2) whether MCL 168.932(a) is unconstitutional on its face or as applied to the defendants.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The district court's decision to bindover a defendant is reviewed to determine whether the district court abused its discretion in making its decision. People v Drake, 246 Mich App 637, 639 (2001). However, where the decision entails a question as to whether the alleged conduct falls within the scope of a penal statute the issue is a question of law that an appellate court reviews de novo. Id.

Moreover, constitutional issues, as questions of law, are reviewed de novo. TM v MZ, 326 Mich App 227, 236 (2018). A statute is presumed to be constitutional unless its unconstitutionality is plainly apparent. People v Harris, 495 Mich 120, 134 (2014). If possible, a statute is to be construed as constitutional. Id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

ARGUMENT

I. The Court of Appeals properly interpreted MCL 168.932(a) and found there was adequate evidence to bind Burkman and Wohl over on this criminal charge.

The primary charge addressed in both defendants' motions to quash and their briefs on appeal address the crime of bribing/intimidating voters under MCL 168.932(a). The language of the statute provides:

> A person who violates 1 or more of the following subdivisions is guilty of a felony:
>
> (a) A person shall not attempt, by means of bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly, to influence an elector in giving his or her vote, or to deter the elector from, or interrupt the elector in giving his or her vote at any election held in this state.

No attack was made on the related conspiracy count or the counts alleging the use of a computer to commit a crime. But it is here conceded that all the counts are dependent upon a finding that the defendants attempted, by means of menace or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly, to deter an elector from giving the elector's vote in any election in this state.

The statute establishes the elements. It requires proof of (1) bribery, menace, or other corrupt means or device, either directly or indirectly (2) to influence, to deter, or to interrupt an elector from voting. MCL 168.932(a). Burkman and Wohl assert that the Court of Appeals erred in concluding that the conduct demonstrated by the evidence at the preliminary examination fell within the scope of this charged offense. The crux of their argument may be digested as follows.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

The defendants argue that the evidence (A.1) does not demonstrate the use of another corrupt means or device; (A.2) does not demonstrate the use of any menace; and (B) does not establish an attempt to deter electors from voting. All of their other arguments are really related to these three main assertions, which are questions of statutory construction. All of the defendants' arguments are unavailing.

A. The robocalls were both a "corrupt means or device" used to deter voting and a menacing method to do so.

While the robocalls were both menacing and constituted a corrupt means or device, those statutory terms are distinct and will be discussed in turn. Either satisfies the crime's first element. The distinction between a "menace" and a "corrupt means or device" actually involves whether the assertion was threatening or otherwise wrongful. Where it threatened a harm, it was a "menace." And the invidious, misleading nature of the assertions made in the robocall establishes it as "a corrupt means or device" to accomplish the purpose.

1. The robocall was a "corrupt means or device" used to deter voting.

For the "corrupt means or device" theory, it is important to note that the message asserted that the personal information will be used by law enforcement and creditors. It was not simply a warning that such information may be used, or an expression of opinion that there was a risk of it being used. It asserted as fact that it will be used. The testimony at the preliminary examination demonstrates the wrongfulness of the defendants' assertions of fact.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Discussions of corrupt behavior have most generally arisen in the context of misconduct-in-office cases. "Corrupt behavior" has been defined as "intentional, purposeful, deliberate, and knowing wrongful behavior." People v Waterstone, 296 Mich App 121, 138 (2012). "Corrupt intent" has been recognized as a sense of depravity, perversion, or taint. People v Perkins, 468 Mich 448, 456 (2003).

The use of this message in a manipulative way as a means to deter voting based on a racial classification satisfies the statutory requirement of a "corrupt means or device." It is the nature of the communication, which was deliberately wrongful in nature through false and exaggerated claims and directed to a specific audience to discourage Black citizens from voting, which is the "corrupt means or device." The fact that it was a robocall did not make it wrongful. A similarly ugly, misleading effort directed to the targeted audience done in person to suppress minority voting would also constitute a "corrupt means or device" under the statute. It is the invidious character of the communication that is the corrupt means used to deter voting.

2. The robocall was a "menacing" method used to deter voting.

Defendants also assert that the term "menace" as used in MCL 168.932(a) is limited to threats of physical assault. They argue that since there was no evidence of any threat of physical harm to deter anyone from voting it was error to find a violation of the statute. They further assert that the Court of Appeals erred in applying a lay definition of the term to conclude that it encompasses threats of both physical and nonphysical harm.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

First of all, it should be recognized that the facts in this case actually do demonstrate a subtle threat to do physical harm. The blatantly false assertion that the CDC is pushing to use records from mail-in voting to track people for mandatory vaccination, in the context of the other evidence presented at the preliminary examination, is a subtle threat of an unwanted bodily intrusion if you allow yourself to be "finessed" by "the man." (App'x, PE 10/29/20, Exhibit 1, 192a–193a). Even if viewed as unreasonable, vaccination hesitance is real. Here, Burkman and Wohl are playing on the threat of possible unwanted mandatory vaccination to further their purpose of deterring voting in a minority community.

But even without this subtle threat of a possible battery from an unwanted injection, the threats to one's liberty interests and financial interests are sufficient to demonstrate "menacing" conduct. The term "menace" is properly defined as a show of intention to inflict harm, that may be achieved with or without physical contact. See App'x 198a, (COA slip op, p 8) (Letica, J., majority opinion) (" 'Menace' is defined as 'a show of intention to inflict harm'; 'one that represents a threat'; 'to make a show of intention to harm'; or 'to represent or pose a threat to.' Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed). The term 'menace' as defined in the dictionary does not require an accompanying physical component, but may be established through a threat."). The Court of Appeals got it right.

Whenever judicial construction is warranted, a court may consult dictionary definitions. Words should be given their common, generally accepted meaning, if consistent with the legislative aim in enacting the statute. People v Spann, 250

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Mich App 527 (2002). This statute has been in place in substance as a felony since at least 1929.[1] Either relying on the dictionaries at the time of this enactment or the time this was reenacted with small revisions, see Public Act 261 of 1995, the answer is the same that "menace" does not require an element of threat of physical harm. For Webster's International Dictionary (Ed. 1921), it provides that "menace" as a noun means "[t]he show of an intention to inflict evil; a threat; indication of probable evil or catastrophe to come." Id. at 507. In fact, the Bouvier's Law Dictionary (Ed. 1926) expressly states that no physical element is necessary:

> A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another. The word menace is not restricted to threats of violence to person and property nor to threats of accusing a person of crime; it includes a threat to accuse one of immoral conduct. [Id. at 797 (emphasis added).]

In relation to the time of reenactment, the Webster's New World Dictionary (Ed. 1988) provides similarly for "menace" as a noun: "1. a threat or the act of threatening[;] 2. anything threatening harm or evil[.]" Id. at 846.

These generally recognized definitions of "menace" cover any threat to a person or to society as a whole. It also fits the purpose of the law. Statutory language should be construed reasonably, keeping in mind the purpose of the

---

[1] The precursor to this law in 1929 as a felony likewise prohibited the influencing of an elector by either "menace" or "corrupt means or device":

> If any person shall by bribery, menace, or any other corrupt means or device whatever, either directly or indirectly, attempt to influence any elector in giving his vote, or deter him from, or interrupt him in giving the same at any election or primary election held pursuant to law, such person shall, on conviction, be deemed guilty of a felony. [CL 1929, chapter 57, § 3289.]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

statute. People v Seeburger, 225 Mich App 385, 391 (1997) (citations omitted). The Court of Appeals expressly recognized in an order denying an application for leave to appeal that MCL 168.932(a) is a voter intimidation statute. Lambert v Sec'y of State, COA No. 355266 (October 29, 2020) ("Voter intimidation is—and remains—illegal under current Michigan law. MCL 168.932(a)") (App'x A). Its purpose is to protect the constitutional and statutory rights of a voter to exercise the right to vote without fear or intimidation. To limit the prohibited conduct to threats of physical injury would be counter to this purpose.

Thus, a menace is a threat to cause some harm, and to menace someone is to threaten harm to that person. As noted, there is no requirement that the threat be to physically injure or do physical violence to the person. A threat to do harm to the individual, be it physical, emotional, financial, or otherwise, is sufficient to "menace" a person.

B. Whether or not the statements in the robocall were true, were plausible, were simply opinion, or were not known to be false, the critical point was that Burkman and Wohl acted corruptly, and with menace, to intimidate minority voters.

Burkman and Wohl argue that the robocall message cannot lead to criminal liability under MCL 168.932(a) because the message asserted opinion, plausibly true facts, or untrue facts that they did not know were false. But regardless of whether the threats in the robocall were stated in the form of an opinion, were possibly true, or unknowingly false, the statute would be satisfied if they intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving the elector's vote by means of these assertions where they acted in a corrupt way or with menace.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Here, the truth or falsity of the threats are of no moment where the method was both menacing and corrupt. What then is important is the state of mind with which Burkman and Wohl acted. For this inquiry, the critical question is whether they intended that those assertions made in the call would deter minority members from voting. The testimony developed at the preliminary examination is more than sufficient to demonstrate this intent. In other words, they acted with a corrupt method and with menace by attempting to intimidate by nefarious means a specific audience, Black voters, and discourage them from participating in the 2020 election. The Court of Appeals properly reasoned that the conduct at issue satisfied the statute regardless of whether the statements were "unknowingly false" where there was evidence of a wrongful method used as demonstrated here to deter voting:

> [F]or the robocall to be deemed a corrupt means or device, it must be established that defendants deliberately used a wrongful method with a depraved intent to interfere with voting. Regardless of whether the message was worded in the form of an opinion, possibly true, or unknowingly false, if defendants intended to influence, deter, or interrupt an elector in giving his or her vote, MCL 168.932(a) is satisfied. The prosecution presented sufficient evidence to establish probable cause that defendants had the requisite intent, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendants' motion to quash the bindover.
>
> [App'x, 201a (COA slip op, p 11) (Letica, J., majority opinion) (footnote omitted; emphasis added).]

This is the correct analysis.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

The key concept here is that a statement could be accurate (even though misleading) and still be wrongful or corrupt. This same basic idea is present in Michigan's law prohibiting extortion. See MCL 750.213.[2] As this Court stated more than a century ago in quoting a trial court's ruling, the fact that the threat of extortion may involve a truthful claim about the victim's conduct does not excuse it:

> The malice required by the statute was not a feeling of ill will towards the person threatened, but the willful doing of the act with the illegal intent. If the threat was willfully made with the intent to extort money, it was a malicious act, and the fact that the charge was true would be immaterial. [People v Whittemore, 102 Mich 519, 526 (1894) (emphasis added).]

See also 3 Gillespie Mich Crim Law & Procedure § 77:1 (2d ed) § 77:1 ("Where threats are made with a wrongful intent as set forth in the statute, the offense is complete regardless of whether the defendant believes the complainant guilty of the commission of the offense threatened to be revealed").

The same reasoning applies here. The act of defendants here would remain pernicious even if in some technical way they could be claimed to be true or that they somehow believed them to be true. The effort to frighten minority voters from exercising their constitutional rights through misleading statements is scurrilous and rightly subject to prosecution.

---

[2] MCL 750.213 provides as follows:

> Any person who shall, either orally or by a written or printed communication, maliciously threaten to accuse another of any crime or offense, or shall orally or by any written or printed communication maliciously threaten any injury to the person or property or mother, father, husband, wife or child of another with intent thereby to extort money or any pecuniary advantage whatever, or with intent to compel the person so threatened to do or refrain from doing any act against his will, shall be guilty of a felony[.]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

C. The rule of lenity simply does not apply in this case.

Burkman and Wohl argue that the question as to whether MCL 168.932(a) applies in this case is ambiguous, and thus the rule of lenity should apply. The rule of lenity stands for the proposition that penal laws are to be strictly construed with all doubts resolved in a defendant's favor. People v Arnold, 508 Mich 1, 24 n 51 (2021). This rule applies, however, only when the statutory text is ambiguous, such as when it irreconcilably conflicts with another provision of law. Id.

Thus, the rule of lenity does not apply here. The crime of voter intimidation, MCL 168.932(a), is not ambiguous, and the Legislature's intent is clear from the statutory language. The purpose is to protect a citizen's right to cast that citizen's vote without improper influence or deterrence. The rule of lenity has no application in this case. Whether Burkman and Wohl intended to deter voting is a question of fact for the jury. In particular, defendants assert that the evidence establishes only the intent to deter electors from a particular form of voting, and not from voting in general. But this argument fails for two different reasons.

First, the statutory language is sufficient to establish the crime when the intent was to deter any form of voting. The statutory language prohibits a person from deterring voting. This is a voter intimidation statute designed to ensure that the constitutional right of an elector to cast the elector's vote without threat or intimidation in any lawful manner in which he or she chooses to vote. The language does not limit the type of voting that is being protected. Even if the defendants' intent were simply to deter "mail-in voting," there would be a violation of the law here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Second, the evidence, and the reasonable inferences naturally flowing from the evidence, here demonstrate the intent to deter all forms of voting. There is more than sufficient evidence to demonstrate defendants' actual intent to deter all forms of voting among a minority population. The statements and actions of the conspirators should be viewed in the context of the political situation existing prior to the election. For the first time Michigan electors were eligible to vote by mail in a general election without meeting any specific criteria for doing so. There was much public debate over whether this would increase voter participation in elections. And just when the presidential campaign was beginning, the country was hit with a pandemic that discouraged public gatherings like those inevitable with in-person voting.

Looking at the totality of the circumstances, a fair inference can be drawn that the defendants believed that a large turnout in minority communities would be adverse to their preferred candidate and they believed that many persons in that community would simply not vote if they did not use the convenient method of mail-in voting. By discouraging mail-in voting, they were attempting to deter minority citizens from casting any type of vote in the election.

The evidence presented at the preliminary examination is more than sufficient to enable a juror to determine that Burkman and Wohl intended to deter voting by means of their robocall. The evidence presents a legitimate question of fact. This Court should affirm the sufficiency of the evidence to support the bindover.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

II. The crime of intimidating voters, MCL 168.932(a), is not unconstitutional, and the conduct of Burkman and Wohl was not constitutionally protected.

The First Amendment generally prevents government from proscribing speech based on disapproval of the ideas expressed. RAV v City of St. Paul, 505 US 377 (1992). But the right of free speech is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances, and certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech are preventable and punishable. See Estate of Grable v Brown (In re Dudzinski) 257 Mich App 96, 100 (2003), citing Chaplinsky v New Hampshire, 315 US 568, 571–572 (1942).

The robocall message used to deter voting in the present case is outside of First Amendment protection for two separate and distinct reasons. These reasons will be discussed separately. The Court of Appeals correctly determined that the exception for speech integral to criminal conduct was here applicable. But analysis demonstrates that the "true threat" exception also applies in this case.

A. As the Court of Appeals ruled below, the "integral-speech" exception applies here.

Citing Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co, 336 US 490 (1949), the Court of Appeals concluded that that the exception for speech integral to criminal conduct was here applicable. See App'x 204a, (COA slip op, p 14) (Letica, J., majority opinion). In doing so, it recognized that it has never been deemed an abridgement of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal simply because it was initiated or carried out by means of language. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected "the contention that conduct [that is] otherwise unlawful is always immune from state regulation because an integral part of that conduct is carried on by" means of speech. Giboney, 336 US at 498.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Following Giboney, courts repeatedly have held that making a "course of conduct" illegal "has never been deemed an abridgment of freedom of speech . . . merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written, or printed." See Cox v Louisiana, 379 US 559, 563 (1965), quoting Giboney, 336 US at 502. Thus, "[i]t rarely has been suggested that the constitutional freedom for speech . . . extends its immunity to speech or writing used as an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid criminal statute." New York v Ferber, 458 US 747, 761–762 (1982), quoting Giboney, 336 US at 498. "Put another way, speech is not protected by the First Amendment when it is the very vehicle of the crime itself." United States v Rowlee, 899 F2d 1275, 1278 (CA 2, 1990). For example, the fact that aiding and abetting an illegal act "may be carried out through speech" is "no bar to its illegality." Nat'l Org for Women v Operation Rescue, 37 F3d 646, 656 (DC Cir, 1994).

Here, the Court of Appeals has adopted a position well-argued by legal scholars. The best understanding of the integral-speech exception is that when speech tends to cause, attempts to cause, or makes a threat to cause some illegal conduct (illegal conduct other than the speech itself), such as murder, fights, restraint of trade, child sexual abuse, discriminatory refusal to hire, and the like, this opens the door to possible restrictions on such speech. "The Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct Exception," 101 Cornell Law Review 981, 986–987 (2016).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Modern political intimidation embraces a wide and ever-expanding range of coercive tactics, including onsite voter harassment and legally baseless offsite threats of legal harm. While it is true that false statements are not categorically excluded from First Amendment protection, see United States v Alvarez, 567 US 709, 722 (2012), even so statements intended to discourage people from exercising the right to vote are exempted from First Amendment protection when they tend to cause, attempt to cause, or make a threat to cause such illegal conduct, i.e., place citizens in fear of voting, through a wrongful method.

Giboney is the seminal case from the U.S. Supreme Court on the "integral speech" exception to the First Amendment. In Giboney, the U.S. Supreme Court held that enjoining otherwise lawful picketing activities did not violate the First Amendment where the sole purpose of that picketing was to force a company to enter an unlawful agreement restraining trade, and thus the speech was "an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid criminal statute." 336 US at 498. The courts have relied on Giboney in rejecting First Amendment claims to criminal convictions. See, e.g., United States v Sayer, 748 F3d 425, 433–434 (CA 1, 2014) (affirming a federal conviction for cyberstalking, stating "[t]o the extent [the defendant's] course of conduct targeting Jane Doe involved speech at all, his speech is not protected. Here, as in Giboney, it served only to implement Sayer's criminal purpose.").

That same analysis is applicable here. In fact, in its ruling on this basis, the Court of Appeals expressly relied on Giboney:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

> To the extent a fact-finder agrees with the prosecution's theory that defendants spread a dishonest message with the depraved intent to discourage voting, defendants' dissemination of the message deterred voting through corrupt means. Like the picketing in Giboney, the speech was an integral part of conduct criminalized by MCL 168.932(a) and should not be constitutionally protected merely because the conduct was "carried out by means of language." Id. [App'x 205a (COA slip op, p 15) (Letica, J., majority opinion).]

Here, the essence of the crime is a wrongful attempt to deter voting. That is the illegal conduct addressed by the statute. The robocall was simply the method used by Burkman and Wohl to engage in the illegal conduct. It is not the words themselves that are made illegal by the statute. The statute seeks to punish the attempt to intimidate electors from exercising their right to vote, which is the illegal conduct when done in a wrongful manner, and thus the speech used to achieve this end is not entitled to constitutional protection.

This point is more clearly made by the situation where one would be aiding and abetting the crime of larceny by telling another to go ahead and take some identified property because no one is looking. There, the aider and abettor would clearly be speaking words that assist and/or encourage the commission of the crime and would be just as criminally responsible as the person who took the property. Such criminal responsibility would be based upon the conduct that it tends to cause (the larceny) rather than simply the words themselves.

Here, MCL 168.932(a) criminalizes voter intimidation. It seeks to protect the right of all citizens to exercise their right to vote without interference. The robocall initiated by defendants is the vehicle by which the crime was perpetrated. As noted, the Court of Appeals correctly recognized that the robocall message was simply integral speech that is not constitutionally protected. This Court should affirm the decision below on this ground alone.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

B. The "true threat" exception also applies here.

Here, the Court of Appeals directly rejected the "true threat" exception, on the basis that this exception was limited to threats of unlawful violence. See App'x 203a (COA slip op, p 13) (Letica, J., majority opinion). In doing so, the Court of Appeals overlooked the fact that the subtle threat of mandatory vaccination could be viewed as a threat that a battery would be committed on the listener if he or she participated in mail-in voting. Given the historical background and continuing public concerns over the infamous Tuskegee Experiment from American history,[3] the concept of mandatory vaccinations could be a true threat to minority voters—aimed, in this context, at engendering fear and disruption in that particular group of individuals.

But even aside from this point, this Court should adopt a rule recognizing that a "true threat" can arise from a threat of financial, liberty, or other non-violent harm where the threats were, as here, wrongful. The Court of Appeals is correct that Michigan law does not yet recognize that a "true threat" can involve a threat to do non-violent harm. See App'x 204a (COA slip op, p 14) (Letica, J., majority opinion). But there are strong legal reasons for now adopting a different rule in this State.

---

[3] The Tuskegee Study of Untreated Syphilis (informally referred to as the Tuskegee Experiment) was a study conducted between 1932 and 1972 by the U.S. Public Health Service and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) on a group of nearly 400 Black American men with syphilis. The purpose of the study was to observe the effects of the disease when untreated, though by the end of the study medical advancements meant it was entirely treatable. The men were not informed of the nature of the experiment, and more than 100 died as a result.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Over time, the U.S. Supreme Court has defined narrow categories of speech that can be prohibited based on content. Such categories include, for example, true threats, Watts v United States, 394 US 705 (1969); speech directed at and likely to incite imminent lawless action, Brandenburg v Ohio, 395 US 444 (1969) (per curiam); child pornography, New York v Ferber, 458 US 747 (1982); obscenity, Miller v California, 413 US 15 (1973); and fighting words, Chaplinsky v New Hampshire, 315 US 568 (1942).

As noted above, true threats are not entitled to First Amendment protection. See Watts, 394 US at 708. In fact, in Virginia v Black, 538 US 343 (2003), the U.S. Supreme Court recognized that, interpreted in a broader historical and social context, cross burnings can constitute true threats even though they communicate no explicit message. But the Court recognized there that such conduct involved a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence.

It is important to note that the U.S. Supreme Court has not squarely addressed whether threats of nonviolent or nonphysical harm can constitute true threats. There is a spilt of authority among different jurisdictions on this question. In Black, the U.S. Supreme Court explained that "[t]rue threats encompass those statements where the speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence to a particular individual or group of individuals." 538 US at 359 (emphasis added). But Black does not state that only threats of unlawful violence can be considered "true threats."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

Prohibition of true threats is appropriate, the U.S. Supreme Court reasoned, because it "protects individuals from the fear of violence and the disruption that fear engenders, as well as from the possibility that the threatened violence will occur." Id. (citations omitted). Thus, the U.S. Supreme Court's analysis in Black should not be interpreted to suggest that the government can ban only threats of physical harm. The threat of severe nonbodily harm can engender as much fear and disruption as the threat of violence.

Here, the defendants threatened minority member voters that if they voted by mail-in voting their personal information would be used by police and creditors. The wrongful threat to privacy, financial security, and liberty contained in the robocall at issue here demonstrates it is a "true threat" that is not entitled to constitutional protection.

A few jurisdictions have favorable analysis addressing whether the "true threat" exception applies to non-physical harm. In reviewing the federal statute prohibiting threats of violence against federal officials, 18 USC 115(a) (threatens to assault, kidnap, or murder), the Second Circuit evaluated the nature of a "true threat" and noted that it was not a defense to the crime if "the speaker has no intention of carrying [the threats] out." See United States v Turner, 720 F3d 411, 420 (CA 2, 2013). In doing so, the court cited Virginia v Black, 538 US at 360, in making that point, but then also cited an article addressing this arena, which stated that the threat of a "substantial emotional disturbance" would be sufficient under the First Amendment:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

> "Despite the relevance of freedom of speech, a legislature could reasonably decide to make it criminal for a person with apparent firmness of purpose to threaten a specific legal wrong grave enough to be likely either to cause substantial emotional disturbance in the person threatened or to require the employment of substantial resources for investigation or prevention.". [Turner, 720 F3d at 420, quoting Kent Greenawalt, Speech, Crime, and the Uses of Language 91 (1989).]

In addition, the Ninth Circuit concluded that " 'True threats' are not limited to bodily harm only but also include property damage" in its evaluation of the federal law prohibiting the inciting of a riot, 18 USC 2101(a), 2102(a). See United States v Rundo, 990 F3d 709, 719 (CA 9, 2021).[4] The Sixth Circuit similarly ruled that certain threats to cause a reputational injury in an effort to extort money were "not protected speech." See United States v Coss, 677 F3d 278, 290, n 17 (CA 6, 2012) ("because it is a 'true threat' it is not protected speech . . . . it is the crime of extortion to threaten to injure the reputation [of another]"). Similarly, Michigan law prohibits extortion by punishing "malicious threat[s]" to the "property" of another. See MCL 750.213.

On this point, like extortion based on reputational injury or threats to incite violence against property, the legal reasons supporting the extension of the "true threat" exception to threats of non-physical harm in the circumstances of this case were eloquently stated in a case involving the very same robocall and defendant, Jacob Wohl:

> The right to vote embodies the very essence of democracy. Absent free and fair elections uninfluenced by fear, the underpinnings of democratic rule would crumble. The United States Constitution, as enforced by Congress and the courts, enshrines these principles. . . .

---

[4] The Ninth Circuit did find the federal law overbroad for prohibiting "advocacy," and severed the unconstitutional language from the statute. Id. at 720–721. Unlike that law, however, Michigan's voter intimidation law does not criminalize advocacy, but only punishes the wrongful intimidation of voters.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

> Many Plaintiffs in this case assert that they were recipients of robocalls initiated by Defendants conveying messages that placed recipients in reasonable fear of casting their votes in the impending presidential election, in person or by mail. Upon initial factual review, this Court finds that the information Defendants' calls convey is manifestly false and meant to intimidate citizens from exercising voting rights.
>
> Defendants do not contest that they originated the robocalls. In fact, by their own admission in other public statements they reportedly made, they have worked overtly to influence potential voters through disinformation campaigns. Instead, as legal ground for their action, Defendants advance a sinister and pernicious theory. They contend that the expression their robocalls communicated constitutes speech protected by the First Amendment. Defendants' theory implicates a fundamental threat to democracy. This Court thus rejects it as justification for Defendants' baneful conduct. The First Amendment cannot confer on anyone a license to inflict purposeful harm on democratic society or offer refuge for wrongdoers seeking to undermine bedrock constitutional principles. Nor can it serve as a weapon they wield to bring about our democracy's self-destruction. [National Coalition on Black Civic Participation v Wohl, 498 F Supp 3d 457, 464 (SDNY 2020).]

Of course, a decision by a New York federal district court judge in a civil case cannot control a Michigan criminal case. This Court has recognized, however, that even when it is not binding, authority from other jurisdictions may be considered for its persuasive value. Abela v Gen Motors Corp, 469 Mich 603, 607 (2004).[5]

Given the high importance of protecting the right to vote, there are strong legal reasons here to extend the "true threat" exemption to threats of non-violent harm where, as here, the nature of the robocalls was wrongful. This is a second, and independent, basis on which to affirm the decision below.

---

[5] The Court of Appeals below rejected this argument as it concluded it was constrained by prior case law. See App'x 204a (COA slip op, p 14 n 11) (Letica, J., majority) (noting that it was bound by prior published decision, MCR 7.215(J)(1), stating that "Michigan has applied the threat of violence to the true threat exception to First Amendment protections," citing TM v MZ, 326 Mich App 227, 239 (2018).)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

C. The defendants' argument that the statute here is "vague" and "overbroad" is unavailing; Michigan's voter intimidation law is constitutional.

The defendants make two additional arguments about why Michigan's intimidation law is unconstitutional, asserting that it is "vague," see Defs' Br, pp 42–45, and that it is "overbroad," id. at 45–52. They are wrong on both points.

As an initial point, the Michigan appellate courts distinguish between facial and as-applied challenges. See, e.g., People v Wood, 326 Mich App 561, 576 (2018), reversed on other grounds, 506 Mich 114 (2020). This Court has asked the parties to address each ground.

For a facial challenge, the ordinary rule is that the challenger must show that there are "no set of circumstances exists" under which the law would be valid, and the fact the law "might operate unconstitutionally under some conceivable set of circumstances is insufficient" to render it invalid. Bonner v City of Brighton, 495 Mich 209, 223 (2014) (cleaned up). This Court has recognized an exception to this rule for overbreadth challenges, that is a challenger must show a "realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the Court for it to be facially challenged on overbreadth grounds." In re Chmura, 461 Mich 517, 531–532 (2000).

For an as-applied challenge, the Court must analyze the statute "as applied" to the particular case. Crego v Coleman, 463 Mich 248, 269 (2000). In other words, an as-applied challenge, to be distinguished from a facial challenge, alleges 'a present infringement or denial of a specific right or of a particular injury in process of actual execution' of government action." Boyenner, 495 Mich at 223 n 27.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

1. MCL 168.932(a) is not vague.

Regarding vagueness, a statute may be challenged for vagueness on three grounds: "(1) that it fails to provide fair notice of the conduct proscribed; (2) that it is so indefinite that it confers on the trier of fact unstructured and unlimited discretion to determine whether an offense has been committed; or (3) that its coverage is overbroad and impinges on First Amendment protections." People v. Harris, 495 Mich 120, 133–134 (2014). The party challenging the constitutionality a statute "bears the burden of proving that the law is unconstitutional" and this Court's "authority to invalidate laws is limited and must be predicated on a clearly apparent demonstration of unconstitutionality." Id., citing In re Request for Advisory Opinion Regarding Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich 1, 11 (2007).

On the questions of fair notice and the definite nature of the crime, there is nothing vague about Michigan's prohibition of a defendant employing "corrupt means or device" against voters to deter them from voting. The statute has been in place for a hundred years or more. As noted above, the same standard of "corrupt" defines the common-law crime of misconduct of in office, which is a five-year felony under Michigan's catch-all provision, MCL 750.505. That statute has been repeatedly upheld against vagueness challenges. See, e.g., People v Coutu, 235 Mich App 695, 705, n 5 (1999) ("This statute [the misconduct-in-office statute] has been upheld as constitutional and has specifically withstood a challenge for vagueness."), citing People v Pickett, 339 Mich 294, 309–311 (1954), People v O'Neal, 22 Mich App 432, 434–436 (1970).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

In fact, earlier this year this Court reinstated a misconduct-in-office charge in a case, see People v Clark, 986 NW2d 602 (2023), in which the Court of Appeals in an unpublished opinion rebuffed an as-applied vagueness challenge. See id. at slip op, p 6 (majority opinion) ("Michigan courts have upheld the constitutionally of MCL 750.505 in the face of vagueness challenges time and again") (App'x B). The same is true here.

And federal case law in this circuit further supports the conclusion. In evaluating a vagueness challenge to the federal statutes that prohibit the effort to extort money by use of interstate communications and to threaten or injure the reputation of another with an intent to extort money in violation of 18 USC 875(d), the Sixth Circuit ruled that its implicit requirement of wrongfulness was sufficiently clear to withstand a vagueness challenge:

> In short, 18 U.S.C. § 875(d) is sufficiently cabined by its own wrongful threat and intent to extort requirements to survive constitutional muster. [Coss, 677 F3d at 290 (emphasis added).]

And, as explained earlier, Michigan law's understanding of "corrupt" is defined in terms of wrongfulness as well. And this Court has upheld a challenge on vagueness grounds to Michigan's extortion statute. See Harris, 495 Mich at 138 ("any claim that MCL 750.213 fails to provide fair notice of the conduct proscribed is meritless").

2. MCL 168.932(a) is not overbroad.

Regarding the defendants' claim that MCL 168.932(a) is overbroad, this Court employs this doctrine "with hesitation," requiring "substantial overbreadth." See In re Chmura, 461 Mich at 531–532. This Michigan law is not overbroad.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

As explained earlier, the two exceptions to the First Amendment of integral speech and true threats apply here, which answers their argument. The Michigan voter intimidation law does not limit constitutionally protected speech. The statements used to menace or corruptly frighten citizens from voting are outside the ambit of the First Amendment. That is the summation of these exceptions, i.e., MCL 168.932(a) does not ensnare constitutionally protected speech because it requires not only evidence of attempts to deter voting, but to do so with menace or a corrupt means, i.e., in a wrongful way. In the end, the Constitution does not protect speech that is part of the crime of intimidating voters from voting through wrongful means, such as here threatening Black voters with some physical or financial harm – which are true threats – through misleading statements if they vote by mail. This Court should affirm.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

The Court of Appeals correctly interpreted MCL 168.932(a), and the district court did not abuse its discretion in binding Burkman and Wohl over to the circuit court. Furthermore, the robocall here at issue is not constitutionally protected. This message falls within the "integral speech" exception, as well as the "true threat" exception to the First Amendment in this case.

Therefore, this Court should remand this case to the Wayne County Circuit Court for a trial on the merits.

Respectfully submitted,

Dana Nessel
Attorney General

Ann M. Sherman (P67762)
Solicitor General
Counsel of Record

s Richard L Cunningham

Richard L. Cunningham (P29735)
Assistant Attorney General
Attorney for Plaintiffs-Appellees
Criminal Trials & Appeals Division
3030 W. Grand Blvd., Ste 10-354
Detroit, MI 48202
(313) 456-0204

Dated: May 10, 2023

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 5/12/2023 3:35:53 PM

WORD COUNT STATEMENT

This document complies with the type-volume limitation of Michigan Court Rules 7.312(A) and 7.212(B) because, excluding the part of the document exempted, this merits brief contains no more than 16,000 words. This document contains 11,120 words.

Richard L. Cunningham (P29735)
Assistant Attorney General
Attorney for Plaintiffs-Appellees
Criminal Trials & Appeals Division
3030 W. Grand Blvd., Ste 10-354
Detroit, MI 48202
(313) 456-0204

2022-0357117-A/MCOABrief/Burkman.JohnMaCauley

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/13/2024 2:21:16 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) - Privileged
Attachments: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m).docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good to talk with you today, Heather DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) We're planning a multistate call on Monday, June 17, from 3:30-4 that we hope you can join. Let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/11/2024 9:46:28 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]

Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
Location: Microsoft Teams Meeting

Start: 6/12/2024 3:30:00 PM
End: 6/12/2024 4:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

---

Microsoft Teams Need help?

Join the meeting now

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:

Dial in by phone

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u) United States, New York City
Find a local number
Phone conference ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

For organizers: Meeting options | Reset dial-in PIN

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jacob Glick [jhg75@georgetown.edu]
Sent: 6/6/2024 7:03:45 PM
To: aaron.gulczynski.1@us.af.mil; abrown@allvotingislocal.org; alewien@princeton.edu; alex@courtaccountability.org; amaad.rivera@greenbaywi.gov; andrew.evans@state.mn.us; ann@projectoverzero.org; bennewitzlp@doj.state.wi.us; Ben Gifford [bg720@georgetown.edu]; Brady, Mike (MDOS) [BradyM@michigan.gov]; Budde, Brian (MSP) [BuddeB1@michigan.gov]; cdavis@joycefdn.org; cltarrant@fbi.gov; david.haynes@cartercenter.org; donovan.jarstad@us.af.mil; greg.engle@widma.gov; grossic@michigan.gov; grottman@rcfp.org; heidi@globalextremism.org; Hill, Darryl (MDOS) [HillD16@michigan.gov]; jacqueline.romero@usdoj.gov; jcrofts@allvotingislocal.org; jeannie.m.jeanetta.mil@army.mil; jh@isdglobal.org; jmandell@lawforward.org; jmandell@staffordlaw.org; john.chisholm@da.wi.gov; julie.strother@state.mn.us; justin.erickson@state.mn.us; katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org; kbarker@fbi.gov; kboockvar@gmail.com; keary@ohiomayorsalliance.org; kyle@blocbybloc.org; lw@isdglobal.org; mark.a.totten@gmail.com; mary.fee@state.mn.us; matthew.p.beilfuss.mil@army.mil; matthew.stiegler@phila.gov; Mary McCord [mbm7@georgetown.edu]; meagan@statesuniteddemocracy.org; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; mel.barnes@wisconsin.gov; nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org; neville-neillm@doj.state.wi.us; npressley@allvotingislocal.org; Rupa Bhattacharyya [rb1796@georgetown.edu]; richard.frohling@usdoj.gov; Rich, Lizabeth (MSP) [RichL1@michigan.gov]; rleggett@michiganrcv.org; ryan@bedrock.us; sarah@ohiomayorsalliance.org; Shelby Calambokidis [sc2053@georgetown.edu]; scott@lawforward.org; shauntay@allvotingislocal.org; shiller@princeton.edu; soo.song@usdoj.gov; stjohn@milwaukee.gov; tdaly@joycefdn.org; te3509@princeton.edu; tim.oshea@usdoj.gov; tperez@pa.gov

Subject: Invitation: ICAP Virtual Reconvening on Preparing for the Threat of P... @ Thu Jun 13, 2024 10am - 2pm (EDT) (meingasth@michigan.gov)
Attachments: invite.ics

Start: 6/13/2024 2:00:00 PM
End: 6/13/2024 6:00:00 PM
Show Time As: Tentative

Recurrence: (none)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Topic: ICAP Virtual Reconvening on Preparing for the Threat of Political Violence
Time: Jun 13, 2024 10:00 AM Eastern Time (US and Canada)

Join Zoom Meeting

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Meeting ID: Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)
Passcode:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

When

Thursday Jun 13, 2024 · 10am – 2pm (Eastern Time - New York)

Guests

Jacob Glick - organizer
aaron.gulczynski.1@us.af.mil abrown@allvotingislocal.org alewien@princeton.edu
alex@courtaccountability.org amaad.rivera@greenbaywi.gov andrew.evans@state.mn.us
ann@projectoverzero.org
bennewitzlp@doj.state.wi.us
Ben Gifford
bradym@michigan.gov
buddeb1@michigan.gov
cdavis@joycefdn.org
cltarrant@fbi.gov
david.haynes@cartercenter.org donovan.jarstad@us.af.mil greg.engle@widma.gov grossic@michigan.gov grottman@rcfp.org
heidi@globalextremism.org hilld16@michigan.gov
jacqueline.romero@usdoj.gov jcrofts@allvotingislocal.org jeannie.m.jeanetta.mil@army.mil jh@isdglobal.org
jmandell@lawforward.org
jmandell@staffordlaw.org
john.chisholm@da.wi.gov julie.strother@state.mn.us justin.erickson@state.mn.us katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org kbarker@fbi.gov
kboockvar@gmail.com
keary@ohiomayorsalliance.org kyle@blocbybloc.org
lw@isdglobal.org
mark.a.totten@gmail.com
mary.fee@state.mn.us matthew.p.beilfuss.mil@army.mil
matthew.stiegler@phila.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Mary McCord
meagan@statesuniteddemocracy.org
meingasth@michigan.gov
mel.barnes@wisconsin.gov
nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org neville-neillm@doj.state.wi.us npressley@allvotingislocal.org
Rupa Bhattacharyya
richard.frohling@usdoj.gov richl1@michigan.gov
rleggett@michiganrcv.org ryan@bedrock.us
sarah@ohiomayorsalliance.org
Shelby Calambokidis
scott@lawforward.org
shauntay@allvotingislocal.org shiller@princeton.edu
soo.song@usdoj.gov stjohn@milwaukee.gov
tdaly@joycefdn.org
te3509@princeton.edu
tim.oshea@usdoj.gov
tperez@pa.gov
View all guest info

Reply for meingasth@michigan.gov

Maybe | No | Yes

More options

Invitation from Google Calendar

You are receiving this email because you are an attendee on the event. To stop receiving future updates for this event, decline this event.

Forwarding this invitation could allow any recipient to send a response to the organizer, be added to the guest list, invite others regardless of their own invitation status, or modify your RSVP. Learn more

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Organizer: Jacob Glick : jhg75@georgetown.edu

Subject: ICAP Virtual Reconvening on Preparing for the Threat of Political Violence

Location:

Start Time: 2024-06-13T10:00:00-04:00

End Time: 2024-06-13T14:00:00-04:00

Attendees: aaron.gulczynski.1@us.af.mil : aaron.gulczynski.1@us.af.mil, abrown@allvotingislocal.org, abrown@allvotingislocal.org, alewien@princeton.edu, alewien@princeton.edu, alex@courtaccountability.org : alex@courtaccountability.org, amaad.rivera@greenbaywi.gov : amaad.rivera@greenbaywi.gov, andrew.evans@state.mn.us : andrew.evans@state.mn.us, ann@projectoverzero.org : ann@projectoverzero.org, bennewitzlp@doj.state.wi.us : bennewitzlp@doj.state.wi.us, Ben Gifford : bg720@georgetown.edu, bradym@michigan.gov, bradym@michigan.gov, buddeb1@michigan.gov : buddeb1@michigan.gov, cdavis@joycefdn.org : cdavis@joycefdn.org, cltarrant@fbi.gov, cltarrant@fbi.gov, david.haynes@cartercenter.org : david.haynes@cartercenter.org, donovan.jarstad@us.af.mil : donovan.jarstad@us.af.mil, greg.engle@widma.gov : greg.engle@widma.gov, grossic@michigan.gov, grossic@michigan.gov, grottman@rcfp.org : grottman@rcfp.org, heidi@globalextremism.org : heidi@globalextremism.org, hilld16@michigan.gov, hilld16@michigan.gov, jacqueline.romero@usdoj.gov : jacqueline.romero@usdoj.gov, jcrofts@allvotingislocal.org : jcrofts@allvotingislocal.org, jeannie.m.jeanetta.mil@army.mil : jeannie.m.jeanetta.mil@army.mil, jh@isdglobal.org : jh@isdglobal.org, Jacob Glick, jhg75@georgetown.edu, jmandell@lawforward.org : jmandell@lawforward.org, jmandell@staffordlaw.org : jmandell@staffordlaw.org, john.chisholm@da.wi.gov : john.chisholm@da.wi.gov, julie.strother@state.mn.us : julie.strother@state.mn.us, justin.erickson@state.mn.us : justin.erickson@state.mn.us, katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org : katie@statesuniteddemocracy.org, kbarker@fbi.gov : kbarker@fbi.gov, kboockvar@gmail.com, kboockvar@gmail.com, keary@ohiomayorsalliance.org, keary@ohiomayorsalliance.org, kyle@blocbybloc.org, kyle@blocbybloc.org, lw@isdglobal.org : lw@isdglobal.org, mark.a.totten@gmail.com : mark.a.totten@gmail.com, mary.fee@state.mn.us, mary.fee@state.mn.us, matthew.p.beilfuss.mil@army.mil, matthew.p.beilfuss.mil@army.mil, matthew.stiegler@phila.gov, matthew.stiegler@phila.gov, Mary McCord : mbm7@georgetown.edu, meagan@statesuniteddemocracy.org : meagan@statesuniteddemocracy.org, meingasth@michigan.gov : meingasth@michigan.gov, mel.barnes@wisconsin.gov : mel.barnes@wisconsin.gov, nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org : nassim@statesuniteddemocracy.org, neville-neillm@doj.state.wi.us : neville-neillm@doj.state.wi.us, npressley@allvotingislocal.org : npressley@allvotingislocal.org, Rupa Bhattacharyya : rb1796@georgetown.edu, richard.frohling@usdoj.gov, richard.frohling@usdoj.gov, richl1@michigan.gov : richl1@michigan.gov, rleggett@michiganrcv.org : rleggett@michiganrcv.org, ryan@bedrock.us, ryan@bedrock.us, sarah@ohiomayorsalliance.org : sarah@ohiomayorsalliance.org, Shelby Calambokidis : sc2053@georgetown.edu, scott@lawforward.org : scott@lawforward.org, shauntay@allvotingislocal.org, shauntay@allvotingislocal.org, shiller@princeton.edu, shiller@princeton.edu, soo.song@usdoj.gov : soo.song@usdoj.gov, stjohn@milwaukee.gov : stjohn@milwaukee.gov,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

tdaly@joycefdn.org

Topic: ICAP Virtual Reconvening on Preparing for the Threat of Political Violence
Time: Jun 13, 2024 10:00 AM Eastern Time (US and Canada)

Join Zoom Meeting
<a

Security MCL 15.243(1)(u)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/13/2024 3:18:15 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Useful quick take on election standing implications

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

From Derek Muller at Notre Dame: https://electionlawblog.org/?p=143653

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 6/15/2024 1:01:24 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
CC: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Dax Goldstein
415.938.6481
they/them

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Thursday, June 13, 2024 8:43 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Subject: RE: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) Privileged

Hi Jonathan (Dax and Kelsey),

Chief Legal Counsel Linus Banhart-Linn and I would like to participate in the multistate call. I have included Linus here. We also appreciate the information that was shared.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, June 12, 2024 10:21 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) Privileged

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good to talk with you today, Heather DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m). We're planning a multistate call on Monday, June 17, from 3:30-4 that we hope you can join. Let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/12/2023 9:23:18 PM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Re: Michigan info

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

From: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) <Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov>
Date: Friday, May 12, 2023 at 4:50 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Subject: Michigan info

Jonathan,

Nice meeting you and your colleagues today!

You've asked for the briefing in Burkman/Wohl – those are attached, both the appellants' brief and our corrected brief filed this afternoon.

You also asked if there is a way to get those without "bothering" us. Since this case is headed for oral argument, it is on the cases awaiting oral argument page – our brief isn't on the page yet, but it should show up here: 164638-9, People of MI v John MacAuley Burkman, People of MI v Jacob Alexander Wohl (michigan.gov)

Once the case is scheduled for oral argument, I believe they will move it to a different section of the website, and you'll want to look for it here: Schedule of Oral Arguments (michigan.gov)

Unfortunately, although I think it used to be true that you could download briefs for any MCOA or MSC case, I think they have changed it so that you can only get opinions and orders now (other than cases the MSC has taken). If there's another case you're interested in in the future, the general search page is here: Cases, Opinions & Orders (michigan.gov).

You should be able to get opinions and orders there. I have a login that will let me download most documents, so if you see something you would like other than an opinion or order, don't hesitate to reach out. It's truly no bother.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Finally, the hearing is going to be held via Zoom on June 29 at 9:30 a.m. Only parties are allowed on the Zoom, but it is being streamed to YouTube. The links are:
https://www.youtube.com/@michiganattorneydiscipline3923

https://www.youtube.com/@michiganattorneydiscipline4603

(I'm not sure if it's going to be on both YouTube channels, or if they just don't know yet which channel it will be on. So I am planning to check in on both.)

If you need anything else, please let me know!

Thanks, and have a great weekend,

Linus Banghart-Linn (he/him)
Assistant Solicitor General
Michigan Department of Attorney General
P.O. Box 30217
Lansing, MI 48909
(517) 281-6677
Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 7/9/2024 4:55:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)
Attachments: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m).docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged and confidential // Attorney-client communication

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

In the meantime, let us know if it would be helpful for us to send updates your way.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 7/11/2024 6:42:16 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: NV transcript
Attachments: (Doc 96) 2024-06-18 Motion Hearing Transcript[49].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

As I mentioned, there's no written order dismissing the complaint in the RNC's NV NVRA case. Here's the transcript from the Nevada MTD hearing. You'll see the court's oral ruling begins at page 70.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

DISTRICT OF NEVADA

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE et al.,	Case No. 2:24-cv-00518-CDS-MDC
Plaintiffs,	Las Vegas, Nevada
vs.	Tuesday, June 18, 2024
	2:14 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.
	Courtroom 6B
FRANCISCO V. AGUILAR, in his official capacity as the Nevada Secretary of State, et al.,	Motion Hearing
	C E R T I F I E D C O P Y
Defendants.

REPORTER'S TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS

BEFORE THE HONORABLE CRISTINA D. SILVA,
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

APPEARANCES: See next page

COURT REPORTER: Samantha N. McNett, RMR, CRR, CCR
United States District Court
333 Las Vegas Boulevard South, Room 1334
Las Vegas, Nevada 89101
Samantha_McNett@nvd.uscourts.gov

Proceedings reported by machine shorthand, transcript produced by computer-aided transcription.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

APPEARANCES

For Plaintiffs Republican National Committee, Nevada Republican Party, and Scott Johnston:

CONOR WOODFIN, ESQ.
CONSOVOY MCCARTHY PLLCS
1600 Wilson Boulevard, Suite 700
Arlington, Virginia 22209
703-243-9423

-AND-

JEFFREY F. BARR, ESQ.
ASHCRAFT BARR, LLP
8275 South Eastern Avenue, Suite 200-695
Las Vegas, Nevada 89123
702-631-4755

-AND-

SIGAL CHATTAH, ESQ.
CHATTAH LAW GROUP
5875 South Rainbow Boulevard, #203
Las Vegas, Nevada 89118
702-360-6200

For Defendant Francisco Aguilar in his official capacity as Nevada Secretary of State:

LAENA ST. JULES, ESQ.
OFFICE OF THE NEVADA ATTORNEY GENERAL
100 North Carson Street
Carson City, Nevada 89701
775-684-1265

For Defendant Jim Hindle in his official capacity as Storey County Clerk:

AILEEN E. COHEN, ESQ.
THORNDAL ARMSTRONG, P.C.
1100 East Bridger
Las Vegas, Nevada 89101
702-366-0622

(Appearances continued on next page.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For Defendant William Scott Hoen in his official capacity as Carson City Clerk:

BENJAMIN R. JOHNSON, ESQ.
CARSON CITY DISTRICT ATTORNEY
STATE OF NEVADA - OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
885 East Musser Street, Suite 2030
Carson City, Nevada 89701
775-887-2070
(Via Zoom)

For Defendant Amy Burgans in her official capacity as Douglas County Clerk:

CYNTHEA GREGORY, ESQ.
DOUGLAS COUNTY DISTRICT ATTORNEY
P.O. Box 218
Minden, Nevada 89423
775-782-9803
(Via Zoom)

For Defendant Staci Lindberg in her official capacity as Storey County Clerk:

STEPHEN B. RYE, ESQ.
LYON COUNTY DISTRICT ATTORNEY
31 South Main Street
Yerington, Nevada 89447
775-463-6511
(Via Zoom)

For Intervenor Defendant Rise Action Fund:

CHRISTOPHER D. DODGE, ESQ.
MARISA A. O'GARA, ESQ.
ELIAS LAW GROUP, LLP
250 Massachusetts Avenue NW, Suite 400
Washington, D.C. 20001
202-968-4490

Also present:

Nichole Kazimirovicz, Esq. (Via Zoom)

* * *

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA; TUESDAY, JUNE 18, 2024; 2:14 P.M.

--oOo--

P R O C E E D I N G S

THE COURTROOM ADMINISTRATOR: This is the time set for the motion hearing in case number 2:24-cv-00518-CDS-MDC, Republican National Committee et al versus Francisco Aguilar et al.

THE COURT: Good afternoon, everybody. I apologize for the technical difficulties. Even in 2024, Zoom gives us challenges.

I believe everyone has checked in with the courtroom deputy. If you have not yet checked in, please do so at the conclusion of this hearing, or if you are on Zoom, do so via chat. That way, we can make sure your presence is documented.

We are here this afternoon for defendant's motion to dismiss, which is docketed at ECF number 26.

I'm going to start with counsel for plaintiff and ask that they introduce themselves this afternoon.

MR. WOODFIN: Good afternoon, your Honor. Conor Woodfin for the plaintiffs.

THE COURT: Good afternoon.

MR. BARR: Good afternoon, your Honor. Jeff Barr on behalf of plaintiffs.

THE COURT: Good afternoon.

MS. CHATTAH: Good afternoon. Sigal Chattah on behalf of plaintiffs NVGOP.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Good afternoon to you, as well.

And who's present on behalf of defendants?

MS. ST. JULES: Good afternoon, your Honor. Laena St. Jules on behalf of the Secretary of State.

THE COURT: All right. And --

MR. DODGE: Good afternoon, your Honor. Christopher D. Dodge on behalf of the proposed interveners.

THE COURT: All right. Good afternoon.

I will not be addressing -- just for clarity purposes, and I'm sure the parties are aware -- the motion to intervene as I believe I need to resolve this motion first, but thank you for your presence.

All right. Let's go ahead and get started. This matter has now been fully briefed. And I did issue a minute order regarding the subject matter I want to address during this afternoon's hearing and then that changed slightly. I don't know if it changed really, but there was intervening case law issued last Thursday from the Supreme Court in FDA versus Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine. And so, as noted at ECF Number 92, I granted Defendant Aguilar's motion to supplement the authority as that addresses organizational standing.

As we proceed through this hearing, I will likely rule from the bench on some of the issues. I want to hear argument on many of the issues, and for that reason, I don't know whether or not I'll decide the motion in full from the bench. Rather, I want to hear argument and go from there.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Depending on how long this goes, we will take a break not only for my staff but primarily for my court reporter whose fingers will inevitably get tired. And I'm working tirelessly to speak slowly which is not my forte as anyone who has appeared in front of me knows.

All right. So let's get started. And I want to start with statutory standing.

Interesting language used in 52 USC Section 20510(b)(1) regarding pre-suit notice. While it reads as permissive, courts have interpreted it as nonpermissive and dispositive to a civil plaintiff's case if they fail to satisfy this element of statutory standing. As set forth in cases that address the statutory notice requirement, it provides, states an opportunity to attempt to comply with the NVRA before facing litigation.

My first question is for Defendant Aguilar. You argue that notice here is deficient. And I want you to address two parts of that:

One, is it deficient as they cited the specific section in which they believe there is a violation?

And two, how does your argument square with the National Council of La Raza's decision regarding the notice requirement, while mandatory, the Ninth Circuit seems to think it's kind of a "check the box" as opposed to "must be a full and fulsome notice requirement"?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

You're welcome to stand there or you're welcome to come to the podium. It's up to you.

MS. ST. JULES: Thank you, your Honor. Laena St. Jules.

So I think I'll focus on the allegations that are new to the complaint that weren't raised in the notice letter. And as we've set out, the Fifth Circuit has explained that an opportunity to cure is part of the notice requirement.

Plaintiffs have raised allegations relating to inactive voters and also to relocation rates. This is nowhere in the notice letter. The notice letter focused solely on active registration rates. And I think that even under plaintiff's cases, their notice letter is deficient.

In American Civil Rights Union versus Martinez-Rivera, the Court explained the notice letter should give a defendant enough information to diagnosis the problem. The Judicial Watch, Inc. versus King court explained that the letter should set forth the reasons for plaintiff's conclusion that the defendants have failed to comply with the NVRA.

The Public Interest Legal Foundation versus Benson court explained that a notice letter is sufficient when it sets forth the reasons that a defendant purportedly failed to comply with the NVRA.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

None of these cases the plaintiffs have relied on address a similar situation to this where entire bases are missing.

And I don't think this is a formality in this case because specifically with respect to the 5,000 or so inactive voters that plaintiffs have alleged should have been removed, that's actually something that the Secretary of State could have acted on if it was actually properly noticed. Right now, as the Court is aware, we have 90 day restrictions in place kind of throughout this year. We have three elections that are subject to this 90 day restriction. One was in a February; it was a presidential preference primary. One was just last week, June 11, a primary election. And again, we're going to have the November general.

But if plaintiffs had raised these inactive voters back in December, right after the primary in February, the Secretary could have coordinated with the county clerks to make sure that there were no inactive voters that could have been removed at that time.

So I think even under plaintiff's cases, like I said --

THE COURT: Well, hold on. Wouldn't that have been within the 90 day period before the caucus or the primary?

MS. ST. JULES: I don't believe caucuses are actually included within the --

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: But there is a primary, right? There was a primary here in Nevada?

MS. ST. JULES: That's right. So between February 6th and the next 90 day period, which started for the June election, we had -- let's see. The next 90 day period started March 13th. So between those two dates, they could have identified those inactive voters and they could have removed them.

They couldn't have done the full program to remove active -- or to inactive active voters. And I'm happy to explain that. But certainly, the inactive voters could have been addressed during that time. And we were denied the opportunity because they filed their complaint on March 18th and that was within the 30 day period for the June primary, as well.

Would your Honor like to hear about why the active voters couldn't have been addressed after the February primary?

THE COURT: No. What I want you to focus on is how your argument squares with the La Raza case.

MS. ST. JULES: Certainly, your Honor.

So La Raza had to do with -- it was an ongoing violation that was alleged relating to voter registration services that needed to be provided under the NVRA. There was no 90 day restriction for those kinds of activities and so there could be a violation within the 90 day period that can't exist here because we are precluded from taking action to implement the general program to remove voters who have changed residence. So it's not the same kind of violation that's being alleged.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And the Court ultimately held that no notice was required. And this is under 20510 -- let's see -- subsection 3. "If the violation occurred within 30 days before the date of an election, the agreed person need not provide notice to the chief election official of the state."

But there was no violation for us in this case because the State was precluded from implementing its program entirely. There -- they couldn't -- the State couldn't use reasonable efforts to conduct its programs during the 90 days before the -- the primary and general elections that are at issue here.

So under La Raza, you know, if there is a violation and it took place 90 days beforehand, then you would absolutely need to provide notice. I don't think that's -- that's conflicting with La Raza.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you very much.

I want to turn and ask defendants a question, and that is really where we left off with -- I'm sorry -- plaintiffs, where I left off asking the defendant the question. And that is how La Raza impacts this case. You rely on it in saying, essentially, you've met the requirement and look at the Ninth

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Circuit. They've, essentially, said that requirement is not necessary. I'm very -- I'm arguing that very broadly.

But as argued by defendant, that is a Section 7 case, not a Section 8 case. Why should I consider or apply La Raza here?

MR. WOODFIN: So the difference between Section 7 and Section 8 doesn't bear on the notice. La Raza still applies just as well to Section 8 cases. I'm not aware really of any -- of any court distinguishing between Section 7 and Section 8 as far as the quality of the notice.

THE COURT: I haven't seen any cases that distinguish between that either. However, there is a difference and a distinguishing factor and that is that 90 day requirement. So under Section 7, obviously, it's a voter registration provision, a Court could order relief requiring the enumerated entities to register people to vote as required under the section. And that could happen through an election, you know, at any time.

Here, the State would be prohibited from acting on any program whether it already exists or it would need to be modified.

Is it your position that there's still no distinction?

MR. WOODFIN: So a few points on this.

First, the notice letter did not reference the February primary. It did not demand any sort of removal of ineligible voters from the voter rolls before the February primary. In fact, the only mention of any election in the letter is a request that the Secretary and the defendants provide information and assurances that they would comply with the NVRA before the November general election. So that's a very simple reason why this 90 day blackout window doesn't apply.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The second is there's a distinction between -- in all the case law between discrete violations and systemic violations and this is really a more fundamental point. La Raza draws this distinction between discrete violations and systemic violations. And the point is this violation that we're alleging here is systemic. It's not that the Secretary failed to remove ineligible voters immediately before the February primary. It's, rather, that the defendants have been, over the course of, you know, the past few election cycles failing to remove ineligible voters. And the evidence we provide, both in the notice letter and in the complaint, supports those allegations.

And so because it's a systemic violation, it couldn't have been cured by a one-off removal of ineligible voters before February. A systemic violation requires systemic changes in order to cure that violation. That's what we alleged in the notice letter and in the complaint.

And third, turning more directly to La Raza, there, the Court held that the timing of the notice letter did not bear on the sufficiency of the notice letter. So, here, the text of the -- of this -- of this (b)(1) subsection is very important. It requires simply notice of the violation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And to the extent timing matters at all, it only bears on when the plaintiff is allowed to file a lawsuit. So if the notice letter comes 120 days before a federal election, then they have to wait the full 90 days. If it comes within -- I -- excuse me -- within those 120 days before a federal election, then they have to wait 30 days, and if it comes within 30 days before a federal election, they don't have to send a letter at all.

So, here, to the extent that timing of the February primary mattered at all, under La Raza and under the plain text of the statute, the only effect it would have had is we could have actually sued much sooner. We could have sued only waiting 20 days for the Secretary to respond. Instead, we waited the full 90 days. And that's consistent with the statute. And it doesn't -- it doesn't bear on the sufficiency of the notice. It --

THE COURT: Right. Let's talk about the sufficiency of the notice. The notice is included at ECF 1-1. You talk about counties having voter registration rates that, according to your letter, exceed 90 percent of adult citizens over the age of 18. And that is apparently drawing from 2021 citizen voting age population data.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And then you go on to talk about three counties having more registered active voters than voting eligible citizens and others that have suspiciously high rates of voter registration.

And when I read the notice beginning with the bottom of page 3 and continuing through page 4, specifically the paragraph that begins, "These voter registration rates are abnormally, or in the case of counties with greater than 100 percent registration, impossibly high" and then you cite to some information and some tables. When I look at those tables, Nevada's rates are on par with the rest of the country.

And so I'm not -- so provide some clarity for me in regards to those tables. And tell me where in the notice it talks about systemic violations that would need to be remedied.

So let's start with the tables.

MR. WOODFIN: Okay. What -- specifically, what numbers are you referring to?

THE COURT: Sure. ECF Number 1-1 at page 4. You're looking -- you cite to Voting and Registration in the Election of November 2020, Table 4a, and then there's a cite to Voting and Registration in the Election of November 20 -- I'm sorry. The first one is 2022 and the second one is 2020. And I printed that data and Nevada's rates change -- or aren't different from other states in any significant way.

So I'm wondering how this put the State on notice as to what you were challenging.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: Right. Yes. So a few points on this.

So first, this is a very common, well-tested method of -- of noticing these systemic violations and then also pleading in the complaint. The U.S. Department of Justice pointed out this in United States versus Indiana. They allege that Indiana counties have between 90 and 95 voter registration rates. Looking at the same tables and the census data --

THE COURT: Right. But that is for, I believe, all 26 counties in Indiana, and here, we're looking at --

MR. WOODFIN: Well, yes, so --

THE COURT: -- six?

MR. WOODFIN: So a couple points.

First, we're pointing to, you know, only a handful of counties. And, of course, Nevada has fewer counties than Indiana.

THE COURT: You have to say Nevada if you're going to --

MR. WOODFIN: Nevada. I apologize. You're going to have to correct me.

THE COURT: It's only fair that I give you the heads-up.

MR. WOODFIN: I will do my best, but I can't make any promises.

So, of course, Nevada has fewer counties.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But what's really more fundamental is that the -- the NVRA designates the Secretary -- it requires a chief election officer.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: And then Nevada law, in turn, designates the Secretary of State as the State's chief election officer.

And so to state a violation under the NVRA and to provide accurate notice under the letter, we don't need to show that every county is --

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: -- is -- has bad rules.

THE COURT: I agree with you on that.

MR. WOODFIN: Right? To the extent even one county has bad rules, that is evidence or at least raises the inference that the Secretary is failing in his duty as the chief election officer to maintain a general program that keeps the counties in line and keeps the voter -- the voter rolls accurate.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: And so that's why, you know, we don't include every county as a defendant.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: It's the counties who have, compared to the census data, these excessive voter registration rates.

THE COURT: So -- okay. So I understand that that's the census bureau data that you're pulling from. Like I noted, Nevada is -- isn't different in any stark way.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So when I look at this and look at the letter and I look for where you're drawing the data from for the comparative information. So you cite to the most up to date counted -- count of registered active voters available from the Nevada Secretary of State. What is that? And what is that source?

MR. WOODFIN: So the NVRA also requires states to publish voter registration data, right? So we're pulling that information directly from the Secretary of State --

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: -- as individual counties.

THE COURT: And what's the date of that information?

MR. WOODFIN: So we -- if -- for each -- for both the notice letter and the complaint, we pulled the most recent data available from the Secretary.

THE COURT: What does that mean, though, right? Is that most recent? Is that --

MR. WOODFIN: So I --

THE COURT: I like specificity.

MR. WOODFIN: Yes. Yes. So it's published monthly. I don't think it's -- there's an exact day of the month or day of the week that it's published, but -- and my friend on the other side can correct me if that's wrong. But it's monthly data, essentially, for these voter registration rates. And then, in turn, we're comparing that to the most recent census data available.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So for here, this is really critical that that five year census data estimate from the community -- from the American Community Survey, that's both the most recent and the most accurate data available, the one and two year estimates, which defendants put forward as saying that would be more recent. But that data is not available for these counties.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. You mentioned the American Community Survey?

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah. So this is the census data we rely on. These are the tables.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. WOODFIN: These are the census tables you were referencing in the letter.

THE COURT: All right. And so it's your position that the State would know, when you're writing "the most up to date count of registered voters -- active voters available from the State," that that would be what you're referring to? That's the comparison that you're doing?

MR. WOODFIN: That's correct. That's correct. Yes.

And -- and I would just add that that process, that method, has been held, even under ACRU, which the defense cited as -- as a case that indicates we need to provide enough information to diagnose the problem. There, this exact same method was used to show that Zavala County in Texas had 104 percent registration rate and that was enough to provide notice. In that case, the Court actually denied the motion to dismiss on that notice ground and held that that was sufficient notice.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And I would just like to address one last point on this notice letter since defense brought it up, the 5,000 registrants and then the other pieces of evidence that we include in the complaint that were not included in the notice letter. Those are still valid -- it's still valid evidence to support an inference of a violation in the complaint. Courts have not held that you need to exhaust the evidence that supports the violation in the notice letter. In fact, that would be -- I mean, that would create poor incentives.

THE COURT: Well, sure. And it would also create some disputes that probably wouldn't be able to be resolved. So I appreciate that.

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah.

THE COURT: My question is, when I'm looking at the sufficiency of the notice, is it enough to say, "Hey, we looked at this data and this is enough" when you're standing in front of me saying, well, you advised there was a systemic problem, and where is that in the letter itself?

MR. WOODFIN: So it is enough. A notice is just a notice of the violation. It's not a complaint. It's not evidence. It's not an expert report. We don't need to provide, you know, alternatives. It's simply notice of the violation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And throughout the -- I mean, throughout the letter, all of what we're bringing up as evidence is evidence that the Secretary and the defendants are failing to conduct reasonable efforts, that whatever they've been doing so far has not amounted to reasonable efforts.

And so looking for, you know, the best language in the letter that would -- that would signify this. But it would probably be the last letter -- excuse me -- the last sentence in the first paragraph. "This evidence shows that your office and officials in these counties are not conducting appropriate maintenance to ensure that the voter registration rule is accurate and current as required by law."

We're not -- you know, the -- for example, these 5,000 extra voters, we're not saying those 5,000 extra voters need to be removed immediately. What we're saying is that is evidence that the defendants are failing in their list maintenance obligations under the NVRA, failing to make a reasonable effort.

I can go on to maybe other portions of -- of Article III standing or the merits --

THE COURT: We're going to talk about Article III standing later as I have some additional questions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But what I think would be helpful is you talked about briefly earlier is that you weren't asking them to remove, for example, those inactive voters, that 5,000 number before the primary. You were just asking for compliance before the November election.

When you say you're looking for compliance before the general election in November of this year, what does that look like for you?

MR. WOODFIN: So we think that goes more to the remedy. And, again, notice is notice of the violation. It's not notice of the steps we think would amount to reasonable efforts. We just have to allege, point out notice in the violation, and then in the complaint, provide enough facts to indicate that whatever they're doing right now is unreasonable.

That said, there are plenty of things that the Secretary could do and that the defendants could do that would, you know, perhaps, amount to reasonable efforts. Removing those 5,000 voters who have been on the rolls for two years, you know, would be a start.

But it would be systemic changes. It would be evidence that the Secretary is holding the county defendants accountable to the requirements that are already in place under Nevada law. So that would be a dispute of fact as to whether they're actually enforcing whatever program they have in place right now. And that would turn on, you know, discovery, we think. What are -- what is the evidence that the Secretary is actually enforcing the law and holding those county defendants accountable?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And so, you know, the precise nature of what, you know, any sort of injunction or remedy would look, we think, would depend on what exactly are the shortcomings of the list maintenance program that's in place.

But for here, we just have to show that the list -- that the list maintenance program that's in place right now does not amount to reasonable efforts. So that would be our burden at this stage.

THE COURT: All right. Those are the questions that I have on statutory standing at this time.

I want to turn and talk about Article III standing.

And counsel, you can return to your table as I'm going to narrow the issue on this subject matter because I'm going to, first, discuss the individual plaintiff, that is, Scott Johnston, and whether or not he has standing.

I don't think any party disputes that the Constitution gives federal courts the power to adjudicate only genuine cases and controversies. That power includes the standing requirement. And a plaintiff can only have standing if they allege personal injury that's fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct, which is well-known as the injury in fact, and likely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In reviewing the complaint, I find that Johnston fails to meet this standard. His basis for alleging standing are far too generalized and speculative to confer standing. I'm going to address each in turn.

First, he claims that there's a loss of confidence in the electoral system. This claim is too general. A plaintiff raising a generally available grievance about a government claiming only harm to him and every other citizen's interest in proper application of the Constitution and laws and seeking relief that no more directly intangibly benefits him than does the public at large does not state an Article III case or controversy -- or does not present a case or controversy under Article III. And that's from the Lance v. Coffman case, a 2007 decision out of the Supreme Court.

Johnston, like other voters, has no greater stake in this lawsuit than any other citizen and, therefore, he can't establish a particularized injury.

I also find this claim to be too speculative. Courts have universally concluded that an alleged injury related to a lack of confidence in the voting system is too speculative to establish injury in fact and, therefore, to establish standing where there is no standing for that. And that's courts from Arizona to Pennsylvania to the Second Circuit have all reached similar conclusions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I find that his claim of dilution of votes fairs no better. First, it, too, is too generalized. Plaintiff's injury of vote dilution is impermissibly generalized and speculative. And that is from Trump for President versus Cegavske. That's a decision out of this district from 2020.

The Eleventh Circuit made a similar decision in the Wood v. Raffensperger case. And I apologize if I'm mispronouncing that incorrect. For my court reporter, that's R-A-F-F-E-N-S-P-E-R-G-E-R. That's an Eleventh Circuit case from 2020 where they found that vote dilution where no single voter is specifically disadvantaged if a vote is counted improperly is paradigmatic generalized grievance that cannot support standing.

It also is too speculative. Here, as pled, the complaint insinuates that voter fraud could happen. It might happen. Not that it will happen, it's certainly impending, or there's a substantial risk of that. And so that makes this speculative at best.

And so I do find it appropriate to dismiss Johnston from this action at this time because he lacks standing.

My question is whether or not I should grant leave to amend, and if he were to be given leave to amend, what additional allegations would he bring forward?

MR. WOODFIN: So one point, your Honor.

THE COURT: Sure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: I'm not sure if we could change your mind on dismissing him, but I'd just like to note we do point this out in our brief. For an Article III case or controversy, it turns on whether there's an injury in fact for each claim. And so even if you find that he doesn't lack standing, we think dismissal would be inappropriate unless you also find that the organizational plaintiffs lack standing. So as long as the organizational plaintiffs have standing, then dismissal, we think, would be inappropriate as to Mr. Johnston because there is still a live case or controversy.

THE COURT: I understand that was your argument. I'm not convinced. And I have a number of questions regarding organizational standing, so I have not made a decision on that.

MR. WOODFIN: Okay. Yes.

THE COURT: Nonetheless, I still would want to know what additional allegations you would bring forward regarding Johnston and his standing.

MR. WOODFIN: So I don't think there's anything we could bring -- we could add to his allegations regarding voter confidence.

The best case on this is Judicial Watch versus Griswold out of the District of Colorado explaining that under the NVRA in particular, voter confidence has a unique place because Congress has designated these otherwise intangible injuries that would have been insufficient outside of the NVRA, in Trump versus Cegavske, for example. And because Congress has designated those as now tangible injuries, we don't think there's anything to add to the voter confidence.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: I would say on risk of fraud, there's a similar chain of reasoning that -- you know, in TransUnion, the Supreme Court explained that Congress can tie a chain of inference that would normally be speculative and make it nonspeculative. And our argument would be under the NVRA, that's exactly what's happened. Congress has specifically tied violations of the NVRA to a degradation of election integrity. And of course, the Supreme Court has noted that voter fraud is not a real risk. It's not simply a speculative risk.

That said, you know, if we were to amend and add allegations, you know, maybe we could -- we could find some specific voter fraud cases that relate to registration. Maybe that would -- that would put them over the edge, but we think --

THE COURT: Right. And so I guess that kind of ties to another question that I was going to ask later, but I'll ask it now.

When I look at the notice and then your complaint, you seem to be alleging both registration and inactive voters and/or lack of not registering people or getting them off the rolls, right? So you're doing both.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: Yes.

THE COURT: Is that your theory of the case that it is both or are you picking one or the other?

MR. WOODFIN: Well, it's certainly both as far as they pertain to Mr. Johnston and individual voters.

It's especially true because Nevada mails out ballots to all active voters. And so if they're -- if they're not moving voters off the active list to the inactive list, even if those voters shouldn't be removed from the rolls, that certainly undermines confidence in elections. It undermines Mr. Johnston's confidence.

THE COURT: All right. I'm going to take that under advisement. I'm not sure exactly what I'm going to do with that. So let me think about that.

MR. WOODFIN: Okay.

THE COURT: Let me turn to defendant. Anything you would like to add regarding whether he should be dismissed with or without prejudice?

MS. ST. JULES: Thank you, your Honor.

I think, as you noted, I don't know that the distinction between receiving a mail ballot versus not receiving a mail ballot is enough to push him over the edge. There are still safeguards that prevent somebody from fraudulently voting and he would be subject to criminal penalties. But I think the Ninth Circuit case law on speculativeness is pretty conclusive that undermined confidence isn't enough, that risk of vote dilution that is alleged as may occur is not enough.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And I would also note with respect to the allegations that Congress has made, you know, vote dilution concrete, I think this is Spokeo, in essence. And in Spokeo, they talked about concreteness which is separate from speculativeness. It's a separate component. You can't just allege a bare procedural violation. You still need some degree of risk that vote dilution based on inaccurate vote rolls will occur. And they -- they haven't alleged any risk that ties inaccurate voter rolls to vote dilution.

THE COURT: Okay. All right. Okay. I'm going to move on -- thank you -- to the next line of questioning, or, rather, subject matter I want to address and that is the organizational standing. It was like you knew where I was going.

Like an organization -- rather, like an individual, an organization can bring suit on its own behalf if it meets the standing requirements. And standing must be established independent of a lawsuit filed by a plaintiff.

There's a lot of case law on organizational standing, and, of course, I'll say it was, perhaps, sharpened last week by the FDA decision. It's been long established that organizations cannot manufacture an injury by incurring litigation costs. And Kavanaugh, in writing for the Supreme Court last week, wrote that a plaintiff attempting to show causation generally cannot rely on speculation about unfettered traces made by independent actors not before the Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There's a lot of case law talking about the needle that needs to be thread in order for an organization to have standing, and that, of course, is all tied to causation. There has to be causation between the alleged illegal conduct and the injury. And just like individual standing, it cannot be too speculative or too attenuated.

Causation also requires, as stated last week -- I think it was quoting the Allen decision -- virtually continuing monitors of the wisdom and soundness of a government action.

And in sum, the FDA, as I said, sharpened what is required for a plaintiff to show organizational standing.

Here, plaintiff alleges a couple of different things.

In paragraph 22 and 23, you talk about expending funds to bring this action. How is that not in direct violation of Ninth Circuit precedent that you can't manufacture an injury by incurring litigation costs?

MR. WOODFIN: Thank you, your Honor.

I think I'll start with Alliance. I'll tell you where I'm going first, perhaps. I'm going to look at paragraphs 12 and 14 of the complaint --

THE COURT: Okay.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: -- rather than 22 and 23. But I'll --

THE COURT: I still want you to address 22 and 23.

MR. WOODFIN: I will also address those, yes.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. WOODFIN: But I'll start with the allegations that I think give us standing --

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: -- and then explain why 22 and 23 don't defeat that standing. So --

THE COURT: Okay. Well, I know you're going to talk about the -- the funds that you will have to expend. I'm going to come to that.

MR. WOODFIN: Okay.

THE COURT: So focus on 22 and 23 for me.

MR. WOODFIN: Okay. So -- so those are not necessary -- those are not litigation costs. Those were investigation costs to solve the problem of -- of these unclean voter rolls. It costs money to investigate these problems and to work with, you know, the defendants to solve these problems. Those are not litigation costs.

There is -- I believe it was the -- I'll find the case, but that -- a case that discussed these -- this is, essentially, not an issue at the motion to dismiss stage, that, perhaps, later on the Secretary can present evidence that all of those investigation costs were actually litigation costs, but they're not litigation costs. We don't say they're litigation costs in the complaint. These are costs to investigate the problem and to prevent the problem from harming the RNC and the Nevada Republican Party's mission.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And so that takes us back to paragraphs 12 and 14, which is the -- the allegations in the complaint that lay out the missions of those organizations. And so the mission is to elect Republican candidates and to turn out Republican voters. In doing that, in paragraph 14, they rely on accurate voter registration lists. And when lists are inaccurate, that results in these organizations not only misallocating resources but it harms their campaign efforts. They're now trying to turn out voters who are ineligible. And so they're wasting their time, they're wasting their resources, and are less effective at accomplishing their mission of turning out Republican voters and electing Republican candidates because they rely on what are inaccurate voter registration lists.

And in that respect, it's no different than the harm that was in Havens. There, in Havens, the organization was -- is nonprofit housing advocacy group. They requested information from a third party. That third party realtor turned over false or inaccurate information to them. That harmed their mission.

THE COURT: I don't think it was inaccurate. It was --

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: It was false.

THE COURT: It was false, yeah.

MR. WOODFIN: It violated the Fair Housing Act for that reason. And -- and so that harmed the mission of that organization to, you know, provide housing resources to their constituents and, in turn, they expended resources to address that problem.

That's exactly what's going on here. The -- the RNC and the NVGOP have a mission that is independent of pursuing, you know, clean voter rolls. Their mission is to elect Republican candidates and to turn out Republican voters. That mission is tangibly harmed -- as paragraphs 12 and 14 say, it's tangibly harmed because they rely on these voter registration lists and the inaccurate lists result in them not being able to accomplish their mission as effectively as they would and, in turn, they divert resources to investigate, to solve this problem from other mission critical areas.

And in that respect, it's -- we don't read Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine as changing any of this.

THE COURT: That's why I called it sharpened, right?

MR. WOODFIN: I think that's about right. We don't -- it -- it applied to Havens. It didn't abrogate Havens. And so in that respect, the standards are the same.

And really, this is how the Ninth Circuit has applied Havens for years. It's this two-prong test, independent mission impairment plus diversion of resources.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: So understanding that you talk about the mission and, you know, that is -- I think aligns with Havens and the conversation about core mission activities.

However, if I'm looking specifically at paragraph 14, the way it's pled is that the RNC may spend more resources on mailers, knocking on doors, or otherwise trying to contact voters or it may misallocate its scarce resources amongst different jurisdictions. And that kind of, "may," "might," "should" is pervasive. How does that give you standing --

MR. WOODFIN: So the --

THE COURT: -- as you stand here today? Go ahead.

MR. WOODFIN: So the "may" is -- it's conditional language. It's not speculative language, if that makes sense. So it's conditional on us obtaining relief. If we obtain relief, then we won't have to -- we will no longer have to spend these resources.

THE COURT: But have you spent those resources?

MR. WOODFIN: Yes. So --

THE COURT: But where is that in the complaint?

MR. WOODFIN: Well, first, it's in paragraphs 22 and 23. We're having to investigate. And second, it would be -- I think paragraphs 92 or 93 claim that the defendants' ongoing violations are continuing to cause injury.

And so, you know, if -- if amending the change "may"

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to "will" is necessary, we can certainly do that.

But here, we think fairly reading those allegations, the organizations are spending money. They're actively campaigning right now in the midst of an election through primaries and up coming to the general election. They are determining their plans and budgets. That's an ongoing effort. They are determining their strategy and their plans both in Nevada and outside.

THE COURT: Well, that leads me to another question and that is: Knowing that, it's not like it was any mystery that the 2024 election was coming, why was this action brought in March of this year as opposed to earlier?

MR. WOODFIN: So it -- you know, maybe there's evidence out there that would have supported a notice letter earlier. The Ninth Circuit rejected, you know, that proposition that that would, like, defeat a notice letter or defeat a complaint. The fact that, there, even the -- the plaintiffs discovered the violation in December and then waited until May to even send the notice letter.

THE COURT: Right.

MR. WOODFIN: Here, you know, that's not what happened. You know, we've put in the research and discovered the violation and sent the notice letter as soon as possible. And now, the complaint was filed, you know, just waiting after that 90 days.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Right. And then after it was filed, this wasn't -- you didn't seek expedited emergency relief. And so I'm wondering why.

MR. WOODFIN: So -- well, two reasons. First, the fact that we don't, you know, pursue expedited relief doesn't defeat, you know, whether this complaint states a claim or not.

But besides that point, again, what we're returning to --

THE COURT: But I want to be clear, I'm not addressing these on the merits. I'm inquiring just because I think it could potentially be related to standing. Though, I'm not ready to ask additional questions on that yet because it's still processing in my mind.

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah.

THE COURT: But why?

MR. WOODFIN: So it's because our fundamental claim is a systemic violation.

So, again -- and this is kind of a common theme throughout the briefs, throughout the arguments, that we're not demanding -- and the way to comply with the NVRA is not a sudden removal of ineligible voters all at once. The way to comply is to run -- set up and -- and adequately run a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove ineligible voters. And so the systemic violation, really, couldn't be cured, you know, through a -- a preliminary injunction motion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And, you know, to that point, we think a lot of this does turn on discovery. What exactly are the failures of the defendants? Here, the complaint and the notice letter provide enough notice of the violation and enough evidence to infer that the -- the current efforts are unreasonable. But, you know, the precise details as to what would be a reasonable program, we think, requires more development and discovery and -- and -- and then -- and then in crafting a remedy.

So that would be why we didn't move forward for expedited relief.

THE COURT: So is it the RNC's position that you're not seeking relief or remedy before the November election?

MR. WOODFIN: I mean, we're not -- we haven't pressed the Court for that, obviously.

THE COURT: Right.

MR. WOODFIN: We think -- normally, the -- you know, in a lot of these cases, as soon as it gets to discovery, you know, the parties tend to work something out and -- and negotiate a settlement. That's what happened in Daunt. And Green right now, I think, is the only -- only case on voter list maintenance that's currently in discovery.

But that said, you know, we could have -- we don't expect this to go -- how should I say this? The -- we're not trying to speed up the case for the sake of obtaining discovery before the November election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: But of course, you know, the point of sending the letter was to encourage list maintenance practices before that election.

So -- and, you know, these -- because these are systemic violations, they don't turn on one election or another. These -- the reasonable efforts have to continue before an election and after an election. So we think if there's a violation, it -- whether it surrounds an election or -- or not is really irrelevant.

THE COURT: All right. Let me go back to the costs, the litigation costs which you are arguing that it's investigative costs and so that's separate and apart from litigation costs. When I dive a little deeper into the FDA case, it says directly that you can't manufacture standing based on incurring costs to oppose government actions.

So even if it's investigative, how is that not at odds with the FDA decision?

MR. WOODFIN: So -- so a couple things.

First, we have multiple different diversions of resources. The investigation is certainly one part of that. But -- but many other parts -- I mean, in order to address the harm to the mission of turning out voters and electing Republican candidates that are caused by the inaccurate voter rolls in paragraphs 12 and 14, the RNC has had to divert resources to counteract this.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And so regardless of whether --

THE COURT: That's not in the complaint.

MR. WOODFIN: That's -- it's in paragraphs 12 and 14. 12 lays out the mission and then 14 lays out exactly how the mission is harmed.

THE COURT: That -- that paragraph says, "The RNC relies on voter registration lists to determine its plan and budgets. It relies on registration lists to estimate voter turnout which informs the number of staff the RNC needs in a given jurisdiction, the number of volunteers needed to contact the voters, and how much the RNC will spend on paid voter contacts.

"If voter registration lists include names of voters who no longer -- should no longer be on the list, the RNC may spend more resources on mailers, knocking on doors, or otherwise trying to contact voters or it may misallocate its scarce resources amongst different jurisdictions."

So that actually isn't set forth in the complaint. That's a "may."

MR. WOODFIN: Well -- so, again, I fall back to my argument on "may." That's not -- it's conditional language. It's not speculative language. But even if you -- if you don't think that -- and you know, we could amend a change, "may" to "will."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: I don't disagree with you on that. That's why I'm asking these questions.

MR. WOODFIN: That would be why.

THE COURT: So as you stand here today, it's your position that the RNC has expended resources?

MR. WOODFIN: Yes. Oh, yes. Certainly.

THE COURT: Okay. And can you give me some specific examples?

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah. Well, it would be -- it's -- I can't give you more specific examples than what's alleged in the complaint. Of course, you know, later on, if we're moving for summary judgment, we can provide declarations about how exactly --

THE COURT: Yeah, that would be a different standard. Yeah.

MR. WOODFIN: -- how exactly they rely on the voter registration lists to determine their plans and budgets. You know, is it proportional to the population of active voters who are on lists or -- and you know, in determining, you know, how much money to put into Nevada for upcoming elections and campaigns, how much to allocate over various jurisdictions, and, you know, who to send to campaign, turning out voters and volunteers and -- based on how many voters are listed as active. All that would go into the campaign and the campaign strategy for -- for determining its plans to achieve its mission. And all of that is -- is harmed by inaccurate voter lists.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: All right. Thank you very much.

I want to hear from defendants on organizational standing. I've asked a number of questions regarding FDA and how the facts of this case square with that decision. And I want to hear what your position is.

MS. ST. JULES: Certainly, your Honor.

We think the FDA case precludes organizational standing here. As the Court noted, they're alleging, essentially, speculative harms. I understand my partner on the other side of the aisle is saying that the harm is their inability to reach out to voters, but that's not one of their core missions. It's certainly not alleged as a core mission to contact their voters. It's to elect Republican candidates. It's not --

THE COURT: Wouldn't that be part and parcel of the same thing?

MS. ST. JULES: I don't think so. I think we have, in Havens, the case that the FDA examined -- the FDA case examined, the core mission was to inform home-seekers about housing opportunities. And so what information they gathered from Havens they were passing directly on. It was -- it was a much more direct line.

Here, we're talking about an incidental use of voter registration rules. The purpose of the NVRA is so that the states can efficiently run elections. It's not to provide major political parties with contact information for voters. It's an incidental use.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And you know, I -- I come back to the harm that they're talking about is really just this risk of vote dilution, that their candidates aren't going to get elected. And your Honor has already said that that is speculative.

I'd also point out with respect to the litigation costs argument, the Ninth Circuit has said that if you have costs that are business as usual, then that doesn't count as a diversion of resources. This is Friends of the Earth versus Sanderson Farms, Inc., 992 F.3d 939, Ninth Circuit, 2021.

And in their complaint, the plaintiffs allege that the RNC does monitors state and local election officials' compliance with their NVRA list maintenance obligations through publicly available records and jurisdictions across the nation. This is part and parcel of their business as usual to conduct these investigations. There is no diversion of resources.

I suppose there's, at some point, some diversion of resources once you start talking with the State as required under the NVRA to have a pre-litigation notice letter go out. And -- but then that becomes litigation costs. It's all part of a spectrum. It's either business as usual or it becomes litigation costs. There isn't a distinction to be made there.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

They're both not cognizable.

THE COURT: All right. So if you were to sum up your position regarding how the RNC organizational standing is precluded by the FDA decision, what would you say?

MS. ST. JULES: Well, I think your Honor pointed out, they only allege that this may harm them. They don't allege that it will. I understand they can possibly amend it and we'll raise arguments at that point if needed.

But I would also point out that the allegation is that they're talking about expending resources based on voter roll information from across the U.S. It's not specific to Nevada. They talk about different jurisdictions, and whatever other states are doing, it's not relevant to our state. And it's certainly not traceable to the Secretary of State.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you very much.

MS. ST. JULES: Thank you.

THE COURT: I would like counsel for plaintiffs to address the last argument in that what the RNC is doing across the country isn't tied to Nevada, much less directed or tied to the Secretary of State here.

MR. WOODFIN: So as far as organizational standing goes, you know, the RNC, obviously, is a national organization.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: The Nevada Republican Party is a state organization. So the -- the NVGOP does have state specific interests.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And then as far as the RNC goes, if 1/50th part of the mission is harmed from the RNC's standpoint from one state not having -- not complying with the NVRA, that's still a harm.

THE COURT: Sure. But that would still have to be tied to Nevada, correct?

MR. WOODFIN: And it is, because they rely on Nevada's voter rules --

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. WOODFIN: -- in the same way -- and would just add to respond to argument on that point --

THE COURT: Yeah.

MR. WOODFIN: -- that's still a direct -- it's the same informational communication that was in Havens and in TransUnion and these other cases that it's -- the NVRA doesn't just require states to accurately maintain their voter rolls. It's also requires them to make them public. And there's also a public records request in there. It requires them to publicize them. There's a reason for that.

The reason is that political parties and organizations, one, rely on these to determine their plans and budgets and run their campaigns, and two, to hold the states accountable. That's the very purpose of publishing this information. And that's why Congress created a cause of action both for individual plaintiffs and for organizations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Actually, I want to go back.

As I've sat here and thought more about some of your arguments regarding Johnston, is it your -- I want to make sure I didn't miss this argument.

Is it your position that as a member of the RNC, he would have standing?

MR. WOODFIN: So I think it kind of works the other way --

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: -- in that to the extent he has standing and voters in general have standing, the RNC also has associational standing on behalf of those voters.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah.

THE COURT: I wanted to make sure I was understanding the line you were drawing and I wasn't drawing it backwards. That's why I asked that question.

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

All right. I want to turn now and talk about redressability. And I've asked a couple of questions and it's come up a few times throughout this hearing this afternoon.

You seek five forms of relief in the complaint: Declaratory judgment that the defendants are in violation of Section 8, a permanent injunction barring violations of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Section 8 of the NVRA, an order instructing defendants to develop and implement reasonable and effective registration list maintenance programs to cure their failure to comply with Section 8 and to ensure that ineligible registrants are not on the voter rolls, reasonable costs and expenses including attorneys fees, and then any other relief that you could be entitled to.

I'm going to ask this question again. And I asked it earlier and you gave me an answer, but I'm still lacking some clarity. What is it you're seeking?

MR. WOODFIN: So that paragraph C is, essentially, what we're seeking.

And the precise nature of the remedy, the injunction, you know, to maintain and make a reasonable effort to conduct a general program that removes ineligible voters, the nature of that injunction is going to depend in large part of the precise nature of the violations. How -- you know, what -- what are the -- what are their precise failings within the system, what controls do they lack, what controls are not being implemented.

THE COURT: Well, those are good questions. And then that kind of ties me to this in that aren't those questions, the injuries that need to be alleged in the complaint?

MR. WOODFIN: So, no, because the only injury is the failure to conduct a reasonable program.

So there's -- there's a thousand ways to conduct a reasonable program. We're not saying our injunction requires, you know, a single -- a single one of those right now. Once we get to that point, you know, then we can -- we can craft what -- what we think would be a reasonable program based on those violations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

But right now, the -- the pleadings standard is -- is simply have -- have the defendants violated the NVRA. Really, have we provided sufficient allegations to infer that they violated the NVRA.

So the violation is the failure to conduct a reasonable list maintenance program. So although there might be a thousand ways to conduct a reasonable maintenance list program, it's not our burden to allege the violation that we have to provide a single reasonable way.

THE COURT: Well, you do have to allege an actual injury.

MR. WOODFIN: And the injury is the -- well, the violation is the failure to conduct reasonable list maintenance. The injury is, as far as the organizations go, injury to their mission because they rely on the voter rolls.

THE COURT: Well, I'm confident you know this, but throughout every stage of litigation, an individual -- or an individual -- in this case, it would be an organization -- must have suffered or be threatened with an actual injury traceable to the defendant that is likely to be redressed by favorable judicial decision.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

What you have said and what you have argued this afternoon is a systemic violation -- I think the word was a fundamental claim is a systemic violation. So that would require the development, and as set forth in your requested relief, implementation of a maintenance program to cure that systemic violation.

But at the time that you brought this action, the State could not have developed or implemented a program that would give you the relief that you've sought here today because they can't do anything with the voter rolls for those 90 day chunks of time that have been talked about here today. So it appears to me we have a redressability issue.

MR. WOODFIN: So, no. So I'll start with the remedy and how -- how it would -- how a remedy would redress the injury.

Because these organizations rely on voter -- on voter rolls to determine their plans and budgets and to determine their campaign strategy, all of that, to the extent that is harmed, and as we allege it is in the complaint, it is remedied by the -- the defendants then conducting a reasonable program in compliance with the NVRA.

In short, accurate rolls don't injure the plaintiffs. Inaccurate rolls injure the plaintiffs. And so if the rolls become accurate through the implementation of a reasonable program, then that either reduces or eliminates the injury to these organizations' mission.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: All right. So let's pause right there. "Accurate rolls don't injure the plaintiffs. Inaccurate rolls do."

The inaccurate rolls, as allege, existed in December of 2023 when you sent the notice letter. The State couldn't do anything to change the rolls at that time. As alleged, the inaccurate rolls existed at the time you brought this action and the State couldn't do anything to touch the rolls at that time. And we're now on the clock before the next 90 day period clicks in, right, because the primary just concluded last week.

And so you're asking for the rolls -- you're saying you're okay with the rolls not being changed before the November election, but then you're also saying that's what the injury is. And if there's nothing the Court can do to change the injury you have alleged, I ask the question again: Don't we have a redressability issue?

MR. WOODFIN: So I think the difficulty here is we can all -- we can't -- we can't ask for more than the NVRA requires. The NVRA requires the defendants to conduct a reasonable program. It does not require them to immediately remove ineligible voters when we ask them to. So we couldn't have obtained that kind of relief before the February election or now which is why we haven't demanded the immediate removal of ineligible voters from the rolls. That's not what the NVRA requires.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Instead, what the NVRA requires is that the Secretary conduct a reasonable program to remove ineligible voters. So that's the most we can request under the NVRA because the NVRA doesn't require anything more. So that's the violation is the failure to conduct a reasonable program --

THE COURT: All right.

MR. WOODFIN: -- and the only remedy we can obtain is --

THE COURT: Implementation of one?

MR. WOODFIN: Is implementation of a reasonable program.

THE COURT: All right. So let's say I agree with you, right? For argument's sake, I agree with you and I say you have to implement a reasonable program. At every stage of the litigation, there has to be redressability, and even if I order them to implement a reasonable program, that program couldn't have been implemented at the time you gave the notice or at the time this action was brought because the State couldn't do anything with the program, right, because they're prevented from doing anything based on the plain language of the statute.

So I'm going to ask -- I feel -- I apologize, but do we not have a redressability issue?

MR. WOODFIN: Again, still, that goes to the timing of relief, not to whether it is redressable.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And so here, again, because we're alleging a systemic violation -- and, you know, the Ninth Circuit has discussed the difference between a discrete and a systemic violation. Vincent, all of these cases discuss that difference. And because the violation we're alleging is systemic, it's not that the -- the Secretary and -- and the defendants had to gear up and run a reasonable program immediately before the next election. The NVRA doesn't require that. It doesn't require them to immediately conduct a program before a February primary or before the next general --

THE COURT: Right. Because there's all the other deadlines that come in, right?

MR. WOODFIN: Absolutely.

THE COURT: The two years and the mail and the notice. I mean, we can all agree on that.

So then my question is: If you are -- you seem to accept that there is really nothing that can be done between now and November and there's no urgency in resolving the issue or the injury you have identified, why shouldn't this action be dismissed to be brought after the November election so the program, if that is the remedy that is required, be designed, created, implemented, etc., when there's no 90 day period that prevents that from happening?

MR. WOODFIN: So I think the timing of that would come down to when the remedy is ordered, not whether to dismiss a complaint at the outset.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So it could be that after we get through discovery and motions practice and, perhaps, a bench trial, that the timing of that remedy and now you order the defendants to implement a reasonable program and this is what it looks like, it could be that when that order comes, at the time the Court is poised to issue a remedy, that that is, perhaps, too close to the election -- to the next election, whenever that is.

THE COURT: Well, you're well-versed in federal practice. You know that there's not going to be a conclusion to this if I were to let it go forward and we were going to -- you know, we get to discovery. You know as well as I do that that would be a long time down the road.

Is it the RNC's position that they're okay with not resolving this issue? It seems like the answer is "yes," because at the time -- based on the timing in which this action was brought and the lack of urgency in resolving the allegations set forth in the complaint, the RNC knows and accepts that it's highly likely they'll be no answer or conclusion to this action before the November election. Is that correct?

MR. WOODFIN: A couple points.

So yes, we understand that these cases can take a long time especially in discovery. Green versus Bell is in discovery right now. It's a lot of documents. It's a lot of data that -- and it's a lot of depositions that go into these cases. So we understood, of course, when we filed the lawsuit that a lot of this, especially in discovery, could take some time and, perhaps, run past a November election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Our -- our request for relief is -- again, does not depend on that election.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: So we would be fine --

THE COURT: And I would agree with you on that.

MR. WOODFIN: So we would be fine to continue litigating this case after election. That's not a problem. And of course, there are other avenues to resolve a lawsuit other than reaching an ultimate judgment. And so, perhaps, there would be a way to resolve this before the November election regardless.

But for our position, we're -- yes, we're prepared to litigate this case through the November election and after.

THE COURT: Thank you. I want to hear from defendants regarding my redressability question.

MS. ST. JULES: Thank you, your Honor.

I think the redressability question can also be framed as a prudential ripeness issue. And, of course, there's two parts to ripeness. There's constitutional ripeness and prudential ripeness. And prudential ripeness asks is it prudent for a court to entertain this action at this time.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There's two -- we didn't brief this and we can provide briefing if that would be helpful to the Court, but at a high level, there's two factors that courts analyze to determine whether a case is prudentially ripe. First, there's the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and, second, the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration. And I would submit that neither prong is met mere.

With respect to the fitness of the issues for judicial decision, Nevada has been unable to remove active voters since November 8, 2023. The complaint uses numbers that are four years -- four months into that where, you know, new voters are being added to the lists and ineligible voters who have moved and would be subject to removal based on the general program are not being removed from the list. And it results in inflated numbers. We set this out in our response to the plaintiff's pre-litigation notice letter.

Right now, Nevada is in the process of sending out a round of confirmation notices. It's on a blazingly fast timeline, but this is important to the Secretary of State so we're making it happen. And all 17 counties are going to send out the notices. Voters will be inactivated before the November 24th general election. The Secretary of State is coordinating with the counties to identify inactive voters who need to be cancelled. And delaying adjudication would better define the issues because we would have more up to date numbers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There's also no hardship to the plaintiffs. As they, more or less, conceded, there's not going to be really relief before the November general election if this election -- if this case proceeds.

THE COURT: All right. And so it's your -- to sum up your position, it would be that, essentially, there's a ripeness issue?

MS. ST. JULES: A prudential ripeness issue, that's correct.

THE COURT: Well, what about their argument that the specific relief that they're seeking is the design, implementation of the program? Putting aside the ability to do anything before the November election, how does that change your argument?

MS. ST. JULES: I don't think it does because I think the factual issues still need to be better defined. They're using numbers that just aren't reflective of reality because they're fixed in place.

THE COURT: I know, but that kind of goes to a merits question, right? Here at the motion to dismiss phase --

MS. ST. JULES: Well, it does and it doesn't because right now we're at the motion to dismiss phase and we're going based on what the allegations are in the complaint and we're tied to them. And if we're alleging that there's a failure to state a claim, we need to go based on what's in the complaint. And what's in the complaint is bloated numbers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Right. But that would still be a factual determination, right? Because I'm supposed to accept the allegations -- assuming them, you know, as true as plausible.

MS. ST. JULES: Right. But the Court would have better up to date information so the factual issues would be better defined if we waited until the numbers were reduced through the general program, which they haven't been able to be reduced since November.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you. I don't have anymore questions on that in that regard.

We've been here for a little -- just shy of an hour and a half. I'm going to give my staff a break and the parties, as well. We're going to be in a 15 minute recess. And I may or may not have some additional questions for the parties. So we'll be in recess until about 3:45.

(Recess taken from 3:33 p.m. to 3:48 p.m.)

THE COURT: We are back on the record continuing argument on defendant's motion to dismiss docketed at ECF Number 26.

I did want to revisit a couple of issues. And I want to talk about the Havens case which is, obviously, discussed or refined in the FDA case.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Counsel, you mentioned that the money you've spent furthering the RNC's mission, it relates to voters, etc. That case, however, makes it clear that to have organizational standing, it must impact or affect your core business activities. So that's different than mission. And that was discussed to some degree in the FDA decision, right? So there's the mission and there's the core business activities.

Tell me how your core business activities have been impacted.

And I'll give you the part that I'm focused on. Home, which was the decision, as you know, was not only an issue advocacy organization but also operated a housing counseling service. When Havens gave Home's employees false information about apartment availability, Home sued Havens, rather -- or is it Havens? -- whichever it is, because perceptively impaired Home's ability to provide counseling and referral services for low and moderate income home-seekers.

In other words, Havens' actions directly affected and interfered with Home's core business activities, which is not dissimilar to a retailer who sues a manufacturer for defective goods to a retailer.

MR. WOODFIN: Yes. So we read that difference between core business activities and mission, it's not -- it's not like a difference between, like, private and nonprofit or anything like that. Really, what the Court is getting at is a difference between activities that are essential to the core operations of the organization, whether it's a nonprofit or a business, and then what would be -- like, an insufficient mission would be an organization that is set up solely for the purpose of pursuing that activity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So in Havens, it would be an organization that is set up solely for the purpose of requesting information from realtors and then suing them to hold them accountable for Fair Housing Act violations. That would not be the kind of mission that is -- that would -- that would support organizational standing.

Or in this context, it would be, perhaps, an organization that is set up solely for the purpose of investigating and holding states accountable for NVRA violations. That would be an organization -- there's, like, a one to one match between the core business activities and the mission, in other words, where the violation is simply an impairment of the mission.

Here, as an Havens, the core business activities or the mission, as you want to call it, of the Republican party is to elect Republican candidates. The fact -- and to turn out Republican voters. The fact that it's a nonprofit doesn't mean that's not -- that's not a business activity.

THE COURT: Sure. And I don't disagree with that.

MR. WOODFIN: But that's the purpose of the organization.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: But the RNC's mission, as you stated, is to elect Republican candidates and turn out Republican voters. That is different and separate and apart from ensuring accurate voter rolls as alleged are relevant here for a Section 8 violation.

MR. WOODFIN: So it's -- the mission, as you noted, as our complaint says, is turning out Republican candidates, electing -- or sorry -- turning out voters, electing candidates. Those are the missions. Investigating and maintaining accurate list maintenance, relying on accurate voter rolls is conducive to achieving that mission.

If -- if the RNC and the NVGOP are relying on voter rolls that are inaccurate that violate the NVRA, that harms their business activities or their mission to elect Republican candidates. That harm is independent of whether they choose to investigate or spend money on the voter roll maintenance activities.

And so -- and so this is what's critical about resource diversion cases is that the organization must divert resources to solve the problem of that mission injury or -- or the injury to the -- to the core business activities.

Here, the injury to the core business activities derives from the NVRA violation and the organizations spend money, they divert resources from other mission critical activities to solve that problem.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: All right. So a few times -- I understand how easy it is, because I think I did it myself earlier in this hearing, to conflate core business and mission.

And so here, you're talking about diverting mission resources as opposed to core business activities. I want to give you the opportunity to explain to the Court how those are different in your mind.

MR. WOODFIN: So we think the -- it -- I think it comes -- becomes difficult in the nonprofit world. And Havens was a nonprofit as --

THE COURT: I think that case also talked about that it can be confusing when the --

MR. WOODFIN: Yeah. Yeah.

THE COURT: -- can cross. I understand that.

So is it your position that, essentially, it's the same here, that when you're talking about core business and you're talking about mission, in terms of what the RNC's role is, is the same?

MR. WOODFIN: I think that's correct. That would be -- that's our reading of it.

And really, I think what that sentence is getting at in both Havens and -- and Alliance, the distinction between mission and core business activities isn't really, like, how the organization chooses to frame its goals. Really, what it's getting at is an organization can't simply exist for the purpose of filing these lawsuits.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And that's not what is happening here. That's not what was happening in Havens. And so that's why it's a one to one is that they exist for a -- for a mission independent of pursuing these violations. That mission is harmed by these violations. And then they have to divert resources to solve that harm. We think that's -- that's, essentially, what -- what the Court is getting at with that distinction.

THE COURT: All right. I would like to hear from the defendants on where -- you can see where I'm focused.

MS. ST. JULES: Yes, your Honor.

So I think there's a degree of causation issue that's different here than it was in Havens. So in Havens, Home was -- its business activity was providing information directly to home-seekers. And so when Havens provided false information to Home, Home's ability to provide counseling services, which was its activities, was directly and perceptibly impaired. They were giving false information to those who they sought to counsel.

Here, it's not a core business activity, it's not the mission to counsel and provide advice to voters. That's incidental to their mission of getting people elected.

THE COURT: But is that really -- I mean, does it all rise and fall on giving advice?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MS. ST. JULES: Well, I think -- there, they're providing false information. Here, there is no provision of false information. Maybe they're going to reach out to some people who shouldn't be reached out to at that specific address. That's -- that's basically, what's happening. They're not providing false information out the way it was in Havens. And, you know, the Supreme Court was very cautious in saying that Havens was an unusual case.

Here, we lack the directness and the perceptible impairment of a business activity which isn't to provide voters with information. It's to get people elected. It is different. We lack that directness and that perceptible impact.

THE COURT: All right. All right. I don't have an additional question at this time.

I want to -- for you. I apologize.

I want to go back and talk about the redressability question. Both parties have answered questions and are now aware that that is where I have spent some time in trying to resolve this motion.

And so I'll start with plaintiffs. This is your complaint. And at the motion to dismiss phase, I think it's appropriate to give you every benefit of the doubt to, again, address the redressability question. I think it would be helpful to give, I'll call it, a brief closing argument as to why redressability isn't a barrier to you in regards to standing.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: So, again, on the point of redressability, I'm just going to turn back to the language of the statute. The NVRA requires the defendants to conduct a reasonable program. We allege and we think the complaint shows that they have failed to conduct a reasonable program. And we think that that is a systemic violation. And that's what the complaint and the letter says.

What that means is the solution is for -- the solution is -- is an order requiring the defendants to comply with the NVRA and to set up and conduct a program that is reasonable. Now, the details of that, we think, are appropriate to discuss later in the litigation. There's no case that requires us to plead the specifics of that remedy up front. But the fact is that that would remedy the injury here because it would -- over time, it would remove the ineligible voters that shouldn't be on the rolls from the rolls and it would ensure that the State is in compliance with the NVRA.

And so, as -- you know, as I said before that inaccurate lists cause the harm. To the extent those lists are more accurate, that will not cause a harm.

And it's -- it's a matter of degree certainly, but that doesn't mean it's not redressable. It's redressable because it would bring the State into compliance with the NVRA and that would obviate all of the harms to the -- to the mission critical activities from the plaintiffs.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And I would just end with, you know, Congress set up a cause of action in the NVRA for the purpose of addressing these violations. The Supreme Court has said in Spokeo and in TransUnion and elsewhere that courts owe respect to Congress's decision to set up a cause of action and to designate those injuries.

If this isn't an injury, then, really, no organization, no individual plaintiff has standing to challenge these reasonable efforts. It has to be the case that conducting -- failing to conduct reasonable efforts does impose an injury and the -- the -- a court order requiring a defendant to conduct reasonable efforts would -- would redress that injury. That's the injury that Congress has identified. And that's all we need to allege here in the complaint.

THE COURT: I don't disagree with you that the cause of action exists for a reason and it's, you know, to address these injuries when needed.

I go back to the requirement -- the longstanding requirement that at every stage of the litigation, an injury must be able to be redressed.

MR. WOODFIN: Is the hang-up there that the Court maybe couldn't order a remedy immediately before the election? Is that -- is that the difficulty?

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: No. The timing of the election at this point -- you've made it perfectly clear. So I appreciate that, right?

MR. WOODFIN: Okay.

THE COURT: The election ultimately isn't the focus -- if I understand correctly, and you can correct me if I'm wrong -- isn't the focus of this litigation. For the RNC, it is to correct the injury that you have suffered. And so you have said here, if it happens after, you understand that, you accept that. And I appreciate that clarity because that was a question I had.

So long story short, it's not before the election. It's that I couldn't give you the remedy you were seeking at the time that you brought this action because I couldn't order the State to implement -- develop and implement a program at the time because that would be in direct contravention of the law that says they can't do anything to the rolls within that 90 day period. And that is where I am, candidly, laser focused. And it's my concern.

MR. WOODFIN: So I think that goes more to the notice letter, perhaps.

When we filed the complaint, it was after the February primary. So no issue there. So I think that really just goes to the --

THE COURT: Right. But this action was brought within the next 90 day period before the primary.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MR. WOODFIN: For the June. Okay.

THE COURT: Right.

MR. WOODFIN: So I -- so I --

THE COURT: I think it was, like, five days so --

MR. WOODFIN: Right. So -- I -- again, I return to the -- to the remedy doesn't need to be you must conduct a program now. The remedy is, number one, a declaration that the defendants have violated the program -- the NVRA, and, number two, an order directing them to conduct reasonable list maintenance.

It doesn't need to be the case that that injunction issues and requires the defendants to implement that program immediately before the next election. That's -- that's not the remedy we request in the complaint. That's not the remedy we requested in the letter.

And so really, there's no -- there's no redressability issue because the injunction would come whenever it comes whether it's before election, during an election, after an election. It -- that -- the issue of timing would not affect the redressability. Does that clarify?

THE COURT: I understand your argument. I'm not sure if it clarifies.

MR. WOODFIN: The alternative would be no one can bring an NVRA complaint during an election year to allege systemic violations as we do. They -- you would have to wait until an off year when, perhaps, the voter rolls are -- are cleaner or less accurate. Who knows? But that's, essentially, what the holding would be is that there's a -- it's not a 90 day blackout period. It's -- it's a full blackout period before any election during an election year, essentially, because -- I mean, it -- because the --

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Yeah, I understand. That hits home with me more, right? Because that's where I've honestly gone back and forth. That makes sense, right? That seems to be contrary to the -- the very law itself.

But as you know as well as I do that timing is everything in federal court. So that's where my concern lies.

MR. WOODFIN: So I'd also just return to the case law. La Raza was brought 30 days before an election. That was a systemic violation. The Court did not note that there were any redressability problems.

THE COURT: But there was no issue with Section 7 where the Court was prohibited from granting the relief being sought at the time.

MR. WOODFIN: So the same is true in Green versus Bell. Let's see. That wasn't -- let me think. Daunt versus Vincent was pretty soon before a election. Bellitto versus Snipes, I don't know exactly when the election was for that, but --

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: I think that was brought after the election. I could be wrong, though.

MR. WOODFIN: That could be.

THE COURT: Yeah, I think it was November -- later -- unless I'm thinking of a different case. I think that was later in November.

Yeah, that's where I'm hung up, full disclosure --

MR. WOODFIN: Okay.

THE COURT: -- the timing issue.

MR. WOODFIN: So I -- again, I would just return back to the fact that we allege a systemic violation. So it's really not a Section 7, Section 8 distinction that matters here because we're not demanding immediate relief. We're not demanding an immediate conduct of a program. We're demanding systemic reforms to the defendants that would result in a program that complies with the NVRA. So we think that's the relevant distinction here.

And that distinction, again, was drawn in La Raza. It was drawn in -- in Bellitto, in Action NC. The Fifth Circuit drew the same distinction in Scott versus Schedler. The difference is discrete versus systemic, not Section 7 versus Section 8.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you very much.

I'd like to hear defendant's closing argument, if you will, on the redressability question.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

MS. ST. JULES: Yes, your Honor. Thank you.

Like I said before, I think this -- there is a timing issue. And I think prudential ripeness is the -- is the doctrine that's kind of designed to address this timing issue. And it's -- it affords the Court the ability to say that the relief you're asking for right now, it's not fit for judicial decision. You can't rule on it at this time.

So I do think there is a timing issue and I think waiting -- delaying adjudication, letting facts actually develop, those are concerns that the Court should focus on.

THE COURT: Well, what about his argument, which is well-founded, that if I'm focused on this 90 day I'll call it a dead zone, right, then that, essentially, means no one can bring a Section 8 violation during an election year. How do you address that argument?

MS. ST. JULES: I think that -- I'm struggling with that because it's just with the 90 day black out period, you have an inability -- you've tied the State's hands to be able to do -- to take any action.

And I would also note, you know, that the -- this -- if you're providing an opportunity to cure, if the NVRA is saying that the violation hasn't been cured within 120 days, you can bring an action within 90 days. Or maybe it's the other way around. If they're asking for relief that's far out, I -- I don't understand how that ties into the NVRA's correct the notice -- or correct the violation language. It seems in very sincere intention to me because they've, more or less, conceded that we couldn't cure the violation. So --

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: Is it sincere intention or is it, perhaps, a reflection of the NVRA's dual purpose of keeping elections -- getting people registered while also making sure that they are limiting --

MS. ST. JULES: Well I think --

THE COURT: -- other concerns?

MS. ST. JULES: I think it's implicit within the NVRA that a State could be afforded an opportunity to cure and where they're sending a pre-litigation notice letter and filing a complaint within the times you can't cure, you have a problem there. This isn't how the NVRA was set up. So I think that's the tension that I'm focusing on.

And I'd also say, just as far as my colleague's argument about, you know, who would have standing, the FDA case made very clear, it doesn't matter if nobody has standing. That's -- that's not a reason to find standing. So I would just highlight that, as well.

And additionally, the NVRA does authorize the Attorney General to bring an action. The Supreme Court said when it comes to vindicating the public interest, that's the function of Congress and the executive.

THE COURT: All right. All right. Thank you.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Bear with me. I'm going back over my notes and seeing if I have any additional questions.

All right. I don't think I have any additional questions at this time.

As I noted at the beginning, I planned on ruling on parts -- or at least a part of this motion on the record which I have already done in regards to Mr. Johnston's lack of standing.

I think, in the interest of justice, it would be best for me to rule on this -- this motion on the record here today. And so I'm going the place my findings and conclusions on the record. The transcript of this hearing will serve as a record of my ruling. While the minutes will summarize my decision, they'll be no written order reflecting my ruling. So bear with me; this is going to take a minute.

It is well-established that there are limitations on federal jurisdiction. And it is well-established that standing is essential, and I think as the Lujan Court put it, an unchanging part of the case in controversy requirement. And that is a high threshold that I know both parties understand and agree with.

I have already placed on the record my reasonings for why I found Mr. Johnston did not have standing. And I asked what additional allegations would be brought if I were to grant him leave to amend. And I wasn't given a lot of information.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

And I understand plaintiffs have facts that they are working with, but I don't see and I was not convinced that he would be able to present additional allegations that would establish standing. And so he is dismissed with prejudice.

I want to turn next to the notice requirement and the statutory standing. I am concerned about the lack of clarity or specificity in the letter that was sent to the State. But the case law really makes clear that that notice can be pretty general. And so when I look at that case law together with the Ninth Circuit's ruling in the La Raza case, I'm not convinced that plaintiff's notice was so deficient as to not establish statutory standing. And so the motion to dismiss based on that argument is denied.

I do think it is important to note that I respectfully disagree that there really isn't a difference whether it's a Section 7 or a Section 8 violation. I think there is an important distinction that was addressed both in the motion and during argument here today. And that is the fact that the State cannot act within the 90 day window of any primary or election regarding the voter rolls. There's, you know, limited exceptions to that, but none of those seem applicable here nor were they argued by the plaintiff. And so, you know, I'm focused on redressability. And I note that I think that distinction between Section 7 and Section 8 is an important one.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I considered carefully the decision that came out last week from the Supreme Court.

Can we pause the -- (Court and courtroom administrator conferring.)

THE COURT: I considered carefully the words from last week's decision and that is that no principle is more fundamental to the judiciary's power or proper rule in our system of Government than its constitutional limit to cases or controversies.

And so I turn to standing. And let me be clear. Standing itself is actually a relatively low bar. I think we can all agree on that. The question is making sure that there is standing to be in federal court, which is a strong -- I think is a high standard because that is an important distinction. I think that it is -- I don't think that is an issue or something that's lost on either side.

And here, my focus has been on redressing the injury.

Plaintiff's argument is that this is a systemic violation and that they are simply seeking a -- in the form of declaratory relief that there is a violation, and then in the form of injunctive relief, an order requiring them to develop and implement a program that would remedy the deficiencies they've identified.

But implementation is where I think this action fails. And that is because this action wasn't brought until March -- make sure I get the date right -- 18th of 2024. And I'm going to take judicial notice of the fact that 90 days before the June primary that just concluded on June 11, 2024 is, I believe, March 15th. But let me double check that one more time. I stand corrected. Wednesday, March 13th, 2024. And so there was, again, a 90 day window where the Court simply could not order relief that the defendants -- rather, the plaintiffs are seeking. I could not order the defendants to implement the relief plaintiffs are seeking. So that's issue one.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Issue two is the question of ripeness. And as mentioned earlier, and I'll restate again here, timing is really everything in federal court. And that is at the heart of the Ripeness Doctrine. And I think it would be wise to exercise or find that prudential ripeness precludes this action from going forward because -- or for the reasons I have just mentioned in that I could not order the State to develop and implement a program at the time this action was brought.

It is not lost on me plaintiff's concern regarding their ability to bring a Section 8 violation during an election year. But time and time again, the Supreme Court, and as binding on me, the Ninth Circuit, has stated that standing, including redressability, must be present from the pleadings stage through trial. And it is simply not present here.

So consequently, I grant the motion to dismiss for lack of standing. I do not believe that the RNC has organizational standing. And that will be the Court's decision.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I'm going to start with defendant as this is your motion. Any questions or any clarification you seek from my ruling?

MS. ST. JULES: I apologize. I missed the very last part on organizational standing.

THE COURT: I do not find they have organizational standing.

MS. ST. JULES: Thank you, your Honor.

THE COURT: No problem.

And let me turn to plaintiff. Same -- same question: Any questions or clarifications you seek regarding my ruling?

MR. WOODFIN: Just one. I think you said the RNC lacked organizational standing. What about the Nevada Republican Party?

THE COURT: Both. And thank you for that question and need for clarification. Both. And that is for the same reason in that I couldn't grant the relief sought.

MR. WOODFIN: And then one more, your Honor. One last question.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. WOODFIN: I understand under Ninth Circuit law that dismissal for lack of standing has automatic leave to amend, but I'd just like to formally request leave to amend for the record.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

THE COURT: I will grant you leave to amend. My question is, timing-wise, how long are you seeking leave or time for leave to amend? If you want to take a moment, please take your time.

MR. WOODFIN: I think 14 days --

THE COURT: Fourteen days?

MR. WOODFIN: -- is sufficient.

THE COURT: All right. That's pretty standard.

All right. I'm sorry?

MR. DODGE: If I also may be heard on a logistical point of clarification at some point? I just wanted to ask if that was possible.

THE COURT: At the conclusion, sure.

MR. DODGE: Understood, your Honor.

THE COURT: No problem.

All right. Fourteens days is a reasonable request, and so you have 14 days to amend the pleadings.

Let me think about something really quickly.

You know, as I sit here and I've contemplated that request, I know I had said I was going to dismiss him with prejudice, but if you're going to amend the complaint, I'll give you the opportunity to amend the allegations regarding Johnston. So I'll change my ruling in that regard and he is dismissed without prejudice. I think that will give you fair opportunity to add him back in if you see appropriate and you have additional allegations you can bring forward.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

All right. Let me then turn to counsel. You had a question regarding -- I don't know what.

MR. DODGE: Yes. Thank you, your Honor.

At the start of your hearing -- of the hearing, your Honor indicated that you felt you had an obligation to resolve the motion to dismiss before the now-briefed and ripe objections from plaintiffs on the magistrate judge's order recommending our intervention.

I just wanted to stress the -- that we would respectfully ask that the motion to intervene be resolved prior to or in tandem with any resolution of the motion to dismiss. I understand leave has been granted to replead so the timing is a little bit less of an issue now. But if the Court were to potentially dismiss the case without resolving the fully-briefed and ripe motion to intervene, it would potentially prejudice our ability to participate in any appeal.

And I would note that the magistrate judge found that we had two significantly protectable interests at stake in the case. We think that's amply supported in the record and in our briefing and would urge the Court to ensure that we have the opportunity to participate in further proceedings in view of those findings including potentially involvement in appeal.

THE COURT: All right. Let me hear from plaintiff

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

regarding that request.

MR. WOODFIN: We submitted our objections to the magistrate judge's report and recommendation. So those objections are on the record. I won't repeat those here.

THE COURT: All right. Okay. I will take a look at that and take that into consideration.

MR. DODGE: We appreciate that, your Honor. Thank you.

THE COURT: No problem.

Anything else that needs to be addressed this afternoon?

No?

Okay. Thank you all very much for your patience and preparation for this hearing. It was a good hearing. Thank you very much.

(The proceedings concluded at 4:30 p.m.)

* * *

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

--o0o--

COURT REPORTER'S CERTIFICATE

I, SAMANTHA N. MCNETT, Official Court Reporter, United States District Court, District of Nevada, Las Vegas, Nevada certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript from the record of proceedings in the above-entitled matter.

Date: June 20, 2024

/s/ Samantha N. McNett
Samantha McNett, RMR, CRR, CCR

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 7/14/2024 2:59:18 AM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: RESOURCES: Trump Campaign Rally Incident
Attachments: 081324 - Statements.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Linus and Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

As always, please reach out with any questions. We're here for whatever you need.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NATIONAL

President Joe Biden

I have been briefed on the shooting at Donald Trump's rally in Pennsylvania. I'm grateful to hear that he's safe and doing well. I'm praying for him and his family and for all those who were at the rally, as we await further information. Jill and I are grateful to the Secret Service for getting him to safety. There's no place for this kind of violence in America. We must unite as one nation to condemn it.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/POTUS/status/1812275407044940079" \o "https://x.com/POTUS/status/1812275407044940079"]

Vice President Kamala Harris

I have been briefed on the shooting at former President Trump's event in Pennsylvania. Doug and I are relieved that he is not seriously injured. We are praying for him, his family, and all those who have been injured and impacted by this senseless shooting. We are grateful to the United States Secret Service, first responders, and local authorities for their immediate action. Violence such as this has no place in our nation. We must all condemn this abhorrent act and do our part to ensure that it does not lead to more violence.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/VP/status/1812282589807300679" \o "https://x.com/VP/status/1812282589807300679"]

Speaker Mike Johnson

Kelly and I are praying for President Trump and all the attendees of the campaign rally today in Pennsylvania, and we send our gratitude to the law enforcement who responded at the scene. I have been briefed by law enforcement and am continuing to monitor the developments. This horrific act of political violence at a peaceful campaign rally has no place in this country and should be unanimously and forcefully condemned.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/SpeakerJohnson/status/1812266011359600746" \o "https://x.com/SpeakerJohnson/status/1812266011359600746"]

Rep. Hakeem Jeffries

My thoughts and prayers are with former President Trump. I am thankful for the decisive law enforcement response. America is a democracy. Political violence of any kind is never acceptable.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/RepJeffries/status/1812259691663384967" \o "https://x.com/RepJeffries/status/1812259691663384967"]

Senator Chuck Schumer

I am horrified by what happened at the Trump rally in Pennsylvania and relieved that former President Trump is safe. Political violence has no place in our country.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/SenSchumer/status/1812262032668049421" \o "https://x.com/SenSchumer/status/1812262032668049421"]

Senator Mitch McConnell

Tonight, all Americans are grateful that President Trump appears to be fine after a despicable attack on a peaceful rally. Violence has no place in our politics. We appreciate the swift work of the Secret Service and other law enforcement.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/LeaderMcConnell/status/1812263053997879727" \o "https://x.com/LeaderMcConnell/status/1812263053997879727"]

Rep. Nancy Pelosi

As one whose family has been the victim of political violence, I know firsthand that political violence of any kind has no place in our society. I thank God that former President Trump is safe. As we learn more details about this horrifying incident, let us pray that all those in attendance at the former President's rally today are unharmed.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/SpeakerPelosi/status/1812268746574020870" \o "https://x.com/SpeakerPelosi/status/1812268746574020870"]

Rep. Steve Scalise
Praying for President Donald Trump. There is never any place for political violence.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/SteveScalise/status/1812253463415280000" \o "https://x.com/SteveScalise/status/1812253463415280000"]

Senator Mitt Romney
Relieved the former President is safe and doing well. Outrageous and tragic that anyone would make such a heinous and evil act. Grateful for the quick response from Secret Service agents. This is a deeply sad day for America.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/MittRomney/status/1812264033388761303" \o "https://x.com/MittRomney/status/1812264033388761303"]

Gabby Giffords
Political violence is terrifying. I know. I'm holding former President Trump, and all those affected by today's indefensible act of violence in my heart. Political violence is un-American and is never acceptable—never.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/GabbyGiffords/status/1812266601053405691" \o "https://x.com/GabbyGiffords/status/1812266601053405691"]

PENNSYLVANIA

Governor Shapiro
Violence targeted at any political party or political leader is absolutely unacceptable. It has no place in Pennsylvania or the United States. I have been briefed on the situation. @PAStatePolice are on the scene in Butler County and working with our federal and local partners.

Lori and I are praying for President Trump, the Secret Service officers who protected him, those attending the event, and all of the first responders still on the scene.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/GovernorShapiro/status/1812257426793738316" \o "https://x.com/GovernorShapiro/status/1812257426793738316"]

NORTH CAROLINA

Governor Cooper
Violence has no place in our politics or communities. I am grateful for the quick response by law enforcement today and hope former President Trump is not seriously injured. - RC
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/NC_Governor/status/1812263143059452291" \o "https://x.com/NC_Governor/status/1812263143059452291"]

AG Stein
I am outraged by what happened tonight at President Trump's rally. Political violence is abhorrent and has no place in America. I pray for his health and am grateful he was able to walk off the stage tonight. I appreciate the secret service and law enforcement for their immediate response. I am also praying for our deeply divided country. People should be able to have differing opinions without fear of violence or threats.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/JoshStein_/status/1812262590774698018" \o "https://x.com/JoshStein_/status/1812262590774698018"]

ARIZONA

Governor Hobbs

Political violence is unacceptable, and has no place in this country. I am glad that former President Trump is safe, and hope that others at the rally were not seriously injured. I hope the perpetrator of this heinous act will be swiftly brought to justice.

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/GovernorHobbs/status/18122651799269258l7" \o "https://x.com/GovernorHobbs/status/1812265179926925817"]

AG Mayes

The attack against former President Trump must be strongly condemned by ALL Americans — no matter their political beliefs. Political violence is never acceptable. Never. My thoughts are with the former President and anyone else who may have been injured or hurt at today's rally.

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/AZAGMayes/status/1812260609230262384" \o "https://x.com/AZAGMayes/status/1812260609230262384"]

Secretary Fontes

I condemn political violence in the most unequivocal terms. NO American political figure should ever be threatened with OR acted against with violence. If we want to beat a political opponent, we do it with ballots, not bullets.

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/Adrian_Fontes/status/1812253882661446070" \o "https://x.com/Adrian_Fontes/status/1812253882661446070"]

NEVADA

Governor Lombardo

Donna and I thank God that former President Trump is safe and unharmed after being shot at during a rally in Pennsylvania. We are waiting for more information from the Secret Service. In the meantime, we are praying for calm and civility around the country.

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/JosephMLombardo/status/1812264358237647031" \o "https://x.com/JosephMLombardo/status/1812264358237647031"]

AG Ford

This is not who we are as a country. Political violence from any side of the political spectrum should be met with the appropriate consequences. Grateful to the law enforcement that stepped in, and hoping for justice to prevail. Glad to see that former President Trump is safe.

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/AaronDFordNV/status/1812261868553240982" \o "https://x.com/AaronDFordNV/status/1812261868553240982"]

MICHIGAN

Governor Whitmer

There is no place for political violence in this country, period. This is not how we solve our differences. I am horrified to learn of this news, and we will be following the situation closely. I am grateful for those in law enforcement who stepped in immediately.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/GovWhitmer/status/1812256673098055850" \o "https://x.com/GovWhitmer/status/1812256673098055850"]

AG Nessel
Political violence is never acceptable under any circumstances. I sincerely hope any parties involved in this horrific act are brought to justice and held accountable.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/dananessel/status/1812259377773990340" \o "https://x.com/dananessel/status/1812259377773990340"]

Secretary Benson
Political violence is unacceptable, anytime, anywhere, against anyone. I pray for the swift recovery of the former president and am grateful for all in law enforcement who stepped in to protect everyone at the rally from further violence. May this disturbing incident provide a turning point - away from hateful rhetoric and threats and towards civility for all.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/JocelynBenson/status/1812265585398665244" \o "https://x.com/JocelynBenson/status/1812265585398665244"]

WISCONSIN
Governor Evers
My thoughts are with President Trump and all of the folks attending today's rally in Pennsylvania. Thank you to the first responders who acted quickly, putting themselves and their safety at risk in order to respond to a horrific act of violence and keep people safe.

My staff and I are in contact with those coordinating security planning for the RNC and will continue to be in close communication as we learn more about this situation. We cannot be a country that accepts political violence of any kind—that is not who we are as Americans.
[HYPERLINK "https://x.com/GovEvers/status/1812266664014250219" \o "https://x.com/GovEvers/status/1812266664014250219"]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 7/2/2024 9:34:57 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Trump v. US Summary - PRIVLEGED
Attachments: SUDC - Summary of Trump v. US (July 2 2024).docx; Trump v. US.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Privileged and Confidential
Attorney Work Product

Hi all,

We wanted to update you on yesterday's U.S. Supreme Court decision about presidential immunity from criminal prosecution in Trump v. US. A complete summary is attached along with the opinion, but big picture, the Court held that a President has (1) absolute immunity for core constitutional powers, (2) "at least" presumptive immunity for all other official acts, and (3) no immunity for unofficial acts. It further held that not only does immunity protect from prosecution, but any immune conduct cannot be used as evidence in a criminal prosecution against the President. Finally, it provided some guidance on the official/unofficial character of the allegations in the case. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,
Robert

--
Robert Cotter (he/him) | Counsel
States United Democracy Center
224-235-2606 | @statesunited
robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

NOTE: Where it is feasible, a syllabus (headnote) will be released, as is being done in connection with this case, at the time the opinion is issued. The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U. S. 321, 337.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Syllabus

TRUMP v. UNITED STATES

CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

No. 23–939. Argued April 25, 2024—Decided July 1, 2024

A federal grand jury indicted former President Donald J. Trump on four counts for conduct that occurred during his Presidency following the November 2020 election. The indictment alleged that after losing that election, Trump conspired to overturn it by spreading knowingly false claims of election fraud to obstruct the collecting, counting, and certifying of the election results. Trump moved to dismiss the indictment based on Presidential immunity, arguing that a President has absolute immunity from criminal prosecution for actions performed within the outer perimeter of his official responsibilities, and that the indictment's allegations fell within the core of his official duties. The District Court denied Trump's motion to dismiss, holding that former Presidents do not possess federal criminal immunity for any acts. The D. C. Circuit affirmed. Both the District Court and the D. C. Circuit declined to decide whether the indicted conduct involved official acts.

Held: Under our constitutional structure of separated powers, the nature of Presidential power entitles a former President to absolute immunity from criminal prosecution for actions within his conclusive and preclusive constitutional authority. And he is entitled to at least presumptive immunity from prosecution for all his official acts. There is no immunity for unofficial acts. Pp. 5–43.

(a) This case is the first criminal prosecution in our Nation's history of a former President for actions taken during his Presidency. Determining whether and under what circumstances such a prosecution may proceed requires careful assessment of the scope of Presidential power under the Constitution. The nature of that power requires that a former President have some immunity from criminal prosecution for official acts during his tenure in office. At least with respect to the

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

President's exercise of his core constitutional powers, this immunity must be absolute. As for his remaining official actions, he is entitled to at least presumptive immunity. Pp. 5–15.

(1) Article II of the Constitution vests "executive Power" in "a President of the United States of America." §1, cl. 1. The President has duties of "unrivaled gravity and breadth." Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 800. His authority to act necessarily "stem[s] either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U. S. 579, 585. In the latter case, the President's authority is sometimes "conclusive and preclusive." Id., at 638 (Jackson, J., concurring). When the President exercises such authority, Congress cannot act on, and courts cannot examine, the President's actions. It follows that an Act of Congress—either a specific one targeted at the President or a generally applicable one—may not criminalize the President's actions within his exclusive constitutional power. Neither may the courts adjudicate a criminal prosecution that examines such Presidential actions. The Court thus concludes that the President is absolutely immune from criminal prosecution for conduct within his exclusive sphere of constitutional authority. Pp. 6–9.

(2) Not all of the President's official acts fall within his "conclusive and preclusive" authority. The reasons that justify the President's absolute immunity from criminal prosecution for acts within the scope of his exclusive constitutional authority do not extend to conduct in areas where his authority is shared with Congress. To determine the President's immunity in this context, the Court looks primarily to the Framers' design of the Presidency within the separation of powers, precedent on Presidential immunity in the civil context, and criminal cases where a President resisted prosecutorial demands for documents. P. 9.

(i) The Framers designed the Presidency to provide for a "vigorous" and "energetic" Executive. The Federalist No. 70, pp. 471–472 (J. Cooke ed. 1961) (A. Hamilton). They vested the President with "supervisory and policy responsibilities of utmost discretion and sensitivity." Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731, 750. Appreciating the "unique risks" that arise when the President's energies are diverted by proceedings that might render him "unduly cautious in the discharge of his official duties," the Court has recognized Presidential immunities and privileges "rooted in the constitutional tradition of the separation of powers and supported by our history." Id., at 749, 751, 752, n. 32. In Fitzgerald, for instance, the Court concluded that a former President is entitled to absolute immunity from "damages liability for acts within the 'outer perimeter' of his official responsibility." Id., at 756. The Court's "dominant concern" was to avoid "diversion of the President's attention during the decisionmaking process caused by needless worry as to the possibility of damages actions stemming from any particular official decision." Clinton v. Jones, 520 U. S. 681, 694, n. 19.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

By contrast, when prosecutors have sought evidence from the President, the Court has consistently rejected Presidential claims of absolute immunity. During the treason trial of former Vice President Aaron Burr, for instance, Chief Justice Marshall rejected President Thomas Jefferson's claim that the President could not be subjected to a subpoena. Marshall simultaneously recognized, however, the existence of a "privilege" to withhold certain "official paper[s]." United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 187, 192 (No. 14,694) (CC Va.). And when a subpoena issued to President Richard Nixon, the Court rejected his claim of "absolute privilege." United States v. Nixon, 418 U. S. 683, 703. But recognizing "the public interest in candid, objective, and even blunt or harsh opinions in Presidential decisionmaking," it held that a "presumptive privilege" protects Presidential communications. Id., at 708. Because that privilege "relates to the effective discharge of a President's powers," id., at 711, the Court deemed it "fundamental to the operation of Government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution." Id., at 708. Pp. 9–12.

(ii) Criminally prosecuting a President for official conduct undoubtedly poses a far greater threat of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch than simply seeking evidence in his possession. The danger is greater than what led the Court to recognize absolute Presidential immunity from civil damages liability—that the President would be chilled from taking the "bold and unhesitating action" required of an independent Executive. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 745. Although the President might be exposed to fewer criminal prosecutions than civil damages suits, the threat of trial, judgment, and imprisonment is a far greater deterrent and plainly more likely to distort Presidential decisionmaking than the potential payment of civil damages. The hesitation to execute the duties of his office fearlessly and fairly that might result when a President is making decisions under "a pall of potential prosecution," McDonnell v. United States, 579 U. S. 550, 575, raises "unique risks to the effective functioning of government," Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 751. But there is also a compelling "public interest in fair and effective law enforcement." Vance, 591 U. S., at 808.

Taking into account these competing considerations, the Court concludes that the separation of powers principles explicated in the Court's precedent necessitate at least a presumptive immunity from criminal prosecution for a President's acts within the outer perimeter of his official responsibility. Such an immunity is required to safeguard the independence and effective functioning of the Executive

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

Branch, and to enable the President to carry out his constitutional duties without undue caution. At a minimum, the President must be immune from prosecution for an official act unless the Government can show that applying a criminal prohibition to that act would pose no "dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 754. Pp. 12–15.

(3) As for a President's unofficial acts, there is no immunity. Although Presidential immunity is required for official actions to ensure that the President's decisionmaking is not distorted by the threat of future litigation stemming from those actions, that concern does not support immunity for unofficial conduct. Clinton, 520 U. S., at 694, and n. 19. The separation of powers does not bar a prosecution predicated on the President's unofficial acts. P. 15.

(b) The first step in deciding whether a former President is entitled to immunity from a particular prosecution is to distinguish his official from unofficial actions. In this case, no court thus far has drawn that distinction, in general or with respect to the conduct alleged in particular. It is therefore incumbent upon the Court to be mindful that it is "a court of final review and not first view." Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U. S. 189, 201. Critical threshold issues in this case are how to differentiate between a President's official and unofficial actions, and how to do so with respect to the indictment's extensive and detailed allegations covering a broad range of conduct. The Court offers guidance on those issues. Pp. 16–32.

(1) When the President acts pursuant to "constitutional and statutory authority," he takes official action to perform the functions of his office. Fitzgerald, 456 U. S., at 757. Determining whether an action is covered by immunity thus begins with assessing the President's authority to take that action. But the breadth of the President's "discretionary responsibilities" under the Constitution and laws of the United States frequently makes it "difficult to determine which of [his] innumerable 'functions' encompassed a particular action." Id., at 756. The immunity the Court has recognized therefore extends to the "outer perimeter" of the President's official responsibilities, covering actions so long as they are "not manifestly or palpably beyond [his] authority." Blassingame v. Trump, 87 F. 4th 1, 13 (CADC).

In dividing official from unofficial conduct, courts may not inquire into the President's motives. Such a "highly intrusive" inquiry would risk exposing even the most obvious instances of official conduct to judicial examination on the mere allegation of improper purpose. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 756. Nor may courts deem an action unofficial merely because it allegedly violates a generally applicable law. Otherwise, Presidents would be subject to trial on "every allegation that an action was unlawful," depriving immunity of its intended effect.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ibid. Pp. 17–19.

(2) With the above principles in mind, the Court turns to the conduct alleged in the indictment. Certain allegations—such as those involving Trump's discussions with the Acting Attorney General—are readily categorized in light of the nature of the President's official relationship to the office held by that individual. Other allegations—such as those involving Trump's interactions with the Vice President, state officials, and certain private parties, and his comments to the general public—present more difficult questions. Pp. 19–30.

(i) The indictment alleges that as part of their conspiracy to overturn the legitimate results of the 2020 presidential election, Trump and his co-conspirators attempted to leverage the Justice Department's power and authority to convince certain States to replace their legitimate electors with Trump's fraudulent slates of electors. According to the indictment, Trump met with the Acting Attorney General and other senior Justice Department and White House officials to discuss investigating purported election fraud and sending a letter from the Department to those States regarding such fraud. The indictment further alleges that after the Acting Attorney General resisted Trump's requests, Trump repeatedly threatened to replace him.

The Government does not dispute that the indictment's allegations regarding the Justice Department involve Trump's use of official power. The allegations in fact plainly implicate Trump's "conclusive and preclusive" authority. The Executive Branch has "exclusive authority and absolute discretion" to decide which crimes to investigate and prosecute, including with respect to allegations of election crime. Nixon, 418 U. S., at 693. And the President's "management of the Executive Branch" requires him to have "unrestricted power to remove the most important of his subordinates"—such as the Attorney General—"in their most important duties." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750. The indictment's allegations that the requested investigations were shams or proposed for an improper purpose do not divest the President of exclusive authority over the investigative and prosecutorial functions of the Justice Department and its officials. Because the President cannot be prosecuted for conduct within his exclusive constitutional authority, Trump is absolutely immune from prosecution for the alleged conduct involving his discussions with Justice Department officials. Pp. 19–21.

(ii) The indictment next alleges that Trump and his co-conspirators "attempted to enlist the Vice President to use his ceremonial role at the January 6 certification proceeding to fraudulently alter the election results." App. 187, Indictment ¶10(d). In particular, the indictment alleges several conversations in which Trump pressured the Vice President to reject States' legitimate electoral votes or send them back to state legislatures for review.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Whenever the President and Vice President discuss their official responsibilities, they engage in official conduct. Presiding over the January 6 certification proceeding at which Members of Congress count the electoral votes is a constitutional and statutory duty of the Vice President. Art. II, §1, cl. 3; Amdt. 12; 3 U. S. C. §15. The indictment's allegations that Trump attempted to pressure the Vice President to take particular acts in connection with his role at the certification proceeding thus involve official conduct, and Trump is at least presumptively immune from prosecution for such conduct.

The question then becomes whether that presumption of immunity is rebutted under the circumstances. It is the Government's burden to rebut the presumption of immunity. The Court therefore remands to the District Court to assess in the first instance whether a prosecution involving Trump's alleged attempts to influence the Vice President's oversight of the certification proceeding would pose any dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch. Pp. 21–24.

(iii) The indictment's remaining allegations involve Trump's interactions with persons outside the Executive Branch: state officials, private parties, and the general public. In particular, the indictment alleges that Trump and his co-conspirators attempted to convince certain state officials that election fraud had tainted the popular vote count in their States, and thus electoral votes for Trump's opponent needed to be changed to electoral votes for Trump. After Trump failed to convince those officials to alter their state processes, he and his co-conspirators allegedly developed and effectuated a plan to submit fraudulent slates of Presidential electors to obstruct the certification proceeding. On Trump's view, the alleged conduct qualifies as official because it was undertaken to ensure the integrity and proper administration of the federal election. As the Government sees it, however, Trump can point to no plausible source of authority enabling the President to take such actions. Determining whose characterization may be correct, and with respect to which conduct, requires a fact-specific analysis of the indictment's extensive and interrelated allegations. The Court accordingly remands to the District Court to determine in the first instance whether Trump's conduct in this area qualifies as official or unofficial. Pp. 24–28.

(iv) The indictment also contains various allegations regarding Trump's conduct in connection with the events of January 6 itself. The alleged conduct largely consists of Trump's communications in the form of Tweets and a public address. The President possesses "extraordinary power to speak to his fellow citizens and on their behalf." Trump v. Hawaii, 585 U. S. 667, 701. So most of a President's public communications are likely to fall comfortably within the outer perimeter of his official responsibilities. There may, however, be contexts in which the President speaks in an unofficial capacity—perhaps as a candidate for office or party leader. To the extent that may be the case, objective analysis of "content, form, and context" will necessarily inform the inquiry. Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U. S. 443, 453. Whether the communications alleged in the indictment involve official conduct may depend on the content and context of each. This necessarily factbound analysis is best performed initially by the District Court. The Court therefore remands to the District Court to determine in the first instance whether this alleged conduct is official or unofficial. Pp. 28–30.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(3) Presidents cannot be indicted based on conduct for which they are immune from prosecution. On remand, the District Court must carefully analyze the indictment's remaining allegations to determine whether they too involve conduct for which a President must be immune from prosecution. And the parties and the District Court must ensure that sufficient allegations support the indictment's charges without such conduct. Testimony or private records of the President or his advisers probing such conduct may not be admitted as evidence at trial. Pp. 30–32.

(c) Trump asserts a far broader immunity than the limited one the Court recognizes, contending that the indictment must be dismissed because the Impeachment Judgment Clause requires that impeachment and Senate conviction precede a President's criminal prosecution. But the text of the Clause does not address whether and on what conduct a President may be prosecuted if he was never impeached and convicted. See Art. I, §3, cl. 7. Historical evidence likewise lends little support to Trump's position. The Federalist Papers on which Trump relies concerned the checks available against a sitting President; they did not endorse or even consider whether the Impeachment Judgment Clause immunizes a former President from prosecution. Transforming the political process of impeachment into a necessary step in the enforcement of criminal law finds little support in the text of the Constitution or the structure of the Nation's Government. Pp. 32–34.

(d) The Government takes a similarly broad view, contending that the President enjoys no immunity from criminal prosecution for any action. On its view, as-applied challenges in the course of the trial suffice to protect Article II interests, and review of a district court's decisions on such challenges should be deferred until after trial. But questions about whether the President may be held liable for particular actions, consistent with the separation of powers, must be addressed at the outset of a proceeding. Even if the President were ultimately not found liable for certain official actions, the possibility of an extended proceeding alone may render him "unduly cautious in the discharge of his official duties." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 32. The Constitution does not tolerate such impediments to "the effective functioning of government." Id., at 751. Pp. 34–37.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Syllabus

(e) This case poses a question of lasting significance: When may a former President be prosecuted for official acts taken during his Presidency? In answering that question, unlike the political branches and the public at large, the Court cannot afford to fixate exclusively, or even primarily, on present exigencies. Enduring separation of powers principles guide our decision in this case. The President enjoys no immunity for his unofficial acts, and not everything the President does is official. The President is not above the law. But under our system of separated powers, the President may not be prosecuted for exercising his core constitutional powers, and he is entitled to at least presumptive immunity from prosecution for his official acts. That immunity applies equally to all occupants of the Oval Office. Pp. 41–43.

91 F. 4th 1173, vacated and remanded.

ROBERTS, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which THOMAS, ALITO, GORSUCH, and KAVANAUGH, JJ., joined in full, and in which BARRETT, J., joined except as to Part III–C. THOMAS, J., filed a concurring opinion. BARRETT, J., filed an opinion concurring in part. SOTOMAYOR, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which KAGAN and JACKSON, JJ., joined. JACKSON, J., filed a dissenting opinion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

NOTICE: This opinion is subject to formal revision before publication in the United States Reports. Readers are requested to notify the Reporter of Decisions, Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D. C. 20543, pio@supremecourt.gov, of any typographical or other formal errors.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–939

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v. UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

[July 1, 2024]

CHIEF JUSTICE ROBERTS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case concerns the federal indictment of a former President of the United States for conduct alleged to involve official acts during his tenure in office. We consider the scope of a President's immunity from criminal prosecution.

I

From January 2017 until January 2021, Donald J. Trump served as President of the United States. On August 1, 2023, a federal grand jury indicted him on four counts for conduct that occurred during his Presidency following the November 2020 election. The indictment alleged that after losing that election, Trump conspired to overturn it by spreading knowingly false claims of election fraud to obstruct the collecting, counting, and certifying of the election results.

According to the indictment, Trump advanced his goal through five primary means. First, he and his co-conspirators "used knowingly false claims of election fraud to get state legislators and election officials to . . . change electoral votes for [Trump's] opponent, Joseph R. Biden, Jr., to electoral votes for [Trump]." App. 185, Indictment ¶10(a). Second, Trump and his co-conspirators "organized fraudulent slates of electors in seven targeted states" and "caused these fraudulent electors to transmit their false certificates to the Vice President and other government officials to be counted at the certification proceeding on January 6." Id., at 186, ¶10(b). Third, Trump and his co-conspirators attempted to use the Justice Department "to conduct sham election crime investigations and to send a letter to the targeted states that falsely claimed that the Justice Department had identified significant concerns that may have impacted the election outcome." Id., at 186–187, ¶10(c). Fourth, Trump and his co-conspirators attempted to persuade "the Vice President to use his ceremonial role at the January 6 certification proceeding to fraudulently alter the election results." Id., at 187, ¶10(d). And when that failed, on the morning of January 6, they "repeated knowingly false claims of election fraud to gathered supporters, falsely told them that the Vice President had the authority to and might alter the election results, and directed them to the Capitol to obstruct the certification proceeding." Ibid. Fifth, when "a large and angry crowd . . . violently attacked the Capitol and halted the proceeding," Trump and his co-conspirators "exploited the disruption by redoubling efforts to levy false claims of election fraud and convince Members of Congress to further delay the certification." Id., at 187–188, ¶10(e).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Based on this alleged conduct, the indictment charged Trump with (1) conspiracy to defraud the United States in violation of 18 U. S. C. §371, (2) conspiracy to obstruct an official proceeding in violation of §1512(k), (3) obstruction of and attempt to obstruct an official proceeding in violation of §1512(c)(2), §2, and (4) conspiracy against rights in violation of §241.[1]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump moved to dismiss the indictment based on Presidential immunity. In his view, the conduct alleged in the indictment, properly characterized, was that while he was President he (1) "made public statements about the administration of the federal election"; (2) communicated with senior Justice Department officials "about investigating election fraud and about choosing the leadership" of the Department; (3) "communicated with state officials about the administration of the federal election and their exercise of official duties with respect to it"; (4) "communicated with the Vice President" and with "Members of Congress about the exercise of their official duties regarding the election certification"; and (5) "authorized or directed others to organize contingent slates of electors in furtherance of his attempts to convince the Vice President to exercise his official authority in a manner advocated for by President Trump." Motion To Dismiss Indictment Based on Presidential Immunity in No. 1:23–cr–00257 (DC), ECF Doc. 74, p. 9. Trump argued that all of the indictment's allegations fell within the core of his official duties. Id., at 27. And he contended that a President has absolute immunity from criminal prosecution for actions performed within the outer perimeter of his official responsibilities, to ensure that he can undertake the especially sensitive duties of his office with bold and unhesitating action. Id., at 14, 24.

The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, holding

---

[1] Trump contends that the indictment stretches Section 1512(c)(2) "far beyond its natural meaning." Brief for Petitioner 39, n. 4. As we explained in Fischer v. United States, Section 1512(c)(2) covers acts that impair "the availability or integrity for use in an official proceeding of records, documents, objects, or . . . other things used in the proceeding." 603 U. S. ___, ___ (2024) (slip op., at 16). If necessary, the District Court should determine in the first instance whether the Section 1512(c)(2) charges may proceed in light of our decision in Fischer.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

that "former Presidents do not possess absolute federal criminal immunity for any acts committed while in office." 2023 WL 8359833, *15 (DC, Dec. 1, 2023). The District Court recognized that the President is immune from damages liability in civil cases, to protect against the chilling effect such exposure might have on the carrying out of his responsibilities. See Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731, 749–756 (1982). But it reasoned that "the possibility of vexatious post-Presidency litigation is much reduced in the criminal context" in light of "[t]he robust procedural safeguards attendant to federal criminal prosecutions." 2023 WL 8359833, *9–*10. The District Court declined to decide whether the indicted conduct involved official acts. See id., at *15.

The D. C. Circuit affirmed. 91 F. 4th 1173 (2024) (per curiam). Citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137 (1803), the court distinguished between two kinds of official acts: discretionary and ministerial. 91 F. 4th, at 1189–1190. It observed that "although discretionary acts are 'only politically examinable,' the judiciary has the power to hear cases" involving ministerial acts that an officer is directed to perform by the legislature. Ibid. (quoting Marbury, 1 Cranch, at 166). From this distinction, the D. C. Circuit concluded that the "separation of powers doctrine, as expounded in Marbury and its progeny, necessarily permits the Judiciary to oversee the federal criminal prosecution of a former President for his official acts because the fact of the prosecution means that the former President has allegedly acted in defiance of the Congress's laws." 91 F. 4th, at 1191. In the court's view, the fact that Trump's actions "allegedly violated generally applicable criminal laws" meant that those actions "were not properly within the scope of his lawful discretion." Id., at 1192. The D. C. Circuit thus concluded that Trump had "no structural immunity from the charges in the Indictment." Ibid. Like the District Court, the D. C.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Circuit declined to analyze the actions described in the indictment to determine whether they involved official acts. See id., at 1205, n. 14.

We granted certiorari to consider the following question: "Whether and if so to what extent does a former President enjoy presidential immunity from criminal prosecution for conduct alleged to involve official acts during his tenure in office." 601 U. S. ___ (2024).

II

This case is the first criminal prosecution in our Nation's history of a former President for actions taken during his Presidency. We are called upon to consider whether and under what circumstances such a prosecution may proceed. Doing so requires careful assessment of the scope of Presidential power under the Constitution. We undertake that responsibility conscious that we must not confuse "the issue of a power's validity with the cause it is invoked to promote," but must instead focus on the "enduring consequences upon the balanced power structure of our Republic." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U. S. 579, 634 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

The parties before us do not dispute that a former President can be subject to criminal prosecution for unofficial acts committed while in office. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 28. They also agree that some of the conduct described in the indictment includes actions taken by Trump in his unofficial capacity. See id., at 28–30, 36–37, 124.

They disagree, however, about whether a former President can be prosecuted for his official actions. Trump contends that just as a President is absolutely immune from civil damages liability for acts within the outer perimeter of his official responsibilities, Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 756, he must be absolutely immune from criminal prosecution for such acts. Brief for Petitioner 10. And Trump argues that the bulk of the indictment's allegations involve conduct in his official capacity as President. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 30–32. Although the Government agrees that some official actions are included in the indictment's allegations, see id., at 125, it maintains that a former President does not enjoy immunity from criminal prosecution for any actions, regardless of how they are characterized. See Brief for United States 9.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We conclude that under our constitutional structure of separated powers, the nature of Presidential power requires that a former President have some immunity from criminal prosecution for official acts during his tenure in office. At least with respect to the President's exercise of his core constitutional powers, this immunity must be absolute. As for his remaining official actions, he is also entitled to immunity. At the current stage of proceedings in this case, however, we need not and do not decide whether that immunity must be absolute, or instead whether a presumptive immunity is sufficient.

A

Article II of the Constitution provides that "[t]he executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." §1, cl. 1. The President's duties are of "unrivaled gravity and breadth." Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 800 (2020). They include, for instance, commanding the Armed Forces of the United States; granting reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States; and appointing public ministers and consuls, the Justices of this Court, and Officers of the United States. See §2. He also has important foreign relations responsibilities: making treaties, appointing ambassadors, recognizing foreign governments, meeting foreign leaders, overseeing international diplomacy and intelligence gathering, and managing matters related to terrorism, trade, and immigration. See §§2, 3. Domestically, he must "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed," §3, and he bears responsibility for the actions of the many departments and agencies within the Executive Branch. He also plays a role in lawmaking by recommending to Congress the measures he thinks wise and signing or vetoing the bills Congress passes. See Art. I, §7, cl. 2; Art. II, §3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No matter the context, the President's authority to act necessarily "stem[s] either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself." Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 585. In the latter case, the President's authority is sometimes "conclusive and preclusive." Id., at 638 (Jackson, J., concurring). When the President exercises such authority, he may act even when the measures he takes are "incompatible with the expressed or implied will of Congress." Id., at 637. The exclusive constitutional authority of the President "disabl[es] the Congress from acting upon the subject." Id., at 637–638. And the courts have "no power to control [the President's] discretion" when he acts pursuant to the powers invested exclusively in him by the Constitution. Marbury, 1 Cranch, at 166.

If the President claims authority to act but in fact exercises mere "individual will" and "authority without law," the courts may say so. Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 655 (Jackson, J., concurring). In Youngstown, for instance, we held that President Truman exceeded his constitutional authority when he seized most of the Nation's steel mills. See id., at 582–589 (majority opinion). But once it is determined that the President acted within the scope of his exclusive authority, his discretion in exercising such authority cannot be subject to further judicial examination.

The Constitution, for example, vests the "Power to Grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States" in the President. Art. II, §2, cl. 1. During and after the Civil War, President Lincoln offered a full pardon, with restoration of property rights, to anyone who had "engaged in the rebellion" but agreed to take an oath of allegiance to the Union. United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 139–141

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(1872). But in 1870, Congress enacted a provision that prohibited using the President's pardon as evidence of restoration of property rights. Id., at 143–144. Chief Justice Chase held the provision unconstitutional because it "impair[ed] the effect of a pardon, and thus infring[ed] the constitutional power of the Executive." Id., at 147. "To the executive alone is intrusted the power of pardon," and the "legislature cannot change the effect of such a pardon any more than the executive can change a law." Id., at 147–148. The President's authority to pardon, in other words, is "conclusive and preclusive," "disabling the Congress from acting upon the subject." Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 637–638 (Jackson, J., concurring).

Some of the President's other constitutional powers also fit that description. "The President's power to remove—and thus supervise—those who wield executive power on his behalf," for instance, "follows from the text of Article II." Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 591 U. S. 197, 204 (2020). We have thus held that Congress lacks authority to control the President's "unrestricted power of removal" with respect to "executive officers of the United States whom he has appointed." Myers v. United States, 272 U. S. 52, 106, 176 (1926); see Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 638, n. 4 (Jackson, J., concurring) (citing the President's "exclusive power of removal in executive agencies" as an example of "conclusive and preclusive" constitutional authority); cf. Seila Law, 591 U. S., at 215 (noting only "two exceptions to the President's unrestricted removal power"). The power "to control recognition determinations" of foreign countries is likewise an "exclusive power of the President." Zivotofsky v. Kerry, 576 U. S. 1, 32 (2015). Congressional commands contrary to the President's recognition determinations are thus invalid. Ibid.

Congress cannot act on, and courts cannot examine, the President's actions on subjects within his "conclusive and preclusive" constitutional authority. It follows that an Act of Congress—either a specific one targeted at the President or a generally applicable one—may not criminalize the President's actions within his exclusive constitutional power. Neither may the courts adjudicate a criminal prosecution that examines such Presidential actions. We thus conclude that the President is absolutely immune from criminal prosecution for conduct within his exclusive sphere of constitutional authority.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B

But of course not all of the President's official acts fall within his "conclusive and preclusive" authority. As Justice Robert Jackson recognized in Youngstown, the President sometimes "acts pursuant to an express or implied authorization of Congress," or in a "zone of twilight" where "he and Congress may have concurrent authority." 343 U. S., at 635, 637 (concurring opinion). The reasons that justify the President's absolute immunity from criminal prosecution for acts within the scope of his exclusive authority therefore do not extend to conduct in areas where his authority is shared with Congress.

We recognize that only a limited number of our prior decisions guide determination of the President's immunity in this context. That is because proceedings directly involving a President have been uncommon in our Nation, and "decisions of the Court in this area" have accordingly been "rare" and "episodic." Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U. S. 654, 661 (1981). To resolve the matter, therefore, we look primarily to the Framers' design of the Presidency within the separation of powers, our precedent on Presidential immunity in the civil context, and our criminal cases where a President resisted prosecutorial demands for documents.

1

The President "occupies a unique position in the constitutional scheme," Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 749, as "the only person who alone composes a branch of government," Trump v. Mazars USA, LLP, 591 U. S. 848, 868 (2020). The Framers "sought to encourage energetic, vigorous, decisive, and speedy execution of the laws by placing in the hands of a single, constitutionally indispensable, individual the ultimate authority that, in respect to the other branches, the Constitution divides among many." Clinton v. Jones, 520 U. S. 681, 712 (1997) (Breyer, J., concurring in judgment). They "deemed an energetic executive essential to 'the protection of the community against foreign attacks,' 'the steady administration of the laws,' 'the protection of property,' and 'the security of liberty.'" Seila Law, 591 U. S., at 223–224 (quoting The Federalist No. 70, p. 471 (J. Cooke ed. 1961) (A. Hamilton)). The purpose of a "vigorous" and "energetic" Executive, they thought, was to ensure "good government," for a "feeble executive implies a feeble execution of the government." Id., at 471–472.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Framers accordingly vested the President with "supervisory and policy responsibilities of utmost discretion and sensitivity." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750. He must make "the most sensitive and far-reaching decisions entrusted to any official under our constitutional system." Id., at 752. There accordingly "exists the greatest public interest" in providing the President with "'the maximum ability to deal fearlessly and impartially with' the duties of his office." Ibid. (quoting Ferri v. Ackerman, 444 U. S. 193, 203 (1979)). Appreciating the "unique risks to the effective functioning of government" that arise when the President's energies are diverted by proceedings that might render him "unduly cautious in the discharge of his official duties," we have recognized Presidential immunities and privileges "rooted in the constitutional tradition of the separation of powers and supported by our history." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 749, 751, 752, n. 32.

In Nixon v. Fitzgerald, for instance, we recognized that as "a functionally mandated incident of [his] unique office," a former President "is entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability predicated on his official acts." Id., at 749. That case involved a terminated Air Force employee who sued former President Richard Nixon for damages, alleging that Nixon approved an Air Force reorganization that wrongfully led to his firing. In holding that Nixon was immune from that suit, "our dominant concern" was to avoid "diversion of the President's attention during the decisionmaking process caused by needless worry as to the possibility of damages actions stemming from any particular official decision." Clinton, 520 U. S., at 694, n. 19. "[T]he singular importance of the President's duties" implicating "matters likely to 'arouse the most intense feelings,'" coupled with "the sheer prominence of [his] office," heightens the prospect of private damages suits that would threaten such diversion. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 751–753 (quoting Pierson v. Ray, 386 U. S. 547, 554 (1967)). We therefore concluded that the President must be absolutely immune from "damages liability for acts within the 'outer perimeter' of his official responsibility." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 756.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

By contrast, when prosecutors have sought evidence from the President, we have consistently rejected Presidential claims of absolute immunity. For instance, during the treason trial of former Vice President Aaron Burr, Chief Justice Marshall rejected President Thomas Jefferson's claim that the President could not be subjected to a subpoena. Marshall reasoned that "the law does not discriminate between the president and a private citizen." United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 30, 34 (No. 14,692d) (CC Va. 1807) (Burr I). Because a President does not "stand exempt from the general provisions of the constitution," including the Sixth Amendment's guarantee that those accused shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses for their defense, a subpoena could issue. Id., at 33–34.

Marshall acknowledged, however, the existence of a

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"privilege" to withhold certain "official paper[s]" that "ought not on light ground to be forced into public view." United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 187, 192 (No. 14,694) (CC Va. 1807) (Burr II); see also Burr I, 25 F. Cas., at 37 (stating that nothing before the court showed that the document in question "contain[ed] any matter the disclosure of which would endanger the public safety"). And he noted that a court may not "be required to proceed against the president as against an ordinary individual." Burr II, 25 F. Cas., at 192.

Similarly, when a subpoena issued to President Nixon to produce certain tape recordings and documents relating to his conversations with aides and advisers, this Court rejected his claim of "absolute privilege," given the "constitutional duty of the Judicial Branch to do justice in criminal prosecutions." United States v. Nixon, 418 U. S. 683, 703, 707 (1974). But we simultaneously recognized "the public interest in candid, objective, and even blunt or harsh opinions in Presidential decisionmaking," as well as the need to protect "communications between high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties." Id., at 705, 708. Because the President's "need for complete candor and objectivity from advisers calls for great deference from the courts," we held that a "presumptive privilege" protects Presidential communications. Id., at 706, 708. That privilege, we explained, "relates to the effective discharge of a President's powers." Id., at 711. We thus deemed it "fundamental to the operation of Government and inextricably rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution." Id., at 708.

2

Criminally prosecuting a President for official conduct undoubtedly poses a far greater threat of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch than simply seeking evidence in his possession, as in Burr and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nixon. The danger is akin to, indeed greater than, what led us to recognize absolute Presidential immunity from civil damages liability—that the President would be chilled from taking the "bold and unhesitating action" required of an independent Executive. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 745. Although the President might be exposed to fewer criminal prosecutions than the range of civil damages suits that might be brought by various plaintiffs, the threat of trial, judgment, and imprisonment is a far greater deterrent. Potential criminal liability, and the peculiar public opprobrium that attaches to criminal proceedings, are plainly more likely to distort Presidential decisionmaking than the potential payment of civil damages.

The hesitation to execute the duties of his office fearlessly and fairly that might result when a President is making decisions under "a pall of potential prosecution," McDonnell v. United States, 579 U. S. 550, 575 (2016), raises "unique risks to the effective functioning of government," Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 751. A President inclined to take one course of action based on the public interest may instead opt for another, apprehensive that criminal penalties may befall him upon his departure from office. And if a former President's official acts are routinely subjected to scrutiny in criminal prosecutions, "the independence of the Executive Branch" may be significantly undermined. Vance, 591 U. S., at 800. The Framers' design of the Presidency did not envision such counterproductive burdens on the "vigor[]" and "energy" of the Executive. The Federalist No. 70, at 471–472.

We must, however, "recognize[] the countervailing interests at stake." Vance, 591 U. S., at 799. Federal criminal laws seek to redress "a wrong to the public" as a whole, not just "a wrong to the individual." Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 668 (1892). There is therefore a compelling "public interest in fair and effective law enforcement." Vance, 591 U. S., at 808. The President, charged with enforcing federal criminal laws, is not above them.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Chief Justice Marshall's decisions in Burr and our decision in Nixon recognized the distinct interests present in criminal prosecutions. Although Burr acknowledged that the President's official papers may be privileged and publicly unavailable, it did not grant him an absolute exemption from responding to subpoenas. See Burr II, 25 F. Cas., at 192; Burr I, 25 F. Cas., at 33–34. Nixon likewise recognized a strong protection for the President's confidential communications—a "presumptive privilege"—but it did not entirely exempt him from providing evidence in criminal proceedings. 418 U. S., at 708.

Taking into account these competing considerations, we conclude that the separation of powers principles explicated in our precedent necessitate at least a presumptive immunity from criminal prosecution for a President's acts within the outer perimeter of his official responsibility. Such an immunity is required to safeguard the independence and effective functioning of the Executive Branch, and to enable the President to carry out his constitutional duties without undue caution. Indeed, if presumptive protection for the President is necessary to enable the "effective discharge" of his powers when a prosecutor merely seeks evidence of his official papers and communications, id., at 711, it is certainly necessary when the prosecutor seeks to charge, try, and imprison the President himself for his official actions. At a minimum, the President must therefore be immune from prosecution for an official act unless the Government can show that applying a criminal prohibition to that act would pose no "dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 754.

But as we explain below, the current stage of the proceedings in this case does not require us to decide whether this immunity is presumptive or absolute. See Part III–B, infra. Because we need not decide that question today, we do not decide it. "[O]ne case" in more than "two centuries does not afford enough experience" to definitively and comprehensively determine the President's scope of immunity from criminal prosecution. Mazars, 591 U. S., at 871.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C

As for a President's unofficial acts, there is no immunity. The principles we set out in Clinton v. Jones confirm as much. When Paula Jones brought a civil lawsuit against then-President Bill Clinton for acts he allegedly committed prior to his Presidency, we rejected his argument that he enjoyed temporary immunity from the lawsuit while serving as President. 520 U. S., at 684. Although Presidential immunity is required for official actions to ensure that the President's decisionmaking is not distorted by the threat of future litigation stemming from those actions, that concern does not support immunity for unofficial conduct. Id., at 694, and n. 19. The "'justifying purposes'" of the immunity we recognized in Fitzgerald, and the one we recognize today, are not that the President must be immune because he is the President; rather, they are to ensure that the President can undertake his constitutionally designated functions effectively, free from undue pressures or distortions. 520 U. S., at 694, and n. 19 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 755). "[I]t [is] the nature of the function performed, not the identity of the actor who perform[s] it, that inform[s] our immunity analysis." Forrester v. White, 484 U. S. 219, 229 (1988). The separation of powers does not bar a prosecution predicated on the President's unofficial acts.[2] [2] Our decision in Clinton permitted claims alleging unofficial acts to proceed against the sitting President. See 520 U. S., at 684. In the criminal context, however, the Justice Department "has long recognized" that "the separation of powers precludes the criminal prosecution of a sitting President." Brief for United States 9 (citing A Sitting President's Amenability to Indictment and Criminal Prosecution, 24 Op. OLC 222 (2000); emphasis deleted); see Tr. for Oral Arg. 78.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III

Determining whether a former President is entitled to immunity from a particular prosecution requires applying the principles we have laid out to his conduct at issue. The first step is to distinguish his official from unofficial actions. In this case, however, no court has thus far considered how to draw that distinction, in general or with respect to the conduct alleged in particular.

Despite the unprecedented nature of this case, and the very significant constitutional questions that it raises, the lower courts rendered their decisions on a highly expedited basis. Because those courts categorically rejected any form of Presidential immunity, they did not analyze the conduct alleged in the indictment to decide which of it should be categorized as official and which unofficial. Neither party has briefed that issue before us (though they discussed it at oral argument in response to questions). And like the underlying immunity question, that categorization raises multiple unprecedented and momentous questions about the powers of the President and the limits of his authority under the Constitution. As we have noted, there is little pertinent precedent on those subjects to guide our review of this case—a case that we too are deciding on an expedited basis, less than five months after we granted the Government's request to construe Trump's emergency application for a stay as a petition for certiorari, grant that petition, and answer the consequential immunity question. See 601 U. S., at ___. Given all these circumstances, it is particularly incumbent upon us to be mindful of our frequent admonition that "[o]urs is a court of final review and not first view." Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U. S. 189, 201 (2012) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Critical threshold issues in this case are how to differentiate between a President's official and unofficial actions, and how to do so with respect to the indictment's extensive and detailed allegations covering a broad range of conduct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We offer guidance on those issues below. Certain allegations—such as those involving Trump's discussions with the Acting Attorney General—are readily categorized in light of the nature of the President's official relationship to the office held by that individual. Other allegations—such as those involving Trump's interactions with the Vice President, state officials, and certain private parties, and his comments to the general public—present more difficult questions. Although we identify several considerations pertinent to classifying those allegations and determining whether they are subject to immunity, that analysis ultimately is best left to the lower courts to perform in the first instance.

A

Distinguishing the President's official actions from his unofficial ones can be difficult. When the President acts pursuant to "constitutional and statutory authority," he takes official action to perform the functions of his office. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 757. Determining whether an action is covered by immunity thus begins with assessing the President's authority to take that action.

But the breadth of the President's "discretionary responsibilities" under the Constitution and laws of the United States "in a broad variety of areas, many of them highly sensitive," frequently makes it "difficult to determine which of [his] innumerable 'functions' encompassed a particular action." Id., at 756. And some Presidential conduct—for example, speaking to and on behalf of the American people, see Trump v. Hawaii, 585 U. S. 667, 701 (2018)—certainly can qualify as official even when not obviously connected to a particular constitutional or statutory provision. For those reasons, the immunity we have recognized extends to the "outer perimeter" of the President's official responsibilities, covering actions so long as they are "not manifestly or palpably beyond [his] authority." Blassingame v. Trump, 87

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

F. 4th 1, 13 (CADC 2023) (internal quotation marks omitted); see Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 755–756 (noting that we have "refused to draw functional lines finer than history and reason would support").

In dividing official from unofficial conduct, courts may not inquire into the President's motives. Such an inquiry would risk exposing even the most obvious instances of official conduct to judicial examination on the mere allegation of improper purpose, thereby intruding on the Article II interests that immunity seeks to protect. Indeed, "[i]t would seriously cripple the proper and effective administration of public affairs as entrusted to the executive branch of the government" if "[i]n exercising the functions of his office," the President was "under an apprehension that the motives that control his official conduct may, at any time, become the subject of inquiry." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 745 (quoting Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S. 483, 498 (1896)). We thus rejected such inquiries in Fitzgerald. The plaintiff there contended that he was dismissed from the Air Force for retaliatory reasons. See 457 U. S., at 733–741, 756. The Air Force responded that the reorganization that led to Fitzgerald's dismissal was undertaken to promote efficiency. Ibid. Because under Fitzgerald's theory "an inquiry into the President's motives could not be avoided," we rejected the theory, observing that "[i]nquiries of this kind could be highly intrusive." Id., at 756. "[B]are allegations of malice should not suffice to subject government officials either to the costs of trial or to the burdens of broad-reaching discovery." Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 800, 817–818 (1982).

Nor may courts deem an action unofficial merely because it allegedly violates a generally applicable law. For instance, when Fitzgerald contended that his dismissal violated various congressional statutes and thus rendered his discharge "outside the outer perimeter of [Nixon's] duties," we rejected that contention. 457 U. S., at 756. Otherwise, Presidents would be subject to trial on "every allegation that an action was unlawful," depriving immunity of its intended effect. Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B

With these principles in mind, we turn to the conduct alleged in the indictment.

1

The indictment broadly alleges that Trump and his co-conspirators sought to "overturn the legitimate results of the 2020 presidential election." App. 183, Indictment ¶7. It charges that they conspired to obstruct the January 6 congressional proceeding at which electoral votes are counted and certified, and the winner of the election is certified as President-elect. Id., at 181–185, ¶¶4, 7, 9. As part of this conspiracy, Trump and his co-conspirators allegedly attempted to leverage the Justice Department's power and authority to convince certain States to replace their legitimate electors with Trump's fraudulent slates of electors. See id., at 215–220, ¶¶70–85. According to the indictment, Trump met with the Acting Attorney General and other senior Justice Department and White House officials to discuss investigating purported election fraud and sending a letter from the Department to those States regarding such fraud. See, e.g., id., at 217, 219–220, ¶¶77, 84. The indictment further alleges that after the Acting Attorney General resisted Trump's requests, Trump repeatedly threatened to replace him. See, e.g., id., at 216–217, ¶¶74, 77.

The Government does not dispute that the indictment's allegations regarding the Justice Department involve Trump's "use of official power." Brief for United States 46; see id., at 10–11; Tr. of Oral Arg. 125. The allegations in fact plainly implicate Trump's "conclusive and preclusive" authority. "[I]nvestigation and prosecution of crimes is a quintessentially executive function." Brief for United States 19 (quoting Morrison v. Olson, 487 U. S. 654, 706 (1988) (Scalia, J., dissenting)). And the Executive Branch has "exclusive authority and absolute discretion" to decide which crimes to investigate and prosecute, including with respect to allegations of election crime. Nixon, 418 U. S., at 693; see United States v. Texas, 599 U. S. 670, 678–679 (2023) ("Under Article II, the Executive Branch possesses authority to decide 'how to prioritize and how aggressively to pursue legal actions against defendants who violate the law.'" (quoting TransUnion LLC v. Ramirez, 594 U. S. 413, 429 (2021))). The President may discuss potential investigations and prosecutions with his Attorney General and other Justice Department officials to carry out his constitutional duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." Art. II, §3. And the Attorney General, as head of the Justice Department, acts as the President's "chief law enforcement officer" who "provides vital assistance to [him] in the performance of [his] constitutional duty to 'preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution.'" Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U. S. 511, 520 (1985) (quoting Art. II, §1, cl. 8).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Investigative and prosecutorial decisionmaking is "the special province of the Executive Branch," Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U. S. 821, 832 (1985), and the Constitution vests the entirety of the executive power in the President, Art. II, §1. For that reason, Trump's threatened removal of the Acting Attorney General likewise implicates "conclusive and preclusive" Presidential authority. As we have explained, the President's power to remove "executive officers of the United States whom he has appointed" may not be regulated by Congress or reviewed by the courts. Myers, 272 U. S., at 106, 176; see supra, at 8. The President's "management of the Executive Branch" requires him to have "unrestricted power to remove the most important of his subordinates"—such as the Attorney General—"in their most important duties." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750 (internal quotation marks and alteration omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The indictment's allegations that the requested investigations were "sham[s]" or proposed for an improper purpose do not divest the President of exclusive authority over the investigative and prosecutorial functions of the Justice Department and its officials. App. 186–187, Indictment ¶10(c). And the President cannot be prosecuted for conduct within his exclusive constitutional authority. Trump is therefore absolutely immune from prosecution for the alleged conduct involving his discussions with Justice Department officials.

2

The indictment next alleges that Trump and his coconspirators "attempted to enlist the Vice President to use his ceremonial role at the January 6 certification proceeding to fraudulently alter the election results." Id., at 187, ¶10(d). In particular, the indictment alleges several conversations in which Trump pressured the Vice President to reject States' legitimate electoral votes or send them back to state legislatures for review. See, e.g., id., at 222–224, 226, ¶¶90, 92–93, 97.

The Government explained at oral argument that although it "has not yet had to come to grips with how [it] would analyze" Trump's interactions with the Vice President, there is "support" to characterize that conduct as official. Tr. of Oral Arg. 128. Indeed, our constitutional system anticipates that the President and Vice President will remain in close contact regarding their official duties over the course of the President's term in office. These two officials are the only ones "elected by the entire Nation." Seila Law, 591 U. S., at 224; see Art. II, §1. The Constitution provides that "the Vice President shall become President" in the case of "the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation." Amdt. 25, §1. It also "empowers the Vice President, together with a majority of the 'principal officers of the executive departments,' to declare the President 'unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office.'" Freytag v. Commissioner, 501 U. S. 868, 886–887 (1991) (quoting Amdt. 25, §4). And Article I of course names the Vice President as President of the Senate and gives him a tie-breaking vote. §3, cl. 4. It is thus important for the President to discuss official matters with the Vice President to ensure continuity within the Executive Branch and to advance the President's agenda in Congress and beyond.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Vice President may in practice also serve as one of the President's closest advisers. The Office of Legal Counsel has explained that within the Executive Branch, the Vice President's "sole function [is] advising and assisting the President." Whether the Office of the Vice President Is an 'Agency' for Purposes of the Freedom of Information Act, 18 Op. OLC 10 (1994). Indeed, the "Twelfth Amendment was brought about" to avoid the "manifestly intolerable" situation that occurred "[d]uring the John Adams administration," when "we had a President and Vice-President of different parties." Ray v. Blair, 343 U. S. 214, 224, n. 11 (1952). The President and Vice President together "are the senior officials of the Executive Branch of government" and therefore "must formulate, explain, advocate, and defend policies" of the President's administration. Payment of Expenses Associated With Travel by the President and Vice President, 6 Op. OLC 214, 215 (1982).

As the President's second in command, the Vice President has historically performed important functions "at the will and as the representative of the President." Participation of the Vice President in the Affairs of the Executive Branch, 1 Supp. Op. OLC 214, 220 (1961). President Woodrow Wilson's Vice President, for instance, "presided over a few cabinet meetings while Wilson was in France negotiating" the Treaty of Versailles after World War I. H. Relyea, The Law: The Executive Office of the Vice President: Constitutional and Legal Considerations, 40 Presidential Studies Q. 327, 328 (2010). During President Franklin Roosevelt's administration, the Vice President "became a regular participant in cabinet deliberations—a practice that was continued by each succeeding president." Ibid. And when President Dwight Eisenhower "suffered three major illnesses while in office . . . Vice President Richard Nixon consulted with the Cabinet and developed a procedure for relaying important matters to the President." Presidential Succession and Delegation in Case of Disability, 5 Op. OLC 91, 102 (1981). At the President's discretion, "the Vice President may engage in activities ranging into the highest levels of diplomacy and negotiation and may do so anywhere in the world." 1 Supp. Op. OLC, at 220. Domestically, he may act as the President's delegate to perform any duties "co-extensive with the scope of the President's power of delegation." Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Whenever the President and Vice President discuss their official responsibilities, they engage in official conduct. Presiding over the January 6 certification proceeding at which Members of Congress count the electoral votes is a constitutional and statutory duty of the Vice President. Art. II, §1, cl. 3; Amdt. 12; 3 U. S. C. §15. The indictment's allegations that Trump attempted to pressure the Vice President to take particular acts in connection with his role at the certification proceeding thus involve official conduct, and Trump is at least presumptively immune from prosecution for such conduct.

The question then becomes whether that presumption of immunity is rebutted under the circumstances. When the Vice President presides over the January 6 certification proceeding, he does so in his capacity as President of the Senate. Ibid. Despite the Vice President's expansive role of advising and assisting the President within the Executive Branch, the Vice President's Article I responsibility of "presiding over the Senate" is "not an 'executive branch' function." Memorandum from L. Silberman, Deputy Atty. Gen., to R. Burress, Office of the President, Re: Conflict of

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Interest Problems Arising Out of the President's Nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller To Be Vice President Under the Twenty-Fifth Amendment to the Constitution 2 (Aug. 28, 1974). With respect to the certification proceeding in particular, Congress has legislated extensively to define the Vice President's role in the counting of the electoral votes, see, e.g., 3 U. S. C. §15, and the President plays no direct constitutional or statutory role in that process. So the Government may argue that consideration of the President's communications with the Vice President concerning the certification proceeding does not pose "dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 754; see supra, at 14.

At the same time, however, the President may frequently rely on the Vice President in his capacity as President of the Senate to advance the President's agenda in Congress. When the Senate is closely divided, for instance, the Vice President's tiebreaking vote may be crucial for confirming the President's nominees and passing laws that align with the President's policies. Applying a criminal prohibition to the President's conversations discussing such matters with the Vice President—even though they concern his role as President of the Senate—may well hinder the President's ability to perform his constitutional functions.

It is ultimately the Government's burden to rebut the presumption of immunity. We therefore remand to the District Court to assess in the first instance, with appropriate input from the parties, whether a prosecution involving Trump's alleged attempts to influence the Vice President's oversight of the certification proceeding in his capacity as President of the Senate would pose any dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch.

3

The indictment's remaining allegations cover a broad range of conduct. Unlike the allegations describing

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Trump's communications with the Justice Department and the Vice President, these remaining allegations involve Trump's interactions with persons outside the Executive Branch: state officials, private parties, and the general public. Many of the remaining allegations, for instance, cover at great length events arising out of communications that Trump and his co-conspirators initiated with state legislators and election officials in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin regarding those States' certification of electors. See App. 192–207, Indictment ¶¶13–52.

Specifically, the indictment alleges that Trump and his co-conspirators attempted to convince those officials that election fraud had tainted the popular vote count in their States, and thus electoral votes for Trump's opponent needed to be changed to electoral votes for Trump. See id., at 185–186, ¶10(a). After Trump failed to convince those officials to alter their state processes, he and his co-conspirators allegedly developed a plan "to marshal individuals who would have served as [Trump's] electors, had he won the popular vote" in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, "and cause those individuals to make and send to the Vice President and Congress false certifications that they were legitimate electors." Id., at 208, ¶53. If the plan worked, "the submission of these fraudulent slates" would position the Vice President to "open and count the fraudulent votes" at the certification proceeding and set up "a fake controversy that would derail the proper certification of Biden as president-elect." Id., at 208–209, ¶¶53, 54(b). According to the indictment, Trump used his campaign staff to effectuate the plan. See, e.g., id., at 210, 212–213, ¶¶55, 63. On the same day that the legitimate electors met in their respective jurisdictions to cast their votes, the indictment alleges that Trump's "fraudulent electors convened sham proceedings in the seven targeted states to cast fraudulent electoral ballots" in his favor. Id., at 214, ¶66. Those ballots "were mailed to the President of the Senate, the Archivist of the United States, and others." Ibid., ¶67.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

At oral argument, Trump appeared to concede that at least some of these acts—those involving "private actors" who "helped implement a plan to submit fraudulent slates of presidential electors to obstruct the certification proceeding" at the direction of Trump and a co-conspirator—entail "private" conduct. Tr. of Oral Arg. 29–30. He later asserted, however, that asking "the chairwoman of the Republican National Committee . . . to gather electors" qualifies as official conduct because "the organization of alternate slates of electors is based on, for example, the historical example of President Grant as something that was done pursuant to and ancillary and preparatory to the exercise of" a core Presidential power. Id., at 37; see also id., at 25 (discussing the "historical precedent . . . of President Grant sending federal troops to Louisiana and Mississippi in 1876 to make sure that the Republican electors got certified in those two cases, which delivered the election to Rutherford B. Hayes"). He also argued that it is "[a]bsolutely an official act for the president to communicate with state officials on . . . the integrity of a federal election." Id., at 38. The Government disagreed, contending that this alleged conduct does not qualify as "official conduct" but as "campaign conduct." Id., at 124–125.

On Trump's view, the alleged conduct qualifies as official because it was undertaken to ensure the integrity and proper administration of the federal election. Of course, the President's duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" plainly encompasses enforcement of federal election laws passed by Congress. Art. II, §3. And the President's broad power to speak on matters of public concern does not exclude his public communications regarding the fairness and integrity of federal elections simply because he is running for re-election. Cf. Hawaii, 585 U. S., at 701. Similarly, the President may speak on and discuss such matters with state officials—even when no specific federal responsibility requires his communication—to encourage them to act in a manner that promotes the President's view of the public good.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As the Government sees it, however, these allegations encompass nothing more than Trump's "private scheme with private actors." Brief for United States 44. In its view, Trump can point to no plausible source of authority enabling the President to not only organize alternate slates of electors but also cause those electors—unapproved by any state official—to transmit votes to the President of the Senate for counting at the certification proceeding, thus interfering with the votes of States' properly appointed electors. Indeed, the Constitution commits to the States the power to "appoint" Presidential electors "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." Art. II, §1, cl. 2; see Burroughs v. United States, 290 U. S. 534, 544 (1934). "Article II, §1's appointments power," we have said, "gives the States far-reaching authority over presidential electors, absent some other constitutional constraint." Chiafalo v. Washington, 591 U. S. 578, 588–589 (2020). By contrast, the Federal Government's role in appointing electors is limited. Congress may prescribe when the state-appointed electors shall meet, and it counts and certifies their votes. Art. II, §1, cls. 3, 4. The President, meanwhile, plays no direct role in the process, nor does he have authority to control the state officials who do. And the Framers, wary of "cabal, intrigue and corruption," specifically excluded from service as electors "all those who from situation might be suspected of too great devotion to the president in office." The Federalist No. 68, at 459 (A. Hamilton); see Art. II, §1, cl. 2.

Determining whose characterization may be correct, and with respect to which conduct, requires a close analysis of the indictment's extensive and interrelated allegations. See App. 192–215, Indictment ¶¶13–69. Unlike Trump's alleged interactions with the Justice Department, this alleged conduct cannot be neatly categorized as falling within a particular Presidential function. The necessary analysis is instead fact specific, requiring assessment of numerous alleged interactions with a wide variety of state officials and private persons. And the parties' brief comments at oral argument indicate that they starkly disagree on the characterization of these allegations. The concerns we noted at the outset—the expedition of this case, the lack of factual analysis by the lower courts, and the absence of pertinent briefing by the parties—thus become more prominent. We accordingly remand to the District Court to determine in the first instance—with the benefit of briefing we lack—whether Trump's conduct in this area qualifies as official or unofficial.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

4

Finally, the indictment contains various allegations regarding Trump's conduct in connection with the events of January 6 itself. It alleges that leading up to the January 6 certification proceeding, Trump issued a series of Tweets (to his nearly 89 million followers) encouraging his supporters to travel to Washington, D. C., on that day. See, e.g., App. 221, 225–227, Indictment ¶¶87–88, 96, 100. Trump and his co-conspirators addressed the gathered public that morning, asserting that certain States wanted to recertify their electoral votes and that the Vice President had the power to send those States' ballots back for recertification. Id., at 228–230, ¶¶103–104. Trump then allegedly "directed the crowd in front of him to go to the Capitol" to pressure the Vice President to do so at the certification proceeding. Id., at 228–230, ¶104. When it became public that the Vice President would not use his role at the certification proceeding to determine which electoral votes should be counted, the crowd gathered at the Capitol "broke through barriers cordoning off the Capitol grounds" and eventually "broke into the building." Id., at 230–231, ¶¶107, 109.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The alleged conduct largely consists of Trump's communications in the form of Tweets and a public address. The President possesses "extraordinary power to speak to his fellow citizens and on their behalf." Hawaii, 585 U. S., at 701; cf. Lindke v. Freed, 601 U. S. 187, 191 (2024). As the sole person charged by the Constitution with executing the laws of the United States, the President oversees—and thus will frequently speak publicly about—a vast array of activities that touch on nearly every aspect of American life. Indeed, a long-recognized aspect of Presidential power is using the office's "bully pulpit" to persuade Americans, including by speaking forcefully or critically, in ways that the President believes would advance the public interest. He is even expected to comment on those matters of public concern that may not directly implicate the activities of the Federal Government—for instance, to comfort the Nation in the wake of an emergency or tragedy. For these reasons, most of a President's public communications are likely to fall comfortably within the outer perimeter of his official responsibilities.

There may, however, be contexts in which the President, notwithstanding the prominence of his position, speaks in an unofficial capacity—perhaps as a candidate for office or party leader. To the extent that may be the case, objective analysis of "content, form, and context" will necessarily inform the inquiry. Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U. S. 443, 453 (2011) (internal quotation marks omitted). But "there is not always a clear line between [the President's] personal and official affairs." Mazars, 591 U. S., at 868. The analysis therefore must be fact specific and may prove to be challenging.

The indictment reflects these challenges. It includes only select Tweets and brief snippets of the speech Trump delivered on the morning of January 6, omitting its full text or context. See App. 228–230, Indictment ¶104. Whether the Tweets, that speech, and Trump's other communications on January 6 involve official conduct may depend on the content and context of each. Knowing, for instance, what else was said contemporaneous to the excerpted communications, or who was involved in transmitting the electronic communications and in organizing the rally, could be relevant to the classification of each communication. This necessarily factbound analysis is best performed initially by the District Court. We therefore remand to the District Court to determine in the first instance whether this alleged conduct is official or unofficial.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C

The essence of immunity "is its possessor's entitlement not to have to answer for his conduct" in court. Mitchell, 472 U. S., at 525. Presidents therefore cannot be indicted based on conduct for which they are immune from prosecution. As we have explained, the indictment here alleges at least some such conduct. See Part III–B–1, supra. On remand, the District Court must carefully analyze the indictment's remaining allegations to determine whether they too involve conduct for which a President must be immune from prosecution. And the parties and the District Court must ensure that sufficient allegations support the indictment's charges without such conduct.

The Government does not dispute that if Trump is entitled to immunity for certain official acts, he may not "be held criminally liable" based on those acts. Brief for United States 46. But it nevertheless contends that a jury could "consider" evidence concerning the President's official acts "for limited and specified purposes," and that such evidence would "be admissible to prove, for example, [Trump's] knowledge or notice of the falsity of his election-fraud claims." Id., at 46, 48. That proposal threatens to eviscerate the immunity we have recognized. It would permit a prosecutor to do indirectly what he cannot do directly—invite the jury to examine acts for which a President is immune from prosecution to nonetheless prove his liability on any charge. But "[t]he Constitution deals with substance, not shadows." Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 325 (1867). And the Government's position is untenable in light of the separation of powers principles we have outlined.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If official conduct for which the President is immune may be scrutinized to help secure his conviction, even on charges that purport to be based only on his unofficial conduct, the "intended effect" of immunity would be defeated. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 756. The President's immune conduct would be subject to examination by a jury on the basis of generally applicable criminal laws. Use of evidence about such conduct, even when an indictment alleges only unofficial conduct, would thereby heighten the prospect that the President's official decisionmaking will be distorted. See Clinton, 520 U. S., at 694, n. 19.

The Government asserts that these weighty concerns can be managed by the District Court through the use of "evidentiary rulings" and "jury instructions." Brief for United States 46. But such tools are unlikely to protect adequately the President's constitutional prerogatives. Presidential acts frequently deal with "matters likely to 'arouse the most intense feelings.' " Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752 (quoting Pierson, 386 U. S., at 554). Allowing prosecutors to ask or suggest that the jury probe official acts for which the President is immune would thus raise a unique risk that the jurors' deliberations will be prejudiced by their views of the President's policies and performance while in office. The prosaic tools on which the Government would have courts rely are an inadequate safeguard against the peculiar constitutional concerns implicated in the prosecution of a former President. Cf. Nixon, 418 U. S., at 706. Although such tools may suffice to protect the constitutional rights of individual criminal defendants, the interests that underlie Presidential immunity seek to protect not the President himself, but the institution of the Presidency.[3]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IV

A

Trump asserts a far broader immunity than the limited one we have recognized. He contends that the indictment must be dismissed because the Impeachment Judgment Clause requires that impeachment and Senate conviction precede a President's criminal prosecution. Brief for Petitioner 16.

The text of the Clause provides little support for such an absolute immunity. It states that an impeachment judgment "shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." Art. I, §3, cl. 7. It then specifies that "the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law." Ibid. (emphasis added).

---

[3] JUSTICE BARRETT disagrees, arguing that in a bribery prosecution, for instance, excluding "any mention" of the official act associated with the bribe "would hamstring the prosecution." Post, at 6 (opinion concurring in part); cf. post, at 25–27 (opinion of SOTOMAYOR, J.). But of course the prosecutor may point to the public record to show the fact that the President performed the official act. And the prosecutor may admit evidence of what the President allegedly demanded, received, accepted, or agreed to receive or accept in return for being influenced in the performance of the act. See 18 U. S. C. §201(b)(2). What the prosecutor may not do, however, is admit testimony or private records of the President or his advisers probing the official act itself. Allowing that sort of evidence would invite the jury to inspect the President's motivations for his official actions and to second-guess their propriety. As we have explained, such inspection would be "highly intrusive" and would "'seriously cripple'" the President's exercise of his official duties. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 745, 756 (quoting Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S. 483, 498 (1896)); see supra, at 18. And such second-guessing would "threaten the independence or effectiveness of the Executive." Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 805 (2020).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Clause both limits the consequences of an impeachment judgment and clarifies that notwithstanding such judgment, subsequent prosecution may proceed. By its own terms, the Clause does not address whether and on what conduct a President may be prosecuted if he was never impeached and convicted.

Historical evidence likewise lends little support to Trump's position. For example, Justice Story reasoned that without the Clause's clarification that "Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment" may nevertheless follow Senate conviction, "it might be matter of extreme doubt, whether . . . a second trial for the same offence could be had, either after an acquittal, or a conviction in the court of impeachments." 2 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States §780, p. 251 (1833). James Wilson, who served on the Committee that drafted the Clause and later as a Justice of this Court, similarly concluded that acquittal of impeachment charges posed no bar to subsequent prosecution. See 2 Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution 492 (M. Jensen ed. 1979). And contrary to Trump's contention, Alexander Hamilton did not disagree. The Federalist Papers on which Trump relies, see Brief for Petitioner 17–18, concerned the checks available against a sitting President. Hamilton noted that unlike "the King of Great-Britain," the President "would be liable to be impeached" and "removed from office," and "would afterwards be liable to prosecution and punishment." The Federalist No. 69, at 463; see also id., No. 77, at 520 (explaining that the President is "at all times liable to impeachment, trial, dismission from office . . . and to the forfeiture of life and estate by subsequent prosecution"). Hamilton did not endorse or even consider whether the Impeachment Judgment Clause immunizes a former President from prosecution.

The implication of Trump's theory is that a President who evades impeachment for one reason or another during his term in office can never be held accountable for his criminal acts in the ordinary course of law. So if a President manages to conceal certain crimes throughout his Presidency, or if Congress is unable to muster the political will to impeach the President for his crimes, then they must forever remain impervious to prosecution.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Impeachment is a political process by which Congress can remove a President who has committed "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." Art. II, §4. Transforming that political process into a necessary step in the enforcement of criminal law finds little support in the text of the Constitution or the structure of our Government.

B

The Government for its part takes a similarly broad view, contending that the President enjoys no immunity from criminal prosecution for any action. It maintains this view despite agreeing with much of our analysis.

For instance, the Government does not dispute that Congress may not criminalize Presidential conduct within the President's "conclusive and preclusive" constitutional authority. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 133 ("[C]ore powers . . . can't be regulated at all, like the pardon power and veto."); see also id., at 84–85. And it too accords protection to Presidential conduct if subjecting that conduct to generally applicable laws would "raise serious constitutional questions regarding the President's authority" or cause a "possible conflict with the President's constitutional prerogatives." Application of 28 U. S. C. §458 to Presidential Appointments of Federal Judges, 19 Op. OLC 350, 351–352 (1995); see Brief for United States 26–29; Tr. of Oral Arg. 78. Indeed, the Executive Branch has long held that view. The Office of Legal Counsel has recognized, for instance, that a federal statute generally prohibiting appointments to "'any office or duty in any court'" of persons within certain degrees of consanguinity to the judges of such courts would, if applied to the President, infringe his power to appoint federal judges, thereby raising a serious constitutional question. 19 Op. OLC, at 350 (quoting 28 U. S. C. §458); see id., at 350–352. So it viewed such a statute as not applying to the President. Likewise, it has narrowly construed a criminal prohibition on grassroots lobbying to avoid the constitutional issues that would otherwise arise, reasoning that the statute should not "be construed to prohibit the President or executive branch agencies from engaging in a general open dialogue with the public on the Administration's programs and policies." Constraints Imposed by 18 U. S. C. §1913 on Lobbying Efforts, 13 Op. OLC 300, 304 (1989); see id., at 304–306.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Government thus broadly agrees that the President's official acts are entitled to some degree of constitutional protection. And with respect to the allegations in the indictment before us, the Government agrees that at least some of the alleged conduct involves official acts. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 125; cf. id., at 128.

Yet the Government contends that the President should not be considered immune from prosecution for those official acts. See Brief for United States 9. On the Government's view, as-applied challenges in the course of the trial suffice to protect Article II interests, and review of a district court's decisions on such challenges should be deferred until after trial. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 69, 79–80, 154–158. If the President is instead immune from prosecution, a district court's denial of immunity would be appealable before trial. See Mitchell, 472 U. S., at 524–530 (explaining that questions of immunity are reviewable before trial because the essence of immunity is the entitlement not to be subject to suit).

The Government asserts that the "[r]obust safeguards" available in typical criminal proceedings alleviate the need for pretrial review. Brief for United States 20 (boldface and emphasis omitted). First, it points to the Justice Department's "longstanding commitment to the impartial enforcement of the law," id., at 21, as well as the criminal justice system's further protections: grand juries, a defendant's procedural rights during trial, and the requirement that the Government prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt, id., at 22. Next, it contends that "existing principles of statutory construction and as-applied constitutional challenges" adequately address the separation of powers concerns involved in applying generally applicable criminal laws to a President. Id., at 29. Finally, the Government cites certain defenses that would be available to the President in a particular prosecution, such as the public-authority defense or the advice of the Attorney General. Id., at 29–30; see Nardone v. United States, 302 U. S. 379, 384 (1937); Tr. of Oral Arg. 107–108.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These safeguards, though important, do not alleviate the need for pretrial review. They fail to address the fact that under our system of separated powers, criminal prohibitions cannot apply to certain Presidential conduct to begin with. As we have explained, when the President acts pursuant to his exclusive constitutional powers, Congress cannot—as a structural matter—regulate such actions, and courts cannot review them. See Part II–A, supra. And he is at least presumptively immune from prosecution for his other official actions. See Part II–B, supra.

Questions about whether the President may be held liable for particular actions, consistent with the separation of powers, must be addressed at the outset of a proceeding. Even if the President were ultimately not found liable for certain official actions, the possibility of an extended proceeding alone may render him "unduly cautious in the discharge of his official duties." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 32. Vulnerability "'to the burden of a trial and to the inevitable danger of its outcome, would dampen the ardor of all but the most resolute.'" Id., at 752–753, n. 32 (quoting Gregoire v. Biddle, 177 F. 2d 579, 581 (CA2 1949) (Hand, L., C. J.)). The Constitution does not tolerate such impediments to "the effective functioning of government." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 751.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As for the Government's assurances that prosecutors and grand juries will not permit political or baseless prosecutions from advancing in the first place, those assurances are available to every criminal defendant and fail to account for the President's "unique position in the constitutional scheme." Id., at 749. We do not ordinarily decline to decide significant constitutional questions based on the Government's promises of good faith. See United States v. Stevens, 559 U. S. 460, 480 (2010) ("We would not uphold an unconstitutional statute merely because the Government promised to use it responsibly."). Nor do we do so today.

C

As for the dissents, they strike a tone of chilling doom that is wholly disproportionate to what the Court actually does today—conclude that immunity extends to official discussions between the President and his Attorney General, and then remand to the lower courts to determine "in the first instance" whether and to what extent Trump's remaining alleged conduct is entitled to immunity. Supra, at 24, 28, 30.

The principal dissent's starting premise—that unlike Speech and Debate Clause immunity, no constitutional text supports Presidential immunity, see post, at 4–6 (opinion of SOTOMAYOR, J.)—is one that the Court rejected decades ago as "unpersuasive." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750, n. 31; see also Nixon, 418 U. S., at 705–706, n. 16 (rejecting unanimously a similar argument in the analogous executive privilege context). "[A] specific textual basis has not been considered a prerequisite to the recognition of immunity." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750, n. 31. Nor is that premise correct. True, there is no "Presidential immunity clause" in the Constitution. But there is no "'separation of powers clause'" either. Seila Law, 591 U. S., at 227. Yet that doctrine is undoubtedly carved into the Constitution's text by its three articles separating powers and vesting the Executive power solely in the President. See ibid. And the Court's prior decisions, such as Nixon and Fitzgerald, have long recognized that doctrine as mandating certain Presidential privileges and immunities, even though the Constitution contains no explicit "provision for immunity." Post, at 4; see Part II–B–1, supra. Neither the dissents nor the Government disavow any of those prior decisions. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 76–77.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The principal dissent then cites the Impeachment Judgment Clause, arguing that it "clearly contemplates that a former President may be subject to criminal prosecution." Post, at 6. But that Clause does not indicate whether a former President may, consistent with the separation of powers, be prosecuted for his official conduct in particular. See supra, at 32–33. And the assortment of historical sources the principal dissent cites are unhelpful for the same reason. See post, at 6–8. As the Court has previously noted, relevant historical evidence on the question of Presidential immunity is of a "fragmentary character." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 31; see also Clinton, 520 U. S., at 696–697; cf. Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 634 (Jackson, J., concurring) (noting "the poverty of really useful and unambiguous authority applicable to concrete problems of executive power"). "[T]he most compelling arguments," therefore, "arise from the Constitution's separation of powers and the Judiciary's historic understanding of that doctrine." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 31.

The Court's prior admonition is evident in the principal dissent's citations. Some of its cherry-picked sources do not even discuss the President in particular. See, e.g., post, at 7–8 (citing 2 Debates on the Constitution 177 (J. Elliot ed. 1836); 2 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States §780, pp. 250–251 (1833)). And none of them indicate whether he may be prosecuted for his official conduct. See, e.g., post, at 6, 7, n. 2 (citing The Federalist No. 69; 4 Debates on the Constitution, at 109). The principal dissent's most compelling piece of evidence consists of excerpted statements of Charles Pinckney from an 1800 Senate debate. See post, at 7. But those statements reflect only the now-discredited argument that any immunity not expressly mentioned in the Constitution must not exist. See 3 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, pp. 384–385 (M. Farrand ed. 1911). And Pinckney is not exactly a reliable authority on the separation of powers: He went on to state on the same day that "it was wrong to give the nomination of Judges to the President"—an opinion expressly rejected by the Framers. Id., at 385. Given the Framers' desire for an energetic and vigorous President, the principal dissent's view that the Constitution they designed allows all his actions to be subject to prosecution—even the exercise of powers it grants exclusively to him—defies credulity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Unable to muster any meaningful textual or historical support, the principal dissent suggests that there is an "established understanding" that "former Presidents are answerable to the criminal law for their official acts." Post, at 9. Conspicuously absent is mention of the fact that since the founding, no President has ever faced criminal charges—let alone for his conduct in office. And accordingly no court has ever been faced with the question of a President's immunity from prosecution. All that our Nation's practice establishes on the subject is silence.

Coming up short on reasoning, the dissents repeatedly level variations of the accusation that the Court has rendered the President "above the law." See, e.g., post, at 1, 3, 11, 12, 21, 30 (opinion of SOTOMAYOR, J.); post, at 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 19 (opinion of JACKSON, J.). As before, that "rhetorically chilling" contention is "wholly unjustified." Fitzger- ald, 457 U. S., at 758, n. 41. Like everyone else, the President is subject to prosecution in his unofficial capacity. But unlike anyone else, the President is a branch of government, and the Constitution vests in him sweeping powers and duties. Accounting for that reality—and ensuring that the President may exercise those powers forcefully, as the Framers anticipated he would—does not place him above the law; it preserves the basic structure of the Constitution from which that law derives.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The dissents' positions in the end boil down to ignoring the Constitution's separation of powers and the Court's precedent and instead fear mongering on the basis of extreme hypotheticals about a future where the President "feels empowered to violate federal criminal law." Post, at 18 (opinion of SOTOMAYOR, J.); see post, at 26, 29–30; post, at 8–9, 10, 12, 16, 20–21 (opinion of JACKSON, J.). The dissents overlook the more likely prospect of an Executive Branch that cannibalizes itself, with each successive President free to prosecute his predecessors, yet unable to boldly and fearlessly carry out his duties for fear that he may be next. For instance, Section 371—which has been charged in this case—is a broadly worded criminal statute that can cover "'any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing or defeating the lawful function of any department of Government.'" United States v. Johnson, 383 U. S. 169, 172 (1966) (quoting Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 479 (1910)). Virtually every President is criticized for insufficiently enforcing some aspect of federal law (such as drug, gun, immigration, or environmental laws). An enterprising prosecutor in a new administration may assert that a previous President violated that broad statute. Without immunity, such types of prosecutions of ex-Presidents could quickly become routine. The enfeebling of the Presidency and our Government that would result from such a cycle of factional strife is exactly what the Framers intended to avoid. Ignoring those risks, the dissents are instead content to leave the preservation of our system of separated powers up to the good faith of prosecutors.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Finally, the principal dissent finds it "troubling" that the Court does not "designate any course of conduct alleged in the indictment as private." Post, at 27. Despite the unprecedented nature of this case, the significant constitutional questions that it raises, its expedited treatment in the lower courts and in this Court, the lack of factual analysis in the lower courts, and the lack of briefing on how to categorize the conduct alleged, the principal dissent would go ahead and declare all of it unofficial. The other dissent, meanwhile, analyzes the case under comprehensive models and paradigms of its own concoction and accuses the Court of providing "no meaningful guidance about how to apply [the] new paradigm or how to categorize a President's conduct." Post, at 13 (opinion of JACKSON, J.). It would have us exhaustively define every application of Presidential immunity. See post, at 13–14. Our dissenting colleagues exude an impressive infallibility. While their confidence may be inspiring, the Court adheres to time-tested practices instead—deciding what is required to dispose of this case and remanding after "revers[ing] on a threshold question," Zivotofsky, 566 U. S., at 201, to obtain "guidance from the litigants [and] the court below," Vidal v. Elster, 602 U. S. 286, 328 (2024) (SOTOMAYOR, J., concurring in judgment).

V

This case poses a question of lasting significance: When may a former President be prosecuted for official acts taken during his Presidency? Our Nation has never before needed an answer. But in addressing that question today, unlike the political branches and the public at large, we cannot afford to fixate exclusively, or even primarily, on present exigencies. In a case like this one, focusing on "transient results" may have profound consequences for the separation of powers and for the future of our Republic. Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 634 (Jackson, J., concurring). Our perspective must be more farsighted, for "[t]he peculiar circumstances of the moment may render a measure more or less wise, but cannot render it more or less constitutional." Chief Justice John Marshall, A Friend of the Constitution No. V, Alexandria Gazette, July 5, 1819, in John Marshall's Defense of McCulloch v. Maryland 190–191 (G. Gunther ed. 1969).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Our first President had such a perspective. In his Farewell Address, George Washington reminded the Nation that "a Government of as much vigour as is consistent with the perfect security of Liberty is indispensable." 35 Writings of George Washington 226 (J. Fitzpatrick ed. 1940). A government "too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction," he warned, could lead to the "frightful despotism" of "alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge." Id., at 226–227. And the way to avoid that cycle, he explained, was to ensure that government powers remained "properly distributed and adjusted." Id., at 226.

It is these enduring principles that guide our decision in this case. The President enjoys no immunity for his unofficial acts, and not everything the President does is official. The President is not above the law. But Congress may not criminalize the President's conduct in carrying out the responsibilities of the Executive Branch under the Constitution. And the system of separated powers designed by the Framers has always demanded an energetic, independent Executive. The President therefore may not be prosecuted for exercising his core constitutional powers, and he is entitled, at a minimum, to a presumptive immunity from prosecution for all his official acts. That immunity applies equally to all occupants of the Oval Office, regardless of politics, policy, or party.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals for the D. C. Circuit is vacated, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is so ordered.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–939

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

[July 1, 2024]

JUSTICE THOMAS, concurring.

Few things would threaten our constitutional order more than criminally prosecuting a former President for his official acts. Fortunately, the Constitution does not permit us to chart such a dangerous course. As the Court forcefully explains, the Framers "deemed an energetic executive essential to . . . the security of liberty," and our "system of separated powers" accordingly insulates the President from prosecution for his official acts. Ante, at 10, 42 (internal quotation marks omitted). To conclude otherwise would hamstring the vigorous Executive that our Constitution envisions. "While the separation of powers may prevent us from righting every wrong, it does so in order to ensure that we do not lose liberty." Morrison v. Olson, 487 U. S. 654, 710–711 (1988) (Scalia, J., dissenting).

I write separately to highlight another way in which this prosecution may violate our constitutional structure. In this case, the Attorney General purported to appoint a private citizen as Special Counsel to prosecute a former President on behalf of the United States. But, I am not sure that any office for the Special Counsel has been "established by Law," as the Constitution requires. Art. II, §2, cl. 2. By requiring that Congress create federal offices "by Law," the Constitution imposes an important check against the President—he cannot create offices at his pleasure. If there is no law establishing the office that the Special Counsel occupies, then he cannot proceed with this prosecution. A private citizen cannot criminally prosecute anyone, let alone a former President.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

No former President has faced criminal prosecution for his acts while in office in the more than 200 years since the founding of our country. And, that is so despite numerous past Presidents taking actions that many would argue constitute crimes. If this unprecedented prosecution is to proceed, it must be conducted by someone duly authorized to do so by the American people. The lower courts should thus answer these essential questions concerning the Special Counsel's appointment before proceeding.

I

The Constitution sets forth how an office may be created and how it may be filled. The Appointments Clause provides:

> "[The President] shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Department." Art. II, §2, cl. 2.

The constitutional process for filling an office is plain from this text. The default manner for appointing "Officers of the United States" is nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. Ibid. "But the Clause provides a limited exception for the appointment of inferior officers: Congress may 'by Law' authorize" one of three specified actors "to appoint inferior officers without the advice and consent of the Senate." NLRB v. SW General, Inc., 580 U. S. 288, 312 (2017) (THOMAS, J., concurring). As relevant here, a "Hea[d] of Department"—such as the Attorney General—is one such actor that Congress may authorize "by Law" to appoint inferior officers without senatorial confirmation. Art. II, §2, cl. 2.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Before the President or a Department Head can appoint any officer, however, the Constitution requires that the underlying office be "established by Law."[1] The Constitution itself creates some offices, most obviously that of the President and Vice President. See §1. Although the Constitution contemplates that there will be "other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for," it clearly requires that those offices "shall be established by Law." §2, cl. 2. And, "established by law" refers to an office that Congress creates "by statute." Lucia v. SEC, 585 U. S. 237, 254 (2018) (THOMAS, J., concurring); see also United States v. Maurice, 26 F. Cas. 1211, 1213 (No. 15,747) (CC Va. 1823) (Marshall, C. J.).

The limitation on the President's power to create offices grew out of the Founders' experience with the English monarchy. The King could wield significant power by both creating and filling offices as he saw fit. He was "emphatically and truly styled the fountain of honor. He not only appoint[ed] to all offices, but [could] create offices." The Federalist No. 69, p. 421 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961); see also 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 271 (T.

---

[1] Although a Government official may also be a "nonofficer employe[e]," I set aside that category because it is difficult to see how an official exercising the Department of Justice's duties to enforce the criminal law by leading a prosecution could be anything but an officer. Lucia v. SEC, 585 U. S. 237, 253, n. 1 (2018) (THOMAS, J., concurring); see SW General, 580 U. S., at 314 (opinion of THOMAS, J.). If the Special Counsel were a nonofficer employee, the constitutional problems with this prosecution would only be more serious. For now, I assume without deciding that the Special Counsel is an officer.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Cooley ed. 1871) ("[A]s the king may create new titles, so may he create new offices"). That ability to create offices raised many "concerns about the King's ability to amass too much power"; the King could both create a multitude of offices and then fill them with his supporters. J. Mascott, Who Are "Officers of the United States"? 70 Stan. L. Rev. 443, 492 (2018) (Mascott); see also G. Wood, The Creation of the American Republic 1776–1787, p. 143 (1969) (describing "the power of appointment to offices" as "the most insidious and powerful weapon of eighteenth-century despotism"); T. Paine, Common Sense (1776), reprinted in The Great Works of Thomas Paine 11 (1877) (explaining that "the crown . . . derives its whole consequence merely from being the giver of places and pensions"). In fact, one of the grievances raised by the American colonists in declaring their independence was that the King "ha[d] erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people and eat out their substance." Declaration of Independence ¶12. The Founders thus drafted the Constitution with "evidently a great inferiority in the power of the President, in this particular, to that of the British king." The Federalist No. 69, at 421.

The Founders broke from the monarchial model by giving the President the power to fill offices (with the Senate's approval), but not the power to create offices. They did so by "imposing the constitutional requirement that new officer positions be 'established by Law' rather than through a King-like custom of the head magistrate unilaterally creating new offices." Mascott 492–493 (footnote omitted); see also 1 Annals of Cong. 581–582 (1789) ("The powers relative to offices are partly Legislative and partly Executive. The Legislature creates the office, defines the powers, limits its duration, and annexes a compensation"); see also ibid. (describing the power to "designat[e] the man to fill the office" as "of an Executive nature"). The Constitution thus "giv[es]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress broad authority to establish and organize the Executive Branch." Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 591 U. S. 197, 266 (2020) (KAGAN, J., concurring in judgment in part and dissenting in part). By keeping the ability to create offices out of the President's hands, the Founders ensured that no President could unilaterally create an army of officer positions to then fill with his supporters. Instead, our Constitution leaves it in the hands of the people's elected representatives to determine whether new executive offices should exist.

Longstanding practice from the founding to today comports with this original understanding that Congress must create offices by law. The First Congress, for instance, routinely and explicitly created offices by statute. See, e.g., §35, 1 Stat. 92–93 (creating the offices of Attorney General and U. S. Attorney for each district); see also §§1–2, id., at 50 (creating offices of Secretary of War and his Chief Clerk); ch. 12, §1, id., at 65 (creating offices within the Department of Treasury for Secretary of the Treasury, a Comptroller, Auditor, Treasurer, Register, and Assistant to the Secretary). Still today, Congress creates the offices that the Executive Branch may fill. For example, Congress has created several offices within the Department of Justice, including the offices of the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, Associate Attorney General, Solicitor General, and Assistant Attorneys General. See 28 U. S. C. §§503–506. For some agencies, Congress has also granted the agency head the power to "appoint such officers and employees . . . as are necessary to execute the functions vested in him." 7 U. S. C. §610(a) (Department of Agriculture); see also, e.g., 20 U. S. C. §3461 (Department of Education); 42 U. S. C. §913 (Department of Health and Human Services).

In the past, Congress has at times expressly created offices similar to the position now occupied by the Special Counsel. Congress created an office for a "special counsel" to investigate the Teapot Dome Scandal and pursue prosecutions. See ch. 16, 43 Stat. 6. And, a statute provided for "the appointment of an independent counsel" that we addressed in Morrison v. Olson. See 28 U. S. C. §592. That statute lapsed, and Congress has not since reauthorized the appointment of an independent counsel. See §599.[2]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

We cannot ignore the importance that the Constitution places on who creates a federal office. To guard against tyranny, the Founders required that a federal office be "established by Law." As James Madison cautioned, "[i]f there is any point in which the separation of the Legislative and Executive powers ought to be maintained with greater caution, it is that which relates to officers and offices." 1 Annals of Cong. 581. If Congress has not reached a consensus that a particular office should exist, the Executive lacks the power to create and fill an office of his own accord.

II

It is difficult to see how the Special Counsel has an office "established by Law," as required by the Constitution. When the Attorney General appointed the Special Counsel, he did not identify any statute that clearly creates such an office. See Dept. of Justice Order No. 5559–2022 (Nov. 18, 2022). Nor did he rely on a statute granting him the authority to appoint officers as he deems fit, as the heads of some other agencies have.[3] See supra, at 5. Instead, the Attorney General relied upon several statutes of a general nature. See Order No. 5559–2022 (citing 28 U. S. C. §§509, 510, 515, 533).

---

[2] To be sure, a few Presidents have appointed "special prosecutors" without pointing to any express statutory authorization. See generally T. Eastland, Ethics, Politics and the Independent Counsel 8–9 (1989) (describing past uses of special prosecutors). But, this Court had no occasion to review the constitutionality of those prosecutors' authority.

[3] In fact, Congress gave the Attorney General the power to appoint "additional officers . . . as he deems necessary"—but, only for the Bureau of Prisons. 18 U. S. C. §4041.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

None of the statutes cited by the Attorney General appears to create an office for the Special Counsel, and especially not with the clarity typical of past statutes used for that purpose. See, e.g., 43 Stat. 6 ("[T]he President is further authorized and directed to appoint . . . special counsel who shall have charge and control of the prosecution of such litigation"). Sections 509 and 510 are generic provisions concerning the functions of the Attorney General and his ability to delegate authority to "any other officer, employee, or agency." Section 515 contemplates an "attorney specially appointed by the Attorney General under law," thereby suggesting that such an attorney's office must have already been created by some other law. (Emphasis added.) As for §533, it provides that "[t]he Attorney General may appoint officials . . . to detect and prosecute crimes against the United States." (Emphasis added.) It is unclear whether an "official" is equivalent to an "officer" as used by the Constitution. See Lucia, 585 U. S., at 254–255 (opinion of THOMAS, J.) (considering the meaning of "officer"). Regardless, this provision would be a curious place for Congress to hide the creation of an office for a Special Counsel. It is placed in a chapter concerning the Federal Bureau of Investigation (§§531–540d), not the separate chapters concerning U. S. Attorneys (§§541–550) or the now-lapsed Independent Counsel (§§591–599).[4]

To be sure, the Court gave passing reference to the cited statutes as supporting the appointment of the Special Prosecutor in United States v. Nixon, 418 U. S. 683, 694 (1974), but it provided no analysis of those provisions' text. Perhaps there is an answer for why these statutes create an office for the Special Counsel. But, before this consequen-

[4] Regulations remain on the books that contemplate an "outside" Special Counsel, 28 CFR §600.1 (2023), but I doubt a regulation can create a federal office without underlying statutory authority to do so.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

tial prosecution proceeds, we should at least provide a fulsome explanation of why that is so.

Even if the Special Counsel has a valid office, questions remain as to whether the Attorney General filled that office in compliance with the Appointments Clause. For example, it must be determined whether the Special Counsel is a principal or inferior officer. If the former, his appointment is invalid because the Special Counsel was not nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, as principal officers must be. Art. II, §2, cl. 2. Even if he is an inferior officer, the Attorney General could appoint him without Presidential nomination and senatorial confirmation only if "Congress . . . by law vest[ed] the Appointment" in the Attorney General as a "Hea[d] of Department." Ibid. So, the Special Counsel's appointment is invalid unless a statute created the Special Counsel's office and gave the Attorney General the power to fill it "by Law."

Whether the Special Counsel's office was "established by Law" is not a trifling technicality. If Congress has not reached a consensus that a particular office should exist, the Executive lacks the power to unilaterally create and then fill that office. Given that the Special Counsel purports to wield the Executive Branch's power to prosecute, the consequences are weighty. Our Constitution's separation of powers, including its separation of the powers to create and fill offices, is "the absolutely central guarantee of a just Government" and the liberty that it secures for us all. Morrison, 487 U. S., at 697 (Scalia, J., dissenting). There is no prosecution that can justify imperiling it.

* * *

In this case, there has been much discussion about ensuring that a President "is not above the law." But, as the Court explains, the President's immunity from prosecution for his official acts is the law. The Constitution provides for

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"an energetic executive," because such an Executive is "essential to . . . the security of liberty." Ante, at 10 (internal quotation marks omitted). Respecting the protections that the Constitution provides for the Office of the Presidency secures liberty. In that same vein, the Constitution also secures liberty by separating the powers to create and fill offices. And, there are serious questions whether the Attorney General has violated that structure by creating an office of the Special Counsel that has not been established by law. Those questions must be answered before this prosecution can proceed. We must respect the Constitution's separation of powers in all its forms, else we risk rendering its protection of liberty a parchment guarantee.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–939

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

[July 1, 2024]

JUSTICE BARRETT, concurring in part.

For reasons I explain below, I do not join Part III–C of the Court's opinion. The remainder of the opinion is consistent with my view that the Constitution prohibits Congress from criminalizing a President's exercise of core Article II powers and closely related conduct. That said, I would have framed the underlying legal issues differently. The Court describes the President's constitutional protection from certain prosecutions as an "immunity." As I see it, that term is shorthand for two propositions: The President can challenge the constitutionality of a criminal statute as applied to official acts alleged in the indictment, and he can obtain interlocutory review of the trial court's ruling.

There appears to be substantial agreement on the first point. Like the Court, the dissenting Justices and the Special Counsel all accept that some prosecutions of a President's official conduct may be unconstitutional. See post, at 16 (opinion of SOTOMAYOR, J.); Brief for United States 24–30. As for interlocutory review, our precedent recognizes that resolving certain legal issues before trial is necessary to safeguard important constitutional interests—here, Executive Branch independence on matters that Article II assigns to the President's discretion.

Properly conceived, the President's constitutional protection from prosecution is narrow. The Court leaves open the possibility that the Constitution forbids prosecuting the President for any official conduct, instructing the lower courts to address that question in the first instance. See ante, at 14. I would have answered it now. Though I agree that a President cannot be held criminally liable for conduct within his "conclusive and preclusive" authority and closely related acts, ante, at 8–9, the Constitution does not vest every exercise of executive power in the President's sole discretion, Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U. S. 579, 637 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).[1] Congress has concurrent authority over many Government functions, and it may sometimes use that authority to regulate the President's official conduct, including by criminal statute. Article II poses no barrier to prosecution in such cases.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I would thus assess the validity of criminal charges predicated on most official acts—i.e., those falling outside of the President's core executive power—in two steps. The first question is whether the relevant criminal statute reaches the President's official conduct. Not every broadly worded statute does. For example, §956 covers conspiracy to murder in a foreign country and does not expressly exclude the President's decision to, say, order a hostage rescue mission abroad. 18 U. S. C. §956(a). The underlying murder statute, however, covers only "unlawful" killings. §1111. The Office of Legal Counsel has interpreted that phrase to reflect a public-authority exception for official acts involving the military and law enforcement. Memorandum from D. Barron, Acting Assistant Atty. Gen., to E. Holder, Atty.

[1] Consistent with our separation of powers precedent, I agree with the Court that the supervision and removal of appointed, high ranking Justice Department officials falls within the President's core executive power. See Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 591 U. S. 197, 213–215 (2020); ante, at 19–21. I do not understand the Court to hold that all exercises of the Take Care power fall within the core executive power. Cf. post, at 24 (SOTOMAYOR, J., dissenting). I agree with the dissent that the Constitution does not justify such an expansive view. Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Gen., Re: Applicability of Federal Criminal Laws and the Constitution to Contemplated Lethal Operations Against Shaykh Anwar al-Aulaqi 12–19 (July 16, 2010); see also Brief for United States 29–30; post, at 16, and n. 3 (SOTOMAYOR, J., dissenting). I express no view about the merits of that interpretation, but it shows that the threshold question of statutory interpretation is a nontrivial step.

If the statute covers the alleged official conduct, the prosecution may proceed only if applying it in the circumstances poses no "'dange[r] of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch.'" Ante, at 14 (quoting Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731, 754 (1982)). On remand, the lower courts will have to apply that standard to various allegations involving the President's official conduct.[2] Some of those allegations raise unsettled questions about the scope of Article II power, see ante, at 21–28, but others do not. For example, the indictment alleges that the President "asked the Arizona House Speaker to call the legislature into session to hold a hearing" about election fraud claims. App. 193. The President has no authority over state legislatures or their leadership, so it is hard to see how prosecuting him for crimes committed when dealing with the Arizona House Speaker would unconstitutionally intrude on executive power.

[2] This analysis is unnecessary for allegations involving the President's private conduct because the Constitution offers no protection from prosecution of acts taken in a private capacity. Ante, at 15. Sorting private from official conduct sometimes will be difficult—but not always. Take the President's alleged attempt to organize alternative slates of electors. See, e.g., App. 208. In my view, that conduct is private and therefore not entitled to protection. See post, at 27–28 (SOTOMAYOR, J., dissenting). The Constitution vests power to appoint Presidential electors in the States. Art. II, §1, cl. 2; see also Chiafalo v. Washington, 591 U. S. 578, 588–589 (2020). And while Congress has a limited role in that process, see Art. II, §1, cls. 3–4, the President has none. In short, a President has no legal authority—and thus no official capacity—to influence how the States appoint their electors. I see no plausible argument for barring prosecution of that alleged conduct.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This two-step analysis—considering first whether the statute applies and then whether its application to the particular facts is constitutional—is similar to the approach that the Special Counsel presses in this Court. Brief for United States 24–30. It is also our usual approach to considering the validity of statutes in situations raising a constitutional question. See, e.g., Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 591 U. S. 197, 213, 229 (2020).[3] An important difference in this context is that the President is entitled to an interlocutory appeal of the trial court's ruling. See ante, at 36. A criminal defendant in federal court normally must wait until after trial to seek review of the trial court's refusal to dismiss charges. See United States v. MacDonald, 435 U. S. 850, 853–854 (1978); see also 18 U. S. C. §3731. But where trial itself threatens certain constitutional interests, we have treated the trial court's resolution of the issue as a "final decision" for purposes of appellate jurisdiction. MacDonald, 435 U. S., at 854–856; see 28 U. S. C. §1291; see also §1257.

---

[3]The Court has sometimes applied an avoidance canon when interpreting a statute that would interfere with the President's prerogatives. See, e.g., Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U. S. 788, 800–801 (1992); Public Citizen v. Dept. of Justice, 491 U. S. 440, 465–467 (1989); see also Sale v. Haitian Centers Council, Inc., 509 U. S. 155, 188 (1993). The Office of Legal Counsel has advocated for a clear-statement rule if applying a statute would "raise serious constitutional questions relating to the President's constitutional authority." See Application of 28 U. S. C. §458 to Presidential Appointments of Federal Judges, 19 Op. OLC 350, 350–357 (1995). In my view, neither canon applies in this circumstance. Courts should instead determine the statute's ordinary meaning and, if it covers the alleged official acts, assess whether prosecution would intrude on the President's constitutional authority. See Public Citizen, 491 U. S., at 481–482 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment) (declining to apply the avoidance canon and concluding that the Federal Advisory Committee Act is unconstitutional as applied).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The present circumstances fall squarely within our precedent authorizing interlocutory review. When a President moves to dismiss an indictment on Article II grounds, he "makes no challenge whatsoever to the merits of the charge against him." Abney v. United States, 431 U. S. 651, 659 (1977) (allowing interlocutory appeal of rejection of double jeopardy defense). He instead contests whether the Constitution allows Congress to criminalize the alleged conduct, a question that is "collateral to, and separable from" his guilt or innocence. Ibid. Moreover, the President's Executive Branch authority "would be significantly undermined if appellate review" of the constitutional challenge "were postponed until after conviction and sentence." Id., at 660; see also Helstoski v. Meanor, 442 U. S. 500, 507 (1979) (allowing interlocutory appeal of refusal to dismiss an indictment on Speech or Debate Clause grounds). The prospect of a trial court erroneously allowing the prosecution to proceed poses a unique danger to the "independence of the Executive Branch." Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 800 (2020). As the Court explains, the possibility that the President will be made to defend his official conduct before a jury after he leaves office could distort his decisions while in office. Ante, at 13–14, 36. These Article II concerns do not insulate the President from prosecution. But they do justify interlocutory review of the trial court's final decision on the President's as-applied constitutional challenge. See Helstoski, 442 U. S., at 507–508; Abney, 431 U. S., at 659–661; see also Reply Brief for United States in No. 23–624, p. 5 (agreeing that the President "has a right to an interlocutory appeal from the district court's rejection of his immunity defense").

I understand most of the Court's opinion to be consistent with these views. I do not join Part III–C, however, which holds that the Constitution limits the introduction of protected conduct as evidence in a criminal prosecution of a President, beyond the limits afforded by executive privilege. See ante, at 30–32. I disagree with that holding; on this score, I agree with the dissent. See post, at 25–27 (SOTOMAYOR, J., dissenting). The Constitution does not require blinding juries to the circumstances surrounding conduct for which Presidents can be held liable. Consider a bribery prosecution—a charge not at issue here but one that provides a useful example. The federal bribery statute forbids any public official to seek or accept a thing of value "for or because of any official act." 18 U. S. C. §201(c). The Constitution, of course, does not authorize a President to seek or accept bribes, so the Government may prosecute him if he does so. See Art. II, §4 (listing "Bribery" as an impeachable offense); see also Memorandum from L. Silberman, Deputy Atty. Gen., to R. Burress, Office of the President, Re: Conflict of Interest Problems Arising Out of the President's Nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller To Be Vice President Under the Twenty-Fifth Amendment to the Constitution 5 (Aug. 28, 1974) (suggesting that the federal bribery statute applies to the President). Yet excluding from trial any mention of the official act connected to the bribe would hamstring the prosecution. To make sense of charges alleging a quid pro quo, the jury must be allowed to hear about both the quid and the quo, even if the quo, standing alone, could not be a basis for the President's criminal liability.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I appreciate the Court's concern that allowing into evidence official acts for which the President cannot be held criminally liable may prejudice the jury. Ante, at 31. But the rules of evidence are equipped to handle that concern on a case-by-case basis. Most importantly, a trial court can exclude evidence of the President's protected conduct "if its probative value is substantially outweighed by a danger of . . . unfair prejudice" or "confusing the issues." Fed. Rule Evid. 403; see also Rule 105 (requiring the court to "restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly"). The balance is more likely to favor admitting evidence of an official act in a bribery prosecution, for instance, than one in which the protected conduct has little connection to the charged offense. And if the evidence comes in, the trial court can instruct the jury to consider it only for lawful purposes. See Richardson v. Marsh, 481 U. S. 200, 206–207 (1987). I see no need to depart from that familiar and time-tested procedure here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

* * *

The Constitution does not insulate Presidents from criminal liability for official acts. But any statute regulating the exercise of executive power is subject to a constitutional challenge. See, e.g., Collins v. Yellen, 594 U. S. 220, 235–236 (2021); Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U. S. 189, 192–194 (2012); Free Enterprise Fund v. Public Company Accounting Oversight Bd., 561 U. S. 477, 487–488 (2010). A criminal statute is no exception. Thus, a President facing prosecution may challenge the constitutionality of a criminal statute as applied to official acts alleged in the indictment. If that challenge fails, however, he must stand trial.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–939

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

[July 1, 2024]

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR, with whom JUSTICE KAGAN and JUSTICE JACKSON join, dissenting.

Today's decision to grant former Presidents criminal immunity reshapes the institution of the Presidency. It makes a mockery of the principle, foundational to our Constitution and system of Government, that no man is above the law. Relying on little more than its own misguided wisdom about the need for "bold and unhesitating action" by the President, ante, at 3, 13, the Court gives former President Trump all the immunity he asked for and more. Because our Constitution does not shield a former President from answering for criminal and treasonous acts, I dissent.

I

The indictment paints a stark portrait of a President desperate to stay in power.

In the weeks leading up to January 6, 2021, then-President Trump allegedly "spread lies that there had been outcome-determinative fraud in the election and that he had actually won," App. 181, Indictment ¶2, despite being "notified repeatedly" by his closest advisers "that his claims were untrue," id., at 188, ¶11.

When dozens of courts swiftly rejected these claims, Trump allegedly "pushed officials in certain states to ignore the popular vote; disenfranchise millions of voters; dismiss legitimate electors; and ultimately, cause the ascertainment of and voting by illegitimate electors" in his favor. Id., at 185–186, ¶10(a). It is alleged that he went so far as to threaten one state election official with criminal prosecution if the official did not "'find' 11,780 votes" Trump needed to change the election result in that state. Id., at 202, ¶31(f). When state officials repeatedly declined to act outside their legal authority and alter their state election processes, Trump and his co-conspirators purportedly developed a plan to disrupt and displace the legitimate election certification process by organizing fraudulent slates of electors. See id., at 208–209, ¶¶53–54.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

As the date of the certification proceeding neared, Trump allegedly also sought to "use the power and authority of the Justice Department" to bolster his knowingly false claims of election fraud by initiating "sham election crime investigations" and sending official letters "falsely claim[ing] that the Justice Department had identified significant concerns that may have impacted the election outcome" while "falsely present[ing] the fraudulent electors as a valid alternative to the legitimate electors." Id., at 186–187, ¶10(c). When the Department refused to do as he asked, Trump turned to the Vice President. Initially, he sought to persuade the Vice President "to use his ceremonial role at the January 6 certification proceeding to fraudulently alter the election results." Id., at 187, ¶10(d). When persuasion failed, he purportedly "attempted to use a crowd of supporters that he had gathered in Washington, D. C., to pressure the Vice President to fraudulently alter the election results." Id., at 221, ¶86.

Speaking to that crowd on January 6, Trump "falsely claimed that, based on fraud, the Vice President could alter the outcome of the election results." Id., at 229, ¶104(a). When this crowd then "violently attacked the Capitol and halted the proceeding," id., at 188, ¶10(e), Trump allegedly delayed in taking any step to rein in the chaos he had unleashed. Instead, in a last desperate ploy to hold onto power, he allegedly "attempted to exploit the violence and chaos at the Capitol" by pressuring lawmakers to delay the certification of the election and ultimately declare him the winner. Id., at 233, ¶119. That is the backdrop against which this case comes to the Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II

The Court now confronts a question it has never had to answer in the Nation's history: Whether a former President enjoys immunity from federal criminal prosecution. The majority thinks he should, and so it invents an atextual, ahistorical, and unjustifiable immunity that puts the President above the law.

The majority makes three moves that, in effect, completely insulate Presidents from criminal liability. First, the majority creates absolute immunity for the President's exercise of "core constitutional powers." Ante, at 6. This holding is unnecessary on the facts of the indictment, and the majority's attempt to apply it to the facts expands the concept of core powers beyond any recognizable bounds. In any event, it is quickly eclipsed by the second move, which is to create expansive immunity for all "official act[s]." Ante, at 14. Whether described as presumptive or absolute, under the majority's rule, a President's use of any official power for any purpose, even the most corrupt, is immune from prosecution. That is just as bad as it sounds, and it is baseless. Finally, the majority declares that evidence concerning acts for which the President is immune can play no role in any criminal prosecution against him. See ante, at 30–32. That holding, which will prevent the Government from using a President's official acts to prove knowledge or intent in prosecuting private offenses, is nonsensical.

Argument by argument, the majority invents immunity through brute force. Under scrutiny, its arguments crumble. To start, the majority's broad "official acts" immunity is inconsistent with text, history, and established understandings of the President's role. See Part III, infra. Moreover, it is deeply wrong, even on its own functionalist terms. See Part IV, infra. Next, the majority's "core" immunity is both unnecessary and misguided. See Part V, infra. Furthermore, the majority's illogical evidentiary holding is unprecedented. See Part VI, infra. Finally, this majority's project will have disastrous consequences for the Presidency and for our democracy. See Part VII, infra.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III

The main takeaway of today's decision is that all of a President's official acts, defined without regard to motive or intent, are entitled to immunity that is "at least . . . presumptive," and quite possibly "absolute." Ante, at 14. Whenever the President wields the enormous power of his office, the majority says, the criminal law (at least presumptively) cannot touch him. This official-acts immunity has "no firm grounding in constitutional text, history, or precedent." Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization, 597 U. S. 215, 280 (2022). Indeed, those "standard grounds for constitutional decisionmaking," id., at 279, all point in the opposite direction. No matter how you look at it, the majority's official-acts immunity is utterly indefensible.

A

The majority calls for a "careful assessment of the scope of Presidential power under the Constitution." Ante, at 5. For the majority, that "careful assessment" does not involve the Constitution's text. I would start there.

The Constitution's text contains no provision for immunity from criminal prosecution for former Presidents. Of course, "the silence of the Constitution on this score is not dispositive." United States v. Nixon, 418 U. S. 683, 706, n. 16 (1974). Insofar as the majority rails against the notion that a "'specific textual basis'" is required, ante, at 37 (quoting Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731, 750, n. 31 (1982)), it is attacking an argument that has not been made here. The omission in the text of the Constitution is worth noting, however, for at least three reasons.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, the Framers clearly knew how to provide for immunity from prosecution. They did provide a narrow immunity for legislators in the Speech or Debate Clause. See Art. I, §6, cl. 1 ("Senators and Representatives . . . shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place"). They did not extend the same or similar immunity to Presidents.

Second, "some state constitutions at the time of the Framing specifically provided 'express criminal immunities' to sitting governors." Brief for Scholars of Constitutional Law as Amici Curiae 4 (quoting S. Prakash, Prosecuting and Punishing Our Presidents, 100 Tex. L. Rev. 55, 69 (2021)). The Framers chose not to include similar language in the Constitution to immunize the President. If the Framers "had wanted to create some constitutional privilege to shield the President . . . from criminal indictment," they could have done so. Memorandum from R. Rotunda to K. Starr re: Indictability of the President 18 (May 13, 1998). They did not.

Third, insofar as the Constitution does speak to this question, it actually contemplates some form of criminal liability for former Presidents. The majority correctly rejects Trump's argument that a former President cannot be prosecuted unless he has been impeached by the House and convicted by the Senate for the same conduct. See ante, at 32–

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

34; Part IV–C, infra. The majority ignores, however, that the Impeachment Judgment Clause cuts against its own position. That Clause presumes the availability of criminal process as a backstop by establishing that an official impeached and convicted by the Senate "shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law." Art. I, §3, cl. 7 (emphasis added). That Clause clearly contemplates that a former President may be subject to criminal prosecution for the same conduct that resulted (or could have resulted) in an impeachment judgment—including conduct such as "Bribery," Art. II, §4, which implicates official acts almost by definition.[1]

B

Aware of its lack of textual support, the majority points out that this Court has "recognized Presidential immunities and privileges 'rooted in the constitutional tradition of the separation of powers and supported by our history.'" Ante, at 10 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 749). That is true, as far as it goes. Nothing in our history, however, supports the majority's entirely novel immunity from criminal prosecution for official acts.

The historical evidence that exists on Presidential immunity from criminal prosecution cuts decisively against it. For instance, Alexander Hamilton wrote that former Presidents would be "liable to prosecution and punishment in the ordinary course of law." The Federalist No. 69, p. 452 (J. Harv. Lib. ed. 2009). For Hamilton, that was an important distinction between "the king of Great Britain," who was "sacred and inviolable," and the "President of the United States," who "would be amenable to personal punishment

[1] Article II, §4, provides: "The President, Vice President and all Civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

and disgrace." Id., at 458. In contrast to the king, the President should be subject to "personal responsibility" for his actions, "stand[ing] upon no better ground than a governor of New York, and upon worse ground than the governors of Maryland and Delaware," whose State Constitutions gave them some immunity. Id., at 452.

At the Constitutional Convention, James Madison, who was aware that some state constitutions provided governors immunity, proposed that the Convention "conside[r] what privileges ought to be allowed to the Executive." 2 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, p. 503 (M. Farrand ed. 1911). There is no record of any such discussion. Ibid. Delegate Charles Pinckney later explained that "[t]he Convention which formed the Constitution well knew" that "no subject had been more abused than privilege," and so it "determined to . . . limi[t] privilege to what was necessary, and no more." 3 id., at 385. "No privilege . . . was intended for [the] Executive." Ibid.[2]

Other commentators around the time of the Founding observed that federal officials had no immunity from prosecution, drawing no exception for the President. James Wilson recognized that federal officers who use their official powers to commit crimes "may be tried by their country; and if their criminality is established, the law will punish. A grand jury may present, a petty jury may convict, and the judges will pronounce the punishment." 2 Debates on the Constitution 177 (J. Elliot ed. 1836). A few decades later, Justice Story evinced the same understanding. He explained that, when

---

[2] To note, as the majority does, see ante, at 39, that this Court has recognized civil immunities arguably inconsistent with this view is not to say that Pinckney was wrong about what the Framers had "intended." Indeed, Pinckney's contemporaries shared the same view during the ratification debates. See, e.g., 4 Debates on the Constitution 109 (J. Elliot ed. 1836) (J. Iredell) ("If the President does a single act by which the people are prejudiced, he is punishable himself. . . . If he commits any crime, he is punishable by the laws of his country").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

a federal official commits a crime in office, "it is indispensable, that provision should be made, that the common tribunals of justice should be at liberty to entertain jurisdiction of the offence, for the purpose of inflicting, the common punishment applicable to unofficial offenders." 2 Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States §780, pp. 250–251 (1833). Without a criminal trial, he explained, "the grossest official offenders might escape without any substantial punishment, even for crimes, which would subject their fellow citizens to capital punishment." Id., at 251.

This historical evidence reinforces that, from the very beginning, the presumption in this Nation has always been that no man is free to flout the criminal law. The majority fails to recognize or grapple with the lack of historical evidence for its new immunity. With nothing on its side of the ledger, the most the majority can do is claim that the historical evidence is a wash. See ante, at 38–39. It claims that the Court previously has described the "relevant historical evidence on the question of Presidential immunity" as "'fragmentary'" and not worthy of consideration. Ante, at 38 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 31). Yet the Court has described only the evidence regarding "the President's immunity from damages liability" as "fragmentary." Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 751–752, n. 31 (emphasis added). Moreover, far from dismissing that evidence as irrelevant, the Fitzgerald Court was careful to note that "[t]he best historical evidence clearly support[ed]" the immunity from damages liability that it recognized, and it relied in part on that historical evidence to overcome the lack of any textual basis for its immunity. Id., at 152, n. 31. The majority ignores this reliance. It seems history matters to this Court only when it is convenient. See, e.g., New York State Rifle & Pistol Assn., Inc. v. Bruen, 597 U. S. 1 (2022); Dobbs, 597 U. S. 215.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C

Our country's history also points to an established understanding, shared by both Presidents and the Justice Department, that former Presidents are answerable to the criminal law for their official acts. Cf. Chiafalo v. Washington, 591 U. S. 578, 592–593 (2020) ("'Long settled and established practice' may have 'great weight in a proper interpretation of constitutional provisions'" (quoting The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U. S. 655, 689 (1929))). Consider Watergate, for example. After the Watergate tapes revealed President Nixon's misuse of official power to obstruct the Federal Bureau of Investigation's investigation of the Watergate burglary, President Ford pardoned Nixon. Both Ford's pardon and Nixon's acceptance of the pardon necessarily "rested on the understanding that the former President faced potential criminal liability." Brief for United States 15; see also Public Papers of the Presidents, Gerald R. Ford, Vol. 1, Sept. 8, 1974, p. 103 (1975) (granting former President Nixon a "full, free, and absolute pardon . . . for all offenses against the United States which he . . . has committed or may have committed or taken part in during" his Presidency); R. Nixon, Statement by Former President Richard Nixon to P. Buchen, Counsel to President Ford, p. 1 (Sept. 8, 1974) (accepting "full and absolute pardon for any charges which might be brought against me for actions taken during the time I was President of the United States").

Subsequent special counsel and independent counsel investigations have also operated on the assumption that the Government can criminally prosecute former Presidents for their official acts, where they violate the criminal law. See, e.g., 1 L. Walsh, Final Report of the Independent Counsel for Iran/Contra Matters: Investigations and Prosecutions 445 (1993) ("[B]ecause a President, and certainly a past President, is subject to prosecution . . . the conduct of President Reagan in the Iran/contra matter was reviewed by Independent Counsel against the applicable statutes. It was concluded that [his] conduct fell well short of criminality which could be successfully prosecuted").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Indeed, Trump's own lawyers during his second impeachment trial assured Senators that declining to impeach Trump for his conduct related to January 6 would not leave him "in any way above the law." 2 Proceedings of the U. S. Senate in the Impeachment Trial of Donald John Trump, S. Doc. 117–2, p. 144 (2021). They insisted that a former President "is like any other citizen and can be tried in a court of law." Ibid.; see also 1 id., S. Doc. 117–3, at 339 (Trump's impeachment counsel stating that "no former officeholder is immune" from the judicial process "for investigation, prosecution, and punishment"); id., at 322–323 (Trump's impeachment counsel stating: "If my colleagues on this side of the Chamber actually think that President Trump committed a criminal offense . . . [a]fter he is out of office, you go and arrest him"). Now that Trump is facing criminal charges for those acts, though, the tune has changed. Being treated "like any other citizen" no longer seems so appealing.

In sum, the majority today endorses an expansive vision of Presidential immunity that was never recognized by the Founders, any sitting President, the Executive Branch, or even President Trump's lawyers, until now. Settled understandings of the Constitution are of little use to the majority in this case, and so it ignores them.

IV

A

Setting aside this evidence, the majority announces that former Presidents are "absolute[ly]," or "at least . . . presumptive[ly]," immune from criminal prosecution for all of their official acts. Ante, at 14 (emphasis omitted). The majority purports to keep us in suspense as to whether this immunity is absolute or presumptive, but it quickly gives up the game. It explains that, "[a]t a minimum, the President must . . . be immune from prosecution for an official act unless the Government can show that applying a criminal prohibition to that act would pose no 'dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch.'" Ibid. (emphasis added). No dangers, none at all. It is hard to imagine a criminal prosecution for a President's official acts that would pose no dangers of intrusion on Presidential authority in the majority's eyes. Nor should that be the standard. Surely some intrusions on the Executive may be "justified by an overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of Congress." Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U. S. 425, 443 (1977). Other intrusions may be justified by the "primary constitutional duty of the Judicial Branch to do justice in criminal prosecutions." United States v. Nixon, 418 U. S. 683, 707 (1974). According to the majority, however, any incursion on Executive power is too much. When presumptive immunity is this conclusive, the majority's indecision as to "whether [official-acts] immunity must be absolute" or whether, instead, "presumptive immunity is sufficient," ante, at 6, hardly matters.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Maybe some future opinion of this Court will decide that presumptive immunity is "sufficient," ibid., and replace the majority's ironclad presumption with one that makes the difference between presumptive and absolute immunity meaningful. Today's Court, however, has replaced a presumption of equality before the law with a presumption that the President is above the law for all of his official acts.

Quick on the heels of announcing this astonishingly broad official-acts immunity, the majority assures us that a former President can still be prosecuted for "unofficial acts." Ante, at 15. Of course he can. No one has questioned the ability to prosecute a former President for unofficial (otherwise known as private) acts. Even Trump did not claim immunity for such acts and, as the majority acknowledges, such an immunity would be impossible to square with Clinton v. Jones, 520 U. S. 681 (1997). See ante, at 15. This unremarkable proposition is no real limit on today's decision. It does not hide the majority's embrace of the most far-reaching view of Presidential immunity on offer.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In fact, the majority's dividing line between "official" and "unofficial" conduct narrows the conduct considered "unofficial" almost to a nullity. It says that whenever the President acts in a way that is "'not manifestly or palpably beyond [his] authority,'" he is taking official action. Ante, at 17 (quoting Blassingame v. Trump, 87 F. 4th 1, 13 (CADC 2023)). It then goes a step further: "In dividing official from unofficial conduct, courts may not inquire into the President's motives." Ante, at 18. It is one thing to say that motive is irrelevant to questions regarding the scope of civil liability, but it is quite another to make it irrelevant to questions regarding criminal liability. Under that rule, any use of official power for any purpose, even the most corrupt purpose indicated by objective evidence of the most corrupt motives and intent, remains official and immune. Under the majority's test, if it can be called a test, the category of Presidential action that can be deemed "unofficial" is destined to be vanishingly small.

Ultimately, the majority pays lip service to the idea that "[t]he President, charged with enforcing federal criminal laws, is not above them," ante, at 13–14, but it then proceeds to place former Presidents beyond the reach of the federal criminal laws for any abuse of official power.

B

So how does the majority get to its rule? With text, history, and established understanding all weighing against it, the majority claims just one arrow in its quiver: the balancing test in Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731 (1983). Yet even that test cuts against it. The majority concludes that official-acts immunity "is required to safeguard the independence and effective functioning of the Executive Branch," ante, at 14, by rejecting that Branch's own protestations that such immunity is not at all required and would in fact be harmful, see Brief for United States 18–24, 29–30. In doing so, it decontextualizes Fitzgerald's language, ignores important qualifications, and reaches a result that the Fitzgerald Court never would have countenanced.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In Fitzgerald, plaintiff A. Ernest Fitzgerald sued then-former President Nixon for money damages. He claimed that, while in office, Nixon had been involved in unlawfully firing him from his government job. See 457 U. S., at 733–741. The question for the Court was whether a former President had immunity from such a civil suit. The Court explained that it was "settled law that the separation-of-powers doctrine does not bar every exercise of jurisdiction over the President of the United States." Id., at 753–754. To determine whether a particular type of suit against a President (or former President) could be heard, a court "must balance the constitutional weight of the interest to be served against the dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch." Id., at 754. The Court explained that, "[w]hen judicial action is needed to serve broad public interests—as when the Court acts, not in derogation of the separation of powers, but to maintain their proper balance, or to vindicate the public interest in an ongoing criminal prosecution—the exercise of jurisdiction has been held warranted." Ibid. (citations omitted).

On the facts before it, the Court concluded that a "merely private suit for damages based on a President's official acts" did not serve those interests. Ibid. The Court reasoned that the "visibility of [the President's] office and the effect of his actions on countless people" made him an easy target for civil suits that "frequently could distract [him] from his public duties." Id., at 753. The public interest in such private civil suits, the Court concluded, was comparatively weak. See id., at 754, n. 37 ("[T]here is a lesser public interest in actions for civil damages than, for example, in criminal prosecutions"). Therefore, the Court held that a former President was immune from such suits. Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the context of a federal criminal prosecution of a former President, however, the danger to the functioning of the Executive Branch is much reduced. Further, as every member of the Fitzgerald Court acknowledged, see Part IV–B–2, infra, the public interest in a criminal prosecution is far weightier. Applying the Fitzgerald balancing here should yield the opposite result. Instead, the majority elides any difference between civil and criminal immunity, granting Trump the same immunity from criminal prosecution that Nixon enjoyed from an unlawful termination suit. That is plainly wrong.

1

The majority relies almost entirely on its view of the danger of intrusion on the Executive Branch, to the exclusion of the other side of the balancing test. Its analysis rests on a questionable conception of the President as incapable of navigating the difficult decisions his job requires while staying within the bounds of the law. It also ignores the fact that he receives robust legal advice on the lawfulness of his actions.

The majority says that the danger "of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch" posed by criminally prosecuting a former President for official conduct "is akin to, indeed greater than, what led us to recognize absolute Presidential immunity from civil damages liability—that the President would be chilled from taking the 'bold and unhesitating action' required of an independent Executive." Ante, at 13 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 745). It is of course important that the President be able to "'"deal fearlessly and impartially with" the duties of his office.'" Ante, at 10 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752). If every action the President takes exposes him personally to vexatious private litigation, the possibility of hamstringing Presidential decisionmaking is very real. Yet there are many facets of criminal liability, which the majority discounts, that make it less likely to chill Presidential action than the threat of civil litigation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, in terms of probability, the threat of criminal liability is much smaller. In Fitzgerald, the threat of vexatious civil litigation loomed large. The Court observed that, given the "visibility of his office and the effect of his actions on countless people, the President would be an easily identifiable target for suits for civil damages." Id., at 753. Although "'the effect of [the President's] actions on countless people' could result in untold numbers of private plaintiffs suing for damages based on any number of Presidential acts" in the civil context, the risk in the criminal context is "only that a former President may face one federal prosecution, in one jurisdiction, for each criminal offense allegedly committed while in office." 2023 WL 8359833, *9 (DC, Dec. 1, 2023) (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 753). The majority's bare assertion that the burden of exposure to federal criminal prosecution is more limiting to a President than the burden of exposure to civil suits does not make it true, and it is not persuasive.

Second, federal criminal prosecutions require "robust procedural safeguards" not found in civil suits. 2023 WL 8359833, *10. The criminal justice system has layers of protections that "filter out insubstantial legal claims," whereas civil litigation lacks "analogous checks." Cheney v. United States Dist. Court for D. C., 542 U. S. 367, 386 (2004). To start, Justice Department policy requires scrupulous and impartial prosecution, founded on both the facts and the law. See generally Dept. of Justice, Justice Manual §9–27.000 (Principles of Federal Prosecution) (June 2023). The grand jury provides an additional check on felony prosecutions, acting as a "buffer or referee between the Government and the people," to ensure that the charges are well-founded. United States v. Williams, 504 U. S. 36, 47 (1992); see also Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 800, 826, n. 6 (1982) (Burger, C. J., dissenting) ("[A] criminal prosecution cannot be commenced absent careful consideration by a grand jury at the request of a prosecutor; the same check is not present with respect to the commencement of civil suits in which advocates are subject to no realistic accountability").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If the prosecution makes it past the grand jury, then the former President still has all the protections our system provides to criminal defendants. If the former President has an argument that a particular statute is unconstitutional as applied to him, then he can move to dismiss the charges on that ground. Indeed, a former President is likely to have legal arguments that would be unavailable to the average criminal defendant. For example, he may be able to rely on a public-authority exception from particular criminal laws,[3] or an advice-of-the-Attorney-General defense, see Tr. of Oral Arg. 107–108.[4] [3] See Nardone v. United States, 302 U. S. 379, 384 (1937) (explaining that public officers may be "impliedly excluded from [statutory] language embracing all persons" if reading the statute to include such officers "would work obvious absurdity as, for example, the application of a speed law to a policeman pursuing a criminal or the driver of a fire engine responding to an alarm"); see also Memorandum from D. Barron, Acting Assistant Atty. Gen., Office of Legal Counsel, to E. Holder, Atty. Gen., Re: Applicability of Federal Criminal Laws and the Constitution to Contemplated Lethal Operations Against Shaykh Anwar al-Aulaqi 12 (July 16, 2010) (interpreting criminal statute prohibiting unlawful killings "to incorporate the public authority justification, which can render lethal action carried out by a government official lawful in some circumstances").

---

[4] Trump did not raise those defenses in this case, and the immunity that the majority has created likely will obviate the need to raise them in future cases. Yet those defenses would have protected former Presidents from unwarranted criminal prosecutions much more precisely than the blanket immunity the majority creates today.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

If the case nonetheless makes it to trial, the Government will bear the burden of proving every element of the alleged crime beyond a reasonable doubt to a unanimous jury of the former President's fellow citizens. See United States v. Gaudin, 515 U. S. 506, 510 (1995). If the Government manages to overcome even that significant hurdle, then the former President can appeal his conviction, and the appellate review of his claims will be "'particularly meticulous.'" Trump v. Vance, 591 U. S. 786, 809 (2020) (quoting Nixon, 418 U. S., at 702). He can ultimately seek this Court's review, and if past practice (including in this case) is any indication, he will receive it.

In light of these considerable protections, the majority's fear that "'bare allegations of malice,'" ante, at 18 (alteration omitted), would expose former Presidents to trial and conviction is unfounded. Bare allegations of malice would not make it out of the starting gate. Although a private civil action may be brought based on little more than "'intense feelings,'" ante, at 11 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752), a federal criminal prosecution is made of firmer stuff. Certainly there has been, on occasion, great feelings of animosity between incoming and outgoing Presidents over the course of our country's history. Yet it took allegations as grave as those at the center of this case to have the first federal criminal prosecution of a former President. That restraint is telling.

Third, because of longstanding interpretations by the Executive Branch, every sitting President has so far believed himself under the threat of criminal liability after his term in office and nevertheless boldly fulfilled the duties of his office. The majority insists that the threat of criminal sanctions is "more likely to distort Presidential decisionmaking than the potential payment of civil damages." Ante, at 13. If that is right, then that distortion has been shaping Presidential decisionmaking since the earliest days of the Republic. Although it makes sense to avoid "diversion of the President's attention during the decisionmaking process" with "needless worry," Clinton, 520 U. S., at 694, n. 19, one wonders why requiring some small amount of his attention (or his legal advisers' attention) to go towards complying with federal criminal law is such a great burden. If the President follows the law that he must "take Care" to execute, Art. II, §3, he has not been rendered "'unduly cautious,'" ante, at 10 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 752, n. 32). Some amount of caution is necessary, after all. It is a far greater danger if the President feels empowered to violate federal criminal law, buoyed by the knowledge of future immunity. I am deeply troubled by the idea, inherent in the majority's opinion, that our Nation loses something valuable when the President is forced to operate within the confines of federal criminal law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

So what exactly is the majority worried about deterring when it expresses great concern for the "deterrent" effect that "the threat of trial, judgment, and imprisonment" would pose? Ante, at 13. It cannot possibly be the deterrence of acts that are truly criminal. Nor does it make sense for the majority to wring its hands over the possibility that Presidents might stop and think carefully before taking action that borders on criminal. Instead, the majority's main concern could be that Presidents will be deterred from taking necessary and lawful action by the fear that their successors might pin them with a baseless criminal prosecution—a prosecution that would almost certainly be doomed to fail, if it even made it out of the starting gate. See ante, at 40. The Court should not have so little faith in this Nation's Presidents. As this Court has said before in the context of criminal proceedings, "'[t]he chance that now and then there may be found some timid soul who will take counsel of his fears and give way to their repressive power is too remote and shadowy to shape the course of justice.'" Nixon, 418 U. S., at 712, n. 20 (quoting Clark v. United States, 289 U. S. 1, 16 (1933)). The concern that countless

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

(and baseless) civil suits would hamper the Executive may have been justified in Fitzgerald, but a well-founded federal criminal prosecution poses no comparable danger to the functioning of the Executive Branch.

2

At the same time, the public interest in a federal criminal prosecution of a former President is vastly greater than the public interest in a private individual's civil suit. All nine Justices in Fitzgerald explicitly recognized that distinction. The five-Justice majority noted that there was a greater public interest "in criminal prosecutions" than in "actions for civil damages." 457 U. S., at 754, n. 37. Chief Justice Burger's concurrence accordingly emphasized that the majority's immunity was "limited to civil damages claims," rather than "criminal prosecution." Id., at 759–760. The four dissenting Justices agreed that a "contention that the President is immune from criminal prosecution in the courts," if ever made, would not "be credible." Id., at 780 (White, J., dissenting). At the very least, the Fitzgerald Court did not expect that its balancing test would lead to the same outcome in the criminal context.

The public's interest in prosecution is transparent: a federal prosecutor herself acts on behalf of the United States. Even the majority acknowledges that the "[f]ederal criminal laws seek to redress 'a wrong to the public' as a whole, not just 'a wrong to the individual,'" ante, at 13 (quoting Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 668 (1892)), such that there is "a compelling 'public interest in fair and effective law enforcement,'" ante, at 13 (quoting Vance, 591 U. S., at 808). Indeed, "our historic commitment to the rule of law" is "nowhere more profoundly manifest than in our view that . . . 'guilt shall not escape or innocence suffer.'" Nixon, 418 U. S., at 708–709 (quoting Berger v. United States, 295 U. S. 78, 88 (1935)).

The public interest in criminal prosecution is particularly strong with regard to officials who are granted some degree of civil immunity because of their duties. It is in those cases where the public can see that officials exercising power under public trust remain on equal footing with their fellow citizens under the criminal law. See, e.g., O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U. S. 488, 503 (1974) ("[W]e have never held that the performance of the duties of judicial, legislative, or executive officers, requires or contemplates the immunization of otherwise criminal deprivations of constitutional rights"); Dennis v. Sparks, 449 U. S. 24, 31 (1980) ("[J]udicial immunity was not designed to insulate the judiciary from all aspects of public accountability. Judges are immune from §1983 damages actions, but they are subject to criminal prosecutions as are other citizens"); Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U. S. 409, 428–429 (1976) ("We emphasize that the [civil] immunity of prosecutors . . . does not leave the public powerless to deter misconduct or to punish that which occurs. This Court has never suggested that the policy considerations which compel civil immunity for certain governmental officials also place them beyond the reach of the criminal law. Even judges, cloaked with absolute civil immunity for centuries, could be punished criminally").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The public interest in the federal criminal prosecution of a former President alleged to have used the powers of his office to commit crimes may be greater still. "[T]he President . . . represent[s] all the voters in the Nation," and his powers are given by the people under our Constitution. Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U. S. 780, 795 (1983). When Presidents use the powers of their office for personal gain or as part of a criminal scheme, every person in the country has an interest in that criminal prosecution. The majority overlooks that paramount interest entirely.

Finally, the question of federal criminal immunity for a former President "involves a countervailing Article II consideration absent in Fitzgerald": recognizing such an immunity "would frustrate the Executive Branch's enforcement of the criminal law." Brief for United States 19. The President is, of course, entrusted with "'supervisory and policy responsibilities of utmost discretion and sensitivity.'" Ante at 10 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 750). One of the most important is "enforcement of federal law," as "it is the President who is charged constitutionally to 'take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed.'" Id., at 750 (quoting Art. II, §3). The majority seems to think that allowing former Presidents to escape accountability for breaking the law while disabling the current Executive from prosecuting such violations somehow respects the independence of the Executive. It does not. Rather, it diminishes that independence, exalting occupants of the office over the office itself. There is a twisted irony in saying, as the majority does, that the person charged with "tak[ing] Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" can break them with impunity.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the case before us, the public interest and countervailing Article II interest are particularly stark. The public interest in this criminal prosecution implicates both "[t]he Executive Branch's interest in upholding Presidential elections and vesting power in a new President under the Constitution" as well as "the voters' interest in democratically selecting their President." 91 F. 4th 1173, 1195 (CADC 2024) (per curiam). It also, of course, implicates Congress's own interest in regulating conduct through the criminal law. Cf. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 749, n. 27 (noting that the case did not involve "affirmative action by Congress"). Yet the majority believes that a President's anxiety over prosecution overrides the public's interest in accountability and negates the interests of the other branches in carrying out their constitutionally assigned functions. It is, in fact, the majority's position that "boil[s] down to ignoring the Constitution's separation of powers." Ante, at 40.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

C

Finally, in an attempt to put some distance between its official-acts immunity and Trump's requested immunity, the majority insists that "Trump asserts a far broader immunity than the limited one [the majority has] recognized." Ante, at 32. If anything, the opposite is true. The only part of Trump's immunity argument that the majority rejects is the idea that "the Impeachment Judgment Clause requires that impeachment and Senate conviction precede a President's criminal prosecution." Ibid. That argument is obviously wrong. See ante, at 32–34. Rejecting it, however, does not make the majority's immunity narrower than Trump's. Inherent in Trump's Impeachment Judgment Clause argument is the idea that a former President who was impeached in the House and convicted in the Senate for crimes involving his official acts could then be prosecuted in court for those acts. See Brief for Petitioner 22 ("The Founders thus adopted a carefully balanced approach that permits the criminal prosecution of a former President for his official acts, but only if that President is first impeached by the House and convicted by the Senate"). By extinguishing that path to overcoming immunity, however nonsensical it might be, the majority arrives at an official-acts immunity even more expansive than the one Trump argued for. On the majority's view (but not Trump's), a former President whose abuse of power was so egregious and so offensive even to members of his own party that he was impeached in the House and convicted in the Senate still would be entitled to "at least presumptive" criminal immunity for those acts.

V

Separate from its official-acts immunity, the majority recognizes absolute immunity for "conduct within [the President's] exclusive sphere of constitutional authority." Ante, at 9. Feel free to skip over those pages of the majority's opinion. With broad official-acts immunity covering the field, this ostensibly narrower immunity serves little purpose. In any event, this case simply does not turn on conduct within the President's "exclusive sphere of constitutional authority," and the majority's attempt to apply a core immunity of its own making expands the concept of "core constitutional powers," ante, at 6, beyond any recognizable bounds.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The idea of a narrow core immunity might have some intuitive appeal, in a case that actually presented the issue. If the President's power is "conclusive and preclusive" on a given subject, then Congress should not be able to "ac[t] upon the subject." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U. S. 579, 638 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring). In his Youngstown concurrence, Justice Robert Jackson posited that the President's "power of removal in executive agencies" seemed to fall within this narrow category. Ibid., n. 4. Other decisions of this Court indicate that the pardon power also falls in this category, see United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 147 (1872) ("To the executive alone is intrusted the power of pardon; and it is granted without limit"), as does the power to recognize foreign countries, see Zivotofsky v. Kerry, 576 U. S. 1, 32 (2015) (holding that the President has "exclusive power . . . to control recognition determinations").

In this case, however, the question whether a former President enjoys a narrow immunity for the "exercise of his core constitutional powers," ante, at 6, has never been at issue, and for good reason: Trump was not criminally indicted for taking actions that the Constitution places in the unassailable core of Executive power. He was not charged, for example, with illegally wielding the Presidency's pardon power or veto power or appointment power or even removal power. Instead, Trump was charged with a conspiracy to commit fraud to subvert the Presidential election. It is true that the detailed indictment in this case alleges that Trump threatened to remove an Acting Attorney General who would not carry out his scheme. See, e.g., App. 216–217, Indictment ¶¶74, 77. Yet it is equally clear that the Government does not seek to "impose criminal liability on the [P]resident for exercising or talking about exercising the appointment and removal power." Tr. of Oral Arg. 127. If that were the majority's concern, it could simply have said that the Government cannot charge a President's threatened use of the removal power as an overt act in the conspiracy. It says much more.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The core immunity that the majority creates will insulate a considerably larger sphere of conduct than the narrow core of "conclusive and preclusive" powers that the Court previously has recognized. The first indication comes when the majority includes the President's broad duty to "'take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed'" among the core functions for which a former President supposedly enjoys absolute immunity. Ante, at 20 (quoting Art. II, §3). That expansive view of core power will effectively insulate all sorts of noncore conduct from criminal prosecution. Were there any question, consider how the majority applies its newly minted core immunity to the allegations in this case. It concludes that "Trump is . . . absolutely immune from prosecution for" any "conduct involving his discussions with Justice Department officials." Ante, at 21. That conception of core immunity expands the "conclusive and preclusive" category beyond recognition, foreclosing the possibility of prosecution for broad swaths of conduct. Under that view of core powers, even fabricating evidence and insisting the Department use it in a criminal case could be covered. The majority's conception of "core" immunity sweeps far more broadly than its logic, borrowed from Youngstown, should allow.

The majority tries to assuage any concerns about its made-up core immunity by suggesting that the Government agrees with it. See ante, at 34. That suggestion will surprise the Government. To say, as the Government did, that a "small core of exclusive official acts" such as "the pardon power, the power to recognize foreign nations, the power to veto legislation, [and] the power to make appointments" cannot be regulated by Congress, see Tr. of Oral Arg. 85–87, does not suggest that the Government agrees with immunizing any and all conduct conceivably related to the majority's broad array of supposedly "core" powers. The Government in fact advised this Court to "leav[e] potentially more difficult questions" about the scope of any immunity "that might arise on different facts for decision if they are ever presented." Brief for United States 45. That would have made sense. The indictment here does not pose any threat of impermissibly criminalizing acts within the President's "conclusive and preclusive" authority. Perhaps for this reason, even Trump discouraged consideration of "a narrower scope of immunity," claiming that such an immunity "would be nearly impossible to fashion, and would certainly involve impractical line-drawing problems in every application." Brief for Petitioner 43–44.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

When forced to wade into thorny separation-of-powers disputes, this Court's usual practice is to "confine the opinion only to the very questions necessary to decision of the case." Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U. S. 654, 661 (1981). There is plenty of peril and little value in crafting a core immunity doctrine that Trump did not seek and that rightly has no application to this case.

VI

Not content simply to invent an expansive criminal immunity for former Presidents, the majority goes a dramatic and unprecedented step further. It says that acts for which the President is immune must be redacted from the narrative of even wholly private crimes committed while in office. They must play no role in proceedings regarding private criminal acts. See ante, at 30–32.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Even though the majority's immunity analysis purports to leave unofficial acts open to prosecution, its draconian approach to official-acts evidence deprives these prosecutions of any teeth. If the former President cannot be held criminally liable for his official acts, those acts should still be admissible to prove knowledge or intent in criminal prosecutions of unofficial acts. For instance, the majority struggles with classifying whether a President's speech is in his capacity as President (official act) or as a candidate (unofficial act). Imagine a President states in an official speech that he intends to stop a political rival from passing legislation that he opposes, no matter what it takes to do so (official act). He then hires a private hitman to murder that political rival (unofficial act). Under the majority's rule, the murder indictment could include no allegation of the President's public admission of premeditated intent to support the mens rea of murder. That is a strange result, to say the least.[5]

The majority's extraordinary rule has no basis in law. Consider the First Amendment context. Although the First Amendment prohibits criminalizing most speech, it "does not prohibit the evidentiary use of speech," including its use "to prove motive or intent." Wisconsin v. Mitchell, 508 U. S. 476, 489 (1993). Evidentiary rulings and limiting instructions can ensure that evidence concerning official acts is "considered only for the proper purpose for which it was admitted." Huddleston v. United States, 485 U. S. 681, 691–692 (1988). The majority has no coherent explanation as to [5] The majority suggests, in a footnote, that a "prosecutor may point to the public record to show the fact that the President performed the official act," so long as the prosecutor does not "invite the jury to inspect" the act in any way. Ante, at 32, n. 3. Whatever that suggestion is supposed to accomplish, it does not salvage the majority's nonsensical evidentiary rule.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

why these protections that are sufficient in every other context would be insufficient here. It simply asserts that it would be "untenable" and would deprive immunity of its "'intended effect.'" Ante, at 31 (quoting Fitzgerald, 457 U. S., at 756). The majority hazards an explanation that the use of official-acts evidence will "raise a unique risk that the jurors' deliberations will be prejudiced by their views of the President's policies and performance while in office." Ante, at 31. That "unique risk," however, is not a product of introducing official-acts evidence. It is simply the risk involved in any suit against a former President, including the private-acts prosecutions the majority says it would allow.

VII

Today's decision to grant former Presidents immunity for their official acts is deeply wrong. As troubling as this criminal immunity doctrine is in theory, the majority's application of the doctrine to the indictment in this case is perhaps even more troubling. In the hands of the majority, this new official-acts immunity operates as a one-way ratchet.

First, the majority declares all of the conduct involving the Justice Department and the Vice President to be official conduct, see ante, at 19–24, yet it refuses to designate any course of conduct alleged in the indictment as private, despite concessions from Trump's counsel.[6] Trump's counsel conceded, for example, that the allegation that Trump

---

[6]The majority protests that it is "adher[ing] to time-tested practices" by "deciding what is required to dispose of this case and remanding" to lower courts to sort out the details. Ante, at 41. Yet it implicitly acknowledges that it reaches far beyond what any lower court considered or any party briefed by designating certain conduct official in the first instance. See ibid. (noting "the lack of factual analysis in the lower courts, and the lack of briefing on how to categorize the conduct alleged"). In reaching out to shield some conduct as official while refusing to recognize any conduct as unofficial, the majority engages in judicial activism, not judicial restraint.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"turned to a private attorney who was willing to spread knowingly false claims of election fraud to spearhead his challenges to the election results" "sounds private." Tr. of Oral Arg. 29. He likewise conceded that the allegation that Trump "conspired with another private attorney who caused the filing in court of a verification signed by [Trump] that contained false allegations to support a challenge" "sounds private." Ibid.; see also id., at 36–37 (Trump's counsel explaining that it is not "disputed" that such conduct is "unofficial"). Again, when asked about allegations that "[t]hree private actors . . . helped implement a plan to submit fraudulent slates of presidential electors to obstruct the certification proceeding, and [Trump] and a co-conspirator attorney directed that effort," Trump's counsel conceded the alleged conduct was "private." Id., at 29–30. Only the majority thinks that organizing fraudulent slates of electors might qualify as an official act of the President, see ante, at 24–28, or at least an act so "interrelated" with other allegedly official acts that it might warrant protection, ante, at 28. If the majority's sweeping conception of "official acts" has any real limits, the majority is unwilling to reveal them in today's decision.

Second, the majority designates certain conduct immune while refusing to recognize anything as prosecutable. It shields large swaths of conduct involving the Justice Department with immunity, see ante, at 19–21; see also Part V, supra, but it does not give an inch in the other direction. The majority admits that the Vice President's responsibility "'presiding over the Senate'" is "'not an "executive branch" function,'" and it further admits that the President "plays no direct constitutional or statutory role" in the counting of electoral votes. Ante, at 23–24. Yet the majority refuses to conclude that Trump lacks immunity for his alleged attempts to "enlist the Vice President to use his ceremonial role at the January 6 certification proceeding to fraudulently alter the election results." App. 187, Indictment

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

¶10(d). Instead, it worries that a prosecution for this conduct might make it harder for the President to use the Vice President "to advance [his] agenda in Congress." Ante, at 24. Such a prosecution, according to the majority, "may well hinder the President's ability to perform his constitutional functions." Ibid. Whether a prosecution for this conduct warrants immunity should have been an easy question, but the majority turns it into a debatable one. Remarkably, the majority goes further and declines to deny immunity even for the allegations that Trump organized fraudulent elector slates, pressured States to subvert the legitimate election results, and exploited violence at the Capitol to influence the certification proceedings. It is not conceivable that a prosecution for these alleged efforts to overturn a Presidential election, whether labeled official or unofficial under the majority's test, would pose any "'dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch,'" ante, at 14, and the majority could have said as much. Instead, it perseverates on a threshold question that should be immaterial.

Looking beyond the fate of this particular prosecution, the long-term consequences of today's decision are stark. The Court effectively creates a law-free zone around the President, upsetting the status quo that has existed since the Founding. This new official-acts immunity now "lies about like a loaded weapon" for any President that wishes to place his own interests, his own political survival, or his own financial gain, above the interests of the Nation. Korematsu v. United States, 323 U. S. 214, 246 (1944) (Jackson, J., dissenting). The President of the United States is the most powerful person in the country, and possibly the world. When he uses his official powers in any way, under the majority's reasoning, he now will be insulated from criminal prosecution. Orders the Navy's Seal Team 6 to assassinate a political rival? Immune. Organizes a military coup to hold onto power? Immune. Takes a bribe in exchange for a pardon? Immune. Immune, immune, immune.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Let the President violate the law, let him exploit the trappings of his office for personal gain, let him use his official power for evil ends. Because if he knew that he may one day face liability for breaking the law, he might not be as bold and fearless as we would like him to be. That is the majority's message today.

Even if these nightmare scenarios never play out, and I pray they never do, the damage has been done. The relationship between the President and the people he serves has shifted irrevocably. In every use of official power, the President is now a king above the law.

* * *

The majority's single-minded fixation on the President's need for boldness and dispatch ignores the countervailing need for accountability and restraint. The Framers were not so single-minded. In the Federalist Papers, after "endeavor[ing] to show" that the Executive designed by the Constitution "combines . . . all the requisites to energy," Alexander Hamilton asked a separate, equally important question: "Does it also combine the requisites to safety, in a republican sense, a due dependence on the people, a due responsibility?" The Federalist No. 77, p. 507 (J. Harvard Library ed. 2009). The answer then was yes, based in part upon the President's vulnerability to "prosecution in the common course of law." Ibid. The answer after today is no.

Never in the history of our Republic has a President had reason to believe that he would be immune from criminal prosecution if he used the trappings of his office to violate the criminal law. Moving forward, however, all former Presidents will be cloaked in such immunity. If the occupant of that office misuses official power for personal gain, the criminal law that the rest of us must abide will not provide a backstop.

With fear for our democracy, I dissent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 23–939

DONALD J. TRUMP, PETITIONER v.
UNITED STATES

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

[July 1, 2024]

JUSTICE JACKSON, dissenting.

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR has thoroughly addressed the Court's flawed reasoning and conclusion as a matter of history, tradition, law, and logic. I agree with every word of her powerful dissent. I write separately to explain, as succinctly as I can, the theoretical nuts and bolts of what, exactly, the majority has done today to alter the paradigm of accountability for Presidents of the United States. I also address what that paradigm shift means for our Nation moving forward.

I

To fully appreciate the profound change the majority has wrought, one must first acknowledge what it means to have immunity from criminal prosecution. Put simply, immunity is "exemption" from the duties and liabilities imposed by law. Black's Law Dictionary 898 (11th ed. 2019); see Hopkins v. Clemson, 221 U. S. 636, 643 (1911) (explaining that immunity is "exemption from legal process"). In its purest form, the concept of immunity boils down to a maxim—"'[t]he King can do no wrong'"—a notion that was firmly "rejected at the birth of [our] Republic." Clinton v. Jones, 520 U. S. 681, 697, n. 24 (1997) (quoting 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *246 (Blackstone)); see United States v. Burr, 25 F. Cas. 30, 34 (No. 14,692d) (CC Va. 1807). To say that someone is immune from criminal prosecution is to say that, like a King, he "is not under the coercive power of the law," which "will not suppose him capable of committing a folly, much less a crime." 4 Blackstone *33. Thus, being immune is not like having a defense under the law. Rather, it means that the law does not apply to the immunized person in the first place. Conferring immunity therefore "create[s] a privileged class free from liability for wrongs inflicted or injuries threatened." Hopkins, 221 U. S., at 643.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

It is indisputable that immunity from liability for wrongdoing is the exception rather than the rule in the American criminal justice system. That is entirely unsurprising, for the very idea of immunity stands in tension with foundational principles of our system of Government. It is a core tenet of our democracy that the People are the sovereign, and the Rule of Law is our first and final security. "[F]rom their own experience and their deep reading in history, the Founders knew that Law alone saves a society from being rent by internecine strife or ruled by mere brute power however disguised." United States v. Mine Workers, 330 U. S. 258, 308 (1947) (Frankfurter, J., concurring in judgment).

A corollary to that principle sets the terms for this case: "No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it." United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 220 (1882). We have long lived with the collective understanding that "[d]ecency, security and liberty alike demand that government officials shall be subjected to the same rules of conduct that are commands to the citizen," for "[i]n a government of laws, existence of the government will be imperilled if it fails to observe the law scrupulously." Olmstead v. United States, 277 U. S. 438, 485 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II

A

These foundational presuppositions are reflected in a procedural paradigm of rules and accountability that operates in the realm of criminal law—what I would call an individual accountability model.

The basic contours of that model are familiar, because they manifest in every criminal case. Criminal law starts with an act of the legislature, which holds the power "to define a crime, and ordain its punishment." United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 95 (1820); accord, Ohio v. Johnson, 467 U. S. 493, 499 (1984). Criminal statutes are laws of general applicability that express "the assent of the people's representatives" that certain conduct is off limits in our society. Wooden v. United States, 595 U. S. 360, 391 (2022) (GORSUCH, J., concurring in judgment).

When the Federal Government believes that someone has run afoul of a criminal statute and decides to exercise its prosecutorial discretion to pursue punishment for that violation, it persuades a grand jury that there is probable cause to indict. U. S. Const., Amdt. 5. Then, the Government marshals evidence to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant engaged in the prohibited conduct and possessed the requisite state of mind. See United States v. Bailey, 444 U. S. 394, 402 (1980) (observing that, to hold a person criminally liable, "the concurrence of . . . 'an evil-meaning mind [and] an evil-doing hand'" must be proved (quoting Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 251 (1952))).

For his part, the defendant "stands accused but is presumed innocent until conviction upon trial or guilty plea." Betterman v. Montana, 578 U. S. 437, 441 (2016). Notably, criminal defendants have various constitutionally protected rights during the criminal-liability process, including the rights to a speedy and public trial, the right to have a jury decide guilt or innocence, the right to the assistance of counsel, and the right to confront the witnesses against him. Amdt. 6. The defendant also has at his disposal many means to defend himself against the criminal charge. He can, of course, seek to hold the Government to its burden of proof at trial. And even before trial, in a motion to dismiss the indictment, he might make any number of legal arguments; he can assert, for example, that the Government's charging document does not give adequate notice of the charge against him or that the law he has been accused of violating is unconstitutionally vague. See Hamling v. United States, 418 U. S. 87, 117 (1974); United States v. Davis, 588 U. S. 445, 451 (2019). He might further claim that the law is unconstitutional as applied to his particular conduct. See United States v. O'Brien, 391 U. S. 367, 376 (1968). And he might maintain that his conduct, even if proved, does not violate the law at issue. See, e.g., Fischer v. United States, 603 U. S. ___, ___ (2024) (slip op., at 2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The defendant may also raise, and attempt to prove, affirmative defenses that "excuse conduct that would otherwise be punishable." Dixon v. United States, 548 U. S. 1, 6 (2006). Generally speaking, affirmative defenses are determinations (often adopted by legislation) that certain conduct otherwise punishable by law is justified. This might be the case, for example, when the Legislature determines that, under specified circumstances, the societal harm particular conduct causes "is outweighed by the need to avoid an even greater harm." 1 P. Robinson, Criminal Law Defenses §24(a) (1984) (Robinson).

Importantly, a defense is not an immunity, even though a defense can likewise result in a person charged with a crime avoiding liability for his criminal conduct. Consistent with our foundational norms, the individual accountability model adheres to the presumption that the law applies to all and that everyone must follow it; yet, the model makes allowances for recognized defenses. One such defense is the special privilege that Government officials sometimes invoke when carrying out their official duties.[1]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

All of this is to say that our Government has long functioned under an accountability paradigm in which no one is above the law; an accused person is innocent until proven guilty; and criminal defendants may raise defenses, both legal and factual, tailored to their particular circumstances, whether they be Government officials or ordinary citizens. For over two centuries, our Nation has survived with these principles intact.

B

With that understanding of how our system of accountability for criminal acts ordinarily functions, it becomes much easier to see that the majority's ruling in this case breaks new and dangerous ground. Departing from the traditional model of individual accountability, the majority has concocted something entirely different: a Presidential accountability model that creates immunity—an exemption from criminal law—applicable only to the most powerful official in our Government.

1

So, how does this new Presidential accountability model work? An initial problem is the lack of clarity regarding what this new model entails. The majority announces only its most basic contours. See ante, at 6 (asserting that "the

---

[1] See R. Perkins & R. Boyce, Criminal Law 1093 (3d ed. 1982) ("Deeds which otherwise would be criminal, such as taking or destroying property, taking hold of a person by force and against his will, placing him in confinement, or even taking his life, are not crimes if done with proper public authority"); see also 2 Robinson §141(a) (describing the public-authority defense, under which a defendant may escape liability if he "has been specifically authorized to engage in the conduct constituting the offense in order to protect or further a public interest"); Brief for United States 29–30, n. 11; ante, at 16, n. 3 (SOTOMAYOR, J., dissenting) (citing Nardone v. United States, 302 U. S. 379, 384 (1937)).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

nature of Presidential power requires that a former President have some immunity from criminal prosecution for official acts during his tenure in office"). Instead of no immunity (the individual accountability model) or an unqualified grant of absolute immunity for "all official acts," Brief for Petitioner 44 (emphasis added), the majority purports to adopt something of a hybrid.[2] It holds that a former President may or may not be immune from criminal prosecution for conduct undertaken while in office, to be determined on a case-by-case basis. According to the majority, whether a former President is immune depends on how his criminal conduct is classified, as among three possible categories.

First, with respect to any criminal conduct relating to a President's "core constitutional powers"—those subjects "within his 'conclusive and preclusive' constitutional authority"—the President is entitled to absolute immunity from criminal prosecution. See ante, at 6, 8. Second, expanding outward from this "core," regarding all other "acts within the outer perimeter of [the President's] official responsibility," the President is entitled to "at least a presumptive immunity from criminal prosecution." Ante, at 14.

---

[2] Its feigned judicial humility notwithstanding, see ante, at 41, the majority's holding goes further—much further—than necessary to resolve this case. Petitioner's argument in both the lower courts and this one was that a former President is categorically immune from federal criminal prosecution for "all" acts within the outer perimeter of his official duties. See Opening Brief for Defendant-Appellant in No. 23–3228 (CADC, Dec. 23, 2023), p. 23; 91 F. 4th 1173, 1188–1189, 1195, 1208 (CADC 2024) (per curiam); Brief for Petitioner 41–47 (arguing for absolute immunity for "all actions within the 'outer perimeter'" of a President's responsibilities, and imploring the Court not to adopt a "'function-based' approach"). Thus, it would have been enough for the Court simply to reject petitioner's categorical claim and leave it at that. But the majority sua sponte rephrased the question presented, and it now takes full advantage of this opportunity to devise from whole cloth an entirely new legal framework for judicial evaluation of potential criminal immunity for former Presidents.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Third, if the criminal conduct at issue comprises "unofficial acts, there is no immunity." Ante, at 15.[3]

Applying the majority's new Presidential accountability model thus seems to involve bearing down on the indictment's allegations and making a series of determinations about the nature of the conduct at issue. From the structure of the paradigm, it appears that the first decision point is whether the alleged criminal conduct involves one of the President's "core" powers. If so (and apparently regardless of the degree to which the conduct implicates that core power), the President is absolutely immune from criminal liability for engaging in that criminal conduct. If not, then one must proceed to consider whether the conduct qualifies as an "official" act or "unofficial" act of that President. If the crime is an official act, the President is presumptively immune from criminal prosecution and punishment. But even then, immunity still hinges on whether there is any legal or factual basis for concluding that the presumption of immunity has been rebutted. Alternatively, if the charged conduct is an unofficial act (a determination that, inci-

[3]It is important to note that the majority reframes the immunity question presented here as a separation of powers concern that is compelled by Article II—as if what is being asked is whether Congress can criminalize executive prerogatives. See, e.g., ante, at 6–7; see also ante, at 1–2 (BARRETT, J., concurring in part). But that is not anywhere close to what is happening in this case. No one maintains that Congress has passed a law that specifically criminalizes the President's use of any power that the Constitution vests exclusively in the Executive, much less that the Judiciary is being conscripted to adjudicate the propriety of such a statute. To the contrary, the indictment here invokes criminal statutes of general applicability that everyone is supposed to follow, both on and off the job. So, the real question is: Can the President, too, be held accountable for committing crimes while he is undertaking his official duties? The nature of his authority under Article II (whether conclusive and preclusive, or shared with Congress, or otherwise) is entirely beside the point.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

dentally, courts must make without considering the President's motivations, ante, at 18), the President is not immune.[4]

2

The majority's multilayered, multifaceted threshold parsing of the character of a President's criminal conduct differs from the individual accountability model in several crucial respects. For one thing, it makes it next to impossible to know ex ante when and under what circumstances a President will be subject to accountability for his criminal acts. For every allegation, courts must run this gauntlet first—no matter how well documented or heinous the criminal act might be.

Thus, even a hypothetical President who admits to having ordered the assassinations of his political rivals or critics, see, e.g., Tr. of Oral Arg. 9, or one who indisputably instigates an unsuccessful coup, id., at 41–43, has a fair shot at getting immunity under the majority's new Presidential accountability model. That is because whether a President's conduct will subject him to criminal liability turns on the court's evaluation of a variety of factors related to the character of that particular act—specifically, those characteristics that imbue an act with the status of "official" or "unofficial" conduct (minus motive). In the end, then, under the majority's new paradigm, whether the President will be exempt from legal liability for murder, assault, theft, fraud,

---

[4]JUSTICE BARRETT's version of the Presidential accountability paradigm works slightly differently; she would have us ask, first, "whether the relevant criminal statute reaches the President's official conduct." Ante, at 2. But, again, what is at issue here are statutes of general applicability—they only "reach" the President's conduct to the extent that he chooses to engage in the prohibited behavior. See n. 3, supra. JUSTICE BARRETT's framing, thus, sidesteps the fact that, when immunity is being considered, what is actually at issue is whether the President is exempt from punishment if he opts to exercise his official duties using means that violate criminal law.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

or any other reprehensible and outlawed criminal act will turn on whether he committed that act in his official capacity, such that the answer to the immunity question will always and inevitably be: It depends.

Under the individual accountability paradigm, the accountability analysis is markedly less convoluted, and leads to a more certain outcome. None of the same complications or consequences arise, because, as I have explained, there are no exemptions from the criminal law for any person, but every defendant can assert whatever legal arguments and defenses might be applicable under governing law. Since no one is above the law, everyone can focus on what the law demands and permits, and on what the defendant did or did not do; no one has to worry about characterizing any criminal conduct as official or unofficial in order to assess the applicability of an immunity at the outset.

The majority's new Presidential accountability model is also distinct insofar as it accepts as a basic starting premise that generally applicable criminal laws do not apply to everyone in our society. In the majority's view, while all other citizens of the United States must do their jobs and live their lives within the confines of criminal prohibitions, the President cannot be made to do so; he must sometimes be exempt from the law's dictates depending on the character of his conduct. Indeed, the majority holds that the President, unlike anyone else in our country, is comparatively free to engage in criminal acts in furtherance of his official duties.

That point bears emphasizing. Immunity can issue for Presidents under the majority's model even for unquestionably and intentionally egregious criminal behavior. Regardless of the nature or the impact of the President's criminal conduct, so long as he is committing crimes "pursuant to the powers invested exclusively in him by the Constitution," ante, at 7, or as needed "to carry out his constitutional duties without undue caution," ante, at 14, he is likely to be deemed immune from prosecution.[5]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Ultimately, the majority's model simply sets the criminal law to one side when it comes to crimes allegedly committed by the President. Before accountability can be sought or rendered, the Judiciary serves as a newfound special gatekeeper, charged not merely with interpreting the law but with policing whether it applies to the President at all. Also, under the new Presidential accountability model, the starting presumption is that the criminal law does not apply to Presidents, no matter how obviously illegal, harmful, or unacceptable a President's official behavior might be. Regardless of all that, courts must now ensure that a former President is not held accountable for any criminal conduct he engages in while he is on duty, unless his conduct consists primarily (and perhaps solely) of unofficial acts.

3

The structure and function of the two accountability paradigms are not the only differences—the models also assign different roles to participants in the criminal justice system, and they ultimately generate different relationships between the Presidency and the Rule of Law.

Under the individual accountability model, duty-bound prosecutorial officers initially exercise their discretion to decide whether to seek punishment for alleged violations of

---

[5]To fully appreciate the oddity of making the criminal immunity determination turn on the character of the President's responsibilities, consider what the majority says is one of the President's "conclusive and preclusive" prerogatives: "'[t]he President's power to remove . . . those who wield executive power on his behalf.'" Ante, at 8 (quoting Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 591 U. S. 197, 204 (2020)). While the President may have the authority to decide to remove the Attorney General, for example, the question here is whether the President has the option to remove the Attorney General by, say, poisoning him to death. Put another way, the issue here is not whether the President has exclusive removal power, but whether a generally applicable criminal law prohibiting murder can restrict how the President exercises that authority.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

criminal law (a determination that is made based on numerous factors). And even if prosecutors decide to bring a charge, a jury of the criminal defendant's peers ultimately determines whether that defendant (including a former President) will actually be held to account for having engaged in unlawful conduct, after the court has resolved any legal challenges and has instructed the jury as to the requirements of the law.

By contrast, under the majority's new Presidential accountability paradigm, what a prosecutor or jury does may not even matter, since the courts take center stage once charges are brought against a former President, marshaling their resources to conduct a complex and amorphous threshold immunity evaluation. Whether a former President will be entirely exempted from the dictates of the law (such that the roles of other participants in the criminal justice process become irrelevant) requires a judicial assessment, in the first instance, of his criminal conduct and the circumstances under which he acted.

Finally, and most importantly, recall that under the individual accountability model, an indicted former President can raise an affirmative defense just like any other criminal defendant. This means that the President remains answerable to the law, insofar as he must show that he was justified in committing a criminal act while in office under the given circumstances. In other words, while the President might indeed be privileged to commit a crime in the course of his official duties, any such privilege exists only when the People (acting either through their elected representatives or as members of a jury) determine that the former President's conduct was in fact justified, notwithstanding the general criminal prohibition.

Under the majority's immunity regime, by contrast, the President can commit crimes in the course of his job even under circumstances in which no one thinks he has any ex- cuse; the law simply does not apply to him. Unlike a defendant who invokes an affirmative defense and relies on a legal determination that there was a good reason for his otherwise unlawful conduct, a former President invoking immunity relies on the premise that he can do whatever he wants, however he wants, so long as he uses his "'official power'" in doing so. Ante, at 19. In the former paradigm, the President remains subject to law; in the latter, he is above it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

III

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR has already warned of the dire consequences that are likely to follow from the majority's decision in this case. Ante, at 29–30 (dissenting opinion). I have thus far endeavored merely to explain what today's ruling amounts to on a theoretical level: the Court's abandonment of the individual accountability model as applied to Presidents, and its introduction of a new Presidential accountability model that authorizes the Judiciary to exempt Presidents from punishment under law, depending on the official or unofficial character of the criminal conduct at issue.

Here, I will highlight just two observations about the results that follow from this paradigm shift. First, by changing the accountability paradigm in this fashion, the Court has unilaterally altered the balance of power between the three coordinate branches of our Government as it relates to the Rule of Law, aggrandizing power in the Judiciary and the Executive, to the detriment of Congress. Second, the majority's new Presidential accountability model undermines the constraints of the law as a deterrent for future Presidents who might otherwise abuse their power, to the detriment of us all.

A

Consider the structural implications of today's decision from the standpoint of the separation of powers. Until now,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Congress's laws, passed by the representatives of the People, bound the People and their elected officials just the same. Law, we have explained, "is the only supreme power in our system of government, and every man who by accepting office participates in its functions is only the more strongly bound to submit to that supremacy, and to observe the limitations which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives." Lee, 106 U. S., at 220. With its adoption of a paradigm that sometimes exempts the President from the dictates of the law (when the Court says so), this Court has effectively snatched from the Legislature the authority to bind the President (or not) to Congress's mandates, and it has also thereby substantially augmented the power of both the Office of the Presidency and itself.

As to the former, it should go without saying that the Office of the Presidency, the apex of the Executive Branch, is made significantly more powerful when the constraints of the criminal law are lifted with respect to the exercise of a President's official duties. After today's ruling, the President must still "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed," Art. II, §3; yet, when acting in his official capacity, he has no obligation to follow those same laws himself.

But whatever additional power the majority's new Presidential accountability model gives to the Presidency, it gives doubly to the Court itself, for the majority provides no meaningful guidance about how to apply this new paradigm or how to categorize a President's conduct. For instance, its opinion lists some examples of the "core" constitutional powers with respect to which the President is now entitled to absolute immunity—a list that apparently includes the removal power, the power to recognize foreign nations, and the pardon power. Ante, at 6–9. However, the majority does not—and likely cannot—supply any useful or administrable definition of the scope of that "core." For what it's worth, the Constitution's text is no help either; Article II does not contain a Core Powers Clause.[6] So the actual metes and bounds of the "core" Presidential powers are really anyone's guess.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Nor does the majority explain how to consistently distinguish between official and unofficial acts. Quite the opposite, in fact. While acknowledging that this is a critical line that courts must draw in order for its new accountability model to work properly, the majority simultaneously cautions that making this distinction "can be difficult"—likely a gross understatement given the recognized "breadth of the President's 'discretionary responsibilities' under the Constitution and laws of the United States." Ante, at 17. The majority likewise provides no guidance as to when, how, or why the President's "presumptive" immunity for noncore official acts might be rebutted, saying only that applying the criminal law to a President's acts must pose "no 'dangers of intrusion on the authority and functions of the Executive Branch.'" Ante, at 14 (quoting Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U. S. 731, 754 (1982)).

At most, to distinguish official from unofficial conduct, the majority advises asking whether the former President's conduct was "'manifestly or palpably beyond [his] authority.'" Ante, at 17 (quoting Blassingame v. Trump, 87 F. 4th 1, 13 (CADC 2023)). But that test can be illusory, as is evidenced by the facts alleged in this very case. With respect to the indictment's allegations concerning petitioner's attempt to assemble false slates of electors in conjunction with the events of January 6, 2021, for example, the majority admits that the "alleged conduct cannot be neatly categorized," and that "[t]he analysis therefore . . . may prove to be challenging." Ante, at 28–29. With that, at least, I could not agree more.

---

[6] Some of the powers the majority designates as "core" powers are, at best, implied from indefinite constitutional language. See, e.g., Seila Law, 591 U. S., at 268–269 (KAGAN, J., concurring in judgment with respect to severability and dissenting in part) ("Nowhere does the text say anything about the President's power to remove subordinate officials at will"); Zivotofsky v. Kerry, 576 U. S. 1, 11 (2015) ("[T]he Constitution does not use the term 'recognition,' either in Article II or elsewhere"); id., at 63 (ROBERTS, C. J., dissenting) (calling the "asserted textual bases" for an exclusive Presidential recognition power "tenuous").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This much is clear: Before today, none of these kinds of inquiries was necessary for criminal liability to be fairly assessed with respect to persons accused of having engaged in criminal conduct. And, frankly, none is needed now—except as relates to the President under the new paradigm the majority has crafted.

Perhaps even more troubling, while Congress (the branch of our Government most accountable to the People) is the entity our Constitution tasks with deciding, as a general matter, what conduct is on or off limits, the Court has now arrogated that power unto itself when that question pertains to the President. In essence, the Court has now imposed its own preclearance requirement on the application of Congress's laws to a former President alleged to have committed crimes while in office. Who will be responsible for drawing the crucial "'line between [the President's] personal and official affairs'"? Ante, at 29. To ask the question is to know the answer. A majority of this Court, applying an indeterminate test, will pick and choose which laws apply to which Presidents, by labeling his various allegedly criminal acts as "core," "official," or "manifestly or palpably" beyond the President's authority.

Ironically, then, while purportedly seeking to transcend politics, see ante, at 41–42, the Court today displaces the independent judgments of the political branches about the circumstances under which the criminal law should apply. Effectively, the Court elbows out of the way both Congress and prosecutorial authorities within the Executive Branch, making itself the indispensable player in all future attempts to hold former Presidents accountable to generally applicable criminal laws. "The Framers, however, did not make the judiciary the overseer of our government." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U. S. 579, 594 (1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring). To be sure, this Court may sometimes "have to intervene in determining where authority lies as between the democratic forces in our scheme of government." Id., at 597. But it has long been understood that "we should be wary and humble" when doing so. Ibid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The majority displays no such caution or humility now. Instead, the Court today transfers from the political branches to itself the power to decide when the President can be held accountable. What is left in its wake is a greatly weakened Congress, which must stand idly by as the President disregards its criminal prohibitions and uses the powers of his office to push the envelope, while choosing to follow (or not) existing laws, as he sees fit. We also now have a greatly empowered Court, which can opt to allow Congress's policy judgments criminalizing conduct to stand (or not) with respect to a former President, as a matter of its own prerogative.

B

If the structural consequences of today's paradigm shift mark a step in the wrong direction, then the practical consequences are a five-alarm fire that threatens to consume democratic self-governance and the normal operations of our Government. The majority shoos away this possibility. Ante, at 37 (accusing the dissents of "strik[ing] a tone of chilling doom that is wholly disproportionate to what the Court actually does today"). But JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR makes this point plain, see ante, at 29–30, and I will not belabor it.

Here, I will merely observe that, from a theoretical perspective, philosophers have long considered deterrence to be a key justification for adopting and maintaining systems that ensure accountability for criminal conduct.[7] For that same reason, some commentators also maintain that decreasing the certainty of accountability for wrongful acts at least arguably reduces incentives to follow the law.[8]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Under the individual accountability model, because everyone is subject to the law, the potential of criminal liability operates as a constraint on the actions and decisions of everyone, including the President. After today, that reality is no more. Consequently, our Nation has lost a substantial check on Presidents who would use their official powers to commit crimes with impunity while in office.

So, one might ask, what remains of accountability for Presidents under law? With today's paradigm shift, the majority leaves in place only the chance that this Court might someday determine that the criminal conduct in question was an "unofficial" act, or that the Government will somehow rebut the presumption of immunity that applies to a President's official acts, such that criminal consequences might attach. But with the parameters of official and unofficial conduct unknown, I think it highly unlikely that a sitting President would feel constrained by these remote possibilities.

---

[7] See, e.g., Plato, Laws 274 (B. Jowett transl. 2000) ("Not that he is punished because he did wrong, for that which is done can never be undone, but in order that in future times, he, and those who see him corrected, may utterly hate injustice, or at any rate abate much of their evildoing"); see also J. Bentham, The Rationale of Punishment 20 (1830) ("General prevention ought to be the chief end of punishment, as it is its real justification"); A. von Hirsch, Doing Justice: The Choice of Punishments 44 (1976) ("The threat and imposition of punishment is called for in order to secure compliance—not full compliance, but more compliance than there might be were there no legal penalties at all").

[8] See, e.g., M. Ryan, Taking Another Look at Second-Look Sentencing, 81 Brooklyn L. Rev. 149, 156, and n. 37 (2015) ("[U]ndermining the . . . certainty of punishment . . . could undermine the deterrence value of punishment").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

All of this leads me to ponder why, exactly, has the majority concluded that an indeterminate "core"-versus-"official"-versus-"unofficial" line-drawing exercise is the better way to address potential criminal acts of a President? Could it be that the majority believes the obviously grave dangers of shifting from the individual accountability model to the Presidential accountability model might nevertheless be offset by the great benefits of doing so? Cf. J. Bentham, A Fragment on Government and an Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 3 (W. Harrison ed. 1948) (arguing that acts can be justified by the maxim that "it is the greatest happiness of the greatest number that is the measure of right and wrong" (emphasis deleted)).

Some of the majority's analysis suggests as much. As far as I can tell, the majority is mostly concerned that, without immunity, Presidents might "be chilled from taking the 'bold and unhesitating action' required of an independent Executive." Ante, at 13. The Court's opinion candidly laments that application of the law to Presidents might not be evenhanded, and that, as a result, Presidents might be less "'vigorous' and 'energetic'" as executive officers. Ante, at 10; accord, ante, at 39. But that concern ignores (or rejects) the foundational principles upon which the traditional individual accountability paradigm is based. Worse still, promoting more vigor from Presidents in exercising their official duties—and, presumably, less deliberation—invites breathtaking risks in terms of harm to the American people that, in my view, far outweigh the benefits.

This is not to say that the majority is wrong when it perceives that it can be cumbersome for a President to have to follow the law while carrying out his duty to enforce it. It is certainly true that "[a] scheme of government like ours no doubt at times feels the lack of power to act with complete, all-embracing, swiftly moving authority." Youngstown, 343 U. S., at 613 (Frankfurter, J., concurring). But any American who has studied history knows that "our government was designed to have such restrictions." Ibid. (emphasis added). Our Constitution's "separation of powers was adopted by the Convention of 1787, not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was, not to avoid friction, but . . . to save the people from autocracy." Myers v. United States, 272 U. S. 52, 293 (1926) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Having now cast the shadow of doubt over when—if ever—a former President will be subject to criminal liability for any criminal conduct he engages in while on duty, the majority incentivizes all future Presidents to cross the line of criminality while in office, knowing that unless they act "manifestly or palpably beyond [their] authority," ante, at 17, they will be presumed above prosecution and punishment alike.

But the majority also tells us not to worry, because "[l]ike everyone else, the President is subject to prosecution in his unofficial capacity." Ante, at 40 (emphasis added). This attempted reassurance is cold comfort, even setting aside the fact that the Court has neglected to lay out a standard that reliably distinguishes between a President's official and unofficial conduct. Why? Because there is still manifest inequity: Presidents alone are now free to commit crimes when they are on the job, while all other Americans must follow the law in all aspects of their lives, whether personal or professional. The official-versus-unofficial act distinction also seems both arbitrary and irrational, for it suggests that the unofficial criminal acts of a President are the only ones worthy of prosecution. Quite to the contrary, it is when the President commits crimes using his unparalleled official powers that the risks of abuse and autocracy will be most dire. So, the fact that, "unlike anyone else, the President is" vested with "sweeping powers and duties," ibid., actually underscores, rather than undermines, the grim stakes of setting the criminal law to the side when the President flexes those very powers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The vision John Adams enshrined in the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights—"'a government of laws and not of men'"—speaks directly to this concept. Mine Workers, 330 U. S., at 307 (Frankfurter, J., concurring in judgment). Adams characterized that document as an homage to the Rule of Law; it reflected both a flat "rejection in positive terms of rule by fiat" and a solemn promise that "[e]very act of government may be challenged by an appeal to law." Id., at 308. Thanks to the majority, that vision and promise are likely to be fleeting in the future. From this day forward, Presidents of tomorrow will be free to exercise the Commander-in-Chief powers, the foreign-affairs powers, and all the vast law enforcement powers enshrined in Article II however they please—including in ways that Congress has deemed criminal and that have potentially grave consequences for the rights and liberties of Americans.

IV

To the extent that the majority's new accountability paradigm allows Presidents to evade punishment for their criminal acts while in office, the seeds of absolute power for Presidents have been planted. And, without a doubt, absolute power corrupts absolutely. "If one man can be allowed to determine for himself what is law, every man can. That means first chaos, then tyranny." Id., at 312. Likewise, "[i]f the Government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for law; it invites every man to become a law unto himself; it invites anarchy." Olmstead, 277 U. S., at 485 (Brandeis, J., dissenting). I worry that, after today's ruling, our Nation will reap what this Court has sown.

Stated simply: The Court has now declared for the first time in history that the most powerful official in the United States can (under circumstances yet to be fully determined) become a law unto himself. As we enter this uncharted territory, the People, in their wisdom, will need to remain ever attentive, consistently fulfilling their established role in our constitutional democracy, and thus collectively serving as the ultimate safeguard against any chaos spawned by this Court's decision. For, like our democracy, our Constitution is "the creature of their will, and lives only by their will." Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 389 (1821).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

For my part, I simply cannot abide the majority's senseless discarding of a model of accountability for criminal acts that treats every citizen of this country as being equally subject to the law—as the Rule of Law requires. That core principle has long prevented our Nation from devolving into despotism. Yet the Court now opts to let down the guardrails of the law for one extremely powerful category of citizen: any future President who has the will to flout Congress's established boundaries.

In short, America has traditionally relied on the law to keep its Presidents in line. Starting today, however, Americans must rely on the courts to determine when (if at all) the criminal laws that their representatives have enacted to promote individual and collective security will operate as speedbumps to Presidential action or reaction. Once self-regulating, the Rule of Law now becomes the rule of judges, with courts pronouncing which crimes committed by a President have to be let go and which can be redressed as impermissible. So, ultimately, this Court itself will decide whether the law will be any barrier to whatever course of criminality emanates from the Oval Office in the future. The potential for great harm to American institutions and Americans themselves is obvious.

* * *

The majority of my colleagues seems to have put their trust in our Court's ability to prevent Presidents from becoming Kings through case-by-case application of the indeterminate standards of their new Presidential accountability paradigm. I fear that they are wrong. But, for all our sakes, I hope that they are right.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In the meantime, because the risks (and power) the Court has now assumed are intolerable, unwarranted, and plainly antithetical to bedrock constitutional norms, I dissent.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 7/11/2024 8:12:46 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: Deceased voter NVRA case in AZ
Attachments: Mussi complaint.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Here's the complaint I mentioned in the case involving a list maintenance challenged based on dead voters, Mussi v. Fontes, No. 2:24-cv-01310-DWL (D. Ariz. filed June 3, 2024). Similar to PILF, the plaintiffs claim that they identified 20,000-35,000 voters who died between December 2020 and November 2022 and were not removed. The plaintiffs are Arizona politicians and the state Republican Party. The plaintiffs are represented by Holtzman Vogel, which frequently represents republican candidates and parties. It's in the early stages, at the motion-to-dismiss stage.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Muckrock FOIA

Andrew Gould (No. 013234)
Dallin B. Holt (No. 037419)
Brennan A.R. Bowen (No. 036639)
HOLTZMAN VOGEL BARAN
TORCHINSKY & JOSEFIAK PLLC
2575 East Camelback Road, Suite 860
Phoenix, Arizona 85016
(602) 388-1262
agould@holtzmanvogel.com
dholt@holtzmanvogel.com bbowen@holtzmanvogel.com minuteentries@holtzmanvogel.com

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

SCOT MUSSI, GINA SWOBODA, in her capacity as Chair of the Republican Party of Arizona, and STEVEN GAYNOR Plaintiffs, v. ADRIAN FONTES, in his official capacity as Arizona Secretary of State, Defendant.	Case No.: COMPLAINT

Plaintiffs bring this Complaint against Defendant Adrian Fontes in his official capacity as the Arizona Secretary of State (the "Secretary"), and allege as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. Section 8 of the National Voter Registration Act (the "NVRA"), 52 U.S.C. § 20507, requires states to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of . . . (A) the death of the registrant; or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant" to maintain accurate and updated voter-registration records in a uniform manner across the state. 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4)(A)–(B).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Arizona has failed to comply with this requirement because Arizona voter registration data and statistics indicate the lack of an NVRA-compliant list maintenance program in the state.

3. Instead of establishing an efficient and uniform voter file maintenance program across Arizona, the Secretary—when providing information regarding its list maintenance programs to the state legislature—has responded that its program "is in development," meaning that the general maintenance program required of states by the NVRA does not currently exist in Arizona.

4. All counties in Arizona have registration rates that far exceed the national and statewide voter-registration rates in recent years.

5. Up to four Arizona counties—Apache, La Paz, Navajo, and Santa Cruz—have more registered voters than citizens over the age of 18 (i.e., more registered voters than citizens eligible to register to vote).

6. Similarly, the remaining counties—apart from Greenlee (registration rate of approximately 76.5%)—have voter registration rates of between 80 and 99 percent, with the majority being over 90 percent.

7. These rates are implausibly high. By comparison, when reviewing latest Current Population Survey ("CPS") data from the U.S. Census Bureau and comparing estimates of registered voters who are actually eligible to be registered, the national voter registration rate as a percentage of potential voters is 69.1% (i.e., average registration rate across the country) and for Arizona it is 69.9%.[1] The data made public by the Secretary show that Arizona counties have actual registration rates that exceed the expected registration rates provided by the U.S. Census Bureau and evidence a high rate of likely ineligible voter names on the official lists of eligible voters.

8. Based on even the most conservative data sources, Arizona has at least 500,000 registered voters on the voter rolls who should have otherwise been removed. In other words, at least 500,000 registered voters currently listed on the Secretary's voter rolls for Arizona are deceased or no longer reside in Arizona.

[1] All the data discussed herein is supported by the expert report of Thomas M. Bryan, attached hereto as "Exhibit 1," and incorporated herein by reference.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

9. And a review of other reliable data sources shows that Arizona has between 1,060,000 and 1,270,000 unaccounted-for voters on the state voter rolls.

10. Either way, at a minimum, reliable data shows that Arizona's voter rolls contain at least 500,000 voters that should not be currently registered.

11. Removing registered voters who have died is one of the ways voter rolls must, under Section 8, be maintained.

12. In looking at Arizona deaths compared to voter file removals, from December 2020 to the end of November 2022 (the "Study Period"), there were approximately 20,000 to 35,000 registered voters who died and were not removed from Arizona's voter rolls. This amounts to a removal shortage for deceased voters of 20%–35%. Meaning that, of the approximately 143,278 Arizona citizens of voting age who died during the study period, only 108,103 were removed from the voter rolls.

13. Additionally, for Maricopa County during the Study Period, the Election Administration and Voting Survey ("EAVS") conducted by the U.S. Election Assistance Commission ("EAC") shows that 752,387 voter registration confirmation notices were sent to voters listed on the registration rolls in Maricopa County to determine if they still lived at the location where they were registered to vote. And while the data shows that 131,682 voters were removed for various reasons from the notice batch, there are no reported voter responses or removals by the Secretary accounting for the status of the remaining 620,000 notice letters.

14. Unlike Maricopa County, in the remaining Arizona counties, nearly every notice letter that went out was accounted for in EAVS.

15. The data shows that even when unremoved deceased voters are excluded from the approximate 500,000 unaccounted-for registered voters on Arizona's voter rolls, there remains a significant difference between Arizona's Citizen Voting Age Population ("CVAP") and registered voters.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

16. In other words, this data shows that the 500,000 unaccounted-for registered voters remaining on Arizona's voter rolls is primarily attributable to voters moving out of Arizona or voters who failed to respond to confirmation notices—both of which are established methods of maintaining clean and updated voter rolls.

17. The Secretary has admitted to the Arizona Legislature that he has not implemented an NVRA-compliant program to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official registration lists. Indeed, in every quarterly report since January 2023 provided to the Senate President and Speaker of the House—where the Secretary is required to account for voter roll list maintenance—the Secretary avers that the "process is in development" rather than outlining his voter list maintenance procedures.[2]

18. Based on this and other evidence, the Secretary is failing to make a reasonable effort to conduct appropriate list maintenance, despite the NVRA's requirement that he maintain updated and accurate voter rolls.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

19. The Court has subject-matter jurisdiction because this case alleges violations of the NVRA. 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

20. Venue is proper because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in this County and because the Secretary "resides" here. 28 U.S.C. § 1391.

PARTIES

21. Plaintiff Scot Mussi is a duly registered Arizona voter who lives in Maricopa County. Mussi regularly votes in Arizona's primary and general elections, and is currently President of the Arizona Free Enterprise Club. Mussi has spent nearly 20 years working on conservative issues and causes in Arizona, and he plans to vote in Arizona's upcoming federal and state elections.

22. As a result, Mussi has a clear interest in supporting the enforcement of laws such as the NVRA that promote fair and orderly elections.

[2] The Secretary's last four report letters are attached hereto as "Exhibit 2," and are incorporated herein by reference.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

23. Plaintiff Gina Swoboda is Chair of the Republican Party of Arizona ("AZ GOP").

24. AZ GOP is a political party committee organized and operated pursuant to Title 16, Chapter 5 of the Arizona Revised Statutes.

25. As Chair of AZ GOP, Swoboda works in Arizona to advance conservative policies and to help elect Republican candidates. AZ GOP relies upon accurate voter registration rolls to engage in electoral activity, contact voters, get out the vote, monitor the integrity of elections, protect the efficacy of AZ GOP adherents' votes, and decide how to allocate limited resources.

26. Thus, Swoboda, in her capacity as Chair of the AZ GOP, has a clear interest in supporting the enforcement of laws such as the NVRA that promote fair and orderly elections.

27. Plaintiff Steven Gaynor is a duly registered Arizona voter who lives in Maricopa County. Gaynor regularly votes in Arizona's primary and general elections. He plans to vote in Arizona's upcoming federal and state elections.

28. Therefore, Gaynor has a clear interest in supporting the enforcement of laws such as the NVRA that promote fair and orderly elections.

29. Because the Secretary does not maintain accurate voter rolls, ineligible voters have an opportunity to vote in Arizona elections, risking the dilution of Plaintiffs' legitimate votes.

30. Further, Arizona's inaccurate rolls undermine Plaintiffs' confidence in the integrity of Arizona elections, which also burdens their right to vote.

31. In sum, based on Arizona's inaccurate voter rolls, Plaintiffs' votes risk being diluted, and their confidence in elections is undermined, regardless of their political party or the political party of the candidate they vote for in an election.

32. Additionally, because the Secretary does not maintain accurate voter rolls, Plaintiffs must spend more time and resources monitoring Arizona's elections for fraud and abuse, mobilizing voters to counteract it, educating the public about election-integrity issues, and persuading elected officials to improve list maintenance.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Freedom of Information Act

33. Plaintiffs also must spend more of their time and resources on get-out-the-vote efforts for like-minded individuals—eligible voters who, because the Secretary does not maintain accurate voter rolls, lack confidence in the accuracy and integrity of Arizona's elections. The time and resources that Plaintiffs divert to these activities would otherwise be spent on other projects and activities that would advance their goals.

34. Defendant, Adrian Fontes, is the Arizona Secretary of State. He is the State's chief election officer and is responsible for the statewide list maintenance required by the NVRA, 52 U.S.C. § 20509. Adrian Fontes is sued in his official capacity.

BACKGROUND

I. Statutory Background

35. Congress enacted the NVRA "to protect the integrity of the electoral process." 52 U.S.C. § 20501(b)(3). Specifically, Section 8 was enacted "to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained." Id. § 20501(b)(4).

36. Retaining voter rolls bloated with ineligible voters harms the electoral process, heightens the risk of electoral fraud, and undermines public confidence in elections.

37. Section 8 obligates States to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters." 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4).

38. Each State's program for maintaining voter-registration lists must be "uniform, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act." 52 U.S.C. § 20507(b)(1).

39. Specifically, Section 8 requires States to remove individuals from the voter rolls who have become ineligible due to "death" or due to "a change in . . . residence" outside their current voting jurisdiction. 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4)(A)–(B).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

40. The Help America Vote Act (HAVA) also requires States to adopt computerized statewide voter registration lists and maintain them "on a regular basis" in accordance with the NVRA. 52 U.S.C. § 21083(a)(2)(A).

41. States must "ensure that voter registration records in the State are accurate and are updated regularly"—an obligation that includes a "reasonable effort to remove registrants who are ineligible to vote from the official list of eligible voters." 52 U.S.C. § 21083(a)(4)(A).

42. HAVA's list-maintenance requirements include coordination with "State agency records on death" and "State agency records on felony status" to facilitate the removal of individuals who are deceased or rendered ineligible under state law due to a felony conviction. 52 U.S.C. § 21083(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I)-(II).

43. According to the bipartisan Carter-Baker Commission, "registration lists lie at the root of most problems encountered in U.S. elections."[3] Inaccurate voter rolls that contain "ineligible, duplicate, fictional, or deceased voters are an invitation to fraud." Id. "While election fraud is difficult to measure" (because many cases go undetected, uninvestigated, or unprosecuted), "it occurs." Id. at 45. "In close or disputed elections, and there are many, a small amount of fraud could make the margin of difference." Id. at 18. And "the perception of possible fraud contributes to low confidence in the system." Id.

44. Arizona, too, has experienced known cases of voter fraud.

45. But the known cases are a small percentage of the overall cases because Arizona is not well equipped to detect fraud. For example, Arizona has no system in place to detect when people vote in multiple States. While the Electronic Registration Information Center can reveal whether voters have moved out of state, 50% of States do not participate in that voluntary program.

46. Recognizing these concerns, the NVRA includes a private right of action. It empowers any "person who is aggrieved by a violation" to "provide written notice of the [3] Comm'n on Fed. Election Reform, Building Confidence in U.S. Elections, at 10 (Sept. 2005), available at: https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/6/Exhibit%20M.PDF.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

violation to the chief election official of the State involved." 52 U.S.C. § 20510(b)(1). "If the violation is not corrected within 90 days after receipt of a notice, … the aggrieved person may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court for declaratory or injunctive relief." Id. § 20510(b)(2).

II. The Secretary's Statutory Duty

47. The Arizona Secretary of State is primarily responsible for voter list maintenance in Arizona.

48. The NVRA requires each State to "designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for coordination of State responsibilities under" the law. 52 U.S.C. § 20509.

49. Arizona law designates the Secretary of State as that individual. See A.R.S. § 41-121(A)(9) & (13).

50. Ultimate responsibility for coordinating and overseeing all list-maintenance activities rests with the Secretary of State under both state and federal law. Therefore, the Secretary of State is the appropriate defendant in this case. A chief election official "may not delegate the responsibility to conduct a general program to a local official and thereby avoid responsibility if such a program is not reasonably conducted." United States v. Missouri, 535 F.3d 844, 850 (8th Cir. 2008).

51. Indeed, "the NVRA's centralization of responsibility counsels against . . . buck passing." Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 839 (5th Cir. 2014). Courts have rejected the view that, "once the state designates" a local entity to assist with complying with federal law, "her responsibility ends." Harkless v. Brunner, 545 F.3d 445, 452 (6th Cir. 2008). "[I]f every state passed legislation delegating NVRA responsibilities to local authorities, the fifty states would be completely insulated from any enforcement burdens, even if NVRA violations occurred throughout the state." Id.

52. Accordingly, because the Secretary has the legal duty to ensure that all voter registration records in Arizona, regardless of the county, are maintained in an accurate and uniform manner across Arizona. He cannot abdicate this duty and place responsibility on the county recorders across Arizona to perform his duties under Section 8.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock

III. Plaintiffs' Statutory Notice

53. Under the NVRA, a plaintiff has standing to bring suit only if they first "provide written notice of the violation to the chief election official of the state involved," and then 90 days elapse without correction of the violation. 52 U.S.C. § 20510(b)(1)–(2).

54. In a lawsuit involving multiple plaintiffs, so long as one of the plaintiffs provided actual 90-day notice, it is not necessary that all plaintiffs provide separate 90-day notices. See Ass'n of Cmty. Orgs. for Reform Now v. Miller, 129 F.3d 833, 838 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that where one plaintiff had already provided notice and the state had ignored it, additional notices from other plaintiffs would be futile and unnecessary).

55. On August 8, 2023, Plaintiff Mussi mailed a statutory notice letter ("90-Day Notice Letter") to the Secretary, notifying him that 14 Arizona counties were in violation of Section 8 of the NVRA and formally requested that he correct the violations within 90 days.[4]

56. Following the 90-Day Notice Letter, Plaintiffs received updated comparisons based on data that was released after the Letter, revealing that all 15 Arizona counties are in violation of Section 8. See generally Exhibit 1. Those numbers are reflected above.

57. The 90-Day Notice Letter stated that Mussi "hope[d] to avoid litigation and would welcome immediate efforts by [the Secretary] to bring Arizona into compliance with Section 8." Exhibit 3, at p. 3.

58. The 90-Day Notice Letter asked the Secretary to "modify [his] current list maintenance program to ensure that it is comprehensive, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with federal law" and to "identify and remove [several] categories of individuals from the official lists of eligible voters." Id. at pp. 3–4.

[4] All related correspondence with the Secretary is attached hereto as "Exhibit 3," and are incorporated herein by reference.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

59. The 90-Day Notice Letter also asked the Secretary to "respond in writing within 45 days of the date of this letter," "fully describ[ing] the efforts, policies, and programs [the Secretary is] taking, or plan[ning] to undertake prior to the 2024 general election to bring Arizona into compliance with Section 8," and "not[ing] when [the Secretary] plan[ned] to begin and complete each specified measure and the results of any programs or activities you have already undertaken." Id. at p. 4.

60. Additionally, the 90-Day Notice Letter requested that the Secretary advise Mussi "what policies are presently in place, or will be put in place, to ensure effective and routine coordination of list maintenance activities with the federal, state, and local entities" and to provide him with "a description of the specific steps [he] intend[ed] to take to ensure routine and effective list maintenance on a continuing basis beyond the 2024 election." Id. The 90-Day Notice Letter also requested that the Secretary take steps to preserve documents as required by Section 8(i) of the NVRA, 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i)(1)-(2), and other federal law. Id. at pp. 4–5.

61. Finally, the 90-Day Notice Letter stated that a lawsuit would be filed under 52 U.S.C. § 20510(b)(2) if the identified violations were not corrected. Id. at p. 5.

62. The Secretary responded to the 90-Day Notice Letter on August 15, 2023. In his response, the Secretary mischaracterized Plaintiffs' statistics and denied that inflated voter rolls were evidence of an NVRA violation. See generally id. at pp. 6–10.

63. For example, the Secretary stated that "[a]s of 2022, there were more than 5 million total citizens of voting age in Arizona, only 3.5 million of which, or 62.1%, were registered to vote according to U.S. Census estimates." Id. at p. 7.

64. The Secretary is correct that there were roughly 5 million citizens, and that roughly 3.5 million registered—but clearly erred in his citation of the resulting registration rate being 62.1%.

65. Using the exact 2022 registered voter estimates provided by the Secretary—of 3,560,000 registered and 5,093,000 CVAP—the percent registered among CVAP is 69.9%. The 62.1% statistic misleadingly used by the Secretary in his response is the percent of registered voters of the total Voting Age Population ("VAP") of 5,731,000 in Arizona—thus failing to only consider citizens of voting age population.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

66. Another example of the Secretary's efforts to excuse his complacency with misleading data is when he stated in response that "in 2020, Arizona Secretary of State records indicate a total of 4,143,929 active registered voters, while the U.S. Census data indicates only estimated 3,878,000 registered voters." Id.

67. The Secretary's response is correct in one regard but wrong in another (more important) sense. Specifically, although the U.S. Census Bureau data does indicate there were 3,878,000 registered voters for 2020, the response errs in reporting the Secretary's own recorded number of active registered voters. Defendant's own website (https://azsos.gov/elections/results-data/voter-registration-statistics, (last visited Apr. 4, 2024)) shows 4,281,308 active registered voters for 2020, while the 4,143,929 active registered voters mentioned in the August 15, 2023, response are from 2022. In short, the Secretary's response mismatches the relevant years being compared.

68. The Secretary, in referencing the 90-Day Notice Letter, states that "the comparators used are estimates that undercount the number of actual registered voters in the state." Exhibit 3, at p. 7. However, in reality, it is the Secretary's use of the incorrect 2020 registered voter estimate (4.1MM, from 2022) instead of the actual (4.3MM, from 2020) against the official US Census Bureau's 2020 estimate (3.9MM) that creates an underestimate of the magnitude of difference between the two sources for 2020. The difference between the Secretary's 4.1MM active registered voters in the most recent period (2022) and the US Census Bureau's registered voter estimate for 2022 (3.6MM) is even larger.

69. A reply letter was sent to the Secretary on September 12, 2023, apprising the Secretary of his reliance on inaccurate data, and stating that "if Arizona fails to take the necessary curative steps to resolve the issues identified in [the correspondence], [we are] prepared to file a lawsuit seeking declaratory and injunctive relief." See generally id., pp. 11–13.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

70. No further communication was received from the Secretary, and, no necessary curative steps were taken by the Secretary to resolve the issues identified in the 90-Day Notice Letter.

IV. The Secretary Has Failed to Perform His Mandatory List Maintenance Duty Under the NVRA.

71. The Secretary is failing to perform his mandatory list-maintenance duty under the NVRA. In fact, the Secretary has essentially admitted as much to the Arizona Legislature. See generally Exhibit 2 (repeatedly admitting that various components of the NVRA-complaint list maintenance program are "in development").

72. To determine if the Secretary is accurately maintaining the voter file, one must first compare the total number of eligible voters in Arizona (U.S. Citizens over 18 years of age) against the number that are actually registered.

73. The number of potentially eligible Arizona voters is determined by the U.S. Census Bureau and the total number of actually registered voters is calculated by state data, as well as multiple national surveys.

74. If there are more registered voters than eligible voters—or if the percentage of registered voters exceeds agreed-upon levels of registration—it is reasonable to infer that the voter rolls contain voter records that should otherwise have been removed by the Secretary.[5]

75. When determining voter registration percentages, best practices require use of Vote Eligible Population ("VEP") or CVAP—meaning those who are legally about to cast a ballot—as opposed to using VAP, which simply looks at age.

[5] Providing voter registration percentages using inaccurate data points may appear to show NVRA-compliant list maintenance, when in fact this is not the case. For example, instead of including the CVAP in the calculation, an election official might include only VAP (this number would include non-citizens, who are not eligible to vote). Or, as opposed to including total registered voters, an election official might include only "active" registered voters—thus removing from the calculation the universe of inactive voters who are still on the jurisdiction's voter rolls. By comparing VAP (as opposed to CVAP) against active registrants (as opposed to total registrants), one can see what the percentage of registered should be (by removing likely-moved inactive voters and non-citizens), not what the percentage of total registered voters actually is. In fact, this is exactly what the Secretary already attempted to do. See supra § III (discussing the letters attached as "Exhibit 3" where the Secretary responded to Plaintiff's 90-day notice letter by citing misleading statistics).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

76. Arizona's CVAP is determined by the U.S. Census Bureau's American Community Survey ("ACS"). This information is gathered and released on a rolling basis. As of filing of this Complaint, three ACS data sets are probative in determining the number of individuals in Arizona who are both citizens and of voting age: (1) 2017 – 2021 ACS; (2) 2018 – 2022 ACS; and (3) 2022 ACS (limited to state-wide data and data for counties with populations exceeding 50,000).

77. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Arizona state-wide CVAP is as follows: (1) 2017 – 2021 ACS: 5,000,102; (2) 2018 – 2022 ACS: 5,118,553; and (3) 2022 ACS: 5,322,581.

78. The number of registered voters in Arizona can be ascertained through multiple sources: (1) Data reported by the State; (2) the U.S. Census Bureau's Current Population Survey ("CPS"); and (3) the Cooperative Election Study ("CES") (both pre- and post-election surveys).

79. The data reported by the State purports to be actual registration numbers, as opposed to the CPS and CES survey estimates. The CPS and CES data sets are both reputable and highly regarded national surveys that have long determined the number of registered voters in a particular jurisdiction. The CPS and CES almost universally show lower numbers of registered voters than numbers reported by states—leading to the inference that actual numbers reported by states are inflated with voters who should otherwise not be in the state voter file. This is the case in Arizona.

80. The number of registered voters in Arizona is as follows: (1) State Data: 4,833,160[6]; (2) 2022 CPS: 3,560,000; (3) 2022 CES Pre-Election: 3,773,000; and (4) 2022 CES Post-Election: 4,333,000.

[6] As discussed supra § III, this number refers to the total number of registered voters, not the number of active registered voters. In most instances, when the Secretary reports voter registration numbers, it only includes active, not total, registered voters. Compare data reported on the Secretary's website, https://azsos.gov/elections/results-data/voter-registration-statistics, with EAVS data at https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/2023-06/2022_EAVS_for_Public_Release_V1.xlsx.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

81. Comparing the number of Arizona registered voters against the various CVAP metrics, the voter registration rates in Arizona are as follows:

Arizona ACS and Sec. of State	CPS and CES National Surveys
2017-2021 ACS & 2022 AZ Sec. of State 4,833,160 registrants CVAP 5,000,102 96.7% Registration	2022 CPS 3,560,000 registrants 5.093MM CVAP (reported) 69.9% +/- 3.3% Registration
2018-2022 ACS & 2022 AZ Sec. of State 4,833,160 registrants CVAP 5,118,553 94.4% Registration	2022 CES Pre-Election 3,773,000 estimated* registrants ACS 2022: 5,322,581 CVAP 70.9% Registration
2022 ACS & 2022 AZ Sec. of State 4,833,160 registrants ACS 2022: 5,322,581 CVAP 90.8% Registration	2022 CES Post-Election 4,333,000 estimated* registrants ACS 2022: 5,322,581 CVAP 81.4% Registration

82. Historically, one of the primary criticisms of the CPS is that it overreports its numbers, including voter registration. Said differently—the CPS's voter registration percentages are typically higher than the official reported numbers. In fact, in describing the CPS's numbers the U.S. Census Bureau said, "[i]n general, sample surveys like the CPS tend to yield higher voting rates than official results."[7] This further casts doubt on the State's reported registration rates of 90.8%, 94.4%, and 96.7%—depending on which ACS metric the registration numbers are compared against. The 2022 CPS shows a 69.9% voter registration rate in Arizona.

83. From CPS, the national percent of registered voters of CVAP in 2022 is 69.1%.

[7] https://www.census.gov/content/dam/Census/library/publications/2022/demo/p20-585.pdf

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

84. Stated differently, the best available data indicates that the number of people on the official voter registration rolls in Arizona is 20 or more percentage points higher than the number actually eligible and registered in Arizona.

85. Regardless of the metrics used to determine voter registration percentages, except for Greenlee County, all Arizona counties have exceptionally high rates of registered voters when compared to CVAP.

86. In fact, multiple counties (Apache, La Paz, Navajo, and Santa Cruz) show an impossible number of registered voters—more registered voters than people who are eligible to be registered.

87. The remaining Arizona counties all have voter registration rates that significantly exceed national averages, and reputable survey averages, for Arizona—with many of the registration rates being in the mid-to-high 90% range.

88. When looking at the various ACS CVAP metrics, compared against the total number of registered voters as reported by the State via the ACS, the county-by-county breakdown is as follows:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckrockFOIA

Table III.B.1 ACS CVAP by Vintage: 2017-2021, 2018-2022 and 2022 and Total Registered Voters[8]

Geography	2017-2021 5-year CVAP	2018-2022 5-year CVAP	2022 1-Year CVAP	A1a Total Registered "TREG"	%TREG of 17-21 CVAP	%TREG of 18-22 CVAP	%TREG of FY 2022 CVAP
Apache	48,002	48,085	48,096	56,461	117.6%	117.4%	117.4%
Cochise	93,080	94,116	94,779	87,376	93.9%	92.8%	92.2%
Coconino	111,746	111,990	112,684	105,278	94.2%	94.0%	93.4%
Gila	41,905	42,340	NA	38,087	90.9%	90.0%	NA
Graham	27,616	27,942	NA	22,469	81.4%	80.4%	NA
Greenlee	6,782	6,746	NA	5,164	76.1%	76.5%	NA
La Paz	13,014	12,681	NA	13,141	101.0%	103.6%	NA
Maricopa	2,998,592	3,079,626	3,218,330	2,939,138	98.0%	95.4%	91.3%
Mohave	169,576	172,944	181,825	161,847	95.4%	93.6%	89.0%
Navajo	77,149	78,419	80,594	77,286	100.2%	98.6%	95.9%
Pima	763,822	775,517	798,113	705,072	92.3%	90.9%	88.3%
Pinal	305,976	317,927	338,587	282,575	92.4%	88.9%	83.5%
Santa Cruz	28,562	28,834	NA	32,244	112.9%	111.8%	NA
Yavapai	188,873	192,907	201,459	187,587	99.3%	97.2%	93.1%
Yuma	125,407	128,479	130,763	119,435	95.2%	93.0%	91.3%
TOTAL AZ	5,000,102	5,118,553	5,322,581	4,833,160	96.7%	94.4%	90.8%

Source: https://data.census.gov/all?q=b05003

89. There is no evidence that these counties experienced above-average voter participation compared to the rest of the country or state. The only likely explanation for these discrepancies is substandard voter list maintenance by the Secretary.

90. There is also evidence that the Secretary has failed in his duty to remove deceased voters from the rolls under the NVRA.

91. During the Study Period, there were approximately 20,000 to 35,000 registered voters who died and were not removed from Arizona's voter rolls. This amounts to a removal shortage for deceased voters of 20%-35%.

92. Unlike the change-of-address procedure outlined in Section 8 of the NVRA, States are not required to wait to remove the names of deceased voters until a specified number of federal general elections has passed. See 52 U.S.C. 20507(c), (a)(4) (specifying a multistep process for change-of-address removals but not for deceased removals).

[8] Red and black represent higher values and green represents lower values. The colors do not convey that an estimate is acceptable or unacceptable, or one that complies with the NVRA.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

Deceased voters may lawfully be removed from the voter rolls as soon as the Secretary receives confirmation of the voter's death.

93. The significant discrepancy between the estimated total number of registered voter deaths and the reported number of removals because of death demonstrates that the Secretary has not taken reasonable efforts to develop a consistent program to remove deceased voters from the rolls.

94. Additionally, when it comes to voter registration confirmation notices sent out to confirm voter registration files, nearly all Arizona counties account for every notice letter sent out in EAVS (i.e., returned as undeliverable, responded that moved, responded that still at address, etc.). Meaning that if a county sent out 10,000 notices, they have documented nearly 10,000 responses or actions taken from those notices. However, the lone outlier is Arizona's most populous county—Maricopa.

95. During the Study Period, Maricopa County EAVS data shows that 752,387 voter registration confirmation notices were sent to voters in Maricopa County to determine if they still lived at the location where they were registered to vote. The data shows that 131,682 voters were removed for various reasons from the notice batch, thus leaving at least 620,000 of the notice letters unaccounted-for in EAVS—the clear outlier of all Arizona counties.

96. Given that a minimum of 500,000 unaccounted-for voters remain on Arizona voter rolls (possibly as many as 1,270,000, depending on the data source)—and given that unremoved deaths only account for 22,000–35,000 voters, by excluding other likely causes—this data shows that the 500,000 unaccounted-for registered voters on Arizona's voter rolls is primarily attributable to voters moving out of Arizona or voters who failed to respond to confirmation notices. Said differently, no other category of possible removals has 500,000 possible removals to make-up the difference.

97. Quarterly, the Secretary is required to provide a report to the Senate President and Speaker of the House accounting for voter roll list maintenance in Arizona. In the reports submitted in the last four quarters—January 25, 2024; November 1, 2023; August

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

1, 2023; and May 8, 2023—in lieu of providing clear and concise data outlining voter list maintenance procedures, the Secretary admitted the absence of a program, stating instead that the "process is in development" and providing no substantive information. See generally Exhibit 2.

98. The Secretary is also required to submit information regarding his voter list maintenance program to the EAC every two years in response to the EAVS. As described above, the information submitted for Maricopa County shows no voter responses or removals for over 620,000 voters who received notices attempting to confirm their continued eligibility. This omission is further evidence that the Secretary has not implemented a program to remove ineligible voters.

99. The NVRA requires that the Secretary adopt a "uniform" program for voter list maintenance in Arizona. See 52 U.S.C. § 20507(b)(1). The diverging voter registration and removal rates from county to county, along with the fact that Maricopa failed to account for 620,000 verification notices sent to registered voters in Arizona—as compared to other counties which did account for these notices—shows the Secretary has failed to implement a "uniform" list maintenance program as required by the NVRA.

100. The Secretary's failure to maintain accurate voter rolls and adopt a "uniform" program for voter list maintenance in Arizona violates federal law and jeopardizes the integrity of Arizona's upcoming elections.

CLAIM

Violation of Section 8(a)(4), 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4)

101. Plaintiffs repeat and reallege each of their prior allegations.

102. Section 8(a)(4) of the NVRA requires that "each State shall . . . conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of (A) the death of the registrant; or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant[.]" 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4).

103. The Secretary has failed to make reasonable efforts to conduct voter list-maintenance as required by Section 8(a)(4) of the NVRA by failing to remove the names of deceased voters and the names of those voters who have moved to other jurisdictions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

104. Plaintiffs have suffered irreparable injuries as a direct result of the Secretary's failure to maintain accurate voter rolls that properly reflect the names of eligible voters because Plaintiffs' legitimate votes risk dilution any time an ineligible voter casts a ballot and inaccurate voter registration rolls undermine Plaintiffs' confidence in Arizona's electoral system.

105. Plaintiffs are also harmed as they are required to divert their resources to address issues caused by the Secretary's failure to maintain Arizona voter rolls in compliance with federal law.

106. Plaintiffs will continue to be injured by the Secretary's violations of Section 8(a)(4) of the NVRA until the Secretary is enjoined from violating the law and required to identify and remove the names of ineligible voters from the rolls.

107. Plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law beyond the judicial relief sought here pursuant to the NVRA.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court enter judgment in favor of Plaintiffs and against the Secretary and provide the following relief:

A. A declaratory judgment that the Secretary is in violation of Section 8 of the NVRA;

B. An injunction requiring the Secretary to fully comply with any existing procedures that Arizona has in place to ensure ineligible voters are identified and removed from the rolls;

C. An injunction requiring the Secretary to develop and implement additional reasonable and effective registration list-maintenance programs to cure their failure to comply with Section 8 of the NVRA and to ensure that ineligible registrants are not on the voter rolls;

D. Plaintiffs' reasonable costs and expenses of this action, including attorneys' fees; and

Obtained by Judicial Watch via MuckRock FOIA

E. All other further relief that Plaintiffs may be entitled to.

Respectfully submitted this 31st day of May, 2024.

HOLTZMAN VOGEL BARAN
TORCHINSKY & JOSEFIAK PLLC

By: /s/ Andrew Gould

Andrew Gould
Dallin B. Holt
Brennan A.R. Bowen
2575 E. Camelback Road, Suite 860
Phoenix, AZ 85016

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/15/2024 1:34:29 PM
To: Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Gillian Feiner [Gillian@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Stefanie Lambert developments -- privileged Attachments: Tina Peters - Criminal Cases[2].docx; 2024-08-13 DC DQ Decision[15].pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Heather and Linus,

We wanted to share two updates with you about Stefanie Lambert.

The first is the conviction of Tina Peters, a Colorado county clerk with whom Lambert is affiliated, for allowing improper access to voting machinery after the 2020 election. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Second, Lambert was disqualified as counsel in the Dominion v. Byrne in the federal district court in DC. As the order notes, such a remedy is "extraordinary and rarely granted outside of cases involving conflicts of interest." (p. 1) Lambert's deliberate violations of the protective order there—by disseminating Dominion documents marked confidential—"raise[d] the serious concern that she became involved in this litigation for the sheer purpose of gaining access to and publicly sharing Dominion's protected discovery." (p. 2). DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

As always, we're happy to discuss any of this.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

US DOMINION, INC., DOMINION VOTING SYSTEMS, INC., and DOMINION VOTING SYSTEMS CORPORATION, Plaintiffs, v. PATRICK BYRNE, Defendant.	Civil Action No. 1:21-cv-02131 (CJN) (MAU)

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This case arises out of the 2020 U.S. election. Plaintiffs US Dominion Inc., Dominion Voting Systems Inc., and Dominion Voting Systems Corporation ("Dominion") sue Defendant Patrick Byrne ("Byrne") for defamation related to allegedly false statements Byrne made about Dominion's role in that election. Compl. (ECF No. 1) ¶¶ 152–163.[1] Among the statements at issue are those in which Byrne claimed that Dominion ran the 2020 election; Dominion technology was developed by Hugo Chavez in Venezuela; and that Dominion hired a truck to shred "3,000 pounds of ballots." ECF No. 33 at 34. Dominion asserts that these statements are false and not only harmed its reputation and business, but also resulted in serious threats to its employees, their families, and election workers. Compl. ¶¶ 126–51.

[1] The other cases that are consolidated or coordinated for discovery are: Dominion, et al. v. Herring Networks, Inc., et al. (21-cv-2130); Dominion, et al. v. MyPillow, Inc., et al. (21-cv-445); Dominion, et al v. Powell, et al. (21-cv-040); and Dominion, et al. v. Giuliani (21-cv-0213). The Giuliani case is stayed pending bankruptcy proceedings. For all citations not otherwise specified, the Court cites to docket entries in Case No. 21-cv-2131 and page numbers in ECF headers.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

This litigation has been ongoing for nearly three years and is currently in discovery. This dispute centers on that discovery process, specifically repeated instances of non-compliance with the Court's Orders governing the disclosure and use of discovery material. From June 2023 until March 2024, all counsel and Parties in the case (including Byrne) seemingly abided by the Amended Protective Order ("Protective Order") governing discovery. ECF No. 46. Before even her first appearance in this case on March 12, 2024, however, Byrne's new counsel, Stefanie Junttila [Lambert] ("Lambert"), began openly violating orders, including by disseminating protected discovery material. ECF Nos. 71; 75; 82; 102; 108; 113. Due to Lambert's actions, thousands of documents ("Dominion's Litigation Documents") which all Parties, including Byrne himself, had agreed to keep confidential, have now been shared widely in the public domain. Lambert and Byrne continue to evade the Protective Order and this Court's March 19, 2024 Order ("Status Quo Order") that prohibits further dissemination until resolution of this Motion. ECF Nos. 75; 77; 82; 102; 105; 108; 113.

Before the Court is Dominion's Emergency Motion for Protective Relief and to Disqualify Counsel. ECF No. 75. Although Byrne has violated the Protective Order as set forth below, the full scope of Byrne's actions is not yet known. And what, if any, sanction Dominion might seek against him is not before this Court at this time.[2] The only questions currently before the Court are whether Lambert violated court orders and rules, and if so, whether she should be disqualified from this case.

The remedy Dominion seeks, Lambert's disqualification from serving as Byrne's counsel in this case, is extraordinary and rarely granted outside of cases involving conflicts of interest.

[2] Dominion has reserved its right to seek additional sanctions against Byrne and requested additional discovery into his conduct, including what led to the ultimate disclosures.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

Nevertheless, the record clearly shows that Lambert deliberately violated multiple court rules and orders and continues to do so despite having had ample warning of the consequences and assuring the Court she would comply. Lambert's repeated misconduct raises the serious concern that she became involved in this litigation for the sheer purpose of gaining access to and publicly sharing Dominion's protected discovery. Because Lambert's "truly egregious misconduct" has already and will undoubtedly continue to "infect future proceedings," this is the rare case in which disqualification is warranted. Koller By and Through Koller v. Richardson-Merrell, Inc., 737 F.2d 1038, 1056 (D.C. Cir. 1984), vacated on other grounds, Richardson-Merrell, Inc. v. Koller, 472 U.S. 424 (1985). Dominion's motion is GRANTED.

BACKGROUND

The relevant facts are largely undisputed.

Protective Order

The Court initially entered the Protective Order in three related cases (which are now coordinated or consolidated for discovery) on December 6, 2022. ECF No. 152 in Case No. 21-cv-445 (applying to Case Nos. 21-cv-445; 21-cv-213; and 21-cv-40). On June 8, 2023, Dominion and Byrne jointly moved the Court to enter the December 2022 Protective Order in this case. ECF No. 45. Per the stipulation, Byrne expressly agreed:

> The Order governs the handling of Discovery Materials within the Consolidated Cases and allows the parties to the Order to share Discovery Materials between those three actions—but prohibits persons or entities receiving Discovery Material produced in the Consolidated Cases from using those Discovery Materials outside of those three cases, except as specifically provided by the Order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Id. at 1–2 (emphasis added). Dominion and Byrne requested that the Protective Order be entered in this case to "facilitate . . . voluntary discovery coordination." Id. at 2. The Court granted the Parties' joint motion and entered the Protective Order in this case on June 16, 2023. ECF No. 46.[3]

The Protective Order states:

> 1. Any Discovery Material produced in the Litigation will be used, except by the Producing Party, solely for purposes of this Litigation and no Receiving Party will provide Discovery Material to any person or entity (including for any other litigation) or make any Discovery Material public except as permitted by this Order and in this Litigation.

ECF No. 75-7 ¶ 1 (emphasis added).

The Protective Order defines "Discovery Material" as:

> [D]ocuments, testimony (in any form whether by affidavit, declaration, or deposition), exhibits, transcripts, written discovery requests, interrogatory responses, responses to requests for admission, responses to requests for documents, and any other information or material produced, given, or exchanged, including any information contained therein or derived therefrom ("Discovery Material"), by or among any Party or non-Party providing Discovery Material (each a "Producing Party") in the Litigation to the party receiving the Discovery Material ("Receiving Party").

Id. at 4.

Within the broad prohibition against using any Discovery Material outside of the related litigation, the Protective Order contains additional protections and procedures for the use of Confidential and Attorneys' Eyes Only ("AEO") materials. ECF No. 75-5. The Protective Order also sets forth procedures for how a Party can seek to challenge designations or disclose discovery

[3] Dominion attached ECF No. 46 to the Motion at issue because it was the operative Protective Order at the time. ECF No. 75-7. On March 21, 2024, after Dominion filed its Motion, the Court entered an amended Protective Order to which all Parties agreed. ECF No. 79. The Protective Order at ECF No. 79 is now the operative Protective Order but does not alter the relevant provisions of the initial Protective Order that has governed Party conduct in this case since June 16, 2023. To avoid confusion, the Court will use the ECF citation and page numbers for ECF No. 75-7 when citing to the Protective Order going forward.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

notwithstanding the order. Id. ¶¶ 15, 16. Paragraph 16 sets forth procedures for a Party to object to the initial designation of discovery materials as protected. Id. ¶ 16. Specifically, it permits a Party to object to the designation of Discovery Material as Confidential or AEO by sending written notice to and meeting and conferring with the designating Party. Id. If this process does not resolve the issue, the objecting Party may file a motion with the Court to strike the designation within twenty-one days of the meet and confer. Id. Importantly, while the dispute is pending, the discovery materials "will be treated as Confidential or [AEO] pursuant to [the] order." Id.

Paragraph 15 allows a Party to object to the continued restriction on public access to confidential/AEO discovery materials:

> Any Party who objects to the continued restriction on public access to any Confidential or Attorneys' Eyes Only Filing, or any portion thereof, will give written notice of the objection to the Party that designated the Discovery Material as Confidential or Attorneys' Eyes Only ("the Designating Party"). To the extent that the Designating Party seeks to continue the restriction on public access to the Confidential or Attorneys' Eyes Only Filing, or any portion thereof, the Designating Party will file an application with the Court within seven (7) days for a judicial determination as to whether good cause exists for continued restricted access to the Confidential Filing, or any portion thereof.

Id. ¶ 15.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 permit Confidential and AEO material to be disclosed to certain people, some of whom must sign an Undertaking to gain access. Id. ¶¶ 8, 9. The Party "showing, providing, or disclosing Confidential or [AEO] Discovery Material to any person required to execute an undertaking . . . will be responsible for obtaining such signed undertaking." Id. ¶ 10.

Additionally, Paragraph 26 requires that if a person in possession of Confidential or AEO discovery materials that they did not produce receives a subpoena for those materials, they must: 1) give notice of the request to the designating party within three business days (or 24 hours if the subpoena deadline is sooner); and 2) "object to the production of the Confidential or [AEO]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via FOIA

Discovery Material on the grounds of the existence of this Order." Id. ¶ 26. If the designating Party opposes enforcement of the demand, the burden of opposing the demand falls to them. Id. This provision does not require the person or Party who is subpoenaed to appeal an order enforcing the demand or to otherwise seek relief from compliance. Id.

If a Party discloses discovery in violation of the Protective Order, the breaching Party must "immediately inform the Designating and Producing Party" and provide an accounting of the disclosure. Id. ¶ 27. Additionally, the order allows a non-breaching Party to seek sanctions against a breaching Party. Id. ¶ 29 ("If a Party violates this Order by releasing, leaking, or otherwise disclosing Confidential or [AEO] Discovery Material to persons or entities not entitled to such Discovery Material under this Order, the Court will have authority to impose sanctions under Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(i)–(vi).").[4]

According to Dominion, the Parties negotiated the Protective Order "[g]iven the national security concerns regarding voting machine information and the personal security concerns for Dominion employees—many of whom have been the subject of threats in the past." ECF No. 75 at 7. This concern is one of the reasons why the Protective Order applies to all discovery produced in this litigation regardless of whether it is stamped "confidential" or "[AEO]." ECF No. 75-7 ¶ 1; id. at 3–4 (other justifications for the Parties' Protective Order included their "belie[f] that certain information they have produced or will produce may contain information that is proprietary, commercially sensitive, or non-public"). Significantly, after stipulating to it, Byrne

[4] As the plain language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(A)(i)–(vi) permits sanctions against parties for discovery-related misconduct or disputes, Dominion relies in this Motion on the Court's inherent authority to regulate counsel before it.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

never objected to the Protective Order. He never asked the Court to amend or lift the Protective Order until after he and Lambert began disclosing Dominion's Litigation Documents.[5]

In addition to the Protective Order governing all party discovery, Dominion sought and obtained another protective order in the MyPillow litigation specifically related to third-party discovery. See ECF Nos. 145; 147; 149; 153; 154; 156; 157; 159 in Case No. 21-cv-445. This was "in response to certain third party subpoenas issued by Defendants Michael J. Lindell and MyPillow, Inc." ECF No. 145 at 1 in Case No. 21-cv-445. After several rounds of briefing, the Court entered the separate protective order governing third-party subpoenas in the MyPillow litigation ("Third-Party Protective Order"). ECF No. 159 in Case No. 21-cv-445.

Lambert Enters the Case

Lambert first formally entered her appearance as Byrne's counsel on March 12, 2024. ECF No. 71. Byrne's prior counsel, attorneys at McGlinchey Stafford PLLC ("McGlinchey"), withdrew the same day. ECF No. 72. Although Lambert did not appear in the case until March 2024, it is undisputed that she had been working with Byrne and his team for some time prior to that date, unbeknownst to Dominion. ECF No. 75 at 3. McGlinchey and Lambert have both acknowledged that Lambert "had access to Confidential Discovery Material as an attorney for Patrick Byrne who was assisting in this litigation" prior to her formal entry of appearance in March 2024. ECF No. 75-8 at 2. Neither Lambert nor McGlinchey has provided an exact date for when Lambert began serving as Byrne's attorney in this matter. That said, the record is clear that McGlinchey gave Lambert access to Dominion's Litigation Documents after she signed the Undertaking pursuant to the Protective Order on December 12, 2023. ECF Nos. 75-9; 103 at 27:10–19. In signing the Undertaking, Lambert guaranteed that she had "read the Protective Order

[5] Byrne filed a Motion to Lift Protective Order on April 18, 2024. ECF No. 90.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

of June 16, 2023," and would "undertake to access and use Discovery Material, Confidential Material, and Attorneys Eyes Only Material only as the Order permits." ECF No. 75-9 (emphasis added). Lambert does not dispute that she executed the Undertaking months before she disclosed the documents in March 2024. ECF No. 103 at 58:25–59:6.

Dominion did not have notice that Lambert had access to its discovery and had signed the Undertaking until McGlinchey notified Dominion of the alleged breach on March 11, 2024. ECF Nos. 75-8 at 2; 78 at 20:13–17 ("MS. LAMBERT JUNTTILA: And for the record, your Honor, I did not provide that [the Undertaking] to counsel. That must have been provided by Mr. Byrne's previous counsel."). In fact, it appears that Dominion did not even know Lambert was involved in this case until after she had released countless Dominion discovery documents to a third party and inflicted damage Dominion could not undo. ECF Nos. 75 at 3; 75-8 at 2.

Lambert Publicly Disseminates Confidential Discovery Material

On March 11, 2024, McGlinchey notified Dominion that Lambert had publicly disclosed its discovery. ECF No. 75-8 at 2. McGlinchey told Dominion "[w]e had no advance knowledge of this use. We only became aware of the public disclosure by virtue of the below tweet." Id.

Id. McGlinchey notified Dominion that Lambert had disclosed Dominion's Litigation Documents in two ways. First, Lambert included the documents in a public filing as part of a Michigan criminal case in which she had been indicted on four felony counts related to the 2020 U.S.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

election. Id. (citing People of the State of Michigan v. Stefanie Lynn Lambert Junttila, Michigan Case No. 2023-285759-FH).[6] Lambert filed a pro se motion in that case on March 8, 2024 and attached Dominion's Litigation Documents as an exhibit. Id. at 5–63. Second, Lambert shared the documents with Barry County, Michigan Sheriff Dar Leaf ("Leaf"), an individual who has no role in this litigation, who went on to disseminate and discuss the documents in public. Id. at 2.

That same day, March 11, 2024, Dominion counsel responded to McGlinchey to request more information on the breach and to confirm that Lambert no longer had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 75 at 11–12. McGlinchey withdrew from the case before responding. Id. When Lambert entered her appearance, Dominion counsel emailed Lambert and McGlinchey to again request information about the scope of the breach. Id. at 12. Lambert responded, but refused to provide the requested information. ECF No. 75-3. Instead, she wrote:

> Hi [Dominion Counsel],
>
> I had assumed that you, as counsel, were unaware of the criminal acts contained in discovery. These acts include, but are not limited to, perjury, fraud is [sic] services, wire fraud, and international interference in an election.
>
> If you were aware of the criminal acts, I will need to address fraud on the court and potentially accessory after the fact with threats of violating a protective order that does not extend to criminal acts committed by your client.
>
> My client insisted the evidence of criminal acts be provided to law enforcement.
>
> I'm happy to address this with the court.
>
> Please let me know if you need anything else.

---

[6] Lambert currently faces two sets of felony criminal charges in Michigan for allegedly attempting to interfere with voting equipment. On August 3, 2023, Lambert was indicted in Muskegon County, Michigan on four felony charges related to alleged tampering with voting systems following the 2020 U.S. election. ECF Nos. 75 at 14, 75-17, 75-18. Then, on May 8, 2024, Lambert and her client, Stephanie Scott, a clerk in Adams Township, Michigan, were indicted on felony charges related to allegedly "mishandling voter data without authorization in search of fraud." ECF Nos. 102-16 at 5; 101-1 at 1. Lambert's conduct described above occurred in the first of these criminal cases against her.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Sincerely,
Stefanie

Id.

Neither Lambert nor McGlinchey gave Dominion information about the scope of the alleged breach or provided any assurances that Lambert could no longer access Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id. On March 14, 2024, Dominion counsel sent letters to managers of document databases that Byrne used for discovery, with a copy to Lambert. ECF Nos. 75-13; 75-14. Dominion notified those database managers of Lambert and Byrne's alleged breach and requested that the managers not allow Byrne and his legal team to access Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF Nos. 75-13; 75-14. Lambert wrote the database managers on March 15, 2024 and insisted on maintaining access. ECF Nos. 75-15; 75-16. Lambert threatened that "any entity that collaborates with [Dominion] to withhold discovery and to interfere with the disclosure of evidence in the case would be obstructing justice, and would therefore be accessories after the fact to criminal acts." ECF Nos. 75-15; 75-16.

Between December 12, 2023 when Lambert signed the Undertaking and March 12, 2024, Lambert made no effort to raise with Dominion or the Court that she believed the documents were evidence of the "most serious national security crimes that have ever been committed on U.S. soil," as she now claims. ECF No. 103 at 35:7–9, 29:24–25, 46:6–8. Nor did she notify Dominion or the Court that she intended to turn over this "evidence" to "law enforcement[,]" referring to Leaf. Id. at 40:17–22 ("Everyone can go to law enforcement and report crimes, and I have an oath and obligation to do that."), 59:11–18. McGlinchey confirmed at the May 16, 2024 hearing ("May Hearing") that, while serving as Byrne's prior counsel, it never sought to lift the Protective Order, to de-designate any documents that were protected under the Order, or to "seek any relief whatsoever from the [P]rotective [O]rder on behalf of Mr. Byrne." Id. at 29:7–13.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

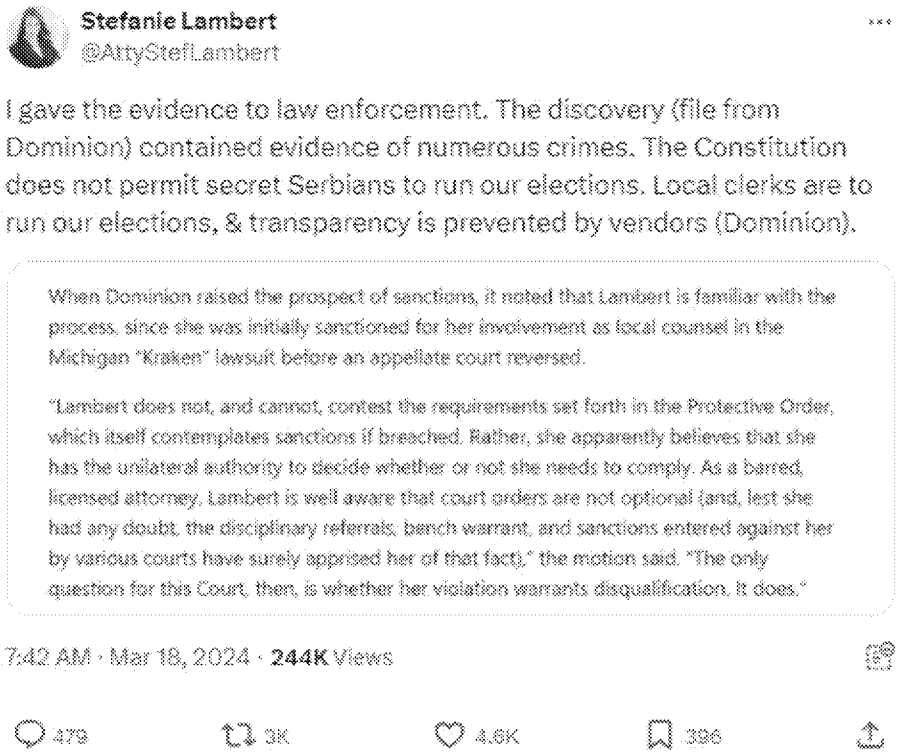
Instead, Lambert and Byrne unilaterally decided to disclose thousands, if not millions, of Dominion's Litigation Documents to third parties and then promote the public dissemination of the documents through those third parties. See generally ECF Nos. 75; 82; 102; 108; 113.

Dominion's Motion and the March 2024 Hearing

On March 12, 2024, Dominion notified the Court of Lambert and Byrne's alleged breaches and sought the Court's permission to raise this issue at a forthcoming discovery hearing on March 18, 2024 ("March Hearing"). On March 15, 2024, Dominion filed this Motion. ECF No. 75. Dominion only sought relief based on Lambert's actions, but reserved the right to seek additional sanctions based on Byrne's conduct. Id. On March 18, 2024, Lambert filed an opposition on behalf of Byrne, shortly before the March Hearing. ECF No. 76. Although Byrne reserved the right to supplement his response, he did not file a timely supplement or seek leave to file a supplement out of time. On March 22, 2024, Dominion filed its Reply. ECF No. 82. Byrne then waited more than a month and ultimately sought leave to file a Sur-Reply on April 24, 2024. ECF No. 93. Over Dominion's objection, the Court granted Byrne's request for leave to file a Sur-Reply. ECF No. 97.

Hours before the March Hearing, Lambert posted the following on X:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



ECF No. 82-5.

At the March Hearing, Lambert did not dispute that she: 1) signed an Undertaking verifying that she would comply with the Protective Order; 2) gained access to Dominion's Litigation Documents; and 3) disseminated those documents in the manner Dominion alleged. ECF No. 78 at 18:1–15, 19:8–25:18. She also disclosed details about the scope of her alleged breach for the first time. Id. at 31:19–32:4. She reported that she not only gave Leaf documents, but that she also gave him a username and password to the entire repository of Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id. Lambert did not represent that she asked Leaf to sign an Undertaking pursuant to the Protective Order.

After Leaf gained access to Dominion's Litigation Documents, Leaf created an X (formerly Twitter) account and shared links so that the public could download the documents. ECF No. 82 at 6–7. Leaf's posts sharing the documents remain publicly available. ECF No. 103 at 18:3–12,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

51:4–7. Leaf also sent a letter to House Judiciary Committee Chair Jim Jordan (R-OH) asking him to investigate Dominion's alleged illegal acts. ECF No. 82-6. As of the date Dominion filed its Reply on March 22, 2024, Leaf's post with this letter and the link to "Traunche [sic] One" had been viewed 473,000 times. ECF No. 82 at 8. According to Lambert, Byrne had reportedly also provided Dominion's Litigation Documents to a U.S. Attorney and possibly others. ECF No. 78 at 23:21–24:5. Although Lambert claimed she did not know the full extent of Byrne's actions, it became apparent that her accounting to the Court of her own actions was incomplete as well. Id. at 23:21–24:25.

Importantly, at no point did Lambert herself notify the Court, Dominion counsel, or McGlinchey that she intended to or had already disclosed Dominion's Litigation Documents.

Status Quo Order

At the March Hearing, the Court ordered temporary protective relief to prevent any further dissemination of Dominion's Litigation Documents and other discovery while the Court considered this Motion. ECF No. 77. Among other things, the Court ordered Byrne and Lambert to "immediately desist from sharing, distributing, providing access to or discussing any discovery material" received in this case and the consolidated/coordinated cases. Id. ¶ 1 (emphasis added). The Court ordered Lambert to ensure that any individual who had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents or notes Lambert took on them not access or disseminate those materials, and that she sequester and secure the documents and any of her notes. Id. ¶¶ 4. 6. The Court ordered Lambert to "immediately confer with her counsel" in her Michigan criminal case regarding Dominion's Litigation Documents and "undertake every reasonable effort to remove such documents from the public record and file them under seal instead." Id. ¶ 3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Further, the Court ordered Lambert, Byrne, and McGlinchey to "preserve all documents and communications relating to the issues raised by Dominion's motion, including but not limited to, the release of any Dominion Litigation Documents in this case to any other entity or individual." Id. ¶ 7. Additionally, the Court ordered that, if Dominion's Litigation Documents existed in any form not already accounted for, including with any "associate or affiliate" of Lambert or Byrne, the "relevant party, party's attorney, or party's former attorney must immediately notify the Court." Id. ¶ 6.

Finally, the Court ordered that Byrne and Lambert file a "verification . . . that they have and will comply with each of their obligations in this Order until further Order of the Court" no later than March 21, 2024 at 5:00 PM EST. Id. ¶ 8. Both of them missed this deadline. See generally Docket in Case No. 21-cv-2131. On March 22, 2024, after the deadline had passed, Byrne and Lambert sought to extend the deadline to file their verifications. ECF No. 81. Byrne and Lambert asked the Court to extend this deadline to 5:00 PM on March 26, 2024. Id. The Court granted Byrne and Lambert's request but set the deadline at 12:00 PM on March 26, 2024. Again, Byrne and Lambert missed not only the Court-ordered deadline of 12:00 PM, but also their requested deadline of 5:00 PM. Lambert and Byrne did not file the verifications until 8:55 PM that day. Receipt for ECF No. 84. Though belated, Lambert and Byrne submitted statements in which each "verif[ied] that [they] have and will comply with the obligations set forth in the Court's March 19, 2024 Order (Docket No. 77) until further Order of the Court." ECF No. 84.

Conduct After the March Hearing

Neither the Court's March Hearing nor the Status Quo Order deterred Lambert or Byrne's continued misconduct. Lambert and Byrne continued to discuss and disseminate the documents and, in some cases, actively sponsored others' dissemination of the documents.[7] For example, on March 19, 2024, the day after the March Hearing, Lambert made the following statements to ABC News:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> There was no leak of data . . . I provided evidence of criminal acts to law enforcement. The Dominion file contained evidence of perjury by John Poulos, Dominion CEO, Honest Service Fraud, Wire fraud, etc. I'm on my way back to Michigan, and I look forward to truth and transparency for everyone.

ECF No. 82 at 14, n.2 (emphasis added).[8]

Moreover, on March 22, 2024, Lambert appeared alongside Leaf on an interview that was posted on X. Id. at 14. During the episode of Joe Oltmann's podcast with Conservative Daily News, Oltmann encouraged all listeners to download the Dominion documents Lambert had released to Leaf and send them to every county in the United States. ECF No. 103 at 13:3–17. As Dominion counsel recounted at the May Hearing:

> [O]n March 22nd, Ms. Lambert sat for an interview on Joe Oltmann Live, and, in that interview, Mr. Oltmann turns to her at 42:25 and he says, 'We have evidence from Dar Leaf, and way more that has not been released,' and when he starts to discuss the evidence, he hesitates and he turns to Ms. Lambert and he says, quote, 'Stefanie, I didn't get it from you, I got it from Twitter, X,' end quote. And Ms. Lambert does nothing to stop him from then launching into a discussion of the documents. In fact, Ms. Lambert follows up by telling Mr. Oltmann that he should have Dar on the show himself, because he can go through the investigation. And when Mr. Oltmann asks Ms. Lambert if Sheriff Dar Leaf is allowed to discuss his investigation and evidence, Lambert says, 'Sheriff Dar Leaf can do whatever he wants, it's his investigation.'

---

[7] At the May Hearing, Dominion chronicled instances in which Lambert and Byrne continued to share and discuss the documents after the Status Quo Order. ECF Nos. 103 at 12–13; 102-3; 102-12; 102-13; 102-14; 102-15. Lambert and Byrne do not dispute the authenticity of their posts; they merely argue their conduct is permissible. See e.g., ECF No. 103 at 34:17–25.

[8] "Laura Romero and Luke Barr, Pro-Trump lawyer arrested on warrant after court hearing in separate case on Dominion leaks, ABC News, https://abcnews.go.com/US/lawyer-election-denier-center-dominion-voting-systems-leak/story?id=108270385 (March 19, 2024)."

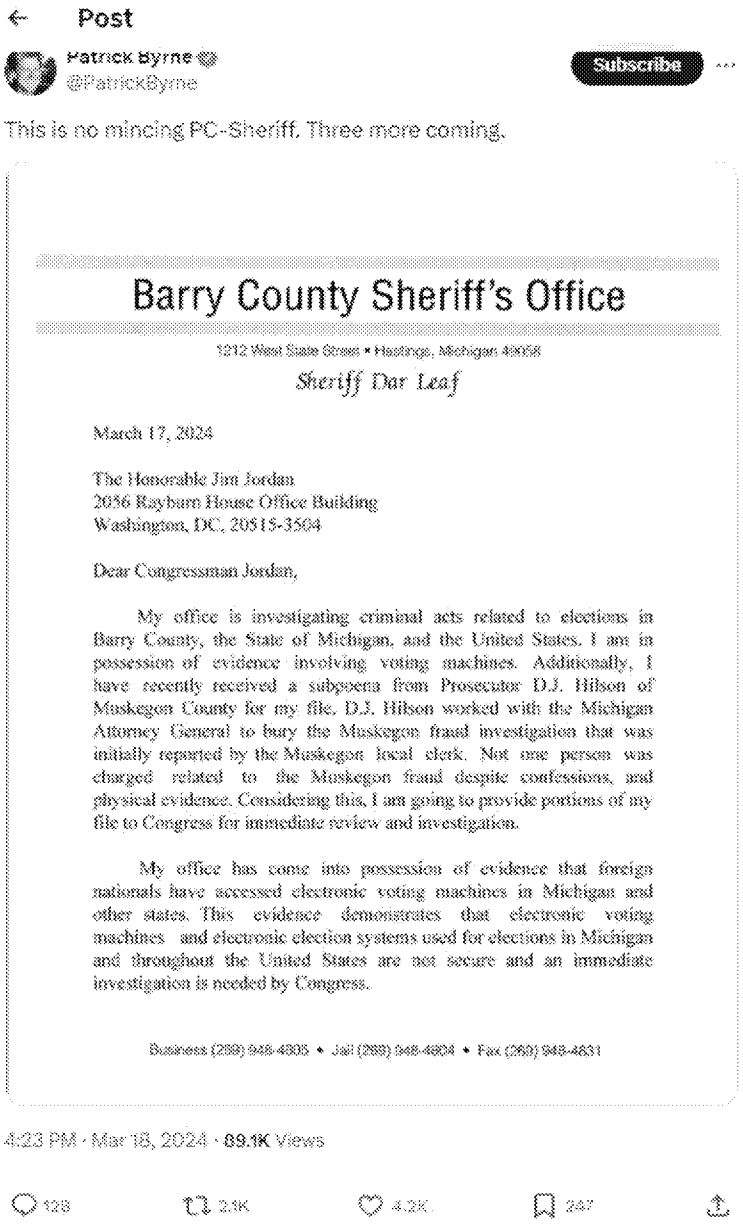
Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ECF Nos. 103 at 13:3–17; 102-9 at 29. After the Court gave her ample opportunity to explain her conduct, Lambert never contested that she made or shared any of the posts at issue, participated in any of the interviews, or otherwise engaged in the conduct that Dominion asserts violates the Protective and Status Quo Orders. No. 103 at 34:2–25.

Further, Lambert did not remove or make any meaningful attempt to file under seal the copies of Dominion's Litigation Documents that she had attached to a publicly-available pro se filing in one of her Michigan criminal cases. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 3; 103 at 10:1–11:12. Lambert claimed that she raised the issue with her counsel, Daniel Hartman ("Hartman"), but that Hartman "stated that he could not ask the Court in good faith, that the documents contained some of the serious crimes in national history and are a matter of national security." ECF No. 103 at 29:20–25, 30:4–15. Lambert did not inform the Court that she failed to comply with this requirement.

For his part, Byrne reposted and continued to emphasize posts on X about Dominion's Litigation Documents despite also promising that he would comply with the Status Quo Order. On March 18, 2024, he shared Leaf's letter to Rep. Jordan that referenced the documents:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA



← Post

Patrick Byrne
@PatrickByrne

Subscribe ···

This is no mincing PC-Sheriff. Three more coming.

Barry County Sheriff's Office

1212 West State Street • Hastings, Michigan 49058

Sheriff Dar Leaf

March 17, 2024

The Honorable Jim Jordan
2056 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, DC, 20515-3504

Dear Congressman Jordan,

My office is investigating criminal acts related to elections in Barry County, the State of Michigan, and the United States. I am in possession of evidence involving voting machines. Additionally, I have recently received a subpoena from Prosecutor D.J. Hilson of Muskegon County for my file. D.J. Hilson worked with the Michigan Attorney General to bury the Muskegon fraud investigation that was initially reported by the Muskegon local clerk. Not one person was charged related to the Muskegon fraud despite confessions, and physical evidence. Considering this, I am going to provide portions of my file to Congress for immediate review and investigation.

My office has come into possession of evidence that foreign nationals have accessed electronic voting machines in Michigan and other states. This evidence demonstrates that electronic voting machines and electronic election systems used for elections in Michigan and throughout the United States are not secure and an immediate investigation is needed by Congress.

Business (269) 948-4805 • Jail (269) 948-4804 • Fax (269) 948-4831

4:23 PM · Mar 18, 2024 · 89.1K Views

128 2.3K 4.2K 247

ECF No. 82-6.

On March 19, 2024, Byrne reposted a video on X that was originally posted by Tina Peters ("Peters"), a former County Clerk of Mesa County, Colorado who was indicted for allowing unauthorized access to Dominion machines.[9] ECF No. 82-10. In that post, Peters used the name

[9] Although the Court does not grant Dominion leave to file a third supplement, the Court acknowledges that Dominion alleges that in addition to representing Lambert in one of her criminal and photo of a Dominion employee in Belgrade, Serbia. Id. Dominion asserts, and Lambert does not dispute, that this is a reference to Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 82 at 12.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

On March 20, 2024, Byrne shared another post on X that named a Serbian Dominion employee and claimed connections between Dominion, vote counting software, and Serbia. ECF No. 82-12. Shortly after, Byrne responded to another X post about the source code protocol entered in this case. ECF No. 82-13 (Byrne: "And what is going to be REALLY interesting is comparing that code to the SmartMatics [sic] source code. If only we could get it.").

May Hearing

On May 16, 2024, the Court held a hearing to entertain more fulsome argument on Dominion's Motion, which had not been fully briefed at the time of the March Hearing. At the May Hearing, Dominion chronicled Lambert and Byrne's actions and argued that Lambert's actions violated the Protective and Status Quo Orders and her ethical obligations as Byrne's counsel. ECF No. 102. This included a detailed presentation in which Dominion offered a timeline of Lambert and Byrne's misconduct using social media posts, interviews and other statements. Id.[10] Although Lambert disagreed about Dominion's characterizations of these actions, she did not dispute either the underlying conduct or the authenticity of any of the documents Dominion cited in its presentation. ECF No. 103 at 33:10–35:24.

The Court reminded Byrne and Lambert that the Status Quo Order expressly prohibits them from "sharing, distributing, providing access to or discussing any discovery material received" from Dominion in this case. ECF No. 103 at 60:11–62:25. The Court made clear that the cases, Hartman also represents Peters in her Colorado criminal case and has allegedly sought to introduce Dominion's Litigation Documents as evidence in that case. ECF No. 122.

---

[10] The Court ordered Dominion to file its presentation and supporting evidence on the docket by the end of the following day. ECF Nos. 102-1; 103 at 65:13–66:6.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

"discovery material" referenced in the Status Quo Order is the same broad definition of discovery material in the Protective Order. Id. The Court confirmed with both Byrne and Lambert on the record that they understood these orders and would comply with them, especially the provisions prohibiting them from sharing, disseminating, or discussing discovery material. Id. Both Lambert and Byrne agreed. Id. The Court also gave both of them multiple opportunities to ask questions about the scope of the orders. Id. Lambert had no questions. Id. The only question from Byrne was what he should do if he "is requested by Congress or the DOJ or law enforcement to cooperate with an investigation." Id. at 62:12–14. The Court reiterated that Byrne and Lambert must come to this Court first. Id. at 62:15–18. The Court warned the Parties that some of the actions purportedly taken in the name of law enforcement "aren't entirely supported" and reiterated that they "need to follow the strict guidelines of Judge Nichols' order to come to the Court if there are any such requests." Id. at 62:15–23. Lambert thanked the Court and neither Lambert nor Byrne had any additional questions or apparent reservations. Id. at 62:24.

Conduct After the May Hearing

Despite assuring the Court that they understood and would comply with all of its orders, Lambert and Byrne continued to disregard them.

For example, the morning after the May Hearing, Byrne shared a post on social media that included screenshots and discussions of Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 105.[11] On May 21, 2024, Dominion notified the Court of Byrne's actions. Id. On May 28, 2024, Lambert [11] In the post, the user claimed that Dominion "authenticated all of the data released by @SheriffLeaf" in the May Hearing and included screenshots of Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 105 at 3 n.1 (https://x.com/pjcolbeck/status/1791259014124187903), n.2 (https://x.com/PatrickByrne/status/1791344198215500027), 4 n.3 (https://x.com/pjcolbeck/status/1791290146647593410).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

submitted a response on Byrne's behalf. ECF No. 106. Lambert did not dispute that Byrne shared the posts containing Dominion's Litigation Documents, instead arguing:

> Dr. Byrne's posts were nothing more than the reposting of information that had already been posted, and did not constitute a violation of this Court's orders, precisely because the orders [sic] did not disseminate further information beyond that which the Court has already taken account of in its previous orders . . . Dr. Byrne did not post any new information, and the reposts constituted information that was already in the public sphere. Thus, not only has Mr. Byrne not violated the court's direct orders, but he has also not disseminated or published any new information in contravention thereof.

Id. at 1–2 (emphasis added).[12]

In other words, because the documents were already in the public domain due to Lambert's own unilateral actions, Lambert argued that they were no longer subject to the strictures of the Protective Order. In making the argument, Lambert relied on an exception to the Protective Order that did not exist. Nothing in the Court's Status Quo or Protective Orders shields a Party from sanctions for reposting or sharing documents already made public due to that Party's own violation of those Orders. Moreover, Lambert did not come to the Court to raise this question despite promising to do so at the May Hearing. ECF No. 103 at 44:6–22, 45:14–23, 46:3–12. Instead, she continued to assert a right to decide unliterally when she and Byrne could share Dominion's Litigation Documents notwithstanding repeated Court Orders to the contrary.

Lambert did not stop there. In addition to attempting to excuse Byrne's violations of Court orders after the May Hearing, Lambert continues to attempt to disclose Dominion's Litigation Documents and other discovery herself. ECF Nos. 108; 113. These events are described in [12] Lambert claims that Dominion "previously sent only to the Court" its "notice of filing of a letter" raising this alleged violation. ECF No. 106 at 2. This is incorrect, as the ECF receipt from Dominion's filing shows Lambert received notice of the letter. Receipt for ECF No. 104. The Clerk rejected Dominion's initial filing for being in the wrong format—a letter instead of a motion—and instructed it to refile, which it did the following day. ECF Nos. 104; 105.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dominion's July 5, 2024 Motion to Enforce the Protective and Status Quo Orders ("Motion to Enforce") and its July 23, 2024 Supplement to its underlying Motion for Protective Relief and to Disqualify Counsel and Motion to Enforce ("Supplement"). ECF Nos. 108; 113. Notably, Byrne and Lambert do not dispute the facts in these briefs.[13]

First, Lambert attempted or threatened to disclose Dominion's Litigation Documents in response to a subpoena in Colorado's criminal case against Peters, State of Colorado v. Tina Peters, Case No. 2022-CR-371 (Colo. Dist. Ct.) ("Peters Criminal Case"). ECF No. 108 at 2. On July 1, 2024, Lambert notified Dominion that Peters' attorney subpoenaed Lambert to testify and produce documents in the Peters Criminal Case. Id. Paragraph 26 of the Protective Order sets forth procedures for how a Party must handle such a request. ECF No. 75-7 ¶ 26. Dominion responded and asked Lambert to confirm that she and her client would abide by the Protective and Status Quo Orders and not produce documents or other discovery materials to anyone. ECF No. 108 at 3. Lambert disagreed with Dominion's reading of the Protective Order and asserted that it was up to Dominion to file objections to the subpoena within forty-eight hours if it wanted to halt her compliance. Id. Dominion again pointed Lambert to the plain language of the Protective Order and asked her to confirm that she would comply with the requirement that she object to the subpoena. Id. Lambert repeatedly refused to confirm that she had and would comply with her obligations to object. Id. at 4. During these email exchanges, Lambert also argued that the [13] In a one-page response to ECF No. 108, Lambert merely claimed that Dominion fails to request any new relief in its Motion to Enforce; she does not rebut any of the factual grounds for Dominion's Motion. ECF No. 111. Even though she gave no justification for her request, the Court permitted Lambert to file a sur-reply to ECF No. 108 by July 26, 2024. Lambert belatedly filed the sur-reply and vaguely asserted she has and would comply with the Court's Orders but refused to provide confirmation based on privilege. ECF No. 117. The Court permitted Lambert to file a response to Dominion's supplement at ECF No. 113 by July 26, 2024, but Lambert did not file any response, seek any extension, or otherwise indicate she would respond. 07/23/2024 Minute Order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

materials were improperly labeled confidential or AEO, though she had not previously raised that argument in accordance with the process set forth in the Protective Order. ECF No. 108-12.

Second, Lambert attempted to disclose deposition testimony from Dominion CEO John Poulos ("Poulos") in response to a request from a Michigan State Representative, James DeSana. ECF No. 113 at 7–8. On July 12, 2024, Lambert notified Dominion that she received a request from DeSana for Poulos' deposition testimony. Id. Dominion objected to Lambert sharing the testimony on the same grounds as the first subpoena, as depositions clearly fall within the definition of protected discovery materials in the Protective Order. Id. In response, Lambert asserted that this situation was different as it was "not a person requesting the transcript in his individual capacity. This is a request by the government. The Michigan legislature." Id. She also asked Dominion to specify which portions of the deposition it objected to her sharing with DeSana, evidently still contesting that the Protective and Status Quo Orders apply to all discovery materials, despite the Court ordering otherwise. ECF No. 113-9 at 2–3.

As Dominion lays out in its Supplement, this request does not appear to be from the Michigan Legislature through any formal process or request, but instead is an email from an individual legislator. ECF No. 113.[14] Dominion also pointed out that even if the request were from a member of the government, that would not "vitiate" the Protective and Status Quo Orders, as the Court expressly warned at the May Hearing. Id.; ECF No. 103 at 62:12–24. Because Lambert again would not confirm that she would comply with the Protective Order and object to the subpoena, Dominion sought the Court's assistance on July 12, 2024. The Court entered a minute order reiterating what it had previously ordered: that no discovery materials may be shared [14] Dominion points out that the Michigan Attorney General already dismissed a request by DeSana and others for the Attorney General to bring a criminal complaint against Dominion three months before. ECF No. 113 at 8.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

to unauthorized individuals without expressly obtaining the Court's permission. 07/12/2024 Minute Order. The Court expressly prohibited Lambert from sharing Poulos' deposition with DeSana without obtaining Court approval. Id. Lambert has not filed any request to lift the Protective and Status Quo Orders for this purpose.[15]

Finally, it recently came to light that John Case ("Case"), another attorney who represents Peters in the Peters Criminal Case, is also assisting Lambert with Byrne's defense in this case. ECF No. 113 at 3. Lambert never notified Dominion or the Court that Case is at all involved in this litigation. Dominion discovered this fact for the first time because Case filed a declaration in the Peters Criminal Case on July 10, 2024 stating:

> I am assisting Stefanie Lambert in her defense of Patrick Byrne in 1:21-cv-02131. I signed Exhibit A to Protective Order, the "Undertaking" in which I agreed to "access and use Discovery Material, Confidential Material, and Attorneys Eyes Only Material only as the [Protective] Order permits." I reviewed emails produced by Dominion in 1:21-cv-02131. The emails appear to be mis-labeled "Confidential," because their contents do not meet the definition of "Confidential Material" in paragraph 2 of the Protective Order 6/16/23.

ECF No. 113-4 at 3. Lambert refused Dominion's request for information about when Case joined Byrne's defense and what discovery he has accessed because of "privilege/work product." ECF No. 113-5. She even objected to providing the Undertaking that Case supposedly signed to gain access Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id. Nor has Lambert provided any details to the Court about Case's involvement, despite the Court directly requiring Lambert to give a full accounting of who had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF Nos. 77 ¶¶ 1, 6; 78 at 35:8–36:16.

Case's involvement in this litigation is not only striking because Lambert hid this information from the Court. Case has also attempted to use processes from other judicial [15] Instead, on July 19, 2024, Lambert filed a motion for leave to file an emergency motion to lift the Protective Order for the specific purpose of producing documents in the Peters Criminal Case. ECF Nos. 110 (not attaching the proposed motion to her filing); 116.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

proceedings, such as the Peters Criminal Case, to access and release Dominion's discovery materials from this litigation. ECF No. 113 at 3. This includes the subpoena to Lambert that is the subject of Dominion's Motion to Enforce. ECF No. 108. In summary, while Case is ostensibly working with Lambert to advise Byrne on this case and signed an Undertaking to comply with the Protective Order, he is also seeking to use Dominion's Litigation Documents and other discovery in contravention of this Court's orders. Lambert is at least justifying, if not also facilitating, his efforts.

Impact of Lambert and Byrne's Actions

Because of Lambert and Byrne's actions, Dominion's Litigation Documents are now widely available to the public. As Dominion points out, the documents and related commentary have been viewed hundreds of thousands of times. ECF No. 82. For example, on March 18, 2024, former U.S. National Security Advisor Michael Flynn retweeted Leaf's letter to Rep. Jordan. ECF No. 82-14. As of Dominion's March 22, 2024 filing, Flynn's tweet was viewed 887,200 times. ECF No. 82 at 15. In a March 18, 2024 tweet, the Election Integrity Force shared a link to Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id. This tweet was viewed 121,600 times as of March 22, 2024. Id. (citing ECF No. 82-15). Another tweet suggesting Lambert's arrest after the March 18, 2024 hearing was related to her leak of the Dominion documents instead of her open bench warrant in Michigan has more than one million views. Id. (citing ECF No. 82-16); see also ECF No. 102-3 at 10 (Byrne: "Stefanie gave a whiff of that to Sheriff Dar Leaf in a criminal investigation and she ended up leaving the court in leg iron.").

Lambert and Byrne's actions have led to serious threats to Dominion and its employees. For example, a Dominion employee in Belgrade was "doxed" in a video posted to X which Byrne retweeted. ECF No. 82 at 16–17 (citing ECF No. 82-10).[16] Another Dominion employee's work address in Denver was posted online after being pulled from the leaked documents. Id. at 17. Another X user shared a letter from Leaf and added:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

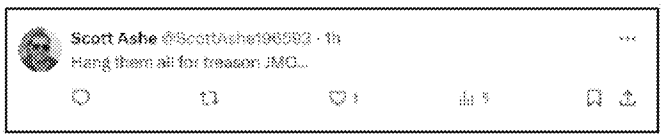
> HUGE!! We'll be adding to this over the weeks. Dominion President John Poulos [,] you're going to be arrested, tried and if convicted by a jury, hung for sedition. I dare you to sue me you crook. Dominion voting machines rig elections - we have proof.

ECF No. 75-2. As Lambert and Byrne continue to promote the dissemination of Dominion's Litigation Documents and other discovery, threats persist:



ECF Nos. 113 at 7; 113-7.

Lambert's Prior Election-Related Conduct and Admonishments

Dominion asserts that Lambert has a "vendetta against Dominion and . . . disregard for the rule of law." ECF No. 75 at 13. Regardless of Lambert's motivations, it is clear that before she entered her appearance in this case, she has shown a concerning pattern of conduct that gives the Court further pause that she would follow its orders.

For example, in Pennsylvania, Lambert was involved in litigation related to two Fulton County commissioners' decision to allow unauthorized access to and copying of voting systems and data. Cnty. of Fulton v. Sec'y of Commonwealth, 292 A.3d 974 (Pa. 2023). Lambert was [16] "To dox someone means to release their personal or private information that may prove harmful or embarrassing." Rob Lever, What Is Doxxing?, U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT (Dec. 16, 2021) https://www.usnews.com/360-reviews/privacy/what-is-doxxing.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

never admitted as counsel in the case because the court repeatedly rejected her pro hac vice applications. Id. In its decision affirming sanctions for other attorneys, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court remarked:

> Attorney Lambert may be every bit as culpable as Attorney Carroll, at least in the pattern of non-compliance that has led us to impose upon him joint and several responsibility with the County. That said, perhaps ironically, we must conclude that the failure by the two lawyers to convince the Special Master that Attorney Lambert should be admitted pro hac vice precisely because she failed to satisfy the requirements for applying for that status protects her from sharing responsibility with Attorney Carroll and the County. Had she gained admission, the result might have been different.
>
> But we are not powerless to call attention to Attorney Lambert's own role in the misconduct highlighted above. In King, the judge referred Attorney Lambert and co-counsel to disciplinary review both in Michigan and anywhere else they were licensed. We will do the same, transmitting a copy of this Opinion to the Michigan Attorney Grievance Commission.

Id. at 1018–19.

In Georgia, Lambert was mentioned in litigation related to the 2020 election and Dominion Voting Systems. See Curling v. Raffensperger, Case No. 1:17-cv-2989-AT, 2023 WL 7463462, at *23–24 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 10, 2023). Advocacy organizations and voters challenged state and county officials' implementation of new voting systems and ongoing use of other voting systems, software, policies, and practices as infringing their right to vote and have their ballots be reliably counted under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Id. at *1–5. The U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Georgia found that Lambert had directed the transmission of a disc drive with material from the Coffee County Elections Office, which uses Dominion systems, to a private investigator and digital security firm. Id. Due to these and similar actions, a cybersecurity expert, Dr. Alex Halderman, opined that it was "impossible to determine the number of people or entities that [had] copies of the Coffee County software and data . . . Id. at *24. As a result, "because of these outside groups and individuals copying and distribution of the proprietary software that operates Georgia's election system and specific system configurations the risk that a future Georgia election will be attacked has materially increased." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Lambert's conduct in these cases reflects a concern that she has a personal stake in advancing her claims against Dominion, and that personal stake overrides her regard for court orders and rules even in the face of such admonishment.

ANALYSIS

Dominion argues that Lambert and Byrne flagrantly and repeatedly disregarded court orders by leaking Dominion's Litigation Documents to the public; there is no justification for these acts; these acts have continued to harm Dominion and its employees; and that, importantly, Lambert's continued involvement in this case would infect future proceedings, including by making it impossible to continue the discovery process. ECF Nos. 75; 78; 82; 103; 105; 108; 113; see also Koller, 737 F.2d at 1056. As a result, Dominion asks the Court to disqualify Lambert from this case as a sanction for her misconduct. ECF Nos. 75; 82; 108; 113. Lambert and Byrne dispute these arguments, asserting they did not violate any orders or rules and that, even if they did, their actions were justified. ECF Nos. 76, 97, 106, 111, 117.

There are four questions for the Court: 1) whether the Protective Order applies to the documents Lambert and Byrne disclosed to third parties; 2) whether and to what extent Lambert violated any rules, law, or Court orders; 3) whether—if Lambert did violate rules, law, or orders—there is any justification for her actions; and 4) whether to disqualify Lambert. The Court bases its conclusions below on Lambert's conduct. Byrne's conduct, however, is relevant because Lambert refuses to ensure he complies with the Court's orders and, instead, attempts to justify his blatant violations with meritless and rejected arguments.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

I. Scope of Protective Order

A. Legal Standard

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c) provides that a court may enter a protective order upon motion if there is good cause. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c); see also Münchener Rückversicherungs-Gesellschaft Aktiengesellschaft in München v. Northrop Grumman Risk Management Inc., 312 F.R.D. 686, 690 (D.D.C. 2015) [hereinafter Münchener] ("Protective orders both facilitate efficient pre-trial discovery and prevent parties from abusing Rule 26's liberal discovery provisions."); Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 34 (1984).

This Court enforces protective orders consistent with their language. See, e.g., Pigford v. Veneman, 307 F. Supp. 2d 51, 55 (D.D.C. 2004) (holding that class counsel violated a protective order by disclosing certain documents to pro bono counsel when the protective order only permitted disclosure of documents from the government). If a protective order "broadly prohibits disclosure of any materials obtained during discovery for any purpose other than litigation and to any person other than those associated with the litigation," disclosure of documents beyond that scope violates the protective order. Dialog Information Servs., Inc. v. American Chemical Soc., Case No. 90-cv-1338, 1991 WL 283718, at *2 (D.D.C. Dec. 19, 1991).

B. The Protective Order Covers Dominion's Litigation Documents

There is no reasonable dispute that the Protective Order governs Dominion's Litigation Documents. Byrne and Lambert concede that a protective order is generally interpreted according to its plain language. ECF No. 76 at 20. They assert, however, that because Dominion discussed needing to protect trade secrets and proprietary information in a motion requesting a separate protective order, the Third-Party Protective Order, the Court should interpret the operative Protective Order in this case inconsistent with its plain language. Id. at 21 (citing ECF No. 145 in Case No. 21-cv-445) (asserting that "Dominion's motion for a protective order targets a very specific situation and sought to encompass only very specific, technical information – 'trade secrets,' 'proprietary information,' and 'confidential information' pertaining thereto."). Dominion responds that Byrne and Lambert's argument is based on a fundamental misunderstanding of the two separate protective orders. ECF No. 82 at 21–22.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Court agrees with Dominion. It is clear from the record that, after the Parties negotiated a comprehensive Protective Order that applies to any Party-produced discovery, Dominion asked the Court to enter a separate protective order in the MyPillow litigation tailored to third-party discovery. Compare ECF Nos. 152 with 159 in Case No. 21-cv-445. There is no support for the conclusion that the MyPillow Third-Party Protective Order displaces this Protective Order or limits its scope. If there were any doubt, it would be resolved by Byrne's own stipulation and Joint Motion asking the Court to enter this Protective Order, noting that it "prohibits persons or entities receiving Discovery Material produced in the Consolidated Cases from using those Discovery Materials outside of those three cases, except as specifically provided by the Order." ECF No. 45 at 2–3. Moreover, prior to sponsoring Lambert's dissemination of documents subject to the Protective Order, Byrne never took the position that the Order was limited in any way.

Lambert and Byrne's argument here is not only meritless, it borders on frivolous, purposefully ignores contrary evidence and authority, and contradicts Byrne's own representations to the Court in his June 2023 stipulation.[17]

---

[17] Byrne and Lambert have had ample opportunity to correct their clearly implausible argument. ECF Nos. 86; 90; 97. Instead of addressing what can generously be seen as a misunderstanding of the docket, Byrne and Lambert have doubled down. ECF No. 116. They did so even after Dominion explained how Byrne's reliance on ECF No. 145 in 21-cv-445 was plainly wrong. ECF No. 82. Lambert even continued to advance this theory at the May Hearing and claimed: "My client did not agree to false labels being placed on the documents by Dominion." ECF No. 103 at 37:7–8. This is again clearly contradictory to the joint stipulation.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

II. Violations of Rules, Laws, and Orders

A. Lambert Has Violated the Court's Orders

Dominion asserts that, through her actions, Lambert violated multiple rules and court orders, including D.C. Rule of Professional Conduct ("DCRPC") 3.4(c), DCRPC 8.4(d), the Protective Order, and the Status Quo Order. Lambert does not dispute that she committed the acts at issue; she argues instead that that her actions were permissible. Apart from the alleged violations of DCRPC 8.4(d), Dominion discussed these violations in its briefing at ECF Nos. 75, 82, 96, 105, 108, and 113. Specifically, Dominion alleges that Byrne and Lambert violated ¶¶ 1, 8, 11, 15, 26, and 27 of the Protective Order, and ¶¶ 1, 3, 6, 7, and 8 of the Status Quo Order. Because Lambert's alleged violations have been ongoing, Dominion introduced recent evidence of such actions at the May Hearing and have supplemented with additional evidence since then. ECF Nos. 102-1; 105; 108; 113. At the May Hearing, Dominion also discussed how Lambert allegedly made multiple misrepresentations to the Court, conduct which violates DCRPC 8.4(c). The Court has permitted Lambert to respond to these allegations, and Lambert continues to maintain that her actions were permissible, justified, and necessary to report evidence of an allegedly grave crime. ECF Nos. 76, 97, 106, 111, 117. In the past two weeks, Dominion has sought leave to file two additional supplements detailing additional alleged misconduct. ECF Nos. 118; 122. Despite the severity of the conduct alleged therein, the Court denies Dominion's latest motions to supplement in the interests of ending the ongoing cycle of alleged misconduct by resolving this underlying Motion.

1. Violations of Protective Order

Lambert and Byrne have violated a number of the provisions of the Protective Order. ECF No. 77 ¶¶ 1, 8, 11, 15, 16, 26, and 27.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

First, Lambert and Byrne disclosed and promoted the public dissemination of Dominion's Litigation Documents in a manner the Protective Order does not authorize. ECF Nos. 75 at 9–12, 82 at 6–17. The Protective Order prohibits disclosure of discovery outside of the Parties to the litigation and, even within those parameters, limits the purposes for which confidential material may be used. ECF No. 75-7 ¶¶ 1, 8. Lambert violated these provisions by attaching to a pleading in her criminal case in Michigan a declaration from Leaf that included Dominion's Litigation Documents as exhibits, providing Leaf with access to the document repository, and sharing social media posts that include the disclosed documents. Id.

Second, they did not notify Dominion that they intended to disclose any Confidential Discovery Material prior to disclosing it or schedule a time to meet and confer on the proposed objections to the documents.[18] These were documents Dominion had produced that it reasonably believed would be handled pursuant to the terms of the Protective Order. ECF No. 75-7 ¶¶ 15, 16. Third, Lambert and Byrne failed to come to the Court, as the Protective Order expressly requires in the event of an objection, to seek an Order de-designating the documents or allowing Lambert to disseminate these documents to a third party. Id.

Fourth, Byrne and Lambert did not immediately notify Dominion once they disclosed Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 75 at 12–13. It is notable that Lambert and Byrne even failed to notify McGlinchey—who represented Byrne at the time they began to make the disclosures—that Byrne or Lambert planned to and ultimately did disclose Dominion's documents. McGlinchey only learned about Byrne and Lambert's actions when they saw a social media post

---

[18] There is no dispute that Lambert and Byrne disclosed "Confidential" documents, in addition to other documents covered by the Protective Order. First, Lambert admits to giving Leaf access to the entire repository of Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 78 at 31:19–32:4. Second, all of the documents attached to Leaf's declaration that Lambert filed pro se in her Michigan criminal case were stamped "Confidential." ECF No. 75-8 at 5–63.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

about Dominion's Litigation Documents. It was not until this point that McGlinchey, not Lambert or Byrne, notified Dominion of the breach. Id. In addition, Lambert refused to answer Dominion's questions about the scope of her breach. Id.; ECF No. 75-3. Instead, she threatened that "if [Dominion counsel] were aware of the criminal acts, I will need to address fraud on the court and potentially accessory after the fact with threats of violating a protective order that does not extend to the criminal acts committed by your client." ECF No. 75-3. Lambert and Byrne's conduct here violates Paragraph 27 of the Protective Order. ECF No. 75-7. Lambert only provided information about the scope of her possession and disclosures of the documents when the Court questioned her at the May Hearing. And now, it is clear that Lambert has still not disclosed the full list of individuals with whom she shared Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 113 at 3 (describing Case's involvement in this litigation); ECF No. 113-4 at 3.

Fifth, Lambert has apparently refused to object to subpoenas that she has received for Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF Nos. 108 at 2, 3; 113 at 7, 8. Even though the Protective Order clearly requires a person to object to subpoenas on the grounds of the Order's existence, Lambert has repeatedly refused to confirm that she would do so. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 26; 108 at 2, 3; 113 at 7, 8. Lambert does not assert that she has objected to these subpoenas. Instead, she vaguely maintains that she will comply with the Protective Order. ECF Nos. 108-8; 117. This promise instills little confidence moving forward, as Lambert continues to rely on an interpretation of the Protective Order that the Court has rejected.

2. Violations of Status Quo Order

Lambert and Byrne have also violated the Court's Status Quo Order, despite both verifying that they had and would comply with it. ECF No. 84. The Court will save for another day the absurdity of needing to require a barred attorney to independently verify that she will follow a

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Court Order. To date, Lambert and Byrne have violated at least five of the eight specific requirements of the Status Quo Order: ¶¶ 1, 3, 6, 7, 8.

First, as discussed, Lambert and Byrne missed multiple deadlines to submit their verifications. Notably, they only asked for an extension after their first deadline had passed. The delay in submitting the verification matters because Byrne continued to publicly discuss and share Dominion's documents in that time (and after). ECF Nos. 102-1 at 20; 103 at 11:13–12:14. And the delayed failure to comply with the Court's deadline is another example of Lambert and Byrne's cavalier disregard for the judicial process in this case.

Second, regarding the filing in one of her criminal cases, Lambert did not "immediately confer with her counsel in that matter and undertake every reasonable effort to remove such documents from the public record and file them under seal instead." ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 3; 103 at 10:1–11:12, 29:20–25, 30:4–15 (claiming that her counsel was unwilling to remove Dominion's Litigation Documents from the public docket in Michigan because he believed, like Lambert, they should remain publicly available.). Lambert made no effort herself to remove the documents from public access or raise the issue with the Michigan court, despite having filed them pro se. ECF Nos. 102-2; 103 at 10:1–11:12, 29:20–25, 30:4–15. Nor did she notify the Court or Dominion of her unilateral decisions to keep the documents on that public docket. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 3 (Status Quo Order requirement); 84 (verifying Lambert had and would comply with all Status Quo Order requirements); 103 at 10:1–11:12 (explaining how Dominion learned Lambert did not remove the documents from the public docket).

Third, Byrne and Lambert have continued to share or sponsor the dissemination of the documents publicly. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 1; 103 at 12:15–22. For example, on March 19, 2024, Lambert discussed the documents with ABC News, which quoted her as saying "[t]he Dominion file contained evidence of perjury by John Poulos, Dominion CEO, Honest Services Fraud, Wire Fraud, etc." ECF Nos. 102-1 at 21; 103 at 12:23–13:2. On March 22, 2024, Lambert was a guest on a podcast during which host Joe Oltmann discussed the documents. ECF Nos. 102-1 at 22; 103 at 13:3–17. When Oltmann asked whether Leaf was allowed to discuss his "investigation," which is based on Dominion's documents, Lambert said Leaf could go through whatever he wanted. ECF No. 103 at 13:3–17, 45:11–13. On April 7, 2024, Lambert gave an interview on "The Joe Hoft Show" on FrankSpeech. ECF Nos. 102-1 at 23; 103 at 13:18–14:7. The title of the episode was "Surviving Attacks for Standing Up for Fair Elections with Stefanie Lambert," and Lambert again discussed the documents she had disseminated. ECF Nos. 102-1 at 23; 103 at 13:18–14:7.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

These actions remain ongoing. Immediately after Lambert and Byrne promised they would follow the Protective and Status Quo Orders, claimed to understand when the Court reiterated the broad scope of the Orders, and promised to seek Court guidance if there was any confusion, Byrne continued to share social media posts with and about the documents and Lambert attempted to justify his conduct. ECF Nos. 105; 106; see also ECF Nos. 108; 113. Significantly, neither Lambert nor Byrne meaningfully contest any of Dominion's evidence in support of its Motion. Lambert and Byrne do not, for example, contest the authenticity of their posts or re-posts on social media, interviews, appearances on various interviews or podcasts, etc. Nor have they argued that they did not participate in the conduct alleged or that any of the posts or statements are taken out of context.

Fourth, Lambert failed to "preserve all documents and communications relating to the issues raised by Dominion's motion, including but not limited to, the release of any Dominion Litigation Documents in this case to any other entity or individual." ECF No. 77 ¶ 7. Lambert admitted at the May Hearing that she viewed part of a video that Byrne posted on social media on April 3, 2024, in which Byrne ostensibly discussed this case and/or Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 103 at 47:2–48:10. Lambert represented to the Court that she directed Byrne to remove the video from social media. Id. Lambert did not ensure that she or Byrne preserved the video and has not provided the video to Dominion despite repeated requests. Id. By the time of the May Hearing, it appeared that the video no longer existed. Id. Lambert's failure to preserve the video she directed her client to remove from social media renders the Court unable to assess whether Byrne's statements violated the Court's Orders. Based on her conduct and lack of candor with the Court, it appears this is entirely what Lambert was hoping to achieve. Id. at 48:6–10 (Lambert stating that she does not have time to "babysit" Byrne's social media).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Fifth, Lambert failed to notify the Court if any other associate or affiliate had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents, as required in Status Quo Order ¶ 6. On July 10, 2024, Case submitted a declaration in the Peters Criminal Case representing that he was an attorney assisting with Byrne's defense in this litigation, had signed an Undertaking to comply with the Protective Order, and had reviewed Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 113-4 at 3. Lambert did not notify the Court of Case's involvement or access to Dominion's Litigation Documents. Instead, after Dominion independently discovered that Case had access to its documents, Lambert refused to provide any details about Case's involvement. ECF No. 113 at 5.

B. Lambert Has Violated the Rules of Professional Conduct

1. Standard

The DCRPC, as adopted by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, govern attorney conduct in this Court. LCvR 83.15(a). Attorneys practicing in this Court are subject to discipline for violations thereof. Id. DCRPC 3.4(c) prohibits a lawyer from "[k]nowingly disobey[ing] an obligation under the rules of a tribunal except for an open refusal based on an assertion that no valid obligation exists." D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 3.4(c). DCRPC 8.4(d) prohibits a lawyer from "[e]ngag[ing] in conduct that seriously interferes with the administration of justice." D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 8.4(d). The D.C. Court of Appeals has interpreted DCRPC 8.4(d) to require showing: (1) an attorney's conduct was improper; (2) it "bears directly upon the judicial process"; and (3) it taints the judicial process in more than a de minimus way, or "at least potentially impact[s] upon the process to a serious and adverse degree." In re Dobbie, 305 A.3d 780, 809–10 (D.C. 2023) (internal quotations omitted). DCRPC 8.4(c) prohibits attorneys from making misrepresentations to the court. D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 8.4(c).

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2. Lambert's Misrepresentations to the Court

Lambert has made many misrepresentations and misstatements to the Court. First, during the March Hearing, Lambert represented that her attorneys had publicly filed the motion in her Michigan criminal case attaching Dominion's Litigation Documents, when in fact it was Lambert herself who filed the motion pro se. ECF No. 78 at 46:6–21 (clarifying how the documents were submitted: "THE COURT: Okay. So they were filed by your counsel? MS. LAMBERT JUNTTILA: Correct."). This misrepresentation is significant, as Lambert attempted to mischaracterize the facts to reflect that she was less involved in one of the first public disclosures of Dominion's documents. Id. at 43:24–44:4 ("That was not my filing; that was an affidavit from the Sheriff.").

Second, at the March Hearing, Lambert represented to the Court that the only two people who had access to the relevant materials—Dominion's documents and her related notes—were her "assistant" Stephanie Scott and Russell Newman, another attorney in Lambert's office. ECF No. 78 at 35:8–36:16. The Court and Dominion learned through McGlinchey's filing on March 29, 2024, nearly two weeks later, however, that another alleged attorney for Byrne named Michael

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Smith also had access. ECF No. 85 at 4. The Court also later learned that Lambert failed to advise the Court that Ms. Scott was not just an assistant to Ms. Lambert, but is also the former Clerk of Adams Township, Michigan and Lambert's co-defendant in her pending felony criminal case in Hillsdale County, Michigan. Ms. Scott and Lambert face charges for allegedly "mishandling voter data without authorization in search of fraud." ECF Nos. 102-16 at 5; 101-1 at 1.

As discussed above, the Court learned through Dominion's Supplement that there is another attorney assisting with Byrne's defense, Case. ECF No. 113. If Case was involved at the time of the March and May Hearings, Lambert misrepresented to the Court the entire universe of people with whom she shared Dominion's Litigation Documents. ECF No. 78 at 35:1–36:23. If Lambert gave Case access to Dominion's Litigation Documents after those hearings, she violated the Status Quo Order. ECF No. 77 ¶¶ 1, 6. Because Lambert refuses to provide any information on Case's involvement, the Court has no way of assessing which is true. In either scenario, however, Lambert has made material omissions to the Court.

Third, in her verification that she and Byrne had and would comply with all provisions of the Status Quo Order, Lambert misrepresented that she and her client had complied with the Order. ECF No. 84. Lambert ultimately filed the verification on March 26, 2024, after engaging in much of the conduct described above. Id. For example, Lambert represented that she had and would "undertake every reasonable effort to remove such documents from the public record and file them under seal instead" in one of her criminal prosecutions in Michigan. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 3; 84. Yet, Dominion presented evidence from the prosecutor in that case that neither Lambert nor her counsel attempted to place the documents under seal. ECF No. 102-2. Only after Dominion brought this matter to the Court's attention did Lambert admit that she did not remove this public filing. ECF No. 103 at 29:16–30:15 (asserting her counsel told her not to remove it). Even if Lambert had a legitimate reason to disregard the Court's order (the Court has yet to hear one), she still misrepresented to the Court that she had complied with this requirement. ECF Nos. 77, 84.[19]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In addition, Lambert represented that she had and would comply with the requirement in the Status Quo Order that she not share, distribute, provide access to, or discuss the documents. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 1; 84. But Lambert signed this verification after she had already violated it by giving an interview in which she discussed the evidence she believed existed in the Dominion documents. ECF Nos. 102-1 at 21; 103 at 12:23–13:2. After signing the verification, Lambert continued to publicly discuss the documents. ECF Nos. 102-1 at 23; 103 at 13:18–14:7.[20]

Finally, as discussed above, Lambert assured the Court at the May Hearing that, going forward, she would come to the Court if there were any questions about what she or her client could do with the documents under the Protective and Status Quo Orders. ECF No. 103 at 44:6–22, 45:14–23, 46:3–12. Byrne was physically present at this hearing and ostensibly heard Lambert's promises, having himself agreed to comply with the Orders moving forward. Id. at 61:20–25. Only one day later, however, Byrne reposted screenshots of Dominion's Litigation Documents to his hundreds of thousands of followers on X. ECF Nos. 105, 106. Byrne has not removed this post as of the issuance of this Memorandum Opinion. Lambert not only did nothing to address Byrne's blatant violation, she has continued to justify his actions. ECF No. 106.

---

[19] Even if Lambert had offered legitimate grounds to keep the motion from her criminal case itself publicly available, this still does not explain why she would need to keep the attachment of Leaf's affidavit with Dominion's Litigation Documents included as exhibits also publicly accessible. As Dominion argues, Lambert's conduct here also implicates DCRPC 3.3, which imposes upon counsel a duty of candor to the Court. ECF No. 103 at 53:23–54:14.

[20] As the Court reminded the Parties at the hearing, the Protective and Status Quo Orders do not prevent the Parties or Counsel from discussing or criticizing the case in general, whatever their views may be. Therefore, the Court did not fault or prohibit Byrne from making statements related to issues presently before this Court, about the Court, Dominion, or this litigation generally.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

The Court will not belabor this point by chronicling Lambert's other apparent misrepresentations. Suffice it to say that Lambert's misrepresentations reflect a deeply concerning pattern that does not appear to have any sign of stopping. Compare ECF No. 75-3, with ECF No. 102-3 at 10 (differing accounts of whether it was Lambert or Byrne that insisted on disclosing Dominion's Litigation Documents); compare ECF No. 25, with ECF No. 103 at 45:5–9 (differing representations of whether Byrne anticipated Dominion's Litigation Documents would unveil evidence of national security or election crimes).

3. Lambert's Conduct Violates the DCRPC

First, DCRPC 3.4(c) prohibits an attorney from "[k]nowingly disobey[ing] an obligation under the rules of a tribunal except for an open refusal based on an assertion that no valid obligation exists." D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 3.4(c). As discussed above, Lambert repeatedly violated the Court's the Protective Order and Status Quo Orders. Those violations likewise constitute violations of Rule 3.4(c) for all the same reasons discussed above. Specifically:

- Lambert failed to notify Dominion that she planned to disclose any of Dominion's Litigation Documents prior to disclosing them and arranging a time to meet and confer, as required by the Protective Order. ECF No. 75-7 ¶¶ 15, 16.
- Lambert failed to raise her objections with the Court and seek an order de-designating documents or allowing her to disclose the documents to a third party, as the Protective Order permits. Id.
- Lambert publicly disclosed and promoted public dissemination of Dominion's Litigation Documents in a manner not permitted by the Protective Order. Id. ¶ 1.
- Lambert refused to confirm that she would object to subpoenas as required by the Protective Order. Id. ¶ 26.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Lambert failed to immediately, or even at all herself, notify Dominion, McGlinchey, or the Court after she disclosed the documents, as required by the Protective Order. Id. ¶ 27.
- Lambert failed to provide information about the scope of her actions and the breach as required by the Protective Order. Id. ¶ 27.
- Lambert failed to timely sign and file a verification she had and would comply with the Status Quo Order, as required by that Order. ECF Nos. 84; 77 ¶ 8.
- Lambert failed to immediately confer with her counsel and undertake every reasonable effort to remove Dominion's Litigation Documents from the public docket in one of her criminal cases in Michigan, as required by the Status Quo Order. ECF No. 77 ¶ 3.
- Lambert continued to "shar[e], distribut[e], provid[e] access to or discuss[]" Dominion's Litigation Documents, as prohibited by the Status Quo Order. Id. ¶ 1; ECF Nos. 102-1 at 21–23; 103 at 12:15–14:7, 45:11–13.
- Lambert failed to preserve all documents related to the issues raised by Dominion's motion, as required by the Status Quo Order. ECF No. 77 ¶ 7.
- Lambert failed to immediately notify the Court that other associates or affiliates had access to the documents, as required by the Status Quo Order. Id. ¶ 6.

Although Lambert may argue that she violated the orders based on her assertion that no valid objection existed, any such argument is unavailing. As discussed below, Lambert has never offered a valid objection to either Order. Lambert has squandered any opportunity to defend her actions, claiming that she has no authority to support her conduct because there are no cases which stand for the proposition that "water is wet." ECF No. 103 at 40:7, 46:23, 59:15. Even if a valid objection to the Orders existed, Lambert at the very least acted in bad faith in the manner in which she disclosed the materials. If she had a valid objection, she would have first raised her objections with the Court instead of waiting until she caused irreparable damage by releasing Dominion's Litigation Documents. Moreover, she confirmed at the May Hearing that she would comply with all of her obligations going forward and did not dispute the provisions in the Status Quo Order, further underscoring her lack of any valid objection to the orders. ECF No. 103 at 60:11–62:25. As set forth above, she promptly disregarded that Order shortly after making that statement.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Second, DCRPC 8.4(c) prohibits attorneys from "engag[ing] in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 8.4(c); see also In re Ukwu, 926 A.2d 1106, 1111–14 (D.C. 2007) (holding that an attorney violated DCRPC 8.4(c) by conduct including "directing a client to file with the IRS a letter containing representations that [the lawyer], at a minimum, should have known were false . . ."). As chronicled above, Lambert has repeatedly made misrepresentations to this Court by:

- Representing that her attorney filed a motion with Dominion's Litigation Documents on a public docket in Michigan instead of her having filed the materials pro se. ECF No. 78 at 46:6–21.
- Representing that only two people had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents through working with her, when in fact at least a third attorney also had access. Id. at 35:8–36:16; ECF No. 85.
- Representing that she had informed the Court of any "associate or affiliate" who had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents and would immediately inform the Court if others had access to the documents while withholding Case's involvement from the Court. ECF Nos. 77 ¶ 6; 84; 113-5.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

- Representing that she and Byrne had and would comply with all of the provisions of the Status Quo Order, despite the numerous violations discussed above. ECF No. 84.
- Representing that she would come to the Court to seek guidance if she thought an exception to the Protective Order or Status Quo Order existed before she or her client took any action on the proffered exception, but failing to follow through on the promise. ECF Nos. 103 at 44:6–22, 45:14–23, 46:3–12; 105; 106.

Third, DCRPC 8.4(d) prohibits attorneys from "engag[ing] in conduct that seriously interferes with the administration of justice." D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 8.4(d). The Comment to DCRPC 8.4(d) includes failing to comply with court orders as conduct that seriously interferes with the administration of justice under DCRPC 8.4(d). Comment to D.C. R. Prof. Conduct 8.4(d) ("Paragraph (d)'s prohibition of conduct that 'seriously interferes with the administration of justice' . . . include[s] acts by a lawyer such as . . . failure to obey court orders"). As explained above, Lambert's conduct was clearly improper in that she repeatedly violated court orders and made misrepresentations to this Court. See In re Dobbie, 305 A.3d at 809–10. Lambert's conduct bears directly on the judicial process, including the Court and Parties' abilities to oversee and engage in discovery, presume other attorneys will comply with their ethical obligations, and rely on Parties following court orders. Id. The impact that Lambert's misconduct has had on this proceeding is severe, compounding, and shows every sign of continuing if she were permitted to remain counsel in this case. Id.[21]

[21] Although there is limited case law in this Court about when a DCRPC 8.4(d) violation occurs, especially under similar facts to the present case, the D.C. Court of Appeals has recognized violations for less serious conduct, for example, failing to appear at a hearing or interview when an attorney knew or should have known that they would be expected to appear. See In re Ukwu, 926 A.2d at 1143–44.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

To put it simply, given her conduct, the Court has no confidence that Lambert will comply with the Court's Orders past or future. The record amply supports the Court's serious concern that, instead, Lambert will continue to engage in tactics which taint and disrupt this judicial process. And it is not only the Court who cannot trust her tactics moving forward. Other Parties to the litigation cannot be sure that she will abide by the very agreements her client made (such as the Protective Order), having already flouted them in the most egregious manner.

III. Lambert's Justification for Violating Court Orders

None of the justifications Lambert has offered for her conduct, which as noted above is largely undisputed, excuse her actions as Byrne's counsel of record.

A. Lambert's Arguments

Lambert first argues that Dominion brought this Motion in bad faith to target her. ECF No. 76 at 26. She claims that this is a "'tactical' effort to stifle the truth and to prevent undersigned counsel who has introduced and presented corroborating expert analysis of the deficiencies in Dominion voting systems, and now has fulfilled her ethical duty to report the discovery of potential criminal violations to law enforcement." Id. Lambert asserts that Dominion seeks to disqualify her "because of her combined knowledge and the information she possesses from litigating cases in multiple jurisdictions," her "expertise and knowledge, including multiple expert analyses of the deficiencies in Dominion voting systems' product," and "to prevent her from using her expertise and knowledge to defend Mr. Byrne . . ." Id.[22] Lambert describes Dominion's motion as "puffery" and an "effort to downgrade" her with "ad hominem attacks." Id.; ECF No. 103 at 32:18–33:3.

[22] Lambert cites to expert reports she purportedly obtained related to Dominion's voting machines, ECF Nos. 76-5; 76-6. It does not appear that these reports have anything to do with this Motion.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Lambert argues that neither she nor Byrne violated the Protective Order because the information was not covered by the Order. ECF No. 76 at 28. As explained above, this argument is meritless. Lambert asserts, alternatively, that any breach is justified under two "exceptions": (a) disclosure to law enforcement; and (b) the "public interest exception[,] which even the judiciary has a constitutional obligation to acknowledge." Id. at 28, 23 ("On this latter note, and equally, if not more, important, the information in the production contains information concerning criminal conduct and collusion and conspiracy with and by foreign nationals in the conducting of U.S. elections and therefore fall within an exception for matters of national security and constitutional important (sic), which have always enjoyed a robust 'tradition of accessibility' in this country.").

Lambert claims that Dominion's documents provide evidence of "some of the most serious crimes in national history and are a matter of national security." ECF No. 103 at 29:24–25. According to Lambert, this includes election fraud. ECF No. 76 at 30–32 (citing 52 U.S.C. § 10308, but no authority supporting its relevance or application here). She asserts that "foreign nationals are entering election systems in the United States before certification of the 2020 election," which "the public has a right to know" and "Dominion is complicit" in these events. Id. at 29. She further claims that "Dominion has filed this lawsuit . . . to hide these facts from the American public and to create a false narrative." Id.

Lambert cites no authority for these broad and significant assertions. Although she references cases that recognize the fundamental right to vote and articulate the general elements of alleged crimes, she cites no authority for the proposition that she was justified as a matter of law in taking the actions she did. ECF No. 103 at 40:17–22; ECF No. 76 at 25–45 (failing to offer any authority to support there is (a) an exception to protective orders for reporting what an attorney suspects is evidence of crime to law enforcement; b) an exception for disseminating what an attorney believes is evidence of election interference, or another topic of grave national interest; or c) because attorneys have an obligation to report such evidence of alleged criminal wrongdoing, it would have been improper for her to first seek review in a "civil" court).[23] Instead, Lambert vaguely claims that her oath to the Constitution as an attorney required her to take the actions she did. ECF No. 130 at 36:5–13. When pressed, Lambert's only answer to the Court for failing to cite any relevant authority was simply, and repeatedly, that the fact that her actions are justified is as obvious as the proposition that "water is wet." ECF No. 103 at 40:7, 46:23, 59:15. The Court addresses each of her arguments in turn.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

B. Lambert's Disclosures Were Not Limited to Law Enforcement

As an initial point, Lambert's primary justification for her disclosures in violation of the Protective Order turns on she and Byrne having disclosed the documents to "law enforcement" akin to generally reporting evidence of a crime. ECF No. 103 at 34:17–25. Lambert cites no authority for this proposition or when such an exception may apply. This argument is flatly rejected.

Even if Lambert had authority for this argument, it would still not justify her actions. Lambert and Byrne apparently did disclose the documents to some law enforcement officials—Sheriff Dar Leaf and an unnamed Assistant U.S. Attorney—the extent of their disclosures is much broader. Lambert and Byrne have both publicly disseminated and discussed the documents to advance their theories about the 2020 election. This includes Lambert submitting an affidavit from Leaf in her pro se filing in one of her own criminal cases in Michigan. Both Lambert and Byrne [23] Lambert does not cite to any controlling authority in her discussion of the legal standard for disqualification. ECF No. 76 at 25 (citing cases from the Eleventh, Fifth, Second, and Sixth Circuits). Lambert repeatedly uses quotation marks or otherwise implies she is directly citing a source without actually citing a source. Id. at 15, 20, 29.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

have publicized Leaf's efforts to share the documents widely to non-law enforcement audiences. Accordingly, her argument that she was duty-bound to disclose the documents to law enforcement rings hollow in light of her subsequent actions.

C. Lambert Fails to Substantiate Her Arguments About Evidence of Crime

Lambert has failed to substantiate any of her conclusory allegations that Dominion's Litigation Documents contain evidence of national security crimes. She has not, for example, pinpointed certain documents and made an argument that they meet the elements of any particular crime. Nor has Lambert explained why, when faced with these documents supposedly reflecting serious crimes of national importance, she chose to disclose them to a single county sheriff in Michigan as opposed to a national law enforcement agency such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation or Department of Justice. To the contrary, Lambert continues to advance these allegations despite being unable to point to any court authority that substantiates them.

Lambert also argues that Dominion is engaging in "honest services fraud" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1846. ECF No. 76 at 33. Specifically, she argues that Dominion gets paid for providing voting machines and systems for U.S. elections, but has colluded with foreign nationals to give them access to these elections in "betrayal of public trust" and as part of "a deeper deception that would appear to include honest services fraud." Id. at 33. Relatedly, Lambert claims Dominion may have engaged in honest services wire fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1343 and 1346. Id. at 34 (claiming without authority that Serbia conspired to interfere in elections in Michigan and Pennsylvania). Further, Lambert argues Dominion engaged in a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States or to defraud the United States, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371. Id. at 35–36. Per Lambert, Dominion did so by conspiring to impair "lawful government functions," specifically the "regulat[ing] and monitor[ing]" of "participation of foreign nationals in the American electoral process" and "impairing the requisite 'transparency in the American political process.'" Id. at 36 (alteration in original, but citing no source).[24] Beyond her own speculation, Lambert does not substantiate these legal arguments in any way. And in any event, she still fails to offer any legal support for the proposition that, notwithstanding her alleged discovery of criminal activity, she could unilaterally disregard and bypass the Protective Order.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

D. Right to Vote Cases Do Not Provide Authority for Lambert's Position

Lambert proclaims that "[n]o constitutional right is more fundamental than the right to vote," but neglects to put forward any evidence for how her unilateral actions further that right. Id. at 40. She discusses at length cases that recognize the fundamental right to vote, and there is no dispute that this right is fundamental. Id. at 32–45. But Lambert points to no authority for the proposition that these cases somehow authorize her to violate any court order just because she believes she has evidence of a vast criminal attempt to subvert this right. Id.

Lambert's principal case, Ex Parte Yarborough, does not get her there. Lambert asserts that Ex Parte Yarborough held that "[voting rights] are recognized and justiciable in any forum and in any matter in which they may be properly pled." Id. at 32, 40 (citing Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U.S. 651, 661–63 (1884) ("[A]ny public inquiry into the deprivation of the fundamental right to vote is actionable, and the judiciary has an express obligation to abide because it has a duty to ensure that the Constitutional rights of American citizens to vote and to have their votes properly [24] Lambert makes various other arguments without citing any legal authority, including that: 1) the Court should consider Dominion as a state actor, without providing any authority for how Dominion would clear the high bar the Supreme Court has set for such analyses; 2) all Dominion communications should be subject to FOIA; and 3) Dominion CEO John Poulos committed perjury in his testimony before the Michigan Legislature on December 15, 2020. ECF No. 76 at 37. On the third point, Lambert claims that "[t]he fact that the voting systems and machines have the capacity to connect to the internet and the software was created and engineered by foreign nationals acting in concert with and for Dominion is sufficient in itself to lift the protective order and to allow disclosure of these email communications." Id. at 38.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

counted are secured.").[25] Yarborough was a habeas action in which the Court recognized Congress's authority to enact criminal laws to punish voter interference, not a case where a private attorney in a civil lawsuit took unilateral action to "expose" confidential documents subject to a protective order. See Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U.S. at 662. Lambert's reliance on the case to support her conduct is unreasonable and borders on frivolous.

Lambert's other right to vote cases are similarly irrelevant to the questions before this Court. In Reynolds v. Sims, the Supreme Court struck down voting districts in Alabama for violating the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by not apportioning districts on a population basis. 377 U.S. 533, 583–87 (1964). In Yick Wo v. Hopkins, the Supreme Court recognized that, although it is not enumerated as an express grant in the Constitution, the right to vote is fundamental because it is "preservative of all rights." 118 U.S. 356, 370 (1886). The Supreme Court has repeatedly affirmed this holding. See e.g., Harper v. Va. State Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 667 (1966). Again, nothing in these cases excuses Lambert's actions.

Finally, even if Lambert had a valid reason to disclose Dominion's Litigation Documents, she still has offered no viable, let alone meritorious, argument to justify all of her other misconduct. Her purported justifications do not excuse her other violations of the Protective Order, including the fact that she: a) did not notify Dominion of her intent to disclose the documents; b) did not seek Court approval to disclose the documents; c) refused to provide an accounting of the extent of her breach when Dominion requested it; and d) threatened Byrne's document database

---

[25] In Yarborough, seven members of the Ku Klux Klan attacked a Black man to prevent him from exercising his recently-recognized right to vote. 110 U.S. at 657–67. The KKK members were convicted of violating federal laws protecting the right to vote, and they subsequently filed habeas petitions challenging their convictions. See id. The Supreme Court rejected the petitioners' arguments, holding that Congress properly acted within its authority to pass criminal penalties for certain conduct interfering with the right to vote. See id.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

management company with criminal penalties if they impeded her access to the documents. Nor do they address her subsequent misconduct and violations of court orders, despite her repeated assurances to the Court that she understood her obligations and would comply with the Court's orders.

IV. Disqualification

Because the Court concludes that the Protective Order governed the documents, Lambert repeatedly violated that and other court orders, and that there is no justification for her actions, the Court now considers whether to disqualify Lambert.

A. Legal Standard

A district court has "wide discretion in the exercise of its duty to supervise members of the bar appearing before it." Koller, 737 F. 2d at 1054 (citing Groper v. Taff, 717 F.2d 1415, 1418 (D.C. Cir. 1983)); Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 43–46 (1991) (discussing the court's longstanding inherent authority to sanction misconduct before it); United States v. Philip Morris Inc., 347 F.3d 951, 955 (D.C. Cir. 2003). "Motions to disqualify are governed by two sources of authority. First . . . the local rules of the court in which they appear . . . Second, because motions to disqualify counsel in federal proceedings are substantive motions affecting the rights of the parties, they are decided by applying the standards developed under federal law." Paul v. Judicial Watch, Inc., 571 F. Supp. 2d 17, 20 (D.D.C. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted) (citing case law from the Tenth, Fifth, and Eleventh Circuits).

The D.C. Circuit has held that disqualification should be granted rarely absent circumstances in which an attorney's prior representation compromises her ability to zealously represent a current client. See Koller, 737 F.2d at 1056. As the Circuit has held, "[e]xcept in cases of truly egregious misconduct likely to infect future proceedings, other means less prejudicial to the client's interest than disqualifying the counsel of [his] choice are ordinarily available to deal with ethical improprieties by counsel." Id. (emphasis added). In so stating, the D.C. Circuit cited with approval language in a Second Circuit decision:

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

> Indeed, we see much wisdom in the view expressed by Judge Mansfield in concurrence:
>
> 'The attorney is the client's choice. Disqualification is wasteful and time-consuming. Only where the attorney's unprofessional conduct may affect the outcome of the case is there any necessity to nip it in the bud. Otherwise conventional disciplinary machinery should be used and, if this is inadequate, the organized bar must assume the burden of making it effective as a deterrent.'

Id. (citing Board of Education of New York City v. Nyquist, 590 F.2d 1241, 1247–48 (2d Cir.1979) (internal quotations omitted).

Although it is rare, the D.C. Circuit has not "prohibit[ed] disqualification outside of the two enumerated circumstances." Paul, 571 F. Supp. 2d at 24 (emphasis in original); see also Koller, 737 F.2d at 1064 (holding that "questionable activities . . . [that] do not clearly violate a disciplinary rule and taint future proceedings" should be remedied by means other than disqualification) (emphasis added).

B. Disqualification is Warranted

Dominion acknowledges that disqualification is an extraordinary remedy. ECF No. 75 at 21. Dominion argues, however, that disqualification is necessary here because "lesser sanctions will not protect the integrity of this litigation." Id. In support, Dominion cites to Lambert's "well-documented historical efforts to obtain and misuse Dominion confidential information, her pattern of disregard for judicial rules, and her willful and ongoing violation of the Protective Order in this case." Id. Dominion asserts that Lambert's "truly egregious misconduct . . . has already and will continue to infect this, and frankly, all of Dominion's other proceedings." ECF No. 103 at 5:19–21. According to Dominion, although Lambert's conduct clearly meets the requirements for a contempt citation—violating a "definite and specific court order" of which the party is aware—contempt is insufficient because Lambert has repeatedly shown she will violate court orders without regard for the consequences. ECF No. 75 at 21–22 (citing Pigford, 307 F. Supp. 2d at 55–56). Additionally, Dominion argues that it cannot entrust Lambert with highly sensitive and confidential information that impacts "its business, and the safety of its own employees and our nation's election workers." Id. Lambert, on the other hand, has no meaningful response as to what would be appropriate if the Court finds sanctions are warranted. ECF Nos. 76; 97; 106; 111; 117.[26]

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

There is no question that disqualification is a rare sanction. See Koller, 737 F.2d at 1056. This, however, is one of those rare cases where the circumstances of Lambert's misconduct are "truly egregious" such that her continued involvement would "infect future proceedings." Id. The Court agrees with Dominion that no lesser sanction will suffice. There are at least five reasons that illustrate why Lambert's conduct meets the high bar for disqualification: 1) Lambert's breach of the Protective Order was intentional, had significant consequences, and was without justification; 2) Lambert has since repeatedly violated court orders and made misrepresentations to the Court; 3) Lambert's prior conduct and admonishment undermines her argument that she acted in good faith and reflects her disregard for the Court's orders and rules; 4) Lambert has not refuted Dominion's argument that if the Court should impose a sanction, disqualification is the most appropriate; and 5) Lambert's conduct has already severely tainted this proceeding and will continue to do so if she remains counsel in this case.

---

[26] Byrne's first sur-reply raises a new procedural argument that Dominion improperly combined a motion for protective relief and disqualification in a single filing. ECF No. 97. Byrne has no excuse for waiting to raise this until six weeks after Dominion filed its Motion, and not in his first response. Byrne also alleges that Dominion improperly raised certain additional issues ex parte, such as the continued impact of Byrne and Lambert's breaches, without Byrne having an opportunity to respond. Id. As detailed herein and on the docket for this case, Byrne and Lambert have had ample opportunities to respond to Dominion's assertions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

1. Nature and Severity of Lambert's Initial Misconduct

The record is clear that Lambert's initial breach of the Protective Order—disclosing anywhere between thousands and nearly three million of Dominion's Litigation Documents before she even entered her appearance in this case—was massive and intentional. ECF No. 96 at 3 (describing how many documents Dominion has produced in discovery). Most, if not all, of the documents were stamped "Confidential." ECF No. 82 at 20. Lambert was only allowed to access the documents after she signed the Undertaking confirming that she would comply with all provisions of the Protective Order. ECF No. 75-9. Yet she blatantly disregarded this Order and her guarantee that she would comply with it. This is not a case of an inadvertent breach or good faith disclosure; it is unfathomable for Lambert to believe she could do whatever she wanted with Dominion's Litigation Documents. Lambert's actions were intentional and clearly meant to inflict the harm that has resulted. Moreover, there is no dispute that the dissemination of the documents has led to individuals, including Dominion's CEO and employees, facing severe threats.

The Court also notes that this is not a case in which Lambert's conduct could be excused on the grounds that she was engaging in zealous representation of her client within the bounds of the rules and orders governing attorneys in this Court. If anything, it appears she was zealously pursuing her client's goals (and clearly her own goals as well), outside those boundaries.

2. Lambert's Repeated and Remorseless Misconduct

Even if Lambert's initial actions could be excused in some way, her repeated violations of numerous provisions of the Protective and Status Quo Orders since then demonstrate that the Court cannot trust her to follow orders if she were permitted to remain in this case. Lambert's actions are particularly concerning given her representations—both orally and in writing—that she understood her obligations and would abide by them. The Court has no reason to believe Lambert

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

when she promises she will comply with the Court's Orders in the future, having already broken this promise repeatedly. See, e.g., ECF No. 103 at 44:18–19 ("I will follow all specific orders that the Court gives."), 45:14–23. Not only does Lambert maintain that she did nothing wrong and that her actions were necessary, she clearly believes that following the Court's Orders and procedures will result in greater harm than proceeding according to her own view of the world:

> If I were to go to the counsel for the criminals and let them know that I believe there is evidence of a crime that I want to report to the police, that could result in a destruction of evidence, criminal actors fleeing, hiding.

Id. at 59:15–18. Lambert has even implied that this Court is obstructing her ability to comply with the law, remarking that "[i]f the Court were to rule that I was not able to report criminal acts with ongoing investigations already in place with Congress, law enforcement, prosecutors' offices, that would be obstruction." Id. at 39:22–40:1 (emphasis added). Even after being repeatedly warned and promising she would comply with Court orders or seek Court guidance if she had any confusion, Lambert continues to openly disregard court orders. At the May Hearing, Lambert even began to discuss the contents of Dominion's documents that she alleges evidence crime until the Court abruptly stopped her because the courtroom had not been sealed. Id. at 37:21–38:13. As noted, after the May Hearing, Lambert continued to make baseless claims about the scope of the Protective Order and allow herself and Byrne to violate the Order repeatedly. ECF No. 106.

This Court has recognized that a "clear violation of . . . the District of Columbia Rules of Professional Conduct" can merit disqualification. Paul, 571 F. Supp. 2d at 27.[27] Moreover, this [27] In Paul, this Court acknowledged that the D.C. Circuit had not determined whether violation of an ethical rule itself would be sufficient for disqualification, or if the conduct must also somehow "taint" the underlying trial. Paul, 571 F. Supp. 2d at 26–27. This question did not impact the Court's outcome in that case because the rule that the attorney violated, Rule 1.9, "creates an irrebuttable presumption that its violation will taint the underlying trial." Id. at 26. Here, there is ample evidence that Lambert has violated her ethical obligations and that her continued involvement would taint the proceedings moving forward.

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Court views intentional violations of its orders as severe misconduct. Münchener, 312 F.R.D. at 686–89 (discussing an attorney's egregious misconduct including "knowingly violat[ing] the obligations imposed" in a protective order); Stone v. U.S. Embassy Tokyo, Case No. 19-cv-3273, 2021 WL 1110735, at *1–4 (D.D.C. Mar. 23, 2021) (describing how a pro se litigant's conduct in intentionally and publicly disclosing provisions of a protected government document and indicating he would not comply with court orders was severe enough to warrant dismissal as a sanction if the case were not already dismissed); Young v. Office of U.S. Senate Sergeant at Arms, 217 F.R.D. 61, 70 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that a plaintiff's repeated misconduct in discovery made it "extremely unlikely" that the plaintiff would obey a protective order going forward). Lambert clearly views compliance with Court Orders with which she does not agree as optional, which is incompatible with our judicial system. Allowing Lambert to continue as Byrne's counsel when she has already demonstrated a willingness, if not determination, to do whatever it takes to advance her theories infects this proceeding and jeopardizes this Court's ability to depend on counsel and parties adhering to their rules, obligations, and the law.

3. Prior Conduct and Admonishment

Lambert's conduct in her brief time representing Byrne in this litigation is sufficient by itself to warrant the sanction of disqualification. That said, in considering sanctions in other contexts (i.e., Rule 11), this Court has held that it may consider prior instances of misconduct outside of the case before it. See Atkins v. Fischer, 232 F.R.D. 116, 121–22, 129–30 (D.D.C. 2005) (internal citations omitted) ("It has long been held that in considering the implementation of sanctions against a party or a counsel to a litigation, a district court may consider all the circumstances surrounding the alleged violation. The totality of the circumstances can include events which did not occur in the case proper but occurred in other cases and are, by their nature, relevant to the pending controversy.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Although this Court has not answered the same question with respect to questions of disqualification, Lambert herself has referenced her conduct in other proceedings as being relevant to resolving Dominion's Motion. ECF Nos. 76 at 9–10, 24 (arguing that Dominion is engaged in a conspiracy to prevent Lambert from being involved in such cases with others including the Michigan Attorney General); 103 at 32:24–33:3 (claiming that she has "won" every time Dominion and others attack her), 41:19–42:12 (claiming that Dominion is only seeking to disqualify her because of her work on election cases). Despite Lambert's claim that she has "won" every time she encountered any sort of grievance or discipline, the Pennsylvania and Georgia courts' opinions paint a concerning picture of her conduct in those cases nonetheless. ECF No. 103 at 32:24–33:3; Cnty. of Fulton, 292 A.3d at 1018–19; Curling, 2023 WL 7463462, at *23–24. Both her prior admonishment and conduct in this case cast doubt on Lambert's claim that she "did everything in good faith" and is committed to following Court orders going forward. ECF No. 103 at 46:1–2.

4. Lambert's Concessions

"It is well understood in this Circuit that when a [Party] files an opposition to a dispositive motion and addresses only certain arguments raised by the [other Party], a court may treat those arguments that the [Party] failed to address as conceded." Hopkins v. Women's Div., General Bd. of Global Ministries, 284 F. Supp. 2d 15, 25 (D.D.C. 2003), aff'd 98 Fed. Appx. 8 (D.C. Cir. 2004). Dominion has put forth a compelling case for why the Court should disqualify Lambert and why lesser sanctions are insufficient. ECF No. 75. Lambert did not address Dominion's arguments about the insufficiency of any lesser sanction beyond disqualification, and she has not otherwise asked the Court to consider any lesser sanction. Cf. ECF No. 76.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

In fact, Lambert herself has acknowledged that disqualification might be an appropriate sanction. At the May Hearing, while Lambert was assuring the Court that she would come to it first in the future with any questions about the scope of the Court's orders, she noted that if the Court did not disqualify her based on her conduct to date, it could always do so in the future. ECF No. 103 at 49:2–15, 59:20–24 (". . . but the Court needs to understand my mindset was in good faith, and the Court does have the ability to issue sanctions or remove me from the case should I do anything inconsistent moving forward with a Court order."). As set forth above, Lambert continues to violate the Court's Orders to this day and her actions undermine her claim that she has done everything in good faith.

5. Lambert's Egregious Misconduct Has and Will Infect These Proceedings

Finally, as discussed extensively in this Memorandum and summarized below, Lambert's conduct has already substantially infected and will continue to infect these proceedings. In her short time as counsel in this case, Lambert has caused exponential harm that cannot be undone. The Court's only meaningful option to mitigate the specific risk of future harm Lambert poses is by removing her from this case.

First, Lambert's conduct has significantly hampered discovery in at least Byrne's specific case, if not also the coordinated/consolidated cases. ECF No. 81 at 5 ("Defendant needs additional time to comply with the discovery scheduling due to the fact that he and undersigned are effectively unable to prepare for depositions and further preparation in light of the Court's current order (Docket No. 77), prohibiting any access to discovery materials and documents produced by Dominion (Dominion Discovery Materials)."). It is remarkable how issues relating to Lambert's misconduct completely subsumed what were supposed to be the final two months of discovery. ECF No. 60 (setting a discovery deadline of May 30, 2024); 06/13/2024 Minute Order (updating the discovery deadline to September 30, 2024). Lambert did not enter her appearance as Byrne's counsel until March 12, 2024. ECF No. 71. Five days later, this Court entered the Status Quo Order that prevented Lambert and Byrne from accessing Dominion's discovery. ECF No. 77. Since then, Byrne has reportedly been at an "insurmountable disadvantage for the preparation of depositions and further litigation concerning Dominion's claims." ECF No. 81 at 6.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Dominion's counsel has represented that Lambert's continued role in this case has also impacted their ability to zealously represent their client. ECF No. 103 at 20:3–10. Dominion's counsel reports that for "every document [they] produce" and "every person [they] put up for deposition," they have "no good faith reason to believe that the . . . attorney on the other side is going to follow the Court's orders." Id. As for the Court, Lambert's conduct has prevented it from considering other discovery issues in the consolidated or coordinated cases, as it has had to first address Lambert and Byrne's continuing violations of the Court's Orders. The Court has now held two multi-hour hearings and reviewed over 2,500 pages of briefs and exhibits related to the violations of the Protective and Status Quo Orders and Lambert's other misconduct. See ECF Nos. 75; 76; 78; 81; 82; 84; 85; 90; 92; 93; 94; 95; 96; 97; 98; 99; 100; 101; 102; 103; 105; 106; 108; 110; 111; 112; 113; 114; 116; 117.[28]

Second, Lambert refuses to take any responsibility for her client repeatedly violating court orders. For example, the Court does not know the contents of a video Byrne posted to a social media platform on April 3, 2024 because Lambert directed Byrne to take down the video and did preserve a copy pursuant to the Status Quo Order and her obligations as his counsel. ECF No. 103

[28] This list is nowhere near exhaustive. For example, the Court does not include ECF No. 86 or ECF No. 87, which are prior motions that Lambert, on behalf of Byrne, erroneously filed and the Court rejected for failing to comply withs the Local and Federal Rules. Nor does it include other docket entries that the Court considered in the Lindell litigation. See e.g., ECF Nos. 145; 147; 149; 152; 153; 154; 155; 156 in Case No. 21-cv-445.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

at 47:2–48:10. Lambert stated that she only saw part of the video, so she could not answer questions about whether Byrne discussed Dominion's documents in the video. Id. She represented that, from the portions she did see, Byrne "was addressing that he wanted to comply with what the Court is ordering and that he believed that we hadn't done anything wrong." Id. It is difficult to fathom how, if that was the extent of Byrne's video, Lambert would feel the need to advise her client to remove it from public view and fail to keep a copy. When asked about other social media posts, Lambert remarked:

> [M]y client posts frequently about many, many topics. I do not have time, nor do I want to bill him for babysitting his social media.

Id. at 48:6–10. Indeed, the day after the May Hearing at which Byrne expressly affirmed that he understood and would comply with the requirements in the Protective and Status Quo Orders, he again violated these orders by sharing social media posts that included Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id. at 61:23–25 ("THE COURT: And are you prepared to comply with [the Orders], sir? MR. BYRNE: Yes."); ECF No. 105.

Byrne has made clear he has no intention of following this Court's orders and Lambert has made clear she does not feel responsible for ensuring he does so. On April 2, 2024, the day before he posted the video that he later deleted, Byrne said the following in another video on X:

> It's absolutely incorrect, Judge, to tell us we have to honor that agreement to keep these crimes secret. And I'm telling you here, and Judge, with all due respect, you decide what you want. We're giving you the honor this time of going through the steps that Stefanie evidently was supposed to do last time. But there's no chance in hell I'm not going to make this public.
>
> This is crazy, what we have. We got to go through all this Kibuki dance. But we are giving him the respect this time of allowing him the opportunity to unseal this. But I'm affirmatively saying, I don't care. I have it now. I have it on my machine. I'm not in the country. This stuff doesn't get unsealed, I'm just going to make it public. You can throw me in jail. Because we know we're right, and you're covering up if you don't let this – the whole nation hinges on this. You obviously have a duty, Your Honor, to unseal this Dominion case. And I'm going to do it > anyway if you make the wrong decision and you throw me in prison. And I mean that.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

ECF No. 102-3 at 11 (emphasis added). Byrne added:

> I'm going to make this stuff public. So I hope you make the right decision, but I'm not going to keep this quiet. I'm going to give you time to make the right decision. And if you make the wrong decision, I'm just going to do the right thing anyway and you throw me in jail. Fuck you . . . I shouldn't say fuck you to a judge . . . but I'm saying fuck you to the judicial system.

Id. (emphasis added). Lambert's refusal to ensure her client's compliance with the Court's Orders will no doubt continue to disrupt these proceedings.

Third, permitting Lambert to remain Byrne's counsel would both minimize the severe consequences of their actions and risk continued harm. Byrne—with Lambert's support—has made expressly clear that he plans to follow through on his promise to do whatever it takes, including risking jail time, to disseminate Dominion's Litigation Documents. Id.; ECF Nos. 105; 106. Byrne and Lambert's acts have not only fueled theories of widescale election fraud and crime—which Dominion describes as xenophobic for being purely based on Dominion's employment of Serbians—they have resulted in real harm and threats to Dominion employees. ECF Nos. 75; 82; 108; 113. Byrne and Lambert were on notice that their actions could result in harm, as that is part of Dominion's underlying suit against Byrne. It was abundantly foreseeable that similar statements to those at issue in the Complaint could lead to similar results.

Finally, the reasoning behind the D.C. Circuit's high bar for disqualification due to egregious misconduct would lead to an untenable result if Lambert were permitted to remain counsel here. The main justification for limiting disqualification to extreme circumstances (absent conflicts of interest) is our system's recognition of the importance of litigants being able to choose their counsel. This principle cannot mean that courts must protect such a choice that is based on the counsel's willingness to engage in such egregious misconduct or to facilitate their client's

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

similarly extreme and egregious misconduct. See ECF No. 75-3 ("My client insisted the evidence of criminal acts be provided to law enforcement.").[29]

Dominion has raised a plausible narrative that Lambert became involved in this litigation so that she could gain access to Dominion's documents and use them for improper purposes. ECF No. 75 at 3, 21–22. After thoroughly reviewing Lambert's conduct, responses, and representations to this Court, the Court does not disagree. It is undisputed that Lambert entered the case without giving notice for months, gained access to Dominion's documents, shared the documents with Leaf and used them in her own criminal case while hiding these actions from even McGlinchey, all before she entered her formal appearance. Lambert has failed at every opportunity to show the Court that she will act in accordance with its rules and requirements.

Lambert's conduct in the past few weeks continues to exacerbate this concern. At best, Lambert failed to inform the Court and Dominion that Case, another attorney, had access to Dominion's Litigation Documents and, at some point, became involved in this litigation. ECF No. 113. This failure is severe, as the Court clearly and repeatedly prohibited Lambert from sharing Dominion's Litigation Documents with anyone else, and at the very least required her to inform the Court if anyone else gained access to the documents. But even more troubling, Dominion has put forth another plausible narrative that Lambert and Case have orchestrated a series of new moves to disseminate Dominion's Litigation Documents and other discovery publicly in contravention of this Court's orders. ECF Nos. 108; 113. According to Dominion, Lambert has clearly enabled Case to access Dominion's Litigation Documents and Case seeks to use the documents outside this litigation. ECF Nos. 113 at 3–7; 113-4 at 3. But even more concerningly, [29] See also In re BellSouth Corp., 334 F.3d 941, 946–47 (11th Cir. 2003) (rejecting a mandamus petition to review a disqualification ruling as not immediately appealable when a court disqualified counsel for "act[ing] with the purpose of forcing [a judge] to disqualify" himself).

---

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Lambert and Case now seek to publicly release Poulos' deposition—which is not yet, as far as the Court is aware, publicly available. ECF Nos. 108 at 2–10; 113 at 3–7; 116 at 25. Dominion's well-founded concern about Lambert's continued involvement in this litigation was that she would find other ways to circumvent Court orders. It now appears that is exactly what she has done. Lambert has no response to this theory. ECF Nos. 111, 117.

Despite that no party, particularly Lambert, has made any meaningful argument in favor of lesser sanctions, the Court has considered whether there is an available sanction less severe than disqualification that could mitigate the harm Lambert has and continues to inflict on the judicial process. As set forth above, however, no order, rule, warning or prohibition has stopped her misconduct in this case. For example, after the period of time following the Status Quo Order, she could have complied strictly with both Orders and given the Court some faith that she would cease her misconduct. Instead, she continued to violate the Orders, put forth baseless arguments to excuse Byrne's continued flagrant misconduct, and create fire drills for Dominion and the Court by refusing to be forthright with the Court.

The bottom line is that, in her short time as counsel, Lambert has repeatedly shown that she has no regard for orders or her obligations as an attorney before this Court. See e.g., ECF Nos. 103 at 40:6–14 ("I have an obligation to report criminal acts that I reviewed in this discovery that are black and white and clear. I can see fraud of services in these documents. I can see conspiracy in these documents."); 106. Lambert's blatant disregard for this Court and her obligations is unending; her actions have already severely infected this proceeding. There is no doubt that they would continue to do so if she were permitted to remain counsel in this case.[30] This Court cannot [30] As noted, in the past two weeks Dominion sought leave to file two additional supplements detailing even more incidents of alleged misconduct by Lambert, highly concerning remarks from Byrne, and efforts to use Dominion's Litigation Documents in the Peters Criminal Case. ECF allow such intentional, dangerous, and relentless misconduct to continue. Lambert is immediately disqualified from serving as counsel in this case.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Dominion's Motion is GRANTED.

Date: August 13, 2024

SIGN HERE

MOXILA A. UPADHYAYA
UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Nos. 118; 122. The Court appreciates efforts to supplement as the Court previously requested, but it resolves this Motion without addressing these latest incidents because it appears that any other approach will only continue the cycle of alleged misconduct while this Motion is pending.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Amanda Carberry [amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/21/2024 4:02:39 PM
To: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; sargenta@michigan.gov; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Edward Medrano [edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi all,

Here are some times that Jonathan and Ed are available to meet for a 30 minute block:

Thursday 8/22: 1-2pm, 3-4pm ET
Tuesday 8/27: 11:30am-12pm, 1-1:30pm, 2:30-3pm ET
Wednesday 8/28: 2-2:30pm, 3:30-4pm ET
Thursday 8/29: after 2pm ET

Let me know if any of these times work for you.

Best,

Amanda Carberry (she/her) | Legal Assistant
States United Democracy Center
401-585-4702 | @statesunited
amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) <HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, August 21, 2024 at 11:41 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, sargenta@michigan.gov <sargenta@michigan.gov>, Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Edward Medrano <edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Wonderful! Thank you!

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, August 21, 2024 11:36:10 AM
To: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) <HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov>; sargenta@michigan.gov <sargenta@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Edward Medrano <edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Discussion re: Wk Prod MCL 15.243(1)(h)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good morning DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) We'd be happy to assist with that. Perhaps we could have a short call to discuss? My colleague Amanda will email some times that Ed Medrano and I are available to discuss. Thanks, and we look forward to working with you on this.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/29/2024 4:47:11 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: USPS draft common-interest agreement

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks very much, and talk to you soon.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Thursday, August 29, 2024 at 12:46 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: USPS draft common-interest agreement

Ok, I am going to send on to Linus.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, August 29, 2024 12:35 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: USPS draft common-interest agreement

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

I'm checking in about getting a signature on the common interest agreement. Once we receive a signed copy, we can set up a call with the other states.

Thanks,

Jonathan

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Thursday, August 8, 2024 at 1:42 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: USPS draft common-interest agreement

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Hi Heather,

Following up on our earlier conversations regarding the USPS, in collaboration with our clients in Nevada, we've put together a draft Common Interest Agreement for your consideration. Once we've got everyone on board, we can schedule a multi-state call to discuss further. Please let us know if you have any questions or concerns.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Amanda Carberry [amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/26/2024 2:11:46 PM
To: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) [HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov]; Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; sargenta@michigan.gov; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Edward Medrano [edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Discussion re DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi all,

Following up here re setting up a call to DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) Here are some updated times below for this week and next week:

Tuesday 8/27: 3:30-4pm ET
Wednesday 8/28: 3:30-4pm ET
Thursday 8/29: after 2pm ET

Tuesday 9/3: 2-2:30pm, 3:30-5pm ET
Wednesday 9/4: 2-3pm, 3:30-4:30pm ET
Thursday 9/5: 11am-12pm, 2:30-4pm ET

Let me know if any of these work for you – happy to find some more times if needed.

Best,

Amanda Carberry (she/her) | Legal Assistant
States United Democracy Center
401-585-4702 | @statesunited
amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Wednesday, August 21, 2024 at 12:03 PM
To: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) <HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov>, Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, sargenta@michigan.gov <sargenta@michigan.gov>, Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Edward Medrano <edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Discussion re DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Hi all,

Here are some times that Jonathan and Ed are available to meet for a 30 minute block:

Thursday 8/22: 1-2pm, 3-4pm ET

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Tuesday 8/27: 11:30am-12pm, 1-1:30pm, 2:30-3pm ET
Wednesday 8/28: 2-2:30pm, 3:30-4pm ET
Thursday 8/29: after 2pm ET

Let me know if any of these times work for you.

Best,

Amanda Carberry (she/her) | Legal Assistant
States United Democracy Center
401-585-4702 | @statesunited
amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org

NOTICE: This communication may contain privileged or other confidential information. If you have received it in error, please advise the sender by reply email and immediately delete the message and any attachments without copying or disclosing the contents. Thank you.

From: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) <HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov>
Date: Wednesday, August 21, 2024 at 11:41 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, sargenta@michigan.gov <sargenta@michigan.gov>, Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Edward Medrano <edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: Discussion re DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Wonderful! Thank you!

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Wednesday, August 21, 2024 11:36:10 AM
To: Hagaman-Clark, Danielle (AG) <HagamanClarkD@michigan.gov>; sargenta@michigan.gov <sargenta@michigan.gov>; Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Edward Medrano <edward@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Amanda Carberry <amanda@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Discussion re DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good morning. DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) We'd be happy to assist with that. Perhaps we could have a short call to discuss? My colleague Amanda will email some times that Ed Medrano and I are available to discuss. Thanks, and we look forward to working with you on this.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/21/2024 3:40:51 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: USPS draft common-interest agreement
Attachments: 08 06 24 DRAFT CIA for USPS.docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks, Heather. If you could send us an executed agreement (attached), we can move forward with scheduling the call. Thanks again.

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Date: Monday, August 19, 2024 at 3:37 PM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: USPS draft common-interest agreement

Hi Jonathan,

Linus has reviewed, see his comment below. I think we are good to go.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Thursday, August 8, 2024 1:43 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: USPS draft common-interest agreement

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

Following up on our earlier conversations regarding the USPS, in collaboration with our clients in Nevada, we've put together a draft Common Interest Agreement for your consideration. Once we've got everyone on board, we can schedule a multi-state call to discuss further. Please let us know if you have any questions or concerns.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/29/2024 4:37:07 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: Trump and Harris electors
Attachments: 08 06 24 DRAFT CIA for USPS[41].docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Resending the agreement for convenience.

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Monday, August 26, 2024 at 11:30 AM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Subject: Trump and Harris electors

Hi Heather,

When you have a chance, could you send me a list of the Harris and Trump electors?

Thanks,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 5/22/2023 7:39:03 PM
To: Hammoud, Fadwa (AG) [HammoudF1@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Banghart-Linn, Linus (AG) [Banghart-LinnL@michigan.gov]
CC: Christine Sun [christine@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Powell update-privileged Attachments: Notice of Appeal.pdf

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Good afternoon. As you may have seen already, the Texas Commission for Lawyer Discipline filed a notice of appeal in the Powell proceeding on Friday. The notice is attached.

As far as what comes next, briefing deadlines run from the date that the record is filed with the court of appeals. The chart below sets out the anticipated briefing schedule, assuming that the appellate record is filed on the deadline.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Best,

Jonathan

Date	Action or Deadline	Notes	Citation
06/22/23	Deadline for the appellate record to be filed with the Court of Appeals		Tex. R. App. Pro. 35.1(a)
07/22/23	The Commission's appellate brief deadline	Assumes appellate record filed on deadline Appellant brief due 30 days after later of reporter's record or clerk's record filing	Tex. R. App. Pro. 38.6(a)
08/21/23	Powell's appellate brief deadline	Assumes the Commission's brief filed on 07/22/23 Appellee's brief due 30 days after appellant's brief	Tex. R. App. Pro. 38.6(b)
09/10/23	The Commission's reply brief deadline	Assumes Powell's brief filed on 08/21/23 Appellant's reply brief due 20 days after appellee's brief	Tex. R. App. Pro. 38.6(c)

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

FILED
5/19/2023 3:41 PM
FELICIA PITRE
DISTRICT CLERK
DALLAS CO., TEXAS
Shelia Bradley DEPUTY

CAUSE NO. DC-22-02562

COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DISCIPLINE	§	IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF
V.	§	DALLAS COUNTY, TEXAS
SIDNEY POWELL (File Nos. 202006349, 202006347, 202006393, 202006599, 202100006, 202100652, 202101297, 202101300, 202101301, 202103520, 202106068, 202106284, 202106181)	§	116th JUDICIAL DISTRICT

NOTICE OF APPEAL

TO THE HONORABLE JUDGE OF SAID COURT:

COMES NOW the COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DISCIPLINE (the "Commission"), Petitioner, in this disciplinary action and files this Notice of Appeal pursuant to Rule 3.15 of the Texas Rules of Disciplinary Procedure and Rule 25 of the Texas Rules of Appellate Procedure. Petitioner gives notice that it desires to appeal to the Fifth Court of Appeals from this Court's following orders in Cause No. DC-22-02562, styled Commission for Lawyer Discipline v. Sidney Powell, in the 116th Judicial District Court, Dallas County, Texas:

1) Final Summary Judgment, issued on February 22, 2023, encompassing all rulings made by the Court therein, including its rulings: (i) denying the Commission's motion for continuance; (ii) sustaining or sustaining in part Powell's objections to the Commission's summary judgment evidence; (iii) granting Powell's no-evidence motion for summary judgment as to the Commission's claim under the Texas Disciplinary Rule of Professional Conduct; and (iv) granting Powell's partial motion for summary judgment as to the Commission's claim under Texas Disciplinary Rule of Professional Conduct.

2) Order Denying Motion for Reconsideration or New Trial, issued on May 4,

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

2023.

Petitioner files this Notice of Appeal with the 116th Judicial District Court.

Respectfully submitted,

Seana Willing
Chief Disciplinary Counsel

Kristin V. Brady
Assistant Disciplinary Counsel

Rachel Craig
Assistant Disciplinary Counsel

Office of the Chief Disciplinary Counsel
State Bar of Texas
The Princeton
14651 Dallas Parkway, Suite 925
Dallas, Texas 75254
Telephone: (972) 383-2900
Facsimile: (972) 383-2935
E-mail: Kristin.Brady@texasbar.com

/s/Kristin V. Brady
Kristin V. Brady
State Bar No. 24082719

/s/Rachel Craig
Rachel Craig
State Bar No. 24090049

ATTORNEYS FOR PETITIONER/APPELLANT

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that a true and correct copy of the foregoing Notice of Appeal has been served by electronic service through the electronic-filing manager in compliance with Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 21a on the 19th day of May 2023, to all counsel of record.

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

/s/Kristin Brady
Kristin Brady

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Automated Certificate of eService

This automated certificate of service was created by the efiling system. The filer served this document via email generated by the efiling system on the date and to the persons listed below. The rules governing certificates of service have not changed. Filers must still provide a certificate of service that complies with all applicable rules.

Cassidy Orozco on behalf of Kristin Brady Bar No. 24082719
cassidy.orozco@texasbar.com
Envelope ID: 75829875
Filing Code Description: Notice Of Appeal - CT. Of Appeals
Filing Description: PLAINTIFF-DESIGNATION REQUESTED AT TIME OF ACCEPTANCE W/IN3 DAYS
Status as of 5/21/2023 2:58 PM CST

Associated Case Party: COMMISSION FOR LAWYER DSICIPLINE

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
Kristin Brady	24082719	kristin.brady@texasbar.com	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT
Robert H.Holmes		rhholmes@swbell.net	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT
Rachel Craig		rachel.craig@texasbar.com	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT
Todd Hill		thill@collincountytx.gov	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT

Case Contacts

Name	BarNumber	Email	TimestampSubmitted	Status
S. Michael McColloch	13431950	smm@mccolloch-law.com	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT
Karen Cook	12696860	karen@karencooklaw.com	5/19/2023 3:41:22 PM	SENT

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/29/2024 4:35:23 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
CC: Kelsey Stimple [Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Dax Goldstein [dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: USPS draft common-interest agreement
Attachments: 08 06 24 DRAFT CIA for USPS[8].docx

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Hi Heather,

I'm checking in about getting a signature on the common interest agreement. Once we receive a signed copy, we can set up a call with the other states.

Thanks,

Jonathan

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Date: Thursday, August 8, 2024 at 1:42 PM
To: Heather Meingast <meingasth@michigan.gov>
Cc: Kelsey Stimple <Kelsey@statesuniteddemocracy.org>, Dax Goldstein <dax@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: USPS draft common-interest agreement

Hi Heather,

Following up on our earlier conversations regarding the USPS, in collaboration with our clients in Nevada, we've put together a draft Common Interest Agreement for your consideration. Once we've got everyone on board, we can schedule a multi-state call to discuss further. Please let us know if you have any questions or concerns.

Best,

Jonathan

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/26/2024 1:56:12 PM
To: Osher, Daniel [OsherD@michigan.gov]; Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]
Subject: RNC lawsuit against Detroit

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

You've probably seen this already, but the RNC, state GOP, and several individuals in the local party sued Detroit in Wayne County for not having enough Republican election inspectors. Complaint is here.

Jonathan L. Williams | Senior Counsel
States United Democracy Center
(704) 578-4725 | @statesunited
jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

From: Jonathan Williams [jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Sent: 8/30/2024 2:16:19 PM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) [MeingastH@michigan.gov]; Zack Goldberg [zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org]; Robert Cotter [Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org]
Subject: Re: United Sovereign Citizens et al v Benson, et al - Michigan filing

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

https://www.democracydocket.com/news-alerts/federal-court-dismisses-right-wing-lawsuit-attempting-to-upend-maryland-election-administration/

This links the decision.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, August 30, 2024 10:06:05 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: RE: United Sovereign Citizens et al v Benson, et al - Michigan filing

Did we talk that Maryland had a decision already? I cannot locate that email.

Heather

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

From: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Sent: Friday, August 30, 2024 10:05 AM
To: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: Re: United Sovereign Citizens et al v Benson, et al - Michigan filing

CAUTION: This is an External email. Please send suspicious emails to abuse@michigan.gov

Thanks. They just filed in NC, too.

Get Outlook for iOS

From: Meingast, Heather (AG) <MeingastH@michigan.gov>
Sent: Friday, August 30, 2024 9:13:58 AM
To: Jonathan Williams <jonathan@statesuniteddemocracy.org>; Zack Goldberg <zack@statesuniteddemocracy.org>;

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

Robert Cotter <Robert@statesuniteddemocracy.org>
Subject: United Sovereign Citizens et al v Benson, et al - Michigan filing

It appears out turn has arrived…

Heather S. Meingast, Division Chief
Civil Rights & Elections Division
Michigan Department of Attorney General
meingasth@michigan.gov
(517) 335-7659 (office)

Obtained by Judicial Watch via Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN
DEPARTMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

P.O. BOX 30754
LANSING, MICHIGAN 48909

DANA NESSEL
ATTORNEY GENERAL

August 14, 2025

Robert J. Muise
The Muise Law Group, PLLC
P.O. Box 131098
Ann Arbor, MI 48113

Sent by email
rmuise@muiselawgroup.com

Dear Mr. Muise,

The Department of Attorney General (Department) is responding to your August 11, 2025 letter (copy attached) that concerns the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request submitted by your client, Mr. Mark Spencer of Judicial Watch, Inc. The Department has also attached its August 14, 2025 written notice addressed to Mr. Spencer, but emailed only to your law office. The written notice is accompanied by an email that provides the link to access the records.

The Department also confirms the telephone discussion with our office that the balance of the records will be provided to your office under a rolling production to be completed on or before September 5, 2025. If you have any questions, please contact the undersigned.

Sincerely,

Christy Wendling-Richards

Christy Wendling-Richards
FOIA Coordinator
Department of Attorney General
517-335-7573

Encs.