Section Three speaks in terms of "insurrection" and "rebellion"—and these terms were not pulled out of thin air. Congress modeled Section Three partly on the original Constitution's Treason Clause, and partly on the Second Confiscation Act (enacted in 1862). The Confiscation Act punished anyone who "shall hereafter incite, set on foot, assist, or engage in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States … or give aid or comfort thereto." 12 Stat. 589, 627 (1862); see 18 USC § 2383. Section Three similarly covers "insurrection or rebellion." US Const, am XIV, § 3. But unlike the Confiscation Act, Congress excluded from Section Three any penalty for inciting, assisting, or giving aid to insurrection. Section Three only penalizes those who "engaged" in it. Id.

Congress discussed the meaning of "insurrection" and "rebellion" at length in debates. Congress confirmed that insurrection and rebellion describe two types of treason—not lesser crimes. See 37 Cong. Globe 2d Session, 2173, 2189, 2190-91, 2164-2167 (1862). After ratification, Congress reinforced these same conclusions when debating enforcement of Section Three. 41 Cong Globe 2d Session, 5445-46 (1870). The Congress that had just drafted Section Three believed that someone committed "insurrection" or "rebellion" if he led uniformed troops in battle against the United States, but not if he or she merely voted to support secession with violent force, recruited for the Confederacy, provided wartime aid, or held offices in the rebel government. The drafters chose words that encompassed at least the main actors in that act of treason, but no more. They were not trying to legislate with an eye toward political riots. In the aftermath of the Civil War, these were imminently important distinctions.

One year after the Confiscation Act became law, Chief Justice Chase held that the Act prohibits only conduct that "amount[s] to treason within the meaning of the Constitution," not any lesser offense. United States v Greathouse, 26 F Cas 18, 21 (CCND Cal 1863). Not just any form of treason would do: the Act only covered treason that "consist[ed] in engaging in or assisting a rebellion or insurrection." Id. Writing in the same case, a second judge confirmed and clarified that, for these purposes, "engaging in a rebellion and giving it aid and comfort[] amounts to a levying of war," and that insurrection and treason involve "different penalt[ies]" but are "substantially the same." Id. at 25.

Dictionaries of the time confirm this understanding. John Bouvier's 1868 legal dictionary defined "insurrection" as a "rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government," and "rebellion" as "taking up arms traitorously against the government." A Law Dictionary, Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America, and of the Several States of the American Union (Philadelphia, GW Childs, 12th ed, rev and enl 1868).

So "insurrection," as understood at the time of the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, meant the taking up of arms and waging war upon the United States. At the time of Section Three's enactment, the United States had undergone a horrific civil war in which over 600,000 combatants died, and the very survival of the nation was in doubt. As shown by the omission of the word "incitement" in Section Three, Congress did not intend that provision to encompass those who merely encouraged an insurrection, but instead limited its breadth to those who actively participated in one.

Plaintiffs' entire case is based upon President Trump's alleged nexus to an "insurrection," but Plaintiff is short on any facts to show that the January 6th riots constituted one. See Greathouse, 26 F Cas at 21 and 25. Not one of the 1,000+ people charged in connection with the riot has so far even been charged—much less convicted—under 18 USC § 2383. See United States v. Griffith, 2023 WL 2043223, *6 n. 5 (D DC, Feb 16, 2023) (finding that "no defendant has been charged with [18 USC § 2383]); Alan Feuer, More Than 1,000 People Have Been Charged in Connection with the Jan. 6 Attack, New York Times (Aug 1, 2023).

Further, the Senate found President Trump not guilty of impeachment charges of insurrection brought by the 117th Congress. See Impeaching Donald John Trump, President of the United States, for high crimes and misdemeanors, H 24, 117th Cong (2021).[17] No court in the United States has found President Trump guilty under 18 USC § 2383. Not a single prosecutor has even filed an indictment against President Trump for an alleged rebellion or insurrection.

B. Mere words do not constitute "engaging" in insurrection.

Even so, Plaintiffs fail to establish that President Trump "engaged" in insurrection. Plaintiffs' core allegations fall well short. As explained above, the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment made a deliberate choice that Section Three should cover only actual "engage[ment] in" insurrection or rebellion (or assisting a foreign power), not advocating rebellion or insurrection. Mere words, unaccompanied by actions or legal effect, cannot meet that standard. That is especially the case here because President Trump's words and speeches cannot qualify as incitement under established First Amendment principles. See Brandenburg v Ohio, 395 US 444 (1969).

The same representatives who voted for the Fourteenth Amendment understood that, under its terms, even strident and explicit antebellum advocacy for a future rebellion was not "engaging in insurrection" or providing "aid or comfort to the enem[y]." In 1870—just two years after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified—Congress considered whether Section Three disqualified a Representative-elect from Kentucky when, before the Civil War began, he had voted in the Kentucky legislature in favor of a resolution to "resist [any] invasion of the soil of the South at all hazards." 41 Cong Globe, 2d Session, 5443 (1870). The House found that this was not disqualifying. Id. at 5447. Similarly, in 1870 the House also considered the qualifications of a Representative-elect from Virginia who, before the Civil War, had voted in the Virginia House of Delegates for a resolution that Virginia should "unite" with "the slaveholding states" if "efforts to reconcile" with the North should fail, and stated in debate that Virginia should "if necessary, fight," but who after Virginia's actual secession "had been an outspoken Union man." Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, 477 (1907). The House found that this did not disqualify him under Section Three. Id. at 477-78. By contrast, the House did disqualify a candidate who "had acted as colonel in the rebel army" and "as governor of the rebel State of North Carolina." Id. at 481, 486. It is also important to note that it was Congress who made all of these determinations, not a state court. Plaintiffs' allegations fall well-short of how Congress has understood and applied Section Three in practice.

C. Not only does "inciting" fall well short of "engaging," but Plaintiffs allegations also fall short of "inciting."

"[T]he free discussion of governmental affairs of course includes discussions of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated, and all such matters relating to political processes." Mills v Alabama, 384 US 214, 218-19 (1966). "Indeed, the First Amendment 'has its fullest and most urgent application' to speech uttered during a campaign for political office." Eu v San Francisco City Democratic Cent Comm, 489 US 214, 223 (1989). There is no exception to this rule for allegedly disloyal speech. The Supreme Court considered the Georgia legislature's refusal to seat an elected candidate, on the ground that his strident criticisms of the Vietnam War "gave aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States" and were inconsistent with an oath to support the Constitution. Bond v Floyd, 385 US 116, 118-23 (1966). The Court held that the candidate's speech was protected by the First Amendment and could not be grounds for disqualification. Id. at 133-37.

Thus, "dissenting political speech" remains "within the First Amendment's core," even where it is alleged to be "mere advocacy of illegal acts" or "advocacy of force or lawbreaking." Counterman v Colorado, 143 S Ct 2106, 2115, 2118 (2023). The Constitution values and protects such speech unless it qualifies as "advocacy of the use of force or law violation" that "is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." Brandenburg, 395 US at 447.

Under the Brandenburg test, Trump's comments did not come close to "incitement," let alone "engagement" in an insurrection. As the Sixth Circuit recognized in analyzing President Trump's public speech, "the fact that audience members reacted by using force does not transform Trump's protected speech into unprotected speech. Thus, where "Trump's speech . . . did not include a single word encouraging violence . . . the fact that audience members reacted by using force does not transform" it into incitement. Nwanguma v Trump, 903 F3d 604, 610 (6th Cir 2018). And as a D.C. Circuit judge remarked at argument last year, "you just print out the speech . . . and read the words . . . it doesn't look like it would satisfy the [Brandenburg] standard." Tr of Argument at 64:5-7 (Katsas, J.), Blassingame v Trump, No 22-5069 (DC Cir, Dec 7, 2022). After all, the Supreme Court, for instance, has concluded that a call to "take the f[]ing streets later" does not meet the standard. Hess v Indiana, 414 US 105, 107 (1973); accord Nwanguma, 903 F3d at 611-12 (responding to a political protestor by repeatedly telling a crowd to "get 'em out of here" but "don't hurt 'em" was not incitement).

President Trump's explicit instructions called for protesting "peacefully and patriotically,"[18] to "support our Capitol Police and law enforcement,"[19] to "[s]tay peaceful,"[20] and to "remain peaceful."[21] President Trump's calls for peace and patriotism notwithstanding, the courts have made clear that angry rhetoric falls far short of an implicit call for lawbreaking. None of President Trump's speeches that took place before January 6 can possibly meet Brandenberg's imminence requirement. It is utterly impossible to regard statements like "stand back and standby" as advocacy of immediate illegal conduct. [Complaint at ¶ 41.] "[A] state cannot constitutionally sanction advocacy of illegal action at some indefinite future time." McCoy v Stewart, 282 F3d 626, 631 (9th Cir 2002) (cleaned up).

Finally, and again as explained above, none of Plaintiffs' allegations plausibly suggest that President Trump intended any acts of violence. Both his language and his actions show the contrary. He intended to inspire a protest to contest an election outcome. That is not insurrectionary or unlawful in any way. In fact, although the President expressly called for a walk down Pennsylvania Avenue "after" his speech, the Complaint affirmatively alleges that the attack on the Capitol began before the speech ended—indeed, that television broadcasts had cut away from the President's speech to cover the violence. (Complaint at ¶¶ 169, 205.)

Nor do President Trump's comments during a debate months before January 6. On September 29, 2020, an hour into President Trump's debate with then-candidate Biden, the following exchange occurred:

> [Moderator Chris] WALLACE [to President Trump]: You have repeatedly criticized the Vice-President for not specifically calling out Antifa and other left-wing extremist groups. But are you willing, to-night, to condemn white supremacists and militia groups and to say that they need to stand down and not add to the violence in a number of these cities as we saw in Kenosha, and as we've seen in Port-land.
> TRUMP: Sure, I'm willing to do that.
> WALLACE: Are you prepared specifically to do it. Well go ahead, sir.
> TRUMP: I would say almost everything I see is from the left-wing not from the right wing.
> WALLACE: So what are you, what are you saying?
> TRUMP: I'm willing to do anything. I want to see peace.
> WALLACE: Well, do it, sir.
> [Vice President] BIDEN: Say it. Do it. Say it.
> TRUMP: You want to call them? What do you want to call them? Give me a name, give me a name, go ahead who would you like me to condemn.
> WALLACE: White supremacists and racists.
> BIDEN: Proud Boys.
> WALLACE: White supremacists and white militias.
> BIDEN: Proud Boys.

As this context reveals, the "stand back and stand by" remark unambiguously referred to then-recent unrest in cities like Kenosha, Wisconsin and Portland, Oregon. Immediately before that remark, President Trump expressly agreed that his supporters "should not add to the violence in . . . these cities," and emphasized that he would "do anything" in order "to see peace." And immediately after the remark, President Trump reiterated that the violence was a "problem." His "stand back" statement emphasized that his supporters were not the ones who should "do something" about the problem. This cannot plausibly be interpreted as an endorsement of those groups, let alone of their future actions in response to an election that had not yet happened.

Were that not enough, other facts omitted by Plaintiffs conclusively demonstrate that President Trump's "stand back and stand by" remark was condemning and not supporting illegal activity. The very next day, September 30, President Trump emphasized to a reporter that although he was not familiar with the Proud Boys, "they have to stand down and let law enforcement do their work . . . . [W]hoever they are, they have to stand down. Let law enforcement do their work."[23] When asked again, he reiterated, "Look, law enforcement will do their work. They're gonna stand down. They have to stand down. Everybody. . . . Whatever group you're talking about."[24]

Plaintiffs' attempt to cast an off-the-cuff remark made in the second-half of a two-hour debate well before the General Election and the events of January 6th as a rallying cry is beyond absurd. As the full context clearly shows, the alleged recipient of the remarks was selected not by the then-Commander-in-Chief, but rather by candidate-Biden and moderator Chris Wallace. And the content itself was chosen not by the President, but—again—by Biden and Wallace.

D. "Aid or comfort to the Enem[y]" under Section Three requires assistance to a foreign power.

Section Three does not incorporate the Confiscation Act's criminalization of giving "aid or comfort" to a "rebellion or insurrection." See supra at 11-12. Instead, Section Three harkens back to the Treason Clause, which defines treason as "adhering to [the United States'] Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort." US Const, Art III, § 3, cl.1.

The "enemies" prong of the Treason Clause almost exactly replicated a British statute defining treason. See 4 Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 82 (1769). But "enemies" referred only to "the subjects of foreign powers with whom we are at open war," not to "fellow subjects." Id. at 82-83. Blackstone was emphatic that "an enemy" was "always the subject of some foreign prince, and one who owes no allegiance to the crown of England." Id.

This was also the American view. Four years after the Constitution was ratified, Justice Wilson explained that "enemies" are "the citizens or subjects of foreign princes or states, with whom the United States are at open war." 2 Collected Works of James Wilson 1355 (1791). The 1910 version of Black's Law Dictionary agrees, defining "enemy" as "either the nation which is at war with another, or a citizen or subject of such nation." Enemy, Black's Law Dictionary (2d. Ed. 1910). At the outset of the Civil War, the Supreme Court recognized that the Confederate states should be "treated as enemies," under a similar definition of that word, because of their "claim[] to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign state," and because the Confederacy claimed to be a de facto a foreign power that had "made war on" the United States. The Prize Cases, 67 US 635, 673-74 (1862). Section Three, enacted a few years later in response to the Civil War, referred to support for the Confederacy as "aid and comfort to . . . enemies," and treated "enemies" as foreign powers in a state of war with the United States.

On top of that, "aid and comfort to the enem[y]" involves only assisting a foreign government (or its citizens or subjects) in making war against the United States. Plaintiffs do not, and cannot, allege that the January 6 attack involved any foreign power, or that the attackers constituted any sort of de facto foreign government.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump, Inc., respectfully requests that Plaintiffs' Complaint be dismissed with prejudice.

Zachary Kramer
Attorney for Proposed-Intervenor,
Donald J. Trump

BRIEF IN SUPPORT

A. Jurisdiction.

While the Court of Claims is a Court of limited jurisdiction pursuant to MCL 600.6419, Donald J. Trump ("President Trump") must be permitted to intervene in this matter to protect his interests and constitutional rights as outlined below and in the companion Motion for Summary Disposition (which is fully incorporated herein). Permitting this matter to proceed without allowing President Trump to be a party could deprive him of the typical rights of a party, such as the ability to file motions or an appeal.

Donald J. Trump's name is mentioned 354 times in the complaint including three times in the prayer for relief. This entire matter is about President Trump, his alleged statements, and his alleged political activities. To adjudicate the effect of Donald J. Trump's speech and his ability to be on the ballot without President Trump being a party would violate his constitutional rights, including, but not limited to, his First Amendment free speech rights[1] and his Due Process rights. US Const, am I and XIV. These constitutional interests would override any statutory limitations.

The Michigan Supreme Court held that "due process requires-at a minimum-that a person whose interests might be affected by government action be given notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard before the government acts. Bonner v City of Brighton, 495 Mich 209, 235; 848 NW2d 380 (2014). "Additional[] requirements may be necessary depending on three considerations: the private interest that will be affected, the risk of erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and the probable value of additional or substitute procedural safeguards." Id.

In order to preserve President Trump's rights and objections for a possible appeal or federal court action, he is requesting to intervene in this matter.

B. President Trump Is Entitled to Intervene as of Right.

The Prospective Intervening Party has a right to intervene in this action pursuant to MCR 2.209(A)(3), which permits a party's right to timely intervene as follows:

> "when the applicant claims an interest relating to the … transaction which is the subject of the action and is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties."

Put simply, MCR 2.209(A)(3) "allows an intervention of right in cases in which the intervenor's interests are not adequately represented by the parties." Estes v Titus, 481 Mich 573, 583; 751 NW2d 493 (2008). "[A] person may intervene by right in an action on timely application when that person asserts an interest in the subject of the action 'and is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.'" Kuhlgert v Mich State Univ, 328 Mich App 357, 378; 937 NW2d 716 (2019). The "rule should be liberally construed to allow intervention when the applicant's interest otherwise may be inadequately represented." Auto-Owners Ins Co v Keizer-Morris, Inc, 284 Mich App 610, 612 (2009) (citing Precision Pipe & Supply Inc v Meram Constr Inc, 195 Mich App 153, 156 (1992)).

1. President Trump's motion to intervene is timely.

A motion is timely if it is "asserted within a reasonable time," an inherently contextual standard. D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188 (1976); see also Cameron v EMW Women's Surgical Ctr, PSC, 142 S Ct 1002, 1012 (2022) (timeliness under federal intervention rules "is to be determined from all the circumstances").[2] Although Michigan courts have not enumerated the specific factors that should be analyzed in determining timeliness, courts have generally found that "a right to intervene should be asserted within a reasonable time." D'Agostini, 396 Mich at 188. First, this motion is timely. Plaintiffs sued on September 29, 2023 and this motion is being filed just seventeen (17) days later, before any issues have been decided or any procedural Rubicons have been crossed. There has been very little activity in the case, and Trump's intervention will not prejudice any party.

President Trump's motion to intervene in this case is timely. This motion is being made in a matter of days since becoming aware of this litigation. Therefore, President Trump's motion is timely and will not impact or delay future proceedings.

2. President Trump has a sufficient interest affected by the disposition of this case.

[2] "Because of the similarity of the state and Federal provisions," the Michigan Supreme Court "deem[s] it proper to look to the Federal courts for guidance" in applying the intervention rules. D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188 (1976).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

President Trump has a sufficient interest in this case, and "the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede [his] ability to protect [his] interest." Precision Pipe & Supply, 195 Mich App at 156 quoting MCR 2.209(A)(3).

President Trump is the frontrunner for the Republican nomination and has an overwhelming interest in defending constitutional challenges to his eligibility to appear on election ballots. And no party has a greater interest in ensuring Secretary Benson places his name on the ballots in Michigan than President Trump. Donald J. Trump has also exercised his First Amendment rights to freedom of association and speech and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process rights under the United States Constitution to campaign for the right to be on the primary and general election ballots in 2024. He has a strong interest in securing his access to those ballots and in clarifying the state of the law on Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment and whether it is constitutional for a Secretary of State to interpret the same and cause for a candidate to remain off the election ballots.

At the Constitutional Convention of 1787, James Madison observed that "[t]he qualifications of electors and elected were fundamental articles in a Republican Govt, and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the Legislature could regulate those of either, it can by degrees subvert the Constitution. A Republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected, as the number authorized to elect."[3]

States have "a less important interest in regulating Presidential elections than statewide or local elections, because the outcome of the former will be largely determined by voters beyond the State's boundaries." Anderson v Celebrezze, 460 US 780, 795 (1983). Plaintiff's request that this Court declare that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States and enjoin the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot in Michigan. Plaintiff's request will have an effect on voters beyond Michigan's boundaries. Plaintiff's request is not targeted at "protect[ing] the integrity and reliability of the electoral process itself." Id. at 788, n 9. It does not ensure that "some sort of order, rather than chaos" accompanies the election. Cook v Gralike, 531 US 510, 524 (2001). And it does not require some minimum level of support before a presidential candidate can be put on the ballot. Anderson, 460 US at 788, n 9. Plaintiffs' requested relief is therefore improper, and President Trump has a sufficient interest in this matter to intervene.

3. President Trump's interests are not represented by any existing party.

There is no other party in this matter who can adequately represent Donald J. Trump's interests because the sole defendant is a state official who does not share his personal interest in ensuring he gains lawful access to the primary and general election ballots in 2024. For the sake of completeness, none of the Plaintiffs will adequately represent President Trump's interests. "The rule for intervention should be liberally construed to allow intervention where the applicant's interests may be inadequately represented." Hill v LF Transp, Inc, 277 Mich App 500, 508; 746 NW2d 118 (2008) (emphasis added and citations omitted).

A party seeking intervention isn't required to definitively prove that its interests are inadequately represented. Instead, "the concern of inadequate representation of interests need only exist." Vestevich v W Bloomfield Twp, 245 Mich App 759, 761-762; 630 NW2d 646 (2001). "[T]here need be no positive showing that the existing representation is in fact inadequate. All that is required is that the representation by existing parties may be inadequate." Mullinix v City of Pontiac, 16 Mich App 110, 115; 167 NW2d 856 (1969); Kamp v Cannon Twp, 115 Mich App 726, 731-732; 321 NW2d 690 (1982) (citations omitted) ("The proposed intervenors satisfied the second requirement by establishing that their representation is or may be inadequate.") The possibly-inadequate-representation rule "is satisfied if the applicant shows that representation of his interest 'may be' inadequate; and the burden of making that showing should be treated as minimal." D'Agostini v City of Roseville, 396 Mich 185, 188-189; 240 NW2d 252 (1976), quoting Trbovich v United Mine Workers of Am, 404 US 528, 538 n 10; 92 S Ct 603; 30 L Ed 2d 686 (1972).

The interests of the Secretary of State are clearly different from that of President Trump. Here, President Trump's interests are in the maintenance of his own rights and that of the American people who wish to see him on the ballot for the upcoming elections. In the wake of political persecution through various prosecutions by multiple state actors, Secretary Benson, an active member of the opposing major political party, has publicly weighed in with her views on Trump and her fear of a repeat of the 2020 election. In fact, her many public comments demonstrate her extreme and incurable bias against President Trump. For instance,

- During an interview with Cynthia McFadden of NBC News, Jocelyn Benson said, "Even the president himself had called on me to be arrested and tried for treason, potentially executed."[4]

- During an interview with Erik Meers, founder of uPolitics, Jocelyn Benson said:

> "There's kind of a good side and a bad side to the impact of having a former president spread lies about not just our election administration and procedures, but those who administer them like myself. […] All of that said, of course, his attacks and those of his most ardent followers, has created this strain on our work. Whether it's actual violence, or threats of violence, or harassment and requests for duplicative meaningless information, a lot of the misinformation has metastasized […] and until there's real accountability for those who are spreading these lies, from the former president on down, we're going to continue to see these tactics…"[5]

- In response to Oliver Darcy's January 25, 2023 article, Meta says it wont's punish Trump for attacking the 2020 election results. But the 2024 vote is a different story, Jocelyn Benson tweeted, "@Meta: Trump's baseless, false attacks on the 2020 election still generate harassment & violent threats aimed at election officials across the country, on both sides of the aisle. Your decision will lead to more harm aimed at us & our families."[6]

- In a tweet referring to Donald J. Trump, Jocelyn Benson said, "Pledging to pardon individuals convicted of using violence, force and threats to overturn the results of a legitimate presidential election shows you have no respect for the rule of law or the will of the people."[7]

- In linking to a Washington Post article about Trump and his advisors titled Justice Dept. asking about 2020 fraud claims as well as fake electors, Jocelyn Benson tweeted, "I know for years how many have rightfully demanded accountability for those who abused and misused the legal system to overturn a legitimate presidential election. And while the moral arc of the universe may be long … it bends towards justice."[8]

- During an interview with MSNBC's Nicolle Wallace, Jocelyn Benson had this exchange:

> WALLACE: "Certainly the evidence developed by the Select Committee leaves nothing to the imagination—this was a Trump-directed coup […] The legal architecture was fleshed out by John Eastman. And they knew it was both illegal and it violated the Electoral Count Act and unconstitutional [...] Do you, from where you're sitting, have any doubt that the evidence, if Jack Smith wishes to pursue it, will take this plot all the way to Trump's doorstep?"
> BENSON: "I think the evidence certainly shows a direct line between the former president, the phone calls, the pressure that he himself we know exerted on everyone from lawmakers in the State of Michigan, to local county certification boards. So, the line is there. Of course, the public speeches that you just showed earlier as well demonstrate that. So, I think his involvement is clear, and every drop of new evidence that emerges in the public arena only underscores that."[9]

- While interviewed by Victor Shi and Jill Wine-Banks on the "iGen Politics" podcast, Jocelyn Benson had the following exchange:

> SHI: "We come here […] less than a week after your State's Attorney General, Dana Wessel, issue indictments against 16 fake electors from 2020. Tell us more about what they're charged with and just how significant this is for our accountability nationwide."
> BENSON: "Yeah it's really a big deal […] These felony charges that were filed against 16 individuals who allegedly, knowingly sought to defraud the government, the state and federal government, through submitting fake electoral vote certificates, with the goal of undoing the actual legitimate elector certificates, and having their fake elector certificates submitted to Congress on, what was January 6th, 2021. So, it was part of really, a national coordinated effort, to undo the will of the people simply because they, and others in their political party, as well as the former president were unhappy with the outcome of the election. So, as we now begin to enter the 2024 cycle it's really important that we see accountability and justice for those who were part of this nationally coordinated effort and this actionable plan to subvert the will of the people in the last presidential election because if we don't see these types of charges brought and indictments and accountability and in the legal process then we have to prepare especially those of us as election administrators for a repeat of these actions again."
>
> WINE-BANKS: "How high up do you think the fraud goes? […] Do you know of any evidence that would link it […] directly to […] the former president?"
> BENSON: "Yeah, I mean there have been some publicly disclosed pieces of evidence, voicemails from the Trump campaign to state officials and the like, we know there were meetings, we know Rudy Giuliani himself was in the state of Michigan a few days before the electors officially met, and testified before a sham legislative hearing about-with false claims of election fraud […] I have a lot of confidence in the investigators in our state to get to the bottom of, and make all the connections, and I'm grateful that folks at the federal level are looking at this too because they could make those similar connections. But I do think to me, it's important to seek > full accountability, but not just put this on the shoulders of one person, the former president. We know certainly, he was a central piece to a lot of different things, and hence the indictments that you see pre and post this moment, percolating. But that said, there were a number of other it would seem co-conspirators at every level, and I think when we talk about accountability, we have to see full accountability for everyone who was involved, in this really unprecedented, un-American scheme to overturn a presidential election, because a small group of people, including the former president, were unhappy with the results."

> WINE-BANKS: "The big lie continues repeatedly having not just Trump but all of his acolytes saying the election was stolen […] It also seems to me that there was a targeted effort in Michigan in certain counties and that those counties were counties with heavy minority populations. Is that a correct interpretation of where the targeting was?"
> BENSON: "Yeah. Sure […] It was the urban center where communities of color were concentrated where you saw initially the attempts to call out fraud, you know, falsely were targeted. Again, when you don't have any evidence of fraud then […] go towards the minority communities and start using racism to sow seeds of doubt. Which was clearly the strategy and then they began picking apart other things."[10]

- In an X (formerly Twitter) post after Trump and his allies were indicted for the events on January 6, 2020, Jocelyn Benson said, "Feeling vindicated. Grateful for the rule of law and those who enforce it." [11]

- In an X post on August 3, 2023, Jocelyn Benson said, "Trump allegedly led a national scheme to overturn the results of a legitimate presidential election. But his plot would only succeed with willing co-conspirators in the states. That's why the state charges against those in Michigan who signed fake electoral votes are so critical."[12]

- Again, on August, 3, 2023, Jocelyn Benson went on X to post, "If 'I'm being arrested for you' is Trump-speak for 'I'm being arrested for trying to nullify millions of your votes' then yeah, I guess that tracks."[13]

It is clear there is a real possibility Secretary Benson will undermine President Trump's interests in this action. Her inherent views and posture, and desire to avoid a feared repeat of the inconveniences she had to endure because of challenges made in the 2020 election will certainly keep her from advocating for President Trump's interests, namely that he appear on the ballots. Her mind is already made up.

Based on the above, President Trump more than satisfies this "minimal" burden and he "certainly has an interest in defending" against lawsuits seeking to stop him from appearing on the primary and general election ballots in Michigan. Therefore, President Trump should not be forced to trust and hope that Defendant will adequately represent his interests.

C. President Trump Also Meets the Standard for Permissive Intervention.

In addition to being entitled to intervene as of right, President Trump also meets the standard for permissive intervention. Such intervention is appropriate when: (1) the application is timely; (2) the applicant's claim or defense has a common question of law or fact with the main action; and (3) there will be no prejudice or delay to the original parties. See Dean v Dep't of Corrections, 208 Mich App 144, 150 (1994) citing MCR 2.209(B). These elements have been satisfied.

First, President Trump's motion is timely as explained above. Second, President Trump's claims and defenses surround the common question of law related to his First Amendment rights to freedom of association and speech and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process rights to campaign to be on the Michigan primary and general election ballots in 2024—the very rights being threatened by the relief sought by Plaintiffs. Finally, President Trump's intervention will not result in any prejudice or delay. President Trump moved to intervene promptly after Plaintiffs filed their complaint. As with intervention as of right, President Trump readily meets the requirements for permissive intervention.

CONCLUSION

Donald J. Trump's name is mentioned 354 times in Plaintiffs' complaint and three of those times in Plaintiffs' prayer for relief. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs failed to name him as a Defendant or as an interested party to the litigation. If this Court were to grant Plaintiffs' relief, it would impede President Trump's ability to protect his interest. For all the reasons stated above, Proposed-Intervenor, Donald J. Trump, respectfully requests that his Motion to Intervene be granted.

OPINION AND ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit challenging the certification of Michigan's 2020 presidential election results.[1] Along with their complaint, Plaintiffs filed a motion for a temporary restraining order. (ECF No. 2.) Plaintiffs ask the Court to restrain Defendant Gretchen Whitmer and Jocelyn Benson, and those acting in concert with them, from destroying any records relating to the 2020 presidential election. Upon careful review of the motion for emergency relief, the Court will deny the request for a temporary restraining order.

I.

Decisions regarding a temporary restraining order are within the discretion of a district court. See Ohio Republican Party v. Brunner, 543 F.3d 357, 361 (6th Cir. 2008). Under Rule 65, a court may issue a temporary restraining order, without notice to the adverse [1] Plaintiffs filed their complaint on Friday, September 2, 2022, at 6:47 p.m. Plaintiffs filed a second complaint at 7:10 p.m. An amended complaint supersedes the original complaint, which becomes a nullity. See Hayward v. Cleveland Clinic Found., 759 F.3d 601, 617 (6th Cir. 2014) (citing 6 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1476 (3d ed. 2010)); Drake v. City of Detroit, 266 F. party, only if two conditions are met. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1). First, the moving party must establish specific facts through an affidavit or a verified complaint or affidavit showing that an immediate and irreparable injury will result to the moving party before the adverse party can be heard in opposition to the motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(A). Second, the counsel for the moving party must certify in writing any efforts made to give notice and the reasons why notice should not be required. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(1)(B). In addition, the court must consider each of four factors: (1) whether the moving party demonstrates a strong likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether the moving party would suffer irreparable injury without the order; (3) whether the order would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by the order. Ohio Republican Party, 543 F.3d at 361 (citation omitted). The four factors are not prerequisites that must be met but are interrelated concerns that must be balanced together. See Northeast Ohio Coalition for Homeless and Serv. Emps. Int'l Union v. Blackwell, 467 F.3d 999, 1009 (6th Cir. 2006). Our United States Supreme Court cautions that temporary restraining orders are extraordinary and drastic remedies that may be issued only under "stringent restrictions" and their limited availability "reflect the fact that our entire jurisprudence runs counter to the notion of court action taken before reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard has been granted both sides of a dispute." Granny Goose Foods, Inc. v. Bhd. of Teamsters and Auto Truck Drivers Local No. 70 of Alameda Cty., 415 U.S. 423, 438-39 (1974).

II.

Rule 65(b)(1)(A) imposes two requirements on the party seeking a temporary restraining order. First, the party must identify an irreparable harm that will occur before the opposing party can be heard in opposition to the motion. Second, the party must attest to the veracity of the facts establishing irreparable harm either by affidavit or through a verified complaint.

The Court concludes Plaintiffs have not met the requirements contained in Rule 65(b)(1)(A). Plaintiffs titled their pleading "Verified Complaint" (ECF No. 3 PageID.46) but failed to include a signature from any plaintiff and also failed to include a statement indicating that the allegations in the complaint are made under penalty of perjury. See 28 U.S.C. § 1746; Williams v. Browman, 981 F.2d 901, 904-05 (6th Cir. 1992); accord Beal v. Beller, 847 F.3d 897, 901 (7th Cir. 2017) ("But, a verified complaint is not just a pleading; it is also the equivalent of an affidavit . . . because it 'contains factual allegations that if included in an affidavit or deposition would be considered evidence, and not merely assertion.'") (citation omitted); Roberson v. Hayti Police Dept., 241 F.3d 992, 994-95 (8th Cir. 2001) (stating that "a complaint signed and dated as true under penalty of perjury satisfies the requirements of a verified complaint, 28 U.S.C. § 1746.").

Attached to their motion, Plaintiffs filed two affidavits. Attorney Russell Newman filed one affidavit. (ECF No. 2-2 PageID.38-39.) Counsel does not make any allegations about an irreparable harm that will occur before Defendants can be heard in opposition to the motion. Plaintiffs also attached an affidavit from Plaintiff Ken Beyer. (ECF No. 2-3 PageID.40.) Beyer attests that Michigan law requires the preservation of election records. (Id. ¶ 4.) He attests that he sought election records through FOIA requests and that some records have not been provided and some have been reported lost or deleted or destroyed or are otherwise unattainable without a court order. (Id. ¶ 5.) Beyer does not allege, under penalty of perjury, that Defendants will destroy election records before they can be heard in opposition to this motion.

B.

In their factual allegations, Plaintiffs summarize concerns about the certification of voting machines used in Michigan for the November 2020 election. Plaintiffs allege that no county in Michigan used a properly certified electronic voting system. (ECF No. 3 Compl. ¶ 53 PageID.55.) Plaintiffs conclude, therefore, that the electronic voting systems that were used violated Michigan law and the election is void ab initio and should not have been certified.

Plaintiffs describe their claim as arising under the First, Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments and explains that they have a "constitutional right to vote for the candidate of [their] choice, [and] also the constitutional right not to have [their] vote diluted, canceled out, and/or nullified by the counting of illegal or false or fraudulent votes and/or by the failure to count legal votes, and or by the certification of fraudulent and/or unverifiable votes." (ECF No. 3 Comp. ¶ 104 PageID.63.) Plaintiffs allege, because Defendants failed to properly certify the voting machines used in the State of Michigan for the November 2020 election, their votes were diluted, canceled out, and/or nullified. (Id. ¶ 106.) And, Plaintiffs allege that if the information and data required to be preserved for 22 months under 52 U.S.C. §

20701 is destroyed, it will be impossible to demonstrate the failure of certification of voting machines. (Id. ¶ 107 PageID.64.)

The Court concludes Plaintiffs are not likely to succeed on the merits of their claim. First, Plaintiffs have only a generalized grievance that would be common among all people who cast a vote in the November 2022 election and not a particularized, individual injury. Consequently, Plaintiffs likely do not have standing to raise this concern about machines used in the November 2022 election or the possible destruction of records. See Pirtle v. Nago, No. 22-381, 2022 WL 3915570, at *3-*4 (D. Haw. Aug. 31, 2022). Second, Plaintiffs likely cannot establish an Equal Protection claim. On the facts alleged in the complaint, all ballots cast in Michigan were treated equally, albeit by allegedly uncertified voting machines. Plaintiffs were able to cast a ballot for their electors of choice and their votes were counted. Plaintiff have not pled facts to show that their votes were canceled, diluted or nullified. Third, 52 U.S.C. 20701 likely does not create a private right of action. See Fox v. Lee, No. 4:18cv529, 2019 WL 13141701, at *1 (N.D. Fla. Apr. 2, 2019); see also Soudelier v. Dept. of State Louisiana, No. 22-2436, 2022 WL 3686422, at *1 (E.D. La. Aug. 25, 2022) (citing Fox); Pirtle, 2022 WL 3915570, at *3 (citing Fox and Soudelier). Likely, the Attorney General or his or her representative may enforce the requirements of § 20701. See Fox, 2019 WL 13141701 at *1; see also 52 U.S.C. § 20703. Fourth, Plaintiffs may not have sued the correct parties. Under Michigan statute, City and county clerks or the Board of County Canvassers appear to have responsibility for retaining election records, not the Governor or the Secretary of State. See Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.810a. Plaintiff have not alleged any practice or policy of either Defendant directing county officials to destroy election records.

The Court also finds that Plaintiffs have not established an irreparable harm that will occur before Defendants can be heard in opposition. At best, Plaintiffs allege in the complaint that the time required by statute to preserve records ended on September 4, 2022. That allegation does not, however, establish that Defendants will begin to destroy records as soon as the retention requirement passes. In addition, even if the federal statute, 52 U.S.C. § 20701 provides for a twenty-two month retention period, state law requires the retention of election records for two years. Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.811.

Having found that the first two factors weigh against granting ex parte relief, the Court need not consider the other two factors.

III.

Accordingly, the Court declines to grant Plaintiffs a temporary restraining order. Plaintiffs have not met the requirements for emergency ex parte injunctive relief because they did not attest, under penalty of perjury, to the veracity of the factual allegations necessary for the specific relief sought. Plaintiffs also have not demonstrated any imminent irreparable harm or a likelihood of success on the merits of their claims.

ORDER

For the reasons provide in the accompanying Opinion, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order. (ECF No. 2.)

Plaintiffs must serve Defendants as soon as possible. Plaintiffs must file proof of service no later than Monday, September 12, 2022.

Having denied the request for a temporary restraining order, the Court will treat the motion as a request for a preliminary injunction. Defendants must file a response no later than Monday, September 19, 2022. Plaintiffs may file a reply by Monday, September 26, 2022. After reviewing the briefs, the Court may hold a hearing if necessary.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

SCHEDULING ORDER

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

1. The parties are advised these matters have not been consolidated at this time. They are each separate cases; but for purposes of efficiency and because these matters all relate to the Michigan 2024 presidential primary election, the matters—other than as will be indicated below—are being expedited.

2. The Court has previously issued multiple scheduling orders in Cases 23-000128-MB and 23-000137-MZ.

3. Case 23-000151-MZ was filed October 30, 2023. That matter was initially randomly assigned to Chief Judge Elizabeth L. Gleicher but has since been reassigned to Judge James Robert Redford. No previous scheduling orders have been issued in Case 23-000151-MZ.

4. The purpose of this order is to set forth, for the period of the next ten days, the deadlines that will apply and the hearings that will take place.

5. In Case 23-000151-MZ:

a. If defendant has been served with plaintiff's complaint by October 31, 2023:

i. Defendant's answer or otherwise responsive pleading is due by Thursday, November 2, 2023, at 4:00 p.m.

ii. Plaintiff's reply, if any, to defendant's answer or otherwise responsive pleading is due by Monday, November 6, 2023, at 4:00 p.m.

b. If defendant has not been served with plaintiff's complaint by October 31, 2023:

i. Defendant's answer or otherwise responsive pleading is due by Monday, November 6, 2023, at 4:00 p.m.

ii. Plaintiff's reply, if any, to defendant's answer or otherwise responsive pleading is due by Wednesday, November 8, 2023, at 12:00 p.m.

c. Any amicus curiae submission in Case 23-000151-MZ must not exceed twenty (20) pages in length and must be submitted by Tuesday, November 7, 2023, at 4:00 p.m., with copies served on all parties in Cases 23-000128-MB, 23-000137-MZ, and 23-000151-MZ.

6. Regarding hearings on motions, oral arguments, and other proceedings in open court:

a. The Court acknowledges in Cases 23-000128-MB and 23-000137-MZ, in its October 18, 2023 order, it advised the parties oral argument, if any, would likely take place Monday, November 6, 2023.

b. In light of subsequent pleadings and the filing of Case 23-000151-MZ, the Court concludes it is no longer prudent to proceed on Monday, November 6, 2023.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

7. The Court orders that sessions in open court will take place in all three matters on Thursday, November 9, 2023, at the Michigan Court of Appeals courtroom, State of Michigan Building, 350 Ottawa, NW, Grand Rapids, Michigan, as follows:

A. In Case 23-000128-MB, the case will be called at 8:30 a.m., and the matter will be scheduled for two hours, during which the Court will consider any administrative or scheduling matters and will hear oral arguments on any matters then pending.

i. Plaintiff's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

ii. Defendant's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

iii. Amicus curiae filer Donald J. Trump's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument

iv. Defendant's counsel shall argue first, followed by plaintiff's counsel, followed by amicus curiae filer Trump's counsel. Defendant's counsel may present five (5) minutes of rebuttal argument if preserved.

B. In Case 23-000137-MZ, the case will be called at 11:30 a.m., and the matter will be scheduled for two hours during which the Court will consider any administrative or scheduling matters and will hear oral arguments on any matters then pending.

i. Plaintiffs' counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

ii. Defendant's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

iii. Amicus curiae filer Donald J. Trump's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

iv. Defendant's counsel shall argue first, followed by plaintiffs' counsel, followed by amicus curiae filer Trump's counsel. Defendant's counsel may present five (5) minutes of rebuttal argument if preserved.

C. In Case 23-000151-MZ, the case will be called at 2:00 p.m., and the matter will be scheduled for ninety (90) minutes during which the Court will consider any administrative or scheduling matters and will hear oral arguments on any matters then pending.

i. Plaintiff's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

ii. Defendant's counsel shall be provided thirty (30) minutes in total to present argument.

iii. Plaintiff's counsel shall argue first, followed by defendant's counsel. Plaintiff's counsel may be allowed rebuttal argument, but this will be determined on November 9, 2023.

8. The Court notes, in Case 23-000128-MB, plaintiff filed an amended complaint on October 23, 2023. The parties are advised, in Case 23-000128-MB:

a. Counts V, VII, and VIII of plaintiff's proposed Amended Complaint, filed October 23, 2023, WILL NOT BE ADDRESSED ON AN EXPEDITED BASIS. All ordinary and normal schedules and deadlines related to cases in the Michigan Court of Claims shall apply to Counts V, VII, and VIII.

b. The Court will not be addressing Counts V, VII, and VIII in any interim or dispositive orders in this matter until the Court issues interim or dipositive orders in Counts I-IV and VI of plaintiff's Amended Complaint.

9. In-person attendance is appreciated for the court hearings. If parties and counsel are unable to attend in-person, the Court will make available attendance via Zoom.

10. The Court acknowledges that this expedited order will require much additional work and effort by the attorneys of record and the pro se litigant involved in these matters. The Court thanks all counsel and the pro se litigant for their efforts undertaken thus far in these matters and in their efforts to move forward in accordance with this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

SECRETARY OF STATE JOCELYN BENSON'S MOTION TO INTERVENE AS PARTY DEFENDANT

Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson, by her attorneys, moves this Court to allow her to intervene as a Defendant in this matter and in support of her motion states as follows:

SUMMARY OF PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMS

1. On or about August 23, 2023, Plaintiff Michael Butz filed the instant complaint against Jennifer Zelmanski, Clerk for the City of Roseville, and the City of Roseville (City Defendants), alleging a violation under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), MCL 15.231 et seq.

2. Plaintiff's claims stem from a May 2, 2023, FOIA request to City Defendants in which Plaintiff requested "a copy of the extract files from the electronic poll books (EPBs) for all registrants at all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the elections concluding November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023." (Compl, FOIA request, PDF page 8.)

3. Plaintiff requested that the files "be in .CSV or .XLS format." (Id.) In making his request, Plaintiff acknowledged that certain information was exempt from disclosure under MCL 168.509gg, including full dates of birth and driver's license information. (Compl, FOIA request, PDF page 8.) Plaintiff asserted that "there should be no other FOIA exempt information in the EPB digital records requested," and that he was not "requesting any software or information which somehow be deemed proprietary." (Id.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

4. Plaintiff asserted in his request that the "EPB .CSV files are an original record and a component of the electronic voting system audit trail," and that "these digital records should be retained" for the applicable federal and state retention periods. Id., citing 52 USC 20701 and MCL 168.811.

5. On May 23, 2023, the City Defendants "denied all portions" of Plaintiff's request pursuant to direction provided by the Secretary of State's Bureau or Elections (Bureau):

> Per the Michigan Bureau of Elections, Clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the Electronic Poll Book, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. In response to previous FOIA requests regarding EPB data, the Bureau of Elections has not disclosed these records because the records sought constitute "cybersecurity plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities" that are exempt from disclosure. The Bureau has an interest in maximizing the protection and defense of its information systems, which outweighs the public interest in the disclosure of this information as the release of this sensitive information could jeopardize the security of Michigan's electoral process. MCL 15.243(1)(y). In addition, the responsive records include sensitive information which, if released, "would disclose a person's cybersecurity plans or cybersecurity-related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information system infrastructure, hardware, or software." MCL 15.243(1)(z).
>
> Further, electronic poll book files contain personal identifying information such as full birth dates for voters, which is exempt from disclosure. MCL 168.509gg. Attempted manual redaction of personal identifying information may not be sufficient to protect this information from disclosure if the software and program files are disclosed.
> Please contact the Macomb County Clerk for the paper pollbook copies or the Michigan Bureau of Elections for the log file or voter history.

(Compl, 5/23/23 Letter, attached at PDF page 15.) As stated in the denial letter, it is the Bureau's position that the release of the information requested by Plaintiff in the manner sought would result in the release of information exempted from disclosure under MCL 15.243(1)(y) and/or (z) of the FOIA.

6. On June 5, 2023, Plaintiff appealed the denial of his request, which was affirmed on June 13, 2023. (City Defendants' Motion to Consolidate, ¶ 1, Ex D.)

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

7. In his Complaint, Plaintiff alleges City Defendants failed to comply with the FOIA by failing to separate exempt from non-exempt materials and by failing to describe the materials exempted. (Compl, ¶ 11.)

8. He alleges that he is entitled to production of the records he sought and that none of the records requested "are exempt from disclosure." (Id., ¶ 12.) Plaintiff requests that the Court order the production of the requested records and award him costs and fees. (Compl, p 4.)

9. Notably, on May 13, 2023, Plaintiff sent a similar FOIA request to the Department of State, Bureau of Elections, for all jurisdictions in Macomb County, (Ex 1, 5/13/23 FOIA request):

> I hereby request a comma separated electronic version (CSV) or Microsoft Excel workbook file version (XLS) of the information recorded in the Electronic Poll Book for each voting jurisdiction within Macomb County for the November 8, 2022 and May 2, 2023 elections. As stated in USC 52, 20701, the federal retention period for election materials is 22 months following the final canvass, and the State of Michigan retention period is 24 months following final canvass as stated in MCL 168.811.

INTERESTS OF INTERVENOR SECRETARY OF STATE

11. Under the Michigan Constitution, the Legislature "shall enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all . . . elections[.]" Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2).

12. The Legislature delegated the task of conducting proper elections to the Secretary of Secretary, an elected Executive-branch officer, and the head of the Department of State. Const 1963, art 5, §§ 3, 9.

13. Section 21 of the Michigan Election Law makes the Secretary the "chief election officer" and she "shall have supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of this act." MCL 168.21. Further, under § 31, the Secretary "shall do all of the following": "(a). . . issue instructions . . . for the conduct of elections . . . in accordance with the laws of this state," and "(b) [a]dvise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections." MCL 168.31(1)(a)-(b).

14. These sections provide the Secretary with broad authority to issue instructions, directions, and advice for the proper conduct of elections and to require adherence to those instructions by the election officials over whom she exercises supervisory control. See, e.g., Hare v Berrien Co Bd of Election Commr's, 373 Mich

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

526, 531 (1964) (local election board had "duty to follow" the Secretary of State's "instructions" under MCL 168.31); MCL 168.931(1)(h) ("A person shall not willfully fail to perform a duty imposed upon that person by this act, or disobey a lawful instruction or order of the secretary of state as chief state election officer or of a board of county election commissioners, board of city election commissioners, or board of inspectors of election.")

15. The federal Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002 provides that "each State . . . shall implement, in a uniform and nondiscriminatory manner, a single, uniform, official, . . . computerized statewide voter registration list . . . that contains the name and registration information of every legally registered voter in the State. . . ." 52 USC 21083(a)(1)(A). Section 21083(a)(1)(A)(viii) provides that "the computerized list shall serve as the official voter registration list for the conduct of all elections for Federal office in the State."

16. Michigan complied with these requirements long ago when it created the qualified voter file (QVF) as the State's computerized statewide voter registration list. MCL 168.509m(1)(a), 168.509o, 168.509p, 168.509q, 168.509r.

17. MCL 168.509o provides that the "secretary of state shall direct and supervise the establishment and maintenance of a statewide qualified voter file. The secretary of state shall establish the technology to implement the qualified voter file."

18. MCL 168.509r similarly provides that "the secretary of state shall establish and maintain the computer system and programs necessary to the operation of the qualified voter file," and that the secretary of state "shall allow each county, city, or township access to the qualified voter file."

19. MCL 168.509p provides for what features the QVF must have, and MCL 168.509q provides for what information must be contained in the QVF.

20. These statutes demonstrate that the QVF, the computer systems and programs used to operate the QVF, the data within the QVF, and who may access the QVF and how they may do so, are under the Secretary's direction and supervision.

21. And as part of her duty to supervise and maintain the QVF, the Secretary and the Bureau of Elections are continually monitoring the security of the system and looking for ways to enhance security measures. (Ex 3, QVF Report, p 6.)

22. MCL 168.668b(1) provides that "[e]ach city or township shall use the electronic poll book software developed by the [state] bureau of elections in each election precinct in the city or township on election day to process voters and generate election precinct reports."

23. Before election day, the cities and townships "shall download the electronic poll book software from the [QVF] software." MCL 168.668b(2)-(3).

24. The electronic pollbooks are then used to process voters and generate precinct reports on election day for that particular election. MCL 168.735. See also Ex 3, pp 3-4.

25. Because the electronic poll books contain software and data downloaded from the QVF, such as a list of registered voters for the jurisdiction, they include sensitive information, such as a voter's date of birth. MCL 168.509q.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

26. Before a subsequent election, local clerks are directed to print a paper copy of the poll book contents for retention under state schedules, MCL 168.799a(4), MCL 168.811, R. 168.790(18)-(19), and federal law, 52 USC 20701, and to then delete the electronic pollbook software and associated files for the previous election from the poll book because it contains personal information and so that the old file is not accidentally accessed during the next election.

27. This is permissible because, even assuming certain electronic records should be retained, the laws do not require that officials retain a record in multiple formats. See, e.g., 52 USC 20701 (requiring election officials to retain, for twenty-two months from the date of an election for federal office, "all records and papers which come into [the officer's] possession relating to any application, registration . . . or other act requisite to voting in such election[.]") Because the voter information from the electronic pollbook is saved in paper form, state and federal retention laws are satisfied.

28. The FOIA Act gives people the right to request copies or to inspect "public records" in the possession of a public body as that term is defined in the Act. See MCL 15.232(i), 15.233(1).

29. The Legislature has expressly provided that certain personal information contained in the QVF is exempt from production in response to a FOIA request. See MCL 168.509gg(1)-(2) (exempting day and month of birth, driver's license or personal identification number, telephone number, digitized signature, and last four digits of social security number).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

30. The Legislature has also provided for specific exemptions in response to requests for public records under the FOIA Act. See MCL 15.243(1)-(2).

31. Relevant here, subsection 13(1) exempts from disclosure:

> (y) Records or information of measures designed to protect the security . . . or the confidentiality, integrity, or availability of information systems . . . including, but not limited to . . . cybersecurity plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities, unless disclosure would not impair a public body's ability to protect the security or safety of . . . property or unless the public interest in disclosure outweighs the public interest in nondisclosure in the particular instance.
> (z) Information that would identify . . . or that would disclose a person's cybersecurity plans or cybersecurity-related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information system infrastructure, hardware, or software. [MCL 15.243(1)(y), (z).]

32. FOIA requests similar to Plaintiff's, although perhaps not as precise, began circulating in 2022 and continued into 2023.

33. In reviewing these FOIA requests for electronic poll book data, the Bureau determined that the production of the requested information in the manner requested by the local clerks would result in the release of sensitive information entitled to exemption under subsection 13(1)(y) and (z).

34. Again, the Secretary of State exercises supervisory control over local clerks in the performance of their election-related duties, MCL 168.21, which duties include safeguarding election-related information. Further, she exercises this control, in part, through the issuance of directions and instructions to these officials. MCL 168.31(1)(a)-(b).

35. Pursuant to this authority, the Bureau of Elections sent a communication to all clerks on November 14, 2022, advising the clerks to consult with their attorneys

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

about the FOIA requests and the application of exemptions, including subsections 13(1)(y) and (z). (Ex 4, 11/22/22 email). The communication noted that the Bureau had not disclosed this information pursuant to those exemptions. (Id.)

36. However, because FOIAs continued to be made to jurisdictions, and the Bureau became aware that a few jurisdictions provided records in response to these requests, it was compelled to send another communication to all clerks reminding them that sensitive data must not be disclosed and that these requests should be re-directed to the Bureau:

> We are aware that clerks have recently received additional requests for epollbook (epb) data. Requests for epb data must be directed to the Bureau, to ensure that sensitive information related to both individual voters and the epb are removed before public disclosure of otherwise available information. As stated in our November 14, 2022 email (link below for your convenience), clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the epb, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. The requested file contains proprietary software information, security feature information, and personal identifiable information for voters. [Ex 5, 5/10/23 email.]

37. The Bureau noted that disclosure of the information could compromise the electronic poll books:

> The disclosure of security and technical information is exempt from FOIA and may not be properly redacted if the file is produced by an individual clerk instead of the Bureau. Additionally, the file contains sensitive information regarding your epb laptop(s) that might require you to purchase a new laptop for each precinct if you disclose this information to a 3rd party. The disclosure of sensitive information compromises the integrity of Michigan's elections and may warrant referral for investigation.
> If you receive a FOIA request for epb data, the requestor can be directed to the county clerk for paper pollbook copies or to BOE for the log file or voter history. [Id.]

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

38. Upon information and belief, most jurisdictions, including those sued by Plaintiff, followed the Bureau's directions and denied the FOIA requests for the electronic poll book data.

39. The Secretary, as the chief election officer, has an interest in Plaintiff's claims that the officials whom she supervises, and who were instructed by the Bureau to decline to produce the requested data, wrongfully withheld this information in response to Plaintiff's FOIA requests.

40. As demonstrated above, the QVF, the software systems and programs used to operate the QVF, the data within the QVF, and who may access that data, are under the Secretary's direction and supervision.

41. The same is true when software and data from the QVF is downloaded into the electronic poll books used by the cities and townships to conduct elections on election day.

42. The Secretary has a duty to ensure the security and integrity of elections in Michigan. This includes taking action to prohibit unauthorized individuals from obtaining access to software design or data architecture of the electronic poll book, and where the requested files contain proprietary software information, and security feature information.

43. Plaintiff continues to maintain he has a right to the production of this sensitive information under the FOIA Act. But instead of pursuing claims against the Secretary, who is the gatekeeper of this information, Plaintiff instead seeks to compel the production of this information through the officials the Secretary supervises. As a result, the Secretary is compelled to seek intervention in this matter.

STANDARDS FOR GRANTING INTERVENTION

44. MCR 2.209(A) and (B) govern intervention and provide, in relevant part:

> (A) Intervention of Right. On timely application a person has a right to intervene in an action . . . .
> (3) when the applicant claims an interest relating to the . . . transaction which is the subject of the action and is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties. . . .
> (B) Permissive Intervention. On timely application a person may intervene in an action . . . .
> (2) when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common.
> In exercising its discretion, the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

45. MCR 2.209(A)(3) "should be liberally construed to allow intervention when the applicant's interest otherwise may be inadequately represented." Auto-Owners Ins Co v Keizer-Morris, Inc, 284 Mich App 610, 612 (2009). However, "MCR 2.209(A)(3) and (B) both condition intervention on timely application." Kuhlgert v Mich State Univ, 328 Mich App 357, 379 (2019). A party seeking to intervene must be diligent. See Sch Dist of Ferndale v Royal Oak Twp Sch Dist No 8, 293 Mich 1, 11 (1940). That is, "[g]enerally, a right to intervene should be asserted within a reasonable time[.]" Karrip v Cannon Twp, 115 Mich App 726, 731 (1982).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

46. For purposes of MCR 209(A)(3), the court rule permitting intervention should be liberally construed "to allow intervention where the applicant's interests may be inadequately represented." Neal v Neal, 219 Mich App 490, 492 (1996). "[T]he concern of inadequate representation of interests need only exist; inadequacy of representation need not be definitely established. Where this concern exists, the rules of intervention should be construed liberally in favor of intervention." Vestevich v West Bloomfield Twp, 245 Mich App 759, 762 (2001).

47. The Secretary is entitled to intervene as of right or should be granted permissive intervention in this case.

48. Here, the Secretary plainly has an interest in the transaction that is the subject of this case and is so situated that the disposition of the action may impair or impede her ability to protect that interest, and her interests will not be adequately represented by the City Defendants.

49. The City Defendants properly denied Plaintiff's FOIA request consistent with the Bureau's directions, and the Secretary anticipates that the City Defendants will vigorously defend their denial in this case.

50. However, the case will likely turn on the application of the exemptions invoked under MCL 15.243(1)(y) and (z). Because the software and programming of the QVF and the electronic poll books is designed and maintained by staff at the Department of State with support from the Department of Technology, Management and Budget, the City Defendants will not have access to information or potential witnesses to support a defense that the FOIA exemptions were properly invoked in this case.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

51. The Secretary, of course, has access to this information and witnesses and thus is in a better position to defend against the claims in this case than the City Defendants.

52. Regarding permissive intervention, the Secretary's defenses to this litigation will share at least some common questions of law or fact with the City Defendants. Indeed, the Secretary will likely make several of the same arguments the City Defendants make that Plaintiff's FOIA request was properly denied.

53. As for timing, the Secretary has been diligent in bringing her motion. While the Secretary was aware of this case and the other consolidated cases, had received some of the pleadings, and was monitoring the cases, for practical and logistical reasons the Secretary determined it was best to wait to intervene until the motion to consolidate the cases was resolved and a lead case determined.

54. This Court granted consolidation in an order dated October 2, 2023, and the Secretary's instant motion to intervene comes a mere __ days following that order.

55. Further, no dispositive motions have been filed and no discovery has commenced in this case. Permitting the Secretary to intervene at this juncture will not delay the case or prejudice the named parties.

56. The Secretary sought concurrence in the instant motion to intervene from the City Defendants, who concur in the motion. The Secretary sought concurrence from

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff via email on October 26, 2023; however, Plaintiff had not yet responded to this request by the time of filing.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For the reasons stated above, Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson respectfully requests that the Court enter an order granting her motion to intervene as a Defendant in this matter under MCR 2.209(A) or (B).

Respectfully submitted,

Michigan Qualified Voter File
2023 Report to Legislature

Introduction

Michigan election law (MCL 168.509n) requires the Secretary of State to submit a report on the status of the Qualified Voter File (QVF) to the State Legislature each odd-numbered year. The report must include:

1) "Information on the efficiency and effectiveness of the Qualified Voter File as a voter registration system."

2) "Any recommendations of the Secretary of State for amendments to this act to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the Qualified Voter File as a voter registration system."

This report provides a status update on QVF voter registration system elements. Michigan's election officials have now used the QVF system for 16 full federal election cycles. The productive partnership of state and local election officials has allowed the QVF to evolve beyond the initial implementing legislation's high expectations of an interactive statewide voter file, to a diverse election administration module used to support both election official and voter needs, along with legally mandated changes and new security protocols.

Background: The Michigan Qualified Voter File

Legislation to create the QVF was enacted to enhance the security and integrity of Michigan's voter registration system and to provide procedural uniformity and cost savings throughout the state. The National Voter Registration Act of 1993 greatly heightened the need for a statewide voter registration system as Michigan's cities and townships were required to absorb increased voter registration file maintenance costs, cope with new and highly detailed voter registration file maintenance procedures and confront a sharp increase in unnecessary voter registration transactions due to overlapping voter registration programs.

PA 441 of 1994 required the Secretary of State to establish and maintain a statewide Qualified Voter File (QVF) system. Placed in operation in 1998, the QVF is a distributed database that ties Michigan's city and township clerks to a fully automated, interactive statewide voter registration file to achieve a wide variety of significant advantages including the following: 1) the elimination of duplicate voter registration records in the state; 2) the streamlining of the state's voter registration record maintenance process; 3) the elimination of registration forwarding errors; and 4) the elimination of duplicative voter registration processing tasks. The QVF is Michigan's sole voter registration system and is used to conduct every election in Michigan.

Each voter registration transaction (including existing registrations with a change of address) executed in a Secretary of State Branch Office is electronically forwarded to the appropriate local election official. A digitized version of the voter's signature is also electronically transmitted into the QVF and is available to the appropriate election official.

The QVF has long been nationally recognized for the innovation and efficiency of its design. Michigan's Qualified Voter File system was cited as a "best practice" in managing voter registration records under the Caltech/MIT Voting Technology Project (Voting What Is What Could Be; released July 2001) and was highlighted as an "outstanding model" under the report issued by the National Commission on Federal Election Reform (To Assure Pride and Confidence in the Electoral Process; released August 2001).

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Michigan's QVF system served as the inspiration for the statewide voter registration system requirements enacted under the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA). All states were required to create voter registration systems with QVF functionality.

Current Status of the QVF Application

Beginning in 2013, the Bureau of Elections (BOE) began drafting requirements for a new QVF System (referred to as QVF Refresh) to make the distinction between the original QVF (Legacy) and the new system. QVF Refresh was a complete re-write of the original QVF Legacy system. Following a long period of requirements gathering, the Bureau of Elections (BOE) began working collaboratively with the Department of Management, Technology, and Budget (DTMB) to begin the development work of modernizing the voter registration system into a new language and on a real-time, web-based platform.

In late 2017, the clerk-facing portion of the development was complete, and the new Refresh software was piloted by a small advisory group of clerks. Upon the successful completion of the pilot, the new voter registration system was rolled out statewide beginning in February of 2018. Refresh modernized the voter registration system utilizing much of the original QVF functionality, with numerous enhancements requested by local election officials. Most notably, the new system was built in a normalized structure which updates data in real time (the prior system was updated nightly in batch mode).

During the 2018 election year, QVF Refresh was used by approximately 75% of all jurisdictions as their voter registration system in the State of Michigan. The remaining clerks chose to use QVF Legacy for the 2018 election cycle one last time. Since the 2020 election year, every Michigan election official has used the QVF Refresh system to manage the elections conducted in their respective jurisdictions.

In 2019 and 2020, QVF was further updated to implement multiple changes brought by the legislative enactment of online voter registration and the passage of statewide proposal 2018-3. The major focus for this system update was to implement changes in voter registration deadlines, including the implementation of Election Day registration. A focused training program was also developed and delivered on these changes, which were implemented for elections in the 2019-2020 election cycle. In both the 2019-2020 and 2021-2022 election cycles, BOE implemented performance upgrades to allow QVF to handle a higher volume of usage and data requests.

Currently, BOE is working to update QVF with functionality for a Permanent Ballot list, the ability to provide electronic notification for ballot tracking, and the creation of an early voting Electronic Poll Book to accommodate requirements of Proposal 22-2.

QVF Software, Equipment, and Support

The QVF application provides support for the diverse user needs of 1,520 jurisdictions and 83 counties within the state.

- QVF Software: All clerks and their staff are provided with secure access to the QVF to ensure that they can administer elections and maintain their voter registrations following a state-provided training class instructing users on the software. While most clerks perform their own voter registration updates and maintenance tasks, some cooperatively work with their county clerk who takes the responsibility for updating the records. All Secretary of State branch office voter registration transactions are electronically transmitted to the local jurisdiction's "inbox" located in the software. Transactions initiated directly through the clerks' offices and other voter registration programs (e.g., third-party voter registration drives, main in voter registrations) are manually entered into the software.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- County and Local Jurisdiction QVF Equipment: The state originally provided all 83 counties and 296 of Michigan's largest cities and townships (voting age population (VAP) over 5,000) with QVF hardware. Later, jurisdictions not in the original group requested access to the QVF with the understanding that they would provide their own equipment and maintenance for their equipment. As the original state-delivered equipment has aged and been decommissioned, counties and jurisdictions are now maintaining, upgrading, and purchasing their own equipment. The decommissioning process of the state provided equipment was completed in 2023. Jurisdictions who originally provided their own equipment continue to upgrade it as is necessary. BOE is continuing to develop alternative emergency contingency plans in the event of equipment or technical failure.

- QVF Help Desk Technical Support: Technical support is provided to clerks by a dedicated staff team in BOE, the Training & Election Assistance Support team. This team's primary focus is to support the QVF through a variety of methods including phone calls and emails; training programs delivered through our online eLearning system, videos, and in-person instruction utilizing hands-on learning. The team travels to a variety of locations across the state to provide training and support clerks and their staff in the use of the QVF. Additional cross-training has also occurred within BOE to expand the staff support available, which has added a tremendous value in the ability of BOE to support all users of the application and accommodate their diverse needs. The development of additional training programs and resources is underway to accommodate the requirements of Proposal 22-2. BOE anticipates the need for increased staffing resources to support QVF users with 22-2 requirements.

Voter Registration Applications Derived from the QVF System

- Michigan Voter Information Center: The Michigan Voter Information Center website (MVIC – www.michigan.gov/vote) is the primary information source for Michigan voters related to voter registration and voting. In 2019 and 2020, MVIC underwent modernized design improvements that offered a simpler and more user-friendly look while also containing all of the most pertinent information voters need related to the voting process. Additionally, mapping tools were modernized to assist voters in finding their clerk's office and/or polling location. MVIC functionality includes clerks' regular business and pre- election weekend office hours when voters can register in-person with the clerk (a new requirement of Proposal 2018-3). For the elections conducted in 2020, MVIC also included the locations and hours of satellite clerk office locations. Data presented on the website is fully populated by the QVF system. For elections conducted in 2022, MVIC included locations for absent voter ballot drop boxes. This functionality will be continued and expanded now that all jurisdictions must maintain absent voter ballot drop boxes. BOE also anticipates that MVIC will provide information for early voting locations. New MVIC functionality allows voters to update or cancel their voter registration if they have received a National Voter Registration Act notice. In addition, a preview of ballots is now available.

  The public-facing website continues to provide answers for voters and the general public on a host of questions related to voter registration and elections. This is a valuable resource for a variety of voter questions including voter registration status, clerk contact and location information, the voter's polling location address and map, the voter's absent voter (AV) ballot request and delivery status, and a preview of the voter's unique ballot sample for upcoming elections, among other information.

- Electronic Poll Book (EPB): BOE created an electronic version of the standard Poll Book for use in precincts on Election Day using QVF data. The EPB combines the precinct list and poll book into a single computer application that runs on a standard laptop, which is not connected to the Internet in the precinct on Election Day. The EPB allows precinct workers to scan a voter's driver's license which brings up the voter's record. In a single action, the precinct worker confirms the voter's qualifications to vote, issues a ballot and updates voting history. At the end of the day, the EPB automatically summarizes data (ballots, issues, ballots cast, etc.) and creates a voter list; functions which greatly assist precinct workers in completing their precinct canvass on Election Night. The EPB automates voter processing and assists precinct workers through the process which adds efficiencies and accuracy to the former manual process.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

The Bureau of Elections used available HAVA funds to purchase EPB laptops for jurisdictions. PA 614 of 2018 requires all jurisdictions to use the EPB system for all elections. The QVF Refresh version was used statewide beginning with the August 2019 election. The EPB software was also rewritten to interact directly with the new QVF Refresh application and has been modernized to further guide and assist clerks. In advance of 2022 elections, BOE implemented additional security features for EPB software and equipment. BOE is developing an updated version of the EPB software to accommodate the needs of Early Voting.

- Online Voter Registration: The Bureau of Elections implemented online voter registration in 2019. To use the online voter registration portal, voters must have a Michigan driver's license or state ID. Eligible users enter their information into the online voter registration portal on MVIC. If the user is already registered to vote, QVF populates the online voter registration portal with the voter's current registration information and the voter has the opportunity to update the voter's registration address. If the user is not currently registered, the user has the opportunity to register to vote. The voter registration information is automatically added to or updated in QVF.

  As part of online voter registration implementation, the Bureau of Elections developed an application programming interface (API) that allows organizations conducting voter registration drives to collect voter registrations electronically and submit them to the online voter registration portal. To be registered, the application must contain all required fields including driver's license or state ID number and last four digits of social security number. Organizations can also obtain custom URLs that allow them to direct individuals to the online voter registration portal so the applicant may complete the applications there. Use of either tool requires an agreement to comply with required security and data standards.

- Automatic Voter Registration: Automatic voter registration was enacted in Proposal 2018-3. Under automatic voter registration, SOS customers are registered to vote as part of driver's license and state ID transactions unless they affirmatively decline to be registered. QVF automatically receives registration information, including signature, electronically as part of qualifying transactions.

File Maintenance Measures

Voter file maintenance is typically more active in odd years. Federal law prohibits systematic voter list maintenance within 90 days of a federal election, leaving few windows of time to conduct this maintenance prior to primary and general federal elections, especially in presidential election years with a separate presidential primary. In 2023, significant voter list maintenance has been conducted. Nearly 100,000 registrations were cancelled in March 2023 because the voter no longer lives at the registration address. Either these individuals surrendered a Michigan driver's license to another state, or an election official received election mail returned as undeliverable or other information giving reason to believe the voter had changed their address. These records belonged to voters who had previously been sent notices and who had not voted in at least two federal election cycles. Additional voter list maintenance has been conducted that will result in a substantial number of additional cancellations after the 2024 election. There are approximately 400,000 voter registrations currently slated for cancellation in 2025. This number is higher than prior years because the Department of State sent election mail to every registered voter in 2020, and for those whose mail was returned as undeliverable, the state sent a notice of cancellation prior to the 2022 election. No statewide election mailing had been conducted in the previous decade. In connection with these efforts, the Bureau of Elections is increasing utilization of MVIC, providing more information to voters and the public about the voter cancellation process and providing mechanisms by which voters who have received cancellation notices can respond.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

- Out of State (OOS) Voter Notices: Beginning in 2012, BOE began handling the federally-required voter notice program when the Department receives information that a voter may have moved to another state. Previously, local jurisdictions were responsible for noticing the voter at their Michigan address and then marking the QVF software according to the response from the voter. As voters apply for a driver's license in another state, they surrender their Michigan license; once notified by another state, Michigan's driver's license file is marked with an indicator that the voter has applied for a license out of state. This information is then transmitted to the QVF file, which is then used to generate notices to these voters, asking them to confirm their voter registration status in Michigan. Voters who confirm they still reside in Michigan for voting purposes remain registered to vote, while voters who confirm they have moved out of state have their registrations cancelled.

  Records are marked accordingly, depending on whether the voter confirms their residency for voter registration purposes in Michigan or another state, or, if after the passage of at least two federal elections without any voter activity, these records are marked as canceled. In 2021, MVIC functionality expanded to allow a voter to respond to this notice either online or via mail.

- ERIC Program: Changes to state law enacted in 2018 (PA 126 of 2018) authorized and required the Department of State to participate in a recognized multistate program to assist in the verification of voter registration data. In early 2019, the Department became a participating member of the Electronic Registration Information Center (ERIC) Program, currently a 29-state partnership that uses a secure data-matching tool to share data between states and improve the accuracy and efficiency of state voter registration systems. In 2020, the Department utilized this program to communicate with eligible but unregistered voters to provide them the opportunity to register to vote. In 2021, the Department is using ERIC data to identify voters who appear to have registered in other states. The voters will be sent a confirmation notice and, if they do not respond, cancelled after two federal election cycles, in the same manner as voters who received out of state voter notices.

- Election Mail Returned Undeliverable: Election mail returned by the U.S. Postal Service as undeliverable serves as initial reliable information that a voter has moved, which can be used to begin the process of cancelling a voter after notice and the required waiting period. Election officials use election mail (such as a notice of a new precinct assignment) that has been returned as undeliverable to initiate the voter cancellation process. For absent voter ballot applications sent by the Bureau of Elections and returned as undeliverable, clerks have the option of sending notices themselves or requesting that the Bureau of Elections send the notices on their behalf.

- Inactive Voter File: In August of 2012, changes to the Michigan Election Law, specifically MCL 168.509r, were enacted for the purpose of creating an Inactive Voter File (IVF) within the QVF. The Inactive File includes voters who have not voted in six or more years and those who have not responded to a confirmation notice from the state or local jurisdiction. Local election officials are authorized to use totals of active voters only when revising precinct boundaries (i.e., a single precinct may not contain more than 2,999 active registered voters) and when ordering ballots for statewide elections – both of which may result in cost savings for local jurisdictions. Note: Inactive voters still show up on precinct lists and are eligible to vote.

- Deceased Voters: Voters who die are identified and removed from the QVF in a variety of ways. The Michigan Department of State uses death data from the U.S. Social Security Administration and Michigan Department of Health and Human Services to cancel voter registration records. The Department also received death data through the ERIC program. County clerks have long used death records to identify registered voters who have died and provide this information to local clerks; legislation passed in 2022 updated this process to allow county clerks to add this information to the QVF for review and cancellation by local clerks. City and Township clerks may also cancel voter registrations of deceased individuals based on personal knowledge such as an obituary or notification from next of kin. Since 2019, more than 400,000 registrations of deceased individuals have been cancelled.

Security

- When the QVF software was introduced in 2018, it was designed with increased security measures in mind to ensure that the voter registration system is protected to the highest degree. Notable changes were built into the development of the new system to increase security with respect to establishing authorized users, user access privileges and procedures, user roles, edits/controls, troubleshooting, and communication of technical system details, among other things.

- The QVF system is continually monitored and protected at several levels, with assistance from DTMB and the State's cyber security office. Additionally, the Department has worked with DTMB and other outside experts to fully assess the QVF system for potential security vulnerabilities, including penetration testing. Ongoing plans are in place to continue to assess and monitor the QVF, to identify and resolve any emerging security vulnerabilities.

- Additional efforts are underway to continually communicate with and train local election officials on current and updated security requirements and cybersecurity best practices. Utilizing federal HAVA funds, the Department has conducted cybersecurity vulnerability assessments of major election system components along with election security training exercises and workshops with local election officials.

- In the 2019-2020 election cycle, the Bureau of Elections began implementing Multi-Factor Authentication (MFA) for QVF users. All QVF users must now use MFA when logging into QVF. Users have the option of using a built-in security token on a smartphone or using a physical MFA token.

QVF Communication and Collaboration with County and Local Election Administrators

- News Updates: The Bureau of Elections offers weekly communications to election administrators statewide with regular updates on the Qualified Voter File. All software updates and key election administration issues are communicated regularly through this method.

- Release Notes: The latest software release notes are communicated regularly in the software under a heading of "Release Notes" for easy accessibility and secure reference by our users. The Bureau maintains a running list of the history of software releases over the course of the months and years for their reference.

- QVF Training: The QVF reference manual with accompanying videos are also placed directly in the software for quick and secure reference by users. Short videos were also produced which provide quick and easy reference for users as they interact with the software and perform specific processes. During the COVID-19 pandemic, the Bureau of Elections also developed an online QVF training module to replace in-person training.

- Banners and Smart Banners: General banners are displayed in the QVF software and are listed at the top of every screen when there is a quick message that needs to be communicated to all users. In addition, Smart Banners are displayed to specific groups of users to communicate reminders that apply to only certain groups.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Email: BOE also communicates information to clerks by utilizing their official email address, especially where small subgroups need to be communicated to directly.

- QVF Clerk Advisory Group: The Bureau of Elections works collaboratively with a QVF Clerk Advisory Group to obtain regular feedback, ensure that the software functionality and performance is streamlined and remains a beneficial program to assist them throughout the voter registration and election administration processes. The Bureau works regularly with this group of clerks to gain their feedback and understand their needs as the Bureau provides new functionality or improves existing software processes. In-person meetings of this group were discontinued due to COVID, but the Bureau has begun soliciting input as part of Proposal 22-2 implementation and plans to expand this process going forward.

QVF System Support in the Bureau of Elections

The Bureau of Elections has a team dedicated to the QVF application for software support, maintenance, and the educational and training needs of our election officials and staff. Software developers maintain, enhance, and modernize the complex QVF software as required by law, requested by the election community, and scheduled as improvements. The Training & Election Assistance team and other BOE staff dedicated to data analytics duties and maintenance of the statewide street index (used to assign specific voting districts to voters) assist QVF users, resolve data issues, and ensure the integrity of QVF data is optimized.

- Software Maintenance and Development: BOE staff involved in software maintenance and development work collaboratively with DTMB, as well as contracted vendors, to ensure that the QVF keeps pace with user needs, emerging security needs, technological innovations, and changes in the governing laws. These staff continue to have primary responsibility for the ongoing improvements and maintenance of the QVF system.

- Training & Election Assistance: In addition to the technical support described above, the Training & Election Assistance team trains clerks in a variety of ways throughout the state. The entire training curriculum was revamped in late 2017 and early 2018 to include hands-on instruction with scenarios so that users can better experience the software. Additionally, the training model was changed from only small, in-person training classes in Lansing, to presentation-style classes held throughout the state that can accommodate much larger groups. The Training & Election Assistance team offers continuous QVF hands-on training throughout Michigan utilizing computer labs generally held at state facilities, intermediate school districts or community colleges. The Bureau also provides users with an "Interest Tracker" function in the online eLearning center where clerks can communicate their individual training needs, find preferred locations and dates, and sign up for training sessions that best fit their needs. The Training & Election Assistance team will be overhauling and expanding the training curriculum to include software changes because of Prop 22-2 and other enhancements.

  The Training & Election Assistance team has also begun providing support at the various clerk association conferences, such as the Michigan Township Association and the Michigan Association of Municipal Clerks, who meet multiple times yearly. Through these venues, QVF support staff can serve multiple clerks in both group and individual sessions, sometimes over multiple days. Often, these sessions can be more targeted based on the clerks' requests and the latest and most pertinent updates to the system.

- Data and Programs Support: A dedicated Data and Programs support team is responsible for researching and reconciling voter data issues and maintaining the integrity of the QVF data. Their efforts consist of working with data generated from both the SOS branch offices and from local jurisdictions entering information. They also analyze and report on various data configurations derived from the QVF and provide informational reports to the clerk community and other interested parties.

- Street Index Maintenance: Bureau of Elections Staff has the responsibility for updating and maintaining the QVF street index. The QVF street index is the backbone of the statewide voter registration system, and it maintains all official street names and their corresponding address ranges, zip codes, and election geography. The Bureau is currently researching the impacts of updating the current tabular street index model with a geospatial environment.

- Redistricting and the County Commissioner District Tool: In 2022, Bureau of Elections Staff worked with clerks to update QVF statewide to reflect changes to State House, State Senate, U.S. Congress, County Clerk, precinct, and numerous other types of districts. This was a very large-scale undertaking conducted on a compressed timetable because of the delay in U.S. census data. There are approximately 3 million distinct addresses for approximately 8 million registered voters in QVF. If any voter's district assignment or number for any office or district was changed, the record needed to be updated. To accomplish this task, BOE dedicated substantial task resources and leveraged technological solutions, including the use of batch data updates, and leveraging geospatial data where available. BOE also developed a county commission redistricting tool to allow counties to update their commission districts more quickly, accurately, and effectively.

Legislative Recommendations

The Department of State is mindful of bills currently pending in the State Legislature that would impact the operations of the Qualified Voter File. The Department's views on specific legislation have been communicated to legislators through the Department's legislative liaison.

With regard to the specific issues of voter registration and the QVF, the Department recommends legislation to address the following issues:

- Methods of contacting and eventually cancelling the registrations of inactive voters who have not otherwise been identified through a surrendered driver's license, the ERIC program, returned mail, or a death record. The Department has supported legislation to notify and initiate voter cancellation of voters who have not cast ballots for 20 years, provided adequate notice is provided and implementation is practical.

- Methods of contacting and correcting (or otherwise eventually cancelling the registrations of) voters whose registration records contain a "placeholder birthdate" because the voter's actual birthdate is not known. The Department has supported legislation to notify and correct, or otherwise initiate voter cancellation of, voters for whom the birthdate is unknown, provided adequate notice is provided and implementation is practical.

- Providing ongoing funding for security measures to ensure the integrity of the QVF, including periodic security upgrades and multifactor authentication. Currently this work is being funding using federal HAVA grants, but these are one-time grants and similar funding is not guaranteed going forward.

- Elimination of the requirement of a physical voter Master Card. This requirement is outdated, and the information can be maintained electronically.

Document received by the MI Macomb 16th Circuit Court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Updating the size requirements of the Voter Identification Cards to allow for easier printing to a standard size card. This will ease the challenges face by local clerks, their IT staff, BOE, and DTMB staff for troubleshooting printing problems.

- Providing the additional funding and staffing necessary for the BOE to achieve the following:

    - Implementation, testing, and training of election officials on a new application to accommodate constitutionally required early voting.
    - Implementation, testing, and training of election officials on new QVF procedures to support constitutionally required early voting.
    - Fully staff and support up to 30 Election Days with the addition of early voting.

Subject: Recent FOIA Requests Clerks,

We are aware that clerks have received a request for the following:

"1. An electronic copy of the Qualified Voter File (QVF) extract for all precincts completed on Monday November 7, 2022 and loaded to the electronic pollbooks.

2. The historical electronic pollbook flash drive for all voting precincts in the jurisdiction for the election concluding November 8, 2022. (This is likely in a CSV – comma separated value format).

3. An electronic copy of the Qualified Voter File extract for all precincts completed as soon as the November midterm election voter history is uploaded to the QVF which must be within 7 days pursuant to MCL 168.813."

Before responding to these FOIA requests, you should consult with your city or township attorney regarding the requests and exemptions that may apply including those contained in MCL 15.243(1)(y) and (z). Under FOIA, you may shield sensitive information from disclosure. Clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the Electronic Poll Book, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. In response to previous FOIA requests regarding EPB data, the Bureau of Elections has not disclosed these records because the records sought constitute "cybersecurity plans, assessments, or vulnerabilities" that are exempt from disclosure. The Bureau has an interest in maximizing the protection and defense of its information systems, which outweighs the public interest in the disclosure of this information as the release of this sensitive information could jeopardize the security of Michigan's electoral process. MCL 15.243(1)(y). In addition, the responsive records include sensitive information which, if released, "would disclose a person's cybersecurity plans or cybersecurity-related practices, procedures, methods, results, organizational information system infrastructure, hardware, or software." MCL 15.243(1)(z).

Further, electronic poll book files contain personal identifying information such as full birth dates for voters, which is exempt from disclosure. MCL 168.509gg. Attempted manual redaction of personal identifying information may not be sufficient to protect this information from disclosure if the software and program files are disclosed.

Please note that certain specific data derived from the qualified voter file electronic pollbook is subject to disclosure under FOIA, including the lists of registered voters from the Qualified Voter File and the paper printout of the electronic pollbook generated on election night. If members of the public are interested in verifying the names of individuals registered to vote on a certain date or included in the electronic pollbook, they may obtain this information by submitting a FOIA for publicly available records.

Additionally, we are aware that clerks received FOIA requests for a copy of or the opportunity to view tabulator tapes. While the tapes are a public record that can be provided, they are election records that should remain secured until security is released after the final canvass and certification, recounts, and audits. Once you are notified that security has been released in your jurisdiction, you can fulfill these requests.

Subscribers of Clerks (1686 recipients)

Clerks and Election Directors,

We are aware that clerks have recently received additional requests for epollbook (epb) data. Requests for epb data must be directed to the Bureau, to ensure that sensitive information related to both individual voters and the epb are removed before public disclosure of otherwise available information. As stated in our November 14, 2022 email (link below for your convenience), clerks must not publicly release data or files that would reveal the software design or data architecture of the epb, as doing so could compromise the Bureau of Elections' ability to secure and safeguard the software and data from hacking, theft, loss or destruction. The requested file contains proprietary software information, security feature information, and personal identifiable information for voters.

The disclosure of security and technical information is exempt from FOIA and may not be properly redacted if the file is produced by an individual clerk instead of the Bureau. Additionally, the file contains sensitive information regarding your epb laptop(s) that might require you to purchase a new laptop for each precinct if you disclose this information to a 3rd party. The disclosure of sensitive information compromises the integrity of Michigan's elections and may warrant referral for investigation.

If you receive a FOIA request for epb data, the requestor can be directed to the county clerk for paper pollbook copies or to BOE for the log file or voter history.

Hi Heather,

As you may have seen, the Minnesota Supreme Court today rejected an attempt to prohibit Trump from appearing on the Republican primary ballot. The order is attached. An opinion will follow.

The court's rationale is consistent with your argument that the court of claims can reject the petitioners' claims based on the Secretary's lack of power to exclude candidates for lack of qualifications to hold office.

The court concluded that petitioners have standing and their claims are ripe. However, the court held that pursuant to Minnesota's statutory scheme, the presidential nomination primary is an internal party election and the political parties alone determine the candidates on the ballot. Because there is no state statute that prohibits a major political party from placing an ineligible candidate on the ballot, there is no error to correct. Accordingly, the court dismissed the claim without addressing the federal constitutional issue.

Please let us know if you'd like more information or to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

RE: LaBrant v Benson
Court of Claims No. 23-000137-MZ

Dear Clerk,

Plaintiffs in the above captioned-case write to alert Judge Redford to a decision issued on October 25, 2023, by the Colorado District Court denying Donald Trump's motion to dismiss the Complaint in Anderson v Griswold, 2023-CV-32577 (attached). Several conclusions in that decision are relevant to the matter before this Court.

First, the Colorado Court denied Trump's motion to dismiss based on the political question doctrine. Specifically, Trump argued that the Constitution reserves to Congress the decision as to whether a candidate is qualified. The Court evaluated the existing case law, the text of the Constitution, and 3 USC 15, and declined to dismiss on the basis of the political question doctrine. This is relevant to Plaintiffs' arguments at 1 to 6 of their Brief in Opposition to Trump's Motion for Summary Disposition.

Second, the Colorado Court denied Trump's motion to dismiss based on Trump's assertion that the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing. This is relevant to Plaintiffs' arguments at 8 to 19 of their Brief in Opposition to Trump's Motion for Summary Disposition.

Third, the Colorado Court denied Trump's motion to dismiss based on federal preemption. No party has raised that issue in this case, but it reinforces the conclusion that decision of this issue is not committed to Congress.

Fourth, the Colorado Court determined that the issue of whether Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to a President, and the issue of whether Trump engaged in an insurrection, would be decided at the evidentiary hearing set to begin on October 30, 2023, in Colorado.

Sincerely,

Mark Brewer

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

I. LEGAL STANDARD

A complaint must state a plausible claim for relief to survive a C.R.C.P. 12(b)(5) motion to dismiss. Warne v. Hall, 373 P.3d 588, 591 (Colo. 2016). However, motions to dismiss are disfavored, and may be granted only when, assuming all the allegations of the complaint are true, and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, the plaintiff would still not be entitled to any relief under any cognizable legal theory. Colorado Ethics Watch v. Senate Majority Fund, LLC, 269 P.3d 1248, 1253 (Colo. 2012); Denver Post Corp. v. Ritter, 255 P.3d 1083, 1089 (Colo. 2011). Although a complaint need not contain detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff must identify the grounds on which he is entitled to relief, and cannot simply provide "labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." *Bell Atlantic Corp. v. II. ANALYSIS

In his Motion to Dismiss, Intervenor Trump makes the following arguments: (1) the question before the Court is a non-justiciable political question; (2) Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing; (3) Congress has preempted states from judging presidential qualifications; (4) Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment does not apply to Intervenor Trump; (5) the Petition fails to state a claim that violence constituted an insurrection or President Trump engaged in an insurrection; and (6) the case should be moved to Washington, D.C. under Colorado's forum non conveniens statute.

a. Non-Justiciable Political Question

"In general, the Judiciary has a responsibility to decide cases properly before it, even those it 'would gladly avoid.'" Zivotofsky ex rel. Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U.S. 189, 194 (2012) (quoting Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 404 (1821)). A case "involves a political question . . . where there is 'a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it.'" Nixon v. United States, 506 U.S. 224, 228 (1993) (quoting Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962)) In such a case, the United States Supreme Court has held that a court lacks the authority to decide the dispute before it. Zivotofsky, 566 U.S. at 195. This exception is narrow. Id. A court cannot avoid its responsibility to enforce a specific statutory right because the issues have political implications. Id. at 196.

In this case, Intervenor Trump argues that the U.S. Constitution reserves exclusively to the U.S. Congress the decision as to whether a candidate is unqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[1] He does not argue the second basis under the political question doctrine—that a Court is incapable of resolving the question—nor could he. Instead, Intervenor Trump argues the U.S. Constitution reserves exclusively for the United States Congress the power under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to determine whether a party may take office. In doing so, Intervenor Trump relies on cases that address the question of whether various Presidential candidates (Barack Obama, John McCain, and Ted Cruz) were natural born citizens. He does not cite a case holding that the question before this Court (whether a candidate is barred under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment) is barred under the political question doctrine.

i. Intervenor Trump's Cases

Intervenor Trump cites the Third Circuit in Berg v. Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 238 (3d Cir. 2009) for the proposition that the question of whether Barack Obama was a natural born citizen was a non-justiciable political question outside the province of the judiciary. The Court in Berg makes no such holding. Instead, when describing the history of the case, the Third Circuit states, "[w]e also denied that motion, reiterating Berg's apparent lack of standing and also stating that Berg's lawsuit seemed to present a non-justiciable political question." Id. This Court does not have this order in front of it, in which the Third Circuit apparently stated, "the lawsuit seemed to present a non-justiciable political question." Id. However, even if it did, it appears that whatever the Third Circuit did say regarding the political question doctrine was dicta.

In addition to Berg, Intervenor Trump cites a series of trial court opinions, and one California appellate opinion, some published, some unpublished, that largely hold or state in dicta that the plaintiffs' claims are likely also barred under the political question doctrine as a question committed to a coordinate political department. The Court addresses the cases Intervenor Trump cites below.

In Robinson v. Bowen, 567 F.Supp.2d 1144, 1145 (N.D. Cal. 2008), an elector pledged to a third-party candidate filed a motion for preliminary injunction seeking to remove John McCain from the ballot because he was allegedly not a natural born citizen. The Court denied the motion for preliminary injunction because the plaintiff was not likely to succeed on the merits. Id. at 1146. The Court then noted that Article II of the Constitution prescribes the number of presidential electors to which each state is entitled, and the Twelfth Amendment prescribes the manner in which the electors shall elect the President. Id. The Court examined 3 U.S.C. § 15 which directs that Congress "shall open, count, and record the electoral votes" and provides a mechanism for objections. Id. at 1147. Finally, it turned to the Twentieth Amendment which provides instructions on how to proceed if a president elect fails to qualify. Id. Having looked at these various constitutional provisions and statutes, the Robinson Court then concluded, without invoking the political question doctrine, that "[j]udicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course." Id. The course it referred to was a 3 U.S.C. § 15 objection to a candidate and the Twentieth Amendment procedures addressing a failure to qualify. The idea, however, of Court intervention after "Congressional processes have run their course" is directly contrary to a holding that this is a political question—where there is no judicial review permitted.

In Kerchner v. Obama, 669 F.Supp.2d 477, 479-80 (D. N.J. 2009), two citizens brought actions against various government officials, including the U.S. Congress, alleging President Obama was not a natural born citizen and seeking to compel Congress to hold hearings, conduct investigations, and take certain actions following said investigations. The Court held the plaintiffs did not have Article III standing. Id. at 483. In a footnote, the Court noted that even if there was standing, the case likely fell into "the category of generalized grievances that are most appropriately handled by the legislative branch." Id. at n. 5. It continued that "it appears that Plaintiffs have raised claims that are likewise barred under the 'political question doctrine' as a question demonstrably committed to a coordinate political department," citing to Article II, Section 1 of the U.S. Constitution and the Twelfth Amendment, Section 3. Id.

Keyes v. Bowen, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 207 (Cal. Ct. App. 2010) is the only appellate court opinion cited that has addressed the issue. There, the appellate court held the Secretary of State had no duty to investigate presidential eligibility and extensively cited Robinson, supra, for the proposition that "presidential qualification issues are best resolved in Congress." Keyes, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d at 216.

Of the cases Intervenor Trump relies on, the Court in Grinols v. Electoral Coll., No. 2:12-CV-02997-MCE-DAD, 2013 WL 2294885 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2013) (unpublished), aff'd, 622 F.App'x 624 (9th Cir. 2015) had the most extensive analysis. First, it noted that the "natural born citizen" requirement does not designate which branch should address whether the candidate is qualified. Id. at *6. It further noted Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution establishes that the Electoral College elects the President. Id. It then pointed out that "[t]he Twelfth Amendment empowers the President of the Senate to preside over the meeting between the House of Representatives and the Senate in which the President of the Senate counts the electoral votes." Id. According to the Court, "[t]he Twentieth Amendment empowers Congress to create a procedure in the event that neither the President-elect nor Vice President-elect qualifies to serve as President of the Unites States [sic]." Id. Finally, the Court pointed out that "the Twenty-Fifth Amendment provides for removal of the President should he be unfit to serve." Id. Based on those provisions, the Court held "the Constitution make[s] clear that the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not to federal courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President of the United States." Id.

In Strunk v. New York State Bd. of Elections, No. 6500/11, 2012 WL 1205117, at *12 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 11, 2012) (unreported disposition), aff'd, 5 N.Y.S.3d 483 (N.Y. App. Div. 2015) the Court held the framework for the Electoral College and its voting procedures for President and Vice President is found in Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution. More specifically, the Court noted that 3 U.S.C. § 15 dictates "the counting of electoral votes and the process for objecting" to votes. Id. According to the Court, "[n]o objections were made by members of the Senate and House of Representatives, which would have resolved these objections if made." Id.

Finally, in Taitz v. Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (S.D. Miss. Mar. 31, 2015) (unpublished), the Court, relying on Keyes and Grinols, supra, held "this court can find no authority in the Constitution which would permit it to determine that a sitting president is unqualified for office or a president-elect in unqualified to take office. These prerogatives are firmly committed to the legislative branch of our government."

ii. Petitioners' Cases

Petitioners primarily cite Elliot v. Cruz, 137 A.3d 646 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2016),[2] aff'd, 134 A.3d 51 (Pa. 2016), cert. denied, 580 U.S. 867 (2016). There, the Court reviewed Article II, Section 1 and the Twelfth Amendment of the United States Constitution which set forth the procedure by which a person is elected to the office of the President. Id. at 650. The Court in Elliot described Article II, Section 1 and the Twelfth Amendment as accomplishing the following:

1. vested in the legislatures of the several states, not Congress, the power to "appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled."
2. commanded the electors, once selected, to meet in their respective states, and vote by ballot for two persons, and then to transmit their votes to the nation's seat of government.
3. commanded, upon receipt, the President of the Senate open the ballots and count the votes in the presence of the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives.
4. provide that only in the case of a tie, or the absence of a majority, does the Constitution allow Congress to choose the President and Vice President.

Id. (quoting U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2).

After reviewing the various constitutional provisions that supposedly support the Court dismissing the case due to the political question doctrine, the Court in Elliot concluded that the Constitution does not vest the Electoral College with the power to determine eligibility of a presidential candidate. Id. at 650-51. The Court similarly concluded that Congress has no control over the process other than deciding the day on which electors "'give their votes.'" Id. at 651 (quoting U.S. CONST. amend. XII). The Court then compared the provisions regarding Presidential eligibility with those regarding the eligibility of Congress where the U.S. Constitution clearly vests in Congress the power to determine the eligibility of its own members. Id. The Court concluded that because the Constitution does not vest any entity of the federal government with the power to ensure that only persons who are constitutionally eligible become the President, that determination is reserved for the Courts. Id.

The only other case the Petitioners cite that squarely addresses this issue is Williams v. Cruz, OAL Dkt. No. STE 5016-16, pp. 4-5 (N.J. Off. of Admin. Law Apr. 12, 2016), a New Jersey administrative law decision where the judge examined the various Constitutional provisions and held:

> While Congress is the Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its Own Members, including their citizenship . . . Congress is not afforded any similar role in connection with the issue of Presidential eligibility. There is no basis to conclude that the issue of eligibility of a person to serve as President has been textually committed to the Congress.

iii. Analysis

Intervenor Trump argues the weight of the law favors a holding that the political question doctrine precludes judicial review, and that Petitioner can only cite "two idiosyncratic state cases that never received appellate review."[3] The Petitioners, on the other hand, argue nothing in the Constitution commits to Congress and the Electoral College the exclusive power to determine presidential qualifications and that Intervenor Trump's cases are distinguishable because in none of those cases did the plaintiffs bring pre-election suits in state court under a state law authorizing ballot access challenges.

The Court agrees with Intervenor Trump that the weight of cases have held that challenges to an individual's qualifications to be President are barred by the political question doctrine. The Court, however, agrees with Petitioners that most of the cases Intervenor Trump cites involved post-election attempts to remove former President Obama from office and that there is at least some distinction between ballot access cases and removing a sitting President. Further, most of the cases concluding that the political question doctrine applies did so with very little analysis of what the constitutional provisions they rely on provide. For that reason, the Court looks to the specific provisions to determine if they meet the "textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department" standard. Baker, 369 U.S. at 217.

ARTICLE II OF THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 provides:

> Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

This clause vests the States authority to appoint electors. The Court cannot find anything in this clause supporting a holding that the Constitution directs Congress to determine whether a candidate for President or a President-elect is constitutionally ineligible.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 3 provides:

> The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two-thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice-President.

This clause directs that the Electors shall meet and certify a list of whom the Electors voted for and transmit it to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall the open the Certificates and count them. It also outlines what happens if there is a tie. The Court cannot find anything in this clause supporting a holding that the Constitution directs Congress to determine whether a candidate for President or a President-elect is constitutionally ineligible.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 4 provides: "The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States."

This clause says that Congress sets the date that the Electors meet to certify their votes. The Court cannot find anything in this clause supporting a holding that the Constitution directs Congress to determine whether a candidate for President or a President-elect is constitutionally ineligible.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 5 provides:

> No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

While this clause sets out certain constitutional qualifications, it says nothing regarding what branch of the government shall determine if the candidate meets those eligibility qualifications.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 6 provides:

> In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

This clause addresses what happens when a President is removed and does not address who determines whether a candidate for President or President-elect meets eligibility qualifications.

THE TWELFTH AMENDMENT

> The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;–The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;–The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.–The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

The Twelfth Amendment modifies Article II, Section 1, Clause 3 and makes it clear that the President and Vice President are chosen separately but together. If there is no majority or a tie for President, the House of Representatives chooses the President. In the interim, the newly elected Vice President will serve as President. While the Twelfth Amendment references the "constitutional disability of the President" and that "no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President," the Court cannot find anything in this clause supporting a holding that the Constitution directs Congress to determine whether a candidate for president or a President-elect is constitutionally ineligible.

SECTION 3 OF THE TWENTIETH AMENDMENT

> If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

U.S. CONST. amend. XX, § 3.

This provision addresses what happens if the President-elect dies or fails to qualify. It also allows Congress to make law to provide for the case when neither the President-elect nor the Vice President-elect qualify. Robinson, 567 F.Supp.2d at 1147; Keyes, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d at 216; and Grinols, 2013 WL 2294885 at *6 cite the Twentieth Amendment for the proposition that it empowers Congress to create a procedure if neither the President-elect nor Vice President-elect qualifies to serve as President of the United States. See Peace & Freedom Party v. Bowen, 912 F.Supp.2d 905, 911 (E.D. Cal.

2012), aff'd sub nom. Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014) ("Section 3 [of the Twentieth Amendment] was intended to provide for a then-unprovided for contingency: the selection and succession of the presidency in the event that the president elect, vice president elect, or both could not assume office" (citing 75 Cong. Rec. 3831 (1932) (statement of Rep. Cable))). And Congress did just that when it passed the Presidential Succession Act of 1947, 3 U.S.C. § 19. What Congress has not done is provide for any process to determine whether a President qualifies and what entity is supposed to make that determination. Further, nothing in the text of the Amendment commits to Congress the exclusive authority to render judgment on a presidential candidate's fitness to be placed on the ballot. See Lindsay, 750 F.3d at 1065 ("nothing in the Twentieth Amendment states or implies that Congress has the exclusive authority to pass on the eligibility of candidates for president" (emphasis in original)). However, unlike the other Constitutional provisions relied on by the decisions Intervenor Trump relies on, section 3 of the Twentieth Amendment does include the word "qualify" and suggests that someone or something has decided whether a President qualifies to be President. It is for this reason that the Court has asked the Parties to provide the Court with testimony regarding the historical meaning and interpretation of this Amendment, if such evidence exists.

Finally, the decisions Intervenor Trump cites rely heavily on 3 U.S.C. § 15 for the proposition that there is an objection process when the electoral college votes are counted and that it is during this process that the objections to the qualifications of a President should be made. Robinson, 567 F.Supp.2d at 1147 ("It is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify"); Keyes, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d at 216 (quoting Robinson, supra); Strunk, 2012 WL 1205117 at *12 ("the counting of electoral votes and the process for objecting for the 2009 Presidential election is found in 3 USC § 15. . . . This required the meeting of the joint session of Congress to count the 2008 electoral votes. . . . No objections were made by members of the Senate and House of Representatives, which would have resolved these objections if made. This is the exclusive means to resolve objections to the electors' selection of a President or a Vice President"); Taitz, 2015 WL 11017373 at *13 (noting that the Keyes Court cited the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 when it "stated that the Constitution and laws of the United States delegate to Congress the authority to raise and decide objections to a presidential nominee's candidacy"); see also Oines v. Ritchie, Dkt. No. A12-1765 (Minn. Oct. 18, 2012) (citing Keyes in support of the conclusion that 3 U.S.C. § 15 provides the avenue for challenging constitutional qualifications of presidential candidates).

Congress, however, amended 3 U.S.C. § 15 in 2022. As amended, 3 U.S.C. § 15(d)(2)(B)(ii) provides: "The only grounds for objections shall be as follows: (I) The electors of the State were not lawfully certified under a certificate of ascertainment of appointment of electors according to section 5(a)(1). (II) The vote of one or more electors has not been regularly given."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

As such, it appears that Congress has disavowed any ability it once had to consider objections other than the two listed above—including any regarding the constitutional qualifications of the President-elect.

SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 3.

This provision clearly gives Congress the ability to remove a constitutional disability should a person be disqualified under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. However, it says nothing regarding what government body would adjudicate or determine such disability in the first instance.[4] The Court notes, however, it would be strange for Congress to be the only entity that is empowered to determine the disability and then also the entity that is empowered to remove it.

[4] Intervenor Trump argues that "Section Three itself contains an exclusive grant of jurisdiction to Congress." The argument is that if this Court were to disqualify Intervenor Trump from being a candidate, it would strip Congress of the ability to remove the disability. The Court disagrees. If this Court were to disqualify Intervenor Trump, there would be nothing standing in the way of Congress immediately removing that disability. In fact, there is nothing standing in Congress's way of removing the disability prior to Secretary Griswold or this Court determining whether Intervenor Trump is disqualified in the first instance.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

The Court, having considered the above, declines to dismiss this case under the political question doctrine. A controversy involves a political question when, as is argued here, there is "a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department." Baker, 369 U.S. at 217. As the foregoing demonstrates, there is no textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department. The text is simply silent as to the specific issue, and arguments by inference, implication, or convention fail to demonstrate the kind of strong "textually demonstrable commitment" necessary for the Court to find the matter nonjusticiable. See, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 1 ("Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members"); Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 548 (1969) (Art. I, § 5, cl. 1 is a "textually demonstrable commitment" to Congress to judge only the qualifications expressly set forth in art. I, § 2, cl. 2, and nothing more).

The Court will, however, revisit this ruling when it makes a final ruling following the hearing set to begin October 30, 2023 to the extent that there is any evidence or argument at trial that provides the Court with additional guidance on whether the issue of presidential eligibility has been delegated to the United States Congress. Baker, 369 U.S. at 198 ("In the instance of nonjusticiability, consideration of the cause is not wholly and immediately foreclosed; rather, the Court's inquiry necessarily proceeds to the point of deciding whether the duty asserted can be judicially identified and its breach judicially determined, and whether protection for the right asserted can be judicially molded.")

b. Whether the Fourteenth Amendment Is Self-Executing

Citing a law review article authored by Joshua Blackman and Seth Barrett Tillman, Intervenor Trump argues "Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing and cannot be applied to support a cause of action seeking judicial relief absent Congressional enactment of a statute authorizing Plaintiffs to bring such a claim in court." Intervenor Trump argues that the Blackman and Tillman law review article substantially refutes the law review article authored by William Baude and Michael Stokes Paulsen which the Petitioners cite in their Response causing the authors "to substantially modify their own analysis" and for a well-respected constitutional scholar, Steven Calabresi, to reverse his position on the matter. The Court has reviewed the modifications of the Baude and Paulsen law review article and the modifications do not in any way reverse their positions. Further, the retraction from Calabresi had nothing to do with whether Section Three was self-executing but was rather based on whether Section Three applies to Presidents. This leaves the Court with two law reviews that are over 100 pages each with contradictory conclusions.

Intervenor Trump argues there is "[a]mple precedent" supporting Blackman and Tillman's conclusion that Section Three was not self-executing. But the only precedent cited is In re Griffin, 11 F.Cas. 7 (C.C. Va. 1869) written by Chief Justice Salmon Chase while riding circuit.

The Petitioners, on the other hand, argue that whether Section 3 is self-executing is irrelevant because Petitioners are proceeding under Colorado's Election Code which provides it a cause of action. The Court agrees. To the extent that the Court ultimately holds that C.R.S. § 1-4-1204 allows the Court to order Secretary Griswold to exclude a candidate under the Fourteenth Amendment, the Court holds that states can, and have, applied Section 3 pursuant to state statutes without federal enforcement legislation. See, e.g., State v. Griffin, No. D-101-CV-2022-00473, 2022 WL 4295619, at *16 (N.M. Dist. Ct. Sept. 6, 2022) (adjudicating Section 3 challenge under state quo warranto law); Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N.C. 199, 200-01 (1869) (adjudicating Section 3 challenge as mandamus action), appeal dismissed sub nom. Worthy v. Comm'rs, 76 U.S. 611 (1869); In re Tate, 63 N.C. 308, 309 (1869) (adjudicating Section 3 challenge as mandamus action); State ex rel. Sandlin v. Watkins, 21 La.Ann. 631, 632 (La. 1869) (adjudicating Section 3 challenge under state quo warranto law); Rowan v. Greene, Dkt. No. 2222582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57- Beaudrot (Ga. Off. Admin. Hr'gs May 6, 2022) (state administrative Section 3 challenge).[5]

[5] Intervenor Trump argues that none of the cited cases are relevant as such cases "relied upon state laws patterned after Section Three that applied to state officials." Not so. In these cases, state law provided the procedural avenue for challenging a candidate's fitness for office, but the substantive question remained qualification under the Fourteenth Amendment, not merely a state law patterned after Section Three. See Griffin, 2022 WL 4295619 at *16 ("The Court therefore concludes that . . . Mr. Griffin became disqualified under Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment"); Worthy, 63 N.C. at 200 (procedural statute in question "provides that no person prohibited from holding office by section 3 of the Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as Article XIV, shall qualify under this act or hold office in this State" (internal quotation omitted)); Tate, 63 N.C. at 309 (applying the rule in Worthy to bar County Attorneys from office, to wit: "We are of the opinion that he is disqualified from holding office under the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States"); Sandlin, 21 La.Ann. at 631-33 (in quo warranto proceeding brought under "the intrusion act (No. 156, acts of 1868)," qualification of candidate was assessed under both the "eligibility act, No. 39, of the acts of the State Legislature of 1868, and the third Section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." Supreme Court of Louisiana held that the eligibility act was not applicable to the proceeding, and that "[t]he inquiry in this case is, has the defendant, under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and those of the act of Congress of twenty-fifth June, 1868 [re-admitting secessionist states to the Union, requiring compliance with Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment], the legal right to discharge the duties of the office of District Judge of the Eleventh Judicial District.").

c. Whether Federal Preemption Applies

Intervenor Trump argues that federal law has preempted the States from governing ballot access for presidential candidates.

Under the field preemption doctrine, "the States are precluded from regulating conduct in a field that Congress, acting within its proper authority, has determined must be regulated by its exclusive governance." Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 399 (2012).

> [Congressional] intent to displace state law altogether can be inferred from a framework of regulation "so pervasive . . . that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it" or where there is a "federal interest . . . so dominant that the federal system will be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject."

Id. (quoting Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230 (1947)). In support of this argument, Trump cites the Twelfth Amendment, the Twentieth Amendment, and 3 U.S.C. § 15 for the proposition that federal law occupies the field.

Based on the discussion above regarding the political question doctrine, it is unclear to the Court that there is any mechanism under federal law to determine whether a candidate for President or President-elect meets the eligibility requirements let alone a framework of regulation so pervasive that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it. The Court declines to dismiss this action based on the field preemption doctrine.

e. Whether President Trump Engaged in an Insurrection

This is an issue that will be addressed at the hearing set to begin October 30, 2023.

f. Forum Selection Clause

Lastly, Intervenor Trump seeks dismissal of the action based on the forum. Colorado law sets out five requirements which all must be met to dismiss on forum non conveniens grounds. Pursuant to C.R.S. § 13- 20-1004(1), they are:

1. "The claimant or claimants are not residents of the state of Colorado." C.R.S. § 13-20-1004(1)(a). Here, all Petitioners are Colorado Residents.

2. "An alternative forum exists." C.R.S. § 13-20-1004(1)(b). Intervenor Trump has not identified a viable alternative forum. The three forums he suggests are: (1) Congress—but as discussed above, there is no mechanism by which a Colorado elector can object to Intervenor Trump's qualification to Congress; (2) Criminal Prosecution—Intervenor Trump provides no explanation about how the Petitioners can seek criminal prosecution against Intervenor Trump in Washington, D.C.; and (3) Federal Court in Washington, D.C. But, as Intervenor Trump acknowledges, the Petitioners do not have standing in Federal Court. No adequate alternative forum, therefore, has been identified.

3. "The injury or damage alleged to have been suffered occurred outside of the state of Colorado." C.R.S. § 13-20-1004(1)(c). The alleged injury, in this case, is having an ineligible candidate on the ballot. That injury will occur in Colorado.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

4. "A substantial portion of the witnesses and evidence is outside the state of Colorado." C.R.S. § 13-20-1004(1)(d). Here, Intervenor Trump concludes this is the case but has not put forth any specific witness that he'd like to attend that is unavailable at trial.

5. "There is a significant possibility that Colorado law will not apply to some or all of the claims." C.R.S. § 13-20-1004(1)(e). There is no doubt that Colorado election law will play a significant part in any decision this Court renders.

As Intervenor Trump acknowledges, except in the "most unusual circumstances," a resident plaintiff's choice of forum is honored. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. v. Lohn, 557 P.2d 373, 374 (Colo. 1976). In fact, Colorado courts have "extremely limited discretion under this doctrine to dismiss an action filed by a resident plaintiff." Cox v. Sage Hosp. Res., LLC, 413 P.3d 302, 304 (Colo. App. 2017). Here, the Petitioners all reside in Colorado and have exercised their right to object to Intervenor Trump's name being placed onto the ballot under C.R.S. § 1-1-113 and C.R.S. § 1-4-1204. While Trump argues that they are nominal plaintiffs, he fails to explain who the actual plaintiffs are in this matter.

In short, Intervenor Trump's motion under the forum non conveniens statute fails because he has not articulated why this is a "most unusual circumstance," nor has he offered an alternative forum or identified witnesses he cannot call because they won't come to Colorado. Rather, it appears that he is simply objecting to the C.R.S. § 1-1-113 process.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

John Anthony Castro

Opinion No. 2023 DNH 137

New Hampshire Secretary of State,
David M. Scanlan, and Donald J. Trump

MEMORANDUM ORDER

This case presents jurisdictional issues of standing and justiciability that the court must resolve before addressing the merits of the plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff John Anthony Castro seeks an injunction barring the New Hampshire Secretary of State from placing former President Donald J. Trump's name on the New Hampshire Republican Presidential primary ballot, on the ground that Trump is ineligible to serve as president under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.[1] Castro named the Secretary as a defendant and Trump as a nominal defendant.[2] The defendants argue that the case should be dismissed because Castro does not have standing to seek the requested relief, and his claim raises a nonjusticiable political question.

After reviewing the parties' filings and holding an evidentiary hearing and oral argument on October 20, 2023, the court finds that it lacks jurisdiction to consider Castro's request for injunctive relief. Castro has not established that he has or will suffer

[1] While Castro is appearing pro se in this litigation, he represents that he has two law degrees. He also represents that he is not a member of the bar in any state or jurisdiction.

[2] For ease of reference, the court refers to both Trump and the Secretary as defendants throughout this Order.

a political competitive injury arising from Trump's participation in the New Hampshire Republican Presidential primary. Thus, Castro has not carried his burden to show that he has standing to bring his claim. Further, even if Castro had standing, the court is inclined to find, consistent with the weight of authority, that Castro's claim raises a nonjusticiable political question. The court accordingly denies Castro's motion for a preliminary injunction and dismisses the case.

I. Background

Castro "asks this Court to issue an injunction preventing Defendant Secretary of State from accepting and/or processing Defendant Donald John Trump's ballot access documentation, including, but not limited to nominating papers and nominating petitions."[3] As grounds for relief, Castro alleges that Trump "provided 'aid or comfort' to an insurrection in violation of Section 3 of the [Fourteenth] Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and is, therefore, constitutionally ineligible to pursue or hold any public office in the United States."[4] Castro also alleges that Trump is a "nominal" defendant; he brings no claim requesting relief against Trump.[5]

[3] Compl. (doc. no. 1) at ¶ 16. Because Trump has now filed his declaration as a candidate in the New Hampshire primary and paid the filing fee, Castro's claim for injunctive relief may have become moot. Assuming, without deciding, that an injunction could stop the Secretary from "accepting and/or processing" Trump's "ballot access documentation," the court proceeds to address the other jurisdictional issues, which are determinative.

Shortly after filing a complaint in this court on September 5, 2023, Castro filed a motion for an expedited preliminary injunction, on September 17.[6] A few weeks later, the court granted the New Hampshire Republican State Committee's motion to intervene in the case. The court then held an evidentiary hearing and oral argument on October 20, to address jurisdictional issues prior to considering the merits of Castro's claim.[7] Castro, counsel for the defendants, and counsel for the intervenor attended and participated in the hearing. Castro, the Secretary, and Trump also filed witness lists, exhibit lists, and proposed findings of fact and rulings of law.

The following facts are agreed to or based on the evidence (testimony, exhibits, and stipulations) presented at the hearing, as noted. Castro has declared his candidacy for the New Hampshire Republican Presidential primary and paid the filing fee.[8] Castro has also declared his candidacy in the Nevada Republican Presidential primary.[9] Trump has now (five days after the hearing) also declared his candidacy in the New Hampshire Republican Presidential primary and paid the filing fee.

Castro and the defendants stipulated to the following description of Castro's campaign in New Hampshire:

> Presently, Plaintiff's campaign has no serious prospect of getting any New Hampshire delegates to the Republican National Convention, nor any > significant number of votes that would otherwise have gone to Donald Trump, nor any appreciable share of donations that otherwise would have gone to Donald Trump; as of right now.[10]

Castro further acknowledges that he is, at best, a "longshot Republican Presidential candidate."[11] Trump introduced evidence of Castro's filings with the Federal Election Commission, which show that Castro's campaign has no contributions and no expenditures.[12] Further, Castro's campaign has not run or purchased any advertising in New Hampshire or any other state.[13]

During the hearing, Trump called Michael Dennehy to testify as an expert witness regarding Castro's campaign in New Hampshire and the effects, if any, of Trump's participation in the New Hampshire Presidential primary on Castro's prospects as a candidate. Dennehy has worked as a political consultant and strategist for over three decades and has a consulting firm in New Hampshire, Dennehy & Bouley.[14] He has served in a variety of positions in Republican politics, including as a committeeman on the Republican National Committee, Executive Director of the New Hampshire Republican Party, and a political director and campaign manager in several Republican political campaigns.[15] The parties agreed to the admissibility of Dennehy's opinion testimony under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, and Castro cross-examined Dennehy.

Dennehy opined that Castro has no chance of winning a delegate in the New Hampshire Presidential primary election.[16] In explaining this opinion, Dennehy enumerated a number of observations regarding Castro's campaign. He testified that "polling data" on Castro was "nonexistent"[17]; to his knowledge, and consistent with Castro's admissions, Castro has no advertisements, campaign office, or employees in New Hampshire[18]; and Castro's campaign website is "amateur" and "incomplete."[19] Dennehy also testified that the presence or absence of Trump on the primary ballot in New Hampshire would not affect Castro's chances in that election "[b]ecause there is no activity to [Castro's] campaign."[20]

Castro testified at the hearing and was cross-examined by Trump's counsel as well. In response to questions from Trump's counsel, Castro could not identify any New Hampshire voter to whom he has spoken for purposes of his campaign (although he testified that he had "[d]iscussions with voters").[21] He also confirmed that his FEC filings show that his campaign has no contributors, other than himself, and almost no money.[22] Castro also agreed that a primary goal of his candidacy is to establish the impermissibility of Trump's presidency, and that he has filed 27 lawsuits seeking to keep Trump's name off of the ballot in various states.[23]

III. Analysis

The defendants challenge Castro's claim on two jurisdictional grounds—lack of standing and nonjusticiability under the political question doctrine. The court considers standing first and then turns to the issue of justiciability.

A. Standing

"Under Article III of the Constitution, a plaintiff needs a 'personal stake' in the case." Biden v. Nebraska, 143 S. Ct. 2355, 2365 (2023) (quoting TransUnion LLC v. Ramirez, 141 S. Ct. 2190, 2203 (2021)). More specifically, "the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact—a concrete and imminent harm to a legally protected interest, like property or money—that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct and that is likely to be redressed by the lawsuit." Id. (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 (1992)). Also, "[a]n inquiry into standing must be based on the facts as they existed when the action was commenced." Ramírez v. Sánchez Ramos, 438 F.3d 92, 97 (1st Cir. 2006). Nevertheless, "a person exposed to a risk of future harm may pursue forward-looking, injunctive relief to prevent the harm from occurring, at least so long as the risk of harm is sufficiently imminent and substantial." Webb v. Injured Workers Pharm., LLC, 72 F.4th 365, 372 (1st Cir. 2023) (quoting TransUnion, 141 S. Ct. at 2210). The injury, however, must be "concrete and particularized" and "not conjectural or hypothetical." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560.

The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing standing. TransUnion, 141 S. Ct. at 2207. To carry that burden, the plaintiff must satisfy the three-part standing test against each defendant "with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." Webb, 72 F.4th at 371-72 (quoting TransUnion, 141 S. Ct. at 2208); see also Disability Rts. S.C. v. McMaster, 24 F.4th 893, 900 (4th Cir. 2022); Sierra Club, Inc. v. Granite Shore Power LLC, No. 19-CV-216-JL, 2019 WL 8407255, at *4 (D.N.H. Sept. 13, 2019). Here, where the court has held an evidentiary hearing on the jurisdictional issues including standing, Castro bears the burden to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that he has standing to litigate his claim. ForUsAll, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Labor, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2023 WL 5559682, at *3 (D.D.C. Aug. 2, 2023) (the plaintiff bears the burden of showing standing by a preponderance of the evidence (citing Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561)).

In attempting to satisfy his burden, Castro invokes the theory of competitor standing. This theory arose in the context of the commercial marketplace, specifically when government-imposed restrictions put certain market participants at a competitive disadvantage.[24] Katin v. Nat'l Real Est. Info. Servs., Inc., No. 07-10882-DPW, 2009 WL 929554, at *4 (D. Mass. Mar. 31, 2009). "In discrete contexts, courts have extended competitor standing to the political marketplace." AB PAC v. Fed. Election Comm'n, No. 22-2139(TJK), 2023 WL 4560803, at *4 (D.D.C. July 17, 2023) (citing Shays v.

[24] During the hearing, Castro relied heavily on the decision in New World Radio, Inc. v. F.C.C. to support his theory of competitor standing. 294 F.3d 164 (D.C. Cir. 2002). In that case, the plaintiff challenged the Federal Communications Commission's decision to allow another company to renew its license for a radio station. The plaintiff asserted that the FCC's action brought that company "one step closer to competing with, and therefore economically injuring," the plaintiff's Washington, D.C. radio station. Id. at 170. The New World court concluded that the plaintiff lacked competitor standing in part because the FCC's action was, "at most, the first step in the direction of future competition." Id. at 172 (competitor standing is "premised on the petitioner's status as a direct and current competitor whose bottom line may be adversely affected by the challenged government action") (emphasis in original). Neither the facts, the reasoning, nor the holding of New World support Castro's position.

FEC, 414 F.3d 76, 83-89, 92 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (candidates) and Natural Law Party of U.S. v. FEC,111 F. Supp. 2d 33, 45-46 (D.D.C. 2000) (political parties)); see also Schulz v. Williams, 44 F.3d 48, 53 (2d Cir. 1994) (political parties); Fulani v. Hogsett, 917 F.2d 1028, 1030 (7th Cir. 1990) (same); Nelson v. Warner, 472 F. Supp. 3d 297, 303-04 (S.D. W.Va. 2020) (finding competitor standing because a statute that prescribed the ballot order of candidates harmed plaintiff's electoral prospects).

In particular, courts have found a competitive injury in the political context where the plaintiff is subjected to "the burden of being forced to compete under the weight of a state-imposed disadvantage." Mecinas v. Hobbs, 30 F.4th 890, 899 (9th Cir. 2022). For example, in Shays v. FEC, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that "when regulations illegally structure a competitive environment—whether an agency proceeding, a market, or a reelection race—parties defending concrete interests (e.g., retention of elected office) in that environment suffer legal harm under Article III." 414 F.3d at 87; see also Mecinas, 30 F.4th at 898 (holding that that a ballot-order statute created an illegally structured competitive environment that supported standing).

Outside of state-imposed disadvantages in elections, "courts have [also] held that a candidate or his political party has standing to challenge the inclusion of an allegedly ineligible rival on the ballot, on the theory that doing so hurts the candidate's or party's own chances of prevailing in the election." Hollander v. McCain, 566 F. Supp. 2d 63, 68 (D.N.H. 2008) (citing Tex. Dem. Party v. Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 586-87 & n.4 (5th Cir. 2006); Schulz, 44 F.3d at 53; and Fulani, 917 F.2d at 1030 and noting Gottlieb v. FEC, 143 F.3d 618, 622 (D.C.Cir.1998) (distinguishing voters who challenge candidate's eligibility)). Having traced the general contours of the relevant standing theories, the court now assesses Castro's evidence as to each of the three elements of standing, beginning with his purported injury, and then turning to traceability and redressability, which are analyzed together.

Injury. To demonstrate an injury as a political competitor, a plaintiff must show that he has "a chance of prevailing in the election." Grinols v. Electoral College, No. 12-cv-2997-MCE, 2013 WL 2294885, at *8 (E.D. Calif. May 23, 2013). That is, the plaintiff must "truly [be] in competition" with the allegedly ineligible candidate. Liberty Legal Found. v. Nat'l Dem. Party of the USA, Inc., 875 F. Supp. 2d 791, 800-01 (W.D. Tenn. 2012) (finding no political competitor standing for plaintiffs challenging President Obama's eligibility to run for president, where neither plaintiff "alleged that he is a Tennessee political party's nominee for the office, that his name will appear on the ballot for Tennessee's general election in November, that he is campaigning in the state of Tennessee, that any registered voter in Tennessee intends to cast a vote for him, or that President Obama's presence on the ballot will in any way injure either candidate's campaign.").

Castro makes no attempt to demonstrate that he is actually competing with Trump for votes and contributions, as required under the operative competitor standing theory. The evidence shows that Castro has not campaigned in New Hampshire or elsewhere. Castro has not provided any evidence suggesting that he has voters or contributors in New Hampshire or elsewhere, or that he will benefit from voter or contributor defections from Trump to himself.[25] To the contrary, he acknowledges that he will not win any delegates in the primary. Consistent with this, Dennehy opined (without serious challenge) that Castro cannot win a single delegate in the New Hampshire primary, and he has no campaign activity.

The weaknesses in Castro's theory of competitive injury do not stop there. His claimed injury is also speculative, as it depends on what voters and contributors—independent, third parties—may do if Trump's name is not listed on the New Hampshire primary ballot. Castro provides no evidence that any Trump supporter would support Castro under that circumstance. By contrast, Trump provided Dennehy's opinion that no Trump supporters would switch allegiance to Castro if Trump does not appear on the ballot. An injury based on speculation about the decisions of independent actors does not confer standing. See Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. v. Boockvar, 493 F. Supp. 3d 331, 379 (W.D. Pa. 2020) (holding that it would not "endorse standing theories that rest on speculation about the decisions of independent actors" (quoting Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 414 (2013)).

[25] Castro's testimony at the hearing about his media coverage, which is not supported by any substantiating evidence, is not persuasive. The court has no way of knowing whether the purported media coverage focused on Castro as a candidate actually seeking the Republican nomination for president, or as a litigant seeking to disqualify Trump. The evidence in this case suggests the latter, and not the former, and does not support standing. Dennehy testified at length about the extent of media coverage that would be necessary to make Castro a viable candidate, and there is no dispute that Castro has not received that type of attention. Further, even if Castro were able to attract substantial media attention in the future, standing depends on the circumstances that existed when Castro filed his complaint and cannot be based on subsequent events.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Further, the evidence indicates that Castro is creating his own injury in order to manufacture standing to challenge Trump's eligibility to run for president. Indeed, by his own admission, Castro declared as a candidate and paid the filing fee to show the impermissibility of Trump's presidency. He asserts that one of his goals in the campaign is "to demonstrate his legal ingenuity, ability to effectuate a national litigation strategy with minimal resources (i.e. guerrilla lawfare), and demonstrate executive leadership capabilities."[26] This practice of manufacturing standing to pursue a cause through litigation is not supported by the law. See Equal Means Equal v. Ferriero, 3 F.4th 24, 30 (1st Cir. 2021); accord Elizabeth Cady Stanton Tr. v. Neronha, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2023 WL 6387874, at *5 (D.R.I. Sept. 8, 2023); see also Webb, 72 F.4th at 373 (holding that "plaintiff could not manufacture standing by incurring mitigation costs in the absence of an impending harm").

In sum, the evidence demonstrates that Castro is not competing and will not compete with Trump to win the New Hampshire primary, and for that reason, he is not a political competitor in the primary. Contrary to Castro's contention, he does not have a cognizable injury simply because his name is on the New Hampshire primary ballot, and he cannot manufacture standing by declaring his candidacy and paying the fee. For all of these reasons, Castro has not shown that he is suffering or would suffer an actual, competitive injury if Trump's name is listed on the New Hampshire Presidential primary ballot.

Traceability and redressability. The traceability element of standing, "essentially a causation element of Article III standing, requires the plaintiff to show a sufficiently direct causal connection between the challenged action and the identified harm." Dantzler, Inc. v. Empresas Berrios Inventory & Operations, Inc., 958 F.3d 38, 47 (1st Cir. 2020) (cleaned up). While some indirect causation may be sufficient, "[t]he Supreme Court has cautioned against courts finding that a plaintiff's injury is fairly traceable to a defendant's conduct where the plaintiff alleges a causal chain dependent on actions of third parties." Id. at 48. The redressability element, in turn, requires proof that it is "likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561 (1992); accord Dep't of Educ. v. Brown, 600 U.S. 551, 561 (2023). In many cases, traceability and redressability are addressed together as "two sides of a causation coin." Brookline Opportunities, LLC v. Town of Brookline, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2023 WL 4405659 at *5 n.8 (D.N.H. July 7, 2023) (quoting Dynalantic Corp. v. Dep't of Def., 115 F.3d 1012, 1017 (D.C. Cir. 1997)).

Because Castro has not shown a concrete and particularized injury, which is essential to carry his burden of establishing standing, the court need not address the traceability and redressability elements. Nevertheless, the court takes this opportunity to note that, even if Castro could establish an injury, he cannot meet the traceability and redressability requirements for standing.

Castro is seeking injunctive relief barring the Secretary from placing Trump's name on the New Hampshire Presidential primary ballot. This remedy would not redress Castro's purported injury because Dennehy testified, and Castro acknowledges, that

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Trump's absence from the primary ballot would not affect the number of votes or contributions Castro would receive. Further, even if the Secretary refused to accept Trump's declaration of candidacy, as Castro requests, Trump could appear on completed ballots as a write-in candidate and still compete for and receive votes. Finally, the Secretary is not causing Trump's campaign to be active in New Hampshire and cannot stop its activities here. In other words, Trump's campaign activities and presence on the ballot are traceable to Trump, but not to the Secretary.

Finally, Castro seeks no relief from Trump in the complaint, and he seeks no restraint against Trump in his motion for injunctive relief. He simply names Trump as a "nominal" defendant. In the absence of any relief to redress his alleged injury, Castro lacks standing to maintain this lawsuit, even if he can show a competitive injury. Castro's motion for injunctive relief is thus denied, and his complaint dismissed, for lack of standing.

B. Political question doctrine

The defendants also argue that Castro's claim should be dismissed because it turns on a nonjusticiable political question—Mr. Trump's eligibility to run for and serve as president. The political question doctrine bars courts from adjudicating issues that are "entrusted to one of the political branches or involve[ ] no judicially enforceable rights." Vieth v. Jubelirer, 541 U.S. 267, 277 (2004) (internal citations omitted). The nonjusticiability of political questions is "essentially a function of the separation of powers" of the federal government. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

In Baker v. Carr, the Supreme Court described six circumstances that can give rise to a political question:

> [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or [2] a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; or [5] an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or [6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

Id. The Baker Court held that, "[u]nless one of these formulations is inextricable from the case at bar, there should be no dismissal for non-justiciability on the ground of a political question's presence." Id.

The defendants contend that Castro's claim triggers the first Baker formulation, and they cite a number of cases that support their position. Indeed, state and federal district courts have consistently found that the U.S. Constitution assigns to Congress and the electors, and not the courts, the role of determining if a presidential candidate or president is qualified and fit for office—at least in the first instance. Courts that have considered the issue have found this textual assignment in varying combinations of the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. § 15, which prescribe the process for transmitting, objecting to, and counting electoral votes; the Twentieth Amendment, which authorizes Congress to fashion a response if the president elect and vice president elect are unqualified; and the Twenty-Fifth amendment and Article I impeachment clauses, which involve Congress in the removal of an unfit president from office.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

For example, in Robinson v. Bowen, the plaintiff moved for a preliminary injunction removing Senator McCain from the 2008 California general election ballot on the ground that he was not a "natural-born citizen," as required under Article II of the U.S. Constitution. 567 F. Supp. 2d 1144, 1145 (N.D. Cal. 2008). The Robinson Court denied the motion and dismissed the case upon finding, in part, that the plaintiff's challenge raised a nonjusticiable political question. The Robinson Court noted that the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act provide that "Congress shall be in session on the appropriate day to count the electoral votes," and that Congress decides upon the outcome of any objections to the electoral votes.[27] Id. at 1147. The Robinson Court reasoned that [27] Castro contends that the Robinson Court's reasoning is no longer valid insofar as it relied on the Electoral Count Act's objection process to support its conclusion. He claims, without elaboration, that the Act was revised in 2022 "to limit objections only on the basis that either electors were not lawfully certified or that the vote count was irregular[.]" Castro's Supp. Resp. to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss (doc. no. 44) at 3. Castro is correct that the Electoral Count Act was revised in 2022, after the Robinson order was issued, but, to the extent that he is arguing that this amendment limited the grounds for objections, that does not appear to be the case.

Both versions of the statute use the same terms to describe two exclusive grounds for objections to electoral votes. The amended version of the Act states that "[t]he only grounds for objections shall be as follows: (I) [t]he electors of the State were not lawfully certified under a certificate of ascertainment of appointment of electors according to section 5(a)(1) [and] (II) [t]he vote of one or more electors has not been regularly given." 3 U.S.C. § 15(d)(2)(B)(ii). The Act further provides that objections may only be "sustained by separate concurring votes of each House." Id. § 15(d)(2)(C). Prior to the amendment, the Act provided that all objections must be submitted for consideration to the Senate and House of Representatives, and "no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to . . . shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified." 62 Stat. 675 (1948) (current version at 3 U.S.C. § 15). Castro does not argue, nor does it appear to the court, that the relevant terms—"lawfully certified" and "regularly given"—took on new meaning through the amendment process, thereby materially altering the grounds for objections to electoral votes.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

> it is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and [the Electoral Count Act] for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify. Issues regarding qualifications for president are quintessentially suited to the foregoing process. . . . Therefore, this order holds that the challenge presented by plaintiff is committed under the Constitution to the electors and the legislative branch, at least in the first instance. Judicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course.

Id. (citing Texas v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300-02 (1998)).

Similarly, in Grinols v. Electoral Coll., the plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order halting the re-election of then-President Obama on the ground that he was ineligible for office because he was not a natural-born citizen. 2013 WL 211135, at *1. The Grinols Court denied the motion largely because it found the plaintiffs' claim "legally untenable." Id. at *2. It reasoned, in part, that "numerous articles and amendments of the Constitution," including the Twelfth Amendment, Twentieth Amendment, Twenty-Fifth Amendment, and the Article I impeachment clauses, "make it clear that the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not the Courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President. As such, the question presented by Plaintiffs in this case—whether President Obama may legitimately run for office and serve as President—is a political question that the Court may not answer." Id. at *4.

Courts across the country have reached the same conclusion, based on similar reasoning. See, e.g., Kerchner v. Obama, 669 F. Supp. 2d 477, 483 n.5 (D.N.J. 2009) (referencing the Twelfth and Twentieth Amendments, as well as Congress's role in counting electoral votes, and concluding that "it appears that" the plaintiffs' constitutional claims premised on President Obama's purported ineligibility are "barred under the 'political question doctrine' as a question demonstrably committed to a coordinate political department"), aff'd 612 F.3d 204 (3d Cir. 2010); Taitz v. Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (S.D. Miss. Mar. 31, 2015) ("find[ing] no authority in the Constitution which would permit [the court] to determine that a sitting president is unqualified for office or a president-elect is unqualified to take office[,]" and concluding that "[t]hese prerogatives are firmly committed to the legislative branch of our government"); Jordan v. Secretary of State Sam Reed, No. 12-2-01763-5, 2012 WL 4739216, at *1 (Wash. Super. Aug. 29, 2012) ("The primacy of congress to resolve issues of a candidate's qualifications to serve as president is established in the U.S. Constitution.").

Critically, Castro does not present case law that contradicts the authority discussed above—nor has the court found any. To the contrary, Castro agrees that his claim may raise a political question that precludes jurisdiction, but he quibbles (without reason) about the timing of this jurisdictional effect. Castro asserts that the cases that the defendants cite were initiated or decided after the political parties held their national conventions to select presidential nominees. According to Castro, this circumstance alone "proves that the political question doctrine applies only after the major political parties hold their conventions and submit the nomination paperwork to the state for placement on the general election ballot."[28] Even if Castro's factual premise regarding the timing of the cases and decisions is accurate—a conclusion that the court does not and need not draw—Castro's argument is wholly underdeveloped and unsubstantiated. Castro does not point to any factual or legal authority to support the notion that the political question doctrine, and the separation-of-powers principle at its core, simply lay dormant until after the national conventions, and the court finds no reasoned basis for such a conclusion.

In sum, the vast weight of authority has held that the Constitution commits to Congress and the electors the responsibility of determining matters of presidential candidates' qualifications.[29] Castro provides no reason to deviate from this consistent authority. Thus, it appears to the court that Castro's claim—which challenges Trump's eligibility as a presidential candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment—raises a nonjusticiable political question. As such, even if Castro did have standing to assert his claim, the court would lack jurisdiction to hear it under the political question doctrine.

[29] It bears noting that courts dealing with this justiciability question have not undertaken a searching analysis of the text and history of, for example, the Electoral Count Act and the Twentieth Amendment, which potentially impact the proper application of the political question doctrine. As Castro has not referred to, much less argued for, the inapplicability of the doctrine on these grounds, this court deems these arguments waived, and declines to engage them. See United States v. Zannino, 895 F.2d 1, 17 (1st Cir. 1990) ("[I]ssues adverted to in a perfunctory manner, unaccompanied by some effort at developed argumentation, are deemed waived.").

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, Castro's motion for a preliminary injunction[30] is DENIED, Trump's motion to dismiss[31] is GRANTED, and the case is dismissed.

Court of Claims

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF CLAIMS

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Plaintiff,

v

JOCELYN BENSON, in her official capacity as Secretary of State, Defendant.

OPINION AND ORDER

Case No. 23-000151-MZ

Hon. James Robert Redford

OPINION AND ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AND GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF

In the instant case, 23-000151-MZ, plaintiff comes before the Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to:

> 1. Declare that the Secretary of State has neither an affirmative duty nor the authority under Michigan law to refuse to include Donald J. Trump as a candidate for President on either Michigan's presidential primary or general election ballots;
> 2. Declare that the Secretary has no authority to exclude Donald J. Trump from the Michigan primary or general election ballots under federal law;
> 3. Enjoin the Secretary from refusing to place Donald J. Trump on the Michigan primary ballot on the basis that he is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.[1]

[1] An argument has been made to the Court that it does not have jurisdiction to grant plaintiff's request for declaratory and injunctive relief because plaintiff's complaint has relied on federal law, 28 USC 2201, in reference to his prayers for relief. Plaintiff has briefly cited this federal statute in the titles of the counts in the complaint. However, in ¶ 6 of the complaint, plaintiff maintains

The Secretary has responded and agrees with plaintiff's first assertion regarding the primary ballot. She has also stated that she has no opinion with respect to the second and third request for declaratory judgment.

For the reasons which will be set forth below the Court concludes:

1. Michigan's Constitution of 1963, art 2, § 4 and MCL 168.614a and 168.615a prescribe the manner a person may have their name placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot and in so doing direct the actions the Secretary of State shall take, such that the Secretary has neither the affirmative duty nor the authority to separately decide whether Donald J. Trump will be placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot on the grounds that he is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

2. The question of whether Donald J. Trump is ineligible from being placed on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot because he is disqualified from serving under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment presents a political question that is nonjusticiable at the present time.

3. The question of whether Donald J. Trump is qualified or disqualified from appearing on the 2024 general election ballot in Michigan is not ripe for adjudication at this time.

The Court will therefore:

1. GRANT plaintiff's request for a declaration that the Secretary of State does not have a clear legal duty, or the authority, under Michigan law, to determine whether plaintiff is disqualified from being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot in 2024 because of a Section 3 disqualification.

2. DENY plaintiff's request to declare the duties or authority of the Secretary with respect to the 2024 general election at this time.

3. GRANT plaintiff's request for a declaration that the Secretary of State does not have the authority to determine under federal constitutional law whether plaintiff may be that the Court has jurisdiction over this matter under MCR 600.6419 and MCR 2.605. Plaintiff's specific requests for relief in the body of the complaint do not rely on federal law. In keeping with the well-established rule courts to "look beyond mere procedural labels and read the allegations in a complaint as a whole to ascertain the nature of a claim", Khan v City of Flint, 490 Mich 851, 853; 800 NW2d 600 (2011), the Court finds that plaintiff's complaint properly seeks relief pursuant to Michigan law such that this Court has jurisdiction.

disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment from appearing on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot because the Court finds that the question of Section 3 disqualification is a nonjusticiable, political one.

4. DENY any request for declaratory or injunctive relief to the extent plaintiff requests that the Court order the Secretary to place plaintiff on the 2024 presidential primary ballot, or enjoin the Secretary from refusing to do so, on the basis that plaintiff is not disqualified from serving under Section 3.

5. DENY any similar request for declaratory or injunctive relief with respect to the 2024 general election at this time.[2]

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

MCR 2.605, which affords the Court the power to enter a declaratory judgment, "incorporates the doctrines of standing, ripeness, and mootness." Int'l Union, United Auto, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495, 815 NW2d 132 (2012). MCL 2.605(A)(1) provides "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." To obtain declaratory relief, plaintiff must thus show that he is an interested party and allege a "case of actual controversy" within the jurisdiction of the court. "An actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Michigan v Sec'y of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020). A court "is not precluded from reaching issues before actual injuries or losses have occurred," but there still must be "a present legal controversy, not one that is merely hypothetical or anticipated in the future." Id. The bar for standing is lowered in cases concerning election laws, but even in election cases, a party may not bring a declaratory-judgment action on the basis that "might affect his or her interests in the future" or because "they only want instruction going forward." Id. at 587-588 (emphasis added). In addition, in determining whether a present controversy exists, "[a] claim is not ripe if it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or may not occur at all." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 280 Mich App 273, 282; 761 NW2d 210 (2008). II. HISTORICAL INFORMATION

A. BRIEF BACKGROUND OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

On September 17, 1787, the Constitution of the United States was agreed upon in the Constitutional Convention and transmitted to Congress by George Washington, the President of the Constitutional Convention. See Myers, History Of The Printed Archetype Of The Constitution Of The United States Of America, 11 Green Bag 2d 217 (2008). The Constitution was thereafter transmitted to the several states for consideration on September 28, 1787. See id. Following ratification by the states, March 4, 1789, was selected as the date upon which the operation of the government under the Constitution would commence.

[3] The Court notes there are three cases that seek relief related to the 2024 Michigan Presidential primary election: Davis v Benson et al., 23-000128-MB, LaBrant et al. v Benson, 23-000137-MZ, and Trump v Benson, 23-000151-MZ. Because the cases are not consolidated and to facilitate immediate and individual appellate review of each opinion and order if desired by a litigant, while the Court may discuss some aspects of other cases in each opinion and order, the Court will seek to set forth the entire basis of the Court's rulings in each individual opinion and order, recognizing that there will be some redundancy in the respective cases.

The Constitution has Seven Articles which generally address the following:

Article I	The Legislature
Article II	The Executive
Article III	The Judiciary
Article IV	The Relationships between the Federal Government & States, Creation of New States
Article V	The Amendment Process
Article VI	The Supremacy Clause and the Oath required of persons holding certain offices to support the Constitution
Article VII	The Ratification Process for the United States Constitution

On September 25, 1789, Congress transmitted twelve proposed Amendments to the Constitution to the states, ten of which were adopted and became the Bill of Rights, effective December 15, 1791. Since its adoption, in total, the Constitution has been amended 27 times. See US Const, Am I-XXVII. Of these amendments, the following specifically address the office of the President: the XII, XX, XXII, XXIII, and XXV. The XII, XIV and XXIII Amendments also, inter alia, address the office of presidential electors.

B. POST-BILL OF RIGHTS & PRE-CIVIL WAR AMENDMENTS

The Eleventh Amendment, ratified February 7, 1795, placed certain limits on the judicial power unrelated to the matter at bar. The Twelfth Amendment, ratified June 15, 1804, set forth the process by which electors would vote for President and Vice President.

C. CIVIL WAR

In November 1860, Abraham Lincoln was elected the Sixteenth President of the United States. Between December 20, 1860 and June 8, 1861, 11 states voted to secede from the United States.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

On February 8, 1861, the Constitution for the Provisional Government of the Confederate States of America was adopted.[4] Jefferson Davis was selected to be Provisional President of the Confederate States of America on February 18, 1861.[5] On March 11, 1861, the Constitution of the Confederate States of America was adopted.[6]

On April 12, 1861, the federal enclave and military reservation at Fort Sumter, South Carolina was bombarded by cannon fire. On April 9, 1865, at Appomattox Court House, Virginia, the Army of Northern Virginia surrendered to the Union Army.

D. THE THIRTEENTH, FOURTEENTH & FIFTEENTH AMENDMENTS TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

THE CIVIL WAR AMENDMENTS

The Thirteenth Amendment, ratified December 6, 1865, abolished slavery. US Const, Am XIII.

The Fourteenth Amendment, ratified July 9, 1868, contains five sections including Section 3, the subject of this case, referred to as the Insurrection Clause. US Const, Am XIV.

The Fifteenth Amendment was ratified February 3, 1870, and prohibited states from denying the right to vote on the basis of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. US Const, Am XV.

III. ANALYSIS

A. PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATIONS

Plaintiff filed his complaint October 30, 2023. The complaint alleges that the Michigan Secretary of State has no affirmative duty, nor the authority to separately determine whether plaintiff may be disqualified from being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot of 2024 because of the allegations that plaintiff's actions or instances of inaction, before, during, and after January 6, 2021, make him ineligible to stand for election for the office of President of the United States, on the basis of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Plaintiff further alleges that he is entitled to declaratory and injunctive relief, and his placement on the 2024 primary and general election ballots, on the ground that "[q]uestions of constitutional qualifications are political questions reserved for Congress, not the Secretary of State; Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment is not self-executing and there is no implementing legislation; Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment does not apply to the President; any disqualification under Section Three does not apply until an individual holds office, not merely when he or she seeks nomination or election to office, and President Trump did not engage in an insurrection as those terms are used in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment."

B. LEGAL ANALYSIS

1. THE SECRETARY OF STATE DOES NOT HAVE A CLEAR LEGAL DUTY OR THE AUTHORITY UNDER THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTION OR MCL 168.614a AND 168.615a TO DECIDE THE MERITS AND ISSUE A DECISION ON PLAINTIFF'S POSSIBLE DISQUALIFICATION FOR OFFICE UNDER SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

The instant case is one of three related election cases in which the Court has been asked to determine whether Donald J. Trump may be excluded from the 2024 Michigan primary ballot on the ground that his alleged actions before, during, and after the events of January 6, 2021, at the United States Capitol in Washington D.C. result in his disqualification from serving as President under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

In case 23-000128-MB, Davis v Benson et al., among the issues raised by the plaintiff were requests for declaratory and mandamus relief seeking to have the Court declare that the Secretary has a clear affirmative duty under Mich Const 1963, art 11, §1 and MCL 24.263 to decide the merits and issue a decision with respect to whether Donald J. Trump is precluded from running for office or being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot of 2024. As discussed in detail in the Court's opinion for 23-000128-MB, the Court in that case found that the plaintiff had not shown that the Secretary has the affirmative, mandatory, duty under MCL 24.263 to determine whether a presidential primary candidate may be disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court has also concluded that the Secretary does not have authority to decide Section 3 disqualification for the presidential primary ballot, because the 1963 Michigan Constitution and statutes prescribe eligibility to be placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot; agencies, administrative agencies such as the Secretary of State generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions; and the prudential constraints of the processes involved in making the legal or factual determinations that would be needed to be made concerning the application of Section 3 are such that the Secretary has no administrative process adequate to make these determinations. Accordingly, the Court has denied the plaintiff's request for declaratory and mandamus relief.

In 23-000137-MZ, LaBrant v Benson, the plaintiffs argued that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from office under Section 3, such that the Court is required to enjoin the Secretary from placing him on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot. As discussed in further detail in the opinion for 23-000137-MZ, the Court held that Michigan's Constitution of 1963, art 2, § 4 and MCL 168.614a and 168.615a prescribe the manner in which a person may have their name placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot and in so doing directs the actions the Secretary shall take, such that the plaintiffs in that case have not shown that the Court may impose further qualifications on those who seek to be listed on the presidential primary ballot. The Court also held in that case that the number of steps involved in any candidate becoming a political party's candidate for President, in addition to the requirement that the candidate win the general election, show that declaratory relief is not proper, at least at this time. The Court has further held that the question of whether Donald J. Trump is precluded from holding office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is a political question that is nonjusticiable at the present time.

In the instant case, plaintiff has raised substantially similar questions in his requests for relief. In accordance with its opinions in 23-000128-MB and 23-000137-MZ, the Court first finds that the Secretary does not have authority to decide Section 3 disqualification, because the 1963 Michigan Constitution and statutes prescribe eligibility to be placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot; administrative agencies such as the Secretary of State generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions; and the prudential constraints of the processes involved in making the legal or factual determinations that would be needed to be made concerning the application of Section 3 are such that the Secretary has no administrative process adequate to make these determinations.

The statutory steps currently involved in any candidate being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot demonstrate that the Secretary does not have authority to determine disqualification under Section 3 with respect to an individual who is running for President. This is because the 1963 Michigan Constitution grants the power to the Michigan Legislature to regulate elections under Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) and because the Legislature has specifically delineated the process by which an individual is to be placed on a presidential primary ballot.

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) provides the Michigan Legislature the power to "enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all nominations and elections, to preserve the purity of elections, to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting." The Legislature in turn has prescribed the process and eligibility for a presidential candidate to be placed on the primary ballot in the mandatory requirements set out in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a. MCL 168.614a(1) requires that

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section [MCL 168.613a]. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state. (Emphasis added).[7]

MCL 168.614a(2) provides for the state chairperson of each political party to then file a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that party and requires the Secretary to make that list available to the public. MCL 168.615a then requires the Secretary to place the candidates so identified on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under [MCL 168.614a] to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party." MCL168.615a(1) (Emphasis added).

[7] The Court notes, at oral argument on November 9, 2023 in this case and cases 23-000128-MB and 23-000137-MZ, the attorney for the Secretary of State indicated that, in accordance with the Michigan Court Rules regarding deadlines that fall upon a weekend or legal holiday, the issuance of the list of individuals described in MCL 168.614a(1) would be transmitted on Monday, November 13, 2023 instead of Friday November 10, 2023, because November 10, 2023 was the State of Michigan Holiday in observance of Veteran's Day.

Under those requirements, while the Secretary is mandated to act, she retains discretion as to what media sources to consider when choosing which candidates to list on the notices she provides to the respective political parties under MCL 168.614a. However, the ultimate decision is made by the respective political party, with the consent of the listed candidates.[8] Given this comprehensive statutory scheme, there is no role for the Secretary to impose additional qualifications to be placed on the presidential primary ballot. [9]

The Court is further persuaded by the analysis of the Minnesota Supreme Court in its November 8, 2023 order in Growe et al v Simon, ___ NW2d ___ (Minn, 2023). As in the instant case, petitioners in Growe asked the Court to determine that Donald Trump was disqualified from holding the office of President under Section 3, and requested that the Court direct the Minnesota Secretary of State to exclude him from Minnesota's March 5, 2024 primary ballot and from the 2024 general election ballot.

[8] The Court notes for candidates seeking to be placed on the presidential primary ballot in Michigan, if not included in the process outlined above and as provided by MCL 168.614a, may seek ballot access through a nominating petition process set forth in MCL 168.15a(2).

[9] Similarly, this is the reason that this Court will not order the Secretary of State to simply place former President Trump on the primary ballot. The relevant statutory provisions contain the only way provided by the Legislature for a candidate to be placed on the ballot.

The Court first determined, as the Court does here, that any question concerning Donald Trump's placement on the general election ballot is not ripe, or "about to occur" as required for relief under Minn Stat 204B. Turning to the question of disqualification to be placed on the primary ballot, the Court discussed the steps involved in placing candidates on the presidential primary ballot. Similar to the steps in the instant case, Minnesota's procedure involves placement on the ballot after the Chair of the Republican Party of Minnesota provides his name to the Minnesota Secretary of State.

The Court determined that, although the Minnesota Secretary of State and administration officials "administer the mechanics of the election," primary elections are designed as an aid to the respective political parties in choosing their nominees at the national conventions:

> The Legislature enacted the presidential nomination primary process to allow major political parties to select delegates to the national conventions of those parties; at those conventions the selected delegates will cast votes along with delegates from all of the other states and territories and choose a presidential candidate who will subsequently appear on general election ballots. See Minn. Stat. § 207A.11(d) (2022) (explaining that the presidential nomination primary "only applies to a major political party that selects delegates at the presidential nomination primary to send to a national convention"). This is "a process that allows political parties to obtain voter input in advance of a nomination decision made at a national convention." De La Fuente v Simon, 940 NW2d 477, 492 (Minn, 2020). Thus, although the Secretary of State and other election officials administer the mechanics of the election, this is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes, and winning the presidential nomination primary does not place the person on the general election ballot as a candidate for President of the United States. As we explained in De La Fuente, in upholding the constitutionality of this statutory scheme for the presidential nomination primary, "[t]he road for any candidate's access to the ballot for Minnesota's presidential nomination primary runs only through the participating political parties, who alone determine which candidates will be on the party's ballot." 940 N.W.2d at 494-95. And there is no state statute that prohibits a major political party from placing on the presidential nomination primary ballot, or sending delegates to the national convention supporting, a candidate who is ineligible to hold office. [Growe, slip op pp 2-3].

Similarly, in Michigan, the procedures outlined in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a provide the specific and explicit mechanism by which the Secretary of State is to place candidates on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot. They are designed to assist the parties in determining their respective presidential candidates, and the Legislature has not provided any prohibition as to who may be placed on such ballots, irrespective as to whether the individual may either serve as a general election candidate or ultimately serve as President if elected.

In addition, as discussed in 23-000128-MB, Michigan courts have repeatedly held that administrative agencies such as the Secretary of State generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions. Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich 673, 710; 938 NW2d 855 (2022), citing Dickerson v Warden, Marquette Prison, 99 Mich App 630, 641-642; 298 NW2d 841 (1980). See also Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152, 159; 22 NW2d 252 (1946). Thus, where the Legislature has not authorized or required the Secretary to determine or confirm whether candidates for President are qualified and eligible to serve, the Court agrees with the Secretary that she has no authority to determine this constitutional question.

The Court also agrees that the Secretary simply has no administrative process for making the legal or factual determinations that would need to be made concerning the application of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. As the Secretary notes, there is no statutory vehicle that provides either an individual with the right to initiate such an action administratively or for the participation of the impacted candidate, who would be entitled to due process. See, e.g., Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283, 1294-1295 (ND Ga 2022) (discussing the plaintiff's due-process concerns in a case involving disqualification under Section 3).

Accordingly, the Court holds that the Secretary does not have a clear legal duty, or the authority, under Michigan law, to determine whether plaintiff is disqualified from being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot in 2024 because of a Section 3 disqualification

However, the Court notes that, with respect to plaintiff's concurrent request that this Court declare that the Secretary has no authority to determine whether plaintiff is disqualified from being placed on the 2024 general election ballot, such a claim is not ripe, as it rests upon "contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or may not occur at all." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, 280 Mich App at 282. See also Thomas, 473 US at 580-581. Many of the same considerations with respect to the Secretary's duty or ability to decide the issues raised about plaintiff's alleged Section 3 disability will arguably remain the same with respect to his placement on the 2024 general election ballot. However, at this time, even if plaintiff wins the Michigan Republican primary, he would still have to prevail in primary challenges in the other states and win the vote at the Republican National Convention to become the national Republican candidate. This process is subject to the influence of outside events such that the Court will not reach the issue of plaintiff's eligibility to be placed on the Michigan general election ballot at this time.

2. POLITICAL QUESTION

With respect to plaintiff's second and third requests above, the inquiry into whether Donald J. Trump is disqualified from being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot because he is disqualified from serving under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment presents a political question that is nonjusticiable at the present time.

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution states:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the > United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution states:

> The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

In determining whether to apply the political-question doctrine, the Supreme Court identified six factors relevant to the political-question doctrine in the 1962 case, Baker v Carr, 369 US 186; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962).

> Prominent on the surface of any case held to involve a political question is found [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; [2] or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; [5] or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or [6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question. [Id. at 217.]

With respect to factor 1 concerning who has the responsibility of making a factual determination of whether a person can serve under Section 3, the well-thought-out analysis and conclusion in Castro v New Hampshire Secretary of State, ____ F Supp 3d ___ (D NH, 2023) (Docket No. 23-CV-416-JL, issued October 27, 2023) is helpful. This was a similar case to the matter at bar in which the plaintiff sought an injunction barring the New Hampshire Secretary of State from placing former President Trump's name on the New Hampshire Republican primary ballot because of an alleged disqualification under Section 3.

After discussing whether the plaintiff had standing, and setting out the Baker factors, the Castro Court provided the following analysis:

The defendants contend that Castro's claim triggers the first Baker formulation, and they cite a number of cases that support their position. Indeed, state and federal district courts have consistently found that the U.S. Constitution assigns to Congress and the electors, and not the courts, the role of determining if a presidential candidate or president is qualified and fit for office—at least in the first instance. Courts that have considered the issue have found this textual assignment in varying combinations of the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. § 15, which prescribe the process for transmitting, objecting to, and counting electoral votes; the Twentieth Amendment, which authorizes Congress to fashion a response if the president elect and vice president elect are unqualified; and the Twenty-Fifth amendment and Article I impeachment clauses, which involve Congress in the removal of an unfit president from office.

For example, in Robinson v Bowen, the plaintiff moved for a preliminary injunction removing Senator McCain from the 2008 California general election ballot on the ground that he was not a "natural-born citizen," as required under Article II of the U.S. Constitution. 567 F Supp 2d 1144, 1145 (ND Cal 2008). The Robinson Court denied the motion and dismissed the case upon finding, in part, that the plaintiff's challenge raised a nonjusticiable political question. The Robinson Court noted that the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act provide that "Congress shall be in session on the appropriate day to count the electoral votes," and that Congress decides upon the outcome of any objections to the electoral votes. Id. at 1147. The Robinson Court reasoned that

> It is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and [the Electoral Count Act] for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify. Issues regarding qualifications for president are quintessentially suited to the foregoing process . . . . Therefore, this order holds that the challenge presented by plaintiff is committed under the Constitution to the electors and the legislative branch, at least in the first instance. Judicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course.

Id. (citing Texas v United States, 523 US 296, 300-02, 118 S Ct 1257, 140 L Ed 2d 406 (1998)).

Similarly, in Grinols v Electoral Coll, the plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order halting the re-election of then-President Obama on the ground that he was ineligible for office because he was not a natural-born citizen. 2013 WL 211135, at *1. The Grinols Court denied the motion largely because it found the plaintiffs' claim "legally untenable." Id. at *2. It reasoned, in part, that "numerous articles and amendments of the Constitution," including the Twelfth Amendment, Twentieth Amendment, Twenty-Fifth Amendment, and the Article I impeachment clauses, "make it clear that the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not the Courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President.

> As such, the question presented by Plaintiffs in this case—whether President Obama may legitimately run for office and serve as President—is a political question that the Court may not answer." Id. at * 4.
> Courts across the country have reached the same conclusion, based on similar reasoning. See, e.g., Kerchner v Obama, 669 F Supp 2d 477, 483 n 5 (D NJ 2009) (referencing the Twelfth and Twentieth Amendments, as well as Congress's role in counting electoral votes, and concluding that "it appears that" the plaintiffs' constitutional claims premised on President Obama's purported ineligibility are "barred under the 'political question doctrine' as a question demonstrably committed to a coordinate political department"), aff'd 612 F3d 204 (3d Cir 2010); Taitz v Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (SD Miss Mar. 31, 2015) ("find[ing] no authority in the Constitution which would permit [the court] to determine that a sitting president is unqualified for office or a president-elect is unqualified to take office[,]" and concluding that "[t]hese prerogatives are firmly committed to the legislative branch of our government"); Jordan v Secretary of State Sam Reed, No. 12-2-01763-5, 2012 WL 4739216, at *1 (Wash Super Aug. 29, 2012) ("The primacy of congress to resolve issues of a candidate's qualifications to serve as president is established in the U.S. Constitution.").
> Critically, Castro does not present case law that contradicts the authority discussed above—nor has the court found any.
> In sum, the vast weight of authority has held that the Constitution commits to Congress and the electors the responsibility of determining matters of presidential candidates' qualifications. Castro provides no reason to deviate from this consistent authority. Thus, it appears to the court that Castro's claim—which challenges Trump's eligibility as a presidential candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment—raises a nonjusticiable political question. As such, even if Castro did have standing to assert his claim, the court would lack jurisdiction to hear it under the political question doctrine. [Castro, slip op pp 7-9 (footnotes omitted).]

The Court agrees with the above analysis. Additionally, the actions of those to whom Section 3's disqualification provision applied and Congress's post-civil war responses to the various problems with the way "disabilities" were initially removed support the conclusion that Congress is primarily responsible for taking actions to effectuate Section 3.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified July 9, 1868. After this, the 1872 General Amnesty Act and the Amnesty Act of 1898 were passed.

The 1872 General Amnesty Act provided:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States. [17 Stat 142]

The 1872 law cleared over 150,000 former Confederate troops who had taken part in the American Civil War. See Heritage Library, <https://heritagelib.org/amnesty-act-of-1872#>, accessed November 10, 2023

Subsequently, Congress removed the Section 3 disability from those remaining individuals, enacting the Amnesty Act of 1898. This Act provides, "[t]hat the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed." Act of June 6, 1898, ch 389; 30 Stat 432.

That Congress could remove the Section 3 bar to serving, at least with respect to individuals barred at that time,[10] by enacting a law to "remove" the disability, en masse, even to those who could be said to be barred from service, but had not yet personally sought such relief, itself indicates that Congress not only had the power to remove the disability when asked by a specific candidate, but also possesses the broader "proactive" power to decide how to apply Section 3 in the first instance.

[10] The Court notes that there is disagreement over whether the enactment of the Amnesty Act was also intended to apply prospectively to future individuals who would otherwise be barred from holding office under Section 3. However, the Court need not reach that issue at this time.

Arguments have been made that Congress's only role with respect to Section 3 is to remove a disability only after the judicial branch has determined that the individual cannot serve. For example, in Anderson v Griswold, Colorado Denver District Court, Docket No. 2023-CV-32577, issued October 25, 2023, slip op p 17, the court stated that Congress "has disavowed any ability it once had to consider objections other than [those in 3 USC 15(d)(2)(B)(ii), when 1) "the electors of the State were not lawfully certified under a certificate of ascertainment of appointment of electors according to section 5(a)(1)", or 2) "where the vote of one or more electors has not been regularly given."] including any regarding the constitutional qualifications of the President-elect." However, Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment explicitly provides Congress with the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." The fact that Congress may have, at least for the moment, decided not to address this question prior to judicial intervention does not change the fact that they have the power to do so, and have certainly done so in the past.

With respect to the remaining factors set out in Baker, the Court notes that factors 2, 4, 5, and 6 apply to the instant case.

In Bradley and Posner, The Real Political Question Doctrine, Stanford Law Review, Vol. 75 (2023), the authors discuss how the "prudential" concerns in the Baker factors play into the use of the doctrine. Notably, two United States Supreme Court decisions after Baker support an analysis that some questions fall within the doctrine, at least in part, because of the related prudential concerns of causing "chaos", see Nixon v United States, 506 US 224, 236; 113 S Ct 732; 122 L Ed 2d 1 (1993), or because the courts would be pulled into recurring and highly partisan disputes, such as in the instant case, see Rucho v Common Cause, ___ US ___; 139 S Ct 2484, 2507; 204 L Ed 2d 931 (2019).

In Nixon, a case involving former United States District Judge Walter L. Nixon's impeachment trial before the Senate, the Court held that a challenge to the Senate's use of a committee to receive evidence during an impeachment trial, similar to the way congressional committees investigated early Section 3 cases, raised a political question. The impeached judge in Nixon argued that the Senate's use of the committee was inconsistent with the Constitutional requirement that the Senate "try" impeachment cases. However, as discussed in The Real Political Question Doctrine, pp 1070-1072, the Court found that the first Baker factor applied even though the Constitution did not specify that the Senate had exclusive authority to decide the relevant trial procedures to be used for impeachments. Nixon, 506 US at 228-229. Its reason for doing so involved prudential concerns. In reaching its conclusion, the Court specifically tied the first and second factors together, and held "the concept of a textual commitment to a coordinate political department is not completely separate from the concept of a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; the lack of judicially manageable standards may strengthen the conclusion that there is a textually demonstrable commitment to a coordinate branch." Id. After its analysis of Article I, § 3, cl 6, the Court further held that the "chaos" involved in attempting to fashion relief supported the finding of a political question. In doing so, this case provides support for the premise that attempting to resolve the question of whether former President Trump appears on the Michigan primary ballot, or any other ballot, is nonjusticiable.

> In addition to the textual commitment argument, we are persuaded that the lack of finality and the difficulty of fashioning relief counsel against justiciability. See Baker v Carr, 369 US, at 210, 82 S Ct, at 706. We agree with the Court of Appeals that opening the door of judicial review to the procedures used by the Senate in trying impeachments would "expose the political life of the country to > months, or perhaps years, of chaos." 290 US App DC, at 427, 938 F2d, at 246. This lack of finality would manifest itself most dramatically if the President were impeached. The legitimacy of any successor, and hence his effectiveness, would be impaired severely, not merely while the judicial process was running its course, but during any retrial that a differently constituted Senate might conduct if its first judgment of conviction were invalidated. Equally uncertain is the question of what relief a court may give other than simply setting aside the judgment of conviction. Could it order the reinstatement of a convicted federal judge, or order Congress to create an additional judgeship if the seat had been filled in the interim? [Nixon, 506 US at 236.]

See also id. at 253 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) (discussing that one significant consideration was "the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question", and stating, "As the Court observes, judicial review of an impeachment trial would under the best of circumstances entail significant disruption of government." (citation omitted)).

In Rucho, Chief Justice Roberts wrote for the majority:

> Chief Justice Marshall famously wrote that it is "the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177; 2 L Ed 60 (1803). Sometimes, however, "the law is that the judicial department has no business entertaining the claim of unlawfulness—because the question is entrusted to one of the political branches or involves no judicially enforceable rights." Vieth v Jubelirer, 541 US 267, 277; 124 S Ct 1769; 158 L Ed 2d 546 (2004) (plurality opinion). In such a case the claim is said to present a "political question" and to be nonjusticiable—outside the courts' competence and therefore beyond the courts' jurisdiction. Baker v Carr, 369 US 186, 217; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962). Among the political question cases the Court has identified are those that lack "judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving [them]." Id. [Rucho, 139 S Ct at 2494.]

Rucho involved a request to intervene in light of a complaint alleging partisan gerrymandering by Republicans in North Carolina and Democrats in Maryland. The Supreme Court held that the challenges raised a political question. Id. at 2506-2507. The Court emphasized the difficulty that courts would have with resolving such claims using a "limited and precise rationale" that was also "clear, manageable, and politically neutral." Id. at 2498 (quotation marks and citation omitted). The Court found that intervention in "heated partisan issues" required such constraints, id., because "[w]ith uncertain limits, intervening courts—even when proceeding with best intentions—would risk assuming political, not legal, responsibility for a process that often produces ill will and distrust." Id. (quotations and citations omitted). The Court also noted that the circumstances were such that "the Constitution provides no basis whatever to guide the exercise of judicial discretion." Id. at 2506. With respect to the caution against becoming embroiled in recurring and highly partisan districting disputes, the Court further held:

> [I]ntervention would be unlimited in scope and duration—it would recur over and over again around the country with each new round of districting, for state as well as federal representatives. Consideration of the impact of today's ruling on democratic principles cannot ignore the effect of the unelected and politically unaccountable branch of the Federal Government assuming such an extraordinary and unprecedented role. [Id. at 2507.]

The instant case presents potential for running afoul of these principles. In the companion case of 23-000128-MB, the Secretary has included in Exhibit 1, a list of active and recently dismissed state and federal cases, each involving former President Trump. There are 37 cases on the Secretary's list, and it does not include either of the companion cases currently before this Court. Should this trend continue, it is conceivable that there could be 50 state cases, and a number of concurrent federal ones, each with a judicial officer or officers who "even when proceeding with best intentions," have the potential to issue partial or even totally conflicting opinions on the basis of a significant number of potentially dispositive issues. Some of these cases, such as

Anderson, are already proceeding to trial.[11] Prior to the United States Supreme Court's intervention, none of these opinions, or factual findings, are binding on any other court.

The questions involved are by their nature political. The number of cases presents the risk of completely opposite and potentially confusing opinions and outcomes, which will certainly "expose the political life of the country to months, or perhaps years, of chaos." Moreover, there is no "limited and precise rationale" to guide this Court and the others that is also "clear, manageable, and politically neutral." Because the cases involve the office of the President, such confusion and lack of finality will be more pronounced. See Nixon, 506 US at 236.

In determining if a question is justiciable, it is worthwhile to consider what the judiciary is asked to determine. In this case, some questions while complex, are nonetheless straightforward and embrace traditional means of legal decision-making. Is a specific office sought covered? Has a person taken a previous oath that is applicable?

Others are far more nuanced and complex. This Court recognizes the judiciary does not avoid questions because they are nuanced, complex, or difficult; however, when applying the Baker principles and standards, it seems appropriate as applied to this case to ask:

What is an insurrection or a rebellion? What is it to engage in it or to give aid and comfort to the enemies of the Constitution?

Does it require a war of 1,458 days with 620,000 killed and battles throughout the land? [12] Could it be based on actions of physical violence, lawlessness, destruction, interruption of legislative sessions all of which take place on a single day even if allegedly supported by and aided by speeches and comments and actions and inactions by an individual before, during, and after that day? Could it be a political speech that some may argue encourages or incites others to act in ways they believe results in moral culpability on the part of the speaker for physical violence?

The short answer is—there are as many answers and gradations of answers to each of these proffered examples as there are people called upon to decide them.

The inappropriateness of the judicial branch resolving these questions, tendered by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, includes that the judicial action of removing a candidate from the presidential ballot and prohibiting them from running essentially strips Congress of its ability to "by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such a disability." Also, it takes the decision of whether there was a rebellion or insurrection and whether or not someone participated in it from the Congress, a body made up of elected representatives of the people of every state in the nation, and gives it to but one single judicial officer, a person who no matter how well intentioned, evenhanded, fair and learned, cannot in any manner or form possibly embody the represented qualities of every citizen of the nation–as does the House of Representatives and the Senate. Nor is that judicial officer provided the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article," Section 5. [13]

In summary, the question of whether plaintiff is precluded from holding the office of President because of a Section 3 disqualification presents a nonjusticiable political question that is left to Congress to decide.

With respect to plaintiff's specific requests for relief, the Court agrees that the Secretary of State has no authority to determine under federal constitutional law whether plaintiff or other presidential candidates may be disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment from appearing on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot. However, the Court will DENY plaintiff's request for declaratory or injunctive relief to the extent plaintiff requests that the Court order the Secretary to place plaintiff on the primary ballot because he is not disqualified from serving under Section 3, as such a question is a nonjusticiable political one. The Court further DENIES any similar request for relief with respect to the 2024 general election ballot, because [13]Plaintiffs in companion case 23-000137-MZ have argued that the chaos created by permitting Mr. Trump to run, and become the President-elect, prior to having Congress adjudicate whether he is disqualified under Section 3, would be far worse than that which is presently occurring. Because the Constitution contains direction on what will occur should a President-elect fail to qualify for office (see XX Amendment, Sec. 3) or is unable to discharge the duties of his office (See Amendment XXV, Sec. 4) this Court, respectfully disagrees. As unsettling as such a process could be, it is the process provided for in the Constitution and is preferable to potentially having 50 or more separate trials or evidentiary hearings, which will undoubtably rely on nonstandard definitions of "insurrection or rebellion" or what constitutes providing "aid and comfort" to an "enemy" of the United States, where the results could then be completely contradictory and which would then have to survive the various state appellate processes-all in the extremely short time before the various state primaries. Also, the Court respectfully finds plaintiff's argument that the United States Supreme Court would then be able to manage subsequent appeals and ultimately determine these issues in time for the effective administration of various primary elections is speculative.

such a claim is not ripe at this time. Thomas, 473 US at 580-581; Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, 280 Mich App at 282.

IV. CONCLUSION

For each of the reasons discussed above, the Court GRANTS plaintiff's request for a declaration that the Secretary of State does not have a clear legal duty, or the authority, under Michigan law, to determine whether plaintiff is disqualified from being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot in 2024 because of a Section 3 disqualification.

With respect to plaintiff's requests for relief under federal law, the Court finds that the question of Section 3 disqualification is a nonjusticiable, political one. The Court therefore GRANTS plaintiff's request for a declaration that the Secretary of State has no authority to determine under federal constitutional law whether plaintiff or other presidential candidates may be disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment from appearing on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot. However, the Court DENIES any request for declaratory or injunctive relief to the extent plaintiff requests that the Court order the Secretary to place plaintiff on the 2024 primary ballot, or enjoin the Secretary from refusing to do so, on the basis that plaintiff is not disqualified from serving under Section 3.

The Court further DENIES any similar request for declaratory or injunctive relief with respect to the 2024 general election because any question about plaintiff's qualifications with respect to the general election is not currently ripe for review.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

OPINION AND ORDER

Case No. 23-000137-MZ

Hon. James Robert Redford

OPINION AND ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' REQUEST FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

In the instant case, 23-000137-MZ, plaintiffs come before the Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to:

1. Declare Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

2. Permanently enjoin the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot for the 2024 presidential primary election and;

3. Permanently enjoin the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot for the November 5, 2024 general election as a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

For the reasons which will be set forth below the Court holds:

1. Michigan's Constitution of 1963, art 2, § 4 and MCL 168.614a and 168.615a prescribe the manner a person may have their name placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot and in so doing direct the actions the Secretary of State shall take.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

2. The Fourteenth Amendment arguments of plaintiffs present a political question that is nonjusticiable at the present time. [1]

The Court will therefore DENY plaintiffs' prayer for declaratory relief and for a permanent injunction as relates to the Michigan primary election ballot for 2024. [2]

MCR 2.605, which affords the Court the power to enter a declaratory judgment, "incorporates the doctrines of standing, ripeness, and mootness." Int'l Union, United Auto, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495; 815 NW2d 132 (2012). MCL 2.605(A)(1) provides, "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." To obtain declaratory relief, a plaintiff must thus show that he is an interested party and allege a "case of actual controversy" within the jurisdiction of the court. "An actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Sec'y of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020). A court "is not precluded from reaching issues before actual injuries or losses have occurred," but there still must be "a present legal controversy, not one that is merely hypothetical or anticipated in the future." Id. The bar for standing is lowered in cases concerning election laws, but even in election cases, a party may not bring a declaratory-judgment action on the basis that they "might affect his or her interests in the future" or because "they only want instruction going forward." Id. at 587-588 (emphasis added). In addition, in determining whether a present controversy exists, "[a] claim is not ripe if it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or may not occur at all." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 280 Mich App 273, 282; 761 NW2d 210 (2008). II. HISTORICAL INFORMATION

Because the cases are not consolidated and to facilitate immediate and individual appellate review of each opinion and order if desired by a litigant, while the Court may discuss some aspects of other cases in each opinion and order, the Court will seek to set forth the entire basis of the Court's rulings in each individual opinion and order, recognizing that there will be some redundancy in the respective cases.

On September 17, 1787, the Constitution of the United States was agreed upon in the Constitutional Convention and transmitted to Congress by George Washington, the President of the Constitutional Convention. See Myers, History Of The Printed Archetype Of The Constitution Of The United States Of America, 11 Green Bag 2d 217 (2008). The Constitution was thereafter transmitted to the several states for consideration on September 28, 1787. See id. Following ratification by the states, March 4, 1789, was selected as the date upon which the operation of the government under the Constitution would commence.

The Constitution has Seven Articles which generally address the following:

Article I	The Legislature
Article II	The Executive
Article III	The Judiciary
Article IV	The Relationships between the Federal Government & States, Creation of New States

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Article V The Amendment Process

Article VI The Supremacy Clause and the Oath required of persons holding certain offices to support the Constitution

Article VII The Ratification Process for the United States Constitution

On September 25, 1789, Congress transmitted twelve proposed Amendments to the Constitution to the states, ten of which were adopted and became the Bill of Rights, effective December 15, 1791. Since its adoption, in total, the Constitution has been amended 27 times. See US Const, Am I-XXVII. Of these amendments, the following specifically address the office of the President: the XII, XX, XXII, XXIII, and XXV. The XII, XIV and XXIII Amendments also, inter alia, address the office of presidential electors.

B. POST-BILL OF RIGHTS & PRE-CIVIL WAR AMENDMENTS

The Eleventh Amendment, ratified February 7, 1795, placed certain limits on the judicial power unrelated to the matter at bar. The Twelfth Amendment, ratified June 15, 1804, set forth the process by which electors would vote for President and Vice President.

C. CIVIL WAR

In November 1860, Abraham Lincoln was elected the Sixteenth President of the United States. Between December 20, 1860 and June 8, 1861, 11 states voted to secede from the United States.

On February 8, 1861, the Constitution for the Provisional Government of the Confederate States of America was adopted.[3] Jefferson Davis was selected to be Provisional President of the Confederate States of America on February 18, 1861.[4] On March 11, 1861, the Constitution of the Confederate States of America was adopted.[5]

On April 12, 1861, the federal enclave and military reservation at Fort Sumter, South Carolina was bombarded by cannon fire. On April 9, 1865, at Appomattox Court House, Virginia, the Army of Northern Virginia surrendered to the Union Army.

D. THE THIRTEENTH, FOURTEENTH & FIFTEENTH AMENDMENTS TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION
THE CIVIL WAR AMENDMENTS

The Thirteenth Amendment, ratified December 6, 1865, abolished slavery. US Const, Am XIII.

The Fourteenth Amendment, ratified July 9, 1868, contains five sections including Section 3, the subject of this case, referred to as the Insurrection Clause. US Const, Am XIV.

The Fifteenth Amendment was ratified February 3, 1870, and prohibited states from denying the right to vote on the basis of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. US Const, Am XV.

allege make him ineligible to stand for election for the office of President of the United States, on the basis of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

B. LEGAL ANALYSIS

1. MICHIGAN'S CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES PRESCRIBE ELIGIBILITY TO BE PLACED ON THE MICHIGAN PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY BALLOT

The Court finds that the statutory steps currently involved in any candidate being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot demonstrate that plaintiffs cannot show that they are entitled to a declaratory judgment with respect to an individual who is running in the Michigan primary election for the office of President. This is because the 1963 Michigan Constitution grants the power to the Michigan Legislature to regulate elections under Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) and because the Legislature has specifically delineated the process by which an individual is to be placed on a presidential primary ballot.

Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) provides the Michigan Legislature the power to "enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all nominations and elections, to preserve the purity of elections, to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting." The Legislature in turn has prescribed the process and eligibility for a presidential candidate to be placed on the primary ballot in the mandatory requirements set out in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a. MCL 168.614a(1) requires:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section [MCL 168.613a]. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the > public on an internet website maintained by the department of state. [Emphasis added.][6]

MCL 168.614a(2) provides for the state chairperson of each political party to then file a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that party and requires the Secretary to make that list available to the public. MCL 168.615a then requires the Secretary to place the candidates so identified on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under [MCL 168.614a] to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party." MCL168.615a(1) (Emphasis added).

Under those requirements, while the Secretary is mandated to act, she retains discretion as to what media sources to consider when choosing which candidates to list on the notices she provides to the respective political parties under MCL 168.614a. However, the ultimate decision is made by the respective political party, with the consent of the listed candidates.[7] Given this comprehensive statutory scheme, there are substantial questions whether plaintiffs' complaint,

[6] The Court notes, at oral argument on November 9, 2023, in this case and Cases 23-000128-MB and 23-000151-MZ, the attorney for the Secretary of State indicated that, in accordance with the Michigan Court Rules regarding deadlines that fall upon a weekend or legal holiday, the issuance of the list of individuals described in MCL 168.614a(1) would be transmitted on Monday, November 13, 2023, instead of Friday, November 10, 2023, because November 10, 2023, was the state of Michigan holiday in observance of Veteran's Day.

[7] The Court notes that candidates seeking to be placed on the presidential primary ballot in Michigan, if not included in the process outlined above and as provided by MCL 168.614a, may seek ballot access through a nominating petition process set forth in MCL 168.15a(2).

taken in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, supports a conclusion that other qualifications to be placed on the presidential primary ballot may be imposed by the Court. [8]

The Court is further persuaded by the analysis of the Minnesota Supreme Court in its November 8, 2023 order in Growe et al. v Simon, ___ NW2d ___ (Minn, 2023). As in the instant case, petitioners in Growe asked the Court to determine that Donald Trump was disqualified from holding the office of President under Section 3, and requested that the Court direct the Minnesota Secretary of State to exclude him from Minnesota's March 5, 2024 primary ballot and from the 2024 general election ballot.

The Court first determined, as the Court does here, that any question concerning Donald Trump's placement on the general election ballot is not ripe, or "about to occur" as required for relief under Minn Stat 204B. Turning to the question of disqualification to be placed on the primary ballot, the Court discussed the steps involved in placing candidates on the presidential primary ballot. Similar to the steps in the instant case, Minnesota's procedure involves placement on the ballot after the Chair of the Republican Party of Minnesota provides his name to the Minnesota Secretary of State.

The Court determined that, although the Minnesota Secretary of State and administration officials "administer the mechanics of the election," primary elections are designed as an aid to the respective political parties in choosing their nominees at the national conventions:

> The Legislature enacted the presidential nomination primary process to allow major political parties to select delegates to the national conventions of those parties; at those conventions the selected delegates will cast votes along with delegates from all of the other > states and territories and choose a presidential candidate who will subsequently appear on general election ballots. See Minn. Stat. § 207A.11(d) (2022) (explaining that the presidential nomination primary "only applies to a major political party that selects delegates at the presidential nomination primary to send to a national convention"). This is "a process that allows political parties to obtain voter input in advance of a nomination decision made at a national convention." De La Fuente v Simon, 940 NW2d 477, 492 (Minn, 2020). Thus, although the Secretary of State and other election officials administer the mechanics of the election, this is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes, and winning the presidential nomination primary does not place the person on the general election ballot as a candidate for President of the United States. As we explained in De La Fuente, in upholding the constitutionality of this statutory scheme for the presidential nomination primary, "[t]he road for any candidate's access to the ballot for Minnesota's presidential nomination primary runs only through the participating political parties, who alone determine which candidates will be on the party's ballot." 940 N.W.2d at 494-95. And there is no state statute that prohibits a major political party from placing on the presidential nomination primary ballot, or sending delegates to the national convention supporting, a candidate who is ineligible to hold office. [Growe, slip op pp 2-3].

[8] Similarly, this is among the reasons that this Court will not order the Secretary to place former President Trump on the primary ballot. The relevant statutory provisions contain the only way set out by the Legislature for a candidate to be placed on the ballot.

Similarly, in Michigan, the procedures outlined in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a provide the specific and explicit mechanism by which the Secretary of State is to place candidates on the 2024 Michigan presidential primary ballot. They are designed to assist the parties in determining their respective presidential candidates, and the Legislature has not provided any prohibition as to who may be placed on such ballots, irrespective as to whether the individual may either serve as a general election candidate or ultimately serve as President if elected.

In addition, the sheer number of steps involved in any candidate becoming a political party's candidate for President, in addition to the requirement that the candidate wins the general election, show that declaratory relief is not proper, at least at this time.

The Michigan Republican Party must list Mr. Trump as a Republican primary candidate in Michigan. Should they do so, he would then have to win said primary, which may well be affected by outside events that have occurred by that time. If he wins the Michigan primary, he would still have to prevail in primary challenges in the other states and win the vote at the Republican National Convention to become the national Republican candidate. This process, too, is subject to the influence of outside events. Even if he prevails at that stage, he must win the general election.

If he does so, and his right to be seated as President is challenged and he is found to be under the Section 3 disability, he could then petition Congress to have that disability removed. Congress, by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, may remove the disability with a two-thirds vote of both Houses. As discussed, "[a] claim is not ripe if it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or may not occur at all." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, 280 Mich App at 282. Whether former President Trump even becomes the President-elect is such a future event that plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that their request for a declaratory judgment is ripe at this time.

2. POLITICAL QUESTION

An additional reason the Court concludes that plaintiffs cannot receive the relief of preventing former President Trump from being placed on the primary ballot—should he satisfy Michigan's process of determining who should be listed as a candidate—is that a claim such as that raised by plaintiffs turns on a nonjusticiable political question.

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution states:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution states:

> The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

In determining whether to apply the political-question doctrine, the Supreme Court identified six factors relevant to the political-question doctrine in the 1962 case, Baker v Carr, 369 US 186; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962).

> Prominent on the surface of any case held to involve a political question is found [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; [2] or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; [5] or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or [6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question. [Id. at 217.]

With respect to factor 1 concerning who has the responsibility of making a factual determination of whether a person can serve under Section 3, the well-thought-out analysis and conclusion in Castro v New Hampshire Sec'y of State, ____ F Supp 3d ___ (D NH, 2023) (Docket No. 23-CV-416-JL, issued October 27, 2023) is helpful. This was a similar case to the matter at bar in which the plaintiff sought an injunction barring the New Hampshire Secretary of State from placing former President Trump's name on the New Hampshire Republican primary ballot because of an alleged disqualification under Section 3.

After discussing whether the plaintiff had standing, and setting out the Baker factors, the Castro Court provided the following analysis:

> The defendants contend that Castro's claim triggers the first Baker formulation, and they cite a number of cases that support their position. Indeed, state and federal district courts have consistently found that the U.S. Constitution assigns to Congress and the electors, and not the courts, the role of determining if a presidential candidate or president is qualified and fit for office—at least in the first instance. Courts that have considered the issue have found this textual assignment in varying combinations of the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. § 15, which prescribe the process for transmitting, objecting to, and counting electoral votes; the Twentieth Amendment, which authorizes Congress to fashion a response if the president elect and vice president elect are unqualified; and the Twenty-Fifth amendment and Article I impeachment clauses, which involve Congress in the removal of an unfit president from office.

For example, in Robinson v Bowen, the plaintiff moved for a preliminary injunction removing Senator McCain from the 2008 California general election ballot on the ground that he was not a "natural-born citizen," as required under Article II of the U.S. Constitution. 567 F Supp 2d 1144, 1145 (ND Cal 2008). The Robinson Court denied the motion and dismissed the case upon finding, in part, that the plaintiff's challenge raised a nonjusticiable political question. The Robinson Court noted that the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act provide that "Congress shall be in session on the appropriate day to count the electoral votes," and that Congress decides upon the outcome of any objections to the electoral votes. Id. at 1147. The Robinson Court reasoned that

> It is clear that mechanisms exist under the Twelfth Amendment and [the Electoral Count Act] for any challenge to any candidate to be ventilated when electoral votes are counted, and that the Twentieth Amendment provides guidance regarding how to proceed if a president elect shall have failed to qualify. Issues regarding qualifications for president are quintessentially suited to the foregoing process . . . . Therefore, this order holds that the challenge presented by plaintiff is committed under the Constitution to the electors and the legislative branch, at least in the first instance. Judicial review—if any—should occur only after the electoral and Congressional processes have run their course.

Id. (citing Texas v United States, 523 US 296, 300-02, 118 S Ct 1257, 140 L Ed 2d 406 (1998)).

Similarly, in Grinols v Electoral Coll, the plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order halting the re-election of then-President Obama on the ground that he was ineligible for office because he was not a natural-born citizen. 2013 WL 211135, at *1. The Grinols Court denied the motion largely because it found the plaintiffs' claim "legally untenable." Id. at *2. It reasoned, in part, that "numerous articles and amendments of the Constitution," including the Twelfth Amendment, Twentieth Amendment, Twenty-Fifth Amendment, and the Article I impeachment clauses, "make it clear that the Constitution assigns to Congress, and not the Courts, the responsibility of determining whether a person is qualified to serve as President. As such, the question presented by Plaintiffs in this case—whether President Obama may legitimately run for office and serve as President—is a political question that the Court may not answer." Id. at * 4.

Courts across the country have reached the same conclusion, based on similar reasoning. See, e.g., Kerchner v Obama, 669 F Supp 2d 477, 483 n 5 (D NJ 2009) (referencing the Twelfth and Twentieth Amendments, as well as Congress's role in counting electoral votes, and concluding that "it appears that" the plaintiffs' constitutional claims premised on President Obama's purported ineligibility are "barred under the 'political question doctrine' as a question demonstrably committed to a coordinate political department"), aff'd 612 F3d 204 (3d Cir 2010); Taitz v Democrat Party of Mississippi, No. 3:12-CV-280-HTW-LRA, 2015 WL 11017373, at *16 (SD Miss Mar. 31, 2015) ("find[ing] no authority in the Constitution which would permit [the court] to determine that a sitting president is unqualified for office or a president-elect is unqualified to take office[,]" and concluding that "[t]hese prerogatives are firmly committed to the legislative branch of our government"); Jordan v Secretary of State Sam Reed, No. 12-2-01763-5, 2012 WL 4739216, at *1 (Wash Super Aug. 29, 2012) ("The primacy of congress to resolve issues of a candidate's qualifications to serve as president is established in the U.S. Constitution.").

Critically, Castro does not present case law that contradicts the authority discussed above—nor has the court found any.

In sum, the vast weight of authority has held that the Constitution commits to Congress and the electors the responsibility of determining matters of presidential candidates' qualifications. Castro provides no reason to deviate from this consistent authority. Thus, it appears to the court that Castro's claim—which challenges Trump's eligibility as a presidential candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment—raises a nonjusticiable political question. As such, even if Castro did have standing to assert his claim, the court would lack jurisdiction to hear it under the political question doctrine. [Castro, slip op pp 7-9 (footnotes omitted).]

The Court agrees with the above analysis. Additionally, the actions of those to whom Section 3's disqualification provision applied and Congress's post-civil war responses to the various problems with the way "disabilities" were initially removed support the conclusion that Congress is primarily responsible for taking actions to effectuate Section 3.

The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified July 9, 1868. After this, the 1872 General Amnesty Act and the Amnesty Act of 1898 were passed.

The 1872 General Amnesty Act provided:

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each house concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States. [17 Stat 142]

The 1872 law cleared over 150,000 former Confederate troops who had taken part in the American Civil War. See Heritage Library, <https://heritagelib.org/amnesty-act-of-1872#>, accessed November 10, 2023

Subsequently, Congress removed the Section 3 disability from those remaining individuals, enacting the Amnesty Act of 1898. This Act provides, "[t]hat the disability imposed by section three of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed." Act of June 6, 1898, ch 389; 30 Stat 432.

That Congress could remove the Section 3 bar to serving, at least with respect to individuals barred at that time,[9] by enacting a law to "remove" the disability, en masse, even to those who could be said to be barred from service, but had not yet personally sought such relief, itself indicates that Congress not only had the power to remove the disability when asked by a specific candidate, but also possesses the broader "proactive" power to decide how to apply Section 3 in the first instance.

Arguments have been made that Congress's only role with respect to Section 3 is to remove a disability only after the judicial branch has determined that the individual cannot serve. For example, in Anderson v Griswold, Colorado Denver District Court, Docket No. 2023-CV-32577, issued October 25, 2023, slip op p 17, the Court stated that Congress "has disavowed any ability it once had to consider objections other than [those in 3 USC 15(d)(2)(B)(ii), when 1) "the electors of the State were not lawfully certified under a certificate of ascertainment of appointment of electors according to section 5(a)(1)", or 2) "where the vote of one or more electors has not been regularly given."] including any regarding the constitutional qualifications of the President-elect." However, Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment explicitly provides Congress with the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." The fact that Congress may have, at least for the moment, decided not to address this question prior to judicial intervention does not change the fact that they have the power to do so, and have certainly done so in the past.

[9] The Court notes that there is disagreement over whether the enactment of the Amnesty Act was also intended to apply prospectively to future individuals who would otherwise be barred from holding office under Section 3. However, the Court need not reach that issue at this time.

With respect to the remaining factors set out in Baker, the Court notes that factors 2, 4, 5, and 6 apply to the instant case.

In Bradley and Posner, The Real Political Question Doctrine, Stanford Law Review, Vol. 75 (2023), the authors discuss how the "prudential" concerns in the Baker factors play into the use of the doctrine. Notably, two United States Supreme Court decisions after Baker support an analysis that some questions fall within the doctrine, at least in part, because of the related prudential concerns of causing "chaos", see Nixon v United States, 506 US 224, 236; 113 S Ct 732; 122 L Ed 2d 1 (1993), or because the courts would be pulled into recurring and highly partisan disputes, such as in the instant case, see Rucho v Common Cause, ___ US ___; 139 S Ct 2484, 2507; 204 L Ed 2d 931 (2019).

In Nixon, a case involving former United States District Judge Walter L. Nixon's impeachment trial before the Senate, the Court held that a challenge to the Senate's use of a committee to receive evidence during an impeachment trial, similar to the way congressional committees investigated early Section 3 cases, raised a political question. The impeached judge in Nixon argued that the Senate's use of the committee was inconsistent with the Constitutional requirement that the Senate "try" impeachment cases. However, as discussed in The Real Political Question Doctrine, pp 1070-1072, the Court found that the first Baker factor applied even though the Constitution did not specify that the Senate had exclusive authority to decide the relevant trial procedures to be used for impeachments. Nixon, 506 US at 228-229. Its reason for doing so involved prudential concerns. In reaching its conclusion, the Court specifically tied the first and second factors together, and held "the concept of a textual commitment to a coordinate political department is not completely separate from the concept of a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; the lack of judicially manageable standards may strengthen the conclusion that there is a textually demonstrable commitment to a coordinate branch." Id. After its analysis of Article I, § 3, cl 6, the Court further held that the "chaos" involved in attempting to fashion relief supported the finding of a political question. In doing so, this case provides support for the premise that attempting to resolve the question of whether former President Trump appears on the Michigan primary ballot, or any other ballot, is nonjusticiable.

> In addition to the textual commitment argument, we are persuaded that the lack of finality and the difficulty of fashioning relief counsel against justiciability. See Baker v Carr, 369 US, at 210, 82 S Ct, at 706. We agree with the Court of Appeals that opening the door of judicial review to the procedures used by the Senate in trying impeachments would "expose the political life of the country to months, or perhaps years, of chaos." 290 US App DC, at 427, 938 F2d, at 246. This lack of finality would manifest itself most dramatically if the President were impeached. The legitimacy of any successor, and hence his effectiveness, would be impaired severely, not merely while the judicial process was running its course, but during any retrial that a differently constituted Senate might conduct if its first judgment of conviction were invalidated. Equally uncertain is the question of what relief a court may give other than simply setting aside the judgment of conviction. Could it order the reinstatement of a convicted federal judge, or order Congress to > create an additional judgeship if the seat had been filled in the interim? [Nixon, 506 US at 236.]

See also id. at 253 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) (discussing that one significant consideration was "the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question", and stating, "As the Court observes, judicial review of an impeachment trial would under the best of circumstances entail significant disruption of government." (citation omitted)).

In Rucho, Chief Justice Roberts wrote:

> Chief Justice Marshall famously wrote that it is "the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." Marbury v Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177, 2 L Ed. 60 (1803). Sometimes, however, "the law is that the judicial department has no business entertaining the claim of unlawfulness—because the question is entrusted to one of the political branches or involves no judicially enforceable rights." Vieth v Jubelirer, 541 US 267, 277; 124 S Ct 1769; 158 L Ed 2d 546 (2004) (plurality opinion). In such a case the claim is said to present a "political question" and to be nonjusticiable—outside the courts' competence and therefore beyond the courts' jurisdiction. Baker v Carr, 369 US 186, 217; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962). Among the political question cases the Court has identified are those that lack "judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving [them]." Id. [Rucho, 139 S Ct at 2494.]

Rucho involved a request to intervene in light of a complaint alleging partisan gerrymandering by Republicans in North Carolina and Democrats in Maryland. The Supreme Court held that the challenges raised a political question. Id. at 2506-2507. The Court emphasized the difficulty that courts would have with resolving such claims using a "limited and precise rationale" that was also "clear, manageable, and politically neutral." Id. at 2498 (quotation marks and citation omitted). The Court found that intervention in "heated partisan issues" required such constraints, id., because "[w]ith uncertain limits, intervening courts—even when proceeding with best intentions—would risk assuming political, not legal, responsibility for a process that often produces ill will and distrust." Id. (quotations and citations omitted). The Court also noted that the circumstances were such that "the Constitution provides no basis whatever to guide the exercise of judicial discretion." Id. at 2506. With respect to the caution against becoming embroiled in recurring and highly partisan districting disputes, the Court further held:

> [I]ntervention would be unlimited in scope and duration—it would recur over and over again around the country with each new round of districting, for state as well as federal representatives. Consideration of the impact of today's ruling on democratic principles cannot ignore the effect of the unelected and politically unaccountable branch of the Federal Government assuming such an extraordinary and unprecedented role. [Id. at 2507.]

The instant case presents the potential for running afoul of these principles. In the companion case of 23-000128-MB, the Secretary has included in Exhibit 1, a list of active and recently dismissed state and federal cases, each involving former President Trump. There are 37 cases on the Secretary's list, and it does not include either of the companion cases currently before this Court. Should this trend continue, it is conceivable that there could be 50 state cases, and a number of concurrent federal ones, each with a judicial officer or officers who "even when proceeding with best intentions," have the potential to issue partial or even totally conflicting opinions on the basis of a significant number of potentially dispositive issues. Some of these cases, such as Anderson, are already proceeding to trial.[10] Prior to the United States Supreme Court's intervention, none of these opinions, or factual findings, are binding on any other court.

The questions involved are by their nature political. The number of cases presents the risk of completely opposite and potentially confusing opinions and outcomes, which will certainly "expose the political life of the country to months, or perhaps years, of chaos." Moreover, there is no "limited and precise rationale" to guide this Court and the others that is also "clear, manageable, and politically neutral." Because the cases involve the office of the President, such confusion and lack of finality will be more pronounced. Nixon, 506 US at 236.

In determining if a question is justiciable, it is worthwhile to consider what the judiciary is asked to determine. In this case, some questions while complex, are nonetheless straightforward and embrace traditional means of legal decision-making. Is a specific office sought covered? Has a person taken a previous oath that is applicable?

Others are far more nuanced and complex. This Court recognizes the judiciary does not avoid questions because they are nuanced, complex, or difficult; however, when applying the Baker principles and standards, it seems appropriate in this case to ask:

What is an insurrection or a rebellion? What is it to engage in it or to give aid and comfort to the enemies of the Constitution?

Does it require a war of 1,458 days with 620,000 killed and battles throughout the land? [11] Could it be based on actions of physical violence, lawlessness, destruction, interruption of legislative sessions all of which take place on a single day even if allegedly supported by and aided by speeches and comments and actions and inactions by an individual before, during, and after that day? Could it be a political speech that some may argue encourages or incites others to act in ways they believe results in moral culpability on the part of the speaker for physical violence?

The short answer is–there are as many answers and gradations of answers to each of these proffered examples as there are people called upon to decide them.

The inappropriateness of the judicial branch resolving these questions, tendered by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, includes that the judicial action of removing a candidate from the presidential ballot and prohibiting them from running essentially strips Congress of its ability to "by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such a disability." Also, it takes the decision of whether there was a rebellion or insurrection and whether or not someone participated in it from the Congress, a body made up of elected representatives of the people of every state in the nation, and gives it to but one single judicial officer, a person who no matter how well intentioned, evenhanded, fair and learned, cannot in any manner or form possibly embody the represented qualities of every citizen of the nation–as does the House of Representatives and the Senate. Nor is that judicial officer provided the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article," Section 5. [12]

[12]Plaintiffs argue that the chaos created by permitting Mr. Trump to run, and become the President-elect, prior to having Congress adjudicate whether he is disqualified under Section 3, would be far worse than that which is presently occurring. Because the Constitution contains direction on what will occur should a President-elect fail to qualify for office (see US Const, Am XX, § 3) or is unable to discharge the duties of his office (see US Const, Am XXV, § 4), this Court respectfully disagrees. As unsettling as such a process could be, it is the process provided for in the Constitution and is preferable to potentially having 50 or more separate trials or evidentiary hearings, which will undoubtably rely on nonstandard definitions of "insurrection or rebellion" or what constitutes providing "aid and comfort" to an "enemy" of the United States, where the results could then be completely contradictory and which would then have to survive the various state appellate processes—all in the extremely short time before the various state primaries. Also, the Court respectfully finds plaintiffs' argument that the United States Supreme Court would then be able to manage subsequent appeals and ultimately determine these issues in time for the effective administration of various primary elections speculative.

IV. CONCLUSION

For each of the reasons discussed above, the Court DENIES declaratory relief to plaintiffs in 23-000137-MZ.

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COURT OF CLAIMS

ROBERT DAVIS,

Plaintiff,

OPINION AND ORDER

Hon. James Robert Redford

OPINION AND ORDER DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF AND FOR A WRIT OF MANDAMUS, GRANTING THE SECRETARY OF STATE'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY DISPOSITION ON COUNTS I, II, AND VI IN PLAINTIFF'S AMENDED COMPLAINT UNDER MCR 2.116(C)(8), AND HOLDING NEW COUNTS V, VII, and VIII IN ABEYANCE

In this matter, 23-000128-MB, plaintiff filed an initial complaint as well as an emergency motion for declaratory judgment, a writ of mandamus, and an order to show cause on September 15, 2023, requesting that the Court:

> 1. Declare that the Secretary of State cannot enforce the current version of MCL 168.613a, which was recently amended by 2023 PA 2, and issue an order of mandamus directing the Secretary to comply with the preamendment version of the statute;
> 2. Issue a writ of mandamus compelling the Secretary of State to promulgate rules pursuant to MCL 168.759a(17) regarding the electronic return of voted ballots by overseas military voters; and,

3. Declare that the Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under Mich Const 1963, art 11, § 1 and MCL 24.263 to decide the merits and issue a decision on plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling with respect to the question whether Donald J. Trump is precluded from running for office or being placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot of 2024 on the ground that he is prohibited from doing so under the proscriptions of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.[1]

The Secretary has responded and has moved for partial summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8) and (10) regarding Counts I, II, V, and VI of the initial complaint. She has also requested that the Court resolve plaintiff's emergency motion for declaratory judgment and mandamus relief consistent with the Secretary's arguments. As such, the Court will also resolve plaintiff's requests for declaratory relief and mandamus in Count's III and IV of his amended complaint. The Court will address the counts for which the Secretary has requested summary disposition first.[2]

For the reasons which will be set forth below the Court concludes:

1. Because the 2023 session of the Michigan Legislature has ended at 12:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023, plaintiff's requests in Count I and Count II of his complaint are now MOOT.

2. Contrary to plaintiff's arguments, the Secretary of State has begun to promulgate rules pursuant to MCL 168.759a(17) regarding the electronic return of voted ballots by overseas military voters. Thus, the claim that the Secretary has failed to act is not ripe because there is no present controversy, such that mandamus is not an available remedy at this time.

[1] Plaintiff filed an amended complaint on October 23, 2023. Counts I, II, III, IV, and VI remain the same. Because plaintiff has abandoned Count V of his initial complaint, the Court GRANTS the Secretary's concurrent request for summary disposition with respect to this count under MCR 2.116(C)(8) as MOOT. As discussed in the Court's prior scheduling order, the instant opinion does not resolve the claims raised in Counts V, VII, and VIII of the amended complaint.

[2] The Court again thanks and acknowledges the parties', proposed intervenor's, and all amicus curiae filers' thoughtful and comprehensive submissions received by the Court.

3. Michigan's Constitution of 1963, art 2, § 4 and MCL 168.614a and 168.615a prescribe the manner a person may have their name placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot and in so doing direct the actions the Secretary of State shall take, such that the Secretary has neither the affirmative duty nor the authority to separately decide whether Donald J. Trump will be placed on the Michigan primary ballot on the grounds that he is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.[3]

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary disposition is proper under MCR 2.116(C)(8) if the opposing party has failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Henry v Dow Chem Co, 473 Mich 63, 71; 701 NW2d 684 (2005) "A motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint and allows consideration of only the pleadings." MacDonald v PKT, Inc, 464 Mich 322, 332; 628 NW2d 33 (2001). "For purposes of reviewing a motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8), all well-pleaded factual allegations are accepted as true and construed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant." Ernsting v Ave Maria College, 274 Mich App 506, 509; 736 NW2d 574 (2007). A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) may only be granted "where the claims alleged are so clearly unenforceable as a matter of law that no factual development could possibly justify recovery." Adair v Michigan, 470 Mich 105, 119; 680 NW2d 386 (2004) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

[3] The Court notes there are three cases that seek relief related to the 2024 Michigan presidential primary election: Davis v Benson et al., 23-000128-MB, LaBrant et al. v Benson, 23-000137-MZ, and Trump v Benson, 23-000151-MZ. Because the cases are not consolidated and to facilitate immediate and individual appellate review of each opinion and order if desired by a litigant, while the Court may discuss some aspects of other cases in each opinion and order, the Court will seek to set forth the entire basis of the Court's rulings in each individual opinion and order, recognizing that there will be some redundancy in the respective cases.

MCR 2.605, which affords the Court the power to enter a declaratory judgment, "incorporates the doctrines of standing, ripeness, and mootness." Int'l Union, United Auto, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495; 815 NW2d 132 (2012). MCL 2.605(A)(1) provides "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." To obtain declaratory relief, a plaintiff must show that he is an interested party and allege a "case of actual controversy" within the jurisdiction of the court. "An actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is needed to guide a party's future conduct in order to preserve that party's legal rights." League of Women Voters of Mich v Sec'y of State, 506 Mich 561, 586; 957 NW2d 731 (2020). A court "is not precluded from reaching issues before actual injuries or losses have occurred," but there still must be "a present legal controversy, not one that is merely hypothetical or anticipated in the future." Id. The bar for standing is lowered in cases concerning election laws, but even in election cases, a party may not bring a declaratory-judgment action on the basis that the issue "might affect his or her interests in the future" or because "they only want instruction going forward." Id. at 587-588 (emphasis added). In addition, in determining whether a present controversy exists, "[a] claim is not ripe if it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or may not occur at all." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 280 Mich App 273, 282; 761 NW2d 210 (2008). See also Thomas v Union Carbide Agricultural Prod Co, 473 US 568, 580-581; 105 S Ct 3325; 87 L Ed 2d 409 (1985).

Respecting plaintiff's concurrent request for mandamus, "mandamus is the proper remedy for a party seeking to compel election officials to carry out their duties." Citizens Protecting

Michigan's Constitution v Sec'y of State, 324 Mich App 561, 583; 922 NW2d 404 (2018), aff'd 503 Mich 42 (2018). "To obtain the extraordinary remedy of a writ of mandamus, the plaintiff must show that (1) the plaintiff has a clear, legal right to performance of the specific duty sought, (2) the defendant has a clear legal duty to perform, (3) the act is ministerial, and (4) no other adequate legal or equitable remedy exists that might achieve the same result." Rental Props Owners Ass'n of Kent Co v Kent Co Treasurer, 308 Mich App 498, 518; 866 NW2d 817 (2014). "A clear legal right is a right clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided." Attorney General v Bd Of State Canvassers, 318 Mich App 242, 249; 896 NW2d 485 (2016) (quotation marks and citation omitted). "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Hillsdale Co Senior Servs, Inc v Hillsdale Co, 494 Mich 46, 58 n 11; 832 NW2d 728 (2013) (quotation marks and citation omitted); See also Berry v Garrett, 316 Mich App 37, 42; 890 NW2d 882 (2016). Accordingly, a writ of mandamus is generally inappropriate if the act sought to be performed involves judgment or the exercise of discretion. Hanlin v Saugatuck Twp, 299 Mich App 233, 248; 829 NW2d 335 (2013).[4] The plaintiff has the

[4] The Court recognizes that our Supreme Court in Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390; 355 NW2d 75 (1984), provided that "the writ will lie to require a body or an officer charged with a duty to take action in the matter, notwithstanding the fact that the execution of that duty may involve some measure of discretion." Id. at 410. However, the Court also affirmed that the writ "will not lie for the purpose of reviewing, revising, or controlling the exercise of discretion reposed in administrative bodies" and clarified that "[s]tated otherwise, mandamus will lie to compel the exercise of discretion, but not to compel its exercise in a particular manner." Id. The Court further explained:

> The [mandamus] power [of the judiciary] is not one to create a duty where none existed before or to mandate action where the decision whether to act is discretionary. Rather, the power is the constitutional power of a circuit court to burden of demonstrating entitlement "to the extraordinary remedy of a writ of mandamus." Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution, 324 Mich App at 584. For purposes of resolving plaintiff's request in Count II, plaintiff must also demonstrate that the request for mandamus is ripe. See Coates v Attorney General, 120 Mich App 816, 827; 328 NW2d 113 (1982), mod 126 Mich App 370; 337 NW2d 343 (1983) (holding that issuance of mandamus would be premature against an official who has not yet refused to perform their duty.) See also Davis v Indep Citizens Redistricting Comm, 508 Mich 935; 963 NW2d 600 (2021) (Zahra, J. (concurring)).

II. ANALYSIS

A. COUNTS I AND II

In Counts I and II, plaintiff seeks declaratory and mandamus relief to essentially compel the Secretary of State to conduct the 2024 presidential primary election on March 12, 2024, rather than on February 27, 2024, as required by the current version of MCL 168.613a(1), which was recently amended by 2023 PA 2. However, in light of the fact that the Legislature has ended its 2023 session on November 14, 2023, at 12:00 p.m., plaintiff's claims for relief are MOOT.

> direct, upon the complaint of an aggrieved party, that a duty imposed by law upon the executive department of government to make a decision according to legislatively established criteria be carried out. Were it otherwise, our citizens would be powerless to compel their public servants to conduct the business of government—to make a decision, whether good or bad, but some decision, based upon the legislatively established criteria where the duty to make a decision is clear. [Id. at 412.]

In other words, while an agency may not wholly avoid compliance with a statutory mandate on the ground that it retains some discretion as to the particular method of compliance, the court will not impose a mandatory duty where none exists under the relevant statute, and mandamus will not lie to compel the agency to use its judgment or discretion to act in a particular manner. Such an exercise of judgment or discretion is not "ministerial."

2023 PA 2 was passed on February 1, 2023. It did not, however, garner the two-thirds vote of each House necessary to be given immediate effect under Const 1963, art 4, § 27. As such, it will not take effect "until the expiration of 90 days from the end of the session at which it was passed". Id. In his previously filed pleadings, plaintiff maintained that according to the then-current legislative calendar, the session was not scheduled to end until December 14, 2023, or December 21, 2023. However, plaintiff has presented nothing to support a claim that the Legislature may not choose a different end date, which it has now done, such that the current version of MCL 168.613a(1) will take effect before February 27, 2024. Under the existing statute, MCL 168.613a, the date of the presidential primary continues to be March 12, 2024. However, as the Secretary was aware, at the time it was passed, it was possible that 2023 PA 2 might become effective and change the date to February 27, 2024. As such, the Secretary issued an "Election Calendar of Dates" and a pamphlet, "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024," both of which clearly indicated the possibility that the current version of MCL 168.613a would remain in effect, but was also designed to prepare county clerks and others to comply with the earlier election date.

Because the Legislature voted to end the 2023 legislative session on November 14, 2023, and has adjourned sine die, Const 1963, art 4, § 27 will now apply.

This section provides:

> No act shall take effect until the expiration of 90 days from the end of the session at which it was passed, but the legislature may give immediate effect to acts by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to and serving in each house.

As a result, the changes indicated will become effective on February 13, 2024. Thus, the primary date will now be February 27, 2024. Plaintiff's argument that the Secretary's actions in disseminating the calendar and information pamphlets were unlawful are now MOOT. "An issue is deemed moot when an event occurs that renders it impossible for a reviewing court to grant relief." B P 7 v Bureau of State Lottery, 231 Mich App 356, 359; 586 NW2d 117 (1998). Accordingly, because this issue is MOOT, the Court GRANTS summary disposition to the Secretary of State with respect to plaintiff's request for declaratory and mandamus relief in Counts I and II of his complaint.

B. COUNT VI

In Count VI of his complaint, plaintiff seeks a writ of mandamus compelling the Secretary of State to promulgate rules pursuant to MCL 168.759a(17) regarding the electronic return of voted ballots by overseas military voters. Public Act 197 of 2022 amended MCL 168.759a(13) to provide for the ability of military voters to return absent voter ballots electronically and required the Secretary of State to promulgate rules to provide for the process to do so. MCL 168.759a(17), as amended by 2022 PA 197.

Plaintiff seeks mandamus on the ground that "[t]o date, the Defendant Secretary of State has FAILED to begin to promulgate rules in accordance with the APA to implement MCL 168.759a(17)." Plaintiff further contends that the duties of the Secretary under the statute are ministerial. In support of her claim for relief, the Secretary has presented a November 2022 request for rulemaking using the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs Administrative Rulemaking System.

> MCL 168.759a(13) provides in relevant part for the ability of military voters to return absent voter ballots electronically. MCL 168.759a(17), as amended by 2022 PA 197, requires the Secretary of State to promulgate rules "pursuant to the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 to 24.328" to facilitate the process of return of voting ballots by these voters. Currently, MCL

> 168.759a(17) requires that these rules be promulgated by January 1, 2024: The secretary of state shall promulgate rules that establish policies and procedures for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members. In promulgating rules that establish the policies and procedures for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members, the secretary of state shall require an eligible member to use a United States Department of Defense verified electronic signature, as that term is defined in [MCL168.18a], so that the identity of the eligible member can be verified utilizing those policies and procedures. A member who is unable or unwilling to provide a United States Department of Defense verified electronic signature is not eligible to electronically return a voted ballot. The secretary of state shall take reasonable steps to ensure the integrity and secrecy of voted ballots returned electronically. The secretary of state may develop and maintain a secure web portal on the secretary of state's website to facilitate the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members. Only the secretary of state or the secretary of state's duly authorized agent, a city or township clerk, the clerk's deputy clerk, or a sworn member of the clerk's staff is authorized to access the secure web portal on the secretary of state's website. No later than January 1, 2024, the secretary of state shall promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 to 24.328, to implement this subsection, and the secretary of state must allow for the electronic return of voted ballots by eligible members starting no later than the 2024 statewide presidential primary election. As used in this subsection, "eligible member" means a member of a uniformed service on active duty or a member of the merchant marine, as described in subsection (6) or (13).

Following the passage of 2023 Senate Bill 470, MCL 168.759a(17) has been amended by 2023 PA 193 to provide for additional time for the Secretary to act. It now provides that the rules be promulgated by September 1, 2025. However, as with the changes to MCL 168.613a, the changes to MCL 168.759a(17) were not given immediate effect. Thus, unlike the recent changes to MCL 168.613a(1), the current date in MCL 168.759a(17) giving the Secretary until January 1, 2024 to promulgate the rules remains the same, because although the Legislature voted to end its current 2023 legislative session on November 14, 2023 and has adjourned sine die, Const 1963, art 4, § 27 will now apply such that the effective date of the changes will not be until February 13, 2024. Thus, the Court will analyze this issue using the current January 1, 2024 date.

At this time, neither party has presented the Court with the complete set of proposed rules. Nor has either party even argued that the complete rules have been proposed. As the Secretary notes, she has presented a "Request for Rulemaking" to the Michigan Office of Administrative Hearings and Rules. The Court, therefore, agrees with the Secretary that, to the extent that a declaratory ruling is sought to compel the Secretary to begin the rulemaking process, she has done so. Nor is mandamus appropriate where the Secretary has not refused to perform her statutory duties. Coates, 120 Mich App at 827.

In his response to the Secretary's motion for summary disposition, plaintiff takes issue with the fact that the Secretary has not yet complied with the requirement of a regulatory impact statement as required under MCL 24.245(3). He also argues that the Secretary has not complied with the Administrative Procedures Act because the Secretary has not yet sent the rules for public comment as required under MCL 24.241. However, the request for rulemaking clearly states that the rules will be promulgated under the full rulemaking process. Although the request also states that the proposed rules have not been submitted to the public for comment, plaintiff has not shown that they will not be submitted once they are promulgated. Nor has plaintiff demonstrated that the Secretary will fail to meet the current deadline. As such, the Court GRANTS summary disposition to the Secretary of State under MCL 2.116(C)(8) with respect to Count VI.

C. COUNTS III AND IV

Plaintiff argues that the Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under Const 1963, art 11, § 1 and MCL 24.263 to decide the merits and issue a decision on plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling related to the qualification or possible disqualification of Donald J. Trump to be a candidate for President of the United States under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court disagrees.

MCL 24.263 provides:

> On request of an interested person, an agency may issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability to an actual state of facts of a statute administered by the agency or of a rule or order of the agency. An agency shall prescribe by rule the form for such a request and procedure for its submission, consideration and disposition. A declaratory ruling is binding on the agency and the person requesting it unless it is altered or set aside by any court. An agency may not retroactively change a declaratory ruling, but nothing in this subsection prevents an agency from prospectively changing a declaratory ruling. A declaratory ruling is subject to judicial review in the same manner as an agency final decision or order in a contested case.

In terms of the issuance of a writ of mandamus, the permissive language in MCL 24.263 severely undercuts plaintiff's arguments. As discussed above, a writ of mandamus requires a clear legal duty to perform the specific duty sought and that such act is ministerial. Rental Props Owners Ass'n of Kent Co, 308 Mich App at 518.

In this case, plaintiff alleges that the Secretary has violated a statutory mandate; i.e., that the Secretary is statutorily required to "issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability to an actual state of facts of a statute administered by the agency or of a rule or order of the agency" under MCL 24.263. However, the permissive language of MCL 24.263 does not mandate a duty to issue a declaratory ruling under the statute; it leaves the decision to do so in the hands of the agency, here the Secretary of State. This is simply not the case where an "officer charged with a duty to take action in the matter" has failed to do so.

In this way, the permissive language in MCL 24.263 stands in sharp contrast to the mandatory requirements in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a. MCL 168.614a(1) requires:

> Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section [MCL 168.613a]. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the > public on an internet website maintained by the department of state. [Emphasis added.][5]

MCL 168.614a(2) provides for the state chairperson of each political party to then file a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that party and requires the Secretary to make that list available to the public. MCL 168.615a then requires the Secretary to place the candidates so identified on the presidential primary ballot unless a candidate withdraws. "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under [MCL 168.614a] to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party." MCL 168.615a(1) (Emphasis added).

Under those requirements, while the Secretary is mandated to act, she retains discretion as to what media sources to consider when choosing which candidates to list on the notices she provides to the respective political parties under MCL 168.614a. Were the Secretary to choose to not provide such a list, Teasel would permit the Court to order that she do so, despite the fact that the exercise of this act necessarily involves the exercise of her discretion. However, these requirements stand in sharp contrast to the permissive language of MCL 24.263.

Further, Michigan courts have repeatedly held that administrative agencies such as the Secretary of State generally do not have the power to determine constitutional questions.

[5] The Court notes, at oral argument on November 9, 2023, in this case and Cases 23-000137-MZ and 23-000151-MZ, the attorney for the Secretary of State indicated that, in accordance with the Michigan Court Rules regarding deadlines that fall upon a weekend or legal holiday, the issuance of the list of individuals described in MCL 168.614a(1) would be transmitted on Monday, November 13, 2023, instead of Friday, November 10, 2023, because November 10, 2023, was the state of Michigan holiday in observance of Veteran's Day.

Bauserman v Unemployment Ins Agency, 509 Mich 673, 710; 938 NW2d 855 (2022), citing Dickerson v Warden, Marquette Prison, 99 Mich App 630, 641-642; 298 NW2d 841 (1980). See also Dation v Ford Motor Co, 314 Mich 152, 159; 22 NW2d 252 (1946). Plaintiff points to no statutory authority granted by our Legislature to the Secretary empowering her with any authority to answer. Thus, where the Legislature has not authorized or required the Secretary to determine or confirm whether candidates for president are qualified and eligible to serve, the Court agrees with the Secretary that she has no authority to determine this constitutional question. Plaintiff, therefore, has failed to show that the Secretary has a clear legal duty to decide whether a candidate would be prevented from serving if elected.

Nor are any actions the Secretary of State might choose to take under MCL 24.263 to determine whether a candidate may be placed on the ballot in any way "ministerial." Were the Court to require the Secretary of State to decide whether former President Trump be placed on the primary ballot, the Secretary would then be forced to engage in factual determinations and constitutional interpretation. Such acts are not ministerial but would require the exercise of both discretion and judgment. Thus, plaintiff has not shown that the action taken by the Secretary would be ministerial.

The Court also agrees that the Secretary simply has no administrative process for making the legal or factual determinations that would need to be made concerning the application of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. As the Secretary notes, there is no statutory vehicle that provides either an individual with the right to initiate such an action administratively or for the participation of the impacted candidate, who would be entitled to due process. See, e.g., Greene v Raffensberger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283, 1294-1295 (ND Ga 2022) (discussing the plaintiff's dueprocess concerns in a case involving disqualification under Section 3). Plaintiff has also not shown or argued that the Secretary could take testimony in order to resolve these issues.

Plaintiff also argues that to the extent that MCL 168.615a prohibits the Secretary of State from removing a presidential candidate from a presidential primary or general election ballot on the ground that the candidate cannot serve under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, MCL 168.615a is unconstitutional under Const 1963, art 11, § 1. The Court notes that "[s]tatues are presumed to be constitutional, and a statute is to be construed in a constitutional manner unless the unconstitutionality of the statute is facially obvious." People v Hrlic, 277 Mich App 260, 262; 744 NW2d 221 (2007) (quotation and citations omitted).

Const 1963, art 11, § 1 provides:

> All officers, legislative, executive and judicial, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this state, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ..... according to the best of my ability. No other oath, affirmation, or any religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust.

Plaintiff's focus on the language of Const 1963, art 11, § 1 is not persuasive. He has not shown that the general obligation in this section for the Secretary of State to support the Constitution specifically equates to a mandatory constitutional duty to decide the qualifications for someone seeking office in Michigan or whether the person can serve if elected. Article 11, § 1 also does not confer such power to do so.

As noted by the Secretary, Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2) specifically provides to the Legislature the power to "enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all nominations and elections, to preserve the purity of elections, to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting." And while the Michigan Court of Appeals has held that the Secretary of State has the "inherent authority to take measures to ensure that voters [are] able to avail themselves of the constitutional rights established" in Const 1963, art 2, § 4, Davis v Sec'y of State, 333 Mich App 588, 591, 601; 963 NW2d 653 (2020), nothing in that article supports plaintiff's position that the Secretary has the authority to modify the statutory process of identifying and accepting a slate of presidential candidates to be voted upon at the presidential primary or general election. To the extent that Const 1963, art 11, § 1 generally applies, the Court would still remain constrained by the long-standing Michigan precedent that the Secretary has no power to determine constitutional questions. Bauserman, 509 Mich at 710; Dation, 314 Mich at 159; Dickerson, 99 Mich App at 641-642. Thus, if a specific question exists whether a candidate should be placed on a ballot, it is the Legislature that is tasked with providing statutory guidance to the Secretary, which it has not done.

Because plaintiff has not demonstrated a clear legal duty pursuant to MCL 24.263, that any action taken under the statute would be ministerial, or that MCL 168.615a is unconstitutional, the Court DENIES plaintiff's request for mandamus or a declaration that the Secretary has the duty to decide whether a candidate is precluded from serving pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the reasons discussed above, the Court GRANTS the Secretary of State's motion for summary disposition with respect to Counts I and II of plaintiff's complaint under MCR 2.116(C)(8) as MOOT. The Court GRANTS the Secretary's motion for summary disposition of Count VI under MCR 2.116(C)(8). The Court also DENIES plaintiff's requests for relief with respect to Counts III and IV.

In accordance with the Court's October 31, 2023 scheduling order, Counts V, VII, and VIII of plaintiff's amended complaint are HELD IN ABEYANCE.

Hi Dana,

Robert Davis has filed an action in the Court of Claims seeking declaratory and mandamus relief against the Secretary. The first four counts deal with resolving which date the presidential primary must be held on (new February date or old March date), and whether the Secretary has the authority to disqualify Trump from the presidential primary ballot (or possible any other ballot) due to his alleged ineligibility under the 14th Amendment's insurrection clause. In his other two counts, he alleges the Secretary did not file the required bond before taking office and he seeks to compel the Secretary to promulgate rules for the electronic processing of military and overseas ballots. See MCL 168.759a(17). DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

He has not served the Secretary yet. Davis is trying to expedite briefing and a hearing on the complaint, at least as to the Trump related counts. We will keep you posted.

Pursuant to MCL 168.21 of Michigan Election Law, Defendant Secretary of State is the "chief elections" officer of the state that has "supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of" Michigan Election Law.

III. CAUSES OF ACTION

COUNT I

Declaratory Judgment Declaring That Defendant Secretary of State Cannot Enforce Public Act 2 of 2023, Which Changed The Date of The 2024 Presidential Primary From March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024, And Further Declare That The Current Version of MCL 168.613a Controls And Thus, The 2024 Presidential Primary Election Must Be Held On March 12, 2024.

7. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

8. For this count, pursuant to MCR 2.605, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a declaratory judgment against the Defendant Secretary of State.

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

9. Pursuant to MCR 2.605, an actual controversy exists between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Secretary of State.

10. On February 1, 2023, Governor Gretchen Whitmer signed into law Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, changing the date of the Presidential Primary Election from the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year to the fourth Tuesday in February beginning in 2024.[1]

11. The current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, currently provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under this act on the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of president in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections. (emphasis supplied).

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

12. Importantly, however, MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023, would read as follows:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024. (emphasis supplied).

13. However, Public Act 2 of 2023 was NOT given immediate effect. Rather, the effective date of Public Act 2 of 2023 is "sine die", which means Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective "until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session." (See Public Act 2 of 2023 attached).

14. As of the date of the filing of this complaint, it's unknown when the final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session of the Michigan Legislature will be.

15. According to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan House of Representatives' 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 21, 2023.[2] (See Michigan House of Representatives' 2023 Session Schedule attached).

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

16. Similarly, according to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan Senate's 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 14th or 21st, 2023.[3]

17. Even though the Michigan Legislature's 2023 Regular Session has NOT adjourned, the Defendant Secretary of State has nonetheless taken the extraordinary and unlawful step of enforcing Public Act 2 of 2023 before its effective date.

18. In June 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State published an election manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office In 2024", which was disseminated to all local county, city and township clerks informing them that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election was going to be held on February 27, 2024 and NOT March 12, 2024.[4] (See Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 Presidential Primary Election Manual attached).

19. "Under MCL 168.31, local election officials must follow the Secretary of State's instructions regarding the conduct of elections." Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich.App. 588, ___; 963 NW2d 653, 658 (2020), citing Secretary of State v. Berrien Co. Bd. of Election Comm'rs, 373 Mich. 526, 530-531, 129 N.W.2d 864 (1964).

20. Therefore, all local county, city and townships are mandated to follow the directives and mandates set forth in the Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 election manual governing the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, which requires the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to be held on February 27, 2024 and NOT March 12, 2024.

21. Confused by the Defendant Secretary of State's unlawful actions and conduct, on September 11, 2023, Plaintiff sent the Defendant Secretary of State and the State Director of Elections an email respectfully requesting clarity as to when the 2024 Presidential Primary Election would be held. (See Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 Email to Defendant attached).

22. However, neither the Defendant Secretary of State nor the State Director of Elections responded to Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 email.

23. As a duly registered and qualified voter of the state of Michigan, Plaintiff desires and intends to vote by absentee ballot in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held on February 27, 2024 or March 12, 2024.

24. Pursuant to MCL 168.615c of Michigan Election Law, Plaintiff, as a registered voter, has the statutory right to participate and vote in either the Democratic or Republican Presidential Primary Election provided Plaintiff "shall indicate in writing, on a form prescribed by the secretary of state, which political party ballot he.... Wishes to vote when appearing at a presidential election."

25. However, it's imperative that the Defendant Secretary of State properly administers and enforces valid provisions of Michigan Election Law that are currently in effect.

26. Plaintiff, as a registered voter, who intends on and desires to vote in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election by absentee ballot, has the constitutional and statutory right to know the correct date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

27. Plaintiff is concerned that if the 2024 Presidential Primary Election is held on the "wrong" date in violation of operational Michigan law in effect at the time, Plaintiff's vote will not be counted and will be subject to challenge in post-election quo warranto litigation.

28. As noted, Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law by changing the date of the Presidential Primary Election from March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024, was NOT given immediate effect and does NOT become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session".

29. "It is axiomatic that a statute becomes operational only upon its effective date." In re Request for Advisory Opinion re Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich. 1, 12; 740 NW2d 444 (2007). (emphasis supplied).

30. Mich.Const.1963 "art. 4, §27 prevents this act from taking effect until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey v Dep't of Mgmt & Budget, 429 Mich. 315, 340; 414 NW2d 873 (1987). (emphasis supplied).

31. Therefore, Defendant Secretary of State cannot enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which moves the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, "until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey, 429 Mich. at 340. (emphasis supplied).

32. Under the current version of MCL 168.759(2) of Michigan Election Law, Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the statutory right "at any time during the 75 days before an election, but not later than 8p.m. on the day of an election," to "apply for an absent voter ballot".

33. Additionally, MCL 168.759a(5) of Michigan Election Law requires that "not later than 45 days before an election, a county, city, or township clerk shall electronically transmit or mail as appropriate an absent voter ballot to each absent uniformed services voter or overseas voter who applied for an absent voter ballot 45 days or more before the election."

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

34. Because Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently NOT in effect or operational, none of the statutory deadlines for absentee ballots set forth under MCL 168.759(2) and 168.759a(5) can be met and/or satisfied by the Defendant Secretary of State for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date.

35. Moreover, MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law requires the Defendant Secretary of State, "at least 60 days and not more than 90 days preceding any regular state or district primary or election, shall send to the county clerk of each county a notice inwriting of such primary or election, specifying in such notice the federal, state, and district offices for which candidates are to be nominated or elected, as well as any constitutional amendments and questions to be submitted thereat."

36. The notice requirement under MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law also cannot be met for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date because Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session", which has NOT occurred.

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

37. As noted, the final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session is currently not scheduled to occur until sometime in late December 2023.

38. Defendant Secretary of State does not have the constitutional nor statutory legal authority to enforce a law that has NOT become operational in accordance with Mich.Const. 1963, art. 4, §27.

39. "As a single executive heading a principal department, the Secretary of State shall 'perform duties prescribed by law.' Const. 1963, art. 5, § 9." Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich.App. 588, ___; 963 NW2d 653, 658 (2020).

40. Here, the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to only enforce those laws that are currently in effect.

41. Accordingly, the Defendant Secretary of State's 2023 Election Manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024" must be declared VOID and UNENFORCEABLE because it unlawfully directs local county, city, and township clerks to enforce Public Act 2 of 2023, which changes the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, and Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently NOT operational or in effect.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Robert Davis prays and requests this Honorable Court enters judgment and grants the following relief against the Defendant Secretary of State as follows:

a. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that Defendant Secretary of State cannot enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law by changing the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, because Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently not in effect and does not become operational until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session.

b. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law controls and thus, the 2024 Presidential Primary Election shall be held on March 12, 2024.

c. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that the Defendant Secretary of State shall inform all registered voters, presidential candidates, and local county, city, and township clerks that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election shall be held on March 12, 2024.

d. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 election manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024" VOID and UNENFORCEABLE.

COUNT II

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Enforce The Current Version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and Compel Defendant Secretary of State To Hold The 2024 Presidential Primary Election On March 12, 2024.

42. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

43. For this count, pursuant to MCR 3.305, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a writ of mandamus against the Defendant Secretary of State compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and compel the Defendant to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

44. If this Honorable Court declares and determines that the Defendant Secretary of State currently lacks the constitutional and statutory legal authority to enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which does not become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session", and that the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional and statutory legal duty to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a, entry of a writ of mandamus is most appropriate.

45. Mandamus relates to the duties of public officials. Vayda v County of Lake, 321 Mich App 686, 700; 909 NW2d 874 (2017).

46. Mandamus generally is a proper remedy to compel election-related duties. Warren City Council v Buffa, 333 Mich App 422, 435; 960 NW2d 166 (2020).

47. Whether a writ issues is within the discretion of the court. Moore v Genesee Co, 337 Mich App 723, 731; 976 NW2d 921 (2021). Specifically, plaintiff has the burden to show:

> (1) a clear legal right to the act sought to be compelled; (2) a clear legal duty by the defendant to perform the act; (3) that the act is ministerial, leaving nothing to the judgment or discretion of the defendant; and (4) that no other adequate remedy exists. [Twp of Casco v Sec'y of State, 472 Mich 566, 621; 701 NW2d 102 (2005) (YOUNG, J., concurring in part).]

48. In a mandamus action, "a 'clear, legal right' is one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty

49. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has standing to seek the proper enforcement of Michigan Election Law.

50. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the constitutional and statutory legal right to seek the entry of a writ of mandamus to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to scheduled and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

51. "A clear legal duty is asserted to compel the enforcement of an act by a public official." Warren City Council v Buffa, ____Mich.App.____, _____; _____NW2d_____ (2023)(Docket No.365488, issued April 21,2023), slip op at p 12, citing Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390, 415 n 13; 355 NW2d 75 (1984).

52. The Defendant Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under the Mich.Const. 1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

53. "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget, 508 Mich 48, 82; 972 NW2d 738 (2021) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

54. The duties of the Defendant Secretary of State under the current version of MCL 168.615a and Mich.Const.1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 are ministerial.

55. Lastly, Plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law, other than the instant litigation, to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

COUNT III

Declaratory Judgment Declaring The Defendant Secretary of State Has A Legal Duty Under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and Michigan Case Law To Determine Whether A Presidential Candidate Satisfies The Eligibility Requirements To Run For President of the United States As Set Forth Under The United States Constitution.

56. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

57. For this count, pursuant to MCR 2.605, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a declaratory judgment against the Defendant Secretary of State.

58. Pursuant to MCR 2.605, an actual controversy exists between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Secretary of State.

59. On August 28, 2023, Plaintiff sent, via email, Defendant Secretary of State a written request for declaratory ruling declaring former President Donald Trump ("Former President" or "Trump") ineligible to have his name printed on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot as a candidate for President for the Republican Party because Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. (See Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for Declaratory Ruling attached).

60. On September 12, 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State, through the State Director of Elections, Jonathan Brater, issued Plaintiff a written response DENYING Plaintiff's request for a declaratory ruling declaring Trump ineligible under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Defendant Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached).

61. The Defendant Secretary of State DENIED Plaintiff's meritorious request for a declaratory ruling because "[u]nder the Election Law, the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is 'disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.'" (See Defendant Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached).

62. MCL 24.263 of the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA") provides:

> On request of an interested person, an agency may issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability to an actual state of facts of a statute administered by the agency or of a rule or order of the agency. An agency shall prescribe by rule the form for such a request and procedure for its submission, consideration and disposition. A declaratory ruling is binding on the agency and the person requesting it unless it is altered or set aside by any court. An agency may not retroactively change a declaratory ruling, but nothing in this subsection prevents an agency from > prospectively changing a declaratory ruling. A declaratory ruling is subject to judicial review in the same manner as an agency final decision or order in a contested case. (emphasis supplied).

63. Plaintiff is certainly an "interested person" because as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, Plaintiff desires and intends to vote by absentee ballot in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held in February 2024 or March 2024.

64. Additionally, Plaintiff is an "interested person" because Plaintiff will not only be voting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, but Plaintiff will be voting for and supporting a Republican presidential candidate, that is NOT Trump, in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

65. Plaintiff believes that if an otherwise ineligible candidate, like Trump, is allowed to have their name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, the presidential candidate Plaintiff is planning on voting for in the 2024 Republican Presidential Primary Election will lose votes, and Plaintiff will suffer imminent irreparable harm as a result.

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

66. Although Plaintiff is not a registered Republican, MCL 168.615c of Michigan Election Law grants Plaintiff the statutory legal right to vote in the Republican Presidential Primary Election provided that Plaintiff "shall indicate in writing, on a form prescribed by the secretary of state, which political party ballot he…wishes to vote when appearing at a presidential election."

67. Michigan's Presidential Primary Election is an "open" primary. See MCL 168.615c.

68. Plaintiff fears that if an otherwise ineligible presidential candidate, such as Trump, is allowed to unlawfully appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, Plaintiff's Republican presidential candidate of choice will lose votes and thus, Plaintiff will suffer irreparable harm.

69. Since Trump is undeniably the current leading candidate to capture the Republican nomination for President, if Trump is allowed to have his name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot despite his ineligibility under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution,

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Trump will undeniably take votes away from Plaintiff's Republican presidential candidate of choice.

70. This constitutes irreparable harm that Plaintiff will suffer because of the loss of votes for Plaintiff's preferred candidate of choice for the Republican presidential nomination, which Plaintiff intends on voting for and supporting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

71. MCL 168.614a and 168.615a of Michigan Election Law govern the Defendant Secretary of State's statutory duties to print the names of presidential candidates on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot.

72. MCL 168.614a of Michigan Election Law provides:

political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. The secretary of state shall make the lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.

(3) After the issuance of the list under subsection (1) and after receipt of names from the state chairperson of each political party under subsection (2), the secretary of state shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election. (emphasis supplied).

73. MCL 168.615a provides, in pertinent part, the following:

> (1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state indicating his or her party preference if different than the party preference contained in the secretary of state notification and the secretary of state shall cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. If the affidavit of a presidential candidate indicates that the candidate has no political party preference or indicates a political party preference for a political party other than a political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a, the secretary of state shall not cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed > on a ballot for the presidential primary election. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state specifically stating that "(candidate's name) is not a presidential candidate", and the secretary of state shall not have that presidential candidate's name printed on a presidential primary ballot. A presidential candidate shall file an affidavit described in this subsection with the secretary of state no later than 4 p.m. on the second Friday in December of the year before the presidential election year or the affidavit is considered void. (emphasis supplied).

74. Pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1) of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Secretary of State "shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party."

75. Therefore, because Trump is undoubtedly the leading presidential candidate for the Republican nomination according to some of the most-recent and published national polls and because the Chair of the Michigan Republican Party, Karmo, has stated publicly that she would be submitting Trump's name to the Defendant Secretary of State to appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1), Defendant

Secretary of State would appear to be obligated to print Trump's name on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot.

76. However, contrary to Defendant Secretary of State's flawed and erroneous determination, Defendant Secretary of State is constitutionally obligated to determine whether a presidential candidate is eligible in accordance with the qualification requirements set forth under the United States Constitution.

77. Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 provides:

> All officers, legislative, executive and judicial, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this state, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ..... according to the best of my ability. No other oath, affirmation, or any religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust. (emphasis supplied).

78. As noted, the Defendant Secretary of State is an elected executive that heads a principal department of the executive branch of state government. See Mich.Const.1963, art. 5, §3.

79. Pursuant to Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and MCL 168.80 of Michigan Election Law, Defendant Secretary of State was administered the aforementioned constitutional oath of office on January 1, 2023.

80. By taking the constitutional oath of office required under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1, Defendant Secretary of State swore or affirmed that she would "support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this state[.]" (emphasis supplied).

81. Defendant Secretary of State would violate her constitutional oath of office if she permitted a presidential candidate to appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot if they failed to satisfy the requirements set forth under the United States Constitution.

82. By way example, if a potential presidential candidate was not a natural born citizen as required under Article II, §1, Clause 5 of the United States Constitution and evidence was provided to the Defendant Secretary of State proving that said presidential candidate was not a natural born citizen, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 would require the Defendant Secretary of State NOT to print said presidential candidate's name on a presidential primary election ballot.

83. Similarly, if a potential presidential candidate was 30 years old and did not meet the age requirement as set forth under Article II, §1, Clause 5 of the United States Constitution, and evidence was provided to the Defendant Secretary of State proving that the presidential candidate was 30 years old, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 would require the Defendant Secretary of State NOT to print the name of said presidential candidate on a presidential primary election ballot.

84. Because Defendant Secretary of State took an oath to "support the Constitution of the United States", Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to properly "enforce" the provisions of the United States Constitution.

85. Certainly, Defendant Secretary of State would NOT be "supporting" the United States Constitution if she permits a presidential candidate to knowingly violate any provisions of the United States Constitution.

86. Here, Plaintiff provided the Defendant Secretary of State with ample evidence that Trump was disqualified as a presidential candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. (See Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for Declaratory Ruling attached).

87. Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides additional eligibility requirements for a person to qualify as a presidential candidate.

88. However, because the Defendant Secretary of State erroneously believed and concluded that because "the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is 'disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution"', Defendant was somehow prohibited from making such a determination.

89. As noted, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 grants Defendant Secretary of State the constitutional authority to decide whether a presidential candidate satisfies the eligibility requirements set forth under the United States Constitution because Defendant swore an oath to "support the Constitution of the United States."

90. To the extent that MCL 168.615a prohibits the Defendant Secretary of State from removing and/or keeping the name of a presidential candidate off a presidential primary and/or general election ballot that has not satisfied the eligibility requirements set forth under the United States Constitution, MCL 168.615a is unconstitutional under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1.

a. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and the oath of office administered to all state elected officials under said constitutional provision grant Defendant Secretary of State the constitutional authority to determine whether a presidential candidate has satisfied the eligibility and/or disqualification requirements to run for President of the United States as set forth under the United States Constitution.

b. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring MCL 168.615a(1) unconstitutional for it contravenes and violates Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1, but only to the extent that it prohibits Defendant Secretary of State from removing and/or preventing the name of a presidential candidate from appearing on a presidential primary and/or general election ballot as a presidential candidate if they have not satisfied the eligibility and/or disqualification requirements set forth under the United States Constitution to qualify as a candidate for President of the United States.

c. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional legal duty to determine the merits of Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning the possible disqualification of former President Donald Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and issue a ruling well-in-advance of the certification deadline set forth under MCL 168.614a and 168.615a.

d. Enter an injunction enjoining the Defendant Secretary of State from printing the name of Donald Trump on any presidential primary and/or general election ballots until such time as the Defendant Secretary of State decides the merits and issues a decision on Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning the possible disqualification of former President Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

e. Award Plaintiff his court costs.

f. Enter an order awarding whatever other equitable relief the Court deems appropriate at the time of final judgment.

COUNT V

Declaratory Judgment Declaring Defendant Secretary of State Was Required To Comply With MCL 15.51, Which Required The Defendant Secretary of State To File A $25,000 Bond Within 20 Days of Assuming Office.

105. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

106. For this count, pursuant to MCR 2.605, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a declaratory judgment against the Defendant Secretary of State.

107. Pursuant to MCR 2.605, an actual controversy exists between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Secretary of State.

108. In November 2022, the Defendant Secretary of State was re-elected to the office of Secretary of State to serve a four-year term commencing at Noon on January 1, 2023.

111. Although Defendant Secretary of State timely took the constitutional oath of office, Defendant Secretary of State failed to timely file a bond in accordance with MCL 15.51.

112. MCL 15.51 provides:

> The secretary of state and deputy secretary of state of this state, and the private secretary and executive clerk of

113. On March 26, 2023, Plaintiff submitted a request under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") to the Department of Treasury and the Department of State respectfully requesting "[c]opies of any and all bonds Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson filed with the State Treasurer's office in January, February, or March 2023 to cover her term of office commencing January 1, 2023." (See Plaintiff's March 26, 2023 FOIA request attached).

115. On that same day, April 3, 2023, Adam Fracassi, FOIA Coordinator for the Department of State, issued a written response, via email, to Plaintiff's March 26, 2023 FOIA request and advised the Plaintiff that his March 26, 2023 FOIA request was DENIED "on the basis on my certification that the Department does not possess records responsive to your request." (See State Bureau of Elections April 3, 2023 Response to Plaintiff's March 26, 2023 FOIA request attached).

116. Pursuant to MCR 3.306(B)(3), on August 8, 2023, Plaintiff submitted an application to the Michigan Attorney General requesting the Michigan Attorney General to institute and initiate quo warranto proceedings to oust and remove the Defendant Secretary of State from office for her apparent failure to timely file a $25,000 bond in accordance with MCL 15.51. (See Plaintiff's August 8, 2023 Application for Attorney General To Initiate Quo warranto Proceedings attached).

117. On August 15, 2023, the Michigan Attorney General, through her Chief Deputy, Fadwa Hammoud, issued a written denial of Plaintiff's request for the Attorney General to institute quo warranto proceedings. (See Attorney General's August 15, 2023 Denial Letter attached).

118. Although the Attorney General denied Plaintiff's request to institute and initiate quo warranto proceedings to oust the Defendant Secretary of State from office, pursuant to MCR 3.306(B)(3) and MCL 600.4501, Plaintiff has the right to proceed on his own to institute quo warranto proceedings against Defendant Secretary of State.

119. Pursuant to MCR 3.306(A)(1), because Defendant Secretary of State is a "state officer, any quo warranto proceeding seeking to oust and remove her from office must be filed in the Court of Appeals as an original proceeding. See Williams v Lansing Bd. of Ed., 69 Mich App 654, 660-661; 245 NW2d 365 (1976); see also In re Servaas, 484 Mich. 634; 774 N.W.2d 46 (2009) (opinion by WEAVER, J.)

120. Plaintiff Davis is prepared to proceed with initiating quo warranto proceedings in the Michigan Court of Appeals against the Defendant Secretary of State, however, Plaintiff needs a declaration and clarification from this Honorable Court that Defendant Secretary of State was required to comply with the provisions of MCL 15.51, which requires the Defendant Secretary of State to file a $25,000 bond.

121. Plaintiff was told privately nearly a month or so ago by a high-level employee of the state government that the bond requirement set forth under MCL 15.51 did not apply to the Defendant Secretary of State.

RECEIVED by MCOC 9/15/2023 12:28:26 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

122. Additionally, neither the Department of Treasury nor the Department of State had any record of any bond being filed by the Defendant Secretary of State.

123. Because Plaintiff has received conflicting information, Plaintiff needs this Honorable Court to provide clarification and direction as to proper application of MCL 15.51 before Plaintiff proceeds with filing and instituting quo warranto proceedings in the Court of Appeals to oust and remove the Defendant Secretary of State from office.

124. If this Honorable Court declares that Defendant Secretary of State was required to comply with the provisions of MCL 15.51, Plaintiff will proceed with initiating quo warranto proceedings in the Court of Appeals to oust the Defendant Secretary of State from office.

125. However, if this Honorable Court declares that Defendant Secretary of State was not required to comply with the provisions of MCL 15.51, Plaintiff will not proceed with initiating quo warranto proceedings in the Court of Appeals to oust the Defendant Secretary of State from office.

PLAINTIFF'S 9/18/2023 EMERGENCY MOTION FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT, WRIT OF MANDAMUS, AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR COUNTS I-IV OF VERIFIED COMPLAINT ONLY.

NOW COMES, Plaintiff ROBERT DAVIS, in his own proper person, and for his 9/18/2023 Emergency Motion for Declaratory Judgment, Writ of Mandamus, and Order to Show Cause Counts I-IV of Verified Complaint ONLY ("Emergency Motion"), states the following:

I. Concurrence

Prior to filing the instant Emergency Motion, Plaintiff sought concurrence from Assistant Attorney Generals Heather Meingast and Eric Grill, but concurrence was not timely received, necessitating the filing of this Emergency Motion.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

II. Necessity for Emergency and Expedited Hearing and Order To Show Cause

This election-related matter will undoubtedly impact the timely printing of the ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, as well as the timely certification of Presidential candidates for each major political party. See MCL 168.614a and 168.615a.

The merits of this election-related appeal need to be determined and decided within the next 14 days! Our Supreme Court and Court of Appeals have recognized the importance of election-related cases and has so required that election-related cases are heard in an expedited manner. See Scott v Director of Elections, 490 Mich 888, 889; 804 NW2d 119 (2011); Gracey v Grosse Pointe Farms Clerk, 182 Mich App 193, 196-96 (1989). Moreover, our Supreme Court routinely grant expedited consideration in election law matters. See, e.g., League of Women Voters v Secy of State, 505 Mich 931 (2019); Martin v Secy of State, 482 Mich 956 (2008); Saginaw Co Democratic Party v Saginaw Co Bd of Election Com'rs, 470 Mich 882 (2004); see also House of Representatives v Governor, 943 NW2d 365, 369 (Mich 2020) (Clement, J, concurring) ("[T]he cases in which we most often direct expedited review are election cases in which the parties have externally imposed deadlines they must satisfy to submit paperwork or print ballot.")

Additionally, MCR 7.213(C)(4) requires the Court of Appeals to expedite appeals from all cases involving election-related issues. MCR 7.213(C)(4) provides in relevant part: "precedence shall be given to: appeals from all cases involving election issues, including, but not limited to, recall elections and petitions disputes[ ]". (emphasis supplied). See Jones v Taylor, unpublished per curiam opinion of the Court of Appeals, issued June 2, 2021 (Docket No. 357264) (The Court granted plaintiff/appellant's motion to expedite the appeal because it involved candidates who were improperly certified by a local city clerk appear on the ballot for an impending city primary election).

Plaintiff's instant lawsuit clearly is an "election-related" matter that MCR 7.213(C)(4) clearly requires the Court of Appeals and Supreme Court to give "precedence" to. See Scott v Director of Elections, 490 Mich 888, 889 (2011). Accordingly, Plaintiff respectfully requests this Honorable Court to GRANT expedited consideration and review of Plaintiff's instant Emergency Motion so that a decision on the merits can be issued within the next 14 days! A separate brief in support of the instant Emergency Motion will be filed.

III. Parties

1. Plaintiff, Robert Davis ("Plaintiff" or "Plaintiff Davis"), is a resident and registered voter of the city of Highland Park, County of Wayne, State of Michigan. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, desires and intends on voting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held in February 2024 or March 2024.
2. Defendant, Jocelyn Benson ("Defendant Secretary of State"), is the duly elected Secretary of State for the State of Michigan. Pursuant to Mich.Const. 1963, art. V, §§ 3, 21, Defendant Secretary of State is a state officer that heads the principal department, the Department of State, which is in the executive branch of state government. Pursuant to MCL 168.21 of Michigan Election Law, Defendant Secretary of State is the "chief elections" officer of the state that has "supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of" Michigan Election Law.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

3. That an actual controversy exists between the parties named herein.

IV. Jurisdiction

4. Pursuant to MCL §600.6419(1) of the Revised Judicature Act, this Court has exclusive jurisdiction over all of the claims pled and alleged in Plaintiff's Complaint against the Defendant.
5. The Defendant Secretary of State is deemed to be the "state or any of its departments or officers" as this phrase is defined by MCL §600.6419(7) of the Revised Judicature Act.
6. In accordance with MCL §600.6434(2) of the Revised Judicature Act, the Complaint has been verified by the Plaintiff. (See last page of the Complaint).

V. Causes Of Action

COUNT I

Declaratory Judgment Declaring That Defendant Secretary of State Cannot Enforce Public Act 2 of 2023, Which Changed The Date of The 2024 Presidential Primary From March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024, And Further Declare That The Current Version of MCL 168.613a Controls And Thus, The 2024 Presidential Primary Election Must Be Held On March 12, 2024.

7. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

8. For this count, pursuant to MCR 2.605, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a declaratory judgment against the Defendant Secretary of State.

9. Pursuant to MCR 2.605, an actual controversy exists between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Secretary of State.

10. On February 1, 2023, Governor Gretchen Whitmer signed into law Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, changing the date of the Presidential Primary Election from the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year to the fourth Tuesday in February beginning in 2024.[1]

11. The current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, currently provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under this act on the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of president in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections. (emphasis supplied).

12. Importantly, however, MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023, would read as follows:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth

> Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024. (emphasis supplied).

13. However, Public Act 2 of 2023 was NOT given immediate effect. Rather, the effective date of Public Act 2 of 2023 is "sine die", which means Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective "until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session." (See Public Act 2 of 2023 attached).
14. As of the date of the filing of this complaint, it's unknown when the final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session of the Michigan Legislature will be.
15. According to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan House of Representatives' 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 21, 2023.[2] (See Michigan House of Representatives' 2023 Session Schedule attached).
16. Similarly, according to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan Senate's 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 14th or 21st, 2023.[3]
17. Even though the Michigan Legislature's 2023 Regular Session has NOT adjourned, the Defendant Secretary of State has nonetheless taken the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

extraordinary and unlawful step of enforcing Public Act 2 of 2023 before its effective date.

18. In June 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State published an election manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office In 2024", which was disseminated to all local county, city and township clerks informing them that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election was going to be held on February 27, 2024 and NOT March 12, 2024.[4] (See Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 Presidential Primary Election Manual attached).

19. "Under MCL 168.31, local election officials must follow the Secretary of State's instructions regarding the conduct of elections." Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich.App. 588, ___; 963 NW2d 653, 658 (2020), citing Secretary of State v. Berrien Co. Bd. of Election Comm'rs, 373 Mich. 526, 530-531, 129 N.W.2d 864 (1964).

20. Therefore, all local county, city and townships are mandated to follow the directives and mandates set forth in the Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 election manual governing the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, which requires the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to be held on February 27, 2024 and NOT March 12, 2024.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

21. Confused by the Defendant Secretary of State's unlawful actions and conduct, on September 11, 2023, Plaintiff sent the Defendant Secretary of State and the State Director of Elections an email respectfully requesting clarity as to when the 2024 Presidential Primary Election would be held. (See Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 Email to Defendant attached).
22. However, neither the Defendant Secretary of State nor the State Director of Elections responded to Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 email.
23. As a duly registered and qualified voter of the state of Michigan, Plaintiff desires and intends to vote by absentee ballot in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held on February 27, 2024 or March 12, 2024.
24. Pursuant to MCL 168.615c of Michigan Election Law, Plaintiff, as a registered voter, has the statutory right to participate and vote in either the Democratic or Republican Presidential Primary Election provided Plaintiff "shall indicate in writing, on a form prescribed by the secretary of state, which political party ballot he…. Wishes to vote when appearing at a presidential election."
25. However, it's imperative that the Defendant Secretary of State properly administers and enforces valid provisions of Michigan Election Law that are currently in effect.
26. Plaintiff, as a registered voter, who intends on and desires to vote in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election by absentee ballot, has the constitutional and statutory right to know the correct date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

27. Plaintiff is concerned that if the 2024 Presidential Primary Election is held on the "wrong" date in violation of operational Michigan law in effect at the time, Plaintiff's vote will not be counted and will be subject to challenge in post-election quo warranto litigation.

28. As noted, Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law by changing the date of the Presidential Primary Election from March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024, was NOT given immediate effect and does NOT become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session".

29. "It is axiomatic that a statute becomes operational only upon its effective date." In re Request for Advisory Opinion re Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich. 1, 12; 740 NW2d 444 (2007). (emphasis supplied).

30. Mich.Const.1963 "art. 4, §27 prevents this act from taking effect until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey v Dep't of Mgmt & Budget, 429 Mich. 315, 340; 414 NW2d 873 (1987). (emphasis supplied).

31. Therefore, Defendant Secretary of State cannot enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which moves the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, "until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey, 429 Mich. at 340. (emphasis supplied).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

32. Under the current version of MCL 168.759(2) of Michigan Election Law, Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the statutory right "at any time during the 75 days before an election, but not later than 8p.m. on the day of an election," to "apply for an absent voter ballot".
33. Additionally, MCL 168.759a(5) of Michigan Election Law requires that "not later than 45 days before an election, a county, city, or township clerk shall electronically transmit or mail as appropriate an absent voter ballot to each absent uniformed services voter or overseas voter who applied for an absent voter ballot 45 days or more before the election."
34. Because Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently NOT in effect or operational, none of the statutory deadlines for absentee ballots set forth under MCL 168.759(2) and 168.759a(5) can be met and/or satisfied by the Defendant Secretary of State for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date.
35. Moreover, MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law requires the Defendant Secretary of State, "at least 60 days and not more than 90 days preceding any regular state or district primary or election, shall send to the county clerk of each county a notice inwriting of such primary or election, specifying in such notice the federal, state, and district offices for which candidates are to be nominated or elected, as well as any constitutional amendments and questions to be submitted thereat."

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

36. The notice requirement under MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law also cannot be met for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date because Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session", which has NOT occurred.

37. As noted, the final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session is currently not scheduled to occur until sometime in late December 2023.

38. Defendant Secretary of State does not have the constitutional nor statutory legal authority to enforce a law that has NOT become operational in accordance with Mich.Const. 1963, art. 4, §27.

39. "As a single executive heading a principal department, the Secretary of State shall 'perform duties prescribed by law.' Const. 1963, art. 5, § 9." Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich.App. 588, ___; 963 NW2d 653, 658 (2020).

40. Here, the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to only enforce those laws that are currently in effect.

41. Accordingly, the Defendant Secretary of State's 2023 Election Manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024" must be declared VOID and UNENFORCEABLE because it unlawfully directs local county, city, and township clerks to enforce Public Act 2 of 2023, which changes the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, and Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently NOT operational or in effect.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Robert Davis prays and requests this Honorable Court enters judgment and grants the following relief against the Defendant Secretary of State as follows:

a. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that Defendant Secretary of State cannot enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law by changing the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, because Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently not in effect and does not become operational until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session.

b. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law controls and thus, the 2024 Presidential Primary Election shall be held on March 12, 2024.

c. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring that the Defendant Secretary of State shall inform all registered voters, presidential candidates, and local county, city, and township clerks that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election shall be held on March 12, 2024.

d. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 election manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024" VOID and UNENFORCEABLE.

e. Award Plaintiff his court costs.

f. Enter an order awarding whatever other equitable relief the Court deems appropriate at the time of final judgment.

COUNT II

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Enforce The Current Version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and Compel Defendant Secretary of State To Hold The 2024 Presidential Primary Election On March 12, 2024.

42. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

43. For this count, pursuant to MCR 3.305, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a writ of mandamus against the Defendant Secretary of State compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and compel the Defendant to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

44. If this Honorable Court declares and determines that the Defendant Secretary of State currently lacks the constitutional and statutory legal authority to enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which does not become effective until the "91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session", and that the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional and statutory legal duty to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a, entry of a writ of mandamus is most appropriate.

45. Mandamus relates to the duties of public officials. Vayda v County of Lake, 321 Mich App 686, 700; 909 NW2d 874 (2017).

46. Mandamus generally is a proper remedy to compel election-related duties. Warren City Council v Buffa, 333 Mich App 422, 435; 960 NW2d 166 (2020).

47. Whether a writ issues is within the discretion of the court. Moore v Genesee Co, 337 Mich App 723, 731; 976 NW2d 921 (2021). Specifically, plaintiff has the burden to show:

> (1) a clear legal right to the act sought to be compelled; (2) a clear legal duty by the defendant to perform the act; (3) that the act is ministerial, leaving nothing to the judgment or discretion of the defendant; and (4) that no other adequate remedy exists. [Twp of Casco v Sec'y of State,

472 Mich 566, 621; 701 NW2d 102 (2005) (YOUNG, J., concurring in part).]

48. In a mandamus action, "a 'clear, legal right' is one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget (On Remand), __ Mich App __; __ NW2d __ (Docket No. 334663, issued December 22, 2022), slip op at 9 (citation omitted).

49. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has standing to seek the proper enforcement of Michigan Election Law.

50. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the constitutional and statutory legal right to seek the entry of a writ of mandamus to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to scheduled and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

51. "A clear legal duty is asserted to compel the enforcement of an act by a public official." Warren City Council v Buffa, ___Mich.App.___, ____; ____NW2d____ (2023)(Docket No.365488, issued April 21,2023), slip op at p 12, citing Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390, 415 n 13; 355 NW2d 75 (1984).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

52. The Defendant Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under the Mich.Const. 1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 to enforce the current version of MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

53. "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget, 508 Mich 48, 82; 972 NW2d 738 (2021) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

54. The duties of the Defendant Secretary of State under the current version of MCL 168.615a and Mich.Const.1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 are ministerial.

55. Lastly, Plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law, other than the instant litigation, to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Robert Davis prays and requests this Honorable Court enters judgment and grants the following relief against the Defendant Secretary of State as follows:

a. Enter a writ of mandamus compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law and compel the Defendant Secretary of State to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2023.

b. Enter a writ of mandamus compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to inform all registered voters, presidential candidates, and all local county, city, and township clerks that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election shall be held on March 12, 2023.

c. Enter an order requiring the Defendant Secretary of State to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued.

d. Award Plaintiff his court costs.

e. Enter an order awarding whatever other equitable relief the Court deems appropriate at the time of final judgment.

COUNT III

Declaratory Judgment Declaring The Defendant Secretary of State Has A Legal Duty Under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and Michigan Case Law To Determine Whether A Presidential Candidate Satisfies The Eligibility Requirements To Run For President of the United States As Set Forth Under The United States Constitution.

56. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

57. For this count, pursuant to MCR 2.605, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a declaratory judgment against the Defendant Secretary of State.

58. Pursuant to MCR 2.605, an actual controversy exists between the Plaintiff and the Defendant Secretary of State.

59. On August 28, 2023, Plaintiff sent, via email, Defendant Secretary of State a written request for declaratory ruling declaring former President Donald Trump ("Former President" or "Trump") ineligible to have his name printed on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot as a candidate for President for the Republican Party because Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. (See Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for Declaratory Ruling attached).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

60. On September 12, 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State, through the State Director of Elections, Jonathan Brater, issued Plaintiff a written response DENYING Plaintiff's request for a declaratory ruling declaring Trump ineligible under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Defendant Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached).

61. The Defendant Secretary of State DENIED Plaintiff's meritorious request for a declaratory ruling because "[u]nder the Election Law, the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is 'disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.'" (See Defendant Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached).

62. MCL 24.263 of the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA") provides:

> On request of an interested person, an agency may issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability to an actual state of facts of a statute administered by the agency or of a rule or order of the agency. An agency shall prescribe by rule the form for such a request and procedure for its submission, consideration and disposition. A declaratory ruling is binding on the agency and the person requesting it unless it is altered or set aside by any court. An agency may not retroactively change a declaratory ruling, but nothing in this subsection prevents an agency from prospectively changing a declaratory ruling. A declaratory ruling is subject to judicial review in the same manner as an agency final decision or order in a contested case. (emphasis supplied).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

63. Plaintiff is certainly an "interested person" because as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, Plaintiff desires and intends to vote by absentee ballot in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held in February 2024 or March 2024.

64. Additionally, Plaintiff is an "interested person" because Plaintiff will not only be voting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, but Plaintiff will be voting for and supporting a Republican presidential candidate, that is NOT Trump, in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

65. Plaintiff believes that if an otherwise ineligible candidate, like Trump, is allowed to have their name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, the presidential candidate Plaintiff is planning on voting for in the 2024 Republican Presidential Primary Election will lose votes, and Plaintiff will suffer imminent irreparable harm as a result.

66. Although Plaintiff is not a registered Republican, MCL 168.615c of Michigan Election Law grants Plaintiff the statutory legal right to vote in the Republican Presidential Primary Election provided that Plaintiff "shall indicate in writing, on a form prescribed by the secretary of state, which political party ballot he…wishes to vote when appearing at a presidential election."

67. Michigan's Presidential Primary Election is an "open" primary. See MCL 168.615c.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

68. Plaintiff fears that if an otherwise ineligible presidential candidate, such as Trump, is allowed to unlawfully appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, Plaintiff's Republican presidential candidate of choice will lose votes and thus, Plaintiff will suffer irreparable harm.

69. Since Trump is undeniably the current leading candidate to capture the Republican nomination for President, if Trump is allowed to have his name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot despite his ineligibility under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, Trump will undeniably take votes away from Plaintiff's Republican presidential candidate of choice.

70. This constitutes irreparable harm that Plaintiff will suffer because of the loss of votes for Plaintiff's preferred candidate of choice for the Republican presidential nomination, which Plaintiff intends on voting for and supporting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

71. MCL 168.614a and 168.615a of Michigan Election Law govern the Defendant Secretary of State's statutory duties to print the names of presidential candidates on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot.

72. MCL 168.614a of Michigan Election Law provides:

> (1) Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

(2) Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. The secretary of state shall make the lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.
(3) After the issuance of the list under subsection (1) and after receipt of names from the state chairperson of each political party under subsection (2), the secretary of state shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election. (emphasis supplied).

73. MCL 168.615a provides, in pertinent part, the following:

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state indicating his or her party preference if different than the party preference contained in the secretary of state notification and the secretary of state shall cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. If the affidavit of a presidential candidate indicates that the candidate has no political party preference or indicates a political party preference for a political party other than a political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a, the secretary of state shall not cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on a ballot for the presidential primary election. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state specifically stating that "(candidate's name) is not a presidential candidate", and the secretary of state shall not have that presidential candidate's name printed on a presidential primary ballot. A presidential candidate shall file an affidavit described in this subsection with the secretary of state no later than 4 p.m. on the second Friday in December of the year before the presidential election year or the affidavit is considered void. (emphasis supplied).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

74. Pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1) of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Secretary of State "shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party."

75. Therefore, because Trump is undoubtedly the leading presidential candidate for the Republican nomination according to some of the most-recent and published national polls and because the Chair of the Michigan Republican Party, Karmo, has stated publicly that she would be submitting Trump's name to the Defendant Secretary of State to appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1), Defendant Secretary of State would appear to be obligated to print Trump's name on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot.

76. However, contrary to Defendant Secretary of State's flawed and erroneous determination, Defendant Secretary of State is constitutionally obligated to determine whether a presidential candidate is eligible in accordance with the qualification requirements set forth under the United States Constitution.

77. Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 provides:

> All officers, legislative, executive and judicial, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this state, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ..... according > to the best of my ability. No other oath, affirmation, or any religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust. (emphasis supplied).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

78. As noted, the Defendant Secretary of State is an elected executive that heads a principal department of the executive branch of state government. See Mich.Const.1963, art. 5, §3.

79. Pursuant to Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and MCL 168.80 of Michigan Election Law, Defendant Secretary of State was administered the aforementioned constitutional oath of office on January 1, 2023.

80. By taking the constitutional oath of office required under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1, Defendant Secretary of State swore or affirmed that she would "support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this state[.]" (emphasis supplied).

81. Defendant Secretary of State would violate her constitutional oath of office if she permitted a presidential candidate to appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot if they failed to satisfy the requirements set forth under the United States Constitution.

82. By way example, if a potential presidential candidate was not a natural born citizen as required under Article II, §1, Clause 5 of the United States Constitution and evidence was provided to the Defendant Secretary of State proving that said presidential candidate was not a natural born citizen, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 would require the Defendant Secretary of State

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

NOT to print said presidential candidate's name on a presidential primary election ballot.

83. Similarly, if a potential presidential candidate was 30 years old and did not meet the age requirement as set forth under Article II, §1, Clause 5 of the United States Constitution, and evidence was provided to the Defendant Secretary of State proving that the presidential candidate was 30 years old, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 would require the Defendant Secretary of State NOT to print the name of said presidential candidate on a presidential primary election ballot.

84. Because Defendant Secretary of State took an oath to "support the Constitution of the United States", Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to properly "enforce" the provisions of the United States Constitution.

85. Certainly, Defendant Secretary of State would NOT be "supporting" the United States Constitution if she permits a presidential candidate to knowingly violate any provisions of the United States Constitution.

86. Here, Plaintiff provided the Defendant Secretary of State with ample evidence that Trump was disqualified as a presidential candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. (See Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for Declaratory Ruling attached).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

87. Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides additional eligibility requirements for a person to qualify as a presidential candidate.

88. However, because the Defendant Secretary of State erroneously believed and concluded that because "the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is 'disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution'", Defendant was somehow prohibited from making such a determination.

89. As noted, Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 grants Defendant Secretary of State the constitutional authority to decide whether a presidential candidate satisfies the eligibility requirements set forth under the United States Constitution because Defendant swore an oath to "support the Constitution of the United States."

90. To the extent that MCL 168.615a prohibits the Defendant Secretary of State from removing and/or keeping the name of a presidential candidate off a presidential primary and/or general election ballot that has not satisfied the eligibility requirements set forth under the United States Constitution, MCL 168.615a is unconstitutional under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Robert Davis prays and requests this Honorable Court enters judgment and grants the following relief against the Defendant Secretary of State as follows:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

a. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and the oath of office administered to all state elected officials under said constitutional provision grant Defendant Secretary of State the constitutional authority to determine whether a presidential candidate has satisfied the eligibility and/or disqualification requirements to run for President of the United States as set forth under the United States Constitution.

b. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring MCL 168.615a(1) unconstitutional for it contravenes and violates Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1, but only to the extent that it prohibits Defendant Secretary of State from removing and/or preventing the name of a presidential candidate from appearing on a presidential primary and/or general election ballot as a presidential candidate if they have not satisfied the eligibility and/or disqualification requirements set forth under the United States Constitution to qualify as a candidate for President of the United States.

c. Enter a declaratory judgment declaring Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional legal duty to determine the merits of Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning the possible disqualification of former President Donald Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and issue a ruling well-in-advance of the certification deadline set forth under MCL 168.614a and 168.615a.

d. Enter an injunction enjoining the Defendant Secretary of State from printing the name of Donald Trump on any presidential primary and/or general election ballots until such time as the Defendant Secretary of State decides the merits and issues a decision on Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning the possible disqualification of former President Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

e. Award Plaintiff his court costs.

f. Enter an order awarding whatever other equitable relief the Court deems appropriate at the time of final judgment.

COUNT IV

Writ of Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Decide The Merits and Issue A Decision On Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request For Declaratory Ruling Concerning Former President Trump's Possible Disqualification Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

91. Plaintiff incorporates, repeats and realleges the foregoing allegations as though they were fully set forth and stated herein.

92. For this count, pursuant to MCR 3.305, Plaintiff seeks the entry of a writ of mandamus against the Defendant Secretary of State compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to decide the merits and issue a decision on Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for declaratory ruling well-in-advance of the certification deadlines set forth under MCL 168.614a and 168.615a.

93. If this Honorable Court declares and determines the Defendant Secretary of State has the constitutional legal duty and authority to determine whether a presidential candidate satisfies the qualification and/or disqualification requirements set forth under the United States Constitution, entry of a writ of mandamus is most appropriate.

94. Mandamus relates to the duties of public officials. Vayda v County of Lake, 321 Mich App 686, 700; 909 NW2d 874 (2017).

95. Mandamus generally is a proper remedy to compel election-related duties. Warren City Council v Buffa, 333 Mich App 422, 435; 960 NW2d 166 (2020).

96. Whether a writ issues is within the discretion of the court. Moore v Genesee Co, 337 Mich App 723, 731; 976 NW2d 921 (2021). Specifically, plaintiff has the burden to show:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

> (1) a clear legal right to the act sought to be compelled; (2) a clear legal duty by the defendant to perform the act; (3) that the act is ministerial, leaving nothing to the judgment or discretion of the defendant; and (4) that no other adequate remedy exists. [Twp of Casco v Sec'y of State, 472 Mich 566, 621; 701 NW2d 102 (2005) (YOUNG, J., concurring in part).]

97. In a mandamus action, "a 'clear, legal right' is one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget (On Remand), __ Mich App __; __ NW2d __ (Docket No. 334663, issued December 22, 2022), slip op at 9 (citation omitted).

98. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has standing to seek the proper enforcement of Michigan Election Law.

99. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the constitutional and statutory legal right to seek the entry of a writ of mandamus to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to decide the merits and issue a decision on Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning whether Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

100. "A clear legal duty is asserted to compel the enforcement of an act by a public official." Warren City Council v Buffa, ___Mich.App.___, ____; ____NW2d____ (2023)(Docket No.365488, issued April 21,2023), slip op at p

12, citing Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390, 415 n 13; 355 NW2d 75 (1984).

101. The Defendant Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under the Mich.Const. 1963, art. 11, §1 and MCL 24.263 to decide the merits and issue a decision on Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling.

102. "A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget, 508 Mich 48, 82; 972 NW2d 738 (2021) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

103. The duties of the Defendant Secretary of State under Mich.Const.1963, art. 11, §1 and MCL 24.263 of the APA are ministerial.

104. Lastly, Plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law, other than the instant litigation, to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to decide the merits and issue a decision with respect to Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff Robert Davis prays and requests this Honorable Court enters judgment and grants the following relief against the Defendant Secretary of State as follows:

a. Enter a writ of mandamus compelling the Defendant Secretary of State to decide the merits and issue a decision with respect to Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 request for declaratory ruling concerning Trump's possible disqualification under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment and compelling Defendant Secretary of State to issue said decision well-in-advance of the certification deadlines set forth under MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a.

b. Enter an order requiring the Defendant Secretary of State to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued.

c. Award Plaintiff his court costs.

d. Enter an order awarding whatever other equitable relief the Court deems appropriate at the time of final judgment.

Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office in 2024

Michigan election law governs the ballot access procedures for candidates who seek the office of U.S. President. As these procedures are subject to change by the State Legislature, presidential candidates interested in participating in Michigan's February 27, 2024 primary election or November 5, 2024 general election are encouraged to consult our website, Michigan.gov/Elections, for updates.

February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary

Michigan's February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary is limited to eligible candidates who affiliate with the two major political parties, the Democratic and Republican Parties. MCL 168.613a. The Secretary of State is required to issue a "list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential candidates" for each major political party's nomination by 4:00 p.m. on November 10, 2023. MCL 168.614a(1). Thereafter, the state chairperson of each major political party must file a "list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party" with the Secretary of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023. MCL 168.614a(2).

The Secretary of State shall make both lists available to the public and shall notify the candidates identified on each list of the provisions of the Michigan election law that govern the Presidential Primary. MCL 168.614a(3). Candidates identified on either list who wish to participate in Michigan's Presidential Primary are not required to do anything further in order to secure a place on the ballot. MCL 168.615a(1). The ballot will include each major party's candidates appearing on either list and an option for voters to select "uncommitted." MCL 168.615a(3).

A person identified on either the Secretary of State's or party chairperson's candidate listing may withdraw from Michigan's Presidential Primary or designate a different political party by filing an affidavit with the Secretary of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on December 8, 2023 stating that:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

- "(Candidate's name) is not a presidential candidate." In these circumstances, the Secretary of State will not allow the candidate's name to be printed on the February 27, 2024 Primary Ballot; or
- The candidate's party preference is different than the party listed in the Secretary of State's notice to the candidate. In these circumstances, the Secretary of State will: (1) cause the candidate's name to be printed on the appropriate primary ballot, if the preferred party is a major political party, or (2) not permit the candidate's name to be printed on the presidential primary ballot if the candidate's preferred party is not a major political party. MCL 168.615a(1).

An individual who is not listed as a potential presidential candidate by the Secretary of State or a state party chairperson who wishes to appear on Michigan's Presidential Primary ballot must file a nominating petition with the Secretary of State no later than 4:00 p.m. on December 8, 2023. MCL 168.615a(2). Petitions cannot be circulated prior to October 1, 2023. Id. The number of valid signatures required on a nominating petition for a candidate is "not less than ½ of 1% of the total votes cast in the state at the previous presidential election for the presidential candidate of the political party for which the individual is seeking nomination." Id. However, the total shall not exceed 1,000 times the total number of congressional districts. The minimum number of valid signatures required on a nominating petition for both Democratic and Republican Party candidates is 13,000. Id.

November 5, 2024 General Election

The November general election ballot will combine the major party presidential nominees, presidential nominees named by the minor parties qualified to appear on Michigan's general election ballot, and presidential candidates who choose to run without political party affiliation. Write-in candidates who seek the office of U.S. President are also eligible to participate in the general election.

Presidential Candidates Affiliated with a Major Party

The names and addresses of the Democratic and Republican Parties' nominees for offices of president and vice-president must be certified by the chairperson and the secretary of the party's state central committee to the Secretary of State within one business day after the conclusion of the party's state convention or national convention (whichever is later).

In addition, the chairperson and secretary of the party's state central committee must forward to the Secretary of State a certificate containing the names and addresses of the party's presidential electors. (The qualifications that candidates for presidential elector must satisfy are described below.) The certificate must be hand-delivered or sent to the Secretary of State by certified or registered mail within one business day after the conclusion of the party's state convention. (MCL 168.42, 591, and 686).

Presidential Candidates Affiliated with a Minor Party

For minor parties who are qualified to appear on the general election ballot in Michigan[1], the names and addresses of the party's nominees for the offices of president and vice-president must be certified by the chairperson and secretary of the party's state central committee to the Secretary of State within one business day after the conclusion of the party's state convention or national convention (whichever is later).

In addition, the chairperson and secretary of the party's state central committee must forward to the Department of State, Bureau of Elections a certificate containing the names and addresses of the party's presidential electors. (The qualifications that candidates for presidential elector must satisfy are described below.) The certificate must be hand-delivered or sent to the Secretary of State by certified or registered mail within one business day after the conclusion of the party's state convention. (MCL 168.42 and 686).

A political party may appear on the general election ballot in Michigan by virtue of the voter support accorded the party at the last general election or by filing a "new political party" petition. For further information on the procedures which govern political party ballot access, see the publication, New Political Party Qualification (January 2019).

[1] The minor political parties currently qualified to appear on the November 2024 General Election ballot are: Libertarian, U.S. Taxpayers, Green, Natural Law, and Working Class parties.

Presidential Candidates without Political Party Affiliation

A presidential candidate without political party affiliation must submit a qualifying petition bearing a sufficient number of valid signatures, the name and address of his or her running mate, and the names and addresses of his or her presidential electors. The qualifying petition must be filed no later than 4:00 p.m. on July 18, 2024. MCL 168.590c. The name and address of the candidate's running mate and the names and addresses of his or her presidential electors must be filed no later than August 31, 2024. MCL 168.590d. All documents must be filed with the Department of State's Bureau of Elections.

- The minimum number of valid signatures required on the qualifying petition is 12,000; up to 60,000 signatures can be submitted to cover the minimum number of valid signatures required. MCL 168.544f. Of the signatures submitted on the petition, there must be at least 100 signatures from each of at least ½ of the congressional districts in the state. MCL 168.590b.
- Any signatures appearing on the qualifying petition which are dated more than 180 days prior to the date the petition is filed are invalid. MCL 168.590b.
- A candidate who wishes to withdraw his or her petition must submit a written notice of withdrawal to the Department of State's Bureau of Elections no later than 4:00 p.m. on July 21, 2024. MCL 168.590c.
- A person who files a qualifying petition cannot appear on the ballot as a partisan candidate for any office for the remainder of the calendar year. MCL 168.590g. In addition, a person who files a partisan nominating petition or filing fee as a candidate of a political party or who is nominated by a political party convention, committee or caucus and accepts the nomination cannot file a qualifying petition for the remainder of the calendar year. MCL 168.692a.

Write-in Candidates for President

Write-in votes cast for a candidate for president are tallied and certified as votes for the candidate's presidential electors only if the candidate forwards the name of his or her running mate, a list of presidential electors and a "Declaration of Intent" form to the Department of State's Bureau of Election by August 31, 2024. Write-in votes cast for an individual seeking the office of U.S. President who fails to file all of the required documents are not counted. MCL 168.590d.

Presidential Electors: Qualifications and Eligibility

- A presidential candidate's slate of electors must equal the number of U.S. House members and U.S. Senators elected in Michigan.
- Michigan election law, MCL 168.41, provides the following:

> No person shall be eligible to be an elector of president and vice-president who shall not have been a citizen of the United States for at least 10 years and a resident and registered elector of the congressional district for an elector representing a congressional district, or of the state, for an elector representing the state at large for at least 1 year prior to the election. No senator or representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector, as provided in section 1 of article 2 of the United States constitution.

to Jonathan, Heather, MDOS-BOERegulatory, Adam, Amy, Lori, Lisa, Margaret

Dear Director Brater, Asst. Attorney Gen. Meingast, Ms. Lovegrove, and Mr. Fracassi:

As a registered voter of this great state, I desire to participate and vote in the 2024 presidential primary election. However, there seems to be some confusion as to the date in which the 2024 presidential primary election will be held. Will the 2024 presidential primary election be held in February 2024 or March 2024?

Additionally, there is some confusion as to whether a particular major political party can forgo participation in a presidential primary election in this state and instead, hold a caucus or convention to nominate its preferred presidential candidate.

Accordingly, by the close of business, today, September 11, 2023, please provide answers to these two very simple questions:

1. Will the 2024 presidential primary election be held in February 2024 or March 2024?
2. Can a major political party choose to forgo participating in a presidential primary election and instead, hold a caucus or convention to nominate its preferred presidential candidate?

Please send all responses to this inquiry to this email address. If answers to the foregoing questions are provided on your website, please direct me to the specific link. Also, please be advised that failure to respond by the deadline set forth herein (close of business today 9/11/23) will constitute a denial of my request for clarification and direction.

I will await your response and please acknowledge receipt of this written request with a reply email.

Re: Request for Declaratory Ruling Pursuant to MCL 24.263 Concerning Disqualification of Former U.S. President Donald J. Trump From Appearing On Any Presidential Primary and/or General Election Ballot As Presidential Candidate For He Is Barred Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of The United States Constitution.

Dear SOS Benson, Director Brater and Mr. Fracassi:

Please accept this letter and the exhibits attached hereto as a request for a declaratory ruling pursuant to MCL 24.263 regarding former U.S. President Donald J. Trump's ("Trump") disqualification from appearing on any presidential primary and/or general election in the state of Michigan due to his apparent ineligibility to assume and/or run for the office of President pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Considering the facts of this request are undisputed and are relatively straightforward, and the need to allow adequate time for any legal challenges prior to any presidential primary election for 2024, I am respectfully requesting that Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson ("SOS Benson") and the Department of State issue a declaratory ruling expeditiously in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) and that said declaratory ruling be issued within 14 calendar days of receipt of this request.

Law and Legal Analysis

1. Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution Bars Trump Candidacy For President for the 2024 Election.

On November 15, 2022, former President Trump announced "that he will seek the Republican presidential nomination in 2024."[1] Since his announcement, Trump's presidential campaign has raised tens of millions of dollars for his presidential campaign. In fact, recent published media reports indicate that Trump's presidential campaign "has raised $7.1 million since Thursday when he was booked at the Fulton County Jail in Georgia on charges that he illegally schemed to overturn the 2020 election in the state and became the first former president in U.S. history to ever have a mug shot taken."[2]

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Presidential primary and general elections for the state of Michigan are governed by Michigan Election Law, being MCL 168.1, et.seq. MCL 168.613a, as amended, of Michigan Election Law provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of President of the United States in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections.

MCL 168.614a of Michigan Election Law further provides:

> (1) Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.
> (2) Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. The > secretary of state shall make the lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.

> (3) After the issuance of the list under subsection (1) and after receipt of names from the state chairperson of each political party under subsection (2), the secretary of state shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election.

Surprisingly, MCL 168.615a of Michigan Election Law, "mandates" and "requires" the Secretary of State to print the name of any presidential candidate identified and notified as a "potential" presidential candidate under MCL 168.614a. MCL 168.615a(1) of Michigan Election Law provides, in relevant part:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. [emphasis supplied].

MCL 168.615a(1) uses the mandatory term "shall". It is well-settled in Michigan jurisprudence that the "use of the word 'shall' indicates a mandatory and imperative directive." Burton v Reed City Hospital Corp., 471 Mich. 745, 752; 691 NW2d 424 (2005). Therefore, pursuant to MCL 168.615a(1), the Secretary of State would be "mandated" and "required" to print Trump's name on any presidential primary election ballot in Michigan for the 2024 presidential election because Trump is currently the leading candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. According to an Emerson College poll released in early August 2023, current President Joe Biden and former President Trump were statistically tied in the battle ground state of Michigan.[3]

However, Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution disqualifies and bars former President Trump from serving and/or running for the Presidency of the United States.

Disqualification Under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability. [emphasis supplied].

As noted in the scholarly article published in The Atlantic, which was authored by former U.S Court of Appeals Judge J. Michael Luttig and Harvard Law Professor Emeritus Laurence Tribe:

> The disqualification clause operates independently of any such criminal proceedings and, indeed, also independently of impeachment proceedings and of congressional legislation," they wrote. "The clause was designed to operate directly and immediately upon those who betray their oaths to the Constitution, whether by taking up arms to overturn our government or by waging war on our government by attempting to overturn a presidential election through a bloodless coup.

And for the reasons stated and set forth in the University of Penn Law Review Article entitled: "The Sweep and Force of Section Three", whose arguments shall be incorporated by reference herein, former President Trump is disqualified from the Presidency because he has "given aid or comfort to the enemies". The University of Penn Law Review Article authored by distinguished conservative attorneys, William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, thoroughly sets forth the legal arguments that support the disqualification of Trump from the Presidency under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. A copy of William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen's Law Review Article is attached hereto for the Department of State to review and analyze.

Recently, former President Trump attended and hosted a fundraiser at his Bedminister, N.J., golf club that benefited the Patriot Freedom Project, the controversial nonprofit that supports those criminally charged in the Jan. 6, 2021 attack on the U.S. Capitol.[4] Trump's financial support of those individuals criminally charged in the January 6, 2023 attack ono the U.S. Capitol is further evidence of Trump's "aid" and "comfort" of individuals who have been deemed "enemies" of the Unites States.

In addition to Trump's financial support for the "insurrectionists", "[c]onsider the overall package of events: the dishonest attempts to set aside valid state election results with false claims of voter fraud; the attempted subversion of the constitutional processes for states' selection of electors for President and Vice President; the efforts to have the Vice President unconstitutionally claim a power to refuse to count electoral votes certified and submitted by several states; the efforts of Members of Congress to reject votes lawfully cast by electors; and, finally, the fomenting and incitement of a mob that attempted to forcibly prevent Congress's and the Vice President's counting of such lawfully cast votes, culminating in a violent and deadly assault on the Capitol (and Congress and the Vice President) on January 6, 2021."[5]

All of the foregoing actions committed by former President Trump disqualifies him for the Presidency under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Although former President Trump arguably has millions of supporters nationwide and here in the state of Michigan, as the United States Supreme Court observed, "[i]t does not follow, though, that a party is absolutely entitled to have its nominee appear on the ballot as that party's candidate. A particular candidate might be ineligible for office." Timmons v Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 359 (1997). It is well-settled that "a state has an interest, if not a duty to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972) (emphasis supplied).

Many Trump supporters, and even former President Trump himself, have previously asserted the frivolous argument that Trump's disqualification under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment would violate former President Trump and his supporters constitutional right to vote for the candidate of their choice. However, that argument simply lacks merit and is outright frivolous! "That a particular induvial may not appear on the ballot as a particular party's candidate does not severely burden that party's associational rights." Timmons v Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 359 (1997). Furthermore, "the [Supreme] Court has never recognized a fundamental right to express one's political views through candidacy." Carver v Dennis, 104 F.3d 847, 851 (6th Cir. 1997). Contrary to popular belief, "running for office is not a 'fundamental right'[.]" Zielasko v State of Ohio, 873 F.2d 957, 959 (6th Cir. 1989)(quoting Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 142-143 (1972)) (emphasis supplied). "The [United States] Supreme Court has made clear that a candidate does not have a fundamental right to appear on the ballot." Corrigan v City of Newaygo, 55 F.3d 1211, 1214 (6th Cir. 1995) (citing Bullock v Carter, 405 U.S. 134, 142-143 (1972)).

In addition to the binding legal precedent established by the United States Supreme Court and federal appellate courts, our

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Michigan Court of Appeals has also adopted similar legal precedent with respect to a candidate's lack of a constitutional right to appear on the ballot. As our Michigan Court of Appeals correctly concluded and determined in Barrow v Detroit Election Commission, 301 Mich.App. 404, ___; 836 NW2d 498, 511 (2013), which resulted in the leading candidate for Mayor of the city of Detroit being removed from the primary election ballot:

> "[T]here is no constitutional right to vote for an individual who did not meet the eligibility requirements to have their name placed on the ballot. Indeed, voters have the right to expect that the candidates appearing on ballots have met the requirements..."[Barrow, 301 Mich.App. at ___; 836 NW2d at 511.] (emphasis supplied).

Here, the constitutional rights of Trump supporters in the state of Michigan will NOT be violated in any respect with the disqualification of Trump under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment because "there is no constitutional right to vote for an individual who did not meet the eligibility requirements to have their name placed on the ballot." Barrow, 301 Mich.App. at ___; 836 NW2d at 511. (emphasis supplied).

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons and for the reasons set forth in the University of Penn Law Review Article, "The Sweep and Force of Section Three", 172 U. PA. L. REV. (forthcoming 2024), authored by William Baude & Michael Stokes Paulsen, Complainant/Petitioner Robert Davis respectfully requests the Department of State and the Secretary of State issue a declaratory ruling in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act (APA) and Michigan Election Law declaring former President Trump ineligible and disqualified to have his name printed on any presidential election ballot in Michigan in 2024 because Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Complainant/Petitioner Robert Davis further requests that said declaratory ruling be issued expeditiously within 14 calendar days from receipt of this request.

Dear Mr. Davis:

The Michigan Bureau of Elections (Bureau) is in receipt of your request for a declaratory ruling requesting the Department of State declare "former President Trump ineligible and disqualified to have his name printed on any presidential election ballot in Michigan in 2024."

Under the Administrative Procedures Act, "[o]n request of an interested person, an agency may issue a declaratory ruling as to the applicability to an actual state of facts of a statute administered by the agency[.]" MCL 24.263. An "interested person" for purposes of Section 63 "means a person who is affected by the applicability of the statute to an actual state of facts." Forner v Dep't of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, 2019 WL 3941453 at * 5 (Mich Ct App, August 20, 2019).

The Michigan Election Law regulates the process for obtaining ballot access as a presidential candidate. MCL 168.1, et seq. Under the Election Law, the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is "disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution."

Accordingly, even assuming the request meets the requirements of Section 63, the Bureau declines to issue a declaratory ruling.

Sincerely,

Re: Application/Petition To Institute Quo Warranto Proceedings Against Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson.

Dear Attorney General Nessel:

Pursuant to Michigan Court Rule ("MCR") 3.306(B)(3), as a resident and registered voter of the city of Highland Park, County of Wayne, State of Michigan, I am submitting this written application/petition respectfully requesting for you, in your official capacity as Michigan Attorney General, to institute quo warranto proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction against Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson in accordance with MCL §§ 600.4501, 600.4505, 600.4515, and MCR 3.306(B)(1)(b).

According to the official election results from the November 8, 2022 general election, which were certified by the State Board of

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Canvassers, Jocelyn Benson was re-elected to a four-year term to serve as Secretary of State for the state of Michigan commencing January 1, 2023. However, for the reasons stated below, Jocelyn Benson's office shall be declared vacant in accordance with MCL 201.3(7) because she neglected to timely file her bond within the time and manner prescribed by MCL 15.51 of Michigan Election Law. See Davis v Emergency Manager, 491 Mich. 899; 810 NW2d 555 (2012); Davis v Wheeler, 483 Mich. 949; 766 NW2d 808 (2009).

LAW AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

It is undisputed that Jocelyn Benson was elected to the office of Secretary of State in the November 8, 2022 general election. It is undisputed that in accordance with MCL xxx, Jocelyn Benson was timely sworn in and subscribed to the constitutional oath of office However, Jocelyn Benson, to date, has failed to file a bond in the sum of $25,000 with the state treasurer as required under MCL 15.51.

MCL 201.3(7) provides:

> Every office shall become vacant, on the happening of any of the following events, before the expiration of the term of such office:
> 7. His refusal or neglect to take his oath of office, or to give, or renew any official bond, or to deposit such oath,

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

> or bond, in the manner and within the time prescribed by law. (emphasis supplied).

MCL 15.51 governs the bond that is required of the secretary of state and deputy secretary of state. MCL 15.51 provides, in relevant part:

> The secretary of state and deputy secretary of state of this state, and the private secretary and executive clerk of the governor of this state, shall be required within 20 days after this act takes effect, and their successors in office shall be required within 20 days after entering upon the duties of their respective offices, to give bonds to the people of the state of Michigan with 3 or more sureties to be approved by the state treasurer and attorney general, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their official duties, and for the safe and lawful custody and disposition of the money and property of this state that may be entrusted to them or come within their control.
> The bond of the secretary of state shall be in the sum of $25,000.00, that of the deputy secretary of state shall be in the sum of $20,000.00, and the bonds of the private secretary and the executive clerk of the governor shall be each in the sum of $5,000.00. The bonds of the secretary of state and deputy secretary of state shall be filed and kept in the office of the state treasurer, and those of the private secretary and executive clerk shall be filed and kept in the office of the secretary of state. (emphasis supplied).

Pursuant to the clear and unambiguous language of MCL 15.51, Jocelyn Benson was required to deposit and file a bond in the amount of $25,000 with the state treasurer "within 20 days after entering upon the duties of their respective office[]". In response to a request made under Michigan's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), the Department of Treasurer indicated that no such bond was filed with the state treasurer by Jocelyn Benson. Accordingly, pursuant to MCL 201.3(7), because Jocelyn Benson did not timely file a bond in the amount of $25,000 with the state treasurer within 20 days of assuming the office of Secretary of State, her office shall be declared vacant.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Accordingly, in accordance with MCR 3.306(3)(a), I hereby offer to provide you and/or your office with a bond and/or any and all other security you may deem necessary to indemnify the state against all costs and expenses of the action. Although I am submitting this written communication requesting that you bring forth a quo warranto action in the appropriate court of competent jurisdiction on this matter, the Michigan Court Rules and MCL 600.4501 permit me the opportunity to bring forth an action on my own upon your refusal.

Therefore, I hereby state that I prefer to bring this action myself considering the more serious cases your office is inundated with. I believe I can provide this case with the attention it needs. Accordingly, I respectfully request that you provide a written denial as quickly as possible so that I can petition the appropriate court expeditiously pursuant to MCR 3.306(3)(b) and MCL §§ 600.4501, 600.4505 and 600.4515.

Dear Mr. Davis:

This letter is in response to your August 8, 2023, letter requesting the Attorney General institute a quo warranto action against Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson.

Under MCL 600.4501, the "attorney general shall bring an action for quo warranto when the facts clearly warrant the bringing of that action." While we have carefully reviewed your letter, we are not persuaded that the circumstances warrant participation by this office via quo warranto proceedings at this time.

The Attorney General, therefore, declines to institute the quo warranto action you have requested.

Sincerely,

Hi Jonathan,

I have attached a few things. Your recitation below is correct. (Attached the order too). However, Davis did file an emergency app for leave in his case now, COA No. 368795. My response to that is due 9 a.m. on Monday.

On the bypass, Trump filed motion to intervene. No orders or calls from the clerk to me in the bypass application. On the docket my answer to that is due 12/14, unless they ask for something earlier, which the court wont since they know COA is expediting. They will just deny the bypass application and LaBrant can appeal from the COA's opinion.

CONCISE STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

A. Material Facts

The material facts concerning Trump's ineligibility to be a candidate under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment are set forth in Plaintiffs-Appellants' Verified Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction, attached hereto as Exhibit 2.

The presidential primary election calendar is as follows. On November 13, 2023, Defendant-Appellee Benson issued her list of candidates for the February 27, 2024 presidential primary, which included Trump. Additional candidates could be added by the political parties by November 14, 2023, or by petition until December 8, 2023. Ballots must be ready for overseas and military voters 45 days before the February 27, 2024 primary, or by January 13, 2024.

B. Proceedings

Plaintiffs-Appellants filed their Verified Complaint on September 29, 2023, in the Court of Claims seeking an expedited Court order:

> 1. Declaring that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;
> 2. Permanently enjoining the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot for the 2024 presidential primary election;

Compl, Prayer for Relief (Ex 2, p 94).

Trump moved to intervene as a defendant, which was denied. However, his proposed motion to dismiss and brief in support were essentially treated as amicus curiae pleadings and were considered by the Court of Claims. Trump's lawyers were also granted the same amount of time as the parties to argue on the merits at the November 9, 2023 hearing. After the hearing in this and two related cases on November 9, 2023, the Court of Claims issued an Opinion and Order on November 14, 2023, denying Plaintiffs-Appellants requested relief.

An appeal was filed in the Court of Appeals on November 15, 2023. On November 16, 2023, Plaintiffs-Appellants filed an Emergency Bypass Application with the Michigan Supreme Court, Docket No. 166373, which is pending before that Court. On November 20, 2023, Donald Trump's Motion to Intervene as Appellee was granted in this case. On November 22, 2023, the Court of Appeals consolidated this case, Docket No. 368628, with Davis v Wayne Co Election Comm, Docket No. 368615.

INTRODUCTION

Donald Trump is constitutionally disqualified from running for and serving as President of the United States because he engaged in rebellion and insurrection against the Constitution that he swore an oath to defend.

The Court of Claims incorrectly dismissed this case seeking to bar Trump from the 2024 Michigan presidential primary and general election ballots. It did so by ignoring the right of Michigan voters to have only eligible candidates appear on the ballot, improperly finding the case not ripe, and misapplying the political question doctrine on the basis of overruled case law and discredited analysis, while ignoring the clear authority demonstrating that Section 3 can and must be enforced by state courts.

The Court of Claims should be promptly reversed, and the case remanded for an evidentiary hearing on the question of whether Trump violated Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

When considering declaratory judgment actions, questions of law are reviewed de novo. Reed-Pratt v Detroit City Clerk, 339 Mich App 510, 516; 984 NW2d 794 (2021) (per curiam). Such questions of law include the interpretation or application of statutory and constitutional provisions. Moses, Inc v Southeast Mich Council of Gov'ts, 270 Mich App 401, 411; 716 NW2d 278 (2006).

ARGUMENT

THE COURT OF CLAIMS SHOULD BE REVERSED.

I. TRUMP IS DISQUALIFIED FROM OFFICE UNDER SECTION 3 OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The interpretation and application of the Fourteenth Amendment's Disqualification Clause involves legal issues of major significance to Michigan's and the country's jurisprudence:

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

US Const, Am XIV, § 3.

Trump satisfies every condition of Section 3 to be disqualified from the Michigan presidential primary ballot, as we now demonstrate.

A. Trump Took An Oath "As An Officer Of The United States" To Support The Constitution.

On January 20, 2017, Trump swore the presidential oath of office required by Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution: "I, Donald John Trump, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will do my best of my Ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Trump took that oath as an "Officer of the United States" under Section 3 because the President is an officer of the United States.

1. Plain Meaning.

The plain meaning of "Officer of the United States" includes the President because the Constitution explicitly designates the presidency as an "Office," describing it as such no fewer than 25 times and the plain meaning of "officer" is one who holds an office. See Bailey, An Universal Etymological English Dictionary (20th ed, 1763) ("[O]ne who is in an Office."); see also United States v Maurice, 26 F Cas 1211, 1214 (CCD Va, 1823) ("[H]e who performs the duties of the office, is an officer. If employed on the part of the United States, he is an officer of the United States.").

This plain meaning is widely used today by the United States Supreme Court and the executive branch in referring to the President as an officer. See, e g, Nixon v Fitzgerald, 457 US 731, 750; 102 S Ct 2690; 73 L Ed 2d 349 (1982) (referring to president as "the chief constitutional officer of the Executive Branch"); Cheney v US Dist Court for DC, 541 US 913, 916; 124 S Ct 1391; 158 L Ed 2d 225 (2004) (referring to "the President and other officers of the Executive"); Motions Sys Corp v Bush, 437 F3d 1356, 1368 (CA Fed, 2006) (per curiam) (Gajarsa, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) (cataloguing multiple presidential executive orders wherein the president refers to himself as an "officer"); id at 1371–1372 ("The Constitution repeatedly designates the Presidency as an 'Office,' which surely suggests that its occupant is, by definition, an 'officer.'").

2. Common Understanding And Contemporaneous Interpretation.

By the 1860s—the relevant period for ascertaining the original meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment—"officer of the United States" was commonly understood to include the President, and the original public understanding of Section 3 applied to an insurrectionist ex-president. Intuitively, someone who takes a constitutionally required oath to "preserve, protect and defend" the Constitution before he can "enter on the Execution of His Office," US Const, art II, § 1, cl 8, is, in plain language, an "officer of the United States." Presidents, members of Congress, Supreme Court justices, and the public referred to the President this way.

Before the Civil War, both common usage and judicial opinions described the president as an "officer of the United States." As early as 1789, congressional debate referred to the president as "the supreme Executive officer of the United States." 1 Annals of Congress 487–488 (Joseph Gales ed, 1789) (Rep. Boudinot); cf The Federalist No. 69 (Hamilton) (Rossiter ed, 1961), p 422 ("The President of the United States would be an officer elected by the people . . . ."). Chief Judge Cranch wrote in 1837 that "[t]he president himself . . . is but an officer of the United States." United States ex rel Stokes v Kendall, 26 F Cas 702, 752 (CCDDC, 1837), aff'd Kendall v United States, 37 US 524; 9 L Ed 1181 (1838).

By the 1860s, this usage was firmly entrenched. See Vlahoplus, Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit J Am Legal Stud (forthcoming 2024), pp 18–20; Chicago Tribune (January 14, 1864), p 3, col 3 ("The President is an officer of the United States . . . ."). On the eve of the Civil War, President Buchanan called himself "the chief executive officer under the Constitution of the United States." Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit J Am Legal Stud at 18; see also Cong Globe, 37th Cong, 2d Sess (1862), p 431 (Sen. Davis) (referring to President Lincoln as "the chief executive officer of the United States"). In a series of widely reprinted 1865 official proclamations that reorganized the governments of former Confederate states, President Andrew Johnson referred to himself as the "chief civil executive officer of the United States."[1]

This usage continued throughout the Thirty-Ninth Congress, which enacted the Fourteenth Amendment, e g, Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866), p 335 (Sen. Guthrie), 775 (Rep. Conkling) (quoting Attorney General Speed), 915 (Sen. Wilson), 2551 (Sen. Howard) (quoting President Johnson), and during its two-year ratification period, see, e g, Mississippi v Johnson, 71 US (4 Wall) 475, 480; 18 L Ed 437 (1866) (counsel labeling the president the "chief executive officer of the United States"); Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 2d Sess (1867), p 335 (Sen. Wade) (calling president "the executive officer of the United States"); Cong Globe, 40th Cong, 2d Sess (1868), p 513 (Rep. Bingham) (calling the president the "executive officer of the United States"). It is clear that the original public meaning of the phrase in Section 3 necessarily included the president as an "officer of the United States."

An insurrectionist ex-president was hardly inconceivable. Former President John Tyler joined the Confederacy. Had he lived long enough to seek public office after the war, no reasonable interpretation of Section 3 would hold that his disqualification would turn on the fact that he also happened to serve as a less powerful covered official in the House.

The general public continued to characterize the president as an "officer of the United States" during President Johnson's impeachment, which overlapped with the Fourteenth Amendment's ratification period. See, e g, Cincinnati Commercial (April 18, 1868), p 4, col 4 (ridiculing the "absurd conclusion," drawn from "splitting constitutional hairs," that the president is not an officer of the United States); Louisville Courier-Journal (April 15, 1868), p 1, col 1 (conceding that it is "accepted doctrine[]" that "the President of the United States is an officer of the United States").

It is clear that the original public meaning of the phrase in Section 3 necessarily included the president as an "officer of the United States." Nor was the term considered a technical term of art that excluded the president. If it were, then it would be defined as such in contemporary legal dictionaries—it is not.

B. Trump Seeks Election To "An Office . . . Under The United States."

The 1787 Constitution and antebellum (1803) Twelfth Amendment repeatedly label the presidency an "office." See, e g, US Const, art II, § 1, cl 1. The antebellum Constitution repeatedly

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

uses that term in eligibility provisions. See, e g, id § 1, cl 5 ("No Person . . . shall be eligible to the Office of President . . . ." (emphasis added)); US Const, Am XII ("[N]o person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President . . . ." (emphasis added)). The Constitution as a whole refers to the presidency as an "Office" 25 times.

The congressional debates over Section 3 specifically recognized that the presidency, as an office, is indeed covered by Section 3. Senator Johnson was initially confused by the specific enumeration of certain offices:

> I do not see but that any one of those gentlemen [ex-Confederates] may be elected President or Vice President of the United States, and why did you omit to exclude them? I do not understand them to be excluded from the privilege of holding the two highest offices in the gift of the nation.

Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866), p 2899. But Senator Morrill interrupted him:

> Let me call the Senator's attention to the words "or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States."

Id. Senator Johnson acknowledged there was "no doubt" he had been wrong, and that he had been "misled by noticing the specific exclusion in the case of Senators and Representatives." Id.

During the ratification period, the public debated the merits of Section 3 itself by raising the prospect of Jefferson Davis becoming president. See Insurrection, Disqualification, and the Presidency, 13 Brit J Am Legal Stud at 7–10; see also, e g, Democratic Duplicity, Indianapolis Daily Journal (July 12, 1866), p 2, col 1 (three days after congressional enactment, explaining that Section 3's opponents believed "that ROBERT E. LEE is as eligible to the Presidency as Lieut. General GRANT"). This debate would have been pointless if the presidency was not covered.

C. Trump Engaged In Both Insurrection And Rebellion Against The Constitution Of The United States.

1. The January 6 Insurrection Was An "Insurrection" Under Section 3.[2]

a. An "Insurrection" Under Section 3 Is Combined, Forcible Resistance To Federal Authority Or The Constitution Itself.

Nineteenth-century definitions of "insurrection" converge on key elements. See Baude & Stokes Paulsen, The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L Rev (forthcoming 2024), pp 63–93 (canvassing definitions and usage). These elements are "concerted, forcible resistance to the authority of government to execute the laws in at least some significant respect," id at 64, or "a) an assemblage, b) actual resistance to a federal law, c) force or intimidation, and d) a public purpose," Graber, Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment: Our Questions, Their Answers, Univ Md Sch of Law Legal Studies Research Paper No. 2023-16 (October 3, 2023), p 24, available at https://ssrn.com/abstract=4591133; see also Webster's Dictionary (1830) ("[C]ombined resistance to . . . lawful authority . . . , with intent to the denial thereof[.]"); Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary (15th ed, 1883) (defining "insurrection" as "rebellion," and "rebellion" as "[t]he taking up arms traitorously against the government[; t]he forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued"); The Prize Cases (The Amy Warwick), 67 US (2 Black) 635, 666; 17 L Ed 459 (1862) ("Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the Government."); Allegheny Co v Gibson's Son & Co, 90 Pa 397, 417 (1879) ("A rising against . . . authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of law in a city or state; a rebellion; a revolt[.]"); President Lincoln, Instructions for the Government of Armies of the United States in the Field, General Orders No. 100 (April 24, 1863), art 149 ("Insurrection is the rising of people in arms against their government, or a portion of it, or against one or more of its laws, or against an officer or officers of the government. It may be confined to mere armed resistance, or it may have greater ends in view.").

The term as used in Section 3 is informed by previous insurrections against the United States, such as the Whiskey, Shays', and Fries Insurrections, which did not involve vast columns of uniformed troops, military equipment, or hundreds of deaths. See The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L Rev at 88–90; Coakley, The Role of Federal Military Forces in Domestic Disorders, 1789–1878 (US Army Center of Military History, 1996) (recounting well-known antebellum insurrections that involved loosely organized, lightly-armed groups and few deaths). Yet the Framers and interpreters of Section 3 explicitly cited them as precedent. See Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866), p 2534 (Rep. Eckley) (discussing approvingly the expulsions of representatives who supported the "small" Whiskey Insurrection); see also 12 US Att'y Gen Op, p 160 (opining that, in similarly-worded statute, "[t]he language here comprehends not only the late rebellion, but every past rebellion or insurrection . . . in the United States").[3]

To qualify as an insurrection, the uprising must be "so formidable as for the time being to defy the authority of the United States." In re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 F 828, 830 (ND Ill, 1894). No minimum level of violence or armament is required. See id ("It is not necessary that there should be bloodshed[.]"); see also Case of Fries, 9 F Cas 924, 930 (CCD Pa, 1800) ("[M]ilitary weapons (as guns and swords . . .) are not necessary to make such insurrection . . . because numbers

[3] Section 3's phrase "insurrection or rebellion against the same" is best read as an insurrection against "the Constitution of the United States" (i.e., to block exercise of core constitutional functions of the federal government), but can also be read as an insurrection against "the United States." The January 6 insurrection satisfies both readings, so the distinction does not matter here.

may supply the want of military weapons, and other instruments may effect the intended mischief."). Even a failed attack with no chance of success can qualify as an insurrection. See Charge to Grand Jury, 62 F at 830 ("[I]t is not necessary that its dimensions should be so portentous as to insure probable success[.]").[4]

b. The January 6 Insurrection Satisfies All These Criteria.

The January 6 insurrection was an uprising against the United States (or against the Constitution of the United States) that sought to stop the peaceful transfer of power. Compl, ¶¶ 6, 24 (Ex 2, pp 28, 31). It defied the authority of the United States by seizing the U.S. Capitol and preventing Congress from fulfilling its duty to certify the results of a presidential election. Though their success was short-lived, the insurrectionists claim distinctions that past insurrectionists cannot: their violent seizure of the Capitol obstructed an essential constitutional procedure. See id ¶ 202 (Ex 2, p 68). Even the Confederates never attacked the heart of the nation's capital, prevented a peaceful and orderly presidential transition of power, or captured the U.S. Capitol. Id ¶¶ 198–202 (Ex 2, pp 67–68).

Multiple people died and 140 law enforcement officers were injured, some severely. Id ¶ 245 (Ex 2, p 75). The attack was as violent as the Whiskey and Shays' Insurrections, to which the Disqualification Clause was understood to apply. See Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866), p 2534. Insurrectionists overwhelmed civil authorities and viciously attacked the Capitol police. Compl, ¶¶ 179–202 (Ex 2, pp 64–68). Military and other federal agencies had to be called in by then-Vice President Pence, after Trump refused. Id ¶ 238 (Ex 2, pp 73–74). Congress, then-President Trump's own Department of Justice, federal courts, and even Trump's defense lawyer have all categorized January 6 as an "insurrection." See id ¶¶ 246–255 (Ex 2, pp 75–79).[5]

Most recently, a Colorado court, after a five-day bench trial in which Trump was a party, concluded that the events of January 6, 2021, constituted an insurrection under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. See Anderson v Griswold, order of the Colorado District Court, issued November 17, 2023 (Docket No. 2023-CV-32577), ¶¶ 225–244 (Ex 6, pp 216–221).

2. Trump's Misconduct Constituted "Engage[ment]" In The Insurrection.

a. Under The Governing Worthy-Powell Standard, Any Voluntary Effort To Assist The Insurrection Constitutes Engagement.

All four courts to construe "engage" under Section 3—two in the 1860s, two last year—have articulated the same standard. Under this Worthy-Powell standard, to "engage" in insurrection or rebellion means to provide voluntary assistance, either by service or contribution (except charitable contributions). See United States v Powell, 27 F Cas 605, 607 (CCD NC, 1871) (defining "engage" as "a voluntary effort to assist the Insurrection . . . and to bring it to a successful [from insurrectionists' perspective] termination"); Worthy v Barrett, 63 NC 199, 203 (1869) (defining "engage" as "[v]oluntarily aiding the rebellion by personal service or by contributions, other than charitable, of anything that was useful or necessary"), app dis Worthy v Comm'rs, 76 US (9 Wall) 611; 19 L Ed 565 (1869); see also In re Tate, 63 NC 308 (1869) (applying Worthy); 12 US Att'y Gen Op, pp 161–62 ("engage" includes "persons who . . . have done any overt act for the purpose of promoting the rebellion"). Both 2022 decisions adopted the Worthy-Powell standard to construe "engage" under Section 3. See New Mexico ex rel White v Griffin, opinion of the First Judicial District Court of New Mexico, issued September 6, 2022 (Docket No. D-101-cv-2022-00473), p 34, app dis order of the New Mexico Supreme Court, issued November 16, 2022 (Docket No. S-1-SC-39571), cert filed May 18, 2023; Rowan v Greene, initial decision of the Georgia Office of State Admin Hearings, issued May 6, 2022 (Docket No. 2222582-OSAH-SECSTATE-CE-57-Beaudrot) (Rowan I), pp 13–14 (Ex 3, pp 110–111). No court has ever used a different standard under Section 3.

Engagement does not require that an individual personally commit violence. See Powell, 27 F Cas at 607 (defendant paid to avoid serving in Confederate Army); Worthy, 63 NC at 203 (defendant simply served as county sheriff); Rowan I, p 13 (Ex 3, p 110); White, p 35; 12 US Att'y Gen Op, p 161 ("[P]ersons may have engaged in rebellion without having actually levied war or taken arms[.]"). Indeed, Jefferson Davis—the president of the Confederacy—never fired a shot and Section 3 clearly applied to him.

It is possible—and for leaders, even likely—to engage in insurrection via speech through order-giving or incitement. "[M]arching orders or instructions to capture a particular objective, or to disrupt or obstruct a particular government proceeding, would appear to constitute 'engagement' under the Worthy-Powell standard." Rowan I, p 14 (Ex 3, p 111). With regard to incitement, "[d]isloyal sentiments . . . would not disqualify; but when a person has, by speech or by writing, incited others to engage in rebellion, [h]e must come under the disqualification." 12 US Att'y Gen Op, pp 182, 205; see also Charge to Grand Jury, 62 F at 830 ("When men gather to resist the civil or political power of the United States, or to oppose the execution of its laws, and are in such force that the civil authorities are inadequate to put them down, and a considerable military force is needed to accomplish that result, they become insurgents; and every person who knowingly incites, aids, or abets them, no matter what his motives may be, is likewise an insurgent.").[6]

The First Amendment does not preclude disqualification based on speech. First, Section 3 is not a statute subject to First Amendment review. It is a coequal provision of the Constitution—in fact, a later-enacted and more specific provision. See The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L Rev at 57–61. By analogy, although all Americans have a First Amendment right to refuse to swear an oath to protect the Constitution, Article VI of the Constitution requires legislators to take an oath to protect the Constitution. See US Const, art VI. They cannot use the First Amendment as a shield to avoid taking this oath; Article VI controls. See Bond v Floyd, 385 US 116, 132; 87 S Ct 339; 17 L Ed 2d 235 (1966). Likewise, the First Amendment does not protect Trump from disqualification. Section 3 controls.

Second, even if Section 3 were subject to First Amendment protections, those protections would not extend to speech that qualifies as engagement in insurrection. First, Section 3 proscribes disqualification from office and does not criminalize speech. If Congress may statutorily prohibit federal employees from taking active part in political campaigns, see US Civil Serv Comm'n v Nat'l Ass'n of Letter Carriers, 413 US 548, 550, 556; 93 S Ct 2880; 37 L Ed 2d 796 (1973), then the Constitution itself can disqualify from office individuals who engage in rebellion against the United States or its Constitution. And not all speech is protected by the First Amendment. Virginia v Black, 538 US 343, 358–359; 123 S Ct 1536; 155 L Ed 2d 535 (2003). Language that incites and is likely to incite imminent lawless action or furthers a crime is unprotected, Brandenburg v Ohio, 395 US 444, 447; 89 S Ct 1827; 23 L Ed 2d 430 (1969), as are criminal plans or conspiracy, see Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co, 336 US 490, 502; 69 S Ct 684; 93 L Ed 834 (1949). The First Amendment is no bar to Section 3 disqualification, and speech that qualifies as engagement in insurrection is not protected by the First Amendment.

Nor does Section 3 require charging or conviction of any crime. See, e g, Rowan I, pp 13–14 (Ex 3, pp 110–111); White, p 26; Powell, 27 F Cas at 607 (defendant not charged with any prior crime); Worthy, 63 NC at 203 (same); In re Tate, 63 NC 308 (same); Magliocca, Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const Commentary 87, 98–99 (2021) (describing 1868 special congressional action to enforce Section 3 and remove Georgia legislators, none of whom had been charged criminally); The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L Rev at 68, 83–84.[7] Indeed, the vast majority of ex-Confederates—including Worthy, most candidates-elect that Congress excluded, and the thousands who petitioned Congress for amnesty—were never charged with, or convicted of, any crimes.

In the Court of Claims, Trump did not cite the Worthy-Powell standard—the only judicial definition of "engage" under Section 3. Instead, he relied on two inapposite House exclusion cases. See Trump's Br in Supp of Mot for Summ Disposition, p 27 (citing, without naming, cases of John M. Rice and Lewis McKenzie). The cases did not turn, as Trump suggested below, on whether their speech qualified as engagement in insurrection. Rather, the House did not exclude them because, although they advocated for secession months before it started, Rice and McKenzie both took immediate active efforts to defeat the insurrection once it began.[8]

[7] Rather than require a criminal conviction as a prerequisite to a civil action to disqualify an officeholder, Congress instead imposed criminal penalties for those who held office in defiance of Section 3. See Act of May 31, 1870, ch 114, § 15, 16 Stat 140, 143.

In fact, the House's exclusion practice was generous to men who repudiated initial disloyalty by immediately disavowing and fighting the insurrection, but strict to men who remained silent or supportive once the insurrection was underway. In its first Section 3 adjudication, "recognized by the House as of the highest importance," the House excluded John Young Brown for advocating forcible resistance to federal authority in a letter to the editor. 1 Hinds, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, ch 14, § 449 (1907), pp 445–446; see also id § 458, p 469 (excluding Philip Thomas, who gave "aid and comfort" by allowing his son to join Confederate Army and giving him $100); id § 451, p 452 (explaining in John D. Young case that "'aid and comfort' may be given to an enemy by words of encouragement, or the expression of an opinion, from one occupying an influential position").[9] Crucially, the House's exclusion practice demonstrates the importance of an individual's conduct during the insurrection. That standard does not support Trump.

b. Trump Spearheaded The Insurrection Through Words And Actions.

Plaintiffs-Appellants' complaint extensively recites Trump's involvement in the insurrection, in a detailed timeline that lays out his culpability. In fact, nine federal judges have ascribed responsibility for the January 6 insurrection to Trump. Compl, ¶¶ 259–260 (Ex 2, pp 81–83).

[8] See Cong Globe, 41st Cong, 2nd Sess, (1870), pp 5442, 5445 (Rice actively dissuaded "whole companies of men" from joining the Confederate Army and induced them to fight for the Union); Hinds' Precedents, ch 14, § 462, p 477 (McKenzie changed his mind before Virginia seceded and became "an outspoken Union man").

[9] Trump's argument that "aid or comfort" is restricted to foreign enemies, Trump's Br, p 32, is an outdated, antebellum view. The concept of a "domestic" enemy became part of American constitutional thinking no later than 1862, when Congress enacted the Ironclad Oath to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States, against all enemies, foreign and domestic." 12 Stat 502 (1862) (emphases added).

In the Court of Claims, Trump picked and chose decontextualized examples of his conduct to evade responsibility for the whole, including citing a case decided two years before the insurrection. See Trump's Br, pp 28–31, citing Nwanguma v Trump, 903 F3d 604, 610 (CA 6, 2018). But taken in context, his speech and actions establish that he purposefully engaged in insurrection both before and during the violent assault on the Capitol. A federal court has already held that Trump's Ellipse speech constituted incitement—notwithstanding his wink-and-nod passing parenthetical about "peacefully" marching on the Capitol. See Compl, ¶ 258 (Ex 2, pp 80–81), quoting Thompson v Trump, 590 F Supp 3d 46, 104, 118 (DDC, 2022).[10] Some of his speech constituted overt acts:

> [I]n certain circumstances words can constitute an "overt act," just as words may constitute an "overt act" under the Treason Clause, e.g., Chandler v. United States, 171 F.2d 921, 938 (1st Cir. 1948) (enumerating examples, such as conveying military intelligence to the enemy), or for purposes of conspiracy law, e.g., United States v. Donner, 497 F.2d 184, 192 (7th Cir. 1974) (even "constitutionally protected speech may nevertheless be an overt act in a conspiracy charge").

Rowan I, p 14 (Ex 3, p 111). "[M]arching orders or instructions to capture a particular objective, or to disrupt or obstruct a particular government proceeding, would appear to constitute 'engagement' under the Worthy-Powell standard." Id. That is precisely what Trump gave.

[10] Even if First Amendment doctrine governed Section 3 (it does not), a federal court has held that key Trump statements were "plausibly words of incitement not protected by the First Amendment." Thompson, 590 F Supp 3d at 115. And a federal court has found many of Trump's communications with his attorney to satisfy the crime/fraud exception to privilege doctrines. See Eastman v Thompson, 636 F Supp 3d 1078 (CD Cal, 2022), app dis ___ F4th ___ (CA 9, 2022) (Docket No. 22-56013), cert den ___ US ___; ___ S Ct ___; 217 L Ed 2d 113 (2023) (Docket No. 22-1138); Eastman v Thompson, 594 F Supp 3d 1156 (CD Cal, 2022).

Trump "summoned the attackers to Washington, D.C. to 'be wild' . . . ; ensured that his armed and angry supporters were able to bring their weapons; incited them against Vice President Pence, Congress, the certification of electoral votes, and the peaceful transfer of power." Compl, ¶ 303 (Ex 2, p 90). He ordered the attackers to march on the Capitol. Once the insurrection was underway, he actively aided and encouraged the insurrection to continue, id ¶¶ 208–219 (Ex 2, pp 69–71), and deliberately refused to take steps to suppress or mitigate it, id ¶¶ 207–233 (Ex 2, pp 69–73). Trump knew of, consciously disregarded the risk of, or specifically intended all of it. Id ¶ 302 (Ex 2, pp 89–90).

The Colorado trial court—the only court in the country to specifically address this issue—found that Trump "engaged" in the insurrection. Anderson, ¶¶ 245–298 (Ex 6, pp 222–245) ("Consequently, the Court finds that Petitioners have established that Trump engaged in an insurrection on January 6, 2021 through incitement, and that the First Amendment does not protect Trump's speech."). Numerous other federal courts have explicitly recognized Trump's key role in facilitating or causing the insurrection.

D. Section 3 Is Self-Executing.

1. State Courts Do Not Need Congressional Permission To Enforce The Fourteenth Amendment.

a. State Courts Are Obligated To Adjudicate Federal Constitutional Questions.

State courts must apply the Constitution; they need not and cannot wait for congressional approval. See US Const, art VI, cl 2 (the United States Constitution "shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby"). Long before the Fourteenth Amendment, the Supreme Court confirmed that state courts are competent to adjudicate questions under the United States Constitution. See Martin v Hunter's Lessee, 14 US (1 Wheat) 304, 339–342; 4 L Ed 97 (1816); see also Robb v Connolly, 111 US 624, 637; 4 S Ct 544; 28 L Ed 542 (1884) (constitutional enforcement lies "[u]pon the State courts, equally with the courts of the Union").

b. State Courts Routinely Adjudicate Fourteenth Amendment Claims Without Federal Statutory Authorization.

When plaintiffs in state court civil actions raise federal constitutional claims, courts do not wait for Congress to authorize consideration of the claims. See Testa v Katt, 330 US 386, 389; 67 S Ct 810; 91 L Ed 967 (1947) (holding that, when federal law applies to a cause of action, state courts must apply it). Instead, state courts review the constitutional claims on their merits. Indeed, state courts began adjudicating Fourteenth Amendment claims—including claims seeking affirmative relief—soon after the Amendment's passage, without special authorization from Congress. See, e g, Van Valkenburg v Brown, 43 Cal 43 (1872). Today, state courts routinely enforce the Fourteenth Amendment without citing any "authorizing" federal statute. See, e g, Crego v Coleman, 463 Mich 248; 615 NW2d 218 (2000); O'Donnell v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 404 Mich 524; 273 NW2d 829 (1979).[11]

2. Nothing In The Fourteenth Amendment Says Section 3 Requires Federal Legislation.

a. Section 3 States A Direct Prohibition, Not An Authorization.

Section 3 states the disqualification as a direct prohibition: "No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office" if they previously took an oath as a covered official and then engaged in insurrection or rebellion. "It lays down a rule by saying what shall be. It does not grant a power to Congress (or any other body) to enact or effectuate a rule of disqualification. It enacts the rule itself." The Sweep and [11] State courts decide Fourteenth Amendment defenses and claims under 42 USC 1983, but as illustrated here, they also decide affirmative Fourteenth Amendment civil claims absent legislation.

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L at 17–18. Its language parallels other qualification clauses in the Constitution, which direct that "[n]o person shall be" a Representative, Senator, President, or Vice President if they do not meet age, citizenship, and residency requirements, and which do not require federal legislation. See US Const, art I, § 2, cl 2 and § 3, cl 3; art II, § 1, cl 5; Am XII.

Section 3's prohibitory language also parallels the self-executing language of Section 1. No federal legislation is needed to enforce the Due Process Clause or Equal Protection Clause in state court. See US Const, Am XIV, § 1. Indeed, the drafters intended to constitutionalize these protections for the specific purpose that they would not depend on the whims of Congress. See, e g, Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess, p 1095 (1866) (Rep. Hotchkiss) (arguing for constitutional protections because "[w]e may pass laws here to-day, and the next Congress may wipe them out"). Likewise, Congress did not leave Section 3 to the whims of the bare majority of "the next Congress"; rather, Section 3 applies unless and until two-thirds of each chamber grants amnesty.

Section 3's self-executing prohibition stands in sharp contrast to constitutional provisions that authorize congressional action without establishing a mandatory rule or prohibition. For example, Article I authorizes Congress "[t]o provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting." US Const, art I, § 8, cl 6. That mere authorization neither prohibits counterfeiting, nor establishes a punishment. See also US Const, art III, § 3 (defining treason and authorizing Congress to establish the punishment). Authorizing language typically uses formulations such as Congress "may" "by Law" act, e g, id § 2, cl 3; id § 4, cl 1–2, or that Congress "shall have Power" to do something, e g, id § 8; US Const, art III, § 3, cl 2; US Const, art IV, § 3, cl 2. Similarly, the Impeachment Clause defines impeachable offenses, US Const, art II, § 4, but the Constitution leaves the decision to impeach or convict to the House and Senate, US Const, art I, § 2, cl 5; id § 3, cl 6.

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

In contrast, Section 3 enacts its own disqualification and, like Section 1, sets no requirement of congressional action before a state may implement it. The only exclusive role Section 3 confers upon Congress is to waive disqualification, which it has not done for Trump.

b. Section 5's Authorization Of Congressional Legislation Does Not Make Section 3 Unenforceable Without Similar Legislation.

Section 5 authorizes, but does not require, federal legislation. US Const, Am XIV, § 5. Indeed, as the United States Supreme Court recognized in 1883—in analyzing the scope of Congress's enforcement power under Section 5—"the Fourteenth [Amendment], is undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation." Civil Rights Cases, 109 US 3, 20; 3 S Ct 18; 27 L Ed 835 (1883). Section 5 applies to the entire Fourteenth Amendment. If Section 5 meant states could not adjudicate questions under Section 3 without congressional legislation, then it would also mean states could not adjudicate Due Process or Equal Protection Clause questions without congressional legislation. Yet courts in every state routinely do. Section 3, like Section 1, also is enforceable in state court even without federal legislation.

3. History Confirms That States May Enforce Section 3 Without Special Federal Legislation.

Nothing in Section 3's original public meaning—in congressional debates, state ratification debates, or public discussion—supports the argument that congressional action is required for enforcement. To the contrary, the crucial period between ratification in July 1868 and May 1870,

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

when the first federal enforcement legislation passed, confirms that virtually everyone involved understood that Section 3 applied without special federal legislation.[12]

a. Congress Assumed Section 3 Took Immediate Effect.

Congress enacted the Fourteenth Amendment in 1866, and state ratification was perfected in July 1868. If Congress—which passed a dizzying array of constitutional amendments and Reconstruction acts within months of each other—had thought that Section 3 required special federal legislation, then it would have promptly passed such a law. Yet Congress did not pass a federal statute providing for government enforcement of Section 3 until May 1870.[13]

Prior to May 1870, Congress also enacted many private bills granting ex-Confederates amnesty from Section 3, which would have been unnecessary if Section 3 required enforcement legislation.[14] Congress understood that, absent amnesty, states could directly enforce Section 3 without federal legislation to bar those individuals from holding office.

In the Court of Claims, Trump relied on two badly out-of-context quotes from Representative Thaddeus Stevens. See Trump's Br, p 14. Stevens' May 10, 1866 quote pertained to a different proposed constitutional provision, a version of Section 3 that would have banned all ex-Confederates (including conscripts and private citizens) from voting until 1870. See Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866), p 2460. Stevens admitted that this voter-disenfranchisement draft would require implementing legislation. Id at 2544. But Congress abandoned that draft—partly due to that very concern—and substituted the current Section 3, which avoided that problem. See id at 2869. Stevens' June 13, 1866 quote does not pertain to Section 3 at all, but to "enabling acts, which shall do justice to the freedmen and enjoin enfranchisement." Id at 3149.

b. The Public Knew Section 3 Took Immediate Effect.

Private amnesty bills required an affirmative request by the disqualified individuals. See 2 Blaine, Twenty Years of Congress: From Lincoln to Garfield (Norwich: Henry Bill Publishing Co, 1886), p 512. To avoid being excluded from office by state law and courts, thousands of ex-Confederates began requesting amnesty as early as 1868, two years before federal enforcement legislation, and both national party platforms that year addressed amnesty. See Amnesty and Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const Commentary at 112. If these individuals could only be excluded through non-existent federal legislation, they would have had nothing to gain, and much to lose, by putting their fates in the hands of Congress.

Trump relied below on the remarks of Pennsylvania State Representative Thomas Chalfant. Trump's Br, p 15. But Chalfant opposed the Fourteenth Amendment—his remarks on Section 3 concluded with a rant accusing amendment supporters of "degrad[ing] the ballot-box by permitting the negro to participate in your elections," and warned of "the curses of a nation" if the amendment were adopted[15]—and is not a reliable source on its meaning.

c. Reconstruction-Era State Constitutions Confirm That Section 3 Requires No Special Federal Legislation.

Three contemporaneous state constitutions ratified by ex-Confederate states confirm that disqualification is imposed by Section 3 itself and does not require further congressional action. For example, the Florida Constitution of 1868 provides:

[15] Appendix to the Daily Legislative Record, Containing the Debates on the Several Important Bills Before the Legislature of 1867 (George Bergner, ed) (Harrisburg, Pa, 1867), LXXXII (January 30, 1867), LXXXIII (February 6, 1867).

> Any person debarred from holding office in the State of Florida by the third section of the fourteenth Article of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States . . . is hereby debarred from holding office in this state; Provided, That whenever such disability from holding office be removed from any person by the Congress of the United States, the removal of such disability shall also apply to this State . . . .

Fla Const 1868, art XVI, § 1; accord SC Const 1868, art VIII, § 2 (similar); Tex Const 1869, art VI, § 1 (similar).

On Trump's view, these pre-1870 constitutional provisions were meaningless when enacted. But that is absurd. Rather, these pre-1870 constitutions necessarily recognized that disqualification was imposed by the Constitution itself.

d. Reconstruction-Era State Courts Used State Law In Civil Cases To Enforce Section 3 Without Special Federal Legislation.

The practice of multiple state courts during the Reconstruction era demonstrates that they enforced Section 3 without federal legislation, as well. See Worthy, 63 NC at 200 (holding that sheriff-elect was disqualified under Section 3). The Worthy Court said nothing about needing a federal statute to enforce Section 3. Instead, the court quoted a state statute providing that "no person prohibited from holding office by section 3 of the Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, known as Art. XIV, shall qualify under this act or hold office in this State." See id; see also In re Tate, 63 NC at 309 (citing Worthy as controlling authority). That same year, the Louisiana Supreme Court adjudicated a state official's Section 3 eligibility. Louisiana ex rel Downes v Towne, 21 La 490, 492 (1869). While the court concluded that Downes was not disqualified, the court did not question its authority to decide the issue absent congressional legislation.

4. The Only Case Demanding Federal Legislation To Enforce Section 3 Is Erroneous Or, At Minimum, Does Not Apply To Functional State Governments.

Trump cannot rely on Griffin's Case, 11 F Cas 7 (CCD Va, 1869), to support his claim that state courts are unable to enforce Section 3 without specific congressional action. Caesar Griffin, a Black man, was convicted in the then-unreconstructed state of Virginia. Id at 22. In a federal habeas petition challenging his conviction, he argued only that the Virginia judge presiding over his trial was disqualified under Section 3. Id at 22–23. Chief Justice Chase, acting as Circuit Justice, presided over a two-judge panel, hearing Griffin's challenge. See id at 22. Chase rejected the petition, opining that Section 3 required federal enforcement legislation. Id at 22, 26. His decision has been described as "confused and confusing," see Cawthorn v Amalfi, 35 F4th 245, 278 n 16 (2022) (Richardson, J., concurring in the judgment), and cannot support this claim for several reasons.

First, Griffin's Case cannot overcome the plain meaning of Section 3. In fact, Chief Justice Chase acknowledged that the "literal construction"—what today would be called plain meaning—of Section 3 would disqualify the Virginia judge. Griffin's Case, 11 F Cas at 24. Instead, he claimed that applying its "literal construction" would be a "great inconvenience," given the "calamities which have already fallen upon the people of these [ex-Confederate] states." Id at 24–25.[16] Prioritizing his policy preferences, he opined that Section 3 must be read narrowly to avoid "bring[ing] it into conflict or disaccord with the other provisions of the constitution." Id at 25. But this analysis nullifies the purpose of constitutional amendments. See The Sweep and Force of [16] Judge Underwood, in the district court opinion that Chief Justice Chase reversed in Griffin's Case, wrote, "Whatever inconvenience may result from the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws, I think the experience of the last few years shows that much greater inconvenience comes from attempting their overthrow." The Sweep and Force of Section 3, 172 U Pa L Rev at 40 n 144 (citation omitted).

Section 3, 172 U Pa L Rev at 43 ("Of course constitutional amendments change prior constitutional law. That is their purpose and function.").

Griffin's Case noted that "[t]o accomplish this ascertainment [of who is disqualified] and ensure effective results, proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions, more or less formal, are indispensable." 11 F Cas at 26. Chief Justice Chase never considered or explained why state court could not provide such proceedings. Instead, Chief Justice Chase summarily concluded that "these can only be provided for by congress." Id. Even if that is true in federal court, it does not explain why a state court would need federal legislation to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment.

Chief Justice Chase also relied on Section 5. Id at 26. But Section 5 does not deprive states of their inherent authority and obligation to enforce the United States Constitution. Chief Justice Chase further asserted that the exclusive role for Congress in removing disqualifications "gives to [C]ongress absolute control of the whole operation of the amendment." Id. But this reasoning cannot be squared with Section 3's text. The drafters conspicuously granted exclusive authority to Congress only to remove the disqualification and gave Congress no role in the disqualification itself. Section 3's disqualification requirement, like other Fourteenth Amendment requirements, may (and must) be enforced by state courts with or without congressional action.

Second, Griffin's Case contradicts a different Virginia circuit case that Chief Justice Chase himself had just decided, ruling there that Section 3 was self-executing, when that (opposite) position benefited an ex-Confederate. In the treason prosecution of Jefferson Davis, Chief Justice

Chase concluded that Section 3 was self-enforcing.[17] See Case of Davis, 7 F Cas 63, 90, 102 (CCD Va, 1871); Cawthorn, 35 F4th at 278 n 16 ("These contradictory holdings . . . draw both cases into question and make it hard to trust Chase's interpretation."); see also Amnesty and Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, 36 Const Commentary at 100–108 (providing a detailed analysis of Davis and Griffin's Case). Griffin's Case did not attempt to reconcile these conflicting views.[18]

Third, Chief Justice Chase was not an unbiased adjudicator. In June 1868, he told a newspaper interviewer that Section 3 should be removed from the Fourteenth Amendment, or if not, then "a general amnesty" was "absolutely necessary."[19] His Griffin's Case decision appears to reflect his personal opposition to Section 3 as "too harsh on former Confederate officials." See Cawthorn, 35 F4th at 278 n 16 (quotation omitted). And it was immediately denounced.[20]

Fourth, Griffin's Case was substantially disregarded. See Louisiana ex rel Sandlin v Watkins, 21 La 631, 633 (1861) (four months after Griffin's Case, stating that "we are far from assenting to" the proposition that Section 3 required federal legislation, and ruling him

[17] Chief Justice Chase suggested Davis's lawyers should argue that Section 3 disqualification was the exclusive sanction for ex-Confederates. See Cawthorn, 35 F4th at 278 n 16; see also Nicoletti, Secession On Trial: The Treason Prosecution of Jefferson Davis (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2017), pp 294–296. After a pardon relieved Davis of criminal liability, Chief Justice Chase "instructed the reporter to record him as having been of opinion . . . that the indictment should be quashed, and all further proceedings barred by the effect of the fourteenth amendment . . . ." Case of Davis, 7 F Cas at 102.

[18] Chief Justice Chase's divergent rulings cannot be reconciled by a post hoc distinction (never offered by Chase) between raising Section 3 as a defense ("shield") to a criminal prosecution and as an affirmative argument ("sword") in a habeas petition. Neither the ex-Confederates who petitioned Congress for amnesty nor the members of Congress who considered their requests ever recognized this theoretical distinction.

[19] NY Herald (June 3, 1868), p 3, col 3.

In further repudiation, the provisional governor of Virginia pardoned Griffin three weeks after the decision. See Rockingham Register (May 20, 1869), p 2, col 3.

disqualified); Downes, 21 La at 492 (after Griffin's Case, adjudicating Section 3 claim on the merits). And Congress—presumably understanding that Section 3 was not just enforceable but was actually being enforced—continued passing amnesty bills after Griffin's Case. See supra n 14.

Finally, if it has any precedential value (as a decision by a circuit court with jurisdiction only over Virginia), it should be limited given its unusual context. In 1869, Virginia was an unreconstructed state with a provisional government operating under the control of a Union Army General and lacking the powers of ordinary state governments. Griffin's Case, 11 F Cas at 26–27; First Military Reconstruction Act, ch 153, 14 Stat 428–430 (1867). The Court's conclusion that "proceedings, evidence, decisions, and enforcements of decisions . . . can only be provided for by [C]ongress," Griffin's Case, 11 F Cas at 26, is arguably defensible if limited to that context. Put differently, Virginia was treated more like a federal territory, with limited autonomy. Moreover, Virginia ratified the Fourteenth Amendment after Chief Justice Chase decided Griffin's Case. So, Section 3 proceedings there could, for unique historical reasons, "only be provided for by Congress."[21]

5. Recent Decisions Regarding The January 2021 Insurrection Recognize Section 3 Enforcement Without Special Federal Legislation.

Since January 6, 2021, state courts have applied Section 3 to the January 2021 insurrection. In 2022, a New Mexico state court applied Section 3 under the state quo warranto statute and removed a county commissioner from office for engaging in insurrection. See White, Docket No. D-101-CV-2022-00473. Similarly, Georgia adjudicated a Section 3 ballot challenge against [21] Alternatively, Chief Justice Chase claims he consulted ex parte with the full United States Supreme Court prior to judgment, who "unanimously concur[red] in the opinion that a person convicted by a judge de facto acting under color of office, though not de jure, . . . can not be properly discharged upon habeas corpus." Griffin's Case, 11 F Cas at 27; see also The Sweep and Force of Section Three, 172 U Pa L Rev at 45–49. That narrower ruling obviates the remainder of Griffin's Case, and is (if anything) the relevant precedent.

Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene. See Rowan I (Ex 3). While the administrative law judge overseeing the state proceeding (like the Louisiana Supreme Court in Downes) found there was insufficient evidence to establish that Greene personally engaged in insurrection, he followed Worthy and adjudicated the Section 3 question on the merits. Neither the administrative law judge, nor the state courts on appellate review, see Rowan v Raffensperger, order of the Superior Court of Georgia, issued July 25, 2022 (Docket No. 2022-CV-364778) (Ex 4), nor the federal court that rejected Greene's efforts to enjoin the state proceeding, see Greene v Raffensperger, 599 F Supp 3d 1283 (ND Ga, 2022), questioned the state's authority to adjudicate and enforce Section 3. See, e g, id at 1319 ("Plaintiff has pointed to no authority holding that a state is barred from evaluating whether a candidate meets the constitutional requirements for office or enforcing such requirements.").[22] Most recently, the Colorado District Court rejected Trump's argument that Section 3 is not self-executing. Anderson v Griswold, order of the Colorado District Court, issued October 25, 2023 (Docket No. 2023-CV-32577), pp 19–20 (Ex 5, pp 144–145).

These decisions comport with the holding of Judge (now Justice) Gorsuch that "a state's legitimate interest in protecting the integrity and practical functioning of the political process permits it to exclude from the ballot candidates who are constitutionally prohibited from assuming office." Hassan v Colorado, 495 F Appx 947, 948 (CA 10, 2012); Greene, 599 F Supp 3d at 1319 (finding that the state's "legitimate interest includes enforcing existing constitutional requirements [including Section 3] to ensure that candidates meet the threshold requirements for office").

[22] In one Arizona decision, though one county trial judge determined that Section 3 is not self-executing (among other findings), the state supreme court affirmed on a technical question of Arizona election law and expressly declined to decide or endorse the county judge's constitutional theory. See Hansen v Finchem, order of the Arizona Supreme Court, issued May 9, 2022 (Docket No. CV-22-0099-AP/EL).

Nothing materially differentiates Section 3 from other constitutional qualifications for office, nor other questions under the United States Constitution that state courts routinely adjudicate.

II. THE COURT OF CLAIMS DECISION WAS WRONG.

A. Michigan Voters Have A Right To Have Only Eligible Candidates On The Ballot.

The Court of Claims concluded that the Secretary of State and the political parties have the exclusive authority to determine which candidates appear on the presidential primary ballot, and that individual voters, such as Plaintiffs-Appellants, cannot challenge the qualification of those candidates in court. Opinion & Order, pp 6–9 (Ex 1, pp 7–10).

That erroneous conclusion ignores the well-established right of voters to not only challenge the ballot access of ineligible candidate in court but the voters' right to have only eligible candidates on primary and general election ballots.

In Barrow v City of Detroit Election Comm'n, 301 Mich App 404; 836 NW2d 498 (2013), lv den 494 Mich 866; 831 NW2d 461 (2013), the Court of Appeals recognized and enforced (in that case, by mandamus) the clear legal right of voters to have only eligible candidates on a primary election ballot. Id at 412. The Supreme Court and other Court of Appeals decisions have reaffirmed and applied that principle. In Berdy v Buffa, 504 Mich 876; 928 NW2d 204 (2019), the Supreme Court cited Barrow with approval for the proposition that ineligible candidates cannot appear on the ballot. Id at 879. To that same effect are other Court of Appeals decisions. See, e g, Sheffield v Detroit City Clerk, 337 Mich App 492, 507; 976 NW2d 95 (2021), rev'd on other grounds 508 Mich 851; 962 NW2d 157 (2021) (citing Barrow and Berdy for the proposition that ineligible candidates must be removed from the ballot); Burton-Harris v Wayne Co Clerk, 337 Mich App 215, 233–234; 976 NW2d 30 (2021) (per curiam), vacated in part on other grounds 508 Mich 985; 966 NW2d 349 (2021) (disqualified candidate must be removed from the ballot).

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

The Court of Claims erred in not even citing, let alone addressing, this well-established right of voters to go to court to ensure that candidates are eligible to be listed on the ballot.

This Michigan case law also negates the Court of Claims' reliance on Growe v Simon, order of the Minnesota Supreme Court, issued November 8, 2023 (Docket No. A23-1354) (Ex 7). In Growe, the Minnesota Supreme Court interpreted the Minnesota candidacy challenge statute, an entirely different body of law than Michigan's Barrow-Berdy line of cases. Thus, the Court of Claims' reliance on Growe is completely misplaced.

Furthermore, the Court of Claims' statements that primaries are merely "designed as an aid of the respective political parties" and "designed to assist the parties in determining their respective presidential candidates," Opinion & Order, pp 8–9 (Ex 1, pp 9–10), misunderstands the constitutional significance of primary (including presidential primary) elections. The United States Supreme Court has long rejected, in the white primary cases, the idea that the Fourteenth Amendment does not apply to primary votes. See Nixon v Herndon, 273 US 536, 540–541; 47 S Ct 446; 71 L Ed 759 (1927) (Fourteenth Amendment applies to primary elections); see also Smith v Allwright, 321 US 649, 661–662; 64 S Ct 757; 88 L Ed 987 (1944) (same for Fifteenth Amendment).

The soundness of allowing voters to challenge candidate qualifications is easily illustrated. If the Democratic Party put forward the name of Barack Obama as a candidate, would the Secretary of State be obligated to put his name on the presidential primary ballot despite his obvious disqualification under the two-term limit for President of the Twenty-Second Amendment? Of course not, and if she did, then Michigan voters under Barrow-Berdy could challenge his eligibility. The same would be true if the Republican Party put George W. Bush on the list, or if a political party put forth an underage or otherwise disqualified presidential candidate. Voters have the right to challenge those ineligible candidates and have them barred from the ballot.

The Court of Claims erred in prohibiting Plaintiff-Appellant voters from challenging Trump's eligibility for the presidential primary ballot. They have the clear legal right to do so.

B. The Case Is Ripe For Decision Before The February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary.

In an attempt to bolster its conclusions that Plaintiffs-Appellants have no cause of action, the Court of Claims also engaged in a superficial ripeness analysis that concluded that Plaintiffs-Appellants' claim is not "ripe at this time." Order & Opinion, pp 9–10 (Ex 1, pp 10–11).

This analysis is based on a mischaracterization of Plaintiffs-Appellants' complaint. In the complaint, they challenge Trump's eligibility to appear on the primary election ballot, now less than three months away, with ballots being printed by mid-January, less than two months away.

The ripeness "analysis" of the Court of Claims focused on speculation about post-primary events: Will Trump win the Michigan primary? Will he win the Republican nomination? Will he win the general election? Id. All of that speculation is irrelevant to the question of whether this challenge to his eligibility to be on the primary election ballot is ripe now. The challenge is clearly ripe. There are no "contingent future events" between now and the primary. Secretary Benson has put Trump on her eligibility list and repeatedly declared that she will not remove him without a court order. Unless the Michigan courts act, Trump will be on the primary ballot.

This case is ripe.

C. The Political Question Doctrine Does Not Apply.

The "narrow" political question doctrine does not bar states from adjudicating presidential candidates' constitutional qualifications. See Zivotofsky ex rel Zivotofsky v Clinton, 566 US 189,

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

195; 132 S Ct 1421; 182 L Ed 2d 423 (2012). The doctrine "is one of 'political questions,' not one of 'political cases.' The courts cannot reject as 'no law suit' a bona fide controversy as to whether some action denominated 'political' exceeds constitutional authority." Baker v Carr, 369 US 186, 217; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 2d 663 (1962). Rather, a court "has a responsibility to decide cases properly before it, even those it 'would gladly avoid.'" Zivotofsky, 566 US at 194, quoting Cohens v Virginia, 19 US (6 Wheat) 264, 404; 5 L Ed 527 (1821). And the political question doctrine does not apply simply because a presidential election is involved. See McPherson v Blacker, 146 US 1, 23; 13 S Ct 3; 36 L Ed 869 (1892) ("It is argued that the subject-matter of the controversy is not of judicial cognizance, because it is said that all questions connected with the election of a presidential elector are political in their nature . . . . But the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases in law or equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and this is a case so arising . . . .").

Baker identified six relevant factors, but recent Supreme Court precedent focuses on two: (1) whether the issue is textually committed to another branch of government, or (2) lacks judicially manageable standards for resolution. See Rucho v Common Cause, 588 US ___; 139 S Ct 2484, 2494; 204 L Ed 931 (2019) (citing only second factor); Zivotofsky, 566 US at 195 (citing only first two factors).

1. Appointment Of Presidential Electors Is Committed To States, Not Congress.

The Constitution's Electors Clause textually commits to the states plenary power to appoint presidential electors in the manner they choose. See US Const, art II, § 1, cl 2 ("Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors . . . ."); Moore v Harper, 600 US 1, 37; 143 S Ct 2065; 216 L Ed 2d 729 (2023) ("[I]n choosing Presidential electors, the Clause 'leaves it to the legislature exclusively to define the method of effecting the object.'") (citation omitted); Chiafalo v Washington, 591 US ___; 140 S Ct 2316, 2324; 207 L Ed 2d 761 (2020) (Electors Clause gives states "far-reaching authority over presidential electors"). A state's plenary power to choose electors includes conditioning appointment of electors on their candidate's meeting constitutional criteria. Muller, Scrutinizing Federal Election Qualifications, 90 Ind L J 559, 604 (2015) ("[B]ecause the legislature[] may choose the manner by which it selects its electors, it follows that it may restrict the discretion of the election process through an ex ante examination of candidates' qualifications.").

But the Constitution does not expressly commit any such power to Congress. To the contrary, while Article I explicitly authorizes and directs Congress to judge qualifications of incoming Senators and Representatives, US Const, art I, § 5, cl 1 ("Each House shall be the Judge of the . . . Qualifications of its own Members . . . ."), neither Article II nor any other constitutional provision explicitly authorizes—let alone directs—Congress to judge the qualifications of presidents or presidential candidates. The Twelfth Amendment authorizes Congress to count electoral votes; it does not explicitly authorize Congress to judge presidential qualifications. See US Const, Am XII. Similarly, the Twentieth Amendment provides a contingency procedure "if the President elect shall have failed to qualify," but does not textually commit the question of candidate eligibility to Congress. US Const, Am XX.

Even if Congress holds some unwritten implicit residual authority to judge presidential candidate qualifications, that implicit authority is certainly not exclusive. See Scrutinizing Federal Electoral Qualifications, 90 Ind L J at 605 ("Unlike the robust history of the power of the legislature to adjudicate the qualifications of its own members and the textual language ensuring that each house of Congress is the 'sole' judge of the qualifications of its members, the power of Congress to examine the qualifications of executive candidates is, at the very best, debatable, and certainly not exclusive.").

Leading appellate precedents confirm this. In 2012, then-Judge (now Justice) Gorsuch, writing for the Tenth Circuit, "expressly reaffirm[ed] [that] a state's legitimate interest in protecting the integrity and practical functioning of the political process permits it to exclude from the ballot candidates who are constitutionally prohibited from assuming office." Hassan, 495 F Appx at 948. Justice Gorsuch's conclusion cannot be reconciled with the theory that only Congress may decide whether a presidential candidate is constitutionally eligible. In 2014, the Ninth Circuit joined the Tenth Circuit in explicitly rejecting the idea that the Constitution commits presidential candidate determinations exclusively to Congress:

> [N]othing in the Twentieth Amendment states or implies that Congress has the exclusive authority to pass on the eligibility of candidates for president. The amendment merely grants Congress the authority to determine how to proceed if neither the president elect nor the vice president elect is qualified to hold office, a problem for which there was previously no express solution. . . . Candidates may, of course, become ineligible to serve after they are elected (but before they start their service) due to illness or other misfortune. Or, a previously unknown ineligibility may be discerned after the election. The Twentieth Amendment addresses such contingencies. Nothing in its text or history suggests that it precludes state authorities from excluding a candidate with a known ineligibility from the presidential ballot.

Lindsay v Bowen, 750 F3d 1061, 1065 (CA 9, 2014) (emphasis in original and added). In 2016, the Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court expressly rejected applicability of the political question doctrine, noting that the "touchstone in determining whether the political question doctrine applies is whether the resolution of the question has been textually committed to one or the other political branches of the federal government" and concluding, after close analysis of Article II and the Twelfth Amendment, that "determination of the eligibility of a person to serve as President has not been textually committed to Congress." Elliott v Cruz, 137 A3d 646, 650–651 (Pa Commw, 2016), aff'd 635 Pa 212; 134 A3d 51 (2016).

The Court of Claims did not cite Lindsay, Hassan, Elliott, or any of the other authorities confirming that states may, under Article II of the Electors Clause, condition appointment of electors on presidential candidates meeting federal constitutional qualifications. See Pls' Br in Opp to Trump's Mot for Summ Disposition, pp 1–3 (citing authorities). Instead, the Court of Claims relied almost entirely on a case filed by a pro se plaintiff in which the court noted that it could not find applicable authority. See Opinion & Order, pp 11–13 (Ex 1, pp 12–14); Castro v NH Secretary of State, ___ F Supp 3d ___ (D NH, 2023) (Docket No. 23-cv-416-JL), aff'd on other grounds Castro v Scanlan, ___ F4th ___ (CA 1, 2023) (Docket No. 23-1902) (affirming on the basis of federal standing rules and explicitly declining to affirm the district court's political question doctrine ruling).[23] Lacking such relevant authority, the Castro Court instead relied on superseded and irrelevant cases and applied a flawed and discredited legal analysis to reach a legally erroneous conclusion, all of which the Court of Claims below quoted verbatim and adopted in toto with no independent analysis:

- Robinson v Bowen, 567 F Supp 2d 1144 (ND Cal 2008), was superseded by Lindsay, 750 F3d 1061.
- Grinols v Electoral College, order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California, issued May 23, 2013 (Docket No. 12-CV-02997-MCE-DAD), a post-election case seeking to annul the results of the electoral vote, was superseded by Lindsay, 750 F3d 1061, then affirmed solely on mootness. See Grinols v Electoral College, 622 F Appx 624 (CA 9, 2015).
- Kerchner v Obama, 669 F Supp 2d 477 (D NJ, 2009), a post-election case demanding President Obama prove his qualifications for the office he already held, was affirmed solely for lack of Article III standing. See Kerchner v Obama, 612 F3d 204, 209 n 3 (CA 3, 2010).

[23] The First Circuit affirmed Castro solely on the basis of standing. It said, "[w]e confine our analysis, however, to the issue of standing," noting the "limited nature of the arguments that [Castro] ma[de] about the more generally consequential political question issue" and that "like the Supreme Court, '[o]ur court has been similarly sparing in its reliance on the political question doctrine.'" Castro, ___ F4th at ___; slip op at 13 (citation omitted).

- Taitz v Democrat Party of Miss, opinion and order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, issued March 31, 2015 (Docket No. 12-CV-280-HTW-LRA), was a post-election case seeking to remove President Obama from office.

The Castro Court concluded its analysis: "Critically, Castro does not present case law that contradicts the authority discussed above—nor has the court found any." Opinion & Order, p 13, quoting Castro, ___ F Supp 3d at ___; slip op at 7–9 (Ex 1, p 14). But Lindsay, Hassan, and Elliott are precisely that authority; in particular, Lindsay supersedes Robinson and Grinols; Hassan was written by a current Supreme Court Justice; and Elliott, unlike the cases Castro cited, was a state court ballot access challenge like this. See also Ankeny v Governor of Ind, 916 NE2d 678 (Ind App, 2009) (adjudicating presidential candidate's qualifications); Purpura v Obama, unpublished per curiam opinion of the Superior Court of New Jersey, issued May 31, 2012 (Docket No. A-4478-11T3) (similar); Muller, "Natural Born" Disputes in the 2016 Presidential Election, 85 Fordham L Rev 1097, 1103–1106 (2016) (collecting multiple similar cases).[24]

The Court of Claims also stated that Section 3 adjudication is uniquely committed to Congress. See Opinion & Order, pp 14–15 (Ex 1, pp 15–16). But the only role that Section 3 commits to Congress is removing disqualification, which it may only do by a two-thirds vote of each House. See US Const, Am XIV, § 3 ("But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."). And the Court of Claims' reference to Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which says that "Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article," proves far too much. Section 5 applies to Section 1 and Section 3 equally. Congress's power to enact additional legislation under Section 5 does not mean that all Section 1 Equal Protection Clause or Due Process Clause claims are non-justiciable political questions—no one thinks that. Likewise, Congress's power to enact additional legislation under Section 5 does not mean that all Section 1 claims are non-justiciable political questions. In any case, as is explained at length above, the Court's conclusion that only Congress can enforce Section 3 is contrary to the text, structure, and history of section 3, as well as longstanding (and recent) practice and precedent.

2. Section 3 Involves Judicially Manageable Standards.

The Court below suggested that Section 3 lacks judicially discoverable or manageable standards because courts cannot ascertain "[w]hat is an insurrection or a rebellion" or "[w]hat is it to engage in it or to give aid and comfort to the enemies of the Constitution." Opinion & Order, p 19 (Ex 1, p 20). But interpreting constitutional text, and applying that text to (sometimes disputed) facts, are precisely what courts do.

The meanings of the phrases "engage," "aid or comfort," and "insurrection or rebellion" are judicially discoverable, just as the meanings of "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws" are judicially discoverable. In fact, the key framer of the Fourteenth Amendment explained during congressional debates precisely how to construe these terms. Asked during debate to define "due process of law," Representative John Bingham replied: "[T]he courts have settled that long ago, and the gentleman can go and read their decisions." Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess 1089 (1866).

The same logic applies to the phrases in Section 3 that the trial court claimed were incapable of judicial interpretation. For example, the terms "insurrection" and "rebellion" were interpreted and defined repeatedly by courts and law dictionaries before and after the Civil War; the court may "go and read their decisions." See supra Part I.C.1.a. In fact, some of the hypothetical questions the trial court raised as supposedly unanswerable—e.g., "[d]oes it require a war of 1,458 days with 620,000 killed and battles throughout the land?," Opinion & Order, p 19 (Ex 1, p 20)—were explicitly asked and answered with reference to past (far smaller) insurrections, such as the Whiskey, Shays', and Fries Insurrections. See Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess (1866) p 2534 (Rep. Eckley) (explicitly citing the "small in comparison" Whiskey Insurrection as precedent); The Reconstruction Acts, 12 US Att'y Gen Op, p 160 (opining that, in similarly-worded statute, "[t]he language here comprehends not only the late rebellion, but every past rebellion or insurrection . . . in the United States"). One state court has already applied these judicial precedents to construe "insurrection" under Section 3. See White, pp 17–19 (finding that January 2021 insurrection met the standard).

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Likewise, the judicial interpretation of "engage" under Section 3 has been settled for 150 years. All four courts to construe "engage" under Section 3—two in the 1860s, two last year—have relied on the same Worthy-Powell standard. See supra Part I.C.2.a.

The fact that these terms from the constitutional text have been judicially interpreted and applied during Reconstruction and today refutes the trial court's conclusion that they are incapable of judicial interpretation or application.

3. Prudential Factors Do Not Divest The Court Of Jurisdiction.

None of Baker's final three factors apply here.

First, there is no "impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government." Baker, 369 US at 217. The branch of government due respect here is the Michigan Legislature, which has plenary power to appoint presidential electors, and has chosen to vest the Michigan courts with jurisdiction to hear challenges to candidate eligibility. The process of determining the president proceeds in steps, and at different stages, a different branch of government leads. In the first stage—where we are now—the states have plenary authority under Article II to appoint electors. See US Const, art II. After the electors have cast their votes, Congress will then take the lead in counting the votes. See US Const, Am XII. Michigan's use of a judicial process to help ensure that it appoints electors only for presidential candidates who are constitutionally eligible does not disrespect Congress.

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/30/2023 11:00:00 AM

Nor would a court exercising its authority to enforce Section 3's disability and limit the ballot to constitutionally qualified candidates "strip Congress of its ability to by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such a disability," as the Court below insisted. See Opinion & Order, p 20 (Ex 1, p 21). Congress could have exercised its authority to remove the disability any time since January 6, 2021; it has not. To date, Congress has taken no such action and Trump has not even requested it. Cmpl, ¶ 277 (Ex 2, p 86). And no action by this Court or any other will "strip" Congress of that authority: Congress, if it so chose, could remove the disability tomorrow, or immediately after any court rules Trump ineligible to appear on the ballot, thereby enabling Trump to appear on the ballot notwithstanding his engagement in insurrection. Further, the remote and speculative possibility that Congress might at some future date grant Trump amnesty by a two-thirds vote of each chamber does not divest Michigan of its power to condition the appointment of electors. That theoretical possibility is purely speculative, and Michigan courts do not take action based on such speculation. See, e g, Pontiac Fire Fighters Union Local 376 v Pontiac, 482 Mich 1, 9 n 15; 753 NW2d 595 (2008) (no injunctive relief where injury is speculative or conjectural); Wayne Co Employees Retirement Sys v Charter Co of Wayne, 301 Mich App 1, 70 n 38; 836 NW2d 279 (2013) ("[T]his position is so speculative and tenuous that we refuse to apply it[.]"), vacated in part on other grounds, 497 Mich 36; 859 NW2d 678 (2014). Compare, e g, Michigan's constitutional prohibition on officeholding for former officials who have been convicted of certain felonies. See Const 1963, art XI, § 8. The governor could, in theory, pardon a convicted felon. See Const 1963, art V, § 14. But the mere theoretical possibility that a governor might do this does not mean that convicted felons may appear on ballots and run for office notwithstanding the prohibition. Likewise, the fanciful speculation that two-thirds of both houses might grant Trump amnesty does not prevent Michigan from exercising its plenary power to appoint electors in the manner directed by its legislature, which includes this challenge procedure.

Second, there is no "unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made," Baker, 369 US at 217, nor did the Court below explain how there could be at this stage. After electors have been appointed, such a need might arise. But this case arises nearly a year before the date set for the appointment of electors. No political decision has been made; nor is one expected any time soon.

Third, there is no "potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question." Id. As a preliminary matter, if Michigan or any other state rules that Trump is disqualified under Section 3, he may appeal that decision to the United States Supreme Court, which can render a final decision. And crucially, "various departments" does not mean "various state courts." State courts regularly rule on questions that could also be decided by courts in other states; no one would claim, for example, that Michigan courts cannot decide a First or Second Amendment question merely because California or Texas courts might rule differently. Rather, state courts interpret and apply the United States Constitution to their best ability, subject to appeal to the United States Supreme Court. The trial court's suggestion that the United States Supreme Court is incapable of resolving a fast-track election dispute, see Opinion & Order, p 20

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(Ex 1, p 21), is belied by the Court's history of rapid decisions on contested constitutional election issues. See, e g, Bush v Gore, 531 US 98; 121 S Ct 525; 148 L Ed 2d 388 (2000) (argued December 11, 2000, and decided the next day).

* * *

This case involves the application of the Fourteenth Amendment to a specific set of facts. It involves weighty issues of nationwide interest, but so do many other cases considered by Michigan courts. Its resolution may have political consequences, but so do many other cases considered by Michigan courts. And as the United States Supreme Court explained, the political question doctrine "is one of 'political questions,' not one of 'political cases.'" Baker, 369 US at 217. Article II of the United States Constitution grants Michigan the power to appoint its electors in the manner directed by the legislature; the legislature has empowered its courts to hear this challenge; nothing in the Constitution says otherwise. The case does not fall under the political question doctrine and the courts must decide it.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF SOUGHT

For the reasons stated, Plaintiffs-Appellants ask that the Court:

1. Reverse the Court of Claims; and

2. Remand to the Court of Claims to conduct an evidentiary hearing on Trump's eligibility under the Disqualification Clause to be placed on the Michigan presidential primary ballot.

STATEMENT OF FACTS/PROCEDURAL POSTURE OF CASE

The facts in this case are undisputed!

On August 28, 2023, Plaintiff-Appellant Robert Davis ("Plaintiff" or "Plaintiff Davis") sent, via email, nonparty Secretary of State a written request for declaratory ruling declaring former President Donald Trump ("Former President" or "Trump") ineligible to have his name printed on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot as a candidate for President for the Republican Party because Trump is disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. (See Plaintiff's August 28, 2023 Request for Declaratory Ruling attached).

On September 12, 2023, nonparty Secretary of State, through the State Director of Elections, Jonathan Brater, issued Plaintiff a written response DENYING Plaintiff's request for a declaratory ruling declaring Trump ineligible under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached). The Secretary of State DENIED Plaintiff's meritorious request for a declaratory ruling because "[u]nder the Election Law, the Legislature did not expressly authorize the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations as to whether a candidate for president is 'disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.'" (See Secretary of State's September 12, 2023 Response Denying Plaintiff's Request attached).

An agency shall prescribe by rule the form for such a request and procedure for its submission, consideration and disposition. A declaratory ruling is binding on the agency and the person requesting it unless it is altered or set aside by any court. An agency may not retroactively change a declaratory ruling, but nothing in this subsection prevents an agency from prospectively changing a declaratory ruling. A declaratory ruling is subject to judicial review in the same manner as an agency final decision or order in a contested case. (emphasis supplied).

Plaintiff is certainly an "interested person" because as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, Plaintiff desires and intends to vote by absentee ballot in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election whether it's held in February 2024 or March 2024. Additionally, Plaintiff is an "interested person" because Plaintiff will not only be voting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election, but Plaintiff will be voting for and supporting a Republican presidential candidate, that is NOT Trump, in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election. Plaintiff believes that if an otherwise ineligible candidate, like Trump, is allowed to have their name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot, the presidential candidate Plaintiff is planning on voting for in the 2024 Republican Presidential Primary Election will lose votes, and Plaintiff will suffer imminent irreparable harm as a result.

Although Plaintiff is not a registered Republican, MCL 168.615c of Michigan Election Law grants Plaintiff the statutory legal right to vote in the Republican Presidential Primary Election provided that Plaintiff "shall indicate in writing, on a form prescribed by the secretary of state, which political party ballot he…wishes to vote when appearing at a presidential election." Michigan's Presidential Primary Election is an "open" primary. See MCL 168.615c.

Since Trump is undeniably the current leading candidate to capture the Republican nomination for President, if Trump is allowed to have his name appear on the 2024 Presidential Primary Election ballot despite his purported ineligibility under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, Trump will undeniably take votes away from Plaintiff's Republican presidential candidate of choice. This would arguably constitute irreparable harm that Plaintiff will suffer because of the loss of votes for Plaintiff's preferred candidate of choice for the Republican presidential nomination, which Plaintiff intends on voting for and supporting in the 2024 Presidential Primary Election.

On September 27, 2023, Plaintiff filed a single-count complaint in the Third Circuit (Wayne) Court seeking declaratory relief against the Defendant-Appellee Wayne County Election Commission. Contemporaneously, Plaintiff also filed an emergency motion for declaratory judgment. (See Register of Actions). The trial court initially set a hearing date of October 30, 2023 for Plaintiff's emergency motion for declaratory judgment. (See Register of Actions). Prior to Plaintiff filing this lawsuit, representatives of the Defendant-Appellee Wayne County Election Commission advised Plaintiff that they lacked the statutory authority to determine whether any of the presidential candidates that were to be "certified" by the Secretary of State were in fact "properly certified" by the Secretary of State.

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/16/2023 12:50:59 PM

(See Complaint). Plaintiff was further advised by representatives of the Defendant-Appellee Wayne County Election Commission that they would NOT be making any decisions that conflict with the list of names provided them by the Secretary of State. (See Complaint).

However, on the eve of the October 30th hearing, on October 27, 2023, Intervening Defendant-Appellee Donald Trump ("Trump") filed a motion to intervene as a defendant in this case. (See Register of Actions). During the October 30, 2023 hearing, Plaintiff and counsel for Defendant-Appellee Wayne County Election Commission agreed to Trump's intervention as a party defendant. (See Trial Court Order permitting Trump's Intervention). During the October 30, 2023 hearing, counsel for Trump advised the trial court that he would also be filing motions for stay and for summary disposition. Accordingly, the trial court rescheduled the hearing for Plaintiff's emergency motion for declaratory judgment to be heard on November 7, 2023 so that Trump's motions for stay and for summary disposition could be argued simultaneously.

On November 7, 2023, the trial court heard arguments with respect to Plaintiff's emergency motion for declaratory judgment and Trump's motions for stay and summary disposition. On November 13, 2023, the trial court issued its opinion and order denying Plaintiff's emergency motion for declaratory judgment and granting Trump's motion for summary disposition and denying his motion for stay.

This emergency appeal then ensued!

ARGUMENT

Pursuant To MCL 168.559 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law, The Defendant Wayne County Election Commission Has The Statutory Legal Duty To Authorize The Printing of Official Ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election For The County of Wayne.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"This Court reviews the grant or denial of summary disposition de novo to determine if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Maiden v Rozwood, 461 Mich 109, 118; 597 NW2d 817 (1999).

Similarly, "[q]uestions of law relative to declaratory judgment actions are reviewed de novo, but the trial court's decision to grant or deny declaratory relief is reviewed for an abuse of discretion." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App 649, 662; 854 NW2d 489 (2014), quoting Pioneer State Mut Ins Co v Dells, 301 Mich App 368, 376; 836 NW2d 257 (2013) (quotation marks omitted). "A trial court necessarily abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law." Ronnisch Constr. Group, Inc. v. Lofts on the Nine, LLC, 499 Mich. 544, 552, 886 N.W.2d 113 (2016); see also In re Ingham Co Treasurer for Foreclosure, 331 Mich App 74, 78; 951 NW2d 85 (2020) ("A court by definition abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law.")

Lastly, this case also presents a question of statutory interpretation of MCL 168.559 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law. Questions of statutory interpretation are also reviewed de novo. In re MCI Telecommunications, 460 Mich. 396, 413, 596 N.W.2d 164 (1999).

B. LAW AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

On page 7 of the trial court's November 13, 2023 opinion and order, the trial court erroneously concluded:

> Notably, MCL 168.689 does not specifically address the preparation and printing of primary election ballots, which are addressed in Michigan Election Law Chapter XXlV. Regardless, to the extent Plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment imposing legal duties on the Election Commission under MCL 168.689 beyond the scope of the plain language of that statute, he has failed to state a claim for which relief may be granted.

(See p 7 of Trial Court's November 13, 2023 opinion and order attached).

Contrary to the trial court's erroneous holding, under the plain language of MCL 168.559 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the "exclusive" statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary election for the County of Wayne.

The printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary election is governed by MCL 168.613a, MCL 168.559 and MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law. The current version of MCL 168.613a[1] of Michigan Election Law, which is in effect, provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under this act on the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year.

[1] Public Act 2 of 2023 was passed by the Michigan Legislature on February 1, 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a(1) by changing the date of the presidential primary election from March 12, 2024 to February 27, 2024. However, the Michigan Legislature did NOT give Public Act 2 of 2023 immediate effect under Mich.Const.1963, art. 4, §27. As such, Public Act 2 of 2023 will NOT take effect "until the expiration of 90 days from the end of the session at which it was passed," which will be February 13, 2024. Id. This effective date is determined based upon the Michigan Legislature adjourning sine die on November 14, 2023 at 12 p.m.

> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of president in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections. [emphasis supplied.]

MCL 168.559 of Michigan Election Law provides:

> It shall* be the *duty of the board of election commissioners of each county in this state to prepare and furnish the necessary official primary election ballots, except for city offices, which may be required for use by the electors of any political party at the August primary. [emphasis supplied.]

MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election law further provides in relevant part:

> The board of election commissioners of each county shall prepare the official ballots for use at any state, district or county election held therein, and shall have printed a sufficient number of ballots containing the names of all candidates *properly certified to said board of election commissioners…. [emphasis supplied.]

MCL 168.2(g) of Michigan Election Law defines the term "election" to mean: "an election or primary election at which the electors of this state or of a subdivision of this state choose or nominate by ballot an individual for public office or decide a ballot question lawfully submitted to them." (emphasis supplied).

MCL 168.7 of Michigan Election Law defines the terms "primary" or "primary election" to mean: "a primary election held for the purpose of deciding by ballot who shall be the nominee for the offices named I this act, or for the election by ballot of delegates to political conventions." (emphasis supplied).

It is well-settled that "[w]hen a statute specifically defines a given term, that definition alone controls." Haynes v Neshewat, 477 Mich. 29, 35; 729 NW2d 488

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/16/2023 12:50:59 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(2007). Therefore, the statutory definitions provided in MCL 168.2(g) and MCL 168.7 of Michigan Election Law for the terms of "election", "primary" or "primary election" control.

The plain language of MCL 168.613a, 168.559 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law is abundantly clear that the 2024 Presidential primary election is a "statewide" election in which the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for said presidential primary election for the County of Wayne. "[C]ourts must give effect to every word, phrase, and clause in a statute and avoid an interpretation that would render any part of the statute surplusage or nugatory." Johnson v. Recca, 492 Mich. 169, 177, 821 N.W.2d 520 (2012) (quotation marks and citation omitted). "Statutes that address the same subject matter or share a common purpose are in pari materia and must be read collectively as one law, even when there is no reference to one another." Menard Inc. v. Dep't of Treasury, 302 Mich.App. 467, 472, 838 N.W.2d 736 (2013).

In fact, contrary to the trial court's erroneous holding, it is well settled in Michigan jurisprudence that the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the "exclusive" authority to authorize the printing of the ballots for an election within their jurisdiction. "It is well established that it is the province of the election commission.... to approve and furnish the ballots to be used in an election." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm'n, 305 Mich.App. 649, ____; 854 NW2d 489, 501 (2014) (emphasis supplied). And, as this Court further noted and recognized, "MCL 168.560 prohibits the counting of ballots not furnished by the election commission[.]" Id. (emphasis supplied)[2].

Therefore, reading the various provisions of Michigan Election Law together, it is clear that under MCL 168.559 and 168.689, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary election for the County of Wayne, which the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission does NOT dispute!

Accordingly, the portion of the trial court's November 13, 2023 opinion and order, which erroneously held that MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law "does not specifically address the preparation and printing of primary election ballots," must be VACATED and REVERSED.

2. Trump's Motion for Summary Disposition Under MCR 2.116(C)(8) Should Have Been DENIED By The Trial Court Because Plaintiff's Complaint Thoroughly Pled and Alleged A Claim For Declaratory Relief Under MCR 2.605.

"A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. All well-pleaded factual allegations are accepted as true and construed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant. A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) may be granted only where the claims alleged are so clearly unenforceable as a matter of law that no factual development could possibly justify recovery." Dell v. Citizens Ins. Co. of America, 312 Mich. App. 734, 739, 880 N.W.2d 280 (2015) (quotation marks and citations omitted). However, a party may not support a motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) with documentary evidence such as affidavits or depositions. Patterson v. Kleiman, 447 Mich. 429, 432, 526 N.W.2d 879 (1994).

[2] MCL 168.560 provides: "Ballots other than those furnished by the board of election commissioners, according to the provisions of this act, shall not be used, cast, or counted in any election precinct at any election. The size of all official ballots shall be as the board of election commissioners prescribes."

Here, Plaintiff's one-count complaint for declaratory relief thoroughly pled and alleged that an "actual controversy" existed between Plaintiff and Defendant Wayne County Election Commission because of the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission's refusal to "independently" determine whether the presidential candidates were "properly certified" by the Secretary of State as required under MCL 168.689. See Southeastern Michigan Fair Budget Coalition v Killeen, 153 Mich.App. 370; 395 NW2d 325 (1986). Additionally, Plaintiff's one-count complaint properly pled and alleged that under the plain language of MCL 168.689, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission had the statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary election for the County of Wayne. (See Complaint).

"[W]henever a litigant meets the requirements of MCR 2.605, it is sufficient to establish standing to seek a declaratory judgment." Lansing Sch. Ed. Ass'n v. Lansing Bd. of Ed., 487 Mich. 349, 372; 792 N.W.2d 686 (2010) (emphasis supplied). MCR 2.605(A)(1) provides: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted."

"An actual controversy exists when declaratory relief is needed to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights." Lansing Sch Ed Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Ed (On Remand), 293 Mich App 506, 515; 810 NW2d 95 (2011). "[D]eclaratory relief is designed to give litigants access to courts to preliminarily determine their rights." Detroit v Michigan, 262 Mich App 542, 550-551; 686 NW2d 514 (2004) (emphasis added). "Further, it is well established that declaratory actions may be brought to determine issues of statutory construction." Farish v Dept. of Talen and Economic Development, 336 Mich.App. 433, ___; 971 NW2d 1, 12 (2021) (emphasis supplied).

The "actual controversy" requirement is met when "a plaintiff pleads and proves facts demonstrating an adverse interest necessitating a judgment to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights." Mich Assoc of Home Builders v City of Troy, 504 Mich 204, 225; 934 NW2d 713 (2019). Although the trial court may not resolve hypothetical issues under the guise of a declaratory judgment, declaratory relief may be granted before actual injury or loss occurs. UAW, 295 Mich App at 495.

"The purpose of a declaratory judgment is to enable the parties to obtain adjudication of rights before an actual injury occurs, to settle a matter before it ripens into a violation of the law or a breach of contract, or to avoid multiplicity of actions by affording a remedy for declaring in expedient action the rights and obligations of all litigants." Rose v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 274 Mich App 291, 294; 732 NW2d 160 (2006). "The purpose of a declaratory judgment is to definitively declare the parties' rights and duties, to guide their future conduct and relations, and to preserve their legal rights." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App 649, 662; 854 NW2d 489 (2014).

Here, Plaintiff properly pled and alleged that the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission decided and concluded that it lacked the statutory legal authority under MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law to "independently" determine whether presidential candidates were "properly certified" by the Secretary of State to appear on the 2024 presidential primary election ballot. (See Complaint). Notably, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission did NOT dispute or rebut any of the factual allegations pled in Plaintiff's complaint in writing or at oral argument. (See Defendant Wayne County Election Commission's Response to Plaintif's Emergency Motion).

As noted above, the trial court clearly erred by concluding that MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election "does not specifically address the preparation and printing of primary election ballots, which are addressed in Michigan Election Law Chapter XXIV" and "to the extent Plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment imposing legal duties on the Election Commission under MCL 168.689 beyond the scope of the plain language of that statute, he has failed to state a claim for which relief may be granted." (See p 7 of Trial Court's November 13, 2023 opinion and order).

The plain language of MCL 168.559 and 168.689 clearly empowers the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission with the statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary election for the County of Wayne. "It is well established that it is the province of the election commission.... to approve and furnish the ballots to be used in an election." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm'n, 305 Mich.App. 649, ____; 854 NW2d 489, 501 (2014) (emphasis supplied). And, as this Court further noted and recognized, "MCL 168.560 prohibits the counting of ballots not furnished by the election commission[.]" Id. (emphasis supplied).

Therefore, because MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law clearly grants the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission with "exclusive" authority to authorize the printing of the ballots, as Plaintiff properly pled and alleged in his complaint, summary disposition under MCL 2.116(C)(8) was improper because the claims alleged in Plaintiff's complaint were NOT "so clearly unenforceable as a matter of law that no factual development could possibly justify recovery," Dell v. Citizens Ins. Co. of America, 312 Mich. App. 734, 739, 880 N.W.2d 280 (2015), but rather, Plaintiff's complaint sufficiently pled and alleged a claim for declaratory relief under MCR 2.605. Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App at 662.

B. LAW AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

The proper adjudication of the instant appeal requires this Court to properly interpret the statutory language of MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law.

Pursuant to MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission: "shall prepare the official ballots for use at any state, district or county election held therein, and shall have printed a sufficient number of ballots containing the names of all candidates properly certified to said board of election commissioners...." MCL 168.689.

Additionally, pursuant to MCL 168.567, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission "shall correct such errors as may be found in said ballots, and a copy of such corrected ballots shall be sent to the secretary of state by the county clerk." (emphasis supplied).

In Sau-Tuk Indus, Inc v Allegan County, 316 Mich App 122, 136; 892 NW2d 33 (2016), this Court explained the rules for statutory interpretation:

> When interpreting a statute, our primary goal is to give effect to the intent of the Legislature. If the language of a statute is unambiguous, we presume the Legislature intended the meaning expressed in the statute. A statutory provision is ambiguous only if it conflicts irreconcilably with another provision or it is equally susceptible to more than one meaning. . . . When construing a statute, we must assign every word or phrase its plain and ordinary meaning unless the Legislature has provided specific definitions or has used technical terms that have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law.

Courts "may not pick and choose what parts of a statute to enforce" but "must give effect to every word of a statute if at all possible so as not to render any part of the statute surplusage or nugatory." Id. at 143 (citations omitted). Courts "may not speculate regarding legislative intent beyond the words expressed in the statute." Id. at 145. "This Court reads the provisions of statutes reasonably and in context, and reads subsections of cohesive statutory provisions together." Detroit Pub Schs v Conn, 308 Mich App 234, 247-248; 863 NW2d 373 (2014) (citation omitted). When courts interpret statutes, they must first look to the specific statutory language to determine the intent of the Legislature, and if the language is clear and unambiguous, the plain meaning of the statute reflects the legislative intent and judicial construction is not permitted. Univ'l Underwriters Ins Group v Auto Club Ins Ass'n, 256 Mich App 541, 544; 666 NW2d 294 (2003).

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/16/2023 12:50:59 PM

Applying these well-established principles of statutory construction, this Court, in Southeastern Michigan Fair Budget Coalition v Killeen, 153 Mich.App. 370; 395 NW2d 325 (1986) ("SMFBC"), interpreted the language of MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law and provided much-need clarity with respect to the statutory legal duty of the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission under MCL 168.689 to determine whether candidates have been "properly certified" by the certifying official prior to authorizing the printing of the ballots for a particular election.

This Court, in SMFBC, 153 Mich.App. at 377-378, correctly held:

> "While the language of the statute is not entirely clear, we see no reason for the Legislature to distinguish between candidates who are to be "properly certified" and constitutional amendments or other questions which have to be so certified. We therefore construe the statute to require candidates, constitutional amendments, and questions for use at any state, > district or county election to be "properly" certified before they are entitled to placement on the ballot. Since this statute is directed to the board of election commissioners, the use of the word "properly" evidences an intent of the Legislature that the board of county election commissioners not only determine that a proposed question is certified, but that it is indeed "properly" certified. Accordingly, where it is apparent to the board of county election commissioners that the question is not entitled to placement on the ballot, it may refuse to place it thereon and leave the certifying body to its legal recourse. We interpret "properly" in this context to mean that the election commissioners are required to determine that, on its face, the question is entitled to placement on the ballot." [emphasis supplied].

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/16/2023 12:50:59 PM

Contrary to the trial court's erroneous ruling, as a trial court, it was bound to follow the holding in SMFBC, supra, because it is a published opinion of this Court that has NOT been vacated or reversed by another panel of this Court or our Supreme Court. It is well-settled in Michigan jurisprudence that published opinions of the Court of Appeals, regardless of their publication date, always have been binding on the trial courts. See Andrusz v Andrusz, 320 Mich.App. 445, 457 fn 2; 904 NW2d 636 (2017) (holding that "[p]ublished opinions of the Court of Appeals have always been binding on trial courts[.]") As our Supreme Court has explained, "A decision by any panel of the Court of Appeal is, therefore, controlling statewide until contradicted by another panel of the Court of Appeals or reversed or overruled by this Court." Tebo v Havlik, 418 Mich. 350, 362; 343 NW2d 181 (1984) (emphasis supplied).

In People v Kroll, 179 Mich.App. 423, 426; 446 NW2d 317 (1989), this Court explained a published opinion of the Court of Appeals has precedential effect under the rule of stare decisis. MCR 7.215(C)(2). As such, a trial court is constrained to follow a decision by any panel of this Court unless it is contradicted by another panel or overruled by our Supreme Court. Kroll, 179 Mich.App at 426, citing In the Matter of Hague, 412 Mich. 532, 552; 315 NW2d 524 (1982); Moorehouse v Ambassador Ins. Co., 147 Mich.App. 412, 417; 383 NW2d 219 (1985).

To date, the holding in SMFBC, supra, has NOT been contradicted, vacated, or overruled by another panel of this Court or overruled by our Supreme Court. Therefore, the trial court remained bound to follow the holding in SMFBC, supra. See Tebo v Havlik, 418 Mich. 350, 362; 343 NW2d 181 (1984). Although the trial court was bound by the holding in SMFBC, supra, Plaintiff is mindful that under MCR 7.215(J)(1), this Court is not bound by the holding in SMFBC, supra, because it was decided and issued before November 1, 1990.

However, although this Court is "not strictly required to follow uncontradicted opinions from this Court decided before November 1, 1990," this Court has nonetheless determined that published opinions decided before November 1, 1990 "are nevertheless considered to be precedent and entitled to significantly greater deference than are unpublished cases." Woodring v Phoenix Ins Co., 325 Mich.App. 108, 114-115; 923 NW2d 607 (2018) (emphasis supplied); see also David Krieger v Dept. Environmental Great Lakes and Energy and Depart. Of Nat. Resources, ___Mich.App.___, ____ fn 16 (2023) (Docket No.359895); slip op at p 32, fn 16.

It's also important to remind this Honorable Court that Government officers "are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it." United States v Lee, 106 U.S. (16 Otto) 196, 220 (1882) (emphasis supplied). "'The general rule, with regard to municipal officers, is that they have only such powers as are expressly granted by statute or by sovereign authority or those which are necessarily to be implied from those granted.'" Presnell v. Wayne [Co.] Bd. of Co. Rd. Comm'rs, 105 Mich.App. 362, 368, 306 N.W.2d 516 (1981), quoting 56 Am. Jur. 2d, Municipal Corporations, Counties, and Other Political Subdivisions, § 276, p. 327. Or as our Supreme Court has stated, "[t]he extent of the authority of the people's public agents is measured by the statute from which they derive their authority, not by their own acts and assumption of authority." Sittler v. Michigan College of Mining & Tech. Bd. of Control, 333 Mich. 681, 687, 53 N.W.2d 681 (1952) (citations and punctuation omitted) (emphasis supplied). As such, "[p]ublic officers have and can exercise only such powers as are conferred on them by law...." Id. (citations and punctuation omitted) (emphasis supplied).

Guided by these well-settled legal principles, per this Court's holding in SMFBC, supra, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has a statutory legal duty under MCL 168.689 to make an "independent" determination as to whether the presidential candidates were "properly certified" by the Secretary of State before they authorize the printing of the ballots for the 2024 presidential primary election for the County of Wayne. SMFBC, 153 Mich.App. at 377-378.

Lastly, it's important to remind the Court that Plaintiff's complaint did NOT seek the issuance of a writ of mandamus nor did Plaintiff's complaint seek the trial court to make a judicial determination with respect to whether Trump engaged in an insurrection in violation of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment and moreover, Plaintiff's complaint did NOT seek a judicial determination with respect to whether Trump was disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Rather, Plaintiff's one-count complaint ONLY sought declaratory relief against Defendant Wayne County Election Commission under MCR 2.605 and the proper interpretation of MCL 168.567 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law as it relates to the statutory legal duties of the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission with respect to the current controversy.

As this Court is keenly aware, "[a] party is bound by [his or her] pleadings and it is not permissible to litigate issues or claims that were not raised in the complaint..." Lenawee Co. v Wagley, 301 Mich.App. 134, 160; 836 NW3d 193 (2013) (quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis supplied). Therefore, Trump's arguments with respect to the application of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution are irrelevant to this proceeding and shall be disregard because Plaintiff's one-count complaint only sought declaratory relief against the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission and the proper interpretation of MCL 168.567 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law as it relates to the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission's statutory legal duties with respect to the present controversy.

1. Duty To Correct Errors Under MCL 168.567

Similarly, under MCL 168.567 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to correct any errors that may be found on the 2024 Presidential primary election ballots for the County of Wayne.

MCL 168.567 of Michigan Election Law provides:

> The boards of election commissioners shall correct such errors as may be found in said ballots, and a copy of such corrected ballots shall be sent to the secretary of state by the county clerk.

This Court, in Berry v Garrett, 316 Mich.App. 37; 890 NW2d 882 (2016), interpreted the language of MCL 168.567 and correctly held that MCL 168.567 requires the Election Commission to correct ballot errors, which includes the removal of the names of "improperly" certified candidates from the ballot. Berry, 316 Mich. App. at 44, 890 N.W.2d 882. Contrary to the trial court's holding, a "facial review" is not limited to the "four corners" of a document. Rather, it may require the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission to review "other" documents to ascertain whether a candidate was "properly" certified by the certifying officer. See Reed-Pratt v Detroit City Clerk, 339 Mich.App. 510; 984 NW2d 794 (2021).

By way of example, in Reed-Pratt, supra, the Detroit City Clerk and its City Election Commission had to refer to campaign finance documents maintained by the Wayne County Clerk to ascertain whether the campaign finance statement candidate Janee Ayers attested to in her affidavit of identity (AOI) was true or false. Id. This "review" went beyond the "face" and "four corners" of the AOI in order for the Detroit Election Commission to determine whether the AOI contained a "false" statement in violation of MCL 168.558(4) of Michigan Election Law. Id.

Therefore, in correcting errors that may be contained on the 2024 Presidential primary ballot, under MCL 168.567, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission in conducting their review under MCL 168.689 to determine whether said presidential candidates were "properly" certified by the Secretary of State, may be required to refer to additional documents and documentary evidence not contained in the certification list provided by the Secretary of State.

Whether the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission's "review" is limited to a "facial" review as the trial court seems to suggest or whether the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission is permitted to refer to additional documents per this Court's holding in Reed-Pratt, it is abundantly clear that under MCL 168.567, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory authority to correct any errors on the presidential primary election ballot, which may include removing a presidential candidate's name that they determine was NOT "properly" certified by the Secretary of State.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff-Appellant Robert Davis prays that this Honorable Court VACATE and REVERSE the trial court's November 13, 2023 opinion and order; ENTER JUDGMENT declaring that pursuant to MCL 168.559 and 168.689 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant

Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential primary and general elections and all future presidential primary and general elections for the County of Wayne; ENTER JUDGMENT declaring that pursuant to MCL 168.689 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to determine whether presidential candidates were "properly" certified by the Secretary of State to appear on the 2024 Presidential primary and/or general election ballots, and/or any future Presidential primary and/or general election ballots; ENTER JUDGMENT declaring that pursuant to MCL 168.567 of Michigan Election Law, the Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has the statutory legal duty to correct any errors that may be contained on any of the 2024 Presidential primary and/or general election ballots, and/or any future Presidential primary and/or general election ballots, which includes the duty to remove the name of a presidential candidate that is determined to have been "improperly" certified by the Secretary of State under MCL 168.689; and Plaintiff-Appellant further prays that this Honorable Court GRANT any other relief the Court deems necessary and appropriate pursuant to MCR 7.216(A)(7).

STATEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION

Pursuant to MCR 7.205(A)(1)(a), Plaintiff-Appellant Robert Davis has timely filed this emergency application for leave to appeal the portion of the trial court's November 14, 2023 opinion and order dismissing as moot Counts I and II of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints. (See November 14, 2023 opinion and order attached). The trial court's November 14, 2023 opinion and order is not a "final order" as defined under MCR 7.202(6)(a) and thus, Plaintiff-Appellant seeks this Court to exercise its jurisdiction under MCR 7.205(A)(1)(a) with the timely filing of this emergency application for leave to appeal.

STATEMENT OF FACTS/PROCEDURAL POSTURE OF CASE

The facts in this case are undisputed!

On February 1, 2023, Governor Gretchen Whitmer signed into law Public Act 2 of 2023, which amends MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, changing the date of the Presidential Primary Election from the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year to the fourth Tuesday in February beginning in 2024.[1]

However, the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, which remains in effect, currently provides:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under this act on the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of president in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections. (emphasis supplied).

Importantly, however, MCL 168.613a(1), as amended by Public Act 2 of 2023, would read as follows:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth

> Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024. (emphasis supplied).

However, Public Act 2 of 2023 was NOT given immediate effect. Rather, the effective date of Public Act 2 of 2023 is "sine die", which means Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective "until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session." (See Public Act 2 of 2023 attached). As of the date of the filing of this lawsuit in the trial court, it was unknown when the final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session of the Michigan Legislature will be. According to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan House of Representatives' 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 21, 2023.[2] Similarly, according to the Michigan Legislature's website, the Michigan Senate's 2023 Regular Session is NOT scheduled to adjourn until December 14th or 21st, 2023.[3]

Despite the fact that Public Act 2 of 2023 had NOT gone into effect, the Defendant Secretary of State, nonetheless, in June 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State published an election manual entitled: "Ballot Access Information for Presidential Candidates Seeking Office In 2024", which was disseminated to all local county, city and township clerks informing them that the 2024 Presidential Primary Election was going to be held on February 27, 2024 and NOT March 12, 2024.[4] (See Defendant Secretary of State's June 2023 Presidential Primary Election Manual attached).

Confused by the Defendant Secretary of State's unlawful actions and conduct, on September 11, 2023, Plaintiff sent the Defendant Secretary of State and the State Director of Elections an email respectfully requesting clarity as to when the 2024 Presidential Primary Election would be held. (See Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 Email to Defendant attached). However, neither the Defendant Secretary of State nor the State Director of Elections responded to Plaintiff's September 11, 2023 email. Plaintiff then filed this action in the Court of Claims.

On September 15, 2023, Plaintiff filed a six-count verified complaint against the Defendant Jocelyn Benson, in her official capacity as the duly elected Secretary of State for the state of Michigan. Contemporaneously, Plaintiff also filed an emergency motion for declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus and order to show cause with respect to Counts I-IV of the Verified Complaint. On September 19, 2023, Plaintiff filed an emergency motion to expedite briefing and hearing so that a decision on the merit could be issued by October 3, 2023.

On October 9, 2023, the trial court issued an "Expedited Scheduling Order", which denied Plaintiff's September 19, 2023 emergency motion for an expedited hearing and decision by October 3, 2023, but GRANTED Plaintiff's request to expedite briefing of this case. The trial court's October 9, 2023 Expedited Scheduling Order also ordered the Defendant Secretary of State to "respond to the motion for a declaratory judgment, writ of mandamus, and order to show cause by 5:00 p.m. on October 16, 2023." The trial court's October 9, 2023 Expedited Scheduling further ordered that "[i]f defendant's response to the complaint includes a motion, then plaintiff shall file any response to the motion by October 23, 2023."

In accordance with the Court's October 9, 2023 Expedited Scheduling Order, on October 16, 2023, the Defendant Secretary of State filed a partial motion for summary disposition with respect to Counts I, II, V, and VI of the original complaint. On October 23, 2023, Plaintiff timely filed a response in opposition to Defendant Secretary of State's partial motion for summary disposition, and, pursuant to MCR 2.118(A)(1), Plaintiff also timely filed an Amended Verified Complaint adding additional claims for declaratory relief against the Defendant Secretary of State for purportedly violating various provisions of Michigan Election, Michigan Campaign Finance Act, and the Administrative Procedures Act. Plaintiff's Amended Verified Complaint also added additional claims for declaratory relief against new/added party defendants, Julie Dale and Richard Lynch. (See Amended Verified Complaint)

Notably, and most importantly, however, the Amended Verified Complaint did NOT alter, amend, add, or change any of the facts and/or allegations pled and alleged in the original complaint for Counts I-IV, and VI. The Amended Verified Complaint did, however, abandon Count V of the original complaint and thus, no relief can be granted with respect to Count V of the original complaint and it is deemed moot.

Therefore, the trial court properly proceeded with the "Expedited Hearing" that was rescheduled for November 9, 2023 at 8:30 a.m. on Plaintiff's Emergency Motion for Declaratory Judgment, Writ of Mandamus, and Order to Show Cause, as well as Defendant Secretary of State's Partial Motion for Summary Disposition with respect to Counts I, II, and VI of the original and amended verified complaints.[5]

On November 9, 2023, the trial court held a 5-hour hearing in three separate cases involving the eligibility of former president Donald Trump to appear on the 2024 Presidential primary election ballot.

However, while this matter was pending, the Michigan Legislature decided to adjourn the 2023 legislative session effective November 14, 2023 at Noon. Later that same day, on November 14, 2023, the trial court issued its opinion and order dismissing as moot Counts I and II of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints, denying Plaintiff's motion for declaratory relief with respect to Counts III and IV of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints, and dismissing Count VI of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints under MCR 2.116(C)(8). (See November 14, 2023 opinion and order attached).

This emergency appeal then ensued.

[5] As noted, the Amended Verified Complaint abandoned Count V pled and alleged in the original complaint.

ARGUMENT
Trial Court Erred By Dismissing Counts I and II of Plaintiff's Original and Amended Complaints As Moot Due To The Michigan Legislature Adjourning Sine Die Effective November 14, 2023 At Noon.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"The applicability of a legal doctrine, such as mootness, is a question of law which this Court reviews de novo." T.M. v M.Z., 501 Mich. 312, 315; 916 NW2d 473 (2018) (quotation marks, alterations, and citation omitted). Similarly, "[t]his Court reviews the grant or denial of summary disposition de novo to determine if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Maiden v Rozwood, 461 Mich 109, 118; 597 NW2d 817 (1999).

Also, "[q]uestions of law relative to declaratory judgment actions are reviewed de novo, but the trial court's decision to grant or deny declaratory relief is reviewed for an abuse of discretion." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App 649, 662; 854 NW2d 489 (2014), quoting Pioneer State Mut Ins Co v Dells, 301 Mich App 368, 376; 836 NW2d 257 (2013) (quotation marks omitted). "A trial court necessarily abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law." Ronnisch Constr. Group, Inc. v. Lofts on the Nine, LLC, 499 Mich. 544, 552, 886 N.W.2d 113 (2016); see also In re Ingham Co Treasurer for Foreclosure, 331 Mich App 74, 78; 951 NW2d 85 (2020) ("A court by definition abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law.")

When reviewing a trial court's decision whether to issue a writ of mandamus, this Court reviews de novo the trial court's determination of the existence and extent of a duty. Bay City v Bay Co Treasurer, 292 Mich App 156, 164; 807 NW2d 892 (2011). But this Court reviews a trial court's ultimate decision for an abuse of discretion. Berry v Garrett, 316 Mich App 37, 41; 890 NW2d 882 (2016). Lastly, this Court also reviews de novo questions of constitutional and statutory interpretation, which present issues of law. Frank v. Linkner, 500 Mich. 133, 140, 894 N.W.2d 574 (2017); Makowski v. Governor, 495 Mich. 465, 470, 852 N.W.2d 61 (2014).

B. LAW AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

On page 2 of the trial court's November 14, 2023 opinion and order, the trial court erroneously concluded:

> Because the 2023 session of the Michigan Legislature has ended at 12:00 p.m. on November 14, 2023, plaintiff's requests in Count I and II of his complaint are now MOOT.
> (See p 2 of the trial court's November 14, 2023 opinion and order attached).

Contrary to the trial court's holding, the Michigan Legislature adjourning effective at 12 p.m. on November 14, 2023 did NOT render Counts I and II of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints moot. It is well-settled that "[t]his Court does not decide moot issues." Garrett v Washington, 314 Mich.App. 436, 449; 886 NW2d 762 (2016). And because "Michigan courts exist to decide actual cases and controversies," "[t]he question of mootness is a threshold isse that a court must address before it reaches the substantive issues of a case." In re Tchakarova, 328 Mich.App. 172, 178; 936 NW2d 863 (2019) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

It is "'universally understood…that a moot case is one which seeks to get a judgment on a pretended controversy, when in reality there is none, …or a judgment upon some matter which, when rendered, for any reason, cannot have any practical legal effect upon a then existing controversy." Anway v Grand Rapids R. Co., 211 Mich. 592, 610; 179 NW 350 (1920) (internal quotation omitted). Mootness occurs when "'an event has occurred that renders it impossible for the court to grant relief. An issue is also moot when a judgment, if entered, cannot for any reason have a practical legal effect on the existing controversy.'" Barrow v Detroit Election Comm., 305 Mich.App. 649, 659; 854 NW2d 489 (2014).

Here, contrary to the trial court's holding, there was NO event that occurred "renders it impossible for the court to grant relief." Barrow, 305 Mich.App. at 659. The Michigan Legislature adjourning the 2023 legislative session effective November 14, 2023 at 12:00 p.m. did NOT render Counts I and II of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints MOOT because there remains an "actual controversy" as to the "correct" date for the 2024 Presidential primary election.

Declaratory Judgment Is Necessary To Declare The 2024 Presidential Primary Election Must Be Held On March 12, 2024 and NOT February 27, 2023.

"A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. All well-pleaded factual allegations are accepted as true and construed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant. A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) may be granted only where the claims alleged are so clearly unenforceable as a matter of law that no factual development could possibly justify recovery." Dell v. Citizens Ins. Co. of America, 312 Mich. App. 734, 739, 880 N.W.2d 280 (2015) (quotation marks and citations omitted). However, a party may not support a motion under MCR

2.116(C)(8) with documentary evidence such as affidavits or depositions. Patterson v. Kleiman, 447 Mich. 429, 432, 526 N.W.2d 879 (1994).

"[W]henever a litigant meets the requirements of MCR 2.605, it is sufficient to establish standing to seek a declaratory judgment." Lansing Sch. Ed. Ass'n v. Lansing Bd. of Ed., 487 Mich. 349, 372; 792 N.W.2d 686 (2010). MCR 2.605(A)(1) provides: "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted."

"An actual controversy exists when declaratory relief is needed to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights." Lansing Sch Ed Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Ed (On Remand), 293 Mich App 506, 515; 810 NW2d 95 (2011). "[D]eclaratory relief is designed to give litigants access to courts to preliminarily determine their rights." Detroit v Michigan, 262 Mich App 542, 550-551; 686 NW2d 514 (2004) (emphasis added). "Further, it is well established that declaratory actions may be brought to determine issues of statutory construction." Farish v Dept. of Talen and Economic Development, 336 Mich.App. 433, ___; 971 NW2d 1, 12 (2021) (emphasis supplied).

The "actual controversy" requirement is met when "a plaintiff pleads and proves facts demonstrating an adverse interest necessitating a judgment to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights." Mich Assoc of Home Builders v City of Troy, 504 Mich 204, 225; 934 NW2d 713 (2019). Although the trial court may not resolve hypothetical issues under the guise of a declaratory judgment, declaratory relief may be granted before actual injury or loss occurs. UAW, 295 Mich App at 495.

"The purpose of a declaratory judgment is to enable the parties to obtain adjudication of rights before an actual injury occurs, to settle a matter before it ripens into a violation of the law or a breach of contract, or to avoid multiplicity of actions by affording a remedy for declaring in expedient action the rights and obligations of all litigants." Rose v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 274 Mich App 291, 294; 732 NW2d 160 (2006). "The purpose of a declaratory judgment is to definitively declare the parties' rights and duties, to guide their future conduct and relations, and to preserve their legal rights." Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App 649, 662; 854 NW2d 489 (2014).

Here, Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints thoroughly pled and alleged that an "actual controversy" existed with respect to the "correct" date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election. Even with the adjournment of the Michigan Legislature, an actual controversy clearly exists as a result of Defendant's public statements and actions of formally informing the general electorate and local election officials that the 2024 presidential primary election would be held in February 2024 rather than in March 2024, despite the fact that Public Act 2 of 2023 will NOT go into effect until February 13, 2024.

As noted, the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law, currently provides:

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/28/2023 3:58:56 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under this act on the second Tuesday in March in each presidential election year.
> (2) A political party that received 5% or less of the total vote cast nationwide for the office of president in the last presidential election shall not participate in the presidential primary election.
> (3) Except as otherwise provided in sections 614a to 616a, 624g, 759a, 759c, and 879a, the statewide presidential primary election shall be conducted under the provisions of this act that govern the conduct of general primary elections. (emphasis supplied).

As noted, MCL 168.613a(1) was amended with the enactment of Public Act 2 of 2023, which reads as follows:

> (1) A statewide presidential primary election must be conducted under this act on February 27, 2024, and on the fourth Tuesday in February in each presidential election year after 2024. (emphasis supplied).

However, Public Act 2 of 2023 was NOT given immediate effect. Rather, the effective date of Public Act 2 of 2023 is "sine die", which means Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective "until the 91st day after final adjournment of the 2023 Regular Session." (See Public Act 2 of 2023 attached). As noted, the Michigan Legislature adjourned effective November 14, 2023 at 12:00 p.m., which means Public Act 2 of 2023 will NOT go into effect until February 13, 2024.

This is problematic for the Defendant Secretary of State because the ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election must be printed months prior to Public Act 2 of 2023 going into effect and thus, would require the Defendant Secretary of State to improperly enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023 before its effective date. Based upon current statutory deadlines to have the ballots, including overseas absentee ballots, printed timely for the 2024 Presidential primary election, local county election commissions would be required to print the ballots before the 1st week of January 2024.

However, "[i]t is axiomatic that a statute becomes operational only upon its effective date." In re Request for Advisory Opinion re Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich. 1, 12; 740 NW2d 444 (2007). (emphasis supplied). Mich.Const.1963 "art. 4, §27 prevents this act from taking effect until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey v Dep't of Mgmt & Budget, 429 Mich. 315, 340; 414 NW2d 873 (1987). (emphasis supplied).

Therefore, Defendant Secretary of State cannot enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023, which moves the date of the 2024 Presidential Primary Election to February 27, 2024, "until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey, 429 Mich. at 340. (emphasis supplied).

For example, under the current version of MCL 168.759(2) of Michigan Election Law, Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the statutory right "at any time during the 75 days before an election, but not later than 8p.m. on the day of an election," to "apply for an absent voter ballot".

Additionally, MCL 168.759a(5) of Michigan Election Law requires that "not later than 45 days before an election, a county, city, or township clerk shall electronically transmit or mail as appropriate an absent voter ballot to each absent uniformed services voter or overseas voter who applied for an absent voter ballot 45 days or more before the election." Because Public Act 2 of 2023 is currently NOT in effect or operational, none of the statutory deadlines for absentee ballots set forth under MCL 168.759(2) and 168.759a(5) can be met and/or satisfied by the Defendant Secretary of State for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date.

Moreover, MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law requires the Defendant Secretary of State, "at least 60 days and not more than 90 days preceding any regular state or district primary or election, shall send to the county clerk of each county a notice inwriting of such primary or election, specifying in such notice the federal, state, and district offices for which candidates are to be nominated or elected, as well as any constitutional amendments and questions to be submitted thereat."

The notice requirement under MCL 168.648 of Michigan Election Law also cannot be met for a February 27, 2024 Presidential Primary Election date because Public Act 2 of 2023 does NOT become effective until February 13, 2024. It would require the Defendant Secretary of State and local election officials to unlawfully enforce the provisions of Public Act 2 of 2023 prior to its effective date. However, as noted, "[i]t is axiomatic that a statute becomes operational only upon its effective date." In re Request for Advisory Opinion re Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich. 1, 12; 740 NW2d 444 (2007). (emphasis supplied). Mich.Const.1963 "art. 4, §27 prevents this act from taking effect until ninety days after the adjournment of the Legislature which passed it." Frey v Dep't of Mgmt & Budget, 429 Mich. 315, 340; 414 NW2d 873 (1987). (emphasis supplied).

"As a single executive heading a principal department, the Secretary of State shall 'perform duties prescribed by law.' Const. 1963, art. 5, § 9." Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich.App. 588, ___; 963 NW2d 653, 658 (2020). Government officers "are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it." United States v Lee, 106 U.S. (16 Otto) 196, 220 (1882) (emphasis supplied). Here, the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to only enforce those laws that are currently in effect.

The current version of MCL 168.613a(1), which will remain in effect until February 13, 2024, MUST be obeyed by the Defendant Secretary of State and the trial court's actions of sanctioning the premature enforcement of Public Act 2 of 2023 cannot be upheld. "Neither this Court nor the circuit court has authority to alter or amend the statutes enacted by the Legislature." In re AST, ___ Mich App ___, ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket No. 362349), slip op at 3; see also Charboneau v Beverly Enterprises, Inc, 244 Mich App 33, 43; 625 NW2d 75 (2000) ("We are not a Legislature and not empowered to graft onto the statute a comprehensive scheme to accommodate a situation obviously not contemplated by the language that has been enacted.").

Mandamus Compelling Defendant Secretary of State To Hold 2024 Presidential Primary On March 12, 2024.

Count II of the original and amended verified complaints sought the entry of a writ of mandamus against the Defendant Secretary of State to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce provisions of the current version of MCL

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/28/2023 3:58:56 PM

168.613a of Michigan Election Law and compel the Defendant Secretary of State to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2023.

Here, the Defendant Secretary of State has a constitutional duty to only enforce those laws that are currently in effect. Mandamus relates to the duties of public officials. Vayda v County of Lake, 321 Mich App 686, 700; 909 NW2d 874 (2017). Mandamus generally is a proper remedy to compel election-related duties. Warren City Council v Buffa, 333 Mich App 422, 435; 960 NW2d 166 (2020).

Whether a writ issues is within the discretion of the court. Moore v Genesee Co, 337 Mich App 723, 731; 976 NW2d 921 (2021). Specifically, plaintiff has the burden to show:

> (1) a clear legal right to the act sought to be compelled; (2) a clear legal duty by the defendant to perform the act; (3) that the act is ministerial, leaving nothing to the judgment or discretion of the defendant; and (4) that no other adequate remedy exists. [Twp of Casco v Sec'y of State, 472 Mich 566, 621; 701 NW2d 102 (2005) (YOUNG, J., concurring in part).]

In a mandamus action, "a 'clear, legal right' is one clearly founded in, or granted by, law; a right which is inferable as a matter of law from uncontroverted facts regardless of the difficulty of the legal question to be decided." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget (On Remand), __ Mich App __; __ NW2d __ (Docket No. 334663, issued December 22, 2022), slip op at 9 (citation omitted).

It is well-settled that "the bar for standing is lower when a case concerns election law[.]" League of Women Voters of Mich. v. Secretary of State, 506 Mich. 561, 587; 957 N.W.2d 731 (2020). As previously summarized by this Court:

RECEIVED by MCOA 11/28/2023 3:58:56 PM

> Michigan jurisprudence recognizes the special nature of election cases and the standing of ordinary citizens to enforce the law in election cases. Deleeuw v. Bd. of State Canvassers, 263 Mich. App. 497, 505-506, 688 N.W.2d 847 (2004). See also Helmkamp v. Livonia City Council, 160 Mich. App. 442, 445, 408 N.W.2d 470 (1987) ("[I]n the absence of a statute to the contrary, ... a private person ... may enforce by mandamus a public right or duty relating to elections without showing a special interest distinct from the interest of the public." [Quotation marks omitted.]). The general interest of ordinary citizens to enforce the law in election cases is sufficient to confer standing to seek mandamus relief. See Citizens Protecting Michigan's Constitution [v. Secretary of State, 280 Mich. App. 273, 282, 761 N.W.2d 210 (2008), aff'd in part 482 Mich. 960, 755 N.W.2d 157 (2008)] (permitting a ballot question committee to challenge a petition). [Protect MI Constitution v. Secretary of State, 297 Mich. App. 553, 566-567, 824 N.W.2d 299 (2012), rev'd on other grounds 492 Mich. 860, 819 N.W.2d 428 (2012) (first and second alterations in original).]

Thus, Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has standing to seek the proper enforcement of Michigan Election Law. Plaintiff, as a duly registered voter of the state of Michigan, has the constitutional and statutory legal right to seek the entry of a writ of mandamus to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the current version of MCL 168.613a of Michigan Election Law and to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to scheduled and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

"A clear legal duty is asserted to compel the enforcement of an act by a public official." Warren City Council v Buffa, ___Mich.App.___, ____; ____NW2d____ (2023)(Docket No.365488, issued April 21,2023), slip op at p 12, citing Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390, 415 n 13; 355 NW2d 75 (1984).

The Defendant Secretary of State has a clear legal duty under the Mich.Const. 1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 to enforce the current version of MCL

168.613a of Michigan Election Law and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

"A ministerial act is one in which the law prescribes and defines the duty to be performed with such precision and certainty as to leave nothing to the exercise of discretion or judgment." Taxpayers for Michigan Constitutional Government v Dep't of Technology, Mgmt, & Budget, 508 Mich 48, 82; 972 NW2d 738 (2021) (quotation marks and citation omitted).

The duties of the Defendant Secretary of State under the current version of MCL 168.613a and Mich.Const.1963, art. 4, §27; art. 5, §9 are ministerial. And, lastly, Plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law, other than the instant litigation, to compel the Defendant Secretary of State to enforce the provisions of the current version of MCL 168.613a and to schedule and hold the 2024 Presidential Primary Election on March 12, 2024.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff-Appellant Robert Davis prays that this Honorable Court VACATE and REVERSE the portion of the trial court's November 14, 2023 opinion and order dismissing Counts I and II of Plaintiff's original and amended verified complaints as MOOT; ENTER JUDGMENT declaring that the current version of MCL 168.613a must be obeyed and enforced by the Defendant Secretary of State and further declare that the 2024 Presidential primary election must be held on March 12, 2024 in accordance with the current version of MCL 168.613a; ENTER JUDGMENT issuing a writ of

Hi Jonathan,

The opinion came out. The Court of Appeals affirmed for the most part but punted on political question doctrine.

Before: LETICA, P.J., and RIORDAN and CAMERON, JJ.

PER CURIAM.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

In Docket No. 368615, plaintiff Robert Davis ("Davis"), as a registered voter, filed suit in the circuit court, asserting his intent to vote in the Republican primary and challenged the qualifications of former President Donald J. Trump ("Trump") to be placed on the ballot by defendant, the Wayne County Election Commission ("Commission"), and the resulting improper dilution of votes to other qualified candidates if emergency declaratory relief was not granted. Davis claimed that the United States Constitution and state election laws prevented Trump from being included on upcoming election ballots. The circuit court, assumed without deciding that Davis had standing, then determined that summary disposition was proper under MCR 2.116(C)(8) in favor of the Commission because it was not authorized to investigate the qualifications of a presidential candidate. In Docket No. 368628, Robert LaBrant, Andrew Bradway, Norah Murphy, and William Nowling ("plaintiffs") alleged that they were registered voters intending to vote in the 2024 presidential elections. In the Court of Claims, these plaintiffs filed suit against defendant Jocelyn Benson, Michigan's Secretary of State, also challenging Trump's qualification to be placed on the Michigan ballot in light of the United States Constitution and state election law. The Court of Claims denied the request for declaratory relief, deciding that state law determined the placement on an election ballot and that plaintiffs presented a political question that was not justiciable at that time. The actions were consolidated to advance the efficient administration of justice.[1] We address various arguments concerning the placement of Trump as a candidate on ballots for the upcoming 2024 Presidential Primary Election. The two lower courts, the Wayne Circuit Court, and the Court of Claims, rejected Davis's and plaintiffs' challenges in the underlying cases. We affirm in both cases.

I. FACTS

The background of these appeals lies in the United States Constitution. Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, commonly referred to as the Insurrection Clause, states:

> No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

The crux of the cases before us involves Davis's and plaintiffs' claims that Trump engaged in insurrection and is thus subject to the disqualification under this section of the Fourteenth Amendment. The questions largely concern whether Trump may appear on the upcoming presidential primary ballot in Michigan. The underlying suits were brought by Davis and plaintiffs, registered voters, challenging Trump's qualifications to be placed on the ballot against defendants, the Wayne County Election Commission (the Commission) and the Secretary of State.

A. MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW

To put the present matters in context, there are multiple statutes that direct actions by county election commissions and the Secretary of State. These statutes emanate from Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2), which provides the Michigan Legislature with the power to "enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all nominations and elections, to preserve the purity of elections, to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting." The Legislature has, in turn, enacted the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.1 et seq. Relevant to this matter are several provisions concerning presidential primary elections, which are found in Chapter XXIV of the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.531 et seq., and also MCL 168.689, a statute found in Chapter XXVIII of the Michigan Election Law, MCL 168.641 et seq., concerning the ballot preparation process by county election commissions.

MCL 168.614a explains the initial process for identifying candidates to be placed on presidential primary ballots:

> (1) Not later than 4 p.m. of the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the secretary of state shall issue a list of the individuals generally advocated by the national news media to be potential presidential candidates for each party's nomination by the political parties for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a. The secretary of state shall make the list issued under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.
> (2) Not later than 4 p.m. of the Tuesday following the second Friday in November of the year before the presidential election, the state chairperson of each political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a shall file with the secretary of state a list of individuals whom they consider to be potential presidential candidates for that political party. The secretary of state shall make the lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state.
> (3) After the issuance of the list under subsection (1) and after receipt of names from the state chairperson of each political party under subsection (2), the secretary of state shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election.

MCL 168.615a(1) then explains the process for placing candidates on presidential primary ballots, a task given to the Secretary of State:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under > section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state indicating his or her party preference if different than the party preference contained in the secretary of state notification and the secretary of state shall cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party. If the affidavit of a presidential candidate indicates that the candidate has no political party preference or indicates a political party preference for a political party other than a political party for which a presidential primary election will be held under section 613a, the secretary of state shall not cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on a ballot for the presidential primary election. A presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a may file an affidavit with the secretary of state specifically stating that "(candidate's name) is not a presidential candidate", and the secretary of state shall not have that presidential candidate's name printed on a presidential primary ballot. A presidential candidate shall file an affidavit described in this subsection with the secretary of state no later than 4 p.m. on the second Friday in December of the year before the presidential election year or the affidavit is considered void.[2]

The task of preparing and printing ballots for any state, district, or county election falls on county election commissions pursuant to MCL 168.689:

> The board of election commissioners of each county shall prepare the official ballots for use at any state, district or county election held therein, and shall have printed a sufficient number of ballots containing the names of all candidates properly certified to said board of election commissioners, and ballots for all proposed constitutional amendments or other questions to be submitted at such election to supply each election precinct in such county with a sufficient number for such precinct, and not less than 25% more than the total number of votes cast therein at the corresponding election held 4 years previous for the office which received the greatest number of votes.

B. THE LOWER COURT CASES

As noted, two underlying cases are now before us. Again, Docket No. 368615 arises out of a complaint filed by plaintiff, Robert Davis, in Wayne Circuit Court. This complaint, which named only the Commission as a defendant,[3] explained that Davis had requested that the Secretary of State issue a declaratory ruling deciding whether Trump was disqualified from appearing on the presidential primary ballot because he was allegedly disqualified under the Insurrection Clause. The complaint alleges that the Secretary of State had refused the request because the Secretary of State did not believe she had authority to make such a determination. Davis's complaint generally sought a declaration that, in the event the Secretary of State did certify Trump as a candidate for the upcoming primary election, the Commission had a statutory duty under MCL 168.689 to "determine and declare" whether presidential candidates, including Trump, are disqualified from running for or holding office under the Insurrection Clause. Davis asked that the circuit court further enjoin the Commission from "printing any ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election containing the name of any presidential candidate" whom it found disqualified under the Insurrection Clause. In other words, in the event the Secretary of State continued to refuse to determine whether Trump was disqualified under the Insurrection Clause, Davis asked that the Commission make that determination itself, and requested an order compelling the Commission to do so.[4] The Wayne Circuit Court granted summary disposition and denied the requested declaratory relief, concluding that the Commission had no such authority.

[2] While not relevant to these appeals, MCL 168.615a(2) also provides a process for those not included as potential candidates under MCL 168.614a to appear on the presidential primary ballot via nominating petitions.

[3] The circuit court allowed Trump to intervene as a defendant in the matter.

In the Court of Claims, plaintiffs Robert LaBrant, Andrew Bradway, Norah Murphy, and William Nowling filed suit seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the Secretary of State. The complaint filed in that court contains voluminous allegations concerning Trump's actions before the 2020 Presidential Election, during the time between that election and January 6, 2021, and on January 6, 2021 itself. The complaint alleges that as a result of his actions, Trump "engaged in insurrection," and that as he had previously sworn an oath to support the Constitution of the United States on January 20, 2017, the date he was sworn in as the 45th President of the United States, and that Trump was "disqualified from holding 'any office, civil or military, under the United States.' " The complaint further alleges that Congress had not removed this disability, and that the office of President of the United States was an "office" contemplated by the Insurrection Clause. "Consequently, Donald J. Trump is disqualified from, and ineligible to hold, the office of President of the United States."

The complaint then addresses the Secretary of State's alleged errors. Plaintiffs explained that they, too, had requested the Secretary of State to exclude Trump from both the primary and general election ballots for the reasons explained. But the Secretary of State declined, taking the position that it was not the role of the Secretary of State to make such a determination. The complaint alleges that, contrary to the Secretary of State's position, the Secretary of State had "both the authority and responsibility to determine whether" Trump was eligible to appear on the primary and general election ballots pursuant to MCL 168.614a(1).

Count I of the complaint seeks relief in the form of a declaration that "Trump is disqualified by section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, is ineligible to appear on the presidential primary or general election ballot, and has no legal right to appear on that ballot. Plaintiffs are entitled to declaratory judgment to preserve their right to have only eligible presidential candidates on the ballot." Count II of the complaint seeks a permanent injunction against the Secretary of State, enjoining her from placing Trump on either the primary or general election ballots. In their request for relief, plaintiffs sought the following: (1) a declaration "that Donald J. Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States;" (2) a permanent injunction "enjoining the [4] The complaint does not request that the circuit court itself make any determination regarding whether Trump was disqualified under the Insurrection Clause, a point Davis makes clear on appeal.

Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot for the 2024 presidential primary election;" and (3) a permanent injunction "enjoining the Secretary of State from including Donald J. Trump on the ballot for the November 5, 2024, general election as a candidate for the office of President of the United States[.]"

The Court of Claims denied the requested relief without reaching the question whether Trump was disqualified by the Insurrection Clause. Rather, the Court of Claims held that Const 1963, art 2, § 4, MCL 168.614a, and MCL 168.615a direct the actions of the Secretary of State relevant to this matter. Relying on a decision of the Minnesota Supreme Court, which considered a similar challenge in that state, the Court of Claims explained that the presidential primary election is administered by the Secretary of State pursuant to MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a, but that the overall function of the primary election was to assist the political parties "in determining their respective presidential candidates . . . ." The Legislature had not crafted any specific prohibitions regarding whom could be placed on primary ballots, "irrespective as to whether the individual may either serve as a general election candidate or ultimately serve as President if elected." Further, the number of steps involved in becoming a party's candidate for President, along with the fact that any such candidate would also have to win the general election, showed that "declaratory relief is not proper, at least at this time." And, the Court of Claims explained, even if Trump were to win the general election, Congress could remove any disability that might be created by the Insurrection Clause. The Court of Claims concluded: "Whether former President Trump even becomes the President-elect is such a future event that plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that their request for a declaratory judgment is ripe at this time."

As a separate, additional reason for concluding that "plaintiffs cannot receive the relief of preventing former President Trump from being placed on the primary ballot,"[5] the Court of Claims held that the case presented a nonjusticiable political question. The Court applied the six factors from Baker v Carr, 369 US 186; 82 S Ct 691; 7 L Ed 663 (1962), and concluded that it would be inappropriate for a judicial officer to determine whether Trump was disqualified from holding office under the Insurrection Clause. The Court of Claims held that, given the nature and number of questions that would need to be answered in order to determine whether Trump was disqualified, coupled with the fact that Congress could remove any such disability, it would be inappropriate for a single judicial officer to decide whether Trump was disqualified from holding office under the Insurrection Clause.

Davis filed his claim of appeal from the Wayne Circuit Court's decision on November 14, 2023, and the following day, the plaintiffs filed their claim of appeal from the Court of Claims decision.[6] This Court expedited both appeals and consolidated them on motion, and further [5] While the Court of Claims specifically referenced the presidential primary ballot, we perceive no reason why the Court of Claims' decision would not apply equally to plaintiffs' claims concerning the general election ballot or beyond.

[6] The plaintiffs to the Court of Claims matter also filed a bypass application in the Supreme Court, requesting that the Supreme Court review the matter before a decision by this Court pursuant to MCR 7.305(C)(1). On December 6, 2023, the Supreme Court denied the bypass application

This Court has also permitted the filing of several amicus briefs.[7]

With this background in mind, we address the matters currently before this Court.

II. DOCKET NO. 368615 (WAYNE CIRCUIT COURT)

In Docket No. 368615, Davis appeals as of right a November 13, 2023 opinion and order which concludes that the Commission does not possess authority under the relevant statutes to investigate Trump's potential disqualification under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Finding no error warranting reversal, we affirm.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

The circuit court decided the matter on summary disposition, granting summary disposition pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8). We review de novo a trial court's ruling on summary disposition. Bailey v Antrim Co, 341 Mich App 411, 421; 990 NW2d 372 (2022). As explained in Bailey:

> A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of a claim based on the factual allegations in the complaint. When considering such a motion, a trial court must accept all factual allegations as true, deciding the motion on the pleadings alone. A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) may only be granted when a claim is so clearly unenforceable that no factual development could possibly justify recovery. [Id. (quotation and italics omitted).]

As the matter ultimately concerns a request for certain declaratory rulings, we note that questions of law relevant to a request for a declaratory judgment are reviewed de novo, while the decision whether to grant declaratory relief is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. Reed-Pratt v Detroit City Clerk, 339 Mich App 510, 516; 984 NW2d 794 (2021).[8] Questions of statutory interpretation are questions of law that we review de novo on appeal. Moore v Genesee Co, 337 Mich App 723, 727; 976 NW2d 921 (2021).

"because the Court [was] not persuaded that the questions presented should be reviewed by th[e] Court before consideration by the Court of Appeals." LaBrant v Secretary of State, ___ Mich ___ (2023) (Docket No. 166373).

[7] Davis v Wayne Co Election Comm, unpublished order of the Court of Appeals, entered December 4, 2023 (Docket Nos. 368615; 368628); Davis v Wayne Co Election Comm, unpublished orders of the Court of Appeals, entered December 8, 2023 (Docket Nos. 368615; 368628); Davis v Wayne Co Election Comm, unpublished orders of the Court of Appeals, entered December 12, 2023 (Docket Nos. 368615; 368628).

[8] Any factual findings underlying a decision whether to grant declaratory relief are reviewed for clear error on appeal. Reed-Pratt, 339 Mich App at 516. However, in this case, the questions are purely legal questions of statutory interpretation, and the motion was decided pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8), where all factual allegations stated in the complaint are accepted as true. There are thus no relevant factual determinations by the circuit court for this Court to review.

1. DUTY TO AUTHORIZE THE PRINTING OF BALLOTS

Davis first argues that the trial court erred to the extent that it has held that the Commission does not have the right to authorize the printing of ballots for the presidential primary election. This argument arises from the following statements, contained in the final page of the circuit court's opinion, addressing one of Davis's requests for a declaration:

> [Davis] asks the Court to "[e]nter a declaratory judgment declaring that pursuant to MCL 168.689, Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has a statutory duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election." Notably, MCL 168.689 does not specifically address the preparation and printing of primary election ballots, which are addressed in Michigan Election Law Chapter XXIV. Regardless, to the extent [Davis] seeks a declaratory judgment imposing legal duties on the Election Commission under MCL 168.689 beyond the scope of the plain language of that statute, he has failed to state a claim for which relief may be granted.

Davis takes issue with the second sentence of this passage. He contends it means that the Commission does not, in fact, have the duty to authorize the printing of ballots for the upcoming presidential primary election.

As a general premise, it is true that MCL 168.689 authorizes, indeed requires, the Commission to do what the statute states: "prepare the official ballots for use" in Wayne County, and to "have printed a sufficient number of ballots containing the names of all candidates properly certified to said board of election commissioners," for "use at any state, district or county election held therein . . . ." There is no doubt that the upcoming presidential primary elections will be a state election. See MCL 168.2(g) (defining "election" as "an election or primary election at which the electors of this state or of a subdivision of this state choose or nominate by ballot an individual for public office . . ."); MCL 168.7 (defining the terms "primary" or "primary election" as "a primary election held for the purpose of deciding by ballot who shall be the nominee for the offices named in this act, or for the election by ballot of delegates to political conventions"). See also Barrow v Detroit Election Comm, 305 Mich App 649, 671; 854 NW2d 489 (2014) ("It is well established that it is the province of the election commission, not the city clerk, to approve and furnish the ballots to be used in an election").

However, we differ from Davis on the meaning of the circuit court's decision. The circuit court quotes verbatim from Davis's complaint on one form of the relief he seeks: a "declaratory judgment declaring that pursuant to MCL 168.689, Defendant Wayne County Election Commission has a statutory duty to authorize the printing of the official ballots for the 2024 Presidential Primary Election." The circuit court notes, correctly, that MCL 168.689 does not itself specifically reference primary election ballots. Rather, it is a general statute that, by its terms, applies to "any state, district or county election held therein . . . ." MCL 168.689. And, as the circuit court correctly explains, Chapter XXIV of the Michigan Election Law governs the processes for primary elections. The circuit court's analysis is accurate. It is not reasonable to read the circuit court's opinion as a holding that the Commission does not have a duty to print the presidential primary ballots for Wayne County.

But the court correctly notes that MCL 168.689 does not itself specifically discuss the preparation or printing of ballots for the presidential primary election. In other words, MCL 168.689 does not impose any duties concerning presidential primary elections that are different than the duties that are generally imposed for all elections contemplated by MCL 168.689. Beyond that, the court simply explains the obvious: that to the extent Davis sought a declaration that would impose duties that cannot be found in the plain language of MCL 168.689, he was not entitled to any such declaration. We fully agree with this assessment. "This Court may read nothing into an unambiguous statute that is not within the manifest intent of the Legislature as derived from the words of the statute itself." Barrow, 305 Mich App at 663 (quotation marks and citation omitted). And, there is no indication that the Commission has any intent to refuse to prepare or have printed a sufficient number of ballots for the election, as is required by MCL 168.689. We find no error warranting reversal stemming from this portion of the circuit court's decision.

2. WHETHER THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES A CLAIM FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF

Davis's second argument is that his complaint states a cognizable claim for declaratory relief, and thus, it was error for the circuit court to grant summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8). Generally, Davis argues that he has standing to bring such a claim because, the Wayne County Election Commission has a duty to independently determine whether presidential candidates are "properly" certified by the Secretary of State under MCL 168.689. He argues that his complaint adequately pleads the existence of an actual controversy sufficient to support a request for declaratory relief. Again, Davis misunderstands the circuit court's decision.

On this point, the circuit court's decision provided:

> In sum, under the plain language of MCL 168.689 and MCL 168.567, the Election Commission does not have the authority to investigate a presidential candidate's possible disqualification under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, or remove the name of a presidential candidate certified by the Secretary of State unless otherwise ordered by a court. Accordingly, Plaintiff's complaint for a declaratory judgment that the Election Commission has a statutory legal duty to undertake the aforementioned actions fails to state a claim for which relief may be granted, and he has failed to establish that he is entitled to an injunction that prevents the Election Commission from printing any ballots for the 2024 presidential primary election containing the name of anyone deemed disqualified under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The circuit court did not hold that Davis lacked standing to seek a declaration. See Lansing Sch Ed Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Ed, 487 Mich 349, 372; 792 NW2d 686 (2010) ("[W]henever a litigant meets the requirements of MCR 2.605, it is sufficient to establish standing to seek a declaratory judgment"). Nor did the circuit court, as Davis seems to suggest, hold that the controversy was not sufficiently ripe for Davis to seek a declaration. See Rose v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 274 Mich App 291, 294; 732 NW2d 160 (2006) ("The purpose of a declaratory judgment is to enable the parties to obtain adjudication of rights before an actual injury occurs, to settle a matter before it ripens into a violation of the law or a breach of contract, or to avoid multiplicity of actions by affording a remedy for declaring in expedient action the rights and obligations of all litigants"). In fact, the circuit court specifically expressed that it did have jurisdiction over the complaint because the case was brought against local officials, seeking a declaratory judgment, which the court had the power to render under MCR 2.605.

The question decided below was whether Davis is entitled to the relief he seeks. The circuit court ultimately held that the Commission lacks authority to independently decide whether Trump or any other candidate is disqualified from the office of President of the United States under the Insurrection Clause, and that as such, Davis is not entitled to the relief sought in the complaint. For reasons discussed in the next section, we find no error in the circuit court's resolution of that question.[9]

3. THE ELECTION COMMISSION'S PURPORTED DUTY TO DETERMINE WHETHER TRUMP IS DISQUALIFIED UNDER THE INSURRECTION CLAUSE

The primary focus of Davis's circuit court action, and of his appeal, is whether the Commission has a duty, imposed by MCL 168.689, to determine whether Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States by Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, and on that basis, then refuse to place his name on the primary ballot. Davis also suggests that MCL 168.567 could be a source from which to derive such authority.[10] Again finding no errors warranting relief, we affirm the circuit court's decision in this regard.

Davis's complaint argues that if the Secretary of State does place Trump on the ballot for the upcoming presidential primary election, the Commission must nonetheless independently determine whether Trump is disqualified under the Insurrection Clause and then refuse to authorize the printing of ballots including his name as a candidate if it determines that Trump is disqualified. Davis primarily relies on MCL 168.689, and in particular, the phrase "properly certified" in the statute:

> The board of election commissioners of each county shall prepare the official ballots for use at any state, district or county election held therein, and shall have

[9] In his brief on appeal, Davis seems to argue that he is entitled to a declaration that the Commission has a duty to prepare and print the ballots—i.e., the question addressed in part II(B)(2) of this opinion. That basic duty was never in dispute, however. Thus, on this particular issue, there is no actual controversy, and thus, no ability to grant declaratory relief. MCR 2.605(A)(1).

[10] In the circuit court, Davis suggested that another source of authority to undertake such an investigation could be derived from 1963 Const, art 11, § 1, which requires the taking of an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. The circuit court rejected this challenge, and Davis has not raised the issue on appeal. It has thus been abandoned. Berger v Berger, 277 Mich App 700, 712; 747 NW2d 336 (2008).

> printed a sufficient number of ballots containing the names of all candidates properly certified to said board of election commissioners, and ballots for all proposed constitutional amendments or other questions to be submitted at such election to supply each election precinct in such county with a sufficient number for such precinct, and not less than 25% more than the total number of votes cast therein at the corresponding election held 4 years previous for the office which received the greatest number of votes. [MCL 168.689 (emphasis added).]

We have previously addressed the meaning of the phrase, "properly certified," and whether it permits a county election commission to make an independent determination regarding whether a ballot question or candidate was "properly" certified. In Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition v Killeen, 153 Mich App 370; 395 NW2d 325 (1986), the question was whether resolutions adopted by the Detroit City Council and certified for inclusion on an upcoming election ballot by the city clerk would appear on the ballot. The questions certified by the city clerk were advisory questions (i.e., questions asking the voters for advice about how the City Council should proceed in certain matters). Id. at 375-376. On the advice of counsel, the Board of Commissioners refused to place those questions on the ballot, believing that there was "no constitutional or statutory authority for placing the resolutions on the state general election ballot." Id. at 376.

The first question this Court answered was whether the Board of Commissioners had authority to refuse to place on the ballot an item that had been certified by the official authorized to make that certification. This Court examined MCL 168.689, and in particular, the phrase, "properly certified," to conclude that the Board of Commissioners had the authority to determine not only whether a candidate, constitutional amendment, or ballot question had been certified, but also whether any of those had been properly certified. Id. at 377-378. "Accordingly, where it is apparent to the board of county election commissioners that the question is not entitled to placement on the ballot, it may refuse to place it thereon and leave the certifying body to its legal recourse. We interpret 'properly' in this context to mean that the election commissioners are required to determine that, on its face, the question is entitled to placement on the ballot." Id. at 378.

The second question addressed by this Court was whether the advisory questions were, in fact, entitled to placement on the ballot. This Court first held that the questions posed were clearly advisory. Id. at 378. And, "they are advisory questions in the areas of federal military intervention in Central America and federal military spending, with respect to which the city council has no power to act officially." Id. at 378-379. This Court explained that, while no constitutional or statutory authority explicitly prohibited advisory questions, nothing in the relevant statutes represented the Legislature's authorization "to spend public funds in a straw vote in an area entirely outside the powers of the city council . . . ." Id. at 382. While an advisory question concerning an area in which the city council had authority to act might be proper, advisory questions concerning topics that clearly fell outside the scope of the city council's powers were not. Id. at 382-384. Thus, while advisory questions might be properly placed on the ballot as a general matter, the particular questions at issue could not be placed on the ballot. Id. at 384.

Davis argues that the trial court was compelled to follow Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, and particularly, its interpretation of the phrase "properly certified" in MCL 168.689. But there is no indication that the circuit court failed to do so. Indeed, the circuit court's decision cites and discusses the case, treating it as binding authority. And, the circuit court's ultimate holding is that the questions involved in the present matter do not involve the type of "facial" review contemplated by Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition.[11]

There is no support for Davis's contention that the Wayne County Election Commission is authorized to independently determine whether Trump is disqualified under the Insurrection Clause and then refuse to authorize ballots including him as a candidate on that basis. Pursuant to Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, the duty at issue here is to "determine that, on its face, the [candidate] is entitled to placement on the ballot." Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, 153 Mich App at 378. This Court has implied that a "facial" review amounts to a ministerial review. See Berry v Garrett, 316 Mich App 37, 45; 890 NW2d 882 (2016) ("Rather, by doing nothing more than the ministerial task of completing a facial review of the affidavits [of identity], defendants would undertake to perform their clear legal duty under § 558(4) to 'not certify to the board of election commissioners the name of a candidate who [had] fail[ed] to comply' with § 558(2)"). And in Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, the review at issue was a purely legal matter, concerning the scope of the City Council's authority. Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, 153 Mich App at 382-384. The review in that case required no fact-finding and no investigation; it simply amounted to reviewing the proposed ballot questions and determining whether those questions were of a sort that were eligible to be placed on the ballot.

Here, in contrast to that case, Davis would have the Commission determine whether Trump is disqualified by the United States Constitution from holding the office of President of the United States, based on evidence that Davis states he plans to submit to the Commission, but which he has not clearly identified or made part of the record, that he believes proves that Trump engaged in acts of insurrection. Presumably, were this to take place, the Commission would act as both a fact-finder, tasked with reviewing whatever evidence Davis presents, requiring a factual determination regarding what that evidence shows,[12] while acting as constitutional law scholars, tasked with interpreting and applying a provision of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United [11] This Court is not bound to follow Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition, given that it was decided before November 1, 1990. MCR 7.215(J)(1). But, we have held that, while this Court is not strictly obligated to follow "uncontradicted opinions from this Court decided before November 1, 1990," such decisions are "nevertheless considered to be precedent and entitled to significantly greater deference than are unpublished cases." Woodring v Phoenix Ins Co, 325 Mich App 108, 114-115; 923 NW2d 607 (2018). In this matter, we decline to expressly endorse the meaning ascribed to MCL 168.689 stated in Southeastern Mich Fair Budget Coalition. We need not decide whether that interpretation was correct because, for reasons to be explained, applying that interpretation of the statute ends with the conclusion that the Commission does not have a duty to investigate or determine whether Trump is disqualified from holding office under the Insurrection Clause.

[12] Whether Davis envisions any other party being able to submit evidence before the Commission is unclear. That, of course, could raise questions regarding the due process rights of those affected by any decision.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

States Constitution, the meaning of which is subject to significant debate. As the circuit court explained, the type of review Davis envisions would go far beyond the "face" of the matter.[13]

Davis also suggests that the authority to conduct such a review could be derived from MCL 168.567. This statute states: "The boards of election commissioners shall correct such errors as may be found in said ballots, and a copy of such corrected ballots shall be sent to the secretary of state by the county clerk." Davis cites Berry as support. That case, however, shows that the function of MCL 168.567 is not to authorize the type of investigation into the qualifications of a presidential candidate by a county election commission that Davis seeks. In Berry, this Court addressed a challenge to affidavits of identity filed by candidates for township trustee and township supervisor. Berry, 316 Mich App at 40. Both failed to state in their affidavits of identity their precinct number, a requirement stated in MCL 168.558(2). Berry, 316 Mich App at 40. This Court explained that under MCL 168.558(4), the defendants had a clear legal duty " 'not to certify to the board of election commissioners the name of a candidate who [had] fail[ed] to comply' with the requirement, under § 558(2), of duly including the precinct number where the candidate was registered to vote." Berry, 316 Mich App at 44, quoting MCL 168.558(4). This Court explained that because the defendants had failed to comply with their clear legal duty under MCL 168.558(4), they then had a clear legal duty to correct "such errors as may be found in the resulting, improper ballots" under MCL 168.567. Berry, 316 Mich App at 44.

In other words, MCL 168.567 is a mechanism by which boards of election commissioners must correct errors in ballots that are later found. Nothing in the plain language of the statute suggests or implies that it creates a duty to investigate a highly fact-intensive matter of constitutional law such as is presented by the instant case. Neither does MCL 168.689. And, as will be explained next in further detail in the following sections of this opinion, by placing Trump on the presidential primary ballot, the Secretary of State would be following her statutory mandates. Thus, there is no potential error to be corrected under MCL 168.567.

[13] We note that in a suit filed in the state of Colorado, a trial court, after a five-day trial, concluded that Trump did engage in acts of insurrection. Anderson v Griswold, Colorado Denver District Court, Docket No. 2023-CV-32577, issued November 17, 2023. Even so, that court declined to hold that Trump was disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States, concluding that the Insurrection Clause did not apply to the office of President of the United States. Id. The court's 102-page decision is currently on appeal to the Colorado Supreme Court.

We discuss this decision not because it binds this Court in any fashion, nor do we seek to express any opinion regarding whether the Colorado trial court's factual or legal conclusions were correct. Rather, we note this decision because it provides some context for the degree of review and types of determinations that would seem necessary before one could even begin to answer the question that Davis wishes to have the Commission answer in a purported "facial" review under MCL 168.689. And, one Justice of the Michigan Supreme Court has also indicated that, in order to resolve the issue, a substantial evidentiary hearing would be required. LaBrant v Secretary of State, ___ Mich ___ (2023) (Docket No. 166373) (WELCH, J., dissenting).

Finding no errors in the decision of the Wayne Circuit Court, in Docket No. 368615, we affirm.

III. DOCKET NO. 368628 (COURT OF CLAIMS)

In Docket No. 368628, plaintiffs LaBrant, Bradway, Murphy, and Nowling appeal the Court of Claims order which denied these plaintiffs' request for declaratory and injunctive relief. We affirm.[14]

A. WHETHER TRUMP IS DISQUALIFIED UNDER THE INSURRECTION CLAUSE

First, plaintiffs assert that Trump is, in fact, disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States pursuant to the Insurrection Clause. Generally, they argue that the clause applies to the office of President of the United States, and that under the definition of "insurrection" plaintiffs would apply, Trump engaged in insurrection. They further argue that Trump's words and actions are not protected by the First Amendment. Plaintiffs add that the Insurrection Clause is self-executing and may be enforced by the judiciary. Multiple amici curiae briefs concerning these topics have also been filed.

The Court of Claims declined to reach any of these questions, instead deciding the matter on other grounds. We too decline to reach these issues because, given our analysis in the next section of this opinion, it is unnecessary to make any determinations regarding whether Trump engaged in insurrection or is actually disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States by the Fourteenth Amendment, at least at this time. See Pythagorean, Inc v Grand Rapids Twp, 253 Mich App 525, 527; 656 NW2d 212 (2002)("We will not reach constitutional issues if cases may be resolved on other grounds.").

B. RIPENESS AND RELATED ISSUES

Second, plaintiffs contend that the Court of Claims incorrectly held that the Secretary of State and political parties alone determine which individuals appear on the presidential primary ballot. Plaintiffs assert that voters in Michigan have a right to have only eligible candidates appear on ballots, and to raise eligibility challenges in the courts. They also argue that the matter is ripe, contrary to the Court of Claims' decision, because plaintiffs challenge Trump's placement on the ballot for the presidential primary election, an election that is only months away.

As this Court explained in Van Buren Charter Twp v Visteon Corp, 319 Mich App 538, 545-546; 904 NW2d 192 (2017):

> MCR 2.605 governs a trial court's power to enter a declaratory judgment. The court rule provides, in pertinent part, that "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." MCR 2.605(A)(1). The language in this rule is permissive, and the decision whether to grant declaratory relief is within the trial court's sound discretion. PT Today, Inc v Comm'r of Office Fin & Ins Servs, 270 Mich App 110, 126; 715 NW2d 398 (2006).

When there is no actual controversy, the court lacks jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment. Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't v Attorney General, 243 Mich App 43, 55; 620 NW2d 546 (2000). Thus, "the existence of an 'actual controversy' is a condition precedent to the invocation of declaratory relief." PT Today, Inc, 270 Mich App at 127. An actual controversy exists when a declaratory judgment is necessary to guide the plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve the plaintiff's legal rights. Shavers v Attorney General, 402 Mich 554, 588–589; 267 NW2d 72 (1978). "It is not necessary that 'actual injuries or losses have occurred'; rather than 'plaintiffs plead and prove facts which indicate an adverse interest necessitating a sharpening of the issues raised.' " Kircher v City of Ypsilanti, 269 Mich App 224, 227; 712 NW2d 738 (2005), quoting Shavers, 402 Mich at 589.

"MCR 2.605 does not limit or expand the subject-matter jurisdiction of the courts, but incorporates the doctrines of standing, ripeness, and mootness." UAW v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495; 815 NW2d 132 (2012). The "actual controversy" requirement "prevents a court from deciding hypothetical issues." Id. And that is the core concern addressed by the ripeness doctrine. "The doctrine of ripeness is designed to prevent the adjudication of hypothetical or contingent claims before an actual injury has been sustained. A claim that rests on contingent future events is not ripe." King v Mich State Police Dep't, 303 Mich App 162, 188; 841 NW2d 914 (2013) (quotation marks and citations omitted; emphasis added). "Hence, when considering the issue of ripeness, the timing of the action is the primary focus of concern." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted). Questions concerning ripeness are reviewed de novo on appeal. Id.

We begin by analyzing Michigan's statutory framework as it pertains to presidential primary elections. First, and as the Court of Claims explained, Michigan's statutory scheme makes clear that the Secretary of State's role in the context of presidential primary elections is limited. Only one portion of MCL 168.614a gives the Secretary of State a role in making any decisions at all. This statute begins by directing the Secretary of State to publish a list of individuals generally advocated by the national news media as potential presidential candidates. MCL 168.614a(1). Which sources to review (i.e., exactly what sources represent the "national news media") is not defined, and thus, it appears that the Secretary of State has some discretion to decide from which sources this list should be drawn.

But after that, the Secretary of State's actions are purely administrative. The chairperson of each political party ultimately identifies which candidates are to be placed on the primary ballot, and does so by filing a list of such candidates with the Secretary of State. MCL 168.614a(2). The Secretary of State then publishes that list on the internet. MCL 168.614a(2). The statute gives the Secretary of State no discretion or authority to alter that list, either by adding or removing candidates. Rather, the Secretary of State "shall make lists received under this subsection available to the public on an internet website maintained by the department of state." MCL 168.614a(2) (emphasis added). As is widely understood, the term "shall" represents a mandatory, and not discretionary, directive. See, e.g., Lakeshore Group v Dep't of Environmental Quality, 507 Mich 52, 64; 968 NW2d 251 (2021) ("The term 'shall' indicates that conduct is mandatory").

The Secretary of State's next task is that she "shall notify each potential presidential candidate on the lists of the provisions of this act relating to the presidential primary election." MCL 168.614a(3). Again, there is no discretion, and no decisions to be made. Given the use of the word "shall," if an individual is included on a list of potential candidates filed by a party chairperson, the Secretary of State must provide this notification.

MCL 168.615a then explains the process for placing candidates on the presidential primary ballots. This statute, which is quoted in full at the outset of this opinion, begins with the sentence: "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the secretary of state shall cause the name of a presidential candidate notified by the secretary of state under section 614a to be printed on the appropriate presidential primary ballot for that political party." MCL 168.615a(1) (emphasis added). Again, there is no discretion or indication of any decision-making authority. The statute goes on to explain that a notified presidential candidate may file an affidavit stating a different party affiliation, and directs that the Secretary of State "shall" then print that candidate's name on the appropriate primary ballot for that political party. MCL 168.615a(1). Or, if the presidential candidate files an affidavit that states they have no party affiliation, or that their party affiliation is with a party for which a primary will not be held, then the Secretary of State "shall not cause that presidential candidate's name to be printed on a ballot for the presidential primary election." MCL 168.615a(1). And, if the presidential candidate files an affidavit with the Secretary of State stating that they are not a presidential candidate, the Secretary of State "shall not have that presidential candidate's name printed on a presidential primary ballot." MCL 168.615a(1).

As is clear from the above, the Secretary of State's role in presidential primary elections is chiefly that of an administrator. In particular, when it comes to who is or is not placed on the primary ballot, the statutory scheme leaves nothing to the Secretary of State's discretion. As the Court of Claims explained, who to place on the primary ballot is determined by the political parties and the individual candidates.[15]

The Court of Claims relied on the Minnesota Supreme Court's resolution of a similar case in Growe v Simon, 997 NW2d 81 (Minn, 2023). There, the court determined that any claim regarding Trump's placement on the general election ballot was not ripe. But the court held that the petitioners' claim was ripe to the extent it asked the court to hold that Trump could not appear on the primary election ballot. Id. at 82. The court then explained that, with respect to this one ripe question, there was no potential error to correct:

> With respect to the only ripe issue before us at this time, we conclude that under section 204B.44, there is no "error" to correct here as to the presidential [15] The only exception of sorts is that individuals who are not placed on the ballot as part of this process may, by a nominating petition process, gain access to the primary ballot. MCL 168.615a(2). But that process is not implicated here.

> primary election if former President Trump's name is included on the presidential primary ballot after the Chair of the Republican Party of Minnesota provides his name to the Secretary of State, notwithstanding petitioners' claim that former President Trump is disqualified from holding office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Legislature enacted the presidential nomination primary process to allow major political parties to select delegates to the national conventions of those parties; at those conventions the selected delegates will cast votes along with delegates from all of the other states and territories and choose a presidential candidate who will subsequently appear on general election ballots. See Minn Stat § 207A.11(d) (2022) (explaining that the presidential nomination primary "only applies to a major political party that selects delegates at the presidential nomination primary to send to a national convention"). This is "a process that allows political parties to obtain voter input in advance of a nomination decision made at a national convention." De La Fuente v Simon, 940 NW2d 477, 492 (Minn, 2020). Thus, although the Secretary of State and other election officials administer the mechanics of the election, this is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes, and winning the presidential nomination primary does not place the person on the general election ballot as a candidate for President of the United States. As we explained in De La Fuente, in upholding the constitutionality of this statutory scheme for the presidential nomination primary, "[t]he road for any candidate's access to the ballot for Minnesota's presidential nomination primary runs only through the participating political parties, who alone determine which candidates will be on the party's ballot." 940 NW2d at 494-95. And there is no state statute that prohibits a major political party from placing on the presidential nomination primary ballot, or sending delegates to the national convention supporting, a candidate who is ineligible to hold office. [Growe, 997 NW2d at 82-83.]

The Growe court's final paragraph explains:

> Because there is no error to correct here as to the presidential nomination primary, and petitioners' other claims regarding the general election are not ripe, the petition must be dismissed, but without prejudice as to petitioners bringing a petition raising their claims as to the general election. [Growe, 997 NW2d at 83.]

In this case, the Court of Claims held that as to the general election, the issue is not ripe, and we agree. Before Trump becomes a candidate in the general election, he would first have to prevail in the nationwide primary process, and then be nominated as the Republican Party's candidate for that office at the Republican National Convention. Given the very nature of those processes, the outcome at either of those steps is unknown at this time. To the extent plaintiffs seek an injunction prohibiting the Secretary of State from placing Trump on the general election ballot, the claim is not ripe for adjudication. King, 303 Mich App at 188.

Plaintiffs argue that their request for declaratory relief is ripe, and that the Court of Claims' ripeness analysis is flawed, because it mischaracterizes the complaint. According to plaintiffs, "they challenge Trump's eligibility to appear on the primary election ballot, now less than three months away . . . ." Thus, plaintiffs contend that the Court of Claims' speculation regarding whether Trump would win the primary election, become the Republican Party nominee, or win the general election is irrelevant. We disagree that the analysis as to the general election was irrelevant. Rather, the complaint specifically asks for an injunction prohibiting Trump from appearing on the general election ballot. As such, the Court of Claims did not mischaracterize the complaint or err by addressing that request.

We do agree with plaintiffs to the extent that they argue that their request for an injunction prohibiting the Secretary of State from placing Trump's name on the presidential primary ballot is ripe. While circumstances were different when this matter was filed, and when it was decided in the Court of Claims, at this point, absent judicial intervention of some sort, the Secretary of State will cause Trump's name to be placed on the presidential primary ballot, and that election will be held in the next few months.[16] This claim does not rest on contingencies or uncertainties; at this point in time, it rests on decided facts and the operation of certain statutes. But, like the Minnesota Supreme Court, we conclude that there is no error to be corrected concerning the presidential primary ballots because the Secretary of State must place Trump on this ballot, regardless of whether he would be disqualified from holding office by the Insurrection Clause.

As discussed previously, when it comes to Michigan's presidential primary, applicable statutes limit the Secretary of State's role to that of an administrator of what are internal party elections. There is virtually no discretion left to the Secretary of State in this process. The Secretary of State, rather, follows the directions of the political parties and the candidates themselves. The Secretary of State is obligated to place on the presidential ballot those individuals identified by the political parties, unless a candidate files an affidavit saying otherwise. MCL 168.615a(1). Nothing in this framework exhibits any decision-making to be had, at least by the Secretary of State. Michigan's statutes also contain no provisions that prohibit a candidate who is, or may be, disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States from appearing on the presidential primary ballot. In other words, nothing in the statutory framework prevents a political party from placing an individual on the presidential primary ballot who would be disqualified from holding the office, and nothing requires, or even implies, that the Secretary of State can refuse to place an individual on the presidential primary ballot for such reasons.

Contrast that with other areas in which the Legislature has incorporated eligibility requirements into Michigan law. See, e.g., MCL 168.51 (qualifications for the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor); MCL 168.71 (qualifications for the offices of Secretary of State and [16] The case was filed in late September 2023, before the Secretary of State published a list of individuals generally advocated in the national media as potential presidential candidates. But at this point, the Secretary of State has published that list, as well as the list of candidates identified by the political parties as candidates for President, which includes Trump. See <https://mielections.us/election/candlist/2024PPR_CANDLIST.html> (accessed December 14, 2023). The deadline for Trump to file an affidavit withdrawing his candidacy was Friday, December 8, 2023, at 4:00 p.m. See MCL 168.615a(1) (the date to file an affidavit to withdraw one's candidacy is by 4:00 p.m. on the second Friday in December—December 8, 2023, in this election cycle). Trump has not done so.

Attorney General); MCL 168.91 (qualifications for the office of United States Senator); MCL 168.131 (qualifications to "be a Representative in Congress"); MCL 168.161 (qualifications for the offices of State Senator and Representative); and MCL 168.281 (qualifications for membership to the State Board of Education, Board of Regents of the University of Michigan, Board of Trustees of Michigan State University, and Board of Governors of Wayne State University). With each, there exists a mechanism for enforcement of these requirements before an election. Candidates for all of these offices, and many others, must file an affidavit of identity which includes a statement that the candidate "meets the constitutional and statutory qualifications for the office sought." MCL 168.558(1) and (2). And, pursuant to MCL 168.558(4), "An officer shall not certify to the board of election commissioners the name of a candidate who fails to comply with this section, or the name of a candidate who executes an affidavit of identity that contains a false statement with regard to any information or statement required under this section." Thus, candidates who file affidavits of identity containing false information are prohibited from appearing on the ballot. See Reed-Pratt, 339 Mich App at 517 (quotation marks and citation omitted) ("The failure to supply a facially proper affidavit of identity (AOI), i.e., an affidavit that conforms to the requirements of the Election Law, is a ground to disqualify a candidate from inclusion on the ballot"). This illustrates that when the Legislature wishes to require that election officers refuse to place ineligible candidates on the ballot, it has.

Yet, the Legislature has made plain that those seeking to run for the office of President of the United States are not required to file an affidavit of identity. MCL 168.558(1) ("The affidavit of identity filing requirement does not apply to a candidate nominated for the office of President of the United States or Vice President of the United States"). The process for identifying presidential primary candidates stated in MCL 168.614a and MCL 168.615a likewise says nothing of a presidential primary candidate filing an affidavit of identity. As such, the enforcement mechanism of MCL 168.558(4) has no application. Rather, when it comes to the presidential primary election, the statutory framework is different. As explained, nothing in the statutory framework that controls the process for presidential primary elections confers any authority on the Secretary of State to make eligibility determinations or to refuse to place a candidate on that particular ballot based on an eligibility determination.

Plaintiffs argue that Michigan recognizes a "well-established right" held by the voters to have only eligible candidates appear on primary and general election ballots. Plaintiffs rely on Barrow, 301 Mich App at 404, and a number of other election cases that followed Barrow, as standing for this right.

We disagree. Barrow was a mandamus matter in which one candidate for mayor argued that another candidate for mayor was ineligible to appear on an August 2013 primary ballot. The eligibility challenge was based on residency requirements stated in the Detroit City Charter, and ultimately was controlled by the fact that the challenged candidate filed his nominating petitions ten days before the one-year anniversary of his registration as a voter in the City of Detroit. Id. at 407-409. In upholding the trial court's decision, this Court explained that it was "undisputed that defendants have the statutory duty to submit the names of the eligible candidates for the primary election, see MCL 168.323 and MCL 168.719." Barrow, 301 Mich App at 412. Thus, "[t]he inclusion or exclusion of a name on a ballot" was, in that case, "ministerial in nature," making mandamus a potentially appropriate remedy. Id. This Court reviewed the facts and the charter provisions at issue, and concluded that the candidate was ineligible to be placed on the ballot, as he was not a registered voter in the City of Detroit for a full year before filing to run for mayor. Id. at 417. This Court also addressed constitutional challenges made by the candidate, found those unavailing, and concluded that the candidate could not be placed on the ballot. Id. at 417-426.

Plaintiffs argue that Barrow, 301 Mich App at 412, stands for the proposition that voters have a "clear legal right . . . to have only eligible candidates on a primary election ballot." But Barrow does not stand for such a broad proposition. Rather, Barrow stands for the proposition that the defendant in that case, the Detroit Election Commission, had a clear legal duty, pursuant to statutes that do not control the outcome in this case, to place on the ballot only those candidates who were eligible to run in the mayoral primary race. For reasons explained previously, the statutes concerning the presidential primary contain no such right.

Plaintiffs cite other cases that have the same fault: Berdy v Buffa, 504 Mich 876 (2019) (concluding that some candidates were ineligible to run for city council under the local city charter, and thus, the city elections commission "had a clear legal duty to perform the ministerial act of removing the names of the challenged contestants from the ballots"); Sheffield v Detroit City Clerk, 337 Mich App 492; 976 NW2d 95 (2021), rev'd 508 Mich 851 (2021) (concerning whether the Detroit City Clerk was required to remove a proposal from an upcoming primary election on grounds that the proposed revised charter had not been approved by the Governor as required by MCL 117.22); Burton-Harris v Wayne Co Clerk, 337 Mich App 215; 976 NW2d 30 (2021), vacated in part, lv den in part 508 Mich 985 (2021) (concerning whether a candidate for county prosecutor made a false statement in an affidavit of identity and was thus precluded from appearing on the ballot pursuant to MCL 168.558(4)).[17] None of these cases involve the presidential primary or the statutes controlling that process, and they do not control the outcome in this matter.

Thus, we agree that plaintiffs' claims are not ripe to the extent they concern Trump's placement on the general election ballot, given all that must take place before that might occur. To the extent the claims concern the primary election ballot, while the claims may be ripe, there is no potential error. Even if Trump were disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States by the Insurrection Clause, nothing prevents the Michigan Republican Party from [17] We note that the Supreme Court's order in Burton-Harris vacated this Court's entire analysis except that portion considering whether the trial court had abused its discretion by denying a motion to intervene. Burton-Harris v Wayne Co Clerk, 508 Mich 985 (2021). Thus, any substantive statement potentially relevant to this matter that might be derived from this Court's decision in Burton-Harris was vacated. Indeed, the pages of this Court's decision cited by plaintiffs are found in Section IV of the opinion, a section that was specifically vacated by the Supreme Court. Burton-Harris, 508 Mich at 985. Similarly, where this Court's decision in Sheffield was reversed, albeit on the basis that MCL 117.22 did not grant the Governor "an unfettered veto in the charter revision process," Sheffield v Detroit City Clerk, 508 Mich 851; 962 NW2d 157, 159 (2021), this Court's statements in the majority opinion are perhaps of limited consequence. But even ignoring all that, the point is the same: these cases do not concern the presidential primary or the statutes controlling the administration of that election by the Secretary of State.

identifying him as a candidate in the upcoming primary election. And, where the relevant statutes require the Secretary of State to place any candidate so identified on the presidential primary ballot, and confers no discretion to the Secretary of State to do otherwise, there is no error to correct.

Plaintiffs' complaint also requests a declaration that Trump is "disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States pursuant to Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States[.]" But a condition precedent to obtaining declaratory relief is the existence of an actual controversy, and where there is no actual controversy, there is no jurisdiction to grant declaratory relief. MCR 2.605(A); Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't, 243 Mich App at 55. An actual controversy exists where a declaratory judgment is needed to guide plaintiffs' future conduct, and requires plaintiffs to plead facts indicating an adverse interest necessitating the sharpening of the issues raised. Van Buren Charter Twp, 319 Mich App at 545.

As the Court of Claims recognized, it would be improper to decide whether to grant a declaration that Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President of the United States at this time. At the moment, the only event about to occur is the presidential primary election. But as explained, whether Trump is disqualified is irrelevant to his placement on that particular ballot. Thus, with respect to the presidential primary election, there is no actual controversy, as the only purported basis for removing Trump from the presidential primary ballot would not be a sufficient basis for removal of Trump's name from that ballot. Beyond that point in time, the request for a declaration that Trump is disqualified is not ripe. As explained, before Trump's potential disqualification from holding the office of President could become a relevant concern, he would minimally need to prevail in the primary process. That process has yet to begin, and whether Trump prevails in the primary process or becomes the Republican nominee for President are purely hypothetical questions at present. "[W]here the injury sought to be prevented is merely hypothetical, a case of actual controversy does not exist." Citizens for Common Sense in Gov't, 243 Mich App at 55. With no actual controversy, the Court of Claims was without jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment.[18]

IV. CONCLUSION

In Docket No. 368615, we affirm the decision of the Wayne Circuit Court.

In Docket No. 368628, we affirm the decision of the Court of Claims.

A public question being involved, no costs may be taxed under MCR 7.219.

[18] We need not, and do not, decide today at what point in the process such a claim would become ripe. It is enough to conclude that, given the current state of affairs, the request for declaratory relief stated in the complaint is not ripe. Similarly, we do not address the Court of Claims' conclusion that the question of whether Trump is disqualified by the Insurrection Clause is a nonjusticiable political question.

RE: Statutory Notice of Violations of 52 U.S.C. § 20507 in the state of Michigan

Dear Secretary Benson and Director Brater:

Please be advised that the America First Policy Institute ("AFPI"), through its Constitutional Litigation Partnership (CLP) Center, represents Frank Kozlowski, Mary Kozlowski, Nancy Hyde-Davis, Deanna Cypher, George Fisher, Jim Sanchez, and Barbara Bass, duly registered voters and citizens of the state of Michigan. They intend to vote for the U.S. President, U.S. Senate, U.S. House of Representatives, and for other offices and measures on the ballot in Michigan's 2024 federal elections. As Michigan voters with substantial interests in secure, free, and fair elections, they are writing with concerns about Michigan's voter registration rolls and list maintenance activities under the National Voter Registration Act ("NVRA").

As you are aware, the NVRA requires States to maintain an accurate and current voter registration roll for elections for federal office. 52 U.S.C. §20501(b)(4). Specifically, Section 8 of the NVRA obligates States to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters" due to death or change of residence. 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4). And as the U.S. Supreme Court has recently confirmed, "federal law makes this removal mandatory." See Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Institute, 138 S. Ct. 1833, 1842 (2018).

In addition, the Help America Vote Act ("HAVA") mandates that States adopt computerized statewide voter registration lists and maintain them "on a regular basis" in accordance with the NVRA. 52 U.S.C. §21083(a)(2)(A). That is, States must "ensure that voter registration records in the State are accurate and are updated regularly," a process which must include making a "reasonable effort to remove registrants who are ineligible to vote from the official list of eligible voters." Id. at §21083(a)(4). HAVA's list maintenance mandates also include coordination with "State agency records on death" and "State agency records on felony status" to facilitate the removal of individuals who are deceased or rendered ineligible under State law due to felony conviction. Id. §21083(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I)-(II).

As the Secretary of State and Director of the Michigan Bureau of Elections, you are responsible for coordinating the required statewide list maintenance under the NVRA. The NVRA, for instance, requires each State to "designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for coordination of State responsibilities under" the law. 52 U.S.C. §20509. Michigan law, to this end, designates the Secretary of State as the State's chief election officer, Mich. Comp. Laws §168.2,[1] and instructs the Director of Elections to "perform the duties of the secretary of state under his or her supervision, with respect to the supervision and administration of the election laws." Id. at §168.509n. Michigan law further provides that "[t]he secretary of state is responsible for the coordination of the requirements imposed under this chapter, the national voter registration act of 1993, and the help America vote act of 2002." Id. at §168.509n. In addition, to ensure the accuracy and currency of official lists of eligible voters, Congress provided a public disclosure provision, which requires each State to make all records concerning the implementation of voter registration programs and activities available for public inspection. 52 U.S.C. §20507(i).

I. 27 Michigan counties have more registered active voters than voting-eligible citizens, and three have suspiciously high voter registration rates

Based on data gathered from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2022 American Community Survey of citizen voting age population, and the most up-to-date count of registered active voters available from the Michigan Secretary of State, Michigan has failed to meet its list maintenance obligations. Comparing the registered voter count to the Census Bureau Survey data reveals that the following counties in Michigan have suspiciously high voter registration rates (i.e., the number of voter registrations exceeds the number of citizens in the county who are old enough to register to vote):

[1] As the chief election official for Michigan, the responsibility rests with you to coordinate and oversee the list maintenance activities of local and county election officials. 52 U.S.C. § 20509; see also Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 839 (5th Cir. 2014) (noting that "the NVRA's centralization of responsibility counsels against . . . buck passing"); U.S. v. Missouri, 535 F.3d 844, 850 (8th Cir. 2008) (noting that a State or chief election official "may not delegate the responsibility to conduct a general program to a local official and thereby avoid responsibility if such a program is not reasonably conducted").

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Twenty-Seven Counties with greater than 100% voter registration:
Allegan (106%), Bay (104%), Berrien (113%), Calhoun (109%), Clinton (102%), Eaton (103%), Genesee (113%), Grand Traverse (106%), Jackson (100%), Kalamazoo (105%), Kent (107%), Lapeer (106%), Lenawee (102%), Livingston (106%), Macomb (106%), Marquette (101%), Midland (107%), Monroe (109%), Muskegon (107%), Oakland (110%), Ottowa (101%), Saginaw (107%), St. Clair (108%), Shiawassee (107%), Van Buren (112%), Washtenaw (114%), Wayne (111%).

Three Counties with more than 90% voter registration, in some cases, approaching 100% of their citizen voting-age populations registered to vote:
Ingham (98%), Ionia (92%), and Montcalm (98%).

These voter registration rates are abnormally, or in the case of twenty-seven counties with greater than 100% registration, impossibly, high. This constitutes strong evidence that Michigan's voter rolls are not being properly maintained in these counties. These rates also suggest that a jurisdiction is not removing voters who have died or who have moved elsewhere, as required by 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4). By comparison, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, only 69.1% of the citizen voting-age population was registered, nationwide, in the 2022 midterm elections;[2] 72.7% in the November 2020 election;[3] and, 66.9% in the November 2018 election;[4] In addition, Michigan's statewide voter registration rates of the citizen voting-age population for the 2018 midterm election was 55.4% and 70.5% for the 2020 presidential election. See [HYPERLINK "https://www.michigan.gov/sos/-/media/Project/Websites/sos/Election-Results-and-Statistics/General-Voter-Reg-Turnout-Stats.pdf"].

II. Notice of Violation

Michigan's failure to provide accurate voter rolls violates federal law, jeopardizes the integrity of the upcoming 2024 federal election, and signals to voters that elections in Michigan are not being properly safeguarded. As you know, the NVRA includes a private right of action, empowering any "person who is aggrieved by a violation" of the statute to bring a civil action in federal district court for declaratory or injunctive relief. 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)-(2). Therefore, our clients are writing to bring these violations to your attention and to respectfully ask that you take the necessary steps to bring the counties into compliance with the NVRA. If the violations we have identified herein are not corrected, our clients will have no choice but to file a lawsuit. Because the ongoing violations are occurring within 120 days of an election for federal office, you may face federal litigation if the violations are not cured within 20 days of your receipt of this letter. Id. §20510(b)(2).

III. Avoid Litigation

We hope to avoid litigation and would welcome immediate efforts by your office to bring Michigan into compliance with Section 8. We ask that you evaluate your current list maintenance procedures and protocols to identify the cause of the compliance failures discussed in this letter. We also ask that you modify your current list maintenance program to ensure that it is comprehensive, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with federal law. Specifically, your list maintenance program must identify and remove the following categories of individuals from the official lists of eligible voters:

1. All persons who are ineligible to vote by reason of a change in residence;

2. Deceased individuals;

3. Persons who are presently incarcerated per state law;

4. All other ineligible voters.

We ask that you – and should they wish to respond separately, each named county – respond in writing within 20 days of the date of this letter. This response should fully describe the efforts, policies, and programs you are taking, or plan to undertake prior to the 2024 federal elections to bring Michigan into compliance with Section 8. This response should also note when you plan to begin and complete each specified measure and the results of any programs or activities you have already undertaken. We also ask you to advise us what policies are presently in place, or will be put in place, to ensure effective and routine coordination of list maintenance activities with the federal, State, and local entities outlined herein. Finally, we seek a description of the specific steps you intend to take to ensure routine and effective list maintenance on a continuing basis beyond the 2024 election. In order to avoid litigation, we may seek certain reasonable assurances that you will affirmatively undertake these efforts, including the execution of a settlement agreement.

Should you refuse to comply with Section 8 and thus necessitate legal action, you should be aware that the NVRA authorizes courts to award "reasonable attorney fees, including litigation expenses, and costs" to the prevailing party. 52 U.S.C. § 20510(c). Therefore, if litigation ensues, you risk bearing the financial burden of the full cost of the litigation.

We look forward to working with you in a productive fashion to ensure the accuracy and currency of Michigan's voter rolls and to protect the integrity of its voting process. While we hope to avoid litigation, if we do not receive the requested response, and if Michigan fails to take the necessary curative steps to resolve the issues identified in this letter, you will be subject to a lawsuit seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

IV. Request for Meeting

Dear Secretary Benson and Director Brater:

As you are aware, the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) requires States to maintain an accurate and current voter registration roll for elections for federal office. Based on our analysis, Michigan is in violation of Section 8 of the NVRA. By comparing publicly available voter registration records with the U.S. Census Bureau's 2021 citizen voting age population data, we have determined that 55 counties have more registered active voters than adult citizens over the age of 18. We have identified another 23 counties that have voter registration rates that exceed 90 percent of adult citizens over the age of 18, a figure that far eclipses the voter registration rate nationwide in recent elections. This evidence shows that your office and county, city, and township clerks in these counties are not conducting appropriate list maintenance to ensure that the voter registration roll is accurate and current, as required by federal law.

Congress enacted the NVRA "to protect the integrity of the electoral process." 52 U.S.C. §20501(b)(3). Specifically, it enacted Section 8 "to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained." Id. §20501(b)(4). Retaining voter rolls bloated with ineligible voters harms the electoral process, heightens the risk of electoral fraud, and undermines public confidence in elections. After all, "[c]onfidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy." Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006) (per curiam). Section 8 of the NVRA obligates States to "conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters" due to death or change of residence. 52 U.S.C. §20507(a)(4). And as the U.S. Supreme Court has recently confirmed, "federal law makes this removal mandatory." Husted v. A. Philip Randolph Institute, 138 S. Ct. 1833, 1842 (2018).

As the Secretary of State and the Director of the Michigan Bureau of Elections, you are responsible for coordinating the required statewide list maintenance under the NVRA. The NVRA requires each State to "designate a State officer or employee as the chief State election official to be responsible for coordination of State responsibilities under" the law. 52 U.S.C. §20509. Michigan law designates the Secretary of State as the State's chief election officer, Mich. Comp. Laws §168.21, and instructs the Director of Elections to "perform the duties of the secretary of state under his or her supervision, with respect to the supervision and administration of the election laws." Id. at §168.32. Michigan law further provides that "[t]he secretary of state is responsible for the coordination of the requirements imposed under this chapter, the national voter registration act of 1993, and the help America vote act of 2002." Id. §168.509n.

In June 2020, a Michigan voter sued you, alleging that you failed to maintain accurate voter rolls. In January 2021, Secretary Benson announced that she slated 177,000 voter registrations for cancellation "because the state ha[d] reason to believe" that those voters had "moved away from the registration address." See Mich. Dept. of State, Secretary Benson Continues to Bolster Election Security (Jan. 28, 2021), perma.cc/H9WY-5HC2. She also promised to conduct additional list maintenance efforts. Id. In light of those announcements, the parties stipulated that the case be voluntarily dismissed. See Daunt v. Benson, No. 1:20-cv-00522, ECF No. 58 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 16, 2021).

Despite the Secretary's promises to conduct list maintenance, Michigan's voter rolls remain significantly bloated. This letter provides statutory notice that that the Republican National Committee, Jordan Jorritsma, and Emerson Silvernail, acting as a political party and registered Michigan voters with substantial interests in secure elections, will bring a lawsuit against you and, if appropriate, against officials in the counties named in this letter, if you fail to take specific actions to correct these violations of Section 8 within the 90-day timeframe specified in federal law. See Green v. Bell, No. 321-cv-00493, 2023 WL 2572210, at *3 (W.D.N.C. Mar. 20, 2023). Furthermore, while we hope to avoid litigation, we still formally request that the Michigan Bureau of Elections and relevant officials within the 78 counties named in this letter (if they maintain separate records) act to preserve documents as required by Section 8(i) of the NVRA. 52 U.S.C. §20507(i)(1)-(2). This letter explains how we concluded that Michigan is violating Section 8 of the NVRA and the curative steps needed to avoid litigation.

I. The NVRA protects election integrity by requiring States take reasonable efforts to maintain accurate and current lists of registered active voters.

Michigan's voter registration list maintenance program must be "uniform, non-discriminatory, and in compliance with the Voting Rights Act." 52 U.S.C. §20507(b)(1).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Section 8 requires that States "remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters by reason of (A) the death of the registrant; or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant" to outside of his or her current voting jurisdiction. Id. §20507(4)(A)-(B).

Additionally, the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) mandates that States adopt computerized statewide voter registration lists and maintain them "on a regular basis" in accordance with the NVRA. Id. §21083(a)(2)(A). States must "ensure that voter registration records in the State are accurate and are updated regularly," a process which must include making a "reasonable effort to remove registrants who are ineligible to vote from the official list of eligible voters." Id. §21083(a)(4). HAVA's list maintenance mandates include coordination with "State agency records on death" and "State agency records on felony status" to facilitate the removal of individuals who are deceased or rendered ineligible under State law due to felony conviction. Id. §21083(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I)-(II).

As the chief election officials for Michigan, the responsibility rests with you to coordinate and oversee the list maintenance activities of local and county election officials. See, e.g., Scott v. Schedler, 771 F.3d 831, 839 (5th Cir. 2014) ("[T]he NVRA's centralization of responsibility counsels against … buck passing"); United States v. Missouri, 535 F.3d 844, 850 (8th Cir. 2008) (explaining that a State or chief election official "may not delegate the responsibility to conduct a general program to a local official and thereby avoid responsibility if such a program is not reasonably conducted"); see also, e.g., Mich. Comp. Laws §§168.509n, 168.509o, 168.509r, 168.509ff, (setting forth requirements for the Secretary of State and clerks to maintain registration records).

II. Fifty-five Michigan counties have more registered active voters than voting-eligible citizens, and twenty-three others have suspiciously high rates of voter registration.

Based on data gathered from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2021 citizen voting age population data and the most up-to-date count of registered active voters available from the Michigan Bureau of Elections, Michigan is failing to meet its list maintenance obligations. Comparing the registered active voter count to the 2021 Census data reveals that these 55 counties have voter registration rates at or above 100 percent: Alcona (113%), Allegan (105%), Alpena (101%), Antrim (113%), Arenac (104%), Barry (103%), Benzie (109%), Berrien (101%), Calhoun (100%), Cass (100%), Charlevoix (106%), Cheboygan (104%), Clare (102%), Crawford (110%), Delta (104%), Dickinson (101%), Emmet (106%), Genesee (104%), Gladwin (103%), Grand Traverse (102%), Huron (100%), Iosco (104%), Iron (106%), Kalkaska (115%), Kent (101%), Keweenaw (115%), Lapeer (102%), Leelanau (110%), Livingston (104%), Mackinac (111%), Macomb (101%), Manistee (100%), Mason (104%), Menominee (101%), Midland (101%), Missaukee (106%), Monroe (101%), Montmorency (111%), Muskegon (102%), Newaygo (104%), Oakland (102%), Oceana (105%), Ogemaw (106%),

Ontonagon (102%), Osceola (102%), Oscoda (112%), Otsego (112%), Presque Isle (107%), Roscommon (111%), Schoolcraft (108%), Shiawassee (102%), St. Clair (103%), Van Buren (103%), Wayne (102%), and Wexford (105%).

In other words, in these counties there are more registered voters than eligible voters. This impossible statistic shows that voter registration records are not being maintained. Meanwhile, 23 other counties across the State have voter registration rates of 90 percent or greater (in some cases, approaching 100 percent): Alger (95%), Baraga (95%), Bay (99%), Branch (96%), Clinton (99%), Eaton (98%), Gogebic (99%), Hillsdale (96%), Ionia (90%), Jackson (94%), Kalamazoo (95%), Lake (99%), Lenawee (95%), Luce (95%), Marquette (94%), Mecosta (90%), Montcalm (96%), Ottawa (99%), Saginaw (99%), Sanilac (98%), St. Joseph (98%), Tuscola (97%), and Washtenaw (94%).

These voter registration rates are abnormally or, in the case of counties with greater than 100 percent registration, impossibly high. This constitutes strong evidence that Michigan's voter rolls are not being properly maintained. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, only 69.1% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2022 election. See U.S. Census Bureau, Voting and Registration in the Election of November 2020, Table 4a, Reported Voting and Registration of the Total Voting-Age Population, for States: November 2022, perma.cc/XQ3R-E4FT. Similarly, only 72.7% of the citizen voting-age population was registered nationwide in the November 2020 election. See U.S. Census Bureau, Voting and Registration in the Election of November 2020, Table 4a, Reported Voting and Registration, for States: November 2020, perma.cc/7BUT-ZLDA. The U.S. Census Bureau further reported that Michigan's statewide voter registration rates for the 2022 and 2020 elections were 77.1% and 73.8% of the citizen voting-age population, respectively. Id. Thus, these 78 counties are significant outliers, touting voter registration rates 17 to 46 percentage points higher than the national figures from 2022 and 2020, and 13 to 41 percentage points above the State figures for the same period. Discrepancies on this scale cannot be attributed to above-average voter participation and instead point to deficient list maintenance.

Michigan's failure to provide accurate voter rolls violates federal law, jeopardizes the integrity of the upcoming 2024 federal election, and signals to voters that elections in Michigan are not being properly safeguarded.

III. Avoiding litigation

The NVRA includes a private right of action, empowering any "person who is aggrieved by a violation" of the statute to bring a civil action in federal district court for declaratory or injunctive relief. 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(1)-(2); see Green, 2023 WL at *1-*7. If the violations we have identified are not corrected within 90 days of receipt of this letter, we will have to file a lawsuit. See 52 U.S.C. §20510(b)(2).

We hope to avoid litigation and would welcome immediate efforts by your office to bring Michigan into compliance with Section 8. We ask that you evaluate your current list maintenance procedures and protocols to identify the cause of the compliance failures discussed in this letter. We also ask that you modify your current list maintenance program to ensure that it is comprehensive, nondiscriminatory, and in compliance with federal law. Your list maintenance program must identify and remove these categories of individuals from the official lists of eligible voters:

1. All persons who are ineligible to vote by reason of a change in residence;
2. Deceased individuals;
3. Persons who are incarcerated;
4. All other ineligible voters.

We also ask that you, and should they want to respond separately, relevant officials from each named county, respond in writing within 45 days of the date of this letter. This response should fully describe the efforts, policies, and programs you are taking, or plan to undertake before the 2024 general election to bring Michigan into compliance with Section 8. This response should also note when you plan to begin and complete each specified measure and the results of any programs or activities you have already undertaken. We also ask you to advise us what policies are presently in place, or will be put in place, to ensure effective and routine coordination of list maintenance activities with the federal, State, and local entities outlined below. Finally, we seek a description of the specific steps you intend to take to ensure routine and effective list maintenance on a continuing basis beyond the 2024 election. To avoid litigation, we may seek certain reasonable assurances that you will affirmatively undertake these efforts, including the execution of a settlement agreement.

Should you refuse to comply with Section 8 and thus require legal action, you should know that the NVRA authorizes courts to award "reasonable attorney fees, including litigation expenses, and costs" to the prevailing party. 52 U.S.C. §20510(c). Therefore, if litigation ensues, you risk bearing the financial burden of the full cost of the litigation.

IV. Preservation of records

We also ask that you act to preserve certain records as required under the NVRA, should they be needed in the future or for possible litigation. 52 U.S.C. §20507(i). These documents and records include, but are not limited to:

1. A copy of the most recent voter registration database for the State of Michigan and for each named county, including pertinent information on each voter (name, date of birth, home address, voter activity, and active or inactive status);
2. Internal communications and emails of the Michigan Bureau of Elections' office, applicable county boards of elections, and any divisions, bureaus, offices, third party agents, and contractors relating to voter list maintenance;

3. All emails or other communications between the Michigan Bureau of Elections and local elections officials concerning their list maintenance activities, their duties to maintain accurate and current lists, and any consequences arising from a failure to do so;
4. All email or other communications between the Michigan Bureau of Elections and any State or federal offices and agencies, in which the Michigan Bureau of Elections seeks or obtains information about registered voters who have moved, been convicted and imprisoned, died, or are otherwise ineligible, for use in list maintenance activities; and
5. All email or other communications between the Michigan Bureau of Elections and any other State, as well as email and communications with the Electronic Registration Information Center, the American Association of Motor Vehicle Authorities, and the National Association for Public Health Statistics and Information Systems, regarding obtaining information about voters who are deceased or who have moved for use in list maintenance activities.

We look forward to working with you in a productive fashion to ensure the accuracy and currency of Michigan's voter rolls and to protect the integrity of its voting process. While we hope to avoid litigation, if we do not receive the requested response, and if Michigan fails to take the necessary curative steps to resolve the issues identified in this letter, you will be subject to a lawsuit seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

We look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

/s/ Thomas R. McCarthy

Privileged

Per the New York Times, Colorado Republican State Central Committee filed the attached cert petition, which is not yet docketed. Story here: https://www.nytimes.com/2023/12/27/us/colorado-supreme-court-trump.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare

In addition to the disqualification issue, the party raises a First Amendment issue about whether a state can exclude a nominee from a party's primary. Preliminarily, that issue seems not to be an issue the Court will be inclined to take up and insubstantial when the nominee is not qualified to hold office.

Trump does not appear to have filed yet.

Heather and Erik,

As you may have already seen, Maine Secretary of State Shenna Bellows determined yesterday that Donald Trump is disqualified from serving as president under the Fourteenth Amendment and therefore may not run in the presidential primary in Maine. (Unlike in Michigan, Maine law provides authority for the Secretary of State to make this kind of eligibility determination.) The 34-page ruling is attached and also available at https://www.maine.gov/sos/news/2023/Decision%20in%20Challenge%20to%20Trump%20Presidential%20Primary%20Petitions.pdf.

This decision supports the point contained in our outline that the Colorado Supreme Court's decision shows that there are serious legal arguments for disqualification and is likely to be persuasive to others. At pages 23-24, Secretary Bellows notes that the challengers "rely heavily on the proceedings in –and evidence from—the Anderson case. Much of that evidence is in the record here, and I find the reasoning of the Colorado Supreme Court compelling."

Maine law provides for review in the Superior Court (trial court) and then in the Law Court (the highest court). Trump's deadline to seek review in the Superior Court is January 2. Like the Colorado Supreme Court, Secretary Bellows provided that her ruling would be stayed pending review.

Please let us know if you have any questions or would like to discuss.

Best,

Jonathan

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

AFFIDAVIT OF DIRECTOR OF ELECTIONS JONATHAN BRATER

I, Jonathan Brater, being duly sworn, voluntarily state as follows:

1. I have been employed by the Secretary of State as Director of Elections since January 2, 2020 and in such capacity serve as Director of the Bureau of Elections (Bureau). See MCL 168.32.

2. I bring this affidavit in support of Defendants' response to order to show cause and in support of Defendants' motion for summary disposition. If called as a witness, I could testify truthfully and accurately as to the information contained within this declaration.

3. I am personally knowledgeable about provisions of the Michigan Election Law that govern absent voter ballots, election inspectors, election challengers, and the tabulation of ballots.

THE BUREAU'S AUTHORITY

4. Under the authority of the Secretary of State, the Bureau is required to issue instructions and promulgate rules for the conduct of elections, as well as advise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections, including instructions regarding election challenges and challengers. See MCL 168.31(1)(a)-(b).

5. The Bureau is required to publish and provide for use in each precinct a manual of instructions including specific instructions and procedures and forms for processing challenges. See MCL 168.31(1)(c).

6. The Bureau is required to prescribe and require uniform forms it considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections. See MCL 168.31(1)(e).

7. The Bureau is required to establish a curriculum for comprehensive training of all clerks and a comprehensive training curriculum of all precinct inspectors, including those applicable to challengers. See MCL 168.31(1)(j).

8. For decades, the Bureau has issued, produced, and updated instructions and forms under its authority to "issue instructions", "advise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections", publish a "manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on … procedures and forms for processing challenges", "prescribe and require uniform forms, notices, and supplies the secretary of state considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections", and establish a training for election officials and election inspectors, found in the Election Law, rather than under the Bureau's separate authority to "promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act". See MCL 168.31.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

9. Collectively, these instructions and forms comprise hundreds, or even thousands, of pages of material, all of it updated periodically throughout each election cycle as needed. For example, the "Election administrator information" section of the Secretary of State website, found at Michigan.gov/sos/elections includes, among many other materials: a 48-page Ballot Production Standards document; a 57-page Election Inspectors' Procedure Manual; a 357-page Election Officials' Manual; a 13-page Post-election Audit Manual; a 26-page Recall Guide; a 94-page County Canvass Manual; and a 39-page Voting Equipment Test Procedure Manual. In addition to these documents and others posted on the Election administrator information website, the Bureau produces dozens of instructional materials that clerks review as part of their accreditation and continuing education requirements. See MCL 168.31(j)-(m).

10. The Bureau's instructions and forms apply the Michigan Election Law as well other legal authorities governing the conduct of elections in Michigan. When the Bureau provides instructions and training, and when it answers thousands of questions each election cycle from 1,603 clerks and their staff, the Bureau must regularly provide direction, advice, and guidance on methods of conducting elections where the method is not expressly and specifically described by a provision of the Election Law. Election administration is extremely complex, and in the course of multiple elections conducted in thousands of precincts each year, local election officials encounter innumerable combinations of possible scenarios with new situations and questions arising each election.

11. In its instructions, advice, and guidance, the Bureau does not attempt the impossible task of listing every possible scenario that could occur, but it does update its trainings and instructions to address issues that have occurred in recent elections. The Bureau does not provide instruction by merely restating verbatim the language of the Michigan Election Law in providing instructions to clerks; this would be of no help to election officials and would not fulfill the Bureau's responsibility to provide instruction, direction, and training to clerks on the proper method of conducting elections.

12. It would be impossible for the Bureau to promulgate rules under the Administrative Procedures Act, MCL 24.201 et seq., each time it issues instructions, guidance, or direction on issues not expressly and specifically covered by a provision of the Michigan Election Law, and the Bureau has never attempted to do so. In addition to the time, delay, and material resources that would render rulemaking in each situation impossible for the Bureau, providing instruction only through rulemaking would also ignore the Bureau's separate responsibility to provide instruction, direction, and training to clerks on the proper method of conducting elections.

13. The Bureau issues general instructions and answers clerk questions; it does not control either the election-day operation or enforcement of election law in polling places or absent voter ballot processing facilities. The Bureau does not hire or supervise election inspectors or security personnel. These functions are fulfilled by the municipal clerks and those whom they deputize. The Bureau does regularly update its general training and instruction materials to account for questions that have been raised by clerks in recent elections.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

14. The Bureau cannot and does not instruct clerks on the question of whether a particular individual's conduct—such as alleged repeated impermissible or indiscriminate challenges (MCL 168.727), or alleged abusive language toward election inspectors–is disorderly and requires removal from the polling place (MCL 168.678, MCL 168.733). Clerks and election inspectors must make this determination based on the factual scenario they encounter, the Michigan Election Law, and the Bureau's general instruction materials.

THE ELECTION CHALLENGER GUIDANCE DOCUMENT

15. Bureau instructions regarding challengers have been published in multiple different formats for many years.

16. The Bureau has produced a document called "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers" (Challenger Guidance) since at least 2003.

17. Chapter VIII of the Election Officials' Manual, regarding Absent Voter Ballot Election Day Processing, and Chapter XI, regarding Election Day Issues, both include instructions regarding challengers. This manual also fulfills part of the Bureau's responsibility to establish a curriculum for comprehensive training for all clerks. See MCL 168.31(j).

18. The Bureau's document entitled "Managing Your Precinct on Election Day: Election Inspectors' Procedure Manual" also includes instructions regarding challengers. This document is designed for use by election inspectors in precincts on Election Day and fulfills part of the Bureau's responsibility to publish and provide instructions for precincts, including instructions and procedures regarding challenges. See MCL 168.31(1)(c).

19. The Bureau includes instruction on challengers as part of its training and accreditation curriculum for all clerks as well as a "train the trainer" course it provides for county clerks and municipal clerks in larger jurisdictions, who conduct training of election inspectors. Both of these curricula and training are offered in person. This training fulfills part of the Bureau's responsibility to establish a curriculum for comprehensive training for all clerks. See MCL 168.31(1)(j).

20. The Challenger Guidance is published and circulated to help clerks, election inspectors, political parties, organizations, challengers and poll watchers understand the legal provisions that govern challengers and poll watchers on election day, and to instruct clerks and election inspectors on the proper methods of processing challengers and managing challengers on election day.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

21. Both the current and former version of the Challenger Guidance provides instruction to clerks, which they are required to follow in their enforcement of the Election Law. MCL 168.21, 168.31(1).

22. The May 2022 update to the Challenger Guidance included formatting changes and revisions to make the document easier to understand and read. This included rewriting of several sections, which was generally not intended to substantively change the instructions. It also included a larger font size and headers, a table of contents, and the consolidation of two prior documents into one.

23. Previously, two documents regarding challengers were published on the Secretary of State Elections Website. One was the prior version of the Challenger Guidance (12 pages, including a title page) and the other was an FAQ document entitled "The Challenge Process: Questions and Answers" (3 pages). The updated Challenger Guidance is 27 pages including a title page and 2-page table of contents. Accordingly, approximately 14 pages of substantive guidance were replaced with 24 pages of substantive guidance (with fewer words per page).

24. The May 2022 version of the Challenger Guidance was also updated to add or clarify instructions in response to several issues that occurred during the November 2020 general election. Many of these issues occurred at absent voter ballot processing facilities, most frequently at the Detroit facility. Until November 2020, challengers at absent voter ballot processing facilities were relatively uncommon, but the number of challengers at these locations increased significantly in that election.

25. The Challenger Guidance uses the term "absent voter ballot processing facilities" to describe the locations at which jurisdictions tabulate absent voter ballots (unless this is done at in-person precincts, which is common in small jurisdictions).

26. Many of the questions or conflicts that arose in 2020—and the difficulty clerks and their staff encountered in answering those questions—stemmed partially from a lack of clarity and precision in the Michigan Election Law; specifically, how challenger and challenge provisions apply in absent voter ballot processing facilities. The Michigan Election Law does not consistently apply in-person precinct provisions or requirements to absent voter ballot processing facilities.

27. In the Michigan Election Law, the term "absent voter counting board" is used simultaneously to refer to a single absent voter counting board corresponding to an individual in-person precinct, a station within a facility processing absent voter ballots for multiple in-person precincts, the entire facility at which all absent voter ballots are processed for a jurisdiction, and an entire facility at which combined absent voter ballots are processed for multiple jurisdictions in a county. The Michigan Election Law is not always specific as to which of these sub-definitions applies with regard to challengers. See MCL 168.569, 168.671, 168.679, 168.730, 168.733, 168.764d, 168.765a. Accordingly, the Challenger Guidance uses the phrase "absent voter ballot processing facility" for clarity.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

28. Absent voter ballot processing facilities also differ from in-person precincts in other ways critical to the challenge process. Voters are not present at these facilities, and thus cannot be challenged or respond to questions. Voter eligibility is not verified by election inspectors at absent voter ballot processing facilities because the voter's eligibility has already been verified by the clerk. This differs from the process at in-person precincts, where the voter completes an application to vote and is verified by an election inspector in the electronic poll book. But with ballots tabulated at absent voter ballot processing facilities, the clerk has already reviewed the absent voter ballot envelope and checked the voter's signature and information against the Qualified Voter File before sending the envelope to the absent voter ballot processing facility, so absent voter ballot processing facility inspectors must merely verify that the envelope has been reviewed by the clerk by identifying the clerk's marking indicating the clerk has checked the envelope.

29. Additionally, there are sequestration provisions in effect at absent voter ballot processing facilities that do not apply in in-person precincts. Only certain individuals (not including challengers or election inspectors) may leave an absent voter ballot processing facility before the polls close, and individuals are prohibited from communicating information outside of the absent voter ballot processing facility. See MCL 168.765a(9)-(10).

30. In part because of these distinctions and the expanded presence of challengers at absent voter ballot processing facilities in November 2020, several points regarding the proper method of processing challengers and challenges required additional clarification. Accordingly, the Bureau updated the Challenger Guidance to address these points in May 2022.

THE ELECTION CHALLENGER CREDENTIAL FORM

31. In November 2020, there were several different political party and challenger organizations issuing credentials to challengers. This made it more difficult for election inspectors to determine if challengers possessed a valid credential signed by a party or verified challenger organization as required by the Michigan Election Law, particularly at the Detroit absent voter ballot processing facility where hundreds of challengers arrived well after processing had begun. See MCL 168.732. The Bureau also received reports that challengers were receiving credentials from multiple different entities or switching back and forth between entities, making the validity of the credential more difficult to track and verify.

32. The Bureau also received questions in both absent voter counting boards and in-person precincts about whether party logos printed on challenger credentials violated the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Michigan Election Law prohibition on electioneering materials within 100 feet of a polling place entrance. See MCL 168.744.

33. The Bureau had previously not prescribed a uniform form to be used to demonstrate the signed authority challengers must present under MCL 168.732; however, because of these issues, the Bureau determined it was advisable to prescribe a uniform credential form to be used by the challenger authority to designate and assign credentials to its challengers. MCL 168.31(1)(c), (e).

34. The Bureau also received questions about whether credentials had to be on paper or could be presented in electronic form. The Challenger Guidance now specifies that the credential can be in electronic form and displayed on a mobile device and explains how this can be effectuated even if the challenger cannot use the device in an absent voter ballot processing facility.

ELECTION CHALLENGER APPOINTMENT

35. The Bureau received numerous reports that challengers present in polling places and absent voter ballot processing facilities, particularly those arriving in absent voter ballot processing facilities well after ballot processing had begun on Election Day, were not clearly associated with a single party or verified organization eligible to appoint challengers; did not have basic knowledge of the election processes, and were disrupting the orderly administration of polling places and absent voter ballot processing facilities in part because of their ignorance of basic election procedures. For example, challengers were attempting to repeatedly raise challenges about voter eligibility or complaining that absent voter ballot signatures were not being checked in the absent voter ballot processing facilities (they are not checked at the facility but rather by the clerk, as explained above). Reports of this nature occurred only rarely in past elections but were very common in November 2020, particularly from challengers appearing on or after election day at the Detroit absent voter ballot processing facility.

36. The apparent misunderstanding of election law and process was evident in statements made by attorneys in a letter sent to the Wayne County Clerk alleging that "apparent widespread fraud and irregularities" occurred in the 2020 election, and that they would "get to the bottom of it." Among the supposed fraud and irregularities were claims of "failure to verify signatures" (as noted, signatures are verified by the clerk, not by election inspectors at the absent voter ballot processing facility) and of "40,000 unidentified ballots arriving" (challengers apparently did not understand that ballots received by the clerk until 8 p.m. are delivered later, and that ballots are also used to duplicate military voters' ballots for tabulation). The letter also claimed the Detroit absent voter ballot processing facility had processed ballots for Wayne County, when it in fact processed ballots only for the city of Detroit. (Attachment A, Letter to Wayne County Clerk). These types of fundamental and basic misunderstandings of election processes can be avoided by properly educating challengers prior to their service on election day.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

37. In past elections, parties and challenger organizations routinely appointed and trained challengers prior to election day. This general practice ensures challengers receive training on basic election procedures and standards of conduct before the election. The Challenger Guidance strongly encourages parties and organizations to train their challengers in advance of the election.

38. The Challenger Guidance also clarifies that there is no advance deadline to appoint challengers—challengers can be appointed up until Election Day. If a political party or organization inexplicably decides not to train or credential its challengers prior to election day, nothing in the Challenger Guidance prevents them from doing so — although as the November 2020 election demonstrated, unleashing untrained challengers on election workers and voters is irresponsible and inadvisable as it hindered an orderly election.

39. To the extent a party or challenger organization has concerns that the Challenger Guidance would prevent them from reassigning or relocating a previously trained and appointed challenger to a different precinct in the event of an unexpected illness or absence, it does not. The Challenger Credential Card does not require a date of appointment (just date of election), so the Challenger Guidance and form would not prevent a challenger from receiving a credential and entering a polling place or absent voter ballot processing facility.

IMPERMISSIBLE CHALLENGES

40. Challengers may make challenges to voters in a polling place, MCL 168.727, or to procedures in a polling place or absent voter ballot processing facility, MCL 168.733. Challenges must be based on a specific permitted reason that the challenger believes a voter is not eligible to vote or an election procedure is not being followed. Repeated baseless challenges may harass or delay voters or have the effect of improperly slowing down voting and election processes, interfering with an orderly polling place. See MCL 168.678, 168.727.

41. The Bureau has received reports of an increased volume of challenges that were not based on any permitted reason in the Michigan Election Law. For this reason, the Challenger Guidance provides additional instruction on the proper method for election inspectors to handle baseless challenges. The Challenger Guidance explains that a challenge must be permissible (have a valid basis), at which point the challenge is either accepted or rejected. If the challenge does not have a valid basis, it is impermissible and need not be recorded each time it is made.

42. For example, at an absent voter ballot processing valid facility it is permissible to make a challenge that an election inspector is not reviewing the envelope to ensure the clerk has checked it; the challenge will be accepted or rejected depending upon whether the election inspector is actually reviewing the envelope. Conversely, it is impermissible to make a challenge that an election inspector is not checking the voter's signature against the Qualified Voter File, because this is not necessary or required at the processing facility. This guidance helps ensure all types of challenges are handled properly and in an orderly manner. See MCL 168.678, 168.727, 168.733. Nothing in the Challenger Guidance permits an election inspector from failing to record a challenge made with a permissible basis.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

ELECTION CHALLENGER LIAISON

43. Clerks have authority to supervise election inspectors at polling places and absent voter processing facilities. Each precinct has a precinct chair, which is typically the most experienced or senior election inspector. MCL 168.674. In-person precincts also have an electronic pollbook inspector who is responsible for operating the electronic poll book. Election inspectors perform differing functions and have different levels of expertise.

44. Although challengers have the right to bring issues to the attention of election inspectors, the Michigan Election Law does not specifically state that they can do so by speaking to any election inspector at any time. MCL 168.733. Rather, consistent with clerks' authority to supervise election inspectors and election inspectors' mandate to maintain order at the polling place, MCL 168.678, the Challenger Guidance instructs that the proper method of handling challenges is to direct challengers to speak with a designated challenger liaison, who will be best equipped to answer and respond to all challenges correctly and consistently. The challenger liaison must respond to the challenge and nothing in the Challenger Guidance permits a challenger liaison from preventing a challenger from bringing an issue to the attention of an election inspector. Moreover, nothing in the Challenger Guidance prohibits clerks or election inspectors from determining that all election inspectors may serve in this liaison role or that challengers can speak to any election inspector, if that is what the clerk, precinct chair, or challenger liaison prefers. The Bureau's authority to issue this instruction is found in MCL 168.31(1)(c) ("procedures for processing . . . challenges").

CHALLENGER POSSESSION OF ELECTRONIC DEVICES

45. As with prior versions of the challenger guidance and other instructional materials, the 2022 Challenger Guidance explains that recording devices (including the recording functions of smart phones) may not be used in polling places or absent voter processing facilities. These prohibitions have long been in place to safeguard voter privacy, maintain an orderly polling place, and prevent voter intimidation. See Const 193, art 2, § 4, MCL 168.678, MCL 168.932.

46. Voters cast their ballots in open rooms within polling places. Voters have the right to a secret ballot and the right to vote without being intimidated. Recording devices capable of viewing voted ballots and recording voters interfere with both of these rights. Accordingly, the Bureau has long instructed clerks that these devices are not permitted in the polling place. The only exception is voters using a smartphone or camera to photograph their own voted ballot in the voting station, if the voter wishes to do so; this change was made as part of a settlement to a federal lawsuit (Crookston v. Benson, WD-Mich, Docket No. 1:16-cv-1109) challenging the prohibition on photography in the polling place.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

47. At the absent voter ballot processing facility, voted ballots and envelopes with voter names are also present and visible. Thus, photographing or recording the processing of absent voter ballots could also result in voters' selections being revealed at these locations. In addition, phones are not permitted in the processing facility because of the sequestration provisions prohibiting communication outside the counting board, which apply to anyone present in a counting board aside from authorized individuals. MCL168.765a(9)-(10).

PUBLICATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF CHALLENGER GUIDANCE

48. The Challenger Guidance was updated in May 2022 to ensure the guidance could be reviewed and incorporated into clerk training materials, and so that parties, challenger organizations, and challengers would have access to the guidance well in advance of the August 2022 primary and November 2022 general election.

49. When the Challenger Guidance was updated in May 2022, it was published on the Secretary of State's public website. The updated Challenger Guidance, along with a link to the Challenger Credential Form was also announced in a Bureau of Elections News Update on May 25, 2022. (Attachment B, News Update).

50. I have reviewed the Complaint submitted in this case by Richard DeVisser, the Michigan Republican Party, and the Republican National Committee. The complaint contains a number of inaccuracies regarding the timing of the release of the guidance and the Party's awareness of the new document. The Complaint claims that new version of the Challenger Guidance was published "as late as July 4, 2022" (the Complaint notes that July 4, the date the Complaint provides, is within a month of the August Primary). But July 4 is a state holiday. In fact, the Challenger Guidance was published on the Secretary of State website and distributed in a News Update on May 25, 2022.

51. The Complaint also claims that the Plaintiffs "learned of one such rule change [the challenger credential form] on the evening of the August 2022 primary election." However, on May 31, 2022, Adam Fracassi, the Bureau of Elections Regulatory Manager, received a text message from Matthew Seifried, Elections Integrity Director for the Republican National Committee. The text message read, in part, "I just saw the updated guidance on poll challengers and poll watchers. Thank you and everyone at the

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Bureau of Elections for putting that together. Im [sic] in the process of developing our AVCB training and am going to reference it a lot." Mr. Seifried also asked about the location of the blank poll challenger credential card (which is posted online). (Attachment C, 5/31/22 Text Messages).

52. Furthermore, Adam Fracassi emailed John Inhulsen on July 26, 2022, explaining that he coordinates with parties on challenger issues and was seeking contact information regarding challenger coordination for the Republican Party. On August 1, 2022, Mr. Inhulsen responded providing contact information for himself and Paul Cordes. (Attachment D, 7/26/22 E-mails).

53. Based on the messages received from Mr. Seifried (on May 31, 2022) and Mr. Inhulsen (on August 1, 2022), the Bureau had no reason to believe the Michigan Republican Party or Republican National Committee had any concerns with the updated Challenger Guidance. (See Attachments C & D).

54. Then, on August 25, 2022, the Republican National Committee and the Michigan Republican Party sent a letter to the Bureau inquiring about the legal basis for the challenger credential form. The Attorney General's office responded to this letter on behalf of the Secretary on September 2, 2022.

55. The August 25, 2022 letter raised questions only about the challenger credential form. The Bureau did not learn of the Republican Party's concerns with other provisions of the Challenger Guidance until this lawsuit was filed on September 30, 2022—four months after the Challenger Guidance was released and the Republican National Committee contacted the Bureau confirming they had reviewed it, two months after the August 2022 primary, and five weeks after they received a response to their letter.

PREJUDICE CAUSED BY PLAINTIFFS' DELAY

56. This is an extremely busy time for the Bureau; absentee ballot voting is already underway and numerous deadlines for the administration of the November 8, 2022 election are occurring over the next month. There is limited time and resources available to respond to legal challenges to guidance that was published months earlier, and the Bureau's ability to respond to these legal challenges has been hindered by Plaintiffs' waiting to bring this action until the election was not only imminent but already underway.

57. The updated Challenger Guidance has already been incorporated into Bureau training provided to clerks in the Summer of 2022. Specifically, the Bureau conducted its biannual election cycle training, which are courses in person in locations across the state in May and June 2022, as well as in clerk accreditation trainings.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

58. Additionally, the Challenger Guidance was incorporated into the Election Procedures Manual used at polling places. This document has been printed and mailed to clerks across the state.

59. Although it would be possible to make changes to the online version of the Challenger Guidance and other training materials, the Bureau of Elections cannot publish, print, and distribute statewide thousands of copies of the Election Procedures Manual at this date, and cannot conduct further in-person trainings in this short period before the election. Even if this were possible, clerks are no longer available to attend new training courses at this time. Changing training and manuals at this late date would also cause significant confusion among clerks and election inspectors.

60. Some clerks have already begun training their election inspectors for the upcoming election, so these inspectors would need to somehow be retrained on the changed procedures.

Re: Preservation of Evidence

Dear Ms. Garrett:

We represent John James, candidate for U.S. Senate. It has come to our attention that due to apparent widespread fraud and irregularities, the absent voter ballots counted in Wayne County may be in question. The vote counts in Wayne County appear to be irregular, if not fraudulent. This letter places you on notice to preserve and not destroy any evidence related to the absent voter process in Wayne County.

We have received and documented hundreds of reports of irregularities that occurred during the processing of Wayne County absent voter ballots at the TCF Center in Detroit. The information we have received casts serious doubt on the validity of the results of the election. Irregularities range from challenger intimidation, lack of access, unsecure ballots, improper processing, failure to verify signatures, mismatched envelopes and ballots, ballot back-dating, failure to verify individuals in e-poll and supplemental poll books and even reports of nearly 40,000 unidentified ballots arriving at 3:45 AM on November 4. These incidents raise serious concerns over the sanctity of the electoral process in Wayne County. As a result, we expect investigations and recounts will occur. We will get to the bottom of it.

In light the egregious actions discussed above, we demand that you affirmatively preserve, and not destroy, delete, hide or misplace the following:

- Absent ballot requests
- E-poll books
- Supplemental poll books
- Ballot drop boxes
- Footage from all ballot drop box locations[1]

- All absent ballots, including those counted, challenged and provisional
- Personnel records
- Challenger sign in sheets
- Documents and materials of all kinds, without limitation regarding the absent voter process—from absent ballot request through the sealing of the ballot boxes and uploading of tabulations.

Further, we demand a list of every absent voter ballot drop box in Wayne County.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter. Please respond within 8 hours to confirm your compliance with these demands.

Updated Challenger Document

The Bureau of Elections' Appointment, Rights and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers document has been updated and is available on Michigan.gov/Elections. This document provides more detailed information for challengers, poll watchers, clerks, and election inspectors regarding the different types of challenges allowed and the steps to take when those challenges are made. It also provides guidance regarding challengers and poll watchers in Absent Voter Counting Boards. We will be printing the document in a booklet form for easier use in precincts. We will also add the booklets to the county order form in eLearning when they are available.

Additionally, we have provided a Michigan Challenger Credential Card on our website. Parties and credentialling organizations should ensure the credentials issued to their challengers substantially comply with this form.

QVF Software Updates

- Mass AV now has an "Include: Perm Accessible" option to email the accessible app link to voters from QVF. Uncheck the voters for whom QVF does not have an email address on file before clicking "Send Accessible App"; an error message will show the voters who could not be emailed.
- Perm AV and Perm Accessible lists are now exclusive of one another. Uncheck one list to add a check to the other.
- AV Details & AV Scan now shows a secondary signature as well as the primary signature, when available.
- In AV Details, a ballot's sent or received date can be edited without having to the delete the ballot and re-enter with the corrected dates.
- In Voting History, changed the address to display "Legacy Address" for elections held prior to the launch of QVF Refresh

Election Security

Over the past few months many of our local clerks have received phishing emails from a malicious source. Fortunately, clerks have been diligent and able to identify these malicious emails, doing an excellent job of putting their election-security training to good use! It is critical to remain cyber-resilient. At the below link is a detailed infographic to assist with avoiding Phishing emails:

Ballot Proof Approval for August 2, 2022 Primary Election

If the Board of State Canvassers has certified the candidate list, the Bureau of Elections will accept ballots for conditional approval as to form for the August 2, 2022 election beginning on Tuesday, May 31, 2022. This is part of an effort to help counties, local jurisdictions and vendors have more lead time to have absent voter ballots available for voters starting 40 days before August 2. Ballot proofs should be submitted to Dave Tarrant at Tarrantd2@Michigan.gov. Please note that under the Michigan Constitution, the Michigan Legislature may add proposed constitutional amendments to the ballot as late as June 3. The BOE is not aware of any efforts to add constitutional amendments to the August ballot at this time but cannot guarantee that the Michigan Legislature will not do so. BOE approval of ballot format will therefore be conditional on no additional state-level measures being added to the ballot.

Once BOE approves the form of the ballot, it is imperative that county and local clerks employ a rigorous proofing process of the content of the ballot. That is especially important this year; while reprinting ballots because of errors is always problematic, it will likely be especially difficult and expensive this year because of shortages in paper supply. Important steps to take include:

- Counties and municipalities should establish points of contact and timelines for the review of ballots to ensure that every ballot style is reviewed by both the

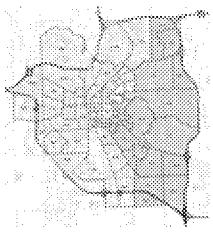
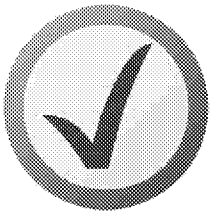
How to avoid Phishing Emails



Redistricting Status Update

All districts subject to redistricting in 2021 have been updated in QVF. This does not necessarily mean that every jurisdiction's redistricting is 100% complete at this time. Please review your jurisdiction's Street Index Report and Permanent Geography module to identify areas of concern and email questions to ElectionData@Michigan.gov. Redistricting-related questions should not be submitted through the standard "Street Change Requests" tool. The "Street Change Requests" tool is for new street segments, expanded house number ranges or school district assignment corrections. The Bureau will do its best to address these requests expeditiously as redistricting winds down.



Polling Location Assignments

Polling locations for the August Primary have been published to MVIC. Clerks should review precinct assignments in both the Precincts & Polling Locations and the Election Geography modules for accuracy. Any edits to polling locations moving forward for August and November will need to be committed in both modules of QVF. MVIC displays the polling location that is assigned in the Election Geography module.

county and municipal clerk prior to printing.
- Counties should communicate with neighboring counties about any school district language in school districts that cross county lines.
- Carefully review your split precincts and any district numbers that have changed. Ensure you have accounted for all your ballot splits.
- Ensure all "vote for" numbers are correct.
- Make sure all local office partial terms are included on the ballot.

Election Geo & AV Impacts

The Bureau of Elections continues to review US Congressional, State House, State Senate, County Commissioner districts and precinct assignments, making corrections where necessary. During this time, changes may occur that impact your jurisdiction's election geography. Counting Boards and Ballot Style Aliases may be reset while making district corrections, so please be aware of the potential for these changes while processing absent voter ballot applications.

Redistricting Module Retirement

Clerk access to the Redistricting module will be removed soon. New requests can no longer be submitted through the module; however, any requests and files already submitted will be retained and accessed by Bureau staff.

OPINION AND ORDER

Case No. 22-000111-MZ

Hon. Douglas B. Shapiro

At a session of said Court held in the City of Lansing, County of Ingham, State of Michigan.

Pending before the Court is plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and defendant's MCR 2.116(C)(4) and (C)(8) motion for summary disposition. Having reviewed the briefing and hearing arguments on September 20, 2022, the Court GRANTS defendant's motion for summary disposition and DISMISSES plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction as moot.

I. BACKGROUND

At issue in this matter is whether defendant, Department of Technology, Management & Budget (DTMB), lawfully established a prevailing-wage policy for contractors working on state

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

projects several years after the repeal of the Prevailing Wage Act, MCL 408.551 et seq., repealed by 2018 PA 171.

Before it was repealed in 2018, the Prevailing Wage Act provided, in relevant part, that

> [e]very contract executed between a contracting agent and a successful bidder as contractor and entered into pursuant to advertisement and invitation to bid for a state project which requires or involves the employment of construction mechanics . . . and which is sponsored or financed in whole or in part by the state shall contain an express term that the rates of wages and fringe benefits to be paid to each class of mechanics by the bidder and all of his subcontractors, shall be not less than the wage and fringe benefit rates prevailing in the locality in which the work is to be performed. [MCL 408.552, repealed by 2018 PA 171.]

The Prevailing Wage Act further required the contracting agent (the state entity) to have the commissioner (of the Department of Labor) determine the prevailing-wage rates and fringe-benefit rates for all classes of construction mechanics outlined in the proposed contract and to include a schedule of the rates within the specifications for the work. MCL 408.553, repealed by 2018 PA 171. The Prevailing Wage Act also made it a misdemeanor to violate the provisions of the statute. MCL 408.557, repealed by 2018 PA 171.

In June 2018, the Legislature approved a voter-initiated petition, under Const 1963, art 2, § 9, that repealed the Prevailing Wage Act. See 2018 PA 171. The repealer, which appears in 2018 PA 171, simply stated "408.551-408.588 Repealed. 2018, Act 171, Imd. Eff. June 6, 2018." "Enacting section 2" of the repealer appropriated certain funds toward communicating the repeal of the Prevailing Wage Act to the public, and "[e]nacting section 3" contained a severability clause. The corresponding Compiler's Note stated, "Public Act 171 of 2018 was proposed by initiative petition pursuant to Const 1963, art 2, § 9. On June 6, 2018, the initiative petition was approved by an affirmative vote of the majority of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and filed with the Secretary of State." The repealer did not restrict defendant from establishing its own prevailing-wage policy based on its authority to develop the terms of state contracts, as outlined in the Management and Budget Act, MCL 18.1101 et seq.

On October 7, 2021, Governor Gretchen Whitmer issued a press statement announcing that defendant would require contractors and subcontractors bidding on DTMB projects greater than $50,000 to pay their employees the prevailing wage in the region. At the time, the Governor's Office explained, "Michigan's repeal eliminated the state's prevailing-wage requirement, but left the door open for DTMB to require prevailing wage under its authority to develop the terms of state contracts." Thus, "[t]he move reinstates the prevailing wage requirement, which was repealed in June 2018, and ensures that any construction worker working on a state construction project receives a fair wage." Unlike a violation of the Prevailing Wage Act, violation of defendant's prevailing-wage policy does not constitute a crime.

Beginning with contracts initially posted for bidding after March 1, 2022, defendant required state contractors and subcontractors to pay the applicable prevailing wage. Defendant posted certain requirements and frequently asked questions for the prevailing-wage policy on its website, providing the following administrative guide citation:

> 1.3.13 Prevailing Wage

> With the exception of lease build-outs, if a project greater than $50,000 involves employing construction mechanics (e.g., asbestos, hazardous material handling, boilermaker, carpenter, cement mason, electrician, office reconstruction and installation, laborer including cleaning debris, scraping floors, or sweeping floors in construction areas, etc.) and is sponsored or financed in whole or in part by State funds, state contractors must pay prevailing wage. On July 21, 2022, plaintiff, a trade association representing approximately 900 construction and construction-related firms, sued in this Court for declaratory and injunctive relief, claiming that (1) defendant's prevailing-wage policy violated the separation-of-powers doctrine; (2) the prevailing-wage policy was not enacted in compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act of 1969 (APA), MCL 24.201 et seq.; and (3) defendant's conduct was an ultra vires exercise of legislative power. Plaintiff also moves for a preliminary injunction to enjoin enforcement of defendant's prevailing-wage policy, arguing that it is likely to prevail on the merits, and that its members will sustain irreparable financial harm without an injunction and if forced to pay a prevailing wage. Finally, plaintiff argues, an injunction would not harm defendant or the public because the injunction would return the contract-bidding process to the status quo between 2018 and 2022.

Defendant responded to the motion for a preliminary injunction and moved for summary disposition as its first response to the complaint. Defendant first argues, in its motion for summary disposition, that plaintiff lacks standing to sue and its claims are unripe. Next, defendant argues it did not violate separation of powers or commit an ultra vires act by establishing a prevailing-wage policy for DTMB contracts. The APA did not bind defendant because it was exercising a legislative grant of power when enacting the prevailing-wage policy. In its response to plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, defendant adds that plaintiff failed to sue for nine months after Governor Whitmer's announcement, and nearly five months after defendant's prevailing-wage policy went into effect. Also, according to defendant, plaintiff's claim for irreparable harm remains speculative and is outweighed by the harm to local economies if defendant were prohibited from enforcing the prevailing-wage policy.[1]

The Court heard arguments on both motions on September 20, 2022, and the parties agreed that the Court may decide both motions simultaneously.

II. ANALYSIS

A. JUSTICIABILITY CHALLENGE

Defendant challenges plaintiff's standing to sue on behalf of its membership and the ripeness of its claims.[2] The Court disagrees with defendant's arguments and concludes that plaintiff's claims are justiciable.

[1] The Court permitted Michigan Building and Construction Trades Council to intervene as a defendant. Michigan Building and Construction Trades Council has concurred in defendant's response to plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and in defendant's motion for summary disposition.

[2] Defendant requests summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(4) on the basis that plaintiff's claims are not justiciable. Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(4) when the Court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction over the case. Ind Mich Power Co v Community Mills, Inc, 336 Mich App 50, 54; 969 NW2d 354 (2020). " 'When viewing a motion under MCR 2.116(C)(4), [the] Court must determine whether the pleadings demonstrate that the defendant was entitled to judgment as a matter of law, or whether the affidavits and other proofs show that there was no genuine issue of material fact.' " Id. (citation omitted).

Defendant further argues that plaintiff has failed to state a claim for relief under MCR 2.116(C)(8). This motion tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. Bailey v Antrim Co, ___ Mich App ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket No. 357838); slip op at 5. "A motion under MCR 2.116(C)(8) may . . . be granted when a claim is so clearly unenforceable that no factual development could possibly justify recovery." Id. The court will consider the factual allegations in the complaint as true, but may also consider documentary evidence attached to the complaint. Jawad A Shah, MD, PC v State Farm Mut Auto Ins Co, 324 Mich App 182, 206; 920 NW2d 148 (2018).

To the extent the Court is required to interpret the Management and Budget Act, the Court will examine the language of the statutes to determine the Legislature's intent. D'Agostini Land Co LLC v Dep't of Treasury, 322 Mich App 545, 554; 912 NW2d 593 (2018). "The Legislature is presumed to intend the meaning clearly expressed, and this Court must give effect to the plain, ordinary, or generally accepted meaning of the Legislature's terms." Id. As for the Prevailing Wage Act's repealer, 2018 PA 171, to the extent the Court is required to interpret its provisions, the court will do so in line with the intent of the electors who initiated the law. DeRuiter v Byron Twp, 505 Mich 130, 139; 949 NW2d 91 (2020).

> [A] litigant has standing whenever there is a legal cause of action. Further, whenever a litigant meets the requirements of MCR 2.605, it is sufficient to establish standing to seek a declaratory judgment. Where a cause of action is not provided at law, then a court should, in its discretion, determine whether a litigant has standing. A litigant may have standing in this context if the litigant has a special injury or right, or substantial interest, that will be detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large or if the statutory scheme implies that the Legislature intended to confer standing on the litigant. [Groves v Dep't of Corrections, 295 Mich App 1, 5; 811 NW2d 563 (2011) (alteration in original), citing Lansing Sch Ed Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Ed, 487 Mich 349, 372; 792 NW2d 686 (2010) (LSEA).]

The Court of Appeals has explained that the doctrine of ripeness is like the doctrine of standing in that both doctrines focus on the timing of the lawsuit. Van Buren Charter Twp v Visteon Corp, 319 Mich App 538, 553; 904 NW2d 192 (2017). For a matter to be ripe, the plaintiff must have an actual injury to bring a claim, and cannot premise their lawsuit on a hypothetical injury. Id. at 554.

Defendants argue that plaintiff lacks standing to sue under the "disappointed bidder doctrine." As the Court of Appeals acknowledged in Groves, "Michigan jurisprudence has never recognized that a disappointed bidder . . . has the right to challenge the bidding process." Groves, 295 Mich App at 5. This is because a contract bidder lacks an expectancy interest in the public contract to be awarded. Id. at 5-6. The rationale behind the rule is that competitive bidding for public contracts is designed to benefit taxpayers and not the parties seeking the contracts. Id. at 7.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

The problem with defendant's theory is that plaintiff is not a disappointed bidder to a specific state contract. As plaintiff notes, each case defendant cites addressed a losing bidder's challenge to a state contract after it was made. See Cedroni Assoc, Inc v Tomblinson, Harburn Assoc, Architects & Planners, Inc, 492 Mich 40, 43-44; 821 NW2d 1 (2012) (the plaintiff, the lowest bidder, sued the defendant for tortious interference after a public body awarded a contract to the defendant, the second-lowest bidder); Detroit v Wayne Circuit Judges, 128 Mich 438, 438-439; 87 NW 376 (1901) (the city of Detroit accepted a bid to repave a street and the plaintiff, the lowest bidder, challenged the decision); MCNA Ins Co v Dep't of Tech, Mgt & Budget, 326 Mich App 740, 741-742; 929 NW2d 817 (2019) (the petitioner submitted a proposal in response to a state request for submissions and challenged the respondent's decision to accept another proposal); Groves, 295 Mich App at 4 (the plaintiff sued after another entity won a state-contract bid); and Rayford v Detroit, 132 Mich App 248; 347 NW2d 210 (1984) (laid-off police officers sued to get their jobs back after a change to the city budget). In this case, plaintiff is challenging defendant's authority to enforce the prevailing-wage policy—not its decision to enter into a specific contract. Thus, the disappointed bidder doctrine does not preclude plaintiff's lawsuit.

The Court looks, instead, to whether plaintiff has met the criteria to request declaratory relief under MCR 2.605. MCR 2.605(A)(1) provides, "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, a Michigan court of record may declare the rights and other legal relations of an interested party seeking a declaratory judgment, whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." Defendant challenges whether there is an "actual controversy" in this matter, arguing that plaintiff's injury is purely hypothetical. It argues that plaintiff and its members have no special injury or right distinct from the public at large, which renders its claims unripe.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The most relevant case on this topic is Int'l Union, United Auto, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486; 815 NW2d 132 (2012) (UAW). In UAW, the plaintiff sued on behalf of its members to enjoin enforcement of a policy relating to the political candidacy of the defendant's employees. Id. at 489-492. The defendant argued there was no actual controversy, for standing purposes, because it had not yet applied the policy to any employees. Id. at 492. The Court of Appeals held that courts may not decide hypothetical (or unripe) issues, but clarified that a court may grant declaratory relief to guide or direct future conduct. Id. at 495. "The essential requirement of an 'actual controversy' under the rule is that the plaintiff pleads and proves facts that demonstrate an adverse interest necessitating the sharpening of the issues raised." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted). Thus, the Court concluded that even though the defendant had not yet acted on the policy, the plaintiff had standing to settle the issue before it ripened into a violation of the law. Id. at 496-497.

Likewise, although plaintiff does not allege that defendant has denied its members a contract based on the prevailing-wage requirements, the Court concludes that, as a representative for bidders on state contracts, plaintiff has demonstrated an adverse interest that is distinct from the public at large and that necessitates a sharpening of the issues at this juncture. Plaintiff's injury is not purely hypothetical because its members must alter their business practices to obtain a state-government contract. Plaintiff has standing to sue for declaratory relief, and its claim is ripe for this Court's review.

B. SEPARATION OF POWERS

Next, defendant argues that the prevailing-wage policy was a proper exercise of its discretionary authority under the Management and Budget Act. On this point, the Court agrees.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Plaintiff's first challenge to defendant's authority to enact a prevailing-wage policy is on the basis of separation of powers. Article 3, § 2 of the Michigan Constitution provides for separation of powers among the three branches of government as follows: "The powers of government are divided into three branches: legislative, executive and judicial. No person exercising powers of one branch shall exercise powers properly belonging to another branch except as expressly provided in this constitution."

The Michigan Supreme Court has explained that " 'the separation of powers doctrine does not require so strict a separation as to provide no overlap of responsibilities and powers.' " Taxpayers of Mich against Casinos v Michigan, 478 Mich 99, 105; 732 NW2d 487 (2007) (citation omitted). Rather, an overlap is permissible if " 'the grant of authority to one branch is limited and specific and does not create encroachment or aggrandizement of one branch at the expense of the other . . . .' " Id. (citation omitted). Thus, the branches of government are not "wholly separate." Id. at 105-106 (quotation marks and citation omitted).

The separation-of-powers principle has led to the development of a standard known as the nondelegation doctrine. Taylor v Smithkline Beecham Corp, 468 Mich 1, 8; 658 NW2d 127 (2003). The nondelegation doctrine essentially prohibits the Legislature from delegating its power to either the executive branch or judicial branch, but permits the Legislature to obtain assistance from the other branches of government under certain circumstances. Id. By way of example, the Legislature may delegate a task to an executive-branch agency if the Legislature provides "sufficient standards" for the executive agency to follow, at which point the task becomes a proper exercise of executive power. Id. at 10 n 9.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

The Legislature has delegated certain powers to defendant in the Management and Budget Act. Among other powers, MCL 18.1261(2) grants defendant broad discretionary authority over the award, solicitation, and amendment of state contracts. The statute provides, "The department shall make all discretionary decisions concerning the solicitation, award, amendment, cancellation, and appeal of state contracts." MCL 18.1261(2) (emphasis added).

With that said, the Legislature also gave defendant ample guidance to support its discretionary decision making, as required under the nondelegation doctrine. By way of example, the Legislature requires defendant to award a construction contract to the "responsive and responsible best value bidder." MCL 18.1241(4). The Legislature defined the term "responsive and responsible best value bidder" to mean the bidder who meets the following criteria:

> (a) A bidder who complies with all bid specifications and requirements.
> (b) A bidder who has been determined by the department to be responsible by the following criteria:
>
> (i) The bidder's financial resources.
>
> (ii) The bidder's technical capabilities.
>
> (iii) The bidder's professional experience.
>
> (iv) The bidder's past performance.
>
> (v) The bidder's insurance and bonding capacity.
>
> (vi) The bidder's business integrity.
>
> (c) A bidder who has been selected by the department through a selection process that evaluates the bid on both price and qualitative components to determine what is the best value for this state. Qualitative components may include, but are not limited to, all of the following:
>
> (i) Technical design.
> (ii) Technical approach.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(iii) Quality of proposed personnel.

(iv) Management plans. [MCL 18.1241(4)(a)-(4)(c).]

By providing the above criteria, the Legislature provides defendant with "sufficient standards" to follow, making the Management and Budget Act a proper delegation of legislative power. But beyond providing the above standards, the Legislature does not regulate defendant's discretionary powers at the granular level. For example, when deciding the quality of proposed personnel, defendant has the discretion to determine what metrics it uses to measure the quality of the personnel, such as experiential background. Nor does the Legislature, provide detailed guidance on how to measure the bidder's business integrity, leaving the specifics of that decision to defendant as well. The Legislature also does not direct defendant on what materials to require as part of the "technical design" or the "technical approach."

The only case plaintiff cites to limit defendant's discretionary authority to award a state contract is Leavy v City of Jackson, 247 Mich 447, 450; 226 NW 214 (1929), in which the Michigan Supreme Court held that a public body's exercise of discretion to accept or reject contract bids is only curtailed when necessary to prevent fraud, violation of trust, or an injustice. But plaintiff does not allege that defendant has acted with fraud or has committed a violation of trust. 2018 PA 171 simply repealed the Prevailing Wage Act without substituting any language in its place or providing any rationale for the repeal. See 2018 PA 171. The Court declines to read any prohibitions into the Prevailing Wage Act repealer that do not appear in, and cannot be implied from, the language of the statute. See Griswold Props, LLC v Lexington Ins Co, 276 Mich App 551, 564; 741 NW2d 549 (2007) ("A court cannot read into a clear statute that which is not within the manifest intention of the Legislature as derived from the language of the statute itself.").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Court finds Associated Builders & Contractors v Lansing, 499 Mich 177; 880 NW2d 765 (2016), instructive in this context. In Associated Builders, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant (a municipality) lacked authority to adopt an ordinance regulating wages paid by third parties, even when the work was done on municipal contracts and through the use of municipal funds. Id. at 181. The Michigan Supreme Court, however, held that municipalities had broad constitutional powers over local concerns, which included the power to set terms for municipal contracts with third parties. Id. at 187-188. Thus, because the Michigan Constitution granted municipalities broad control over local concerns, and because there was no other source of law prohibiting the city of Lansing from setting a wage policy, Lansing's ordinance withstood the plaintiff's challenge. Id. at 189-190. Similarly, in this case, the Prevailing Wage Act repealer did not limit defendant's broad authority under the Management and Budget Act to enact policies relating to state contracts, including a prevailing-wage policy.

Had the Legislature wished to limit defendant's ability to set a prevailing wage, it could have done so through statute. The Local Government Labor Regulatory Limitation Act, MCL 123.1381 et seq., expressly prohibits local governments from requiring employers to pay an employee a wage or benefit based on the prevailing wage in the locality. MCL 123.1386 provides, in relevant part, "A local governmental body shall not adopt, enforce, or administer an ordinance, local policy, or local resolution requiring an employer to pay to an employee a wage or fringe benefit based on wage and fringe benefit rates prevailing in the locality." The statute did not apply to state projects subject to the Prevailing Wage Act (which was still in effect at the time the Local Government Labor Regulatory Limitation Act was enacted). Id. The rationale for the Local Government Labor Regulatory Limitation Act was the Legislature's conclusion that "regulation of the employment relationship between a nonpublic employer and its employees is a matter of state concern and is outside the express or implied authority of local governmental bodies to regulate, absent express delegation of that authority to the local governmental body." MCL 123.1382. This statute demonstrates that the Legislature knew how to limit another governmental body's ability to set a prevailing wage. The Legislature declined to do so here. And while plaintiff notes that the repeal of the Prevailing Wage Law was initiated by voter petition (not by proposed legislation), the Legislature could have proposed an alternative law for voter consideration that expressly prohibited prevailing wage. Or, now that the 2018 legislative session has expired, the Legislature could pass a new law at any time prohibiting defendant from establishing a prevailing-wage policy.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Finally, plaintiff argues that defendant's interpretation of its powers under the Management and Budget Act conflicts with certain prohibitions outlined in the Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act, MCL 408.871 et seq. The implication is that by violating the Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act, defendant has violated the separation-of-powers doctrine as well.

The purpose of Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act is to "provide for more economical, nondiscriminatory, neutral, and efficient procurement of construction-related goods and services by this state and political subdivisions of this state as market participants, and providing for fair and open competition best effectuates this intent." MCL 408.872.[3] Plaintiff cites MCL 408.875, which provides:

[3] As intervening-defendant notes, the Sixth Circuit has concluded that the Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act is proprietary—as opposed to regulatory—in nature. Mich Bldg and Constr Trades Council v Snyder, 729 F3d 572, 577 (CA 6, 2013).

> Subject to section [MCL 408.878], a governmental unit awarding a contract on or after the effective date of the amendatory act that added [MCL 408.872] for the construction, repair, remodeling, or demolition of a facility and any construction manager acting on its behalf shall not, in any bid specifications, project agreements, or other controlling documents:
> (a) Require or prohibit a bidder, offeror, contractor, or subcontractor from entering into or adhering to an agreement with 1 or more labor organizations in regard to that project or a related construction project.
> (b) Otherwise discriminate against a bidder, offeror, contractor, or subcontractor for becoming or remaining or refusing to become or remain a signatory to, or for adhering or refusing to adhere to, an agreement with 1 or more labor organizations in regard to that project or a related construction project.

Plaintiff argues that the prevailing-wage policy discriminates in favor of bidders who enter into collective bargaining agreements with unionized employees, in violation of MCL 408.875(b). It points to language in a Michigan Department of Labor and Economic Opportunity (LEO) document titled "DTMB Prevailing Wage Commercial Survey," which defendant used to set the prevailing-wage rates. Plaintiff argues that the survey violated the Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act because the survey directs prospective bidders, "It is critical that you provide a copy of the pertinent collective bargaining agreement and the applicable understanding or understandings, if any, for each listed rate, and that you indicate the page numbers where all information is found as requested on the form." But plaintiff does not cite the entirety of the provision.

The complete text of relevant provision in the commercial survey provides:

> Please provide prevailing wages and fringe benefits currently in effect under the applicable collective bargaining agreement, and under any applicable understandings associated with the agreement. List rates separately for each geographic area and, if applicable, for each size of project for which there are different rates in effect.
> On each rate sheet you complete, if there is only one pay rate in effect for a job classification, list that rate as the prevailing wage. If there is more than one pay > rate in effect, list as the prevailing wage the one that has been the most frequently or commonly paid during the 60 days prior to completing this Survey. In determining the most common or frequent wage, include the pay rates in effect in the area even if a collective bargaining agreement or understanding excludes those rates from prevailing wage projects.

> It is critical that you provide a copy of the pertinent collective bargaining agreement and the applicable understanding or understandings, if any, for each listed rate, and that you indicate the page numbers where all information is found as requested on the form.
> Rates cannot be included in the state prevailing wage schedules if they are not submitted with a current collective bargaining agreement or understanding.

Considering the survey as a whole, the language of the survey does not constitute a "bid specification," a "project agreement" or another "controlling document" as outlined in MCL 480.875. Rather, the survey is intended to assist defendant in establishing the prevailing wage in a given locality. There is no indication, from this document alone, that defendant has discriminated against (or intends to discriminate against) any specific bidder for refusing to enter into a collective-bargaining agreement. In fact, in another document titled Informational Sheet: Prevailing Wages on DTMB Projects, attached to plaintiff's complaint, defendant has explained, "Prevailing rates are compiled from the rates contained in collectively bargained agreements which cover the locations of the state projects. While the DTMB prevailing wage rates are compiled though surveys of collectively bargained agreements, a collective bargaining agreement is not required for contractors to be on or be awarded state projects." (Emphasis added.) The survey, in and of itself, does not violate the Fair and Open Competition in Governmental Construction Act or establish a separation-of-powers violation.

The bottom line is that plaintiff attempts to read language into the initiative petition repealing the Prevailing Wage Act that does not appear in the repealer. The voter-initiated law simply repealed the Prevailing Wage Act, without otherwise limiting defendant's authority under the Management and Budget Act. When the Prevailing Wage Act was repealed, the Management and Budget Act became the status quo. At present, the Management and Budget Act provides defendant with broad discretionary authority, which encompasses the ability to establish a prevailing-wage policy. Plaintiff has not pointed to a single source that denies defendant that discretion or prohibits defendant from setting a prevailing wage for construction contracts. For these reasons, defendant's implementation of a prevailing-wage policy does not violate separation of powers.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

C. APA COMPLIANCE

Plaintiff next argues that defendant failed to follow the appropriate procedures to enact the prevailing-wage policy as a "rule" under the APA. Plaintiff further contends that when the Legislature repealed the Prevailing Wage Act, there was no longer an "executive agency actor" who had the power to make or enforce a prevailing-wage requirement. But the Management and Budget Act grants defendant broad discretionary authority relating to solicitation and award of state contracts. See MCL 18.1261(2). So defendant continued to serve as the executive agency actor with the power to set or enforce a prevailing-wage requirement.

Moreover, defendant does not claim that its prevailing-wage policy was a "rule" within the meaning of the APA. Rather, defendant's position is that the policy falls within an exception to the APA's rulemaking requirements, as outlined in MCL 24.207(j). MCL 24.207 defines the term "rule" to mean, in relevant part:

> an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency, including the amendment, suspension, or rescission of the law enforced or administered by the agency.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

In general, an administrative agency cannot rely on a guideline or policy in lieu of a rule promulgated under the APA. Romulus v Mich Dep't of Environmental Quality, 260 Mich App 54, 82; 678 NW2d 444 (2003). The APA requires agencies to follow certain procedures, including providing notice and holding a hearing. Id., citing MCL 24.241 (outlining the notice and hearing requirements for a proposed rule). The failure to do so will render the rule invalid. Id.

But there are several exceptions. Defendant relies on the exception for "[a] decision by an agency to exercise or not to exercise a permissive statutory power, although private rights or interests are affected." MCL 24.207(j). As the Court of Appeals has explained, "If an agency policy follows from its statutory authority, the policy is an exercise of permissive statutory power and not a rule requiring formal adoption." Pyke v Dep't of Social Servs, 182 Mich App 619, 630; 453 NW2d 274 (1990). MCL 24.207(p) also excludes from the definition of rule "[t]he provisions of an agency's contract with a public or private entity including, but not limited to, the provisions of an agency's standard form contract."

The Court of Appeals explored a similar situation in Village of Wolverine Lake v Mich State Boundary Comm, 79 Mich App 56; 261 NW2d 206 (1977). In Wolverine Lake, both Commerce Township and the Village of Wolverine Lake submitted separate petitions to the State Boundary Commission (SBC) to incorporate their existing township and village. Id. at 57. The SBC granted Commerce Township's petition, denied Wolverine Lake's petition, and adjusted the boundaries for Commerce Township to include the Village of Wolverine Lake. Id. at 57-58.

Wolverine Lake challenged the decision, arguing that the SBC had adopted a "rule," without engaging in proper rulemaking procedures, that disfavored small cities in the metropolitan Detroit area. Id. at 58. The Court concluded, however, that the SBC exercised a permissive statutory power under MCL 123.1009, which provided the SBC with criteria when considering a petition for proposed incorporation. Like the Management and Budget Act, the statute at issue in Wolverine Lake did not expressly permit favoring larger communities, but allowed the SBC to consider certain factors, including "past and probable future urban growth," "probable future needs for services," "practicability of supplying such services," "the probable effect on the cost and adequacy of services in the area to be incorporated and on the remaining portion of the unit from which the area will be detached," and "the financial ability of the incorporating municipality to maintain urban type services in the area." Id. at 59.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Court concluded that, because the statutory criteria favored "future growth and ability to provide services," the SBC was bound to favor larger communities with an industrial-tax base. Id. Thus, the statute—not the SBC's internal policies--created the perceived bias against small communities. Id. at 59-60. See also Hinderer v Dir, Mich Dep't of Social Servs, 95 Mich App 716, 727; 291 NW2d 672 (1980) (citing Wolverine Lake for the proposition that "if an agency policy . . . follows from its statutory authority, the policy is an exercise of a permissive statutory power and not a rule requiring formal adoption").

Here, as discussed earlier, the Management and Budget Act grants defendant broad discretionary powers when awarding state contracts, but provides certain criteria for defendant to consider when awarding a contract to the responsive and responsible best-value bidder. Defendant's prevailing-wage policy follows from its permissive statutory authority to make all discretionary decisions about the solicitation and award of state contracts. See MCL 18.1261(2). Thus, the prevailing-wage policy falls within the exception to rulemaking outlined in MCL 24.207(j). Additionally, the prevailing-wage policy applies to, and forms a term of, defendant's contracts with private entities. So the rulemaking exception outlined in MCL 24.207(p) applies in this circumstance as well.[4] Accordingly, defendant was not required to follow the APA's formal rulemaking process when enacting the prevailing-wage policy.

D. ULTRA VIRES ACTIVITY

Plaintiff also argues that the prevailing-wage policy was an ultra vires exercise of governmental power. An ultra vires activity is one that is "not expressly or impliedly mandated or authorized by law." Richardson v Jackson Co, 432 Mich 377, 381; 443 NW2d 105 (1989). For the reasons discussed earlier, defendant did not engage in an ultra vires activity because its decision to implement a prevailing-wage policy was within its discretionary powers outlined in the Management and Budget Act.[5]

III. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Court GRANTS defendant's motion for summary disposition. Because the Court concludes that defendant is entitled to summary disposition, the Court need not

[4] Even if the prevailing-wage policy were a "rule," MCL 24.264 provides that the validity of a rule may be determined in a declaratory-judgment action only if it impairs the legal rights or privileges of the plaintiff. Plaintiff's members have no legal right or privilege to obtain a state contract or to prohibit the state from considering their wages when granting a government contract. The outcome for plaintiff's members, if they fail to abide by the prevailing-wage policy, is the denial of a state contract; they are still eligible for local or private jobs.

[5] Plaintiff also cites the Michigan Supreme Court's recent decision in People v Peeler, ___ Mich ___; ___ NW2d ___ (2022) (Docket Nos. 163667, 163672, and 164191), for the position that "an administrative official [cannot] revive the content and meaning of a statute that has been specifically amended to remove that content." Peeler explored the exercise of a "one-man grand jury," as outlined in MCL 767.3 and MCL 767.4. Id. at ___; slip op at 2. The Court concluded that although the Legislature had initially permitted judges to issue indictments, it later amended the relevant statute to remove that authority. Id. at ___; slip op at 12. The Court held, therefore, that the statute did not permit a judicial indictment initiating a criminal prosecution. Id. at ___; slip op at 12-13, 15. Where this case differs from Peeler is the fact that the Legislature has provided defendant with broad discretionary powers in relation to the solicitation, award, amendment, cancellation, and appeal of state contracts. See MCL 18.1261(2). Peeler is inapplicable in this context.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Pursuant to the Court's order, Defendants Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Director of Elections Jonathan Brater submit the instant response to the Court's order to show cause and in support of Defendants' motion for summary disposition.

A. History of the Challenger Guidance and Instructions

There have been several iterations of guidance and instructions issued by the Bureau of Elections concerning election challengers over at least the past 20 years. The Department first issued guidance on election challengers in 2003 or earlier. (DeVisser Compl, Ex A, "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Polls Watchers," September 2003). The Bureau revised its guidance multiple times, including in October of 2020. (Id., Ex B, "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Polls Watchers," October 2020). After certain issues and disputes surrounding the 2020 election, the Bureau again revised its guidance in May of 2022 (the Challenger Guidance). (Id., Ex C, "The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Polls Watchers," May 2022). In addition to revising certain instructions, the 2022 version made formatting changes for readability—including larger type size and subject headings and a table of contents. (Id., Ex C). Notably, the 2020 guidance included instructions restricting the use of video recording devices in polling places and prohibiting smart phones or tablets or laptops in absent voter counting boards (AVCBs). (Id., Ex B, p 3, 6-7). These were not new to the Challenger Guidance issued in May 2022. (Compare Id., DeVisser Compl, Ex C, p 9, 21).

B. Plaintiffs' Complaints and Procedural History

1. O'Halloran Complaint

On September 28, 2022, Plaintiffs Phillip M. O'Halloran, Braden Giacobazzi, Robert Cushman, Penny Crider, and Kenneth Crider (the O'Halloran Plaintiffs) filed a complaint against

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Secretary of State Benson and Director Brater. (O'Halloran Compl, p 1). Plaintiffs O'Halloran, Giacobazzi, and Cushman allege that they were each designated to be an election challenger during the August 2022 primary and will be again for the November 2022 election. (Id., ¶23-24). Plaintiff Penny Crider is a candidate for the House of Representatives in the 17th District. (Id., ¶28). Kenneth Crider is a candidate for State Senate in the 6th District. (Id., ¶28).

The O'Halloran Complaint raises two counts. First, they allege a violation of MCL 168.733, based on their contention that the Bureau of Elections' May 2022 Challenger Guidance violates the rights of election challengers. (Id., ¶56). Second, a violation of the administrative procedures act (APA) of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 et seq., based on their contention that several so-called "policy changes" included in the Challenger Guidance constituted "rules" that were not promulgated as required by the APA. (Id., ¶75-83).

Each count appears to be based or focused on the following restrictions they understand to be included in the Challenger Guidance: (1) challengers may not speak with election inspectors who are not the challenger liaison or designee, make repeated impermissible challenges, use a device to make video or audio recordings in a polling place or AVCB, or possess a mobile phone other device capable of sending or receiving information at an AVCB between the opening and closing of polls on Election Day; (2) if a challenger acts in a way prohibited by these instructions or fails to follow a direction given by an election inspector the challenger will be warned or the warning will be waived if the conduct is so egregious that the challenger is immediately ejected. A challenger who repeatedly fails to follow instructions or directions may be ejected; (3) a challenger may not appeal to the city or township clerk an election inspector's resolution to a challenge to a voter's eligibility to vote and appeals can only be adjudicated through the judicial process after Election Day; (4) when determining how many challengers each credentialling organization is allowed to have in an AVCB, clerks must balance the rights of challengers to meaningfully observe the process and the clerk's responsibility to ensure safety and maintain orderly movement within the facility, and clerks may consider the number of processing teams and election inspectors, the number of tables or stations, the physical size and layout of the facility, and the number of rooms and areas used to process ballots within the facility. (Id., ¶44, 53).

In their motion for emergency declaratory and injunctive relief, the O'Halloran Plaintiffs appear to narrow their challenges to the parts of the guidance concerning ejection of challengers failing to follow the instructions or directions issued by inspectors, speaking to inspectors who are not the designated challenger liaison, balancing how many challengers may be in the AVCB's, and challengers using audio or video recording devices in polling places, clerk's offices, or AVCB's. (O'Halloran 9/28/22 Brf, p 5-6, ¶8a-d.)

In addition, the O'Halloran Plaintiffs make allegations about supposed violations of O'Halloran and Giacobazzi's rights as challengers at the Detroit Huntington Place AVCB during the August 2022 primary. (Id., ¶45-46). However, the allegations concerning their experiences at the City of Detroit's AVCB do not reference either Defendant. (Id., ¶45-46). Also, as stated in the attached affidavit of Director Brater, the Bureau of Elections issues instructions to clerks and elections officials on the proper method of conducting elections but does not hire or directly supervise any election inspectors or security personnel. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶13).

The O'Halloran Plaintiffs request that this Court declare the Challenger Guidance rescinded, declare that the "rules" are invalid because they were not promulgated under the APA, enjoin the Defendants from using the 2022 Challenger Guidance to train challengers or poll watchers, declare that the entirety of MCL 168.733 and 168.734 be added to Defendants'

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

"updated version" of the Challenger Guidance; order that the "amendments and corrections" be implemented and distributed to all poll challengers and poll workers in advance of the November 8 general election, order that certain passages of the document be "amended" by removing language, and that, "the remainder of the document and other published election manuals be similarly audited and amended to attain strict compliance with lawful rule and statute instructions." (Id., p 26-27). The O'Halloran Plaintiffs do not identify any other "election manuals" or documents they wish to be subject to any declaratory or injunctive relief.

2. DeVisser Complaint

On September 30, 2022, Plaintiffs Richard DeVisser, the Michigan Republican Party (MRP) and the Republican National Committee (RNC) ("the DeVisser Plaintiffs") filed a verified complaint against Secretary Benson and Director Brater. (DeVisser Complaint, p 1). DeVisser alleges that he is a registered voter and was appointed by MRP as an election challenger for the August 2022 primary election. (DeVisser Complaint, ¶8). MRP is a "major political party" as defined under MCL 168.16. (Id., ¶7). RNC is a national political party with offices in Washington D.C. and alleges that it supports MRP and has contributed to Republican candidates in Michigan. (Id., ¶9).

The DeVisser Complaint raises two counts. First, they allege a violation of the Election Law based on their contention that the Challenger Guidance is "directly inconsistent" with the Election Law. (Id., ¶54). Second, they allege a violation of the APA, based on their contention that certain so-called "policy changes" included in the May 2022 guidance document constituted "rules" that were not promulgated as required by the APA. (Id., ¶64).

Each count appears to be based or focused on the following "changes" in the May 2022 Challenger Guidance: (1) challenger credentials must be on a form provided by the Secretary of State, but Plaintiffs contend that because MCL 168.732 does not specifically allow the Secretary to prescribe a credential form, the Secretary cannot prescribe a form under her authority in MCL 168.31(1)(e) to prescribe election forms; (2) political parties may appoint challengers at any time until Election Day, but Plaintiffs contend that the guidance is not sufficiently clear in affirming that parties can wait until Election Day itself to train challengers and appoint challengers during Election Day; (3) challengers must present their challenges to a challenger liaison, but Plaintiffs insist the election law must be read to allow challengers to speak to any poll worker at any time, despite no such language appearing in the statute; (4) no electronic devices capable of sending or receiving information (phones, laptops, tablets, etc.) are permitted in AVCBs while ballots are being processed, and that challengers who bring such devices into the facility may be ejected—while Plaintiffs insist they must be allowed to possess communication devices even where certain communications outside the facility are prohibited, and must be allowed to use recording devices even where courts have already recognized the need to prevent recording to protect voter privacy; and (5) election inspectors need not record in the pollbook repeated challenges with no basis in law every single time they are made, while Plaintiffs contend that challengers must be given the power to make the same legally unsupported challenge repeatedly, and force election inspectors to record it every single time, even if the challenge is not supported by law or fact. (Id., ¶30(a)-(e), 54, 64).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

The DeVisser Plaintiffs request that this Court declare the May 2022 Challenger Guidance to be "inconsistent" with Michigan Election Law and unenforceable, declare that the "rules" are invalid because they were not promulgated under the APA, enjoin the Defendants from implementing the Challenger Guidance in advance of the November general election, and order the Defendants to "reissue" the previous October 2020 guidance document. (Id., p 22-23).

3. Consolidation and Response to Motion for Preliminary Injunction

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

On October 3, 2022, this Court issued an order consolidating the O'Halloran and DeVisser complaints and directing the Defendants to show cause why the Court should not issue the relief sought by Plaintiffs on October 11, 2022.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The decision to grant a request for declaratory relief is within a court's discretion presuming an actual controversy exists. PT Today, Inc v Comm'r of Office of Fin & Ins Servs, 270 Mich App 110, 126 (2006) ("The language of MCR 2.605 is permissive rather than mandatory[.]")

Summary disposition is proper under MCR 2.116(C)(8) if the plaintiff has failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Henry v Dow Chem Co, 473 Mich 63, 71 (2005). "A motion for summary disposition under MCR 2.116(C)(8) tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint and allows consideration of only the pleadings." MacDonald v PKT, Inc, 464 Mich 322, 332 (2001).

A motion for summary disposition brought under MCR 2.116(C)(10) tests the factual sufficiency of the complaint. Joseph v Auto Club Ins Ass'n, 491 Mich 200, 205-206 (2012). "Summary disposition is appropriate under MCR 2.116(C)(10) if there is no genuine issue regarding any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." West v Gen Motors Corp, 469 Mich 177, 183 (2003).

I. The O'Halloran Complaint must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

While the Legislature has wide discretion to confer rights of action onto private citizens to bring claims against the State, Moulter v Grand Rapids, 155 Mich 165 (1908); McCahan v Brennan, 492 Mich 730, 736 (2012), claims against the State must be brought consistent with the conditions imposed by the Court of Claims Act, MCL 600.6401 et seq. See Okrie v State of

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Mich, 306 Mich App 445, 448 (2014) (noting that the Court of Claims Act "reflects the state's waiver of sovereign immunity from suit and submission to a court's jurisdiction").

One such limitation is the signature and verification requirement contained in MCL 600.6431(1)–(2)(d), which provides that a "claim or notice" against the State "must contain all of the following . . . (d) A signature and verification by the claimant before an officer authorized to administer oaths. (Emphasis added.) "[T]he judiciary has no authority to restrict or amend" these conditions, McCahan, 492 Mich at 732, as "any relinquishment of sovereign immunity must be strictly interpreted," Pohutski, 465 Mich at 681. In other words, if a claimant fails to comply with MCL 600.6431, the claims against the State are barred by sovereign immunity. Fairley v Dep't of Corrections, 497 Mich 290, 297 (2015); see also Rusha v Dep't of Corrections, 307 Mich App 300, 307 (2014).

Here, the O'Halloran Complaint is not signed by any of the plaintiffs before an officer authorized to administer oaths.[1] Rather, each of the plaintiffs merely "signed" the complaint with a "/s/" typed electronic signature. (O'Halloran Comp, p 28). Defendants are unaware of any authority providing that such electronic signatures by plaintiffs constitute "signing" a complaint in compliance with the Court of Claims Act. Even if these electronic signatures were to be accepted, there is no question that these purported signatures were not signed before an officer authorized to administer oaths. Thus, the O'Halloran complaint must be dismissed. See Fairley, 497 Mich at 297, 299–300 (dismissing plaintiffs' claims because they did not comply with the signature and verification requirements of MCL 600.6431).

[1] With respect to the manner in which a document must be verified, the Supreme Court recently explained that "MCR 1.109(D)(3) specifies [the Court of Claims Act's] verification requirement. Progress Michigan v Attorney General, 506 Mich 74, 92 n 10 (2020).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

In addition to the signature requirement listed in MCL 600.6431(2)(d), § 6434 of the Court of Claims Act also provides that "[t]he complaint shall be verified." See Progress Mich v Attorney General, 506 Mich 74, 91 (2020) ("Even if MCL 600.6431 does not apply because defendant is not a 'state,' there is no question plaintiff was required to comply with MCL 600.6434."); see also Reighard v Central Mich Univ, unpublished per curiam decision of the Court of Appeals, issued May 26, 2022 (Docket Nos 358196, 358759), p 3 ("Even if MCL 600.6431 did not apply to defendant, MCL 600.6434 undisputedly would, and MCL 600.6434 also requires verification of the complaints.") Because the O'Halloran Plaintiffs failed to sign and verify their complaint in compliance with MCL 600.6434(2), their complaint must be dismissed without prejudice.

II. Plaintiffs' claims are barred by laches.

The defense of laches is rooted in the principle that "equity aids the vigilant, not those who slumber on their rights." Lucking v Schram, 117 F2d 160 (CA 6, 1941). Courts apply laches in election cases. See e.g, Detroit Unity Fund v Whitmer, 819 F App'x 421, 422 (CA 6, 2020). An action may be barred by laches if: (1) the plaintiff delayed unreasonably in asserting their rights and (2) the defendant is prejudiced by this delay. Brown-Graves Co v Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund, 206 F3d 680, 684 (CA 6, 2000). Laches applies in this case where both elements are satisfied.

Plaintiffs unreasonably delayed raising their claims before this Court. The O'Halloran Plaintiffs filed their action on September 28, 2022, while the DeVisser Plaintiffs filed their complaint on September 30, 2022. Both complaints were filed less than six weeks before the November 8, 2022 general election. But the Challenger Guidance they contest was published in May of 2022. (See DeVisser Compl, Ex C.) The DeVisser Plaintiffs suggest that the 2022 instructions may have been posted on the Secretary's site as late as July 4, 2022, (Id., ¶24), but

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Plaintiffs previously acknowledged viewing the instructions as early as May 31, 2022. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶50-53). Any concerns about these instructions could – and should – have been raised far in advance of the election.

Further, as noted in the attached affidavit of Director Brater, MRP, one of the DeVisser Plaintiffs, wrote a letter on August 25, 2022 complaining of the credential instruction and demanding a response in five business days. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶54). Curiously, the MRP letter did not address any of the other challenges raised in this lawsuit. (DeVisser Compl, Ex G.) MRP was provided a response to its complaint about the challenger credentials on September 2, 2022. (DeVisser Compl, Ex G; Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶54). MRP took no action for a month before filing its complaint on September 30, 2022—four months after it initially acknowledged viewing the Challenger Guidance, (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶50-53), three months after the primary election, and a month after receiving a response to the previous letter. As a result of their delay and the upcoming election, Defendants were permitted only 6 business days to respond to their legal arguments in the midst of an extremely busy period a month before the election.

Plaintiffs make no attempt to explain their delays in filing their respective suits. By Plaintiffs' admissions, these instructions were issued in May—five months ago. (See e.g. O'Halloran Compl, ¶1; DeVisser Compl, ¶24). Indeed, Plaintiffs DeVisser, O'Halloran, Giocobazzi, and Cushman allege that they served as election challengers in the August 2022 primary election. (O'Halloran Compl, ¶23; DeVisser Compl, ¶8.) That election took place after the May 2022 instructions were issued. But Plaintiffs now claim to have "recently learned" about the 2022 instructions relating to election challenges despite previously acknowledging seeing them in May 2022. (See DeVisser Compl, ¶2; (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶50-53.)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Defendants have most certainly been prejudiced by Plaintiffs' delay. As of this filing, the election is 28 days away. See Kay v Austin, 621 F2d 809, 813 (CA 6, 1980) ("As time passes, the state's interest in proceeding with the election increases in importance as resources are committed and irrevocable decisions are made, and the candidate's claim to be a serious candidate who has received a serious injury becomes less credible by his having slept on his rights.") The instructions Plaintiffs contest have been in place for five months and have been applied in one election already. Defendants' staff communicated with the DeVisser Plaintiffs multiple times prior to the August primary (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶50-53), yet were not made aware of one of their concerns until the August 25, 2022 letter and of the remaining concerns a month after their response to that letter (Id., ¶54). Clerks and election inspectors have, therefore, already learned and applied these instructions. (Id., ¶57-60.) Plaintiffs seek to impose another change to the instructions less than a month before the election. Even reversing the instructions to a previous version at this point risks substantial confusion, error, and disruption during the election. (Id., ¶59.)

Further still, the broader holding that Plaintiffs seek from this Court – that the Bureau of Elections can never issue binding instructions on clerks without promulgating a rule under the APA – would reverse decades of practice less than a month before a statewide election, with the Defendants being given a short time to mount their defense. (Id., ¶8.) And should this Court rule against Defendants, there would be little to no opportunity for Defendants to seek relief in the appellate courts and still conduct an orderly election.

When a party seeks equitable relief, as Plaintiffs do, "[t]he equitable doctrine of laches shall also apply." MCL 600.5815. In Defendants' motion and in response to this Court's show-cause order, Defendants raise the defense of laches. "If a plaintiff has not exercised reasonable diligence in vindicating his or her rights, a court sitting in equity may withhold relief on the ground that the plaintiff is chargeable with laches." Knight v Northpointe Bank, 300 Mich App 109, 114 (2013). The doctrine is particularly applicable in election matters. See, e.g., New Democratic Coalition v Austin, 41 Mich App 343, 356-357 (1972) ("The state has a compelling interest in the orderly process of elections."); Purcell v Gonzalez, 549 US 1, 5-6 (2006) (per curiam); Crookston v Johnson, 841 F3d 396, 398 (CA 6, 2016) ("Call it what you will—laches, the Purcell principle, or common sense—the idea is that courts will not disrupt imminent elections absent a powerful reason for doing so."); see also MCL 691.1031 (creating a "rebuttable presumption of laches" if an action affecting an election is brought within 28 days of that election).

Plaintiffs unreasonably delayed in raising their claims before this Court, and the consequences of their delay has prejudiced Defendants. Plaintiffs' claims are, therefore, barred by the doctrine of laches and should be dismissed.

III. The challenger instructions are lawful and did not need to be promulgated as a rule.

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs have not established the existence of an actual controversy that would support declaratory relief. An "actual controversy" under MCR 2.605(A)(1) exists when a declaratory judgment is necessary to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve legal rights. UAW v Central Michigan Univ Tr, 295 Mich App 486, 495 (2012). "The existence of an 'actual controversy' is a condition precedent to invocation of declaratory relief." Shavers v Attorney General, 402 Mich 554, 588 (1978); see also Genesis Ctr, PLC v Comm'r of Fin & Ins Servs, 246 Mich App 531, 544 (2001). Here, Plaintiffs may well desire the instructions to be re-written to meet their preferences, but that is not the same as requiring a declaration to guide their future conduct. Simply put, Plaintiffs will still be able to appoint election challengers who will be able to make any challenges allowed under the law.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Even assuming the existence of an actual controversy, the requirements of the APA do not apply to the instructions at issue here. Recognizing the need for flexibility in administering elections, the Legislature gave the Secretary discretion to issue instructions or promulgate rules, and she has properly issued the instructions here in accordance with the law just has previous Secretaries of State have done for decades. Because the instructions do not violate the Election Law and were not required to be promulgated as rules, Plaintiffs' requests for emergency declaratory and injunctive relief must be denied.

The requirements of the APA do not apply to the instructions at issue here. Recognizing the need for flexibility in administering elections, the Legislature gave the Secretary discretion to issue instructions or promulgate rules, and she has properly issued the instructions here in accordance with the law just has previous Secretaries of State have done for decades. Because the instructions do not violate the Election Law and were not required to be promulgated as rules, Plaintiffs' requests for emergency declaratory and injunctive relief must be denied.

A. The Legislature delegated the task of conducting elections to the Secretary of State and gave her broad authority to issue instructions, advice and directives.

Under the Michigan Constitution, the Legislature "shall enact laws to regulate the time, place and manner of all . . . elections[.]" Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2). Consistent with that mandate, the Legislature enacted the Michigan Election Law (the Election Law), MCL 168.1 et seq. And the Legislature delegated the task of conducting proper elections to the Secretary, an elected Executive-branch officer, and the head of the Department of State. Const 1963, art 5, §§ 3, 9.

Section 21 of the Election Law makes the Secretary the "chief election officer" and she "shall have supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of this act." MCL 168.21. Further, under § 31, the Secretary "shall do all of the following": "(a). . . issue instructions and promulgate rules . . . for the conduct of elections

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

. . . in accordance with the laws of this state," and "(b) [a]dvise and direct local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections." MCL 168.31(1)(a)-(b) (emphasis added). The Secretary "shall" also "[p]ublish and furnish for the use in each election precinct before each state primary and election a manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on . . . procedures and forms for processing challenges[.]" MCL 168.31(1)(c) (emphasis added.) And she "shall" "[p]rescribe and require uniform forms . . . the secretary of state considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections[.]" MCL 168.31(1)(e).

These sections provide the Secretary with broad authority to issue instructions and directions for the proper conduct of elections and to require adherence to those instructions by the election officials over whom she exercises supervisory control. See Hare v Berrien Co Bd of Election Commr's, 373 Mich 526, 531 (1964) (local election board had "duty to follow" the Secretary of State's "instructions" under MCL 168.31).

The Secretary's authority under these sections extends to all local election officials and to the places in which they perform their duties, including polling places and AVCBs. Polling places and AVCBs are established within election precincts. MCL 168.654. Section 662 states that each city and township "shall provide a suitable polling place in or for each precinct located in the city . . . or township for use at each election." MCL 168.662(1). Similarly, in a jurisdiction using AVCBs to process ballots, "that city or township shall establish an [AVCB] for each election day precinct in that city or township." MCL 168.765a(1). Thus, polling places and AVCBs function within an election precinct under the Secretary's supervision.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Secretary also has ultimate general supervisory authority over election inspectors.[2] Election inspectors have supervisory authority over polling places and AVCBs on Election Day. Section 678 provides that "[e]ach board of election inspectors shall possess full authority to maintain peace, regularity and order at its polling place, and to enforce obedience to their lawful commands during any . . . election[.]" MCL 168.678 (emphasis added). In turn, under § 21, the Secretary can direct election inspectors in the proper conduct of an election in their polling places and AVCBs. And the Secretary's authority to direct inspectors includes providing instructions on maintaining peace, regularity, and order at polling places. MCL 168.21, 168.31(1)(a)-(b). Such instructions provide the source for the "lawfulness" of any command given by an election inspector. In this way, the Secretary supervises, through general instruction, polling places and AVCBs.

As it pertains to the Secretary's specific authority to instruct clerks conducting elections under the Michigan Election Law as the Chief Election Officer, there is no simple dichotomy of mandatory "rule" and nonbinding "guidance" under the general provisions of the APA. Rather, the Secretary may, and frequently does, provide instructions to clerks on the proper methods of conducting elections consistent with the Election Law. Only when the Secretary establishes directives with policy determinations not found within the Michigan Election Law—which is not the case here—is rulemaking required.

B. The instructions are not required to be promulgated as rules under the APA.

[2] Direct supervision of election inspectors is performed by the clerk. For Election Day, the city or township election commissioners must appoint at least three election inspectors to each election precinct or as many as are needed "for the efficient, speedy, and proper conduct of the election." MCL 168.674(1). This is true for the AVCBs in each precinct as well, and the inspectors appointed to AVCBs have the same authority as inspectors at in-person voting precincts. MCL 168.765a(1), (4).

Under the APA, "rule" is defined as "(1) 'an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability,' (2) 'that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency[.]' " Am Fed'n of State, Co & Mun Employees, AFL-CIO v Dept of Mental Health, 452 Mich 1, 8 (1996), quoting MCL 24.207. Plaintiffs' complaints fail as a matter of law because the Secretary's Challenger Guidance is specifically excluded from the definition of "rule" under the APA. This is because the instructions fall under the "permissive statutory power" exclusion under MCL 24.207(j). Alternatively, the contested instructions are exempt from the definition of a "rule" under MCL 24.207(g) and (h).

1. The Secretary has permissive authority to issue instructions without promulgating them as a rule.

The "permissive statutory power" exception applies where "explicit or implicit authorization for the actions in question have been found." Detroit Base Coalition for the Human Rights of the Handicapped v Dep't of Social Servs, 431 Mich 172, 187-188 (1988); see also Hinderer v Dep't of Social Servs, 95 Mich App 716, 727 (1980) ("[I]f an agency policy . . . follows from its statutory authority, the policy is an exercise of a permissive statutory power and not a rule requiring formal adoption."). The exception applies here for three reasons.

First, the enabling statute gives the Secretary discretion to either issue instructions or promulgate rules under the APA. The permissive power exception applies to statutory grants of authority that do not require an agency to be bound to the requirements of the APA.

For example, in Michigan Trucking Association v Michigan Public Service Commission, the plaintiffs asserted that a Public Service Commission (PSC) order that established a safety rating system for motor carriers was invalid because it was not promulgated as a rule under the APA. 225 Mich App 424, 430-430 (1997). The statute at issue provided, at the time, that the PSC "will develop and implement by rule or order a motor carrier safety rating system within 12 months after the effective date of this article." MCL 479.43 (emphasis added). The Court of Appeals rejected plaintiffs' argument, finding that the order was issued in "an exercise of permissive statutory power," and was therefore "exempted from formal adoption and promulgation under the APA." Id. at 430. In reaching this conclusion, the Court emphasized that the statute "directly and explicitly authorize[d] the PSC to implement, either by rule or order," the safety rating system. Id., citing MCL 479.43. See also Pyke v Department of Social Services, 182 Mich App 619 (1990) (concluding that permissive statutory power exclusion applied); By Lo Oil Co v Department of Treasury, 267 Mich App 19 (2005) (same); Ann Arbor Transp Auth v Michigan Dep't of Transp, unpublished opinion per curiam of the Court of Appeals, issued October 18, 2002, (Docket No. 232163).

As in Michigan Trucking, because the Legislature has not tied the Secretary's authority to issue instructions and advise local election officials to the APA, the Challenger Guidance is not subject to the APA's rulemaking procedures.

Second, the plain language of MCL 168.31 shows that the Secretary has a choice between issuing instructions and promulgating rules. Like the statute in Michigan Trucking, the enabling statute for the Secretary provides permissive statutory power: "The secretary of state shall . . . issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the [APA] . . . for the conduct of elections[.]" MCL 168.31(1)(a) (emphasis added). While the use of "shall" connotes mandatory action, the statutory language itself contemplates two different acts that the Secretary "shall do": either (1) issue instructions, or (2) promulgate rules.[3] Thus, § 31 does not mandate that the

[3] The statute's use of the word "and" does not require a different result. See, e.g., Aikens v State Dep't of Conservation, 387 Mich 495, 500 (1972) (internal quotations and citation omitted) (explaining that the "strict meaning [of the words "and" and "or"] is more readily departed from

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Secretary promulgate rules for the conduct of elections.[4] Rather, the Secretary, in her discretion, can either issue instructions or promulgate rules. MCL 168.31(1)(a). Here, the Secretary issued instructions.

This interpretation avoids rendering nugatory the word "instruction" in § 31(a). See, e.g., Hanay v Dep't of Transp, 497 Mich 45, 57 (2014) (courts "must give effect to every word, phrase, and clause in a statute and avoid an interpretation that renders nugatory or surplusage any part of a statute."). And it is consistent with the structure of § 31, which only mandates that the Secretary promulgate rules in a certain area—petition signature gathering. MCL 168.31(2).

And third, the Legislature provided permissive grants of authority when agencies may need to act quickly. For example, MCL 30.310 empowers the director of the Michigan State Police "to issue orders and promulgate rules and regulations for the purpose of administration and preparation of a plan of civil defense for this state[.]" (Emphasis added). This grant of permissive power makes sense since, when providing for the civil defense of the State, an agency or officer must be able to act quickly without the deliberate procedures required in the APA.

In enacting § 31, the Legislature similarly recognized that virtually all aspects of an election are time sensitive and that the Secretary has roughly 1,600 clerks to supervise in the conducting of elections, and provided her with flexibility—which rulemaking does not typically allow—to "issue instructions" separate from her authority to promulgate rules.

than that of other words, and [the words can be] read in place of the other in deference to the meaning of the context").

[4] The Legislature's intent to give the separate power to instruct is demonstrated by the language in section 795a of the Election Law, which provides that the Secretary "shall instruct local election officials regarding the operation and use of an approved electronic voting system in order to carry out the purposes of sections 794 to 799a and the rules promulgated pursuant to sections 794 to 799a." MCL 168.795a(8) (emphasis added).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Finally, even assuming they were correctly decided,[5] Davis v Benson, Court of Claims Docket No 20-207-MZ, issued October 27, 2020, and Genetski v Benson, Court of Claims Docket No 20-216-MM, issued March 9, 2021, are not to the contrary. Davis concerned an instruction prohibiting firearms in polling places. The court determined such an instruction constituted a directive, with the binding force of law, based on a policy determination outside the election law. Genetski, meanwhile, involved a substantive policy determination about the standards clerks should use in determining whether signatures match. In those cases, the courts found the Secretary to be making policy determinations not found in the Election Law, hence the courts' determination that rulemaking was required.

That is not the case here, where the Secretary's instructions concern the proper methods of conducting elections and application of the Election Law to circumstances involving challengers. Indeed, the facts here are aligned with those in Associated Builders & Contractors of Michigan v DTMB, Court of Claims No 22-111-MZ, attached as Ex B. There the Court of Claims determined that DTMB's prevailing wage requirement was not a rule required to promulgated under the APA because the agency had permissive statutory authority to implement the policy in state contracts. (Defs' Ex B, ACB of Michigan, pp 16-19) ("Defendant's prevailing-wage policy follows from its permissive statutory authority to make all discretionary decisions about the solicitation and award of state contracts. See MCL 18.1261(2). Thus, the prevailing-wage policy falls within the exception to rulemaking outlined in MCL 24.207(j).")

For these reasons, the Secretary's Challenger Guidance was properly issued as instructions and was not required to have been promulgated as a rule.

[5] These Court of Claims decisions only bind the parties to the cases and thus are not binding precedent as to the parties here or on this Court.

2. Alternatively, the challenger instructions are not "rules" under MCL 24.207(g) and (h).

Even if this Court were to conclude that the permissive power exception does not apply, the Challenger Guidance instructions do not constitute "rules" as that term has been defined and explained by the courts. Under MCL 24.207(g) a "rule" does not include "[a]n intergovernmental . . . memorandum, directive, or communication that does not affect the rights of, or procedures and practices available to, the public." Similarly, under § 207(h), "rule" does not include "[a] form with instructions, an interpretive statement, a guideline,[6] an informational pamphlet, or other material that in itself does not have the force and effect of law but is merely explanatory." MCL 168.207(h).

Here, to the extent they pertain to the conduct of challengers and poll watchers, the May 2022 instructions fall readily into § 207(g) or 207(h), or both. The Challenger Guidance is principally explanatory, does not have the force and effect of law, and does not affect the rights of the public. The guidance summarizes the requirements of election law as it pertains to challengers and explains how clerks and election inspectors will enforce the law. See Twp of Hopkins v State Boundary Comm'n, unpublished opinion per curiam of the Court of Appeals, issued February 24, 2022 (Docket No 355195), p 25; see also Faircloth v Family Indep Agency, 232 Mich App 391, 403-404 (1998)(explaining that APA rulemaking is necessary when establishing policies that "do not merely interpret or explain the statute or rules from which an agency derives its authority," but rather "establish the substantive standards implementing the program.") This is so because the May 2022 instructions are binding on clerks (not challengers)

[6] The APA defines "guideline" as "an agency statement or declaration of policy that the agency intends to follow, that does not have the force or effect of law, and that binds the agency but does not bind any other person." MCL 24.203(7).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

under the Secretary's authority as Chief Election Officer, MCL 168.21, to instruct clerks on the proper methods of conducting elections, MCL 168.31(1). In this respect, the circumstances in this case differ from those in Twp of Hopkins, where the administrative body had no similar authority to issue instructions.

Further, because the instructions are grounded in the Election Law – as set forth below – they do not suggest or permit deviation from the statutory authority on which they are based and prevent any official from being accused of handling any challenger disputes inconsistently or arbitrarily. Id. Thus, while clerks and election inspectors must follow the guidance, it likewise informs challengers in order that they understand the process and carry out their roles efficiently, correctly, and without confusion. Id.

a. The credential form

The DeVisser Plaintiffs claim that the Secretary's requirement for a specific credential form either violates the Election Law, MCL 168.732, because the Legislature has not specifically applied the Secretary's express authority to prescribe forms to this specific form, or alternatively the APA because the form needed to be promulgated as a rule even though the Election Law expressly authorizes the Secretary to prescribe forms without promulgating a rule under the APA. Plaintiffs are wrong on both fronts. Section 732 of the Election Law requires that challengers possess a signed (written) "authority" in order to serve as a challenger. MCL 168.732. As explained in the Secretary's September 2, 2022, response letter to the MRP, § 732 does not prescribe what form the "authority" should take, requiring only that it be "signed" by the requisite individual, include the "name of the challenger" and the "number of the precinct to which the challenger has been assigned." (DeVisser Compl, Ex G.)

Under the Election Law, the Secretary "shall" publish a manual that includes "forms for processing challenges" and she "shall" "[p]rescribe and require uniform forms" as she "considers advisable." MCL 168.31(1)(c), (e). After reports from the November 2020 election, the Secretary considered it advisable to prescribe and require a uniform credential form. The principal reasons for doing so are to ensure uniformity and consistency and to allow the challenger liaison to clearly identify challengers who have been issued a credential by an authorized entity that has reviewed the challenger instructions and provided required training to the challenger. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶31-33; DeVisser Compl, Ex G.) Mandating a uniform credential form does not conflict with § 732, which is silent as to the form of an "authority," and the new form does not need to be promulgated as a rule where the Secretary can "prescribe and require uniform forms" under § 31(1)(e). And "a form with instructions" is expressly excluded from the definition of a "rule." See MCL 24.207(h).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Accepting Plaintiffs' argument that the Secretary cannot prescribe a form, notwithstanding her express statutory authority to prescribe forms, unless the specific section of law describing the form also expressly grants her the authority to prescribe that form would render MCL 168.31(1)(e) meaningless, and would invalidate dozens of others forms the Secretary has prescribed in past years and decades including, among other things, paper voter registration forms (see MCL 168.497, which does not specifically provide for the Secretary to prescribe a paper voter registration form).

In any case, Plaintiffs have not explained why using a credential form prescribed by the Secretary of State, as opposed to their own template, harms them in any way. Plaintiffs point to only one example in which a challenger was not allowed to access a location on the basis of not having the prescribed credential, which Plaintiffs can remedy by simply using the publicly available credential form. In every other situation cited by Plaintiffs, their challengers were allowed to access the site.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Because the instructions are consistent with the Election Law and are not a "rule" under § 207(h), Plaintiffs' claims as to the credential form are without merit and should be dismissed.

b. Appointment of challengers until Election Day

The DeVisser Plaintiffs interpret the challenger instructions as prohibiting the appointment of challengers on Election Day. However, the Challenger Guidance instructions say nothing about prohibiting appointments on Election Day. The instructions say only that "Political parties eligible to appear on the ballot may appoint or credential challengers at any time until Election Day." (DeVisser Compl, Ex C, p 1) (emphasis added). The word "until" does not exclude Election Day. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶ 38). The expectation is that political parties, like other organizations, will prepare ahead of time and not wait until the actual day of the election to train and appoint their challengers. (Id., ¶ 37.)[7] Training is critical to prevent challengers from mistaking routine election procedures as apparent acts of fraud or conspiracy, which challengers did on numerous occasions during the November 2020 general election. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶ 35-36).

While political parties should prepare ahead of time, and generally do, challengers appointed on Election Day (for example, to replace challengers who become ill or otherwise unable to perform their role) will be accepted. (Id., ¶ 39.) And, because MCL 168.730(1) provides that organizations may appoint challengers "at an election," and the names of organizations authorized to appoint challengers must be certified "[b]efore the opening of the [7] Section 731(1) requires organizations other than the political parties to advise clerks "[n]ot less than 20 nor more than 30 days before an election" of their intention to appoint challengers. MCL 168.731(1) (emphasis added). And "[b]efore the opening of the polls, the clerk shall certify in writing to the board of election inspectors . . . the names of organizations and committees that are authorized . . . to appoint and keep challengers at the polling places[.]" MCL 168.731(3) (emphasis added.)

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

polls," MCL 168.731(3), it follows that challengers generally may not be appointed after Election Day.

Moreover, Plaintiffs overstate their claim regarding their ability to appoint challengers at any time they choose, including on Election Day. While they allege that the Election Law provides no limit on when challengers may be appointed, MCL 168.730(1) provides that a party may appoint no more than 2 challengers to serve in a precinct "at any one time," and not more than one challenger to serve at an AVCB. A party's ability to appoint challengers at any time is thus inherently limited by statute to a specific number of persons at a specific precinct or AVCB at any one time.

Because the instructions are consistent with the Election Law and are not a "rule" under § 207(g) or (h), Plaintiffs' claims as to the appointment of challengers are without merit and should be dismissed.

c. Election inspector challenger liaison

Both sets of Plaintiffs allege the instruction that challengers only communicate through and with the election inspector challenger liaison is unlawful. But MCL 168.733(1)(e) only provides that a challenger may bring certain issues "to an election inspector's attention"—it does not provide that a challenger may speak to any and all inspectors at any time. The May 2022 instruction absolutely provides for challengers to bring matters to an inspector's attention by bringing their challenge to the designated person. Simply put, the instruction merely outlines the process of raising a challenge and identifies a point of contact for challengers to ensure that challenges are received and addressed appropriately. The guidance helps ensure that challenges are brought to a person equipped to respond correctly and consistently. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶44.) As such, the instructions concerning the challenger liaison merely interpret and explain the process of making a challenge. Twp of Hopkins, supra at p 25.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Further, and significantly, nothing in the May 2022 guidance prohibits clerks or election inspectors from determining that all election inspectors may serve in this liaison role or that challengers can speak to any election inspector, if that is what the clerk, precinct chair, or challenger liaison prefers. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶44.) As a result, Plaintiffs' concerns about not being able to speak to elections inspectors is speculative at this point, and it is far from certain that any of Plaintiffs' concerns would come to pass. Regardless, the instruction is not contrary to law. The Secretary is expressly authorized to "publish and furnish . . . a manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on . . . procedures . . . for processing challenges[.]" MCL 168.31(1)(c). Pursuant to that command, the contested instruction simply effectuates the language of § 733 by explaining the means for how a challenger should bring a challenge "to an election inspector's attention." MCL 168.733(1)(e).

In sum, Plaintiffs simply invent a requirement that does not exist in MCL 168.733(1)(e) and assert that challengers must be allowed to speak to any election inspector at any time about any type of challenge. In fact, clerks and election inspectors have authority to determine an orderly process by which challengers should bring these challenges to an election inspector's attention. MCL 168.678.

Because the instructions are consistent with the Election Law and are not a "rule" under § 207(g) or (h), Plaintiffs' claims as to the challenger liaison instruction are without merit and should be dismissed.

d. Electronic device restrictions in AVCBs and polling places.

Both sets of Plaintiffs allege the instructions regarding the use of electronic devices, such as cell phones, at polling places and AVCBs are unlawful. These prohibitions are not new. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶45.) The Secretary of State has long issued instructions to poll challengers and watchers related to the possession of phones and other media devices. (Id.) Different restrictions apply in an AVCB and an in-person polling place.

With respect to AVCBs, "[e]lectronic devices are not permitted within the absent voter ballot processing facility." (DeVisser Compl, Ex C, p 5.) More specifically:

> No electronic devices capable of sending or receiving information, including phones, laptops, tablets, or smartwatches, are permitted in an absent voter ballot processing facility while absent voter ballots are being processed until the close of polls on Election Day. A challenger who possesses such an electronic device in an absent voter ballot processing facility between the beginning of tallying and the close of polls may be ejected from the facility. [Id., pp 9, 21.][8]

The only exception to this is that a challenger may use his or her phone to display credentials but must then secure the phone elsewhere outside the processing area. Id., p 5.

Watchers and challengers serving at an in-person polling place, however, may "use electronic devices, so long as the device is not disruptive and so long as the device is not used to make video or audio recordings of the polling place." Id., p 20.[9]

The complete ban inside AVCB facilities is grounded in statutes that prohibit the sharing of information learned at the AVCBs before the polls close. MCL 168.765a(9) requires that a "challenger, or any other person at an" AVCB "at any time after the processing of ballots has begun shall take and sign" the following "oath":

> "I (name of person taking oath) do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I shall not communicate in any way any information relative to the processing or tallying of votes that may come to me while in this counting place until after the polls are closed.". [Emphasis added.]

And MCL 168.765a(10) thereafter provides, in part:

[9] The same instructions are included in the Bureau of Elections' Manual for Elections Inspectors. See, p 27, Managing Your Precinct on Election Day 2022 (michigan.gov). > The oaths administered under subsection (9) must be placed in an envelope provided for the purpose and sealed with the red state seal. Following the election, the oaths must be delivered to the city or township clerk. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (12), a person in attendance at the absent voter counting place or combined absent voter counting place shall not leave the counting place after the tallying has begun until the polls close. . . . A person . . . who discloses an election result or in any manner characterizes how any ballot being counted has been voted in a voting precinct before the time the polls can be legally closed on election day is guilty of a felony. [Emphasis added.]

The oath statute prohibits a challenger from "communicat[ing] in any way [for example, by text message, email, video, or an actual phone call] any information relative to the processing or tallying of votes that may come to [the challenger] while in [the] counting place until after the polls are closed." MCL 168.765a(9). And the penalty statute makes it a felony to disclose how any absent voter ballot was voted before the polls close. MCL 168.765a(10). Further, a watcher or challenger who refuses to abide by the electronic device prohibitions could be guilty of a misdemeanor under MCL 168.931(1)(h) ("A person shall not willfully . . . disobey a lawful instruction or order of the secretary of state as chief state election officer . . . or board of inspectors of election.")

AVCBs may commence processing and tabulating absent voter ballots by 7 a.m. on Election Day, and do not stop until all ballots are tabulated. MCL 168.765a(8). Because electronic devices like cell phones, smartwatches, tablets, etc, make it easy to communicate information from within an AVCB, they pose a threat to the security of the information present at AVCBs, most significantly in what direction absent voter ballots may be trending. And because it would be impossible for election officials to police what challengers may be texting or emailing from their electronic devices, the Secretary has instructed clerks that the proper method of enforcing this requirement is to prohibit these devices to ensure that no unlawful communications are made.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

With respect to in-person polling places, challengers may possess and use electronic devices so long as they do not use the devices to make visual or audio recordings. The purposes of this restriction are obvious—to protect the privacy of voters, to deter possible voter intimidation, and to deter or curb disruption at the polls. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶45-46.) The Michigan Constitution provides for the right to vote a "secret ballot." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(a). See also art 2, § 4(2) ("the legislature shall enact laws . . . to preserve the secrecy of the ballot[.]") Activity that disrupts voting or that rises to voter intimidation is likewise prohibited. See MCL 750.170; MCL 168.932(1)(a). Further, the U.S. Supreme Court has observed that states have an obligation to safeguard their citizens' constitutional right to vote. Cf. Burdick v Takushi, 504 US 428, 433 (1992).

The Secretary's authority to issue these instructions for AVCBs and polling places is fully supported by the language in § 31(1)(a), (b), and (c), empowering her to issue instructions, advice and directives for the conduct of elections, including "procedures . . . for processing challenges." MCL 168.31(1)(a)-(c). Notably, the Secretary's prohibitions with respect to the use of cell phones by voters in the polls was previously challenged on First Amendment grounds by a voter who wished to use his cell phone to take a "ballot selfie" but was barred from doing so under the instructions in place at that time. See Crookston v Johnson, 841 F3d 396 (CA 6, 2016). In staying the preliminary injunction issued in that case based on laches, the Sixth Circuit spoke favorably of the Secretary's instructions: "The State's policy advances several serious governmental interests: preserving the privacy of other voters, avoiding delays and distractions at the polls, preventing vote buying, and preventing voter intimidation." Id. at 400 (emphasis added). While the state later agreed to allow a limited opportunity to take a "ballot selfie," this case supports the Secretary's authority to issue instructions to protect privacy, and to forestall disturbances and delays at polling places relating to the use of electronic devices.

Further, the Secretary's instructions do not conflict with any existing election laws. Nothing in § 733 gives challengers the right to possess and use electronic devices in AVCBs or polling places. Section 733 provides that challengers may "observe" certain actions and "[k]eep records of votes cast and other election procedures as the challenger desires." MCL 168.733(1)(b), (h), (i). Challengers may "observe" actions by watching and they may "keep records" by taking handwritten notes, as paper, notebooks, pens, etc, are not prohibited within AVCBs or polling places. The phrase "as the challenger desires" in § 733(1)(h) does not mean that a challenger can use any method he or she sees fit to keep a record. It simply means that if a challenger wishes to make a record, he or she may do so.

Because the instructions are consistent with the Election Law and are not a "rule" under § 207(g) or (h), Plaintiffs' claims as to the prohibitions regarding electronic devices are without merit and should be dismissed.

e. The recording of impermissible challenges

The DeVisser Plaintiffs complain that the instructions do not require election inspectors to make a record in the poll book of every single time an impermissible challenge – one without basis in law – is made by a challenger. These instructions were implemented due to an increase in the volume of indiscriminate or impermissible challenges. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶ 41.)

Notably, the instructions require permissible challenges (those with a basis in law) to be recorded even if the challenge is rejected. (Id., ¶ 42.) The law only permits challenges of a voter's registration status in the precinct, that an election procedure is not being properly performed, or to a voter attempting to vote who previously applied for an absent voter ballot. MCL 168.733(1)(c)-(d), MCL 168.727(1). Section 727(2) only requires an election inspector to make a written report of a challenge to a voter's registration status. MCL 168.727(2)(a)-(c). The Election Law prohibits challengers from making a "challenge indiscriminately and without good cause," and from "interfere[ing] with and unduly" delaying the work of the election inspectors. MCL 168.727(3).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

It is difficult to ascertain what harm Plaintiffs will suffer if they are not permitted to make an infinite number of unsupported challenges and require election inspectors to deviate from assisting voters and tabulating ballots to record impermissible challenges. Again, the Secretary is expressly mandated to "publish and furnish . . . a manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on . . . procedures . . . for processing challenges[.]" MCL 168.31(1)(c). The instructions are consistent with the challenger-related statutes and simply clarify that all challenges with a basis in law must be heard and recorded (whether the challenger is correct or incorrect that a voter is ineligible or that a procedure is not being followed), and that challenges without a basis in law or contrary to the law cannot be made and need not be recorded. (Defs' Ex A, Brater Aff, ¶¶ 40-42.) Nothing in the Challenger Guidance allows an election inspector to determine that a challenge with a basis in law is impermissible or need not be recorded.

Because the instructions are consistent with the Election Law and are not a "rule" under § 207(g) or (h), Plaintiffs' claims as to the prohibitions regarding electronic devices are without merit and should be dismissed.

3. The remaining claims by the O'Halloran Plaintiffs need not be addressed at this time.

The O'Halloran Plaintiffs contest several other instructions that the DeVisser Plaintiffs do not and they filed a motion for emergency declaratory and injunctive relief.[10] But because the

[10] The O'Halloran Plaintiffs contest instructions relating to the ejection of challengers from polling places and AVCBs, the appeal of challenges resolved by an election inspector to the local O'Halloran complaint must be dismissed without prejudice as discussed in Argument I, it is unnecessary to address their additional claims or their motion for injunctive relief. Indeed, at this time it is unclear whether these Plaintiffs will properly refile their complaint, when they may do so, and whether they will modify any of the additional claims from that previously alleged. If they do refile, Defendants request the opportunity to submit supplemental briefing.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For these reasons, Defendants Secretary of State Benson and Director Brater respectfully request that this Honorable Court deny Plaintiffs' requested relief and grant Defendants' motion for summary disposition, together with any other relief the Court determines to be appropriate under the circumstances.

THE MICHIGAN DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S PROPOSED AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

THE MICHIGAN DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S PROPOSED AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF

DESCRIPTION OF AMICUS CURIAE AND STATEMENT OF INTEREST[1]

The Michigan Democratic Party ("MDP") is the Democratic Party's official state party committee for the State of Michigan. Affidavit of Erica Peresman ("Peresman Aff."), Ex. 1 at ¶ 1. The MDP aims to ensure that the constitutional rights of its members, voters, and candidates are not impeded. For decades, both the MDP and the Michigan Republican Party ("MRP"), as major political parties under Section 16 of the Michigan Election Law (MCL 168.1 et seq.), have overseen election challenger programs. Id. These programs require designating and issuing credentials to election challengers.

As a major political party and credentialing organization, the MDP has an interest in the proper and efficient administration of elections. Election challengers and poll watchers it appoints help facilitate this. They act as a check and balance on the process, and their presence in polling places and absentee counting rooms helps boost public confidence in the integrity of our elections. For the process to work as intended, the organizations that credential challengers have a responsibility to know the rights and duties as set forth in the Michigan Election Law, supplemented by guidance issued by the Michigan Secretary of State from time to time. The MDP takes very seriously its responsibility to educate its appointed and credentialed challengers about these matters.

The Secretary of State's guidance includes The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers, released in May 2022 (the "Manual"), at issue in this case.

[1] No counsel for a party to this action has authored this brief in whole or in part, and no party or counsel for a party or any individual other than the amicus curiae, its members, or its counsel, has made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Michigan Election Law requires the Secretary of State to issue this manual. MCL 168.31(1)(c). The Manual applies to challengers credentialed by the MDP in the same way as those credentialed by the MRP. Accordingly, the MDP incorporated these instructions in its challenger and poll watcher training for the August 2022 Primary Election. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 5. It was not difficult. Nor did the Manual impair challengers' or poll watchers' discharge of their duties during the August 2022 Primary Election. In fact, the new Manual's guidance provided for a smoother administration of the election by clarifying how challengers should approach their tasks.

The MDP has already devoted substantial time and resources training hundreds of volunteer challengers based on the guidelines in the Manual. If either Plaintiffs' request is granted, the MDP would have to invest significant resources updating and retraining volunteers to comply under new guidelines. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 12. The MDP is also concerned that rescinding the current Manual would interfere with its challengers' and poll watchers' ability to help facilitate an efficient election in which the public can place its trust.

INTRODUCTION

In November 2020, the world witnessed what could go wrong when election challengers are improperly trained and when protocols for those challengers are ambiguous. The Senate Oversight Committee's Report on the November 2020 Election in Michigan ("Senate Oversight Committee Report"), signed onto by the three Republican members of the Committee, found that:

> The environment and those emotions were compounded by a lack of proper recruitment and/or training of election workers on the part of the clerk, as well as a failure of the Republican party to verify recruitment and training, supply an adequate number of election attorneys, and to properly train and counsel some of their volunteers and challengers. Republican officials, along with some ostensibly Independent challengers, furthered the crisis by putting out the call to other members and citizens to descend on the location to stop what was described and presented as a stealing of the election.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Id. at 13. This was particularly apparent at then-TCF Center in Detroit, where disorder and disruption dominated the absent voter counting board. The proliferation of challenges by untrained challengers built on one another to create chaos that "increased the angst and fears of the untrained challengers and observers, as well as the many in the public who did not understand what was shown to them by the media." Id. This prompted a call to ensure that "the rights and duties of poll watchers and challengers be better understood and reinforced in their respective training and must be protected equally by election officials." Id. at 12.

Following these findings, the Secretary of State executed her authority to oversee the administration of elections in the State of Michigan by issuing the current Manual in May 2022. This authority is under express Legislative directive, which requires the Secretary of State to "issue instructions," including "a manual of instructions that includes specific instructions on … procedures and forms for processing challenges," among other things. MCL 168.31(1)(a) and (c). The Manual appropriately interprets and applies the Michigan Election Law—which the Secretary of State is empowered to do. Clonlara, Inc v State Bd of Ed, 442 Mich 230, 239, 501 NW2d 88 (1993) ("Agencies have the authority to interpret the statutes they are bound to administer and enforce."). So long as the Manual does not directly conflict with the Michigan Election Law or tread entirely new policy ground (it does not), the Michigan Election Law grants the Secretary of State full authority to publish the Manual. See Michigan Trucking Ass'n v Michigan Pub Serv Comm'n, 225 Mich App 424, 430 (1997).

Rather than recognize this clear Legislative direction, Plaintiffs ask this Court to simultaneously eviscerate the Secretary of State's authority under the Michigan Election Law and exercise the Secretary of State's authority by rewriting the Manual in an act of judicial overreach. Either would set us back to the dark days of November 2020. In that cycle, election challengers and poll watchers on behalf of the MDP observed numerous instances – well documented in the Senate Oversight Committee Report, the media, and various court cases alike – of individuals on behalf of the MRP and "ostensibly Independent challengers" (Senate Oversight Committee Report at 13) issuing indiscriminate challenges, without good cause grounded in the Michigan Election Law, and with the purpose of interfering with or unduly delaying the work of election inspectors. Affidavit of David Jaffe, Ex. 2 ("Jaffe Aff."), at ¶ 6. That conduct hindered the ability of election officials to perform their duties under the Michigan Election Law and caused untold damage to our democracy by sowing mistrust in the public in our electoral system.

The Manual's detailed procedures help fortify Michigan's election procedures against the types of disruption faced during the November 2020 election. The MDP has reviewed that Manual cover-to-cover. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 5. It is fully consistent with the Michigan Election Law. It is also materially consistent with prior practice in many ways, including guidance issued by the Secretary of State in 2020 (the "Prior Manual"). The differences relative to the Prior Manual are rooted in specific problems that arose in the November 2020 election and subsequently, but nonetheless stay within the bounds of the Michigan Election Law.

The MDP has already trained numerous election challengers and poll watchers, and will train others in the coming weeks, to serve their important roles in the election process by following the terms of the Manual in their entirety. Id. at ¶¶ 6, 10, 12. Retraining volunteers to comply with any new, judicially-mandated guidelines would require investing significant resources. Id. at ¶ 11. The Plaintiffs nonetheless want to turn back the clock to the chaotic days of the November 2020 election, with MRP specifically seeking to reinstate the Prior Manual.[2] This is somewhat ironic

[2] The O'Halloran Plaintiffs are represented by Ann Howard, who is the subject of a petition by the Attorney General to appoint a Special Prosecutor for review of a charging request relating to conspiracy to unlawfully obtain access to voting machines used in the 2020 election, among other when many of the complained-of elements of the Manual can also be found in the Prior Manual; the Manual simply enhances them to improve clarity and address specific issues. Contrary to the Plaintiffs' suggestions, the MDP – to which the Manual is equally applicable – is confident that election challengers and poll watchers can discharge all statutory rights and duties with alacrity without running afoul of the Michigan Election Law.

ARGUMENT

I. THE SECRETARY OF STATE APPROPRIATELY EXERCISED ITS AUTHORITY TO INTERPRET AND EXPLAIN EXISTING STATUTORY PROVISIONS TO A SPECIFIC CLASS OF ELECTION PARTICIPANTS.

The Michigan Election Law assigns to the Secretary of State ultimate responsibility for administering elections in the state. MCL 168.21 ("The secretary of state shall be the chief election officer of the state and shall have supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the provisions of this act."). This requires the Secretary of State to fulfill a wide array of duties. For example, the Secretary is entrusted to issue instructions for how elections and registrations will be conducted. MCL 168.31(1)(a) and (c). The Secretary executed that authority when issuing the Manual, offering the Secretary's view on the rights and duties of election challengers and poll watchers in Michigan.

Of course, the Secretary of State's powers are not boundless, and agency actions are subject to the Administrative Procedures Act. See MCL 24.203(2). Unless exercising its rule-making authority in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act, it may not decide matters of things. In particular, Howard's alleged role under investigation is the "coordinat[ing of] printing of fake ballots to be run through the tabulators and recruitment of 'volunteers.'" Ex. 3 (Aug. 5, 2022 Petition for Appointment of Special Counsel, available at https://www.michigan.gov/-/media/Project/Websites/AG/releases/2022/August/SPA-Petition---Tabulators-Case.pdf).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

public policy, or dictate the actions of local election officers. This Court clarified the scope of these limitations in two recent decisions, Davis v Benson and Genetski v Benson.

In Davis, this Court took issue with the Secretary of State's directive prohibiting "the open carry of firearms on election day in polling places, clerk's office(s), and absent voter counting boards[,]" and within 100 feet of those locations. Davis v Benson, 2020 WL 7033534, at *1 (Mich Ct Cl Oct 27, 2020). The Court's primary concerns were that "[t]he directive itself covers a substantive policy area—where a resident can openly carry a firearm—and applies to every resident of this state," and that it placed additional general restrictions on where people not involved in the election process can openly carry a firearm beyond those contained in existing statutes. Id. at *3.

In Genetski, this Court was concerned with the Secretary of State establishing a presumption that signatures on absent voter ballot applications and return envelopes were valid. Genetski v Benson, 2021 WL 1624452 (Mich Ct Cl March 9, 2021). The Court held that there was no such presumption in the Michigan Election Law; the declaration had general application because it applied to any person exercising the right to vote through absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballots; and the Secretary of State obligating local election officials to act in particular fashion resulted in its proclamation having the force of law. Id. at *4.

Outside of the election context, courts have taken issue with agency action that conflicted directly with statutory provisions. See, e.g., Detroit Base Coalition for the Human Rights of the Handicapped v Dep't of Social Servs, 431 Mich 172, 187-188 (1988) (where rule required hearings to take place in the county where the claimant resided, agency action permitting telephonic hearings would be deemed to take place where the referee was located and not in two places simultaneously, and thereby conflicted with the rule's requirements when the referee was located in a different county).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

These cases, however, do not mean that the Secretary of State has no power to issue instructions relating to elections. To the contrary, the Secretary of State is specifically empowered by the Michigan Election Law to (1) issue instructions regarding the administration of elections, and (2) issue the Manual. MCL 168.31(1)(a) and (c). Thus, so long as the Manual is consistent with the Michigan Election Law and does not tread new policy ground, the Secretary of State's issuance is a permissive exercise of statutory authority that is allowed under the Administrative Procedures Act. See MCL 24.207(j).

Michigan courts have consistently held that these powers rest with agencies, and their exercise does not violate the Administrative Procedures Act. See, e.g., Twp of Hopkins v State Boundary Comm'n, __ Mich App __, No. 355195 (Feb 24, 2022) (statute provided comprehensive scheme to resolve boundary disputes, and agency's guidelines do not add to or contradict the requirements already found in the statute, so the agency's guidelines were enforceable and its failure to issue rules did not breach a statutory requirement to make rules "necessary or desirable" because the determination of what was necessary was left to the reasonable discretion of the agency); Michigan Trucking Ass'n v Michigan Pub Serv Comm'n, 225 Mich App 424, 430 (1997) (broad statutory authorization to implement a motor carrier safety rating system by "rule or order" rendered agency implementation of a motor carrier rating system a proper permissive exercise of statutory authority under MCL 24.207(j)); By Lo Oil Co v Dept of Treasury, 267 Mich App 19, 47 (2005) (" '[c]ertain portions of RAB 91-12 are clearly explanatory and interpretive, expressing Treasury's position on its standardization of invoices as to form and content [and those] portions of the document are within the § 7(h) exclusion from the APA' rule promulgation requirements").

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Despite Plaintiffs' hyperbole, the Manual here properly and legitimately provides helpful clarification to election challengers and poll watchers about how to comply with the Michigan Election Law. This is an essential function of an agency:

> Communication to the public does not convert an interpretive statement into an independently enforceable rule. Rather, informing the public is one of the purposes of interpretive "rules." Interpretive rules are statements as to what the agency thinks a statute or regulation means; they are statements issued to advise the public of the agency's construction of the law it administers.

Clonlara, supra at 243-244 (cleaned up). The Manual's permissibility is further emphasized by its exception to the definition of "rule" under the Administrative Procedures Act. Not only is it excepted from the definition under MCL 24.207(j), but elements of it additionally fall under exceptions found in MCL 24.207(g) and (h). To hold otherwise would effectively eliminate all ability of the Secretary of State to interpret the statutes it is entrusted with administering. Not only would this needlessly impede the efficient and proper administration of elections, but it would create substantial legal uncertainty by contradicting clear precedent from this Court, the Michigan Court of Appeals, and the Michigan Supreme Court.

II. THE PRACTICAL IMPACT OF THE MANUAL, AND ITS CONSISTENCY WITH THE PRIOR MANUAL AND MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW, DEMONSTRATES THAT IT IS NOT A RULE.

Several MDP employees are registered to receive notifications from the Secretary of State relating to elections. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 4. These are available to the public and anyone who subscribes.[3] From this, the MDP received notification that the Manual had been issued on May 25, 2022. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 4 & ex. A thereto. The MDP promptly reviewed the Manual, cover-to-cover. Id. at ¶ 5. The MDP confirmed that its provisions are consistent with the Michigan Election Law. Afterward, the MDP made the minor updates necessary to its training protocols. Id. The MDP trained approximately 368 election challengers and poll watchers before the August 2022 primary. Id. at ¶ 6. It has trained 723 challengers and poll watchers for the November 2022 election to date, and expects to train hundreds more. Id. at ¶ 10. Each training session is approximately an hour and a half long, with additional time for the Detroit Absent Voter Counting Facility at Huntington Place. Id. at ¶ 7. The MDP fully expects that it and its trained election challengers and poll watchers will be able to discharge their duties, and find none of their rights impaired, while abiding by the entirety of the Manual. Id. at ¶ 12.

The MDP notes that while the Manual was first made available in May 2022 (and at a minimum the MRP admits to having received by the latest July 2022), the MRP waited until just five weeks before the General Election to file this suit.

The Plaintiffs' argument seems to be that the Manual is improper because it includes language and terms not contained in the Michigan Election Law. Indeed, the argument endorsed by the O'Halloran Plaintiffs (and, to a lesser degree, the MRP) seems to be that the Secretary of State is only empowered to issue a manual that duplicates the statutory language contained in the Michigan Election Law. See O'Halloran Motion at 7-8 (arguing that "[i]t should be obvious that all statutory rights should be presented" in the Manual); see generally O'Halloran Motion at 5-7, and MRP Compl. at ¶ 30 (arguing that the Manual is improper because certain procedural elements are not contained word-for-word in the Michigan Election Law). That is not the standard. To hold that as the standard would read the phrase "issue instructions" out of MCL 168.31(1)(a) entirely, read language into MCL 168.31(1)(c) requiring the Secretary of State's "manual of instructions" to include all of the Michigan Election Law word-for-word, and read the words "procedures and forms for processing challenges" out. It also would render the exceptions to the definition of "rule" contained in MCL 24.207 a nullity. This would upend the established precedents of Clonlara, Hinderer, Michigan Trucking, and a host of other Michigan Supreme Court and Court of Appeals decisions—all for no purpose, because the Manual is not disruptive. The MDP had absolutely no difficulty training its challengers for the August 2022 primary using the Manual, and those challengers had no difficulty exercising their rights and performing their duties in the August 2022 primary. Peresman Aff. at ¶¶ 5, 6, 8. There is no reason to think November will be any different. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 12.

In accordance with this Court's October 3, 2022 Order, the remainder of this Brief will explain why each of the Plaintiffs' complaints about specific elements of the Manual are hollow, and how each provision is consistent with the Michigan Election Law. Each qualifies as a permissive exercise of statutory power to "issue instructions" and to "publish…a manual of instructions" pursuant to MCL 168.31(1)(a) and (c), in accordance with MCL 24.207(j). Other exceptions taking the Manual outside the definition of "rule" are noted where also applicable.

A. THE PROVISIONS OF THE MANUAL WITH WHICH THE MRP TAKES ISSUE ARE CONSISTENT WITH THE MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW AND DO NOT IMPEDE A CHALLENGER'S PROPER EXERCISE OF ITS STATUTORY RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

Preliminarily, it is important to note that the MRP's requested relief is to reissue the Prior Manual – from October 2020. This matters because almost all of the provisions of the Manual with which the MRP takes issue were also present in the Prior Manual.

1. The Manual and the Michigan Election Law are consistent with respect to the form of credential for election challengers (MRP Compl. at ¶ 30(a)).

The MRP seems to argue that because the Secretary of State has historically left credentialing organizations to generate their own challenger credential forms, the Secretary of State cannot now require the use of any specific form. To the contrary, the Secretary of State is empowered to "prescribe and require uniform forms … the secretary of state considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections and registrations." MCL 168.31(1)(e). Pursuant to this statutory authority, the Secretary of State considered it advisable to, and did, craft a form of challenger credential. See also Michigan Trucking, supra. The MRP has suggested no manner in which the Secretary of State's designated form of credential is inadequate under or inconsistent with the Michigan Election Law.

Moreover, this is a procedural matter, not a substantive right; and there is absolutely no burden in complying, as the Secretary of State has posted a link to the credential on its website and allows for the provision of digital credentials that arguably are more convenient for any credentialing organization for challengers outside of the AVCBs. Manual at 5. The MDP had no difficulty adopting the Secretary of State's designated form of credential for use by its election challengers in August 2022, and respectfully suggests that more than adequate time remains for the MRP to issue compliant credentials before the November 2022 election. In all candor, it hardly seems worth expending judicial resources on a matter so trivial that it imposes no hardship and can be resolved by simply using the new forms.

2. The Manual and the Michigan Election Law are consistent with respect to the timing when an election challenger may be appointed, and merely suggest that credentialing organizations should train their challengers in advance (MRP Compl. at ¶ 30(b)).

The Michigan Election Law details that challengers must be appointed and credentialed, but is silent about when that must occur. Under the Prior Manual – notably, not a rule – political parties could appoint challengers "through" the date of the election. Prior Manual at 4. The current Manual states that political parties may appoint challengers "until Election Day." Manual at 2. The MRP implicitly argues that the Prior Manual, although not promulgated as a rule, is somehow elevated to the status of a rule by virtue of prior practice; and therefore, the Prior Manual's language cannot be varied absent the rule-making process.

Initially, the MDP notes that the Manual and Prior Manual do not conflict. The current Manual uses "until," which includes the day-of deadline. This is consistent with practice, such that challengers have been appointed on Election Day. The Manual does not use the words "before" or "prior to," after all. Regardless, providing that challengers may be appointed "until" Election Day is a reasonable interpretation of the Michigan Election Law in response to the November 2020 election. Training challengers in their rights, duties, and limitations takes time. As recognized in the Senate Oversight Committee Report, the "failure of the Republican party to verify recruitment and training … and to properly train and counsel some of their volunteers and challengers" created considerable disorder and disruption. Senate Oversight Committee Report at 13. They recommended that "the rights and duties of poll watchers and challengers be better understood and reinforced in their respective training and must be protected equally by election officials." Id. at 12. Requiring advance credentialing will improve the opportunity to properly train challengers. It will also reduce the likelihood that a situation similar to that which arose in November 2020 will occur again, where "Republican officials, along with some ostensibly Independent challengers, furthered the crisis by putting out the call to other members and citizens to descend on the location to stop what was described and presented as a stealing of the election." Senate Oversight Committee Report at 13.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The MDP has already begun training its challengers and poll watchers based on the Manual. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 10. If the MRP is concerned about the Manual's use of the word "until," its solution is much simpler than running to court: simply train, appoint, and credential challengers in advance.

3. The Michigan Election Law requires that election challengers be able to raise objections with "an" election inspector, not "any" election inspector (MRP Compl. at ¶ 30(c)).

The Michigan Election Law requires that an election challenger be able to raise objections with "an" election inspector. See MCL 168.733(1)(e). Contrary to the MRP's suggestion, "an" is not the same word as "any." Courts must construe all words in a statute in accordance with their common usage. MCL 8.3a. Based on the common usage of "an," so long as an election challenger can raise objections with at least one identified election inspector, the Michigan Election Law is satisfied. Moreover, the Michigan Election Law vests the Secretary of State with the ability to oversee and administer elections (MCL 168.21), and to issue instructions concerning the procedures to process challenges (MCL 168.31(1)(a) and (c)). For Plaintiffs' argument to prevail would require this Court to re-write the statute or read language into it that simply is not there.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Manual confirms that a "challenger liaison" is, in fact, "an election inspector." See Manual at 5. It also permits additional election inspectors to be designated as challenger liaisons or their designees, and creates a process to determine who the challenger liaison is if none is formally identified. Id. This complies with the Michigan Election Law as it ensures that there is always "an" election inspector to whom challenges may be presented. Because it is consistent with the Michigan Election Law, this element of the Manual is a permissive exercise of statutory power to "issue instructions," MCL 168.31(1)(a), and to "publish and furnish…a manual of instructions," MCL 168.31(1)(c), in accordance with MCL 24.207(j).

Notably, this is similar to the approach taken in the Prior Manual. The Prior Manual formally focused challenges with the precinct chairperson. Prior Manual at 8. If anything, the Manual improves a challenger's flexibility in bringing challenges by permitting additional challenger liaisons or designees.

By designating challenger liaisons and their designees, the Manual establishes a procedure (not a substantive right) that helps ensure both that experienced election inspectors are tasked with managing challenges, and that those challenges are handled consistently. This is important considering the activities observed during the November 2020 and subsequent elections, where election challengers did not appear to be familiar with the election process or aware of their rights and duties. Jaffe Aff. at ¶ 7. Indeed, election challengers were observed in some precincts to intentionally ask the same question multiple times of different election inspectors in the hopes of obtaining differing answers. Jaffe Aff. at ¶ 9(c). This highlights the need for consistency and uniformity.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Moreover, focusing challenges with challenger liaisons also minimizes disruption to the duties of other election inspectors, as was experienced in the November 2020 election. See Jaffe Aff. at ¶ 8. The other election inspectors present can focus on the task of administering the election without unnecessary distraction. This is consistent with the Michigan Election Law. See MCL 168.727(3).

4. The Manual's restriction on access to certain electronic devices is consistent with the Michigan law regarding secret ballots (MRP Compl. at ¶ 30(d)).

The MRP takes issue with the Manual's prohibition on the possession of certain electronic devices at the AVCB.[4] The Michigan Election Law requires that election challengers be permitted to "[k]eep records of votes cast and other election procedures as the challenger desires." MCL 168.733(1)(h). No statutory language specifies the manner in which election challengers are permitted to keep records. As this provision was enacted in 1955, the drafters certainly could not have intended it to apply to the use of cell phones, laptops, or tablets. To permit video or audio recordings runs a severe risk of violating various Michigan Election Law provisions designed to protect voters and election inspectors alike. It also poses a threat to the right to a secret ballot enshrined in the Michigan Constitution. Mich. Const. § 4(1)(a). Accordingly, this same prohibition was part of the Prior Manual, which the MRP advocates keeping. Prior Manual at 3.

[4] There is no restriction to possessing electronic devices at in person polling locations, although their use is restricted.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The MRP further argues that a challenger's oath, sworn in accordance with MCL 168.765a(9), is sufficient protection. The Prior Manual, however, also barred challengers from "using phones, laptops, tablets or other electronic devices in an AVCB [absent voter counting board]." Prior Manual at 6. Unfortunately, in November 2020, an oath and prohibition on use proved insufficient. More than a few Republican challengers were caught filming, and at least one flagrant repeat offender was escorted from the TCF Center by Detroit Police. Jaffe Aff. at ¶ 8(b)(iii); see also MCL 168.727(3); 168.733(4).

Regardless, and significantly, the Manual's bar on the possession of the identified electronic devices does not impair a challenger's ability to exercise his or her rights in comparison with the bar on their use contained in the Prior Manual. The MDP's challengers had no difficulty relinquishing their electronic devices during the August 2022 primary. It is difficult to see how other challengers cannot also comply—unless their true intent, as in November 2020, is to skirt the ban on use of specified electronic devices and utilize them for improper purposes.

Other means exist for keeping records. The MDP's election challengers and poll watchers keep notes using pen and paper in absent voter ballot counting facilities, which the MDP collects afterward. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 9. This has proven more than adequate, election after election, for many years before (and after) cellular phones were available.

5. The Manual's approach to "impermissible challenges" is consistent with the Michigan Election Law (MRP Compl. at ¶ 30(e)).

The Michigan Election Law distinguishes between permissible and impermissible challenges by identifying specific permissible challenges: "the applicant is not a qualified and registered elector of the precinct, or if a challenge appears in connection with the applicant's name in the registration book." MCL 168.737(1). To be qualified, an elector must be a citizen of the United States, not less than 18 years of age, a resident of the State of Michigan, and a resident of the township or city for at least 30 days. MCL 168.492; MCL 168.10. The Michigan Election Law allows recording "a challenge being made under subsection (1)" only. MCL 168.737(2). It does not permit challenges made on any other grounds, nor does it require recording challenges that are not contemplated by subsection (1).

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Manual identifies the four specific ways that a challenger may make a challenge that is permitted under the Michigan Election Law, specifically that the person is: (i) not registered to vote; (ii) underage; (iii) not a U.S. citizen; or (iv) not a 30-day resident where they are voting. Manual at 11-12. The Manual then identifies numerous specific impermissible challenges, none of which would constitute a challenge of a type permitted under the Michigan Election Law. Manual at 12-13. Because these impermissible challenges do not arise under MCL 168.737(1) and therefore are not required to be recorded under the Michigan Election Law, the Manual states that impermissible challenges need not be recorded. The two are perfectly consistent.

The MRP nonetheless argues that the Manual is improper because it uses different language from the Prior Manual when discussing challenges. Although the Prior Manual does not provide the convenient moniker of "permissible" and "impermissible" challenges, the Prior Manual is consistent with the current Manual in its treatment of challenges. Specifically, the Prior Manual identifies specific types of challenges that may be made, and directs that those specific types of challenges must be recorded in the pollbook. Prior Manual at 8-10.[5] Like the Michigan Election Law, the Prior Manual thereby indirectly states that challenges of other, unpermitted types need

[5] The Prior Manual also identifies additional "types of challenges" beyond the "unqualified voter[.]" Prior Manual at 8. These are contemplated by the Manual also, but are described more broadly as a challenger's rights. Manual at 19-20. This is another purely procedural point, updated in response to the confusion encountered in November 2020.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

not be recorded. The Prior Manual even identifies some of the types of challenges now labeled as "impermissible" as challenges that may not be asserted. Prior Manual at 8.

Unfortunately, the clarification in the Manual is also necessary. As learned the hard way in the 2020 election, challengers raised impermissible challenges. Even when asserted at AVCBs – i.e., away from voters, eliminating the possibility of direct voter intimidation – these challenges were used to intimidate election inspectors and disrupt the election process. Jaffe Aff. at ¶¶ 8(c), 9. These are the specific issues that the Manual is attempting to redress. Manual at 12.

B. THE PROVISIONS OF THE MANUAL WITH WHICH THE O'HALLORAN PLAINTIFFS TAKE ISSUE ARE CONSISTENT WITH THE MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW AND DO NOT IMPEDE A CHALLENGER'S PROPER EXERCISE OF ITS STATUTORY RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

Unlike the MRP, the O'Halloran Plaintiffs ask this Court to rescind the Manual on one hand, and on the other ask for the Court to rewrite specific provisions. Assuming that rescission would reinstitute the Prior Manual, the MDP directs this Court to the similarities between the manuals addressed above. Any Court-ordered line-by-line revision, however, represents judicial overreach and a significant violation of separation of powers principles that make such a request untenable. Nonetheless, the MDP will address each of the objections raised in the O'Halloran Plaintiffs' Motion.

1. The Manual does not mandate ejecting election inspectors, and the Michigan Election Law does not restrict the grounds for ejection (O'Halloran Motion at ¶ 8(a)).

Under the Michigan Election Law, "[a]ny evidence of drinking of alcoholic beverage or disorderly conduct is sufficient cause for the expulsion of a challenger from the polling place or the counting board." MCL 168.733(3) (emphasis added). No statutory provision limits the grounds for expulsion to these two categories of offenses. It is a reasonable interpretation of the Michigan Election Law that any challenger who repeatedly violates his or her duties to "not make a challenge indiscriminately and without good cause" or to "not interfere with or unduly delay the work of the election inspectors" may be removed. MCL 168.727(3). Indeed, this is consistent with existing practice under the Prior Manual; the only distinction is that an election inspector may eject challengers directly instead of only asking that they leave and relying on the precinct chairperson or law enforcement to remove them. Cf. Manual at 22 with Prior Manual at 5, 8. By permitting election inspectors to eject challengers when they violate the Michigan Election Law instead of turning solely to law enforcement, the Manual avoids an unnecessary strain on public resources and diversion from addressing other public safety concerns in the community.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Moreover, the Manual only states that "[a] challenger who repeatedly fails to follow any of the instructions or directions set out in this manual or issued by election inspectors may be ejected by an election inspector." Manual at 22 (emphasis added). This phrase vests authority and discretion in local election inspectors. But because it does not obligate local election officials to undertake any specific course of action, the Manual does not have the force of law. Cf. Genetski, supra. It therefore is an exception to the definition of "rule" under MCL 24.207(h).

This addition to the Manual is also important in light of activity observed at the November 2020 and subsequent elections. Specifically, numerous credentialed election challengers engaged in activity intended to, and which did, interfere with or unduly delay the work of election inspectors. Jaffe Aff. at ¶ 6. This is specifically barred by the Michigan Election Law. MCL 168.727(3). Advising election challengers that they may be ejected for violating the Michigan Election Law does not contradict the statute. It merely puts election challengers on notice that they may be held to account if they violate the law.

2. The Michigan Election Law require that election challengers be able to raise objections with "an" election inspector, not "any" election inspector (O'Halloran Motion at ¶ 8(b)).

This issue is duplicative of a concern raised by the MRP Plaintiffs, and the MDP respectfully refers to and incorporates Section III(A)(3) of this Brief.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

3. The Manual and the Michigan Election Law are consistent with respect to the number of challengers each credentialing organization may have present in absent voter ballot processing facilities (O'Halloran Motion at ¶ 8(c)).

The Manual sets forth factors that clerks should consider when determining the number of challengers each credentialing organization may field in an absent voter ballot processing facility. This is not a contraction relative to Rule 168.791, as the O'Halloran Plaintiffs suggest. Rather, it is a guard against improper contraction based on a misreading of the Michigan Election Law, arising out of an ambiguity in the Michigan Election Law. The Michigan Election law provides that each credentialing organization "may designate not more than 1 challenger to serve at each counting board." MCL 168.730(1). As the Manual explains, this is ambiguous because "counting board" is used in multiple different ways in the Michigan Election Law:

> The Michigan Election Law uses the term 'absent voter counting board' simultaneously to refer to a single absent voter counting board corresponding to an individual in-person precinct; a station within a facility processing absent voter ballots for multiple in-person precincts; the entire facility at which all absent voter ballots are processed for a jurisdiction; and an entire facility at which combined absent voter ballots are processed for multiple jurisdictions in a county. The Michigan Election Law does not expressly state how many challengers may be present at an absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board in each of these scenarios.

Manual at 7-8. In other words, the Manual is designed to prevent a misreading of the Michigan Election Law that could allow local election officials to deny challengers sufficient access by claiming only one challenger is permitted per facility (or "board") in a larger or combined precinct.

This intent is made clear by the Manual expressly providing that "clerks must balance the rights of challengers to meaningfully observe the absent voter ballot counting process and the clerk's responsibility to ensure safety and maintain orderly movement within the facility." Manual at 8. The Manual thereby expressly recognizes, and requires clerks to consider, a challenger's right to meaningfully observe the process. It does not bless a clerk's subversion of this critical task.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

4. The Michigan Election Law does not require that election challengers have access to the same technologies as election inspectors (O'Halloran Motion at ¶ 8(d)).

This element is duplicative of a concern raised by the MRP Plaintiffs, and the MDP respectfully refers to and incorporates Section III(A)(1) of this Brief.

The O'Halloran Plaintiffs further state that challengers should have the same access to electronic tools that are available to election inspectors, but nothing in the Michigan Election Law suggests that. Again, challengers can exercise their rights and fulfill their duties with pen and paper alone in absent voter ballot counting facilities, as has been the consistent practice for many decades. Peresman Aff. at ¶ 9.

CONCLUSION AND RELIEF REQUESTED

For the reasons discussed herein and the motion and brief filed by the Secretary of State, the Court should deny Plaintiffs' motion for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief and dismiss the complaint with prejudice pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8).

AFFIDAVIT OF ERICA PERESMAN

Erica Peresman, being duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

1. I am an adult of sound mind, have personal knowledge of the matters stated in this affidavit, and if called as a witness, could testify competently to the truth of the matters herein.

2. I have been employed as the Voter Protection Director of the Michigan Democratic Party since March 2019, and I first volunteered as a challenger in 2000. I am a licensed attorney in good standing in the State of Michigan and have specialized in Michigan election law for the past several years.

3. The MDP is the Democratic Party's official state party committee for the State of Michigan. The MDP aims to ensure that the constitutional rights of its members, voters, and candidates are not impeded. For decades, the MDP has overseen election challenger programs. These programs include training and require designating and issuing credentials to election challengers.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

4. Several MDP employees are registered to receive notifications available from the Secretary of State relating to elections. On May 25, 2022, MDP employees received notice via email, attached as ex. A hereto, that the Secretary of State had published The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers (the "Manual").

5. After reviewing the Manual cover-to-cover, the MDP made the minor updates necessary to its training protocols, and began training election challengers and poll watchers for the August 2022 primary on June 13.

6. The MDP trained approximately 368 election challengers and poll watchers for the August 2022 primary based on the Manual, as well as applicable statutes and the Election Officials' Manual promulgated by the Michigan Bureau of Elections.

7. Generally, challenger training for the August 2022 primary consisted of one training session of 1-1.5 hours for all challengers, followed by a second 1-1.5 hour training session for challengers who would be serving at the Detroit Absent Voter Counting Facility at Huntington Place.

8. The MDP's challengers did not have any difficulty exercising any of their rights and duties while abiding by the Manual in its entirety during the August 2022 primary.

9. The MDP's election challengers and poll watchers in absent voter ballot counting facilities keep notes using pen and paper, which the MDP collects afterward. This has been the practice for many decades.

10. The MDP started training its election challengers and poll watchers for the November 2022 election on September 14, relying on the Manual. It has trained 723 challengers and poll watchers for the November 2022 election to date, and expects to train hundreds more.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

11. The MDP would have to invest significant resources updating and retraining volunteers to comply under any new guidelines. With the November election four weeks away, this poses an enormous and potentially insurmountable burden to ensure that all challengers will be prepared properly if there are changes. The MDP is also concerned that rescinding the current Manual would interfere with its challengers' and poll watchers' ability to help facilitate an efficient election in which the public can place its trust.

12. The MDP expects that its challengers and poll watchers will abide by the Manual in its entirety, and does not anticipate this impeding the discharge of challenger duties or impeding challenger rights.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

I affirm, under the penalties for perjury, that the foregoing representations are true.

Updated Challenger Document

The Bureau of Elections' Appointment, Rights and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers document has been updated and is available on Michigan.gov/Elections. This document provides more detailed information for challengers, poll watchers, clerks, and election inspectors regarding the different types of challenges allowed and the steps to take when those challenges are made. It also provides guidance regarding challengers and poll watchers in Absent Voter Counting Boards. We will be printing the document in a booklet form for easier use in precincts. We will also add the booklets to the county order form in eLearning when they are available.

Additionally, we have provided a Michigan Challenger Credential Card on our website. Parties and credentialling organizations should ensure the credentials issued to their challengers substantially comply with this form.

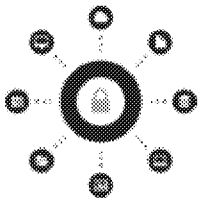
QVF Software Updates

- Mass AV now has an "Include: Perm Accessible" option to email the accessible app link to voters from QVF. Uncheck the voters for whom QVF does not have an email address on file before clicking "Send Accessible App"; an error message will show the voters who could not be emailed.
- Perm AV and Perm Accessible lists are now exclusive of one another. Uncheck one list to add a check to the other.
- AV Details & AV Scan now shows a secondary signature as well as the primary signature, when available.
- In AV Details, a ballot's sent or received date can be edited without having to the delete the ballot and re-enter with the corrected dates.
- In Voting History, changed the address to display "Legacy Address" for elections held prior to the launch of QVF Refresh



Election Security

Over the past few months many of our local clerks have received phishing emails from a malicious source. Fortunately, clerks have been diligent and able to identify these malicious emails, doing an excellent job of putting their election-security training to good use! It is critical to remain cyber-resilient. At the below link is a detailed infographic to assist with avoiding Phishing emails:

How to avoid Phishing Emails

August 2, 2022 Primary Election

If the Board of State Canvassers has certified the candidate list, the Bureau of Elections will accept ballots for conditional approval as to form for the August 2, 2022 election beginning on Tuesday, May 31, 2022. This is part of an effort to help counties, local jurisdictions and vendors have more lead time to have absent voter ballots available for voters starting 40 days before August 2. Ballot proofs should be submitted to Dave Tarrant at Tarrantd2@Michigan.gov. Please note that under the Michigan Constitution, the Michigan Legislature may add proposed constitutional amendments to the ballot as late as June 3. The BOE is not aware of any efforts to add constitutional amendments to the August ballot at this time but cannot guarantee that the Michigan Legislature will not do so. BOE approval of ballot format will therefore be conditional on no additional state-level measures being added to the ballot.

Once BOE approves the form of the ballot, it is imperative that county and local clerks employ a rigorous proofing process of the content of the ballot. That is especially important this year; while reprinting ballots because of errors is always problematic, it will likely be especially difficult and expensive this year because of shortages in paper supply. Important steps to take include:

- Counties and municipalities should establish points of contact and timelines for the review of ballots to ensure that every ballot style is reviewed by both the county and municipal clerk prior to printing.
- Counties should communicate with neighboring counties

Redistricting Status Update

All districts subject to redistricting in 2021 have been updated in QVF. This does not necessarily mean that every jurisdiction's redistricting is 100% complete at this time. Please review your jurisdiction's Street Index Report and Permanent Geography module to identify areas of concern and email questions to ElectionData@Michigan.gov. Redistricting-related questions should not be submitted through the standard "Street Change Requests" tool. The "Street Change Requests" tool is for new street segments, expanded house number ranges or school district assignment corrections. The Bureau will do its best to address these requests expeditiously as redistricting winds down.

Polling Location Assignments

Polling locations for the August Primary have been published to MVIC. Clerks should review precinct assignments in both the Precincts & Polling Locations and the Election Geography modules for accuracy. Any edits to polling locations moving forward for August and November will need to be committed in both modules of QVF. MVIC displays the polling location that is assigned in the Election Geography module.

- Lookup > Precincts and Polling Locations
- Elections > Election Geography

about any school district language in school districts that cross county lines.

- Carefully review your split precincts and any district numbers that have changed. Ensure you have accounted for all your ballot splits.
- Ensure all "vote for" numbers are correct.
- Make sure all local office partial terms are included on the ballot.

Election Geo & AV Impacts

The Bureau of Elections continues to review US Congressional, State House, State Senate, County Commissioner districts and precinct assignments, making corrections where necessary. During this time, changes may occur that impact your jurisdiction's election geography. Counting Boards and Ballot Style Aliases may be reset while making district corrections, so please be aware of the potential for these changes while processing absent voter ballot applications.

Redistricting Module Retirement

Clerk access to the Redistricting module will be removed soon. New requests can no longer be submitted through the module; however, any requests and files already submitted will be retained and accessed by Bureau staff.

AFFIDAVIT OF DAVID JAFFE

David Jaffe, being duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

1. I am an adult of sound mind and have personal knowledge of the matters stated in this affidavit.

2. I am the volunteer team leader for the Democratic election challengers credentialed by the Michigan Democratic Party (the "MDP") at Huntington Place, known in August and November 2020 as TCF Center. I have been a volunteer team leader in three election cycles, and have served as an election challenger in at least six election cycles. I am also a licensed attorney in good standing in the State of Michigan.

3. I have been trained for my role as a volunteer team leader by the Michigan Democratic Party's Voter Protection Program.

4. In three election cycles, I have helped train election challengers before they were credentialed by the MDP, including by preparing and presenting training materials.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

5. In the performance of my duties as a volunteer team leader for the Democratic election challengers, I have access to and knowledge of MDP's records from the Huntington Place/TCF Center location, and knowledge of its practices as described in this Affidavit. The following statements are based on my own personal knowledge and a review of the business records maintained by the MDP. Based on my review of those records, if called as a witness, I could testify competently to the truth of the matters set forth in this Affidavit.

6. During the November 2020 election, many MDP challengers, and I personally, witnessed many instances of MRP challengers and ostensibly independent challengers credentialed by the Election Integrity Fund ("EIF") issuing indiscriminate challenges, without good cause, and with the clear purpose of interfering with or unduly delaying the work of election inspectors. Because MRP and EIF challengers coordinated their efforts, I will refer to them together as "Republican challengers."

7. Based on my observations and those of other MDP challengers, which were documented with contemporaneous notes, I believe that many Republican challengers were not trained or were inadequately trained in their rights, duties, and restrictions, while others were unfamiliar with the election process more broadly. Exceptionally routine election activities, which had been done for decades without incident, were "challenged"—not because they were improper, but because the challengers did not understand what was happening.

8. To name a few examples, I or other MDP challengers at TCF Center witnessed the following in the November 2020:

a. Republican challengers did not understand Michigan law and procedures for counting absentee ballots. They often claimed that election workers broke the law or cheated when in fact things were being done correctly. For example, but without limitation:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

i. They believed that ballots that were returned without the secrecy sleeve were invalid. This is not Michigan law.

ii. They complained vociferously that voters' signatures were not being checked at TCF Center. But the law requires signatures to be checked at the Clerk's office before they are delivered to the AVCB.

iii. They were evidently not aware of what happens to a challenged ballot under the Michigan Election Law. Many Republican challengers mistakenly thought that a challenge meant that the ballot should be set aside and not counted. The law actually requires that the ballot number be noted, but that the ballot be counted. That way, if there is a court proceeding later, the judge can order that a challenged ballot be retrieved.

iv. They did not know that the election inspectors in the AVCB did not have access to Qualified Voter File. They did not know that the electronic list on the computer screens was an Electronic Poll Book.

v. They believed that there was a legal requirement that absentee ballots be recorded in the QVF by 9:00 pm on Election Day. There is no such rule.

b. Republican challengers and their leaders aggressively and systematically violated the laws and rules that govern challengers. For example:

i. Whenever an envelope contained a ballot that wasn't in a secrecy sleeve, a challenger "challenged" the ballot, and demanded that Election Inspectors stop and write down each challenge. But voters in Michigan are not required to use secrecy sleeves, and these ballots were perfectly legitimate. Election officials explained the law. Republican challengers continued these baseless challenges anyway.

ii. At one point a large group of Republican challengers huddled with some of their leaders. One of these leaders shouted, loud enough for several of our volunteers to hear, "You've got to be more aggressive." From that point onward, the shouting, the abuse and the disruption increased. Many Republican challengers began challenging every ballot and demanding that the election inspectors stop and write down the challenge. Our team never heard any challenger articulate a good reason to believe that the voter is not eligible to vote.

iii. Phones were allowed after the polls closed Tuesday evening, but filming and recording were not. The Republicans knew this rule and flouted it intentionally and repeatedly. More than a few Republican challengers were caught filming; most were given warnings. But at least one flagrant repeat offender was escorted from the room by the Detroit Police.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

c. Republican challengers and their leaders aggressively harassed election workers and obstructed their work in an effort to disrupt and slow the count, and to make false claims of misconduct and fraud. For example, but without limitation:

i. A female election inspector had a challenger snarl at her, out of the blue, "I'll bet you aborted your babies!"

ii. Republican challengers repeatedly pressed in close to election workers and yelled accusations. Some came face to face with election inspectors and removed their masks to taunt the inspectors about COVID-19. I could see the fear on election workers' faces, and saw more than one reduced to tears.

iii. Republican challengers repeatedly tried to stop the work at Counting Boards to interrogate each inspector about his or her party affiliation, falsely claiming – often by yelling -- that there has to be a Republican inspector at each counting Board. Supervisors repeatedly had to intervene to stop these improper challenges and the hostile and aggressive conduct of Republican challengers.

iv. At one point, after I intervened when a Republican challenger was aggressively shouting at an election supervisor, the challenger told me that he knows who I am, and that "we will be coming after you."

v. One Republican challenger asked one of my colleagues, "do you want to get hurt?" It took the head of security and a Detroit Police captain to talk him down.

9. A limited number of Republican challengers appeared for the August 2021 primary (approximately eleven, credentialed by the Election Integrity Fund) and November 2021 general election (one Republican challenger, who arrived late and left early). The general approach of the approximately eleven Election Integrity Fund challengers was consistent with that during the November 2020 election, albeit at a smaller scale. For example, but sadly without limitation, I observed the following:

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

a. Crowding of election inspectors, looking over their shoulders, and removing of masks, despite COVID-19 guidelines that applied to all. These are classic physical intimidation techniques; many election inspectors expressed objections and distress. Republican challengers claimed they had to stand close to see, and (often loudly) accused of election supervisors and security personnel of interfering with their rights when asked to step back or respect the physical space of election inspectors. Our challengers were able to see perfectly well from a distance.

b. Even though a large monitor is provided for challengers, most Republican challengers insisted on crowding in on the election inspector operating the computer and leaning over that person to see the small screen. Republican challengers also crowded in on other election inspectors in a manner that was clearly intimidating

c. Republican challengers intentionally asked the same question of many election inspectors across the counting room. They would gather in an aisle, often where other challengers were standing; a leader would assign a question or objection and instruct the challengers to ask it across the room. This was done quite openly, and our challengers were not eavesdropping; the instructions were loud enough for other people who were nearby to hear quite easily. On one of these occasions, the person giving instructions said words to the effect of "let's see if we can get them to give different answers."

d. Republican challengers repeatedly asked individual election inspectors to explain their process in detail. These questions were often couched with an explanation that the challenger was (purportedly) new and didn't understand. The many inspectors who tried to patiently explain what they were doing had to take time away from their work to do so. Once one explained, the Republican challengers repeated the requests and questions to different inspectors around the room.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

e. Republican challengers repeatedly asked whether Republican election inspectors were present at various locations and asked for the names of Republican election inspectors.

f. One EIF challenger who was observing the adjudication stations pulled out her mobile phone at 1:50 pm and began texting. Security personnel told her that phone use was not permitted, and she claimed that she was a new challenger and did not know about the rule. The security personnel reminded her of the acknowledgement and oath she had signed when she entered, which expressly state that phones are not allowed.

g. The one MRP-credentialed challenger who came at the General Election left before the polls closed (not permitted under the Michigan Election Law and based on the oath signed by challengers). He took photographs of the counting room (through the glass door) immediately after leaving. Security personnel were alerted, and insisted that he delete the photographs.

10. In May 2022, the Secretary of State published The Appointment, Rights, and Duties of Election Challengers and Poll Watchers (the "Manual"). The MDP is registered to receive notifications available from the Secretary of State relating to elections, and received notice that the Manual had been issued on May 25, 2022.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

11. After reviewing the Manual, the MDP made the minor updates necessary to its training protocols, then began training election challengers and poll watchers in advance of the August 2022 primary.

12. The MDP trained approximately thirty election challengers and poll watchers to work at the Detroit Absent Voter Counting Facility at Huntington Place for the August 2022 primary. The training was based on the Manual, as well as applicable statutes and the Election Officials' Manual promulgated by the Michigan Bureau of Elections.

13. Generally, challenger training for the August 2022 primary consisted of one training session of 1-1.5 hours, followed by a second 1-1.5 hour training session for the Detroit Absent Voter Counting Facility at Huntington Place.

14. The MDP's challengers at the Detroit Absent Voter Counting Facility at Huntington Place did not have any difficulty exercising all of their rights while abiding by the Manual in its entirety during the August 2022 primary.

15. In my view, the Manual's protocols helped improve the administration of the August 2022 primary. I observed challengers credentialed by Michigan Citizens for Election Integrity (MCEI) make challenges and ask questions without interference. However, some of these challengers behaved aggressively and harassed election inspectors and violated other rules. When they did so, they were admonished by election officials. I did not observe any interference by election officials with proper challenger conduct.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

PETITION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL PROSECUTOR

NOW COMES Dana Nessel, Attorney General for the State of Michigan, and petitions the Prosecuting Attorneys Coordinating Council (PACC) for the appointment of a Special Prosecuting Attorney for the following reasons:

1. The Michigan State Police and the Michigan Department of Attorney General (MDAG) are jointly investigating a conspiracy to unlawfully obtain access to voting machines used in the 2020 General Election.
2. The Michigan State Police and the special agents with the MDAG have completed a preliminary review and it is now time for a prosecutorial review for charges that include but are not limited to Conspiracy, MCL 750.157a; Using a Computer System to Commit a Crime, MCL 752.796; Willfully Damaging a Voting Machine, MCL 168.932(b); Malicious Destruction of Property, MCL 750.377a; Fraudulent Access to a Computer or Computer System, MCL 752.795a; and False Pretenses, MCL 750.218.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

3. On February 10, 2022, Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson requested the MDAG and MSP investigate third party access to vote tabulators, components and technology in Roscommon, Michigan. That investigation has now been presented to the Criminal Trials and Appeals Division seeking approval for criminal charges against the above listed individuals.
4. It is alleged that DePerno, Lambert Juntilla and Rendon orchestrated a coordinated plan to gain access to voting tabulators that had been used in Roscommon County and Richfield Township (Roscommon County), Irving Township (Barry County) and Lake City Township (Missaukee County). In Roscommon County the clerk stated she was told by Rep Rendon that the House of Representatives was conducting an investigation in election fraud.
5. All 5 tabulators were taken to hotels and/or AIRBNB's in Oakland County where Lenberg, Cotton, Penrose and Logan broke into the tabulators and performed "tests" on the equipment. It was determined during the investigation that DePerno was present at a hotel room during such "testing."
6. Howard coordinated printing of fake ballots to be run through the tabulators and recruitment of "volunteers."
7. Irving Township Clerk Sharon Olson indicated that she was asked by Barry County Sheriff Dar Leaf to cooperate with investigators regarding an election fraud investigation. Subsequent to this conversation, Olson turned over her tabulator to a third party.
8. When this investigation began there was not a conflict of interest. However, during the course of the investigation, facts were developed that DePerno was one of the prime instigators of the conspiracy.

Document received by the MI Court of Claims.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

9. DePerno is now the presumptive Republican nominee for Attorney General.

10. A conflict arises when "the prosecuting attorney has a personal interest (financial or emotional) in the litigation." People v Doyle, 159 Mich App 632 (1987).

11. It is hereby understood and agreed that pursuant to the provisions of MCL 49.160, if any Special Prosecutor appointed pursuant to this petition shall handle any matter on behalf of the petitioner, all costs of prosecution, other than personnel costs, shall be borne by the Michigan Department of Attorney General, who has been determined disqualified or otherwise unable to serve.

WHEREFORE, your Petitioner prays:

A. That a Special Prosecuting Attorney be appointed in this matter to review the charging request and handle any prosecution that may result against DePerno, Lambert Juntilla, Rendon, Howard, Cotton, Lenberg, Logan, Penrose and Leaf.

B. For any additional relief that law and justice may require.

Hi Heather,

I hope you had a good weekend. I checked the docket in the challenger guidance litigation and see there's been a lot of action since the response to the order to show cause on 10/11. Would you or someone else be able to send us the filings so we can stay up to date? So far as we can tell, there's no way to access the state-court filings unless you're a party. Is that right?

Thank you,

Jonathan

COMPLAINT FOR MANDAMUS, PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION, DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND OTHER RELIEF

This complaint concerns a matter of Michigan Election Law and is directed to Chief Judge Hon. Timothy M. Kenny

NOW COME, the Plaintiffs, by and through their attorneys and in support of their complaint states as follows:

PARTIES

1. Plaintiff Kristina Karamo is the Republican Candidate for Michigan Secretary of State and was an election poll challenger during the November 3, 2020, election.
2. Plaintiff Philip O'Halloran, MD is an election poll challenger who worked as an election poll challenger in the TCF Center during the November 3, 2020, General Election, and worked at the Huntington Center as an election poll challenger during the August 2, 2022, Primary Election, and is scheduled to work at the Huntington Center as an election poll challenger the November 8, 2022, General Election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Primary Election, and is scheduled to work at the Huntington Center as an election poll challenger the November 8, 2022, General Election.

4. Plaintiff Timothy Mahoney is an election poll watcher. Timothy Mahoney attempted to observe the pre-processing of ballots on August 1, 2022 and was denied access.
5. Plaintiff Kristie Walls is an election poll worker stationed at the high-speed scanners on August 2, 2022, and is scheduled to work the November 8, 2022 election.
6. Plaintiff Patricia Farmer is a citizen taxpayer of the City of Detroit.
7. Plaintiff Election Integrity Fund and Force is a Michigan non-profit Michigan Corporation that has been registered as a non-partisan organization providing poll challengers and poll watchers to the Huntington Center
8. Defendant Janice Winfrey is the Clerk for the City of Detroit who has statutory duties under the Michigan Election Code, being MCL 168.1 et seq the Public Act 116 of 1954
9. Defendant City of Detroit Board of Election Inspectors has statutory duties under the Michigan Election Code, being MCL 168.1 et seq the Public Act 116 of 1954

JURISDICTION

10. Jurisdiction is proper pursuant to MCL 600.775.
11. Venue is proper pursuant to MCL 600.1615.

GENERAL ALLEGATIONS

12. In 2018, Michigan created a new system for the casting and counting of absentee ballots following the 2018 Initiated Act which allowed for absentee voter counting boards.
13. Many laws were altered after the Initiated Act to further this OPTIONAL process.
14. Michigan dramatically increased the use of absentee voting which had been restricted to widespread 'no excuse absentee voting.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

15. The new process permitted a jurisdiction, such as the City of Detroit, to form an optional process to collect absentee ballots and count the absentee ballots at an absentee voter counting board "AVCB". MCL 168.764D.
16. Detroit opted to have all city precincts gathered into a counting center located at the TCF center (now known as Huntington Center) with multiple AVCBs to count individual precincts.
17. The novel process of counting absentee ballots at the TCF Center in 2020 was plagued with many problems which have created controversy around the results of the 2020 election.
18. This experimental process was a failure.
19. Despite the concerns raised, on August 2, 2022, the primary for the City of Detroit precincts were counted in Absentee Counting Boards at the Huntington Center (formerly known as TCF center).
20. The process was once again plagued with illegal actions and the invention of processes not authorized by law.

REQUEST FOR AN ABSENTEE BALLOT BY APPLICATION

21. The absentee ballot is only to be provided to a registered voter upon completion of an application for an absentee ballot. MCL 168.761(1)
22. The registered voter can request inclusion in the permanent absentee voter program since 2018- but the request must be still documented.
23. The clerk is required to verify the identity of a person who requests an absentee ballot:
    a. If the person files the application which requests the absentee ballot in person at the clerk's office, then there is a process defined in MCL 168.761(6) that requires identification.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

i. Identification can be provided with an ID and the ballot is provided; or

ii. Identification can be made by an affidavit which includes the reason identification can not be provided but the ballot is received as a challenged ballot.

b. If the person requests the application which requests the absentee ballot by mail or online then there is a requirement that there be verification of identity in a process described in MCL 168.761(2) through signature comparison to the QVF. The QVF is the qualified voter file as defined by Michigan law.

MCL 168.761 (2) The qualified voter file must be used to determine the genuineness of a signature on an application for an absent voter ballot. Signature comparisons must be made with the digitized signature in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain a digitized signature of an elector, or is not accessible to the clerk, the city or township clerk shall compare the signature appearing on the application for an absent voter ballot to the signature contained on the master card.

24. The signature comparison process remains undefined. Specifically, the Secretary of State was informed by the Michigan Court of Claims in Genetski & Michigan Republican Party v. Jocelyn Benson and Johnathan Brater 20-000216-MM that the Michigan Secretary of State was required to use the Michigan Administrative Procedures Act to promulgate rules for signature comparison and that the SOS Guidance informing clerks that the signatures were presumed valid and that the "any redeeming characteristic standard" was unlawful.

25. No signature comparison process has been made into a rule.

26. The lack of a signature standard means that the process involving a mailed-in ballot application or online registration is unlawful; and as it is the only alternative that does not require an absentee voter to show identification at the precinct in order to obtain the ballot this entire scheme must be declared invalid.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

27. The Court should declare that only Absentee Ballots that have been requested in person can be validly voted in the election.

RETURN OF THE ABSENTEE BALLOT

28. The absentee ballots are received at the clerk's office, at drop boxes or through the mail.

29. Michigan law provides for absentee ballots to be placed in drop boxes.

30. MCL 168.761(4) states the law of possession of an absentee ballot and requires this notice to be placed on each absentee ballot.

PERSONS WHO CAN LEGALLY BE IN POSSESSION OF AN ABSENT VOTER BALLOT ISSUED TO AN ABSENT VOTER ARE LIMITED TO:

- THE ABSENT VOTER;
- A PERSON WHO IS A MEMBER OF THE ABSENT VOTER'S IMMEDIATE FAMILY OR RESIDES IN THE ABSENT VOTER'S HOUSEHOLD AND WHO HAS BEEN ASKED BY THE ABSENT VOTER TO RETURN THE BALLOT;
- A PERSON WHOSE JOB IT IS TO HANDLE MAIL BEFORE, DURING, OR AFTER BEING TRANSPORTED BY A PUBLIC POSTAL SERVICE, EXPRESS MAIL SERVICE, PARCEL POST SERVICE, OR COMMON CARRIER, BUT ONLY DURING THE NORMAL COURSE OF HIS OR HER EMPLOYMENT;
- AND THE CLERK, ASSISTANTS OF THE CLERK, AND OTHER AUTHORIZED ELECTION OFFICIALS OF THE CITY OR TOWNSHIP.

ANY OTHER PERSON IN POSSESSION OF AN ABSENT VOTER BALLOT IS GUILTY OF A FELONY.

31. Whenever a drop box or the post office is used to return a ballot there is no real opportunity to observe who returns a ballot.

32. US Mail collection boxes are not observed or recorded by a camera.

33. MCL 168.761D provides the regulation of absentee ballot drop boxes and provides in section (1) that all drop boxes ordered and installed prior to October 1, 2020, are exempt from the law but in section (2) that the law requires reasonable efforts if the drop box was ordered but not installed before October 1, 2020. There appears to be no requirement to secure the drop boxes installed in exemption of this law.

34. The ballot envelope and the law both require any person who handles the envelope fill out an attestation.

35. The law restricts who may possess and deliver a ballot to an immediate family member OR individual residing in the household of the voter.

168.764a Instructions for absent voters.

The following instructions for an absent voter must be included with each ballot or set of ballots furnished an absent voter:

Step 5. Deliver the return envelope by 1 of the following methods:

(a) Place the necessary postage upon the return envelope and deposit it in the United States mail or with another public postal service, express mail service, parcel post service, or common carrier.

(b) Deliver the envelope personally to the office of the clerk, to the clerk, or to an authorized assistant of the clerk, or to a secure drop box located in the city or township.

(c) In either (a) or (b), a member of the immediate family of the voter including a father-in-law, mother-in-law, brother-in-law, sister-in-law, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, grandparent, or grandchild or an individual residing in the voter's household may mail or deliver a ballot to the clerk for the voter.

(d) You may request by telephone that the clerk who issued the ballot provide assistance in returning the ballot. The clerk is required to provide assistance if you are unable to return your absent voter ballot as specified in (a), (b), or (c) above, if it is before 5 p.m. on the Friday immediately preceding the election, and if you are asking the clerk to pick up the absent voter ballot within the jurisdictional limits of the city, township, or village in which you are registered. Your absent voter ballot will then be picked up by the clerk or an election assistant sent by the clerk. All individuals authorized to pick up absent voter ballots are required to carry credentials issued by the clerk. If using this absent voter ballot return method, do not give your ballot to anyone until you have checked their credentials.

WARNING All of the following actions are violations of the Michigan election law and are illegal in this state:

(4) For an individual other than those listed in these instructions to return, offer to return, agree to return, or solicit to return an absent voter ballot to the clerk.

(5) For an individual other than the absent voter; an individual listed in these instructions; or an individual whose job it is to handle mail before, during, or after being transported by a public postal service, express mail service, parcel post service, or common carrier, but only during the normal course of his or her employment to be in possession of a voted or unvoted absent voter ballot.

168.764b Delivery and acceptance of absent voter ballots; appointment, oath, credentials, and duties of assistants; collection of absent voter ballots; prohibition; noncompliance.

(1) An absent voter ballot must be delivered to the clerk only as authorized in the instructions for an absent voter provided in section 764a.

MCL 168.761D(4)(c) The city or township clerk must use video monitoring of that drop box to ensure effective monitoring of that drop box.

36. The requirement for video monitoring does not set forth standards beyond effective monitoring.

37. There is no explanation of what monitoring requires although it would be presumed that the monitoring would be to ensure that unauthorized persons do not drop ballots off at the drop box.

38. There is no provision for recording, storage, or streaming of the video.

39. There is no means by which the public may check the work of the officials monitoring the ballot drop boxes.

40. The documentary 2000 Mules demonstrated with video from Detroit combined with other released recordings of drop boxes in the City of Detroit that persons violated the law by dropping off multiple ballots in the 2020 election. This video is available.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

41. The 2000 Mules video and other videos show that felony delivery of ballots to the drop boxes was routinely captured but there have been no prosecutions reported for the persons in Detroit who brought multiple ballots to the drop box.
42. The use of the term "effective" means that the clerk is required to monitor the drop box and that the monitoring must be effective in preventing the violation of law or assist in the prosecution of those who do. This has not been done.
43. The Court should enter declaratory relief after reviewing the videos that the Detroit clerk has not been 'effective' in monitoring the drop boxes which is a duty assumed when Detroit chose to use drop boxes for ballot collection.

Verification of Identity for Absentee Ballot Mailed-in or Dropped Off

44. The only method for identification is the signature comparison. This critical piece is the only safeguard to prevent ballot box stuffing.
45. The Equal Protection clause of the US Constitution requires that the identification process protects against dilution of a vote by allowing unqualified voters to cast ballots.
46. MCL 168.765 requires that the Detroit City clerk:
    a. Shall not open the ballot return envelope BEFORE delivering to the board of election inspectors
    b. Shall safely keep the ballot return envelopes safely in her office until election day

MCL 168.765.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (6), a clerk who receives an absent voter ballot return envelope containing the marked ballots of an absent voter shall not open that envelope before delivering the envelope to the board of election inspectors as provided in this section. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (6), the city or township clerk shall safely keep in his or her office until election day any absent voter ballot return envelopes received by the clerk before election day containing the marked ballots of an absent voter.

47. MCL 168.766 requires that the Board of Election Inspectors (Not the clerk) verify the 'legality' of the ballot by doing the following checks:
    a. That the absent voter has not voted in person.
    b. That the absent voter is included in the QVF or Master registration record,
    c. Examine the statement of the absent voter to see that it is properly executed
    d. Determine if the absentee voter signature is genuine by comparing the ballot signature to the signature on file QVF

168.766 Marked ballot or absent voter ballot; verification.
(1) Upon receipt from the city or township clerk of any envelope containing the marked ballot or ballots of an absent voter, the board of inspectors of election shall verify the legality of the vote by doing both of the following:
(a) Examining the digitized signature for the absent voter included in the qualified voter file under section 509q or the registration record as provided in subsection (2) to see that the person has not voted in person, that he or she is a registered voter, and that the signature on the statement agrees with the signature on the registration record.
(b) Examining the statement of the voter to see that it is properly executed.
(2) The qualified voter file must be used to determine the genuineness of a signature on an envelope containing an absent voter ballot. Signature comparisons must be made with the digitized signature in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain a digitized signature of an elector, or is not accessible to the clerk, the city or township clerk shall compare the signature appearing on an envelope containing an absent voter ballot to the signature contained on the master card.

48. The board of election inspectors shall determine the legality of the ballot and mark any illegal ballot as 'reject as illegal' and return it to the clerk for preservation as required by law pursuant to MCL 168.767.

168.767 Absent voters' ballots; illegal vote; rejection of ballot; marking; preservation. Sec. 767.

If upon an examination of the envelope containing an absent voter's ballot or ballots, it is determined that the signature on the envelope does not agree sufficiently with the signature on the registration card or the digitized signature contained in the qualified voter file as provided under section 766 so as to identify the voter or if the board shall have knowledge that the person voting the ballot or ballots has died, or if it is determined by a majority of the board that such vote is illegal for any other reason, then such vote shall be rejected, and thereupon some member of the board shall, without opening the envelope, mark across the face of such envelope, "rejected as illegal", and the reason therefor. The statement shall be initialed by the chairman of the board of election inspectors. Said envelope and the ballot or ballots contained therein shall be returned to the city, township or village clerk and retained and preserved in the manner now provided by law for the retention and preservation of official ballots voted at such election.

49. The legislature's use of 'legality' in MCL 168.766 and 'rejected as illegal' in MCL 168.767 means that a ballot that fails to meet the verification is illegal.

50. One significant problem with the identification procedure of comparing the signature on the ballot envelope to the QVF is that there are no signature standards for comparison to determine if a signature 'agrees sufficiently'.

    a. In the case of Robert Genetski and Mich Rep Party v Jocelyn Benson and Jonathan Brater Case No 20-000216-MM, the Michigan Court of Claims rejected the Secretary of State guidance which was issued immediately before the 2020 election because it had not followed formal rulemaking procedures which included notice, public comment and the legislative review required by the Administrative Procedures Act.

    b. The Secretary of State has not provided a promulgated administrative rule for signature comparison thus, leaving the signature comparison to an arbitrary and capricious whim of an individual clerk.

    c. To this date no standard exists to replace the unlawful guidance.

    d. As the sole method for determining identity is signature comparison for an absentee vote which was obtained by mail or online request this security of our elections is woefully inadequate.

51. The City of Detroit used an unauthorized technology within the electronic voting system illegally during the August 2, 2022, Primary election for signature comparison:

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

a. Chris Thomas, Senior Advisor to the Clerk of the City of Detroit, office has reported that the city used an artificial intelligence system called Relia-vote to make digital signature comparisons.

b. Subsequently, records were made public that showed that Detroit had received a $750,000 grant from The Center for Tech and Civil Living (CTCL) widely known as "Zuckerbucks" to purchase this system.

c. This system and its software were apparently interfaced with the QVF without the configuration being disclosed to the public, without any apparent oversight by the Board of State Canvassers.

d. The interface with Relia-vote has created new security risks that have not been publicly disclosed, do not comply with the requirements of MCL 168.37 that the voting system be uniform throughout the State.

e. The interface with Relia-Vote is illegal in that it fails to comply with the certification requirements of the federal Help America Vote Act of 2002 which requires that the voting system as configured be certified as meeting or exceeding the current Voluntary Voting System Standards (VVSG 2.0) for election security and transparency as established by the US Election Assistance Commission (EAC) and certified by an accredited Voting System Testing Laboratory (VSTL).

f. There is no authority in the law to have the Relia-vote system and its artificial intelligence replace the Detroit Board of Election Inspectors and to use a digital comparison of the signatures to augment the clerk.

g. The entire process used in Detroit is ultra vires and illegal.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

52. The Secretary of State has also informed the City of Detroit Clerk (and all election clerks in Michigan) that since the application for an absentee ballot is compared to the QVF that the signature on the ballot can be compared ONLY to the application. This is part of the election worker training from both 2020 and 2022.

53. This Secretary of State's process of comparing only to the signature on the application is a violation of MCL 168.766 and to the extent, this is followed in the actions of the City of Detroit it is also in violation of law.

Counting of Ballots by an AVCB

54. The counting of ballots at the Huntington Center (an absentee voter counting place is governed by the procedures in MCL 168.765a).

> MCL 168.765a (4) In a city or township that uses absent voter counting boards under this section, absent voter ballots must be counted in the manner provided in this section and, except as otherwise provided in section 764d, absent voter ballots must not be delivered to the polling places.
>
> Subject to section 764d, the board of election commissioners shall provide a place for each absent voter counting board to count the absent voter ballots.
>
>
> The places must be designated as absent voter counting places.
>
> Except as otherwise provided in this section, laws relating to paper ballot precincts, including laws relating to the appointment of election inspectors, apply to absent voter counting places.
>
> The provisions of this section relating to placing of absent voter ballots on electronic voting systems apply.
>
> More than 1 absent voter counting board may be located in 1 building.

55. MCL 168.765a(6) provides the following rules:

> [Note 764d does not apply to the City of Detroit AVCB as it is not combined with another jurisdiction]

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

a. All ballots received by the clerk BEFORE election day MUST be delivered to the AVCB at the time the election inspectors report for duty on election day.
b. All ballots received by the clerk ON election day MUST be delivered to the AVCB.
c. All ballots must be delivered sealed in the ballot return envelope.
d. Written or stamped on each return envelope must be the date and time the envelope was received.
e. Written or stamped on each return envelope is a statement by the clerk that the signatures on the envelope have been checked AND found to 'agree' with the signatures contained in the QVF as provided in Section 766-the standard which remains unpromulgated.
f. The clerk shall mark a ballot 'rejected' and place their name and reason for rejection on the ballot.
    i. If determined after 8 pm on the day before the election that the signature does not agree when compared.
    ii. If it is determined after 8 pm on the day before election day that the absentee voter failed to sign the ballot.
    iii. If the statement of the voter is not properly executed.
g. A rejected ballot must be preserved at the clerk's office and NOT sent to the AVCB.
h. If the problems with the signature or statement is discovered BEFORE 8 pm on election day, then the clerk must notify the absentee voter as soon as 'practicable' of the rejection but either before 48 hours or before 8pm on election day (whichever is first.)

i. Pursuant to Section 765(5) the clerk is required to post or make public BOTH the number of ballots sent out and the number of ballots that were received. This notification must be made before 8 am on election day.

j. Pursuant to Section 765(5) the clerk is required to post or make public the "Total" number of ballots received and made available to the board of election inspectors or absentee counting board under this act. The total number includes the ballots received before and on election day. This notification is to be made before 9 pm on election day.

k. Pursuant to Section 765 (5) the clerk is required to post or make public the total number of absentee ballots received at the precinct on election day along with the "Total" votes received by the clerk's office and previously made public at 9 pm. This must be done as soon as possible.

MCL 168.765a(6)

Subject to section 764d, absent voter ballots received by the clerk before election day must be delivered to the absent voter counting board by the clerk or the clerk's authorized assistant at the time the election inspectors of the absent voter counting boards report for duty, which time must be established by the board of election commissioners.

Except as otherwise provided in section 764d, absent voter ballots received by the clerk before the time set for the closing of the polls on election day must be delivered to the absent voter counting boards.

Except as otherwise provided in section 765(6), absent voter ballots must be delivered to the absent voter counting boards or combined absent voter counting boards in the sealed absent voter ballot return envelopes in which they were returned to the clerk.

Written or stamped on each of the return envelopes must be the time and the date that the envelope was received by the clerk and a statement by the clerk that the signatures of the absent voters on the envelopes have been checked and found to agree with the signatures of the voters on the registration cards or the digitized signatures of voters contained in the qualified voter file as provided under section 766.

If it is determined after 8 p.m. on the day before election day that a signature on the registration card or a digitized signature contained in the qualified voter file and on the absent voter ballot return envelope does not agree as provided under section 766, if it is determined after 8 p.m. on the day before election day that the absent voter failed to sign the envelope, or if the statement of the absent voter is not properly executed, the clerk shall mark the envelope "rejected" and the reason for the rejection and shall place his or her name under the notation

An envelope marked "rejected" must not be delivered to the absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board but must be preserved by the clerk until other ballots are destroyed in the manner provided in this act.

If before 8 p.m. on the day before election day the clerk of a city or township rejects an absent voter ballot return envelope because the signature on the absent voter ballot return envelope does not agree sufficiently with the signature on the master card or the digitized signature contained in the qualified voter file so as to identify the elector or because the elector failed to sign the absent voter ballot return envelope, the city or township clerk shall as soon as practicable, but in no event later than 48 hours after determining the signatures do not agree sufficiently or that the signature is missing, or by 8 p.m. on the day before election day, whichever occurs first, notify the elector of the rejection by mail, telephone, or electronic mail.

The clerk shall also comply with section 765(5).

On or before 8 a.m. on election day, the clerk shall post in the clerk's office or otherwise make public the number of absent voter ballots the clerk distributed to absent voters and the number of absent voter ballot return envelopes containing the marked ballots of absent voters received by the clerk before election day and to be delivered to the board of election inspectors or the absent voter counting boards under this act.

On or before 9 p.m. on election day, the clerk shall post in the clerk's office or otherwise make public the number of absent voter ballot return envelopes containing the marked ballots of absent voters received by the clerk on election day and delivered to the board of election inspectors, under subsection (3), along with the total number of absent voter ballot return envelopes containing the marked ballots of absent voters received by the clerk both before and on election day and delivered to the board of election inspectors or the absent voter counting boards under this act.

As soon as possible after all precincts in the city or township are processed, the clerk shall post in the clerk's office or otherwise make public the number of absent voter ballot return envelopes containing the marked ballots of absent voters received by the election inspectors at the precincts on election day, along with the total number of absent voter ballot return envelopes containing the marked ballots of absent voters received in the city or township for that election.

This subsection applies only to elections in which a federal or state office appears on the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Posting or Making public the numbers of Absentee Ballots Sent and Returned

56. The provisions of Section 765(5) would limit the claims that late night ballots were being injected into the election outcome as the total number of absentee ballots to be counted would be public by 9 pm.

57. The board of election inspectors and the signature comparison process was allegedly done at a location where ballots for the City of Detroit were preprocessed which raises several concerns:

    a. There is no access by poll challengers or watchers of this process of signature comparison which prevents the poll challengers from any ability to challenge the absentee voter having the qualifications to vote.

    b. The marked ballot envelopes that are rejected which deprives that voter from having their vote counted in this process is done without the poll challenger or poll watcher being able to observe or challenge the key process.

    c. Plaintiff Tim Mahoney attempted to observe the process on August 1, 2022 and was denied entry.

    d. The practice of the clerk of the City of Detroit is to have the clerk use one of two methods to verify the signature as described during the August 2, 2022 Primary.

        i. The clerk (not the board of election inspectors) makes the signature comparison and marks the ballot by hand with a date and time stamp and places their initials or signature on a section of the ballot that has an attestation that the signature comparison was made and approved.

        ii. The clerk (not the board of election inspectors) uses the Relia-vote system which makes a digital comparison by retrieving the signature from the QVF with an adjustable setting that allows the clerk to manually accept signatures that do not meet the pre-programmed standard. A digital stamp is then placed on the envelope with the date and time along with the name or initials of the clerk by the Relia-vote machine.

e. Either method is a process done by the clerk and NOT the board of election inspectors in violation of Section 766.

f. Other AVCBs in the state of Michigan provides for signature comparison at the AVCB and in the view of the election poll challengers.

THE PUBLIC OBSERVATION REQUIREMENT

58. MCL 168.798a provides that if a separate counting center such as Huntington Center is used that ALL proceedings:

a. SHALL be under the clerk or authorized assistants;

b. SHALL be conducted under the observation of the public

c. No person except those authorized shall touch a ballot or return is the only restriction on public observation of ALL proceedings.

168.798a Separate counting center; direction and conduct of proceedings; method.

If a separate counting center is used, all proceedings shall be under the direction of the clerk or authorized assistants.

The proceedings shall be conducted under observation by the public, but no persons except those authorized shall touch a ballot or return. Persons who engage in processing and counting of the ballots shall be deputized and take an oath that they will faithfully perform their assigned duties. . . .

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

59. The Detroit Clerk has not provided access for the observation of the signature comparison process and instead without the purview of poll watchers and poll challengers the Detroit City Clerk has sorted out ballots and removed the ballots that are unsigned or do not meet the (undefined) process for signature comparison and are rejected.
60. There is concern that the process can be used to remove legitimate votes from areas or otherwise identified as ballots that would be cast in opposition to the political views of the clerk.
61. While it is understood that there has been a modification of law in that MCL 168.765 provides for pre-processing with the observation of poll challengers this process is limited to the separation of the ballot from the envelope and verifying the ballot is in a secrecy envelope-essentially what seat 1 and 2 were doing at the AVCB in 2020 and the primary on August 2, 2022.
62. The signature comparison is NOT governed by this provision and there is a strong probability this will occur again behind closed doors.

UNAUTHORIZED PROCESS FOR DUPLICATION OF BALLOTS

63. MCL 168.798b also provides for the duplication of ballots ONLY when the ballot is so damaged or defective that it cannot be properly counted by the electronic tabulating equipment, a true duplicate copy shall be made.

> MCL 168.798b . . .If a ballot is damaged or defective so that it cannot properly be counted by the electronic tabulating equipment, a true duplicate copy shall be made and substituted for the damaged or defective ballot. Each duplicate ballot shall be clearly labeled "duplicate", and shall bear a serial number, which shall be recorded on the damaged or defective ballot.

64. The City of Detroit AVCB illegally used the duplication process without legal authority for the improper purpose of copying some votes for contests on a ballot that was the improper form which had been sent to the absent voter. An example is when a ballot for the wrong precinct was sent, then the ballot for contests which were in common would be duplicated onto a ballot from the right precinct and then the ballot was 'fixed' by duplication.

65. The City of Detroit AVCB created a method of converting Absent Uniformed Voters or Overseas Voter's electronic ballots to a ballot for tabulating through a process called duplication.

66. This process is not authorized by law. MCL 168.759a does not provide for the duplication of the ballot by election inspectors for the purpose of tabulating.

The Use of High-Speed Scanners

67. MCL 168.765a(8) requires the AVCB to process the ballots and returns in as nearly the same manner as the ballots processed at the precincts.

> MCL 168.765a(8) The absent voter counting boards and combined absent voter counting boards shall process the ballots and returns in as nearly as possible the same manner as ballots are processed in paper ballot precincts. The poll book may be combined with the absent voter list or record required by section 760, and the applications for absent voter ballots may be used as the poll list. The processing and tallying of absent voter ballots may commence at 7 a.m. on the day of the election.

68. The City of Detroit uses high-speed scanners rather than tabulators.

69. MCL 168.795 requires that the tabulators be programmed to reject certain ballots that are marked contrary to the instructions.

70. The tabulation of the ballots would permit poll challengers to see the ballots that are rejected or reversed for non-compliance with instructions for marking a ballot. Scanning the ballots eliminates this process from the purview of the poll challenger.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

71. Instead of rejecting the ballots as required by law the City of Detroit provides for a process of 'adjudication' which is not authorized by law.
72. The high-speed scanners are a configuration of the electronic voting system that is not certified as required by the Help America Vote Act in 52 USC 20901 et seq OR by the board of state canvassers as required by MCL 168.795a.
73. On information and belief, the software that is used to convert a ballot image to the dominion software as of 2018 was created by either Konnech, Inc or Votem (who purchased certain assets from Konnech, Inc. This information is presented online and appears as though Detroit paid these vendors for work.
74. Konnech, Inc and its principal Eugene Yu are under criminal investigation related to election security breaches to the Chinese Community Party (CCP).
75. Further information has developed that this company Konnech has strong ties to the CCP and has been integrally part of the Detroit Absentee Counting Board.
76. There will need to be discovery and hearings on the extent of this national security breach that has occurred and the epicenter appears to be Detroit.

The Adjudication Process is Unauthorized by Law

77. The adjudication process is not provided for anywhere in statute.
78. The word adjudication does not appear anywhere in the election code; nor is there a description of the process used in Detroit.
79. In the General Election of 2020 and in the Primary Election of 2022, the AVCB Counting Center used the following process:
    a. When a ballot is marked improperly so as to be rejected the digital ballot image is sent to a bank of ten computers called adjudication.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

b. At each computer a screen displays the optical scanned image as a digital image that has software that identifies the portion of the ballot which needs to be adjudicated.

c. Two election inspectors (presumed to be one from each party) review the image and the contest that has been presented for adjudication and have the options of:

   i. Doing nothing and accepting the ballot as cast by selecting the option to ACCEPT.

   ii. Altering the image by darkening or marking the selection to carry out their perception of the voter's intent after selecting the option to OVERRIDE.

   iii. Altering the image by removing a mark to carry out their perception of the voter's intent after selecting the option to OVERRIDE.

   iv. Sending the ballot to election officials by selecting the option QUARANTINE.

   v. In the case of a write-in ballot by rejecting the write-in candidate or accepting if the candidate is listed as an official write-in and entering the vote into a separate write-in program.

d. The adjudication process which alters the ballot image is illegal.

e. The adjudication process, on information and belief, permits the acceptance of ballots that were 'adjudicated' but are required by law to not be counted pursuant to MCL 168.798(c)(3).

80. https://rumble.com/embed/v8upcz/ is a video in which Dominion CEO Eric Coomer explained adjudication features in 2017.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

a. The video begins with the statement that the voter did not fill out the ballot as instructed and has either not filled out the ovals completely or have circled their selections.

b. Dr. Eric Coomer states clearly, "We're not sure what the voter intent is but we are going to allow the adjudicators to make that call...and edit the ballot."

81. The law defines a mark and states that only a stray ballot mark may disregard but there is no legal process to alter or change a mark.

82. In fact, the system is designed to count portions of a ballot when the law requires the entire ballot be rejected.

MCL 168.795(2)
...Electronic tabulating equipment that tabulates ballots, including absentee ballots, at a central location must be programmed to reject a ballot if the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceed the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question, if no valid choices are recorded on an elector's ballot, or if, in a primary election, votes are recorded for candidates of more than 1 political party.

83. An examination of the requirements of MCL 168.795(1) in subparts c and e has similar language which provides for the rejection of an in-person cast ballot by the tabulator equipment and the opportunity that the voter be provided a spoiled ballot and be able to self-correct their error. The provisions are highlighted above. A ballot marked improperly is rejected and the voter is given a chance to self-correct on the spot.

MCL 168.795(1) An electronic voting system acquired or used under sections 794 to 799a must meet all of the following requirements:

(c) Permit each elector to vote at an election for all persons and offices for whom and for which the elector is lawfully entitled to vote; to vote for as many persons for an office as the elector is entitled to vote for; and to vote for or against any question upon which the elector is entitled to vote. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject all choices recorded on the elector's ballot for an office or a question if the number of choices exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

(e) Permit an elector in a primary election to vote for the candidates in the party primary of the elector's choice. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject each ballot on which votes are cast for candidates of more than 1 political party. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the elector has voted for candidates of more than 1 political party must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

84. Contrast to section 2 of MCL 168.795 which requires the electronic voting system that count absentee ballots REJECT a ballot that is mismarked. There is no provision to correct provided to the absent voter but the ballot is rejected. There is no law or provision for adjudication or any other process to alter the ballot manually or digitally. The section applies to ballots counted at a central location.

85. In Detroit at the AVCB on August 2, 2022, many ballots which contained votes for candidates on two political parties were 'adjudicated'.

    a. This means that the scanning device created an optical image and election workers were able to digitally remove marks or digitally darken marks to decide what the voter's intent was when the ballot was mismarked.

    b. This process is a violation of law which required the ballot be rejected. This is part of the voting system as the software allows adjudication—a word that does not appear anywhere in law or administrative rule.

    c. The percentage of ballots that were adjudicated was staggering.

    d. The same illegal process was observed in 2020 during the general election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

e. The same illegal process is slated to be used in the 2022 Mid Terms Michigan Election in Detroit.

86. The Election Officials' Manual Chapter 8 Absentee Ballot Election Day Processing is a 15-page guidance which does not provide for adjudication of ballots.

87. The entire process is created by the vendor Dominion and used illegally by the City of Detroit.

88. The legislature specified that the entire ballot is rejected and since the Absentee Voter is not present there is no option to spoil the ballot and cast another.

89. More than one half of the Detroit Ballots were adjudicated illegally in the 2020 election.

> 168.798c Casting absentee votes on paper ballots or ballot cards; count; recording; voting and processing absent voters' ballots; inspection of rejected ballot.
> (1) Absentee votes may be cast on paper ballots or ballot cards or both. Absent voter ballots may be counted in the various voting precincts or may be counted by absent voter counting boards. Absentee votes cast on paper ballots may be recorded by election inspectors on ballot cards for counting by tabulating equipment.
> (2) In an election held under this act, absent voters' ballots may be voted and processed in the manner provided by this chapter.
> (3) If electronic tabulating equipment rejects an absent voter ballot due to programming required under section 795, the rejected ballot shall be inspected to confirm the presence of the error before the ballot is processed. *A vote for each elective office or ballot question in which an error is confirmed shall not be counted.

90. The definition of a valid mark which constitutes a vote is clearly defined in MCL 168.803.

> 168.803 Counting and recounting of votes; intent of voter; stray marks; instructions issued by secretary of state.
> (1) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the following rules govern the counting and recounting of votes:
> (a) If it is clearly evident from an examination of a ballot that the ballot has been mutilated for the purpose of distinguishing it or that there has been placed on the ballot some mark, printing, or writing for the purpose of distinguishing it, then that ballot is void and shall not be counted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(b) A cross, the intersection of which is within or on the line of the proper circle or square, or a check mark, the angle of which is within a circle or square, is valid. Crosses or check marks otherwise located on the ballot are void.

(c) Marks other than crosses or check marks used to designate the intention of the voter shall not be counted.

(d) A cross is valid even though 1 or both lines of the cross are duplicated, if the lines intersect within or on the line of the square or circle.

(e) Two lines meeting within or on the line of the square or circle, although not crossing each other, are valid if it is apparent that the voter intended to make a cross.

(f) A failure to properly mark a ballot as to 1 or more candidates does not alone invalidate the entire ballot if the ballot has been properly marked as to other candidates, unless the improper marking is determined to be a distinguishing mark as described in this subsection.

(g) Erasures and corrections on a ballot made by the elector in a manner frequently used for this purpose shall not be considered distinguishing marks or mutilations.

(h) A ballot or part of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice of candidate is void as to the candidate or candidates affected by that determination.

(i) A vote cast for a deceased candidate is void and shall not be counted, except that a vote cast for a candidate for governor who has died, and for whom a replacement has not been made, shall be counted for the candidate for lieutenant governor of that party.

(j) A ballot cast that is not counted shall be marked by the inspector "not counted", kept separate from the others by being tied or held in 1 package, and placed in the ballot box with the counted ballots.

(k) A vote shall not be counted for a candidate unless a cross or a check mark has been placed by the voter in the square before the space in which the name of the candidate has been printed, written, or placed.

(2) If an electronic voting system requires that the elector place a mark in a predefined area on the ballot in order to cast a vote, the vote shall not be considered valid unless there is a mark within the predefined area. A stray mark made within a predefined area is not a valid vote. In determining whether a mark within a predefined area is a stray mark, the board of canvassers or election official shall compare the mark with other marks appearing on the ballot. The secretary of state shall issue instructions, subject to the approval of the board of state canvassers, relevant to stray marks to ensure the fairness and uniformity of determinations made under this subsection. A secretary of state's instruction relevant to stray marks shall not be applied to a ballot unless the secretary of state issued the instruction not less than 63 days before the date of the election.

91. There are clear instructions to the voter on how to mark the ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

92. A voter which chooses to vote in person has the option of watching to ensure the ballot is accepted by the tabulator.

93. Voting by absentee does not provide the voter the opportunity to correct an improperly marked ballot.

94. There is no lawful means to alter the mark in adjudication to carry out the voter's intent and any effort to do so would be a violation of law.

95. Alteration of the image or even duplication to remove stray marks is not permitted. A hand count of the ballot with a stray mark is permitted by MCL 168.798c.

96. On information and belief, the software on the electronic voting system software allows the clerk to choose the standard for a "mark" by setting the pixel count range including a minimum number of pixels within the area to be marked during voting.

97. As the legislature has not set a uniform standard, this is an arbitrary and capricious process that violates equal protection.

98. The adjudication process used by the City of Detroit is unlawful.

The Mismatched Ballot Illegal process used by Detroit AVCB

99. MCL 168.765(4) provides that the rules for counting ballots at an AVCB precincts apply to absentee counting boards.

> MCL 168.765(4) ...Except as otherwise provided in this section, laws relating to paper ballot precincts, including laws relating to the appointment of election inspectors, apply to absent voter counting places. . .

100. MCL 168.797a(2) requires that an election inspector shall determine if the numbered absentee ballot that is returned in the sealed envelope matches the absentee ballot number that the clerks recorded as delivered to the voter and when it does not that the ballot is marked rejected.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

MCL 168.797a (2) If the electronic voting system provides for the use of a ballot that is processed through electronic tabulating equipment after the elector votes, the elector shall transport the ballot to the ballot box, or other approved ballot container, without exposing any votes.

An election inspector shall ascertain, by comparing the number appearing on the ballot stub with the number recorded on the poll list, that the ballot delivered by the voter is the same ballot that was issued to the elector.

If the numbers do not agree, the ballot shall be marked as "rejected", and the elector shall not be allowed to vote.

If the numbers agree, an election inspector shall remove and discard the stub. Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the election inspector shall deposit the ballot in the ballot box or other approved ballot container. . .

101. Instead, Detroit AVCB has a process in which the ballot number is altered by tape and relabeled and then the ballot is noted in the pollbook but is then sent into the pile to be scanned.

102. This process as used by Detroit AVCB is in violation of law.

The Rights and Responsibilities of a Poll Challenger

103. MCL 168.733(2) provides certain rights and responsibilities:

1. Observe the manner in which the duties of election inspectors are being performed.
2. Challenge the voting rights of a person who has "good reason" not to believe is a registered elector.
3. Challenge an election procedure not being properly performed.
4. Examine each ballot AS it is being counted.
5. Observe the recording of Absentee ballots on vote machines.

168.733 Challengers; space in polling place; rights; space at counting board; expulsion for cause; protection; threat or intimidation.
(1) The board of election inspectors shall provide space for the challengers within the polling place that enables the challengers to observe the election procedure and each person applying to vote. A challenger may do 1 or more of the following:

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(a) Under the scrutiny of an election inspector, inspect without handling the poll books as ballots are issued to electors and the electors' names being entered in the poll book.

(b) Observe the manner in which the duties of the election inspectors are being performed.

(c) Challenge the voting rights of a person who the challenger has good reason to believe is not a registered elector.

(d) Challenge an election procedure that is not being properly performed.

(e) Bring to an election inspector's attention any of the following:

(i) Improper handling of a ballot by an elector or election inspector.

(ii) A violation of a regulation made by the board of election inspectors pursuant to section 742.

(iii) Campaigning being performed by an election inspector or other person in violation of section 744.

(iv) A violation of election law or other prescribed election procedure.

(f) Remain during the canvass of votes and until the statement of returns is duly signed and made.

(g) Examine without handling each ballot as it is being counted.

(h) Keep records of votes cast and other election procedures as the challenger desires.

(i) Observe the recording of absent voter ballots on voting machines.

(2) The board of election inspectors shall provide space for each challenger, if any, at each counting board that enables the challengers to observe the counting of the ballots. A challenger at the counting board may do 1 or more of the activities allowed in subsection (1), as applicable.

(3) Any evidence of drinking of alcoholic beverages or disorderly conduct is sufficient cause for the expulsion of a challenger from the polling place or the counting board. The election inspectors and other election officials on duty shall protect a challenger in the discharge of his or her duties.

(4) A person shall not threaten or intimidate a challenger while performing an activity allowed under subsection (1). A challenger shall not threaten or intimidate an elector while the elector is entering the polling place, applying to vote, entering the voting compartment, voting, or leaving the polling place.

104. The process used by the Detroit AVCB prevents any meaningful opportunity to challenge the rights of a person when there is a 'good faith' belief that that person is not entitled to vote.

105. The process used by the Detroit AVCB with the use of high-speed scanners instead of tabulators prevents the opportunity to examine the ballot as it is being counted and to observe the recording of the absent voter ballots on the voting machines.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

The Detroit AVCB infringed on the access rights of the Poll Challengers

106. The rules as stated in MCL 168.733 permit a poll challenger to observe the counting of the ballots.

107. These access rights would include the access to the platform in which there is management of the election software, adjudication of quarantined ballots and the control of the election software.

108. During the previous November 2020 General Election and the 2022 Primary Election, the Detroit AVCB has intimidated challengers who have asserted lawful authority to be present and observe the key processes.

109. Pursuant to MCL 168.974(d), "Counting center" means 1 or more locations selected by the board of election commissioners of the city, county, township, village, or school district at which ballots are counted by means of electronic tabulating equipment or vote totals are electronically received from electronic tabulating equipment and electronically compiled.

110. The counting center therefore includes the platform at the Huntington place, the city clerk's office where the election returns are gathered and reported to the state as well as the state area where all election returns are compiled.

111. Poll challengers were unlawfully denied access to these areas and prohibited from access, as their duties include observation and reporting of violations of law and procedure.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

POST ELECTION DUTIES AS TO QVF UPDATE

112. There are post-election duties described in MCL 168.813 including in subsection (5) which provides;

> MCL 168.813 (5) Within 7 days after an election, the city or township clerk shall ensure that the qualified voter file is current and includes any individual who registered to vote under section 497(3) and (4)

113. The QVF voting role from the 2020 election is still being altered through the state to add or change voting history. There is a failure to document in the publicly available QVF an accurate report of who actually voted in the City of Detroit.

COUNT ONE: DECLARATORY RELIEF

114. All previous averments are incorporated herein.

115. Any Michigan court of record with jurisdiction "[i]n a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction," may entertain a declaratory judgment action in that case, "whether or not other relief is or could be sought or granted." MCR 2.605(A)(1). Circuit, district, and probate courts have jurisdiction in any case in which they would have jurisdiction if other relief was sought. MCR 2.605(A)(2).

116. There must be an actual controversy that causes a party to seek a declaration of rights or legal relationships. MCR 2.605(A)(1); MCR 2.111(B)(2). "An 'actual controversy' under MCR 2.605(A)(1) exists when a declaratory judgment is necessary to guide a Plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve legal rights."

117. The essential requirement of an 'actual controversy' under the rule is that the plaintiff pleads and proves facts that demonstrate an adverse interest necessitating the sharpening of the issues raised. UAW v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 495 (2012) (quotation marks and citations omitted).

118. The Plaintiffs seeks clarification on certain past practices of the Detroit City Clerk which are illegal, done improperly, or done without authority of law:

a. The Detroit City Clerk is not complying with verification of identity process of an applicant for an absentee ballot pursuant to MCL 168.761 in that there must either be a signature comparison (which is impossible without a standard) or in person identification presented.

b. The Detroit City Clerk is not enforcing the restriction of possession of AV ballots as required by MCL 168.761(4) in that the ballot boxes are essentially unmonitored and despite video evidence of ballot 'mules; there has been no alteration to secure the ballots from persons not authorized to transport ballots or alternatively just 'stuffing' ballots into the boxes.

c. There is no evidence of compliance with MCL 168.765 by the Detroit City Clerk in that ballot processing for signatures is both unobserved by poll challengers and the evidence on the ballot envelope indicates the signature verification is being delegated to a computer system called Relia-Vote that has unauthorized access to the state QVF, has not been approved as part of the lawful configuration of the electronic voting system, and/or uses standards that are arbitrary and capricious or worse; the failed standard of any "redeeming characteristic" standard proffered by the SOS but not passed through the Administrative Procedures Act.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

d. There is no evidence of compliance by the Detroit board of election inspectors to MCL 168.766 and their duties for signature comparison. Instead, there is a rogue process in violation of statute.

e. There was non-compliance in the past with the posting provisions of MCL 168.765(5) by the Detroit City Clerk.

f. There was a denial of access by the Detroit City Clerk of poll challengers to the pre-processing center (which should occur at the AVCB in the purview of challengers, to the raised platform or any place where vote totals were aggregated in violation of law on of which is MCL 168.733(2).

g. There is unlawful duplication of ballots by the Detroit City Clerk in excess of authority under MCL 168.798b for when the clerk sent the wrong ballot to a voter.

h. There is an unlawful adjudication process being done under the authority of the Detroit City Clerk in violation of the Help America Vote Act and Michigan law that defines a mark under MCL 168.803.

i. There is an unlawful process for high-speed scanning done under the authority of the Detroit City Clerk which is not part of the approved electronic voting system and is therefore illegal, and much worse, there is evidence that the software was written by a company with strong ties to foreign election interference criminal investigations are currently underway.

j. There was non-compliance with post-election responsibilities to update accurate vote history in violation of MCL 168.813 by the Detroit City Clerk.

119. "The court may order a speedy hearing of an action for declaratory relief and may advance it on the calendar." MCR 2.605(D).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

120. Plaintiffs request an expediated hearing.

121. Once a declaratory judgment has determined the rights of the parties, additional "necessary or proper relief" may be granted, including monetary damages, following reasonable notice and hearing. MCR 2.605(F); Hofmann v Auto Club Ins Ass'n, 211 Mich App 55, 90 (1995).

WHEREFORE, the Plaintiffs request declaratory relief after an expedited hearing and all other necessary and proper relief including monetary damages, if deemed appropriate.

COUNT TWO: INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

122. All previous averments are incorporated herein.

123. The moving party has the burden of establishing that a preliminary injunction should issue. MCR 3.310(A)(4).

124. The court should consider four factors in determining whether to grant a preliminary injunction: (1) whether the injunction would harm the public interest; (2) whether the harm to the plaintiff in the absence of a stay would outweigh the harm to the defendant if the stay is granted; (3) whether the plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits; and (4) whether the plaintiff will be irreparably harmed if a preliminary injunction is denied. Michigan State Emp Ass'n v Dep't of Mental Health, 421 Mich 152, 157-158 (1984)

125. The public interest is for there to be a fair, honest, secure and transparent election process that conforms to the law.

126. Numerous violations of statute indicate that this court should grant extraordinary relief in the form of some judicial oversight, injunctive relief, or other action.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

127. The harm to the Plaintiffs outweighs any harm to the Defendants. The Defendants as public employees have no individual harm in their official capacity. The Plaintiffs, from candidates, to poll challengers, to election workers, and election public interest organizations are united in their statement that the illegal and ultra vires actions of the Detroit Clerk and Board of Elections will result in an illegal election. The rule of law must be observed.

128. Plaintiff will prevail on the merits as the law is clear and the violations rampant.

129. The failure to address this pre-election will result in further confusion and problems post-election.

130. An injunction on the optional use of the absentee counting board forcing the ballots to be tabulated at the precincts on an approved system distributes the work and brings into compliance of the law. The precinct election workers can check signature verification at the precinct. The ballot sorting operation that Detroit uses allows them to easily produce the ballots by precinct.

131. The court should require all Detroit voters to vote in person or obtain their ballots in person at the clerk's office. This is the only valid process of identity in the statute because the MI SOS failed to promulgate a signature comparison rule.

132. The court should require all ballots be counted at the precinct. The system already sorts them and there is no problem with running them through the 'uniform system' at the tabulator as the high-speed scanner and adjudication process is both illegal and likely compromised due to the connection to Konnech.

133. This process is a fiscal nightmare. There is much expense created unnecessary to accumulate ballots into a counting board. Every precinct in Detroit is limited to less than

WHEREFORE, the Plaintiffs request the Court order Detroit to (1) halt the use of absentee ballots that are obtained without identification, (3) halt the counting of ballots cast through drop boxes that are not effectively monitored; and (3) distribute the ballots to the precincts to use equipment and procedures that are as near as possible as the in-person process and in compliance of law. The AVCB has many problems that cannot be remedied. As it is an optional process it must be sent to the scrap heap of history as a failed experiment.

COUNT THREE: MANDAMUS RELIEF

134. All previous averments are incorporated herein.

135. A writ of mandamus directs a public official to perform his or her legal duty. Jones v Dep't of Corrections, 468 Mich 646, 658 (2003). A writ of mandamus cannot be sought to "control the exercise or direction of the discretion to be exercised," or "for the purpose of reviewing, revising, or controlling the exercise of discretion reposed in administrative bodies." Teasel v Dep't of Mental Health, 419 Mich 390, 409-410 (1984).

136. The Court of Appeals or the Court of Claims has exclusive jurisdiction over an action for mandamus against a state officer. MCR 3.305(A)(1). "All other actions for mandamus must be brought in the circuit court unless a statute or rule requires or allows the action to be brought in another court." MCR 3.305(A)(2).

137. The clerk of the City of Detroit is not a state officer and therefore the complaint is properly brought to the circuit court.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

138. The Plaintiffs have a clear legal right to have the clerk follow the law as written.

139. The Defendants have a clear legal obligation to follow the law as it is written and to refrain from creating new processes, new procedures, and using unapproved equipment that is not certified as required by law.

140. The acts governed by the mandamus action are acts of the clerk are ministerial and not discretionary. They are required by statute.

141. There is no other remedy that will correct the abuses and require the Defendants to comply with their legal obligations.

WHEREFORE, the Plaintiffs request mandamus relief and that the Defendants be required to fulfil their clear administrative duties as stated in the law related to the past practices of the Detroit City Clerk and Board of Election Inspectors as stated herein.

MOTION FOR DISQUALIFICATION

OF THE 3rd JUDICIAL CIRCUIT BENCH

NOW COMES, the plaintiffs through their attorneys, and state in support of their motion:

1. Venue and jurisdiction are proper in the 3rd Circuit Court; however, the bench should not hear the matter and a visiting judge should be assigned.
2. The motion was timely made at the time of the filing of the complaint pursuant to MCR 2.003(D)(1a)..
3. Due process "requires an unbiased and impartial decisionmaker." Cain v Dep't of Corrections, 451 Mich 470, 497 (1996).
4. MCR 2.003(C)(1)(b) provides the recusal of a judge based upon objective and reasonable perceptions, has a serious risk of actual bias impacting due process rights of a party as enunciated in Caperton v Massey, 556 US 868; 129 S Ct 2252; 173 L Ed 2d 1208 (2009).
5. In the Roberts dissent of Caperton, supra, four justices stated that the majority had loosened the standard to a 'vague probability' and stated that there is not sufficient guidance to Judges when to recuse themselves.
6. The Caperton case cites Tumey v Ohio 273 US 510 (1927) which held a judge must recuse sua sponte if there is a direct, personal, substantial pecuniary interest in the outcome of a case, and that mere personal bias or prejudice is not enough to require recusal.

7. In support of this motion is the affidavit of Daniel J. Hartman attached pursuant to MCR 2.003D(2).

WHEREFORE, the plaintiffs request the motion for recusal be granted and an assignment to a visiting Judge be made.

Dated: 10/26/2022

/s/ Daniel J. Hartman
Daniel J. Hartman (P52632)

Affidavit of Daniel J. Hartman pursuant to MCR 2.003(D)(2) in support of the motion for disqualification:

1. In good faith, the Plaintiffs request that the 3rd Circuit Court recuse the entire bench on the following grounds:
    a. The elections at issue for the entire bench are conducted by the Wayne County Clerk and the Board of Elections.
    b. The County clerk and the 3rd Circuit Bench work closely on every case and are nearly intertwined.
    c. While there is no personal bias there is more than an appearance of impropriety in this close relationship.
    d. An adverse determination by a Judge against the County Clerk has a strong probability that hard feelings would affect the working relationship between the clerk and the court.
    e. A judge would not hear the case of a staff member and the County Clerks are while not staff they have nearly as close of a working relationship as the judicial staff.

DocuSign Envelope ID: 1AC5DC86-EBAA-4F87-A769-D375111C7056

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

f. Some of the judges are on the ballot for the midterm and clearly should not be assigned the case.

g. The Detroit City Clerk is separate from the Wayne County Clerk, but the 3rd Circuit is on the Detroit City ballots.

h. The relationship between the Wayne County clerk and the Detroit City clerk as to the conduct of elections especially as to election supervision responsibilities is significant.

i. It is unlikely that a 3rd Circuit Curt Judge would prefer to hear this political case, but while willing to do their duty to sit, however, the interests of justice would best be served by the recusal of the entire 3rd Circuit Bench and to have a visiting judge elected outside of Wayne County.

I submit this affidavit under the penalty of perjury based on the facts and law and argue that while this raises an issue of first impression and no case law was found on point, that the request is meritorious to the best of my knowledge and belief and based on the facts as stated herein.

MOTION FOR EXPEDITED SCHEDULING AND AN EMERGENCY HEARING.

MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

NOW COMES the Plaintiffs, through their attorneys, and state in support of their motions:

1. The Defendant seeks injunctive relief pursuant to MCR 3.310 and requests that this Court order the Defendants to comply with the Michigan Election Law and specifically to address the election laws which have been broken in the August, 2022 Primary and without intervention will be violated again rending the election in the City of Detroit illegal.
2. The Plaintiffs seek orders to remedy the following violations:

   (i) That all ballots requested by mail or online require identification under the procedure of bringing the identification to the clerk's office as there is no standard rule promulgated for signature comparison and therefore no ability to fulfill the requirements for signature comparison pursuant to MCL 168.761 (2);

   (ii) That all ballots that are returned to the ballot drop boxes are not effectively monitored in violation of MCL 168.761D(4)(c). Reports are currently ongoing of the failure to provide cameras as required by law and more important to monitor the cameras to prevent persons not authorized to transport ballots from injecting them into the election in violation of MCL 168.764a and MCL 168.764b. Finally, there has been a denial of the requirement under MCL 168.798a which requires observation by the public, (the poll watchers and poll challengers included) of the signature comparison process. The newly enacted changes to MCL 168.765 that permit the clerk to separate the ballots in the secrecy envelope from the outer envelope require observation by the poll challengers and poll watchers but the practice of the Detroit Clerk is to do the signature comparison outside of the purview of the poll challenger and public.

(iii) That all ballots that are returned also have a signature comparison without a standard. If the SOS instruction is followed to compare the signature to the application rather than the QVF then this is a violation of law. Further that the use of the Veri-vote system for signature comparison on ballot envelopes is both a security risk and a non-conforming novel process not permitted or authorized by law; and finally the signature comparison has been, and will be done, without following the law in MCL 168.765 and MCL 168.766.

(iv) The Clerk is failing to reject ballots that are illegally pursuant to MCL 168.767.

(v) There was no evidence of compliance with the requirements to post the number of absentee ballots mailed and returned under MCL 168.765(5) at 8 am on election day and before 9 pm on election night.

(vi) The clerk has failed to follow the rules when a ballot number does not match and instead permits the ballot to be commingled and counted. This is a violation of MCL 168.765.

(vii) The clerk has provided for duplication of ballots in excess of authority granted by law which is limited only to a damaged ballot by MCL 168.798b. There is no process for duplicating portions of a 'wrong' ballot that was cast. The duplication process is also used for military and overseas voters that are emailed without authority.

(viii) The use of high-speed scanners instead of tabulators. The requirement is that the AVCB is to process ballots in nearly the same manner as in person pursuant to MCL 168.765(8). This configuration is not uniform in the software or hardware to the rest of the state or the uniform system. The scanners are also not certified for use by a VSTL as configured in violation of the standards of the Help America Vote Act section 301 and do not conform to the requirement of MCL 168.795a in that they are not authorized for use.

(ix) These scanners also create a ballot image that is altered by the adjudication process. The ballot images are then reportedly not saved after being converted into the cast vote record in the table violating MCL 168.795(K) and HAVA Section 301 which requires an audit trail.

(x) There is an adjudication process that is completely unauthorized by law and contrary to Michigan law which defines a mark in MCL 168.803. The determination of a voter's intent is a violation of equal protection. The removal of a stray mark is permitted by law but not the interpretation of an improper mark contrary to instructions.

(xi) The law requires rejection of a ballot, not adjudication. It does not allow for the counting of some of the contests on the ballot. The voting system is supposed to be programmed to reject the ballot when the ballot is marked in violation of the law. MCL 168.795(2)

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(xii) The clerk has restricted access of the poll challengers to the platform and the center at the clerk's office where votes from precincts accumulate. Access is guaranteed by MCL 168.974(d) where votes are received and accumulated by MCL 168.733.

3. The Plaintiffs are entitled to the relief by law. See the brief which is incorporated herein.
4. The election is scheduled for November 8, 2022 and is less than two full weeks away so an emergency hearing must be scheduled and heard before the election in order to prevent irreparable harm.
5. In the event, this Court declines to act before the election then there will be a question about the legitimacy of the outcome but the case will require resolution.
6. The lawsuit has been prepared expeditiously after the plaintiffs learned both that their challenges filed on August 2, 2022 (and others) were ignored and that the Detroit Clerk was training election workers to violate the law again. This discovery occurred very recently as in days before this filing.
7. It is inconceivable that the clerk would violate this many laws, fail to address challenges filed in August, and then plan to violate the same laws objected to previously.
8. Ex parte relief was not sought as the court has time to order the clerk to answer and conduct an emergency hearing.

WHEREFORE, the Plaintiffs ask for an expedited schedule, an emergency hearing and the entry of orders of injunctive relief as required by law.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION AND REQUEST FOR EXPEDITED HEARING

The Complaint asks for declaratory, injunctive, and mandamus relief from numerous violations of Michigan Election Law that have occurred in the General Election of 2020 and the August 2, 2022 Primary.

Injunctive relief is an extraordinary remedy that should only be granted when justice requires, when no adequate legal remedy exists, and when there is a real and imminent danger of irreparable injury. Pontiac Fire Fighters Union Local 376 v Pontiac, 482 Mich 1, 8 (2008).

In the present case the danger is real. The violation has occurred previously and so there is a reasonable expectation that the violations will occur again BUT for action. This is not speculative when the election laws have been violated twice. The danger is imminent in that the election is about to occur in several weeks. Without action by this court, there will be injury. The injuries will be addressed with each act that the Plaintiffs seek to be enjoined. The injury will also be irreparable as will be discussed below.

To address why this filing is so close to the election, the Plaintiffs have only recently realized that these issues were not going to be addressed. Challenges were filed at the August 2, 2022 primary which were ignored. Records of action on the challenges are absent and unattainable. Challengers who filed written challenges expected action on the challenges. The violations of law and procedure were reported.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

168.733 Challengers; space in polling place; rights; space at counting board; expulsion for cause; protection; threat or intimidation.

Sec. 733.

(1) The board of election inspectors shall provide space for the challengers within the polling place that enables the challengers to observe the election procedure and each person applying to vote. A challenger may do 1 or more of the following:

(a) Under the scrutiny of an election inspector, inspect without handling the poll books as ballots are issued to electors and the electors' names being entered in the poll book.

(b) Observe the manner in which the duties of the election inspectors are being performed.

(c) Challenge the voting rights of a person who the challenger has good reason to believe is not a registered elector.

(d) Challenge an election procedure that is not being properly performed.

(e) Bring to an election inspector's attention any of the following:

(i) Improper handling of a ballot by an elector or election inspector.

(ii) A violation of a regulation made by the board of election inspectors pursuant to section 742.

(iii) Campaigning being performed by an election inspector or other person in violation of section 744.

(iv) A violation of election law or other prescribed election procedure.

(f) Remain during the canvass of votes and until the statement of returns is duly signed and made.

(g) Examine without handling each ballot as it is being counted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(h) Keep records of votes cast and other election procedures as the challenger desires.

(i) Observe the recording of absent voter ballots on voting machines.

After 60 days had passed and no response despite the written challenges being filled out by the clerk's office, the Plaintiffs have rapidly assembled and brought this action which should be unnecessary BUT FOR blatant violations of election law. It only became apparent about one week ago when the Detroit clerk, during its training of election staff, indicated that the same violations of the law would be used in the 2022 General Midterm Election. While it is anticipated that the Defendants will claim the action was brought too close to this election, it is better that this be addressed before the election rather than after and once again calling into question the results of the election.

The court should consider four factors in determining whether to grant a preliminary injunction:

(1) whether the injunction would harm the public interest;

(2) whether the harm to the Plaintiff in the absence of a stay would outweigh the harm to the Defendant if the stay is granted;

(3) whether the Plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits; and

(4) whether the Plaintiff will be irreparably harmed if a preliminary injunction is denied.

Michigan State Emp Ass'n v Dep't of Mental Health, 421 Mich 152, 157-158 (1984).

A party seeking a preliminary injunction "bears the burden of proving that the traditional four elements favor the issuance of a preliminary injunction." Detroit Fire Fighters Ass'n, IAFF Local 344 v Detroit, 482 Mich 18, 34 (2008).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

"In order to establish irreparable injury, the moving party must demonstrate a non-compensable injury for which there is no legal measurement of damages or for which damages cannot be determined with a sufficient degree of certainty. The injury must be both certain and great, and it must be actual rather than theoretical. Economic injuries are not irreparable because they can be remedied by damages at law." Thermatool Corp v Borzym, 227 Mich App 366, 377 (1998) (internal citations omitted).

(1) whether the injunction would harm the public interest;

The public interest is in following Michigan Election Law. There should be no deviations or novel processes created. If an action is not authorized by law or the law requires a disposition then the public interest is to follow the law. All of the acts sought to be enjoined are violations of Michigan Election Law or unauthorized acts that are unauthorized by law.

The Plaintiffs seek orders to remedy the following violations:

(i) That all ballots requested by mail or online require identification under the procedure of bringing the identification to the clerk's office as there is no standard rule promulgated for signature comparison and therefore no ability to fulfill the requirements for signature comparison pursuant to MCL 168.761 (2);

(ii) That all ballots that are returned to the ballot drop boxes are not effectively monitored in violation of MCL 168.761D(4)(c). Reports are currently ongoing of the failure to provide cameras as required by law and more important to monitor the cameras to prevent persons not authorized to transport ballots from injecting them into the election in violation of MCL 168.764a and MCL 168.764b. Finally, there has been a denial of the requirement under MCL 168.798a which requires observation by the public, (the poll watchers and poll challengers included) of the signature comparison process. The newly enacted changes to MCL 168.765 that permit the clerk to separate the ballots in the secrecy envelope from the outer envelope require observation by the poll challengers and poll watchers but the practice of the Detroit Clerk is to do the signature comparison outside of the purview of the poll challenger and public.

(iii) That all ballots that are returned also have a signature comparison without a standard. If the SOS instruction is followed to compare the signature to the application rather than the QVF then this is a violation of law. Further that the use of the Veri-vote system for signature comparison on ballot envelopes is both a security risk and a non-conforming novel process not permitted or authorized by law; and finally the signature comparison has been, and will be done, without following the law in MCL 168.765 and MCL 168.766.

(iv) The Clerk is failing to reject ballots that are illegally pursuant to MCL 168.767.

(v) There was no evidence of compliance with the requirements to post the number of absentee ballots mailed and returned under MCL 168.765(5) at 8 am on election day and before 9 pm on election night.

(vi) The clerk has failed to follow the rules when a ballot number does not match and instead permits the ballot to be commingled and counted. This is a violation of MCL 168.765.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(vii) The clerk has provided for duplication of ballots in excess of authority granted by law which is limited only to a damaged ballot by MCL 168.798b. There is no process for duplicating portions of a 'wrong' ballot that was cast. The duplication process is also used for military and overseas voters that are emailed without authority.

(viii) The use of high-speed scanners instead of tabulators. The requirement is that the AVCB is to process ballots in nearly the same manner as in person pursuant to MCL 168.765(8). This configuration is not uniform in the software or hardware to the rest of the state or the uniform system. The scanners are also not certified for use by a VSTL as configured in violation of the standards of the Help America Vote Act section 301 and do not conform to the requirement of MCL 168.795a in that they are not authorized for use.

(ix) These scanners also create a ballot image that is altered by the adjudication process. The ballot images are then reportedly not saved after being converted into the cast vote record in the table violating MCL 168.795(K) and HAVA Section 301 which requires an audit trail.

(x) There is an adjudication process that is completely unauthorized by law and contrary to Michigan law which defines a mark in MCL 168.803. The determination of a voter's intent is a violation of equal protection. The removal of a stray mark is permitted by law but not the interpretation of an improper mark contrary to instructions.

(xi) The law requires rejection of a ballot, not adjudication. It does not allow for the counting of some of the contests on the ballot. The voting system is supposed to be programmed to reject the ballot when the ballot is marked in violation of the law. MCL 168.795(2)

(xii) The clerk has restricted access of the poll challengers to the platform and the center at the clerk's office where votes from precincts accumulate. Access is guaranteed by MCL 168.974(d) where votes are received and accumulated by MCL 168.733.

(2) whether the harm to the plaintiff in the absence of a stay would outweigh the harm to the defendant if the stay is granted;

The harm must be as stated above harm that is an irreparable injury. The loss of confidence in yet another election from violations of law will undermine the security of the entire election. The relief the Plaintiffs seek is to have the court enforce the laws that already exist. To determine the effects that each of these violations have on the outcome is nearly impossible but the effect is a loss of confidence in the integrity of the election. On balance there is NO harm to the defendants from following the law. There may be economic harm or inconvenience, but it will be far less than having to re-run the election or to spend years in litigation. The court should restrain illegal acts and require the clerk to follow the law as written. In the event the clerk claims they are in compliance then they will not suffer any harm by agreeing to follow the law.

(3) whether the plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits; and

There is virtually no way that the plaintiffs do not succeed on the merits. The law is clear and the violations flagrant. There is likely going to be defenses asserted for latches and for lack of standing. Neither of these are defenses to the merits. On the merits, the Plaintiffs prevail. While it seems preposterous, the clerk may actually argue that she lacks time to conform to the law before the election is conducted—meaning that she intends to conduct an illegal election.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(4) whether the plaintiff will be irreparably harmed if a preliminary injunction is denied.

If there is a denial, there will be irreparable harm. Damages can not replace the harm. Plaintiffs that are poll challengers will have been denied their legal rights, the taxpayers citizens will have to bear the expense, time and uncertainty of litigation and possibly re-running of the election as well as harm to the reputation of the community, the candidate bears the real risk of these illegal practices changing the outcome of the election, the non-profit which has been instructing its poll challengers and poll watchers will have conflict during the election as well as the very principles for which they stand a secure, honest open and transparent election will be again denied to them. There is no recovery for a violation of the constitutional rights of citizen voters. These ordinary people will lack standing and be effectively barred from seeking redress of these violations of law. In general, there is no way to repair the damage that can easily be avoided by following the law.

Therefore, the Plaintiffs respectfully requests that this Honorable Court enter orders for injunctive relief keeping this election in conformity to law.

Respectfully Submitted,

MOTION FOR DISQUALIFICATION

OF THE 3rd JUDICIAL CIRCUIT BENCH

NOW COMES, the plaintiffs through their attorneys, and state in support of their motion:

1. Venue and jurisdiction are proper in the 3rd Circuit Court; however, the bench should not hear the matter and a visiting judge should be assigned.
2. The motion was timely made at the time of the filing of the complaint pursuant to MCR 2.003(D)(1a)..
3. Due process "requires an unbiased and impartial decisionmaker." Cain v Dep't of Corrections, 451 Mich 470, 497 (1996).
4. MCR 2.003(C)(1)(b) provides the recusal of a judge based upon objective and reasonable perceptions, has a serious risk of actual bias impacting due process rights of a party as enunciated in Caperton v Massey, 556 US 868; 129 S Ct 2252; 173 L Ed 2d 1208 (2009).
5. In the Roberts dissent of Caperton, supra, four justices stated that the majority had loosened the standard to a 'vague probability' and stated that there is not sufficient guidance to Judges when to recuse themselves.
6. The Caperton case cites Tumey v Ohio 273 US 510 (1927) which held a judge must recuse sua sponte if there is a direct, personal, substantial pecuniary interest in the outcome of a case, and that mere personal bias or prejudice is not enough to require recusal.

DocuSign Envelope ID: 1AC5DC86-EBAA-4FB7-A769-D375111C7056

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

7. In support of this motion is the affidavit of Daniel J. Hartman attached pursuant to MCR 2.003D(2).

WHEREFORE, the plaintiffs request the motion for recusal be granted and an assignment to a visiting Judge be made.

Dated: 10/26/2022

/s/ Daniel J. Hartman
Daniel J. Hartman (P52632)

Affidavit of Daniel J. Hartman pursuant to MCR 2.003(D)(2) in support of the motion for disqualification:

1. In good faith, the Plaintiffs request that the 3rd Circuit Court recuse the entire bench on the following grounds:
    a. The elections at issue for the entire bench are conducted by the Wayne County Clerk and the Board of Elections.
    b. The County clerk and the 3rd Circuit Bench work closely on every case and are nearly intertwined.
    c. While there is no personal bias there is more than an appearance of impropriety in this close relationship.
    d. An adverse determination by a Judge against the County Clerk has a strong probability that hard feelings would affect the working relationship between the clerk and the court.
    e. A judge would not hear the case of a staff member and the County Clerks are while not staff they have nearly as close of a working relationship as the judicial staff.

DocuSign Envelope ID: 1AC5DC86-EBAA-4FB7-A769-D375111C7056

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

f. Some of the judges are on the ballot for the midterm and clearly should not be assigned the case.

g. The Detroit City Clerk is separate from the Wayne County Clerk, but the 3rd Circuit is on the Detroit City ballots.

h. The relationship between the Wayne County clerk and the Detroit City clerk as to the conduct of elections especially as to election supervision responsibilities is significant.

i. It is unlikely that a 3rd Circuit Curt Judge would prefer to hear this political case, but while willing to do their duty to sit, however, the interests of justice would best be served by the recusal of the entire 3rd Circuit Bench and to have a visiting judge elected outside of Wayne County.

I submit this affidavit under the penalty of perjury based on the facts and law and argue that while this raises an issue of first impression and no case law was found on point, that the request is meritorious to the best of my knowledge and belief and based on the facts as stated herein.

Hi Heather,

Here's our weekly update for last week coming a little late due to my schedule last week.

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

45 amicus briefs were also filed through last Thursday: 31 in support of Trump and 14 in support of neither party. The briefs include 5 separate briefs from states or state officials. We've provided toplines from some notable briefs below.

As a reminder, Respondent briefs must be filed by next Wednesday, January 31 along with amicus briefs in support of Respondents. Reply briefs must be filed by February 5th. Oral Argument will be held February 8.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Please let us know if you have any questions or if you'd like a copy of any of the briefs.

Amicus Briefs in Support of Trump

- States of Indiana, West Virginia, and Twenty-Three other states, the Arizona Legislature, and the Legislature of North Carolina
  - Section 3 cannot be used to disqualify a person from holding office unless Congress first acts
  - Without more direction from Congress, courts cannot say what constitutes "insurrection" under Section 3

- Chuck Gray, Secretary of State of Wyoming
  - The President is not an "Officer of the United States"
  - Former President Trump did not commit either act described in Section 3

- State of Kansas
  - Section 3 must be strictly construed because Section 3 is penal and to avoid interfering with Trump's First Amendment rights
  - Section 3 does not cover the President of the United States and Trump did not engage in an insurrection or rebellion

- U.S. Senator Ted Cruz, Majority Leader Steve Scalise, and 177 Other Members of Congress
  - The Colorado Supreme Court's decision encroaches on Congressional power
  - Section 3 does not apply to Trump
  - The Colorado Supreme Court's decision lacks neutral principles and will lead to widespread de-balloting of political opponents

- The Claremont Institute's Center for Constitutional Jurisprudence (John Yoo, counsel of record)
  - A former president is not within the jurisdictional scope of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment
  - Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is not judicially enforceable without implementing legislation
  - Section 3's Offense element requires congressional legislation

- The Honorable Peter Meijer (former Congressional Rep. R-MI)
  - The Colorado Supreme Court wrongfully decided a non-justiciable political question
  - The Colorado Supreme Court's Decision, if allowed to stand, will create political chaos
    - If the U.S. Supreme Court disqualifies Trump, it could open up other politicians to 14.3 arguments-Here, the brief cites specific examples of events that could be the basis of disqualification.

- Judicial Watch, Inc. and Allied Educational Foundation
  - Under Mathews v. Eldridge and its progeny, Colorado's civil proceeding was not an appropriate hearing given the demands of the Due Process Clause
  - If the decision of the Colorado Supreme Court is allowed to stand, federal presidential elections will routinely involve Section 3 challenges

- Former U.S. Attorneys (appointed by Pres. Trump and Pres. George W. Bush)
  - The Colorado Courts erred in applying Colorado Rule of Evidence 803(8) (the basis for allowing the January 6th Report into evidence).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Amici claim the January 6th Report does not bear the requisite indicia of trustworthiness and reliability to render it an admissible "public record" per Rule 803(8)

- Former Attorneys General Edwin Meese III, Michael B. Mukasey and William P. Barr; Law Professors Steven Calabresi and Gary Lawson; Citizens United and Citizens United Foundation
  - Section 3 does not disqualify presidential candidates from the ballot
  - Section 3 requires enabling legislation under Section 5

- Eligible Voters of All 50 States and 1 Territory
  - The Colorado Supreme Court improperly created rights not given to it in violation of the Ninth Amendment
  - Exclusion of Trump by the Co. Supreme Court violates the Tenth Amendment
  - The Colorado Supreme Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over Trump because he did not "engage" in insurrection

Amicus Briefs in Support of Neither Party

- Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson
  - The Court's full and complete resolution of any question regarding the application of Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment is necessary to avoid confusion and uncertainty in the elections process.
  - A ruling pursuant to the Electors Clause or a ruling that applies to holding office not running for office will only delay final resolution of the issues.

- The Secretaries of State of Missouri, Alabama, Arkansas, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Ohio, Tennessee, and West Virginia
  - Section Three does not empower secretaries of state to disqualify candidates for federal office.
  - Even if the court holds that Section 3 is self-executing, it should nevertheless avoid any construction that empowers secretaries of state to exercise an inherent disqualification power because of the obvious practical problems that would flow from such a decision.

- Brennan Center for Justice, Protect Democracy, Campaign Legal Center, and League of Women Voters
  - Moore v. Harper is not an invitation to transform ordinary state court interpretation of state election law into a federal constitutional issue for this Court to police
  - The Colorado Supreme Court's interpretation of Colorado law was well within the ordinary bounds of judicial review

- NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund
  - The Reconstruction Amendments were born out of the Civil War and intended to ensure the worst abuses in our Nation's history are not repeated
  - Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment Is self-executing and does not present a nonjusticiable political question
  - This Court has a Constitutional responsibility to apply the Fourteenth Amendment and avoid repeating its gravest mistakes

- Akhil Reed Amar and Vikram David Amar
  - Describes history and significance of the first insurrection of the 1860s, an insurrection prior to and leading up to the Civil War, which the Amici analogize to the events of January 6

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Provides short answers to a slew of questions raised by the case which Amici argue are easily disposed of, e.g.: "Of course the president is an 'officer' covered by Section Three. Of course, a detailed congressional statute is not necessary to implement Section Three." (6)

- Edward B. Foley, Benjamin Ginsberg, and Richard Hansen
  - States may resolve an office-seeker's eligibility under Section 3, and this Court may review such decisions on their merits
  - Failure to resolve the merits now would place the Nation in great peril

- Professor Derek T. Muller
  - States have the power to review the qualifications of presidential candidates.
  - States have no obligation to review the qualifications of presidential candidates
  - This Court should be aware that other election law doctrines constrain state power in this case, and a decision can have an effect on other presidential election issues

- Professors and Legal Scholars
  - The question whether Mr. Trump is eligible is a justiciable legal question
  - Congress does not have exclusive authority to decide presidential eligibility questions

- Ryan Binkley, Binkley for President 2024, Wisconsin Voter Alliance, Pure Integrity Michigan Elections and Michigan Fair Elections
  - Binkley is a Republican Presidential candidate and has been denied a place on the Minnesota primary ballot based on rules set by the Minnesota Republican Party
  - The Minnesota Supreme Court denied his petition challenging this decision on January 13, 2024. Binkley says he will file a petition for writ of certiorari "prior to the February 5, 2024 hearing in this case." (5)
  - Binkley argues that the disqualification is similar to Trump's disqualification in Colorado:
    - The actions of Colorado and Minnesota are preempted by the Electors Clause and D.C. Code § 16–3501 (re: writ of quo warranto)
    - Colorado and Minnesota have erred by prematurely disqualifying potential President Elects from their presidential elections
    - The Court should acknowledge that states can only disqualify presidential candidates who do not meet Constitutional requirements for president pursuant to Article II, Section 1, clause 5 of the U.S. Constitution (i.e., citizenship, residency, age requirements)

Hi Heather,

In case you don't have it, I've attached a complaint that Eric Kaardal filed last week in Pennsylvania. The case has similar standing issues as Lindsey and may be informative if a motion to dismiss is resolved before yours.

As in Lindsey, Kaardal represents a (very small) group of Pennsylvania legislators asserting claims under the Elections and Electors clauses. They allege that the federal government and Pennsylvania Governor Shapiro have usurped the plaintiffs' legislative authority related to voter registration practices: automatic voter registration instituted by Governor Shapiro and Biden's Executive Order 14019, which directs federal agencies to take action to facilitate voter registration. As in Lindsey, the legislator plaintiffs claim standing based on their status as legislators, taxpayers, and voters, so its resolution of standing issues will likely be informative if decided more promptly.

The lawsuit is in its very early stages. The plaintiffs haven't sought preliminary relief, nor does the complaint appear to have been served. We'll keep you updated on its progress.

Best,

Jonathan

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m) From reading the email thread below, it wasn't entirely clear whether you all wanted tomorrow (Thurs, 2/8) or Friday (2/9) at 9:30 AM. Either way, that particular time slot doesn't work for me. I could do Thursday afternoon, though it sounds like that doesn't work for folks. Unfortunately, I'm tied up all day Friday. Early next week works for me too.

Hi Christina and Heather,

I hope you both had a good weekend. We saw reporting on the new lawsuit in Flint alleging inadequate numbers of Republican election inspectors. I spoke briefly with Mike about the issue. Would you mind sharing a copy of the complaint? We're seeing similar complaints/lawsuits in other states (particularly Arizona) as part of an effort to claim bias in larger jurisdictions ahead of the election.

Thanks,

Jonathan

There is no pending or resolved civil action arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as alleged in this Complaint.

VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS AND MOTION TO SHOW CAUSE AND TO EXPEDITE UNDER MCR 3.305(C)

NOW COMES Plaintiffs Michigan Republican Party and Republican National Committee (collectively, "Plaintiffs"), who state the following as their Complaint against the Defendants, Davina Donahue, Interim City Clerk, in her official capacity as a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners, William Kim, City Attorney, in his official capacity as a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners, and Stacey Kaake, City Assessor, in her official capacity as a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners:

INTRODUCTION

1. Plaintiffs seek an expedited hearing on this matter under MCR 2.605(D), which authorizes this Court to "order a speedy hearing of an action for declaratory relief" and to "advance [this case] on the calendar." Expedited consideration is warranted and necessary here. Absent declaratory relief, Plaintiffs' statutory right under Michigan law to have an "equal number, as nearly as possible," of Republican-affiliated election inspectors as Democrat-affiliated election inspectors at the upcoming general election in the City of Flint will continue to be violated and jeopardized by Defendants' acts.

2. Plaintiffs respectfully seek an ex parte order to show cause and to expedite consideration of these proceedings under MCR 3.305(C), which provides that in actions for mandamus, "[o]n ex parte motion and a showing of the necessity for immediate action, the court may issue an order to show cause. The motion may be made in the complaint. The court shall indicate in the order when the defendant must answer the order."

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

3. Immediate action is necessary under MCR 3.305(C). Under the default timeline in MCR 2.108(A)(1), the Defendants would have 21 days to file an answer, which would be Friday, November 18, 2022 – 10 days after the general election on Tuesday, November 8, 2022. Moreover, any oral argument would require additional time, which would leave no time to compel Defendants' to comply with their clear legal duties under Michigan law. The default timeline for responsive pleadings under the Michigan rules would therefore directly injure Plaintiffs and prevent relief. To compel Defendants to act before November 8, 2022, Plaintiffs ask the Court to direct the Defendants to file their answer to a show cause order by 12:00 p.m. on Tuesday, November 1, 2022. Additionally, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court issue a decision on this request for relief by Wednesday, November 2, 2022. A proposed order granting the motion to show cause is attached hereto as Exhibit E.

4. Plaintiffs will make best efforts to effectuate formal service of process immediately upon the filing of this Verified Complaint and receipt of summonses from this Court, and will contact Defendant Kim, the City's attorney, to ensure that he is aware of this filing and of Plaintiffs' requests.

5. There remains time for this Court to issue the relief sought herein, and for Defendants to comply with a Court order compelling the satisfaction of their duties under the law. Indeed, Defendants have represented that they intend to continue holding election inspector training into November, which of course is consistent with the ongoing legal duties as set forth further below.

PARTIES, JURISDICTION, AND VENUE

6. Plaintiff the Michigan Republican Party ("MRP") is a "major political party" as that term is defined by the Michigan Election Law. See MCL 168.16. Formed for the general purposes of, among other things, ensuring that elections are conducted in an open, fair, and orderly manner, and that its rights and privileges and those of its members in connection with elections are exercised and are otherwise not violated or infringed upon. MRP maintains headquarters at 520 Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan 48912.

7. Plaintiff the Republican National Committee (the "RNC") is a national political party with its principal place of business at 310 First Street, S.E., Washington D.C., 20003. In addition to managing the Republican Party's business affairs at the national level, the RNC supports state Republican parties (including MRP) by, among other actions, coordinating election strategy—including by supporting MRP's efforts to appoint and support election inspectors to ensure that elections are conducted in an open, fair, and orderly manner.

8. Defendant Davina Donahue, Interim City Clerk, is a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners. The City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners is responsible for overseeing the conduct of elections within the City of Flint. She is being sued in her official capacity as a city election official. Her official business address is 1101 S. Saginaw St., 2nd Floor City Hall, 201-C Flint, MI 48502.

9. Defendant William Kim, City Attorney, is a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners. The City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners is responsible for overseeing the conduct of elections within the City of Flint. He is being sued in his official capacity as a city election official. His official business address is 1101 S. Saginaw St., 3rd Floor of Flint City Hall, Flint, MI 48502.

10. Defendant Stacey Kaake, City Assessor, is a member of City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners. The City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners is responsible for overseeing the conduct of elections within the City of Flint. She is being sued in her official capacity as a city election official. Her official business address is 1101 S. Saginaw St, #201A Flint, MI 48502.

11. The 7th Judicial Circuit Court has jurisdiction over this Complaint, and venue in this Court is proper, because the Defendants are all residents, or maintain their principal places of business, in Genesee County, Michigan, and because all or part of the claim for relief at issue in this litigation arose in Genesee County, Michigan.

12. Plaintiffs are "litigant[s] [who have] a special injury or right, [and] substantial interest, that will be detrimentally affected in a manner different from the citizenry at large" and have standing to bring the claims asserted in this Complaint. Lansing Sch Educ Ass'n v Lansing Bd of Educ, 487 Mich 349, 372; 792 NW 2d 686 (2010).

13. Plaintiffs have been diligent in their efforts to vindicate their legal rights and secure Defendants' compliance with the legal duties under Michigan law. Plaintiffs have not been dilatory nor otherwise prejudiced Defendants with any undue delay attendant to the filing of this action.

COUNT I: WRIT OF MANDAMUS RE: DEFENDANTS' DUTIES UNDER MCL 168.674(2) FOR EACH ELECTION PRECINCT.

14. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

15. Michigan law expressly requires that the City of Flint Board of Election Commissioners (the "Board") "shall appoint an equal number, as nearly as possible, of election inspectors in each election precinct from each major political party." MCL 168.674(2). The Board's legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct runs through Election Day. [1] See MCL 168.674(5).

[1] While Michigan law permits the county chair of a major political party to challenge the appointment of individual election inspectors based on those individuals' partisan bona fides,

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

16. Election inspectors play an important role in instilling confidence in our electoral process. While there may have been a shortage of Republican election inspectors in Flint during previous election cycles, this year Plaintiffs made a concerted effort to work with the City of Flint to assist in recruiting inspectors and to collaboratively assist the City in fulfilling its obligations under MCL 168.674.

17. On May 12, 2022, Plaintiffs provided former-Clerk Brown with applications for 122 Republicans interested in serving as election inspectors in the City of Flint for the August 2, 2022 primary election.

18. Despite Plaintiffs' efforts to assist the Defendants with satisfying Defendants' duties to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party, on July 16, 2022, the City of Flint provided the Genesee County Republican Party with a list indicating that the City had hired only 27 Republican election inspectors. The City had, however, hired 442 Democrat election inspectors for the same election. A 27:442 ratio does not satisfy the "equal as possible" requirement set forth under Michigan law. Therefore, the Board has failed to satisfy its clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and each absent voter counting board ("AVCB") under MCL 168.674(2).

19. Because of the discrepancy between the quantity of Democrat and Republican election inspectors, the Plaintiffs contacted former-Clerk Brown on July 26, 2022—one week prior to the primary election—to address the City's unequal appointment of partisan election inspectors.

among other qualifications, see MCL 168.674(3), the Board's clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and AVCB is enforceable through, among other actions, a writ of mandamus commenced by an aggrieved major political party such as Plaintiffs.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

20. Former-Clerk Brown assured Plaintiffs that the City would contact the individual Republicans provided by Plaintiffs back in May 2022.

21. Soon after the primary election, Plaintiffs contacted the 122 Republicans on the list that Plaintiffs had provided former-Clerk Brown and learned that the City had hired only an additional 22 applicants.

22. The ratio of Democratic election inspectors to Republican election inspectors employed by the City of Flint for the August 2022 primary election was approximately 15:1. Again, this demonstrates that the Board has failed to satisfy its clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and each absent voter counting board ("AVCB") under MCL 168.674(2).

23. Plaintiffs issued a letter to former-Clerk Brown on September 9, 2022, which enclosed a list of 61 Republicans that had confirmed their interest and availability to work as election inspectors during the November 2022 general election in the City of Flint. That letter also requested, as a show of good faith, written assurance that the clerk would commit to contacting and scheduling election inspector training for each person on that list. Plaintiffs, however, never received such written assurance.

24. Neither the 15:1 ratio for the August primary election nor the Board's subsequent effort to appoint an equal number as possible of Democrat and Republican election inspectors satisfied the Board's clear legal duties under Michigan law.

25. On October 15, 2022, Plaintiffs received the list of election inspectors issued by the Board to the Chair of the Genesee County Republican Party for the upcoming November 2022 general election. A copy of that correspondence and list are attached hereto as Exhibit 1.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

26. Of the approximately 562 election inspectors included in the list, only 57—or approximately 10%—are Republicans. This disparity shows that the Board has failed to comply with its clear legal duty under MCL 168.674(2).

27. Since the August primary, additional Republicans have contacted the City Clerk's office to inquire about working as election inspectors. Yet, despite the disparity of Democratic election inspectors to Republican election inspectors appointed by the City, those Republican individuals were rejected by staff in the clerk's office.

28. In one instance, Ms. Gloria Boone, the City of Flint's Election Supervisor, informed a prospective Republican election inspector that the clerk's office had received "a lot" of calls from Republicans asking about serving as election inspectors. Ms. Boone expressly dismissed the notion that the City "needs more Republicans" as election inspectors because Flint "is a predominately Democratic area." Ms. Boone also indicated that a prospective election inspector's partisan affiliation is irrelevant to their serving as election inspectors. This, despite the Board's clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and each AVCB.

29. In a good-faith attempt to resolve this matter without litigation, Plaintiffs (through counsel) sent to Defendants a letter dated October 21, 2022, requesting that the Board comply with its clear legal duties under MCL 168.674(2). (See Exhibit 2, October 21, 2022 Letter.) Defendant Kim responded to Plaintiffs' letter and acknowledged that Michigan law requires that the Board "shall appoint an equal number, as nearly as possible, of election inspectors in each election precinct from each major political party." MCL 168.674(2). (See Exhibit 3, October 25, 2022 Response Letter.)

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

30. Defendant Kim's response letter detailed the Board's purported efforts to appoint Republican-affiliated election inspectors, and represented that (a) recent appointments of City election inspectors have brought the total number of Republican-affiliated election inspectors to over 120, with "almost 50 of the persons listed" in Plaintiffs' October 21, 2022 letter having been appointed as election inspectors and (b) the City Clerk's office intended to contact persons identified on the list provided by Plaintiffs and inquire as to whether such persons remain interested in submitting the required application, attending the necessary training, and working the November 8 general election. (See Exhibit 3, October 25, 2022 Response Letter.)

31. Plaintiffs' unaddressed demands relating to the Board's violation of MCL 168.674(2) include, among other requests:

a. Assist each prospective Republican election inspector that contacts the City to inquire about serving in that role in a manner consistent with this Board's ongoing duty under MCL 168.674(5), rather than turning those individuals away;

b. Take affirmative actions to recruit additional Republican election inspectors, including but not limited to educating City staff about the requirement to recruit and appoint Republican election inspectors, and publicly posting a call for Republicans to volunteer to serve as election inspectors; and

c. Assist each prospective Republican election inspector that contacts the City to inquire about serving in that role in a manner consistent with this Board's ongoing duty under MCL 168.674(5), rather than turning those individuals away.

32. Defendants' half-hearted steps do not satisfy their duties under MCL 168.674(2) or MCL 168.674(5).

33. Even if Plaintiffs take Defendant Kim's numbers to be true and adjust up accordingly from the numbers Plaintiffs had previously ascertained: now, of the approximately 682 election inspectors the city has, only 120—or approximately 17.6%—are Republicans. Defendants have not satisfied their ongoing duties under MCL 168.674(2) and (5) because, despite the numbers of partisan inspectors not yet being equal, and with the election still more than a week away, Defendants have refused to take the additional steps necessary to satisfy their clear legal duties through Election Day.

34. Defendant Kim accommodated this request on October 27, 2022. While the Board's hiring of additional Republican-affiliated election inspectors is a step in the right direction, it nevertheless falls woefully short of the Board's continuing duties under Michigan law.

35. Plaintiffs are entitled to a writ of mandamus: (a) Plaintiffs, as a major political party, have a clear legal right to the performance of the Board's duty to legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party under MCL 168.674(2) and (5); (b) the Defendants have a clear legal duty to perform those acts under MCL 168.674(2) and (5); (c) those acts of appointing election inspections are, by their very nature, ministerial; and (d) no other adequate legal or equitable remedy exists to achieve the relief sought. Indeed, while MCL 168.674 sets forth a separate, administrative process through which county chairs of political parties may challenge the partisan bona fides and qualifications of individual inspectors, that process does not provide a means for challenging the Board's failure to appoint as equal a number of partisan inspectors as possibly, and therefore that process does not provide Plaintiffs with a remedy here.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

36. Without immediate action by this Court compelling Defendants to hire Republican-affiliated election inspectors, Plaintiffs' right to have "an equal number, as nearly as possible, of [Republican-affiliated] election inspectors in each election precinct" will forever be lost. MCL 168.674(2), (5).

COUNT II: WRIT OF MANDAMUS RE: DEFENDANTS' DUTIES UNDER MCL 168.674(2), (5), AND MCL 168.765a(2) REGARDING FLINT'S AVCB(S).

37. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

38. The Board's legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party also applies with equal force to Flint's AVCBs. See MCL 168.765a(2) (providing that the requirements for the appointment of equal numbers of election inspectors from each major political party, among other requirements under section 674, "apply to the appointment of election inspectors to [AVCBs.]").

39. The Board's legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each AVCB runs through Election Day. MCL 168.674(5).

40. As of October 21, 2022, Plaintiffs understood that the City of Flint had hired only four Republican election inspectors to work at its AVCBs, compared to the 56 Democrats hired by the City for the same role.

41. On October 26, 2022, Plaintiffs, through counsel, requested a telephone conference with Defendant Kim to discuss the City's non-compliance with the equal number requirement for AVCBs. Specific discussion points were to include:

a. Requested reallocation of no fewer than 20 Republican election inspectors from precinct polling places to the City's AVCBs; and

b. Appointment of no fewer than 25 Republican election inspectors as chairpersons.

42. Defendant Kim responded via email to Plaintiffs' counsel and declined to meet and confer regarding Plaintiff's requests, stating: "we find no clear legal duty to act as requested and would not want to create the appearance of showing undue favoritism to any political party."

43. Defendant Kim provided Plaintiffs' counsel a list of Republican-affiliated election inspectors, which list was purported to be current as of approximately 4:30 PM ET on October 27, 2022. The figures shown on that list, even assuming their veracity, continue to show that the Board has failed to satisfy its clear legal duties under MCL 168.674(2), (5), and MCL 168.765a(2).

44. These figures indicate that the total number of Republican-affiliated election inspectors is 130, with only six of these Republican-affiliated election inspectors having been assigned to Flint's AVCB. (See Exhibit 4.)

45. Therefore, the ratio of Republican election inspectors to Democrat election inspectors appointed to Flint's AVCBs is still far from equal, given that, to the best of Plaintiffs' knowledge, Flint has appointed only six Republicans to serve as election inspectors in its ACVBs in comparison to appointing 56 Democrats for that same role. That approximate 1:9 ratio is far from what is required of the Board by their ongoing duties under MCL 168.674(2), (5), and MCL 168.765a(2).

46. Defendant Kim's indication that the Board will not appoint additional Republican inspectors demonstrates that Defendants have no intention of satisfying their legal duties as to AVCBs under MCL 168.674(2) and (5).

47. Plaintiffs are entitled to a writ of mandamus: (a) Plaintiffs, as a major political party, have a clear legal right to the performance of the Board's duty to legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each AVCB under MCL 168.674(2) and (5); (b) the Defendants have a clear legal duty to perform those acts under MCL 168.674(2) and (5); (c) those acts of appointing election inspections are, by their very nature, ministerial; and (d) no other adequate legal or equitable remedy exists to achieve the relief sought. Indeed, while MCL 168.674 sets forth a separate, administrative process through which county chairs of political parties may challenge the partisan bona fides and qualifications of individual inspectors, that process does not provide a means for challenging the Board's failure to appoint as equal a number of partisan inspectors as possibly, and therefore that process does not provide Plaintiffs with a remedy here.

48. Without immediate action by this Court compelling Defendants to reallocate Republican-affiliated election inspectors to AVCBs, Plaintiffs' right to have "an equal number, as nearly as possible, of [Republican-affiliated] election inspectors in each election precinct" will forever be lost. MCL 168.674(2), (5), MCL 168.765a(2).

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs requests that this Honorable Court enter the proposed Order to Show Cause attached hereto as Exhibit E, and that it enter a judgment as follows:

a. A declaratory judgment that Defendants are violating their clear legal duties under MCL 168.674(2), MCL 168.674(5), and MCL 168.765a(2);

b. A writ of mandamus compelling Defendants to satisfy their clear legal duties by:

   i. Appointing as election inspectors for the upcoming November 2022 general election the individuals set forth in the list attached hereto as Exhibit 5;

   ii. Reallocating no fewer than 20 Republican election inspectors from precinct polling places to the City's AVCBs; iii. Reallocating no fewer than 25 Republican election inspectors as chairpersons;

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

iv. Taking affirmative actions to recruit additional Republican election inspectors, including but not limited to educating City staff about the requirement to recruit and appoint Republican election inspectors, and publicly posting a call for Republicans to volunteer to serve as election inspectors; and

v. Assisting each prospective Republican election inspector that contacts the City to inquire about serving in that role in a manner consistent with this Board's ongoing duty under MCL 168.674(5), rather than turning those individuals away.

c. Any other relief this Court deems just and equitable.

Dear Commissioners,

We are counsel for the Michigan Republican Party and the Republican National Committee (collectively, the "GOP"). We write to you in your capacity as members of the Flint Board of Election Commissioners (the "Board"), and specifically regarding the insufficient number of Republican-affiliated election inspectors that have been appointed by the Board to serve as inspectors in the quickly-approaching general election.

In light of the departure of former-Clerk Inez Brown, with whom we and our clients communicated about this matter on countless occasions, we've provided here a brief summary and background of this matter.

As you are no doubt aware, Michigan law expressly requires that this Board "shall appoint an equal number, as nearly as possible, of election inspectors in each election precinct from each major political party." MCL 168.674(2) (emphasis added). Likewise, the Board's legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party also applies with equal force to Flint's Absent Voter Counting Boards ("AVCBs"). See MCL 168.765a(2) (providing that the requirements for the appointment of equal numbers of election inspectors from each major political party, among other requirements under section 674, "apply to the appointment of election inspectors to [AVCBs.]").

Importantly, the Board's legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and to each AVCB runs through Election Day. MCL 168.674(5).

Election inspectors play an important role in instilling confidence in our electoral process. While there may have been a shortage of Republican election inspectors in previous election cycles, this year the GOP has made a concerted effort to work with the City of Flint to assist in recruiting inspectors and collaboratively assist the City in fulfilling its obligations under MCL 168.674. For example, on May 12, 2022, the GOP provided former-Clerk Brown with applications for 122 Republicans interested in serving as election inspectors in the City of Flint for the August 2, 2022 primary election. Despite the GOP's efforts, on July 16, 2022, the City of Flint provided the Genesee County Republican Party with a list indicating that the City had hired only 27 Republican election inspectors. The City had, however, hired 442 Democrat election inspectors for the same election. It goes without saying that a 27:442 ratio is a far cry from the "equal as possible" requirement set forth under Michigan law. Making matters worse, the City of Flint hired only 4 Republican election inspectors to work at its AVCBs, compared to the 56 Democrats hired by the City for the same role.

In light of the discrepancy between the quantity of Democrat and Republican election inspectors, the GOP contacted former-Clerk Brown on July 26, 2022—one week prior to the primary election—to address the City's unequal appointment of partisan election inspectors. Former-Clerk Brown assured the GOP that the City would contact the Republicans provided by the GOP back in May 2022. But even then, the GOP contacted those Republicans after the primary election, and learned that the City had hired only an additional 22 applicants. In sum, the ratio of Democratic election inspectors to Republican election inspectors employed by the City of Flint for the August 2022 primary election was approximately 15:1. Neither that ratio nor the Board's effort to appoint an equal number as possible of Democrat and Republican election inspectors satisfied Michigan law.

Nonetheless, for the sake of assisting the Board in complying with its duty under Michigan law to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and each AVCB, the GOP issued a letter to former-Clerk Brown on September 9, 2022, which enclosed a list of 61 Republicans that had confirmed their interest and availability to work as election inspectors during the November 2022 general election in the City of Flint. That letter also requested, as a show of good faith, written assurance that the clerk would commit to contacting and scheduling election inspector training for each person on that list. The GOP, however, never received such written assurance.

It was against that backdrop that the GOP received the list of election inspectors issued by the Board to the Chair of the Genesee County Republican Party for the upcoming November 2022 general election. A copy of that correspondence and list are attached hereto as Exhibit A.

Simply put, the Board's list of election inspectors does not comply with Michigan law. Of the approximately 562 election inspectors included in the list, only 57—or approximately 10%—are

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Republicans. This disparity does not comply with MCL 168.674(2). Likewise, the Board has appointed 45 Democrat election inspectors to serve at the AVCBs, compared with merely 2 Republicans for the same role. This disparity is also not compliant with MCL 168.674(2). As a further example of these unacceptable disparities, the Board has appointed 98 Democrats to serve as chairpersons, but only 2 Republicans to the same role.

Making matters worse, the GOP has learned that additional Republicans recently contacted the clerk's office to inquire about working as election inspectors. Yet, despite the disparities outlined above, those individuals were rejected by staff in the clerk's office.

In one instance, Ms. Gloria Boone, the City of Flint's Election Supervisor, informed a prospective Republican election inspector that the clerk's office had received "a lot" of calls from Republicans asking about serving as election inspectors, but Ms. Boone questioned the rumors that the City "needs more Republicans" as election inspectors because Flint "is a predominately Democratic area" and indicated that she does not need to know their partisan affiliation. That individual was directed by clerk staff to fill out and submit an application, but was left with the impression that the clerk's office did not need any more Republican election inspectors.

In light of the demonstrated numerical disparities between Republican and Democrat election inspectors identified by the Board, and the Board's clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and to each AVCB—a duty that runs through Election Day under Michigan law, see MCL 168.674(5)—the intention of this letter is to assist the Board in good faith with bringing its appointment of election inspectors into compliance with Michigan law.

While our Firm has been authorized to take all appropriate actions under law and equity to ensure that the clear legal duties of the Board are fulfilled as they relate to the appointment election inspectors under MCL 168.674, 168 765a, etc.,[1] we appreciate that the confluence of the departure of former-Clerk Brown and the Board's understanding of its duties under Michigan law may lead to an amicable resolution of this matter. With that in mind, the GOP respectfully requests that the Board take the following actions by 4:30pm on Tuesday, October 25, 2022:

- Appoint as election inspectors for the upcoming November 2022 general election the individuals set forth in the appended list, attached hereto as Exhibit B;

- Reallocate no less than twenty (20) Republican election inspectors from precinct polling places to the City's AVCBs;

[1] While Michigan law permits the county chair of a major political party to challenge the appointment of individual election inspectors based on those individuals' partisan bona fides, among other qualifications, see MCL 168.674(3), the Board's clear legal duty to appoint an equal number of election inspectors from each major political party to each election precinct and AVCB would be enforceable through, among other actions, a writ of mandamus commenced by an aggrieved major political party.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Appoint no less than twenty-five (25) Republican election inspectors as chairpersons;

- Take affirmative actions to recruit additional Republican election inspectors, including but not limited to educating City staff about the requirement to recruit and appoint Republican election inspectors, and publicly posting a call for Republicans to volunteer to serve as election inspectors;

- Assist each prospective Republican election inspector that contacts the City to inquire about serving in that role in a manner consistent with this Board's ongoing duty under MCL 168.674(5), rather than turning those individuals away; and

- Cease accepting prospective Democrat election inspectors in order to permit the above-referenced actions an opportunity to work toward a more equal balance of Republican and Democrat election inspectors as required under Michigan law.

We appreciate your taking the time to consider these requests, which are firmly rooted in Michigan law, and we likewise trust that the Board shares our desire to promptly resolve this matter in a collaborative manner rather than proceeding with expedited litigation.

With that in mind, please do respond to us at cspies@dickinsonwright.com and ravers@dickinsonwright.com by 4:30PM EDT on Tuesday, October 25, 2022, to confirm the Board's compliance with these requests. Separate from that timeline, we welcome the opportunity to discuss this matter with your counsel in advance of that deadline if the Board believes such discussions would be fruitful in reaching an acceptable solution prior to 4:30 PM EDT on October 25, 2022.

Cordially,

Dear Mr. Spies and Mr. Avers,

The City of Flint Law Department is in receipt of your October 21, 2022 letter. Thank you for communicating your concerns to us regarding the appointment of election inspectors at the City of Flint.

As you quoted, MCL 168.674(2) conditions the appointment of equal election inspectors from each political party with the clause, "as nearly as possible." The list of election inspectors circulated on October 15, 2022, included all Republican-affiliated election inspectors who (a) submitted the necessary application,[1] (b) agreed to attend the necessary training,[2] and (c) were available to work the November 8, 2022 general election. This necessarily limited the number of Republican-affiliated election inspectors who could be appointed because it would violate the law to appoint election inspectors who do not satisfy the statutory requirements.

Furthermore, the Chair of the election commission, interim City Clerk Donahue, has the authority to fill vacancies in the offices of election inspector.[3] I am informed that, pursuant to that authority, subsequent appointments of election inspectors have brought the total number of Republican-affiliated election inspectors to over 120. Indeed, almost 50 of the persons listed in your October 21 letter have been appointed as election inspectors.

In that vein, we would like to thank you for the additional names that you have provided in your October 21 letter. For the persons you listed that the City Clerk's Office has not already been in contact with, that office intends to contact them and inquire as to whether they remain interested in submitting the required application, attending the necessary training, and working the November 8 general election. However, we would also note that in addition to names which have already been appointed as election inspectors, your list also includes duplicative names, names of persons who – when contacted by the City Clerk's office – informed us that they were already working as election inspectors in other jurisdictions, and the name of at least one person who yelled profanity at the staff who contacted him and instructed our staff to not call them in the future.

Thank you for your interest in safeguarding the democratic process, and we hope that your client will continue to be interested in ensuring that every voter in Flint can fully participate in the November 8, 2022 general election.

Hi Heather,

As you may have seen, the Supreme Court today announced that it will issue one or more opinions tomorrow morning at 10 a.m. ET. We anticipate that the decision in Trump v. Anderson, Donald Trump's appeal of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision excluding him from the primary ballot, will issue then. We plan to monitor the Court's website and, assuming the opinion issues, have guidance shortly thereafter.

Best,

Jonathan

Privileged and Confidential

Hi Heather,

As you have surely seen, in Trump v. Anderson, the Supreme Court this morning issued an unsigned per curiam decision reversing the Colorado Supreme Court and holding that former President Donald Trump cannot be excluded from the Republican primary ballot in Colorado under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

According to the Court, "responsibility for enforcing Section 3 against federal officeholders and candidates rests with Congress and not the States." (Slip op. at 12). This means not only that States cannot enforce Section 3 against federal candidates and officeholders but also that no part of the federal government may enforce Section 3 absent specific legislation from Congress providing for enforcement of the disqualification.

Hi Heather,

DPP MCL 15.243(1)(m)

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

A Missouri-based nonprofit called "United Sovereign Americans" sued the Maryland State Board of Elections seeking to enjoin the Board from certifying future elections until the Board, among other things, updates its voter rolls, decertifies its voting systems, and follows the guidance of a court-appointed Special Master to implement suggested programs to improve monitoring and transparency in the voting systems. The lawsuit alleges: (1) the state's voter registration database contains nearly 80K registration violations in violation of the NVRA; (2) the number of voting systems errors exceeds HAVA's maximum allowable error rate; (3) the state failed to properly certify its voting systems; (4) the state's voting systems improperly use modems to transmit results; (5) the state failed to appropriately respond to public information requests; and (6) the state's voting systems fail to give voters the ability to correct certain undervotes in violation of HAVA. The complaint claims that the Board is violating HAVA and the NVRA, as well as state election law. The full complaint is attached.

Hi Heather,

At my request, a member of our research team, Michael Pomante, went through the RNC's letter and complaint and annotated it with some thoughts about the data, including articles that either debunk or contextualize the allegations where appropriate. One thing that leapt out is how common registration rates over 100% of CVAP are. Full citation info is available in the separate Word document.

If you'd like to discuss any of this with us, let us know.

Best,

Jonathan

Hi Heather,

Mike mentioned to me yesterday that there are recount requests for Proposals 2 and 3 and suggested you could help me get copies of those requests. Would you be able to send them to us? Thanks so much. If there's any assistance we can provide, please let us know.

Best,

BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS
FOR THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE MATTER OF THE RECOUNT OF 2022 MICHIGAN PROPOSAL #2 of 2022.

NOW COMES JEROME JAY ALLEN, the undersigned, an elector in this state of Michigan identified with their full name and jurisdiction of registration below their signature and pursuant to MCL 168.880 hereby presents and files with the secretary of state this sworn, printed petition that the undersigned electors believe that there has been fraud or error committed (1) by the inspectors of election in the return made; and (2) by the county canvassing board in the canvass of votes cast upon the questions of the proposed amendment to the constitution known as proposal 2 of 2022.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.865 this sworn petition sets forth the nature of the mistakes or frauds complained and identifies the city, ward, township, and precinct in which they are alleged to have occurred so that there may be a correction of the mistakes.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.881(1) this petition shall be filed with the state bureau of elections.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.881(6) the sum of $5,875 representing $125 per precinct for 47 precincts as the votes separating the questions were reported as greater than 0.5%. The precincts affected are listed in the attachment which identifies the county, the jurisdiction (City/Ward or Township), and the precinct (or in the case of the City of Detroit the AVCB and precinct.

The following mistakes or frauds complained of have resulted in a belief by the undersigned electors that there is fraud or error which requires a recount by hand that will result in a correction of the statement of votes cast:

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 1: Configuration of voting systems is not certified to meet or exceed VVSG 2.0 by an accredited VVSG

The Votes were counted by use of a 'voting system' that was not certified (or recertified), as configured, to the VVSG 2.0 by an accredited laboratory as required by HAVA.

HAVA The Help America Vote Act of 2002

In person + AV Boards counters for all attached precincts. (SL)

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

1) The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) in Section 301(a)(6) sets forth the requirements that required each state to set forth non-discriminatory standards for what constitutes a vote for each voting system that is used in the state.
2) The definition of a voting system per HAVA Section 301(b)(2)(e) includes the instructions given to a voter on how to mark the ballot.
3) HAVA created the US Election Assistance Commission with the authority to provide a regulatory process ro accredit Voting System Test Laboratories (VSTL)
4) These VSTLs are authorized to certify each voting system as configured for use as meeting or exceeding standards called the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines (VVSG)
5) The VVSG has been in effect since 2021.
6) Michigan passed legislation that mandates the implementation of a statewide, uniform voting system and requires it to meet the requirements of HAVA (PA 91 of 2002).
7) HAVA in Section 253 Condition for receipt of Funds specifies the certification of compliance that was required by each state which included a plan for performance goals and measures and included requirements that the state would maintain the standards. The conditions were lengthy but mandatory upon receipt of funds.
8) The Federal Register with all the other states and territories published the original Michigan plan on March 24, 2004, but then Secretary of State Terri Land submitted an amended state plan dated September 27, 2005, which was published on November 9, 2005. There is no evidence that this plan has been updated subsequently on the internet or readily accessible records of the MI SOS or US EAC.

   On page 31 of the State Plan, the document reads:

   > IV. Voting System Guidelines and Processes How the State will adopt voting system guidelines and processes, which are consistent with the requirements of section 301. -- HAVA §254(a)(4)
   > Michigan has adopted legislation that mandates the implementation of a statewide, uniform voting system (PA 91 of 2002). The voting system selected will meet the requirements of Section 301 of the Help America Vote Act, including all accessibility requirements.

THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF COMPLIANCE IN STATE OR FEDERAL RECORDS that any Michigan voting system has been certified (or recertified) by a VSTL as meeting or exceeding the requirements of VVSG 2.0 , as configured.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

THEREFORE, there is a belief that the voting system, as configured, is not qualified by law to accurately count the ballots and that a hand recount will result in a different vote total.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 2: Digital Adjudication Software

Furthermore, certain AVCBs have used digital adjudication software as an optional application offered by the vendors. This specific software digital adjudication application violates both HAVA Section 301(a) (6) and Michigan Election Law (MCL 168.803) as it allows for the 'manipulation, alteration or transformation of the ballot image" to alter the voter's mark to what the adjudicator decides was the voter's intent.

The AVCBs identified by Chris Thomas and poll challengers include as the boards for the (1) County of Wayne in the Cities of Livonia and Detroit; (2) County of Oakland in the Cities of Farmington Hills, Rochester Hills, and Troy (3) County of Washtenaw, City of Ann Arbor (4) County of Muskegon, City of Muskegon (5) County of Ingham, City of Lansing and (6) County of Kent City of Grand Rapids are collectively referred to AVCBs with Adjudication Software.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 3: Violation of MCL 168.795(2)

A ballot that is voted in person improperly is to be rejected by the tabulator under Federal and Michigan Law to permit the voter an opportunity to self-correct the ballot or have it spoiled. An absentee ballot that is rejected by the tabulator is to be rejected. To reduce the risk, federal law sets forth the process to educate and instruct the elector to limit the occurrences of a ballot being filled out improperly. HAVA Section 301(a)(1).

There is no process in Michigan to save part of a ballot when the ballot is rejected.

> MCL 168.795(2)
> Electronic tabulating equipment that tabulates ballots, including absentee ballots, at a central location must be programmed to reject a ballot if the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceed the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question, if no valid choices are recorded on an elector's ballot, or if, in a primary election, votes are recorded for candidates of more than 1 political party.

Instead, as observed and reported on November 3, 2022, by Chris Thomas (formerly the Director of the Michigan Bureau of Elections for various Secretaries of State from 1980 to 2017 then a consultant for the City of Detroit for November 2020-2022) who during a hearing in the 3rd Circuit Court for the County of Wayne in Karamo, et all v City of Detroit Clerk, Case No. 22-012-759AW, that the rest of an overvoted ballot was counted without the race which was overvoted at the Detroit AVCB using the ImageCast Central™ Software from Dominion Voting Systems, Inc. with the adjudication application.

THEREFORE, there is a good faith belief that ballots that are to be rejected by law have been counted improperly at the AVCBs using adjudication software and high-speed scanning devices.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 4: Use of Voting system in violation of MCL 168.795a

HAVA Section 304 makes it very clear that the federal minimum requirements for voting systems are a minimum. States are free to have more restrictive laws on the books.

MCLA 168.795a states an express prohibition on the use of an electronic voting system unless it meets three separate requirements. The third of these requirements has not been met. There is no standards or independent testing authority recognized by the national association of state election inspectors. This was confirmed in the hearing on November 3, 2022 referenced above in the testimony of Chris Thomas who opined that this law was outdated.

MCL 168.795a (1) An electronic voting system shall not be used in an election unless it is approved by the board of state canvassers as meeting the requirements of sections 794 and 795 and instructions regarding recounts of ballots cast on that electronic voting system that have been issued by the secretary of state, unless section 797c has been complied with, and unless it meets 1 of the following conditions:

(a) Is certified by an independent testing authority accredited by the national association of state election directors and by the board of state canvassers.

(b) In the absence of an accredited independent testing authority, is certified by the manufacturer of the voting system as meeting or exceeding the performance and test standards referenced in subdivision (a) in a manner prescribed by the board of state canvassers.

There is no legal means to disregard this law by the executive branch. The law must be enforced until repealed or held to be unconstitutional by a judicial branch official. The rule of law does not allow the executive branch to select which laws it will follow.

However, the Secretary of State has required all election clerks to use a voting system in violation of MCL 168.795a.

THEREFORE, there is a belief that the voting system is not qualified by law to accurately count the ballots and that a hand recount will result in a different vote total.

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 5: TABULATORS CONNECTED TO THE INTERNET

Michigan required all manufacturers of tabulators during procurement to assure that the tabulators would not be connected to the internet and that data would be transferred by removable storage drive to the Election Management System. This was to prevent a foreign or domestic criminal from accessing the tabulator while it is processing ballots. In reliance upon these representations, the systems lack individual cybersecurity protections as the tabulators were reported offline and without the capacity to go online. However, recent information has developed where certain systems have cellular modems in them. Further, Security logs from tabulators have shown that the tabulators are in fact both capable of transmitting online and are configured to transmit online and have transmitted online during the August 2, 2022, primary election. The tabulators have not changed their capabilities since August. Tabulators in the AVCB using central election software are both wired together and online. It is believed that this creates both an illegal configuration and that this creates a vulnerability to 'hack' the election results. Recent reports of machines reporting inaccurate results in Cherokee Kansas, DeKalb County Georgia, and Williamson County Tennessee have only been discovered by hand counting ballots. The mechanism of the errors which changed the outcome of three elections after the hand recount is unknown. There is still questions concerning how Antrim County reported in 2020 General election more votes in three precincts and misreported both the presidential election and at least one down-ballot issue.

The connectivity, whether the secretary of state believes it or not, creates the opportunity that the machine can be accessed by hackers, foreign or domestic, and has created a belief that requires hand-count to correct the error in the tally.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 6. E-poll books connected to the internet

Michigan has required the use of e poll books and has required the e poll books to be air-gapped (not connected to the internet) during the tabulation of votes. During the August 2, 2022 primary an e-poll book reportedly crashed in St. Clair County and per the affidavit when the Secretary of State was contacted they said the problem was on their end and re-set the e-poll book remotely. During the November 8, 2022 General Election, it has been reported by Kate Riley from the Wayne County Board of Canvasser that many, many precincts in Detroit experienced simultaneous failure of the e-poll book which resulted in a conversation with the Secretary of State Bureau of Elections Director Brater who reported the error had been addressed by the State, that Detroit was not at fault, and that the election was secure. This is strong evidence again of connectivity. The e-poll book connectivity is a significant issue of the integrity of the elections especially when the tabulator count is required to be matched against the number in the e-poll book.

Based on the connectivity of the e-poll book, there is a good faith belief that a recount will permit the board of examiners to determine how this connectivity affected the canvass.

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 6: Examination of the return shows that there is a significant deviation from the top of the tickets and the bottom of the ticket in many, many precincts which is contrary to the manner in which people vote.

There is up to a 20-point difference in some precincts between the top three races and the local races. This voting has to be interpreted that the Republican voters who cast votes for local Republican candidates rejected the candidates for Governor, Attorney General, and Secretary of State or contrary that the Democratic Voters who cast votes in support of the top three races then rejected the Democratic Candidates down the ballot. This spread creates a belief that there have been votes that have been recorded improperly as this does not reflect normal voting behavior-especially considering the candidates and the polarizing of the two parties in this election. The canvass on the proposals is similar to the top of the ticket. As such there is a belief that the results are not genuine.

This phenomenon is also reported in Arizona which is hotly contested.

There is a belief that the recount will show that a hand count of the ballots will correct the mistake of fraud in the canvass.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

A recount of the November 2022 election will allow each county that is challenged to examine the paper record and hand count to comply with a lawful count of the paper ballots. While this will not address the widespread concerns about ballots being injected into the election for voters that are not real or eligible to vote, the examination of the paper record will remedy the objection raised related to the voting system being used in violation of MCL 168.795a and when the system is not certified, as configured, be an accredited VSTL. Further, the concerns related to the voting system and the e-poll book being connected to the internet contrary to representations creating a significant risk of foreign or domestic hacking will be addressed. Finally, the board of canvassers has the ability to hand count the ballots and apply the law related to MCL 168.798(2) to save votes on a ballot that is required to be rejected by law and eliminate the digital adjudication of ballots to count only properly marked ballots.

Being under oath, the following undersigned elector declare that he believes that there is fraud or mistake in the canvass of the precincts listed in Attachment A and hereby deposit the sum of money requesting a recount of the precincts listed for the correction of error.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the above statements are true to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

HAVA Section 301(a) REQUIREMENTS.—Each voting system used in an election for Federal office shall meet the following requirements:

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the voting system (including any lever voting system, optical scanning voting system, or direct recording electronic system) shall—

(i) permit the voter to verify (in a private and independent manner) the votes selected by the voter on the ballot before the ballot is cast and counted;

(ii) provide the voter with the opportunity (in a private and independent manner) to change the ballot or correct any error before the ballot is cast and counted (including the opportunity to correct the error through the issuance of a replacement ballot if the voter was otherwise unable to change the ballot or correct any error); and

(iii) if the voter selects votes for more than one candidate for a single office— (I) notify the voter that the voter has selected more than one candidate for a single office on the ballot; (II) notify the voter before the ballot is cast and counted of the effect of casting multiple votes for the office; and (III) provide the voter with the opportunity to correct the ballot before the ballot is cast and counted.

(B) A State or jurisdiction that uses a paper ballot voting system, a punch card voting system, or a central count voting system (including mail-in absentee ballots and mail-in ballots), may meet the requirements of subparagraph (A)(iii) by— H. R. 3295—40

(i) establishing a voter education program specific to that voting system that notifies each voter of the effect of casting multiple votes for an office; and

(ii) providing the voter with instructions on how to correct the ballot before it is cast and counted (including instructions on how to correct the error through the issuance of a replacement ballot if the voter was otherwise unable to change the ballot or correct any error).

(C) The voting system shall ensure that any notification required under this paragraph preserves the p

HAVA Section 301 (a) (6) UNIFORM DEFINITION OF WHAT CONSTITUTES A VOTE.— Each State shall adopt uniform and nondiscriminatory standards that define what constitutes a vote and what will be counted as a vote for each category of voting system used in the State.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

HAVA Section 301 (b) VOTING SYSTEM DEFINED.—In this section, the term "voting system" means—

(1) the total combination of mechanical, electromechanical, or electronic equipment (including the software, firmware, and documentation required to program, control, and support the equipment) that is used—

(A) to define ballots;

(B) to cast and count votes;

(C) to report or display election results; and

(D) to maintain and produce any audit trail information; and

(2) the practices and associated documentation used—

(A) to identify system components and versions of such components;

(B) to test the system during its development and maintenance;

(C) to maintain records of system errors and defects;

(D) to determine specific system changes to be made to a system after the initial qualification of the system; and

(E) to make available any materials to the voter (such as notices, instructions, forms, or paper ballots).

HAVA Section 304. MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS. The requirements established by this title are minimum requirements and nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent a State from establishing election technology and administration requirements that are more strict than the requirements established under this title so long as such State requirements are not inconsistent with the Federal requirements under this title or any law described in section 906.

168.803 Counting and recounting of votes; intent of voter; stray marks; instructions issued by secretary of state.

Sec. 803.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the following rules govern the counting and recounting of votes:

(a) If it is clearly evident from an examination of a ballot that the ballot has been mutilated for the purpose of distinguishing it or that there has been placed on the ballot some mark, printing, or writing for the purpose of distinguishing it, then that ballot is void and shall not be counted.

(b) A cross, the intersection of which is within or on the line of the proper circle or square, or a check mark, the angle of which is within a circle or square, is valid. Crosses or check marks otherwise located on the ballot are void.

(c) Marks other than crosses or check marks used to designate the intention of the voter shall not be counted.

(d) A cross is valid even though 1 or both lines of the cross are duplicated, if the lines intersect within or on the line of the square or circle.

(e) Two lines meeting within or on the line of the square or circle, although not crossing each other, are valid if it is apparent that the voter intended to make a cross.

(f) A failure to properly mark a ballot as to 1 or more candidates does not alone invalidate the entire ballot if the ballot has been properly marked as to other candidates, unless the improper marking is determined to be a distinguishing mark as described in this subsection.

(g) Erasures and corrections on a ballot made by the elector in a manner frequently used for this purpose shall not be considered distinguishing marks or mutilations.

(h) A ballot or part of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice of candidate is void as to the candidate or candidates affected by that determination.

(i) A vote cast for a deceased candidate is void and shall not be counted, except that a vote cast for a candidate for governor who has died, and for whom a replacement has not been made, shall be counted for the candidate for lieutenant governor of that party.

(j) A ballot cast that is not counted shall be marked by the inspector "not counted", kept separate from the others by being tied or held in 1 package, and placed in the ballot box with the counted ballots.

(k) A vote shall not be counted for a candidate unless a cross or a check mark has been placed by the voter in the square before the space in which the name of the candidate has been printed, written, or placed.

(2) If an electronic voting system requires that the elector place a mark in a predefined area on the ballot in order to cast a vote, the vote shall not be considered valid unless there is a mark within the predefined area. A stray mark made within a predefined area is not a valid vote. In determining whether a mark within a predefined area is a stray mark, the board of canvassers or election official shall compare the mark with other marks appearing on the ballot. The secretary of state shall issue instructions, subject to the approval of the board of state canvassers, relevant to stray marks to ensure the fairness and uniformity of determinations made under this subsection. A secretary of state's instruction relevant to stray marks shall not be applied to a ballot unless the secretary of state issued the instruction not less than 63 days before the date of the election.

168.795 Electronic voting system; requirements; method for rendering electronic tabulating equipment inoperable; equipping each polling place with accessible voting device.

Sec. 795.

(1) An electronic voting system acquired or used under sections 794 to 799a must meet all of the following requirements:

(a) Provide for voting in secrecy, except in the case of voters who receive assistance as provided by this act.

(b) Utilize a paper ballot for tabulating purposes.

(c) Permit each elector to vote at an election all persons and offices for whom and for which the elector is lawfully entitled to vote; to vote for as many persons for an office as the elector is entitled to vote for; and to vote for or against any question upon which the elector is entitled to vote. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject all choices recorded on the elector's ballot for an office or a question if the number of choices exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

(d) Permit an elector, at a presidential election, by a single selection to vote for the candidates of a party for president, vice-president, and presidential electors.

(e) Permit an elector in a primary election to vote for the candidates in the party primary of the elector's choice. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject each ballot on which votes are cast for candidates of more than 1 political party. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the elector has voted for candidates of more than 1 political party must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(f) Prevent an elector from voting for the same person more than once for the same office.

(g) Reject a ballot on which no valid vote is cast. Electronic tabulating equipment must be programmed to reject a ballot on which no valid vote is cast.

(h) Be suitably designed for the purpose used; be durably constructed; and be designed to provide for safety, accuracy, and efficiency.

(i) Be designed to accommodate the needs of an elderly voter or a person with 1 or more disabilities.

(j) Record correctly and count accurately each vote properly cast.

(k) Provide an audit trail.

(l) Provide an acceptable method for an elector to vote for a person whose name does not appear on the ballot.

(m) Allow for accumulation of vote totals from the precincts in the jurisdiction. The accumulation software must meet specifications prescribed by the secretary of state and must be certified by the secretary of state as meeting these specifications.

(n) Be compatible with or include at least 1 voting device that is accessible for an individual with disabilities to vote in a manner that provides the same opportunity for access and participation, including secrecy and independence, as provided for other voters. The voting device must include nonvisual accessibility for the blind and visually impaired.

(2) Electronic tabulating equipment that counts votes at the precinct before the close of the polls must provide a method for rendering the equipment inoperable if vote totals are revealed before the close of the polls. Electronic tabulating equipment that tabulates ballots, including absentee ballots, at a central location must be programmed to reject a ballot if the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceed the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question, if no valid choices are recorded on an elector's ballot, or if, in a primary election, votes are recorded for candidates of more than 1 political party.

(3) Each jurisdiction in this state conducting an election shall equip each polling place with at least 1 accessible voting device as required under subsection (1)(n).

168.795a Electronic voting system; approval by board of state canvassers; conditions; approval of improvement or change; inapplicability of subsection (1); intent to purchase statement; instruction in operation and use; disapproval.

Sec. 795a.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(1) An electronic voting system shall not be used in an election unless it is approved by the board of state canvassers as meeting the requirements of sections 794 and 795 and instructions regarding recounts of ballots cast on that electronic voting system that have been issued by the secretary of state, unless section 797c has been complied with, and unless it meets 1 of the following conditions:

(a) Is certified by an independent testing authority accredited by the national association of state election directors and by the board of state canvassers.

(b) In the absence of an accredited independent testing authority, is certified by the manufacturer of the voting system as meeting or exceeding the performance and test standards referenced in subdivision (a) in a manner prescribed by the board of state canvassers.

(2) The vendor or representative seeking approval of an electronic voting system shall do all of the following:

(a) Deposit with the secretary of state a nonrefundable application fee of $1,500.00 for a new voting system and a fee of $500.00 for an upgrade to any existing system.

(b) File with the secretary of state a list of all states in which the voting system has been approved for use. This list shall state how long the system has been used in the state and shall disclose any reports compiled by any state or local government concerning the performance of the system. The vendor shall remain responsible for filing this information on an ongoing basis.

(c) File with the secretary of state copies of all standard contracts and maintenance agreements used in connection with the sale of the voting system. All changes to standard contracts and maintenance agreements shall be filed with the secretary of state.

(d) Pay the cost for any field test required by the board of state canvassers.

(e) State the number of voters each component of the voting system can process per hour under each of the following circumstances:

(i) An election in which there are 10 or fewer items to be voted on the ballot by each voter.

(ii) An election in which the ballot consists of the number of items typically voted on at a presidential general election in this state.

(3) The board of state canvassers shall conduct a field test of all new voting systems as part of the certification process. The field test shall involve Michigan electors and election officials in simulated election day conditions. The test shall be designed to gauge voter reaction to the system, problems that voters have with the system, and the number of voting stations required for the efficient operation of an election based upon the vendor's statement provided under subsection (2)(e).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(4) The board of state canvassers shall approve an electronic voting system for use in this state only if it meets the conditions of subsection (1) except that in an emergency situation that threatens the ability of a county, city, or township to conduct a scheduled election, the board of state canvassers may approve a correction of software or firmware after testing the software or firmware performance.

(5) If an electronic voting system is approved for use before January 1, 1997 by the board of state canvassers, it may be used in an election. However, if the electronic voting system has its software or firmware improved or changed, the system shall comply with the requirements of subsection (1).

(6) After an electronic voting system is approved, an improvement or change in the electronic voting system shall be submitted to the board of state canvassers for approval pursuant to this section. This subsection does not apply to the technical capability of a general purpose computer, reader, or printer to electronically record and count votes.

(7) A county, city, township, village, or school district shall file "an intent to purchase statement" with the secretary of state 30 days before any purchase agreement is made to purchase a new voting system. The secretary of state shall provide all information concerning the operation of the voting system in Michigan or any other state to the local unit of government within 25 days after receiving the "intent to purchase statement".

(8) The secretary of state shall instruct local election officials regarding the operation and use of an approved electronic voting system in order to carry out the purposes of sections 794 to 799a and the rules promulgated pursuant to sections 794 to 799a.

(9) If the board of state canvassers determines that an electronic voting system that was approved under subsection (1) no longer meets the requirements described in that subsection, the board of state canvassers may disapprove that voting system. An electronic voting system that has been disapproved by the board of state canvassers under this subsection shall not be used in an election, unless it is reapproved by the board of state canvassers under subsection (1).

BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS
FOR THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

IN THE MATTER OF THE RECOUNT OF 2022 MICHIGAN PROPOSAL #3 of 2022.

NOW COMES JEROME JAY ALLEN, the undersigned an elector in this State of Michigan identified with my full name and jurisdiction of registration below their signature and pursuant to MCL 168.880 hereby presents and files with the secretary of state this sworn, printed petition that the undersigned electors believe that there has been fraud or error committed (1) by the inspectors of election in the return made; and (2) by the county canvassing board in the canvass of votes cast upon the questions of the proposed amendment to the constitution known as proposal 3 of 2022.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.865 this sworn petition sets forth the nature of the mistakes or frauds complained and identifies the city, ward, township, and precinct in which they are alleged to have occurred so that there may be a correction of the mistakes.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.881(1) this petition shall be filed with the state bureau of elections.

FURTHER that pursuant to MCL 168.881(6) the sum of $70,000 representing $125 per precinct for 560 precincts as the votes separating the questions were reported as greater than 0.5%. The precincts affected are listed in the attachment which identifies the county, the jurisdiction (City/Ward or Township), and the precinct (or in the case of the City of Detroit the AVCB and precinct.

The following mistakes or frauds complained of have resulted in a belief by the undersigned electors that there is fraud or error which requires a recount by hand that will result in a correction of the statement of votes cast:

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 1: Configuration of voting systems is not certified to meet or exceed VVSG 2.0 by an accredited VVSG

The Votes were counted by use of a 'voting system' that was not certified (or recertified), as configured, to the VVSG 2.0 by an accredited laboratory as required by HAVA.

HAVA The Help America Vote Act of 2002

In person + AV counting Board Requested for all attached precincts. (SL)

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

1) The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) in Section 301(a)(6) sets forth the requirements that required each state to set forth non-discriminatory standards for what constitutes a vote for each voting system that is used in the state.
2) The definition of a voting system per HAVA Section 301(b)(2)(e) includes the instructions given to a voter on how to mark the ballot.
3) HAVA created the US Election Assistance Commission with the authority to provide a regulatory process ro accredit Voting System Test Laboratories (VSTL)
4) These VSTLs are authorized to certify each voting system as configured for use as meeting or exceeding standards called the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines (VVSG)
5) The VVSG has been in effect since 2021.
6) Michigan passed legislation that mandates the implementation of a statewide, uniform voting system and requires it to meet the requirements of HAVA (PA 91 of 2002).
7) HAVA in Section 253 Condition for receipt of Funds specifies the certification of compliance that was required by each state which included a plan for performance goals and measures and included requirements that the state would maintain the standards. The conditions were lengthy but mandatory upon receipt of funds.
8) The Federal Register with all the other states and territories published the original Michigan plan on March 24, 2004, but then Secretary of State Terri Land submitted an amended state plan dated September 27, 2005, which was published on November 9, 2005. There is no evidence that this plan has been updated subsequently on the internet or readily accessible records of the MI SOS or US EAC.

On page 31 of the State Plan, the document reads:

> IV. Voting System Guidelines and Processes How the State will adopt voting system guidelines and processes, which are consistent with the requirements of section 301. -- HAVA §254(a)(4)
> Michigan has adopted legislation that mandates the implementation of a statewide, uniform voting system (PA 91 of 2002). The voting system selected will meet the requirements of Section 301 of the Help America Vote Act, including all accessibility requirements.

THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF COMPLIANCE IN STATE OR FEDERAL RECORDS that any Michigan voting system has been certified (or recertified) by a VSTL as meeting or exceeding the requirements of VVSG 2.0 , as configured.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

THEREFORE, there is a belief that the voting system, as configured, is not qualified by law to accurately count the ballots and that a hand recount will result in a different vote total.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 2: Digital Adjudication Software

Furthermore, certain AVCBs have used digital adjudication software as an optional application offered by the vendors. This specific software digital adjudication application violates both HAVA Section 301(a) (6) and Michigan Election Law (MCL 168.803) as it allows for the 'manipulation, alteration or transformation of the ballot image" to alter the voter's mark to what the adjudicator decides was the voter's intent.

The AVCBs identified by Chris Thomas and poll challengers include as the boards for the (1) County of Wayne in the Cities of Livonia and Detroit; (2) County of Oakland in the Cities of Farmington Hills, Rochester Hills, and Troy (3) County of Washtenaw, City of Ann Arbor (4) County of Muskegon, City of Muskegon (5) County of Ingham, City of Lansing and (6) County of Kent City of Grand Rapids are collectively referred to AVCBs with Adjudication Software.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 3: Violation of MCL 168.795(2)

A ballot that is voted in person improperly is to be rejected by the tabulator under Federal and Michigan Law to permit the voter an opportunity to self-correct the ballot or have it spoiled. An absentee ballot that is rejected by the tabulator is to be rejected. To reduce the risk, federal law sets forth the process to educate and instruct the elector to limit the occurrences of a ballot being filled out improperly. HAVA Section 301(a)(1).

There is no process in Michigan to save part of a ballot when the ballot is rejected.

> MCL 168.795(2)
> Electronic tabulating equipment that tabulates ballots, including absentee ballots, at a central location must be programmed to reject a ballot if the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceed the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question, if no valid choices are recorded on an elector's ballot, or if, in a primary election, votes are recorded for candidates of more than 1 political party.

Instead, as observed and reported on November 3, 2022, by Chris Thomas (formerly the Director of the Michigan Bureau of Elections for various Secretaries of State from 1980 to 2017 then a consultant for the City of Detroit for November 2020-2022) who during a hearing in the 3rd Circuit Court for the County of Wayne in Karamo, et all v City of Detroit Clerk, Case No. 22-012-759AW, that the rest of an overvoted ballot was counted without the race which was overvoted at the Detroit AVCB using the ImageCast Central™ Software from Dominion Voting Systems, Inc. with the adjudication application.

THEREFORE, there is a good faith belief that ballots that are to be rejected by law have been counted improperly at the AVCBs using adjudication software and high-speed scanning devices.

FRAUD OR MISTAKE NUMBER 4: Use of Voting system in violation of MCL 168.795a

HAVA Section 304 makes it very clear that the federal minimum requirements for voting systems are a minimum. States are free to have more restrictive laws on the books.

MCLA 168.795a states an express prohibition on the use of an electronic voting system unless it meets three separate requirements. The third of these requirements has not been met. There is no standards or independent testing authority recognized by the national association of state election inspectors. This was confirmed in the hearing on November 3, 2022 referenced above in the testimony of Chris Thomas who opined that this law was outdated.

MCL 168.795a (1) An electronic voting system shall not be used in an election unless it is approved by the board of state canvassers as meeting the requirements of sections 794 and 795 and instructions regarding recounts of ballots cast on that electronic voting system that have been issued by the secretary of state, unless section 797c has been complied with, and unless it meets 1 of the following conditions:

(a) Is certified by an independent testing authority accredited by the national association of state election directors and by the board of state canvassers.

(b) In the absence of an accredited independent testing authority, is certified by the manufacturer of the voting system as meeting or exceeding the performance and test standards referenced in subdivision (a) in a manner prescribed by the board of state canvassers.

There is no legal means to disregard this law by the executive branch. The law must be enforced until repealed or held to be unconstitutional by a judicial branch official. The rule of law does not allow the executive branch to select which laws it will follow.

However, the Secretary of State has required all election clerks to use a voting system in violation of MCL 168.795a.

THEREFORE, there is a belief that the voting system is not qualified by law to accurately count the ballots and that a hand recount will result in a different vote total.

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 5: TABULATORS CONNECTED TO THE INTERNET

Michigan required all manufacturers of tabulators during procurement to assure that the tabulators would not be connected to the internet and that data would be transferred by removable storage drive to the Election Management System. This was to prevent a foreign or domestic criminal from accessing the tabulator while it is processing ballots. In reliance upon these representations, the systems lack individual cybersecurity protections as the tabulators were reported offline and without the capacity to go online. However, recent information has developed where certain systems have cellular modems in them. Further, Security logs from tabulators have shown that the tabulators are in fact both capable of transmitting online and are configured to transmit online and have transmitted online during the August 2, 2022, primary election. The tabulators have not changed their capabilities since August. Tabulators in the AVCB using central election software are both wired together and online. It is believed that this creates both an illegal configuration and that this creates a vulnerability to 'hack' the election results. Recent reports of machines reporting inaccurate results in Cherokee Kansas, DeKalb County Georgia, and Williamson County Tennessee have only been discovered by hand counting ballots. The mechanism of the errors which changed the outcome of three elections after the hand recount is unknown. There is still questions concerning how Antrim County reported in 2020 General election more votes in three precincts and misreported both the presidential election and at least one down-ballot issue.

The connectivity, whether the secretary of state believes it or not, creates the opportunity that the machine can be accessed by hackers, foreign or domestic, and has created a belief that requires hand-count to correct the error in the tally.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 6. E-poll books connected to the internet

Michigan has required the use of e poll books and has required the e poll books to be air-gapped (not connected to the internet) during the tabulation of votes. During the August 2, 2022 primary an e-poll book reportedly crashed in St. Clair County and per the affidavit when the Secretary of State was contacted they said the problem was on their end and re-set the e-poll book remotely. During the November 8, 2022 General Election, it has been reported by Kate Riley from the Wayne County Board of Canvasser that many, many precincts in Detroit experienced simultaneous failure of the e-poll book which resulted in a conversation with the Secretary of State Bureau of Elections Director Brater who reported the error had been addressed by the State, that Detroit was not at fault, and that the election was secure. This is strong evidence again of connectivity. The e-poll book connectivity is a significant issue of the integrity of the elections especially when the tabulator count is required to be matched against the number in the e-poll book.

Based on the connectivity of the e-poll book, there is a good faith belief that a recount will permit the board of examiners to determine how this connectivity affected the canvass.

MISTAKE OR FRAUD NUMBER 6: Examination of the return shows that there is a significant deviation from the top of the tickets and the bottom of the ticket in many, many precincts which is contrary to the manner in which people vote.

There is up to a 20-point difference in some precincts between the top three races and the local races. This voting has to be interpreted that the Republican voters who cast votes for local Republican candidates rejected the candidates for Governor, Attorney General, and Secretary of State or contrary that the Democratic Voters who cast votes in support of the top three races then rejected the Democratic Candidates down the ballot. This spread creates a belief that there have been votes that have been recorded improperly as this does not reflect normal voting behavior-especially considering the candidates and the polarizing of the two parties in this election. The canvass on the proposals is similar to the top of the ticket. As such there is a belief that the results are not genuine.

This phenomenon is also reported in Arizona which is hotly contested.

There is a belief that the recount will show that a hand count of the ballots will correct the mistake of fraud in the canvass.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

CONCLUSION

A recount of the November 2022 election will allow each county that is challenged to examine the paper record and hand count to comply with a lawful count of the paper ballots. While this will not address the widespread concerns about ballots being injected into the election for voters that are not real or eligible to vote, the examination of the paper record will remedy the objection raised related to the voting system being used in violation of MCL 168.795a and when the system is not certified, as configured, be an accredited VSTL. Further, the concerns related to the voting system and the e-poll book being connected to the internet contrary to representations creating a significant risk of foreign or domestic hacking will be addressed. Finally, the board of canvassers has the ability to hand count the ballots and apply the law related to MCL 168.798(2) to save votes on a ballot that is required to be rejected by law and eliminate the digital adjudication of ballots to count only properly marked ballots.

Being under oath, the following undersigned electors declare that they believe that there is fraud or mistake in the canvass of the precincts listed in Attachment A and hereby deposit the sum of money requesting a recount of the precincts listed for the correction of error.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the above statements are true to best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

(ii) providing the voter with instructions on how to correct the ballot before it is cast and counted (including instructions on how to correct the error through the issuance of a replacement ballot if the voter was otherwise unable to change the ballot or correct any error).

(C) The voting system shall ensure that any notification required under this paragraph preserves the p

HAVA Section 301 (a) (6) UNIFORM DEFINITION OF WHAT CONSTITUTES A VOTE.— Each State shall adopt uniform and nondiscriminatory standards that define what constitutes a vote and what will be counted as a vote for each category of voting system used in the State.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

HAVA Section 301 (b) VOTING SYSTEM DEFINED.—In this section, the term "voting system" means—

(1) the total combination of mechanical, electromechanical, or electronic equipment (including the software, firmware, and documentation required to program, control, and support the equipment) that is used—

(A) to define ballots;

(B) to cast and count votes;

(C) to report or display election results; and

(D) to maintain and produce any audit trail information; and

(2) the practices and associated documentation used—

(A) to identify system components and versions of such components;

(B) to test the system during its development and maintenance;

(C) to maintain records of system errors and defects;

(D) to determine specific system changes to be made to a system after the initial qualification of the system; and

(E) to make available any materials to the voter (such as notices, instructions, forms, or paper ballots).

HAVA Section 304. MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS. The requirements established by this title are minimum requirements and nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent a State from establishing election technology and administration requirements that are more strict than the requirements established under this title so long as such State requirements are not inconsistent with the Federal requirements under this title or any law described in section 906.

168.803 Counting and recounting of votes; intent of voter; stray marks; instructions issued by secretary of state.

Sec. 803.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the following rules govern the counting and recounting of votes:

(a) If it is clearly evident from an examination of a ballot that the ballot has been mutilated for the purpose of distinguishing it or that there has been placed on the ballot some mark, printing, or writing for the purpose of distinguishing it, then that ballot is void and shall not be counted.

(b) A cross, the intersection of which is within or on the line of the proper circle or square, or a check mark, the angle of which is within a circle or square, is valid. Crosses or check marks otherwise located on the ballot are void.

(c) Marks other than crosses or check marks used to designate the intention of the voter shall not be counted.

(d) A cross is valid even though 1 or both lines of the cross are duplicated, if the lines intersect within or on the line of the square or circle.

(e) Two lines meeting within or on the line of the square or circle, although not crossing each other, are valid if it is apparent that the voter intended to make a cross.

(f) A failure to properly mark a ballot as to 1 or more candidates does not alone invalidate the entire ballot if the ballot has been properly marked as to other candidates, unless the improper marking is determined to be a distinguishing mark as described in this subsection.

(g) Erasures and corrections on a ballot made by the elector in a manner frequently used for this purpose shall not be considered distinguishing marks or mutilations.

(h) A ballot or part of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice of candidate is void as to the candidate or candidates affected by that determination.

(i) A vote cast for a deceased candidate is void and shall not be counted, except that a vote cast for a candidate for governor who has died, and for whom a replacement has not been made, shall be counted for the candidate for lieutenant governor of that party.

(j) A ballot cast that is not counted shall be marked by the inspector "not counted", kept separate from the others by being tied or held in 1 package, and placed in the ballot box with the counted ballots.

(k) A vote shall not be counted for a candidate unless a cross or a check mark has been placed by the voter in the square before the space in which the name of the candidate has been printed, written, or placed.

(2) If an electronic voting system requires that the elector place a mark in a predefined area on the ballot in order to cast a vote, the vote shall not be considered valid unless there is a mark within the predefined area. A stray mark made within a predefined area is not a valid vote. In determining whether a mark within a predefined area is a stray mark, the board of canvassers or election official shall compare the mark with other marks appearing on the ballot. The secretary of state shall issue instructions, subject to the approval of the board of state canvassers, relevant to stray marks to ensure the fairness and uniformity of determinations made under this subsection. A secretary of state's instruction relevant to stray marks shall not be applied to a ballot unless the secretary of state issued the instruction not less than 63 days before the date of the election.

168.795 Electronic voting system; requirements; method for rendering electronic tabulating equipment inoperable; equipping each polling place with accessible voting device.

Sec. 795.

(1) An electronic voting system acquired or used under sections 794 to 799a must meet all of the following requirements:

(a) Provide for voting in secrecy, except in the case of voters who receive assistance as provided by this act.

(b) Utilize a paper ballot for tabulating purposes.

(c) Permit each elector to vote at an election all persons and offices for whom and for which the elector is lawfully entitled to vote; to vote for as many persons for an office as the elector is entitled to vote for; and to vote for or against any question upon which the elector is entitled to vote. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject all choices recorded on the elector's ballot for an office or a question if the number of choices exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceeds the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

(d) Permit an elector, at a presidential election, by a single selection to vote for the candidates of a party for president, vice-president, and presidential electors.

(e) Permit an elector in a primary election to vote for the candidates in the party primary of the elector's choice. Except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, the electronic tabulating equipment must reject each ballot on which votes are cast for candidates of more than 1 political party. Electronic tabulating equipment that can detect that the elector has voted for candidates of more than 1 political party must be located at each polling place and programmed to reject a ballot containing that type of an error. If a choice on a ballot is rejected as provided in this subdivision, an elector must be given the opportunity to have that ballot considered a spoiled ballot and to vote another ballot.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(f) Prevent an elector from voting for the same person more than once for the same office.

(g) Reject a ballot on which no valid vote is cast. Electronic tabulating equipment must be programmed to reject a ballot on which no valid vote is cast.

(h) Be suitably designed for the purpose used; be durably constructed; and be designed to provide for safety, accuracy, and efficiency.

(i) Be designed to accommodate the needs of an elderly voter or a person with 1 or more disabilities.

(j) Record correctly and count accurately each vote properly cast.

(k) Provide an audit trail.

(l) Provide an acceptable method for an elector to vote for a person whose name does not appear on the ballot.

(m) Allow for accumulation of vote totals from the precincts in the jurisdiction. The accumulation software must meet specifications prescribed by the secretary of state and must be certified by the secretary of state as meeting these specifications.

(n) Be compatible with or include at least 1 voting device that is accessible for an individual with disabilities to vote in a manner that provides the same opportunity for access and participation, including secrecy and independence, as provided for other voters. The voting device must include nonvisual accessibility for the blind and visually impaired.

(2) Electronic tabulating equipment that counts votes at the precinct before the close of the polls must provide a method for rendering the equipment inoperable if vote totals are revealed before the close of the polls. Electronic tabulating equipment that tabulates ballots, including absentee ballots, at a central location must be programmed to reject a ballot if the choices recorded on an elector's ballot for an office or a question exceed the number that the elector is entitled to vote for on that office or question, if no valid choices are recorded on an elector's ballot, or if, in a primary election, votes are recorded for candidates of more than 1 political party.

(3) Each jurisdiction in this state conducting an election shall equip each polling place with at least 1 accessible voting device as required under subsection (1)(n).

168.795a Electronic voting system; approval by board of state canvassers; conditions; approval of improvement or change; inapplicability of subsection (1); intent to purchase statement; instruction in operation and use; disapproval.

Sec. 795a.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(1) An electronic voting system shall not be used in an election unless it is approved by the board of state canvassers as meeting the requirements of sections 794 and 795 and instructions regarding recounts of ballots cast on that electronic voting system that have been issued by the secretary of state, unless section 797c has been complied with, and unless it meets 1 of the following conditions:

(a) Is certified by an independent testing authority accredited by the national association of state election directors and by the board of state canvassers.

(b) In the absence of an accredited independent testing authority, is certified by the manufacturer of the voting system as meeting or exceeding the performance and test standards referenced in subdivision (a) in a manner prescribed by the board of state canvassers.

(2) The vendor or representative seeking approval of an electronic voting system shall do all of the following:

(a) Deposit with the secretary of state a nonrefundable application fee of $1,500.00 for a new voting system and a fee of $500.00 for an upgrade to any existing system.

(b) File with the secretary of state a list of all states in which the voting system has been approved for use. This list shall state how long the system has been used in the state and shall disclose any reports compiled by any state or local government concerning the performance of the system. The vendor shall remain responsible for filing this information on an ongoing basis.

(c) File with the secretary of state copies of all standard contracts and maintenance agreements used in connection with the sale of the voting system. All changes to standard contracts and maintenance agreements shall be filed with the secretary of state.

(d) Pay the cost for any field test required by the board of state canvassers.

(e) State the number of voters each component of the voting system can process per hour under each of the following circumstances:

(i) An election in which there are 10 or fewer items to be voted on the ballot by each voter.

(ii) An election in which the ballot consists of the number of items typically voted on at a presidential general election in this state.

(3) The board of state canvassers shall conduct a field test of all new voting systems as part of the certification process. The field test shall involve Michigan electors and election officials in simulated election day conditions. The test shall be designed to gauge voter reaction to the system, problems that voters have with the system, and the number of voting stations required for the efficient operation of an election based upon the vendor's statement provided under subsection (2)(e).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(4) The board of state canvassers shall approve an electronic voting system for use in this state only if it meets the conditions of subsection (1) except that in an emergency situation that threatens the ability of a county, city, or township to conduct a scheduled election, the board of state canvassers may approve a correction of software or firmware after testing the software or firmware performance.

(5) If an electronic voting system is approved for use before January 1, 1997 by the board of state canvassers, it may be used in an election. However, if the electronic voting system has its software or firmware improved or changed, the system shall comply with the requirements of subsection (1).

(6) After an electronic voting system is approved, an improvement or change in the electronic voting system shall be submitted to the board of state canvassers for approval pursuant to this section. This subsection does not apply to the technical capability of a general purpose computer, reader, or printer to electronically record and count votes.

(7) A county, city, township, village, or school district shall file "an intent to purchase statement" with the secretary of state 30 days before any purchase agreement is made to purchase a new voting system. The secretary of state shall provide all information concerning the operation of the voting system in Michigan or any other state to the local unit of government within 25 days after receiving the "intent to purchase statement".

(8) The secretary of state shall instruct local election officials regarding the operation and use of an approved electronic voting system in order to carry out the purposes of sections 794 to 799a and the rules promulgated pursuant to sections 794 to 799a.

(9) If the board of state canvassers determines that an electronic voting system that was approved under subsection (1) no longer meets the requirements described in that subsection, the board of state canvassers may disapprove that voting system. An electronic voting system that has been disapproved by the board of state canvassers under this subsection shall not be used in an election, unless it is reapproved by the board of state canvassers under subsection (1).

Argument 14

I. This Court should decline to review the merits of the questions. 14

A. The decision whether to answer certified questions is a matter of this Court's discretion. 15

B. The claims from the Plaintiffs' complaint are moot. 15

C. This point applies with equal force regarding the Eleventh Amendment immunity defense. 18

II. The Governor has properly exercised her authority under the Emergency Management Act. 20

A. The Governor properly declared a disaster and an emergency under the EMA. 20

B. Under the EMA's mandates, the Governor terminated her earlier declarations and issued new ones because there was a "disaster" and "emergency" in Michigan. 24

C. The Plaintiffs' construction of the EMA conflicts with the plain text of the EMA and is unworkable. 25

D. The requirement that the Governor issue a new declaration is a true limitation on her authority and does not create a circumvention of the Legislature's role in the EMA. 29

III. The Governor has properly exercised her authority under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act. 32

A. The EPGA's broad, but not unlimited, grant of authority supports the Governor's declared state of emergency. 32

B. The Plaintiffs' argument that the EPGA is "time-limited" is contradicted by the EPGA's plain language, and their effort to insert the EMA's 28-day limit conflicts with the EPGA's text. 34

C. The Plaintiffs' other arguments are also unavailing. 36

IV. The Emergency Powers of the Governor Act is constitutional and does not reflect an improper delegation by the Legislature and does not violate the Michigan Constitution's Separation of Powers. 37

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

A. The branches of government are not barred from working together, and sharing their authority is permitted so long as adequate guidance is given. 38

B. The Legislature's delegation of emergency powers, requiring "reasonable" action "necessary to protect life and property or to bring the emergency situation . . . under control," is constitutional. 40

C. The claims of the Plaintiffs that the Governor's authority is without limits under the EPGA, that she is exercising legislative authority, and that the structure of government has been compromised are mistaken. 44

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The federal district court for the Western District of Michigan certified two questions to this Court on June 16, 2020. This Court has jurisdiction over this case under MCR 7.308(A)(2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

STATEMENT OF QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The federal district court certified two questions to this Court: (1) whether, under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act, MCL § 10.31, et seq., or the Emergency Management Act, MCL § 30.401, et seq., Governor Whitmer has the authority after April 30, 2020 to issue or renew any executive orders related to the COVID-19 pandemic; and (2) whether the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act and/or the Emergency Management Act violates the Separation of Powers and/or the Non-Delegation Clauses of the Michigan Constitution.

The Plaintiffs separated the matter into four headings, and this brief shall do the same, except it shall first address the issue whether this Court should answer the certified question as an initial matter. The questions presented therefore are as follows:

I. By court rule, this Court has discretion on whether to answer a question that has been certified by a federal court. The executive orders at issue here – governing non-essential medical procedures – were rescinded more than 60 days ago. In light of the serious questions of mootness and sovereign immunity in the underlying case, should this Court resolve these state law claims as a certified question in these circumstances?

The Governor and Director answer: No.

Plaintiffs answer: Yes.

II. Under the Emergency Management Act, the Governor is duty-bound to declare a state of disaster or emergency where the circumstances, such as here, warrant it. By law, that declaration terminates after 28 days unless extended by "resolution of both houses of the legislature" but does not prohibit the Governor from issuing a new declaration. Where emergency and disaster conditions remained, did the Governor have the authority to issue a new declaration under the EMA?

The Governor and Director answer: Yes.

Plaintiffs answer: No.

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

III. Under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act, the Governor may declare an emergency where, as here, the circumstances warrant it. The Plaintiffs assert that that the Governor can only exercise the authority under the EPGA for "time limited" emergencies. Where the EPGA provides for no such predetermined time limitations on the duration of the emergency, did the Governor have the authority to issue a declaration under the EPGA during this ongoing emergency?

The Governor and Director answer: Yes.

Plaintiffs answer: No.

IV. The EPGA authorizes the Governor, in times of emergency, to promulgate "reasonable" orders that are "necessary" to protect life and property or to bring the emergency under control. Any legislative enactment must respect the Separation of Powers and corresponding constitutional principles of non-delegation. Where such standards provide guidance appropriate to the context of emergency response and are ubiquitous in the law, does Michigan law violate these constitutional principles?

The Governor and Director answer: No.

Plaintiffs answer: Yes.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

Constitutional Provisions

Const 1963, art 3, § 2 provides, in pertinent part:

> The powers of government are divided into three branches: legislative, executive and judicial. No person exercising powers of one branch shall exercise powers properly belonging to another branch except as expressly provided in this constitution.

Const 1963, art 4, § 1 provides, in pertinent part:

> Except to the extent limited or abrogated by article IV, section 6 or article V, section 2, the legislative power of the State of Michigan is vested in a senate and a house of representatives.

Const 1963, art 4, § 26 provides, in pertinent part:

No bill shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to and serving in each house.

Const 1963, art 4, § 33 provides, in pertinent part:

> Every bill passed by the legislature shall be presented to the governor before it becomes law, and the governor shall have 14 days measured in hours and minutes from the time of presentation in which to consider it. If he approves, he shall within that time sign and file it with the secretary of state and it shall become law. If he does not approve, and the legislature has within that time finally adjourned the session at which the bill was passed, it shall not become law. If he disapproves, and the legislature continues the session at which the bill was passed, he shall return it within such 14-day period with his objections, to the house in which it originated. That house shall enter such objections in full in its journal and reconsider the bill. If two-thirds of the members elected to and serving in that house pass the bill notwithstanding the objections of the governor, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house for reconsideration. The bill shall become law if passed by two-thirds of the members elected to and serving in that house.

After making the proclamation or declaration, the governor may promulgate reasonable orders, rules, and regulations as he or she considers necessary to protect life and property or to bring the emergency situation within the affected area under control. Those orders, rules, and regulations may include, but are not limited to, providing for the control of traffic, including public and private transportation, within the area or any section of the area; designation of specific zones within the area in which occupancy and use of buildings and ingress and egress of persons and vehicles may be prohibited or regulated; control of places of amusement and assembly and of persons on public streets and thoroughfares; establishment of a curfew; control of the sale, transportation, and use of alcoholic beverages and liquors; and control of the storage, use, and transportation of explosives or inflammable materials or liquids deemed to be dangerous to public safety.

(3) The governor may, with the approval of the state administrative board, enter into a reciprocal aid agreement or compact with another state, the federal government, or a neighboring state or province of a foreign country. A reciprocal aid agreement shall be limited to the furnishing or exchange of food, clothing, medicine, and other supplies; engineering services; emergency housing; police services; the services of the national guard when not mobilized for federal service or state defense force as authorized by the Michigan military act, Act No. 150 of the Public Acts of 1967, as amended, being sections 32.501 to 32.851 of the Michigan Compiled Laws, and subject to federal limitations on the crossing of national boundaries by organized military forces; health, medical, and related services; fire fighting, rescue, transportation, and construction services and equipment; personnel necessary to provide or conduct these services; and other necessary equipment, facilities, and services. (a) Suspend a regulatory statute, order, or rule prescribing the procedures for conduct of state business, when strict compliance with the statute, order, or rule would prevent, hinder, or delay necessary action in coping with the disaster or emergency. This power does not extend to the suspension of criminal process and procedures.

(b) Utilize the available resources of the state and its political subdivisions, and those of the federal government made available to the state, as are reasonably necessary to cope with the disaster or emergency.

(c) Transfer the direction, personnel, or functions of state departments, agencies, or units thereof for the purpose of performing or facilitating emergency management.

(d) Subject to appropriate compensation, as authorized by the legislature, commandeer or utilize private property necessary to cope with the disaster or emergency.

(2) Subsection (1) does not authorize the seizure, taking, or confiscation of lawfully possessed firearms or ammunition.

(3) A person who willfully disobeys or interferes with the implementation of a rule, order, or directive issued by the governor pursuant to this section is guilty of a misdemeanor.

MCL 30.417 provides, in pertinent part:

This act shall not be construed to do any of the following:

(a) Interfere with the course or conduct of a labor dispute. However, actions otherwise authorized by this act or other laws may be taken when necessary to forestall or mitigate imminent or existing danger to public health or safety.

(b) Interfere with the dissemination of news or comment on public affairs. However, any communications facility or organization, including radio and television stations, wire services, and newspapers, may be requested to transmit or print public service messages furnishing information or instructions in connection with a disaster or emergency.

(c) Affect the jurisdiction or responsibilities of law enforcement agencies, fire fighting forces, and units or personnel of the armed forces of the United States when on active duty. However, state, local, and interjurisdictional emergency operations plans shall place reliance upon the forces available for performance of functions related to disasters or emergencies.

(d) Limit, modify, or abridge the authority of the governor to proclaim a state of emergency pursuant to Act No. 302 of the Public Acts of 1945, being sections 10.31 to 10.33 of the Michigan Compiled Laws, or exercise any other powers vested in him or her under the state constitution of 1963, statutes, or common law of this state independent of, or in conjunction with, this act.

INTRODUCTION

The novel coronavirus menacing this State and country is a public health emergency. It has infected millions, killed hundreds of thousands, and continues to spread in our communities and across state lines. It is the gravest health crisis this country has faced in more than a century. In response, every Governor in the country declared a state of emergency. As of July 30, every state still had one.

The questions presented here ask whether Michigan's Governor had the authority to declare and reissue the states of emergency. They are basic ones, important to the principles of democracy, and the answers are critical to the protection of Michigan's residents as they face the most dangerous threat to their health in generations. Michigan has more than 60,000 cases of this disease, and more than 6,000 have died. Many more would have died had not the Governor taken immediate and effective action. The evidence is unmistakable that the threat remains imminent, as the country has seen on average more than 50,000 new cases and more than 1,000 deaths a day recently for the first time since early June.

But as this Court knows well, that a question may be important does not mean that it is well presented. The Plaintiffs as health providers filed a complaint in federal district court challenging temporary limitations on non-essential medical procedures, limitations that were lifted two months ago. The Plaintiffs' claims are thus moot. Furthermore, the state-law questions they present are barred from consideration in federal court by the Eleventh Amendment. The federal district court found sovereign immunity waived and mootness not an issue, but settled law indicates otherwise, and the immunity ruling is now pending on appeal.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The certification process is a good one, and the Governor and Director value it. But not in this case. Not with claims that should have been dismissed on two separate justiciability grounds. With serious issues of mootness and immunity pervading the case, this Court should refrain from taking up significant legal questions in what could be little more than an advisory opinion, and when other pending cases already raise these issues. The questions are too important to be answered in this setting.

If this Court disagrees, then the Governor and Director ask this Court to reject the statutory and constitutional challenges the Plaintiffs have raised and confirm the validity of the Governor's declarations of disaster and emergency under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act (EPGA) and the Emergency Management Act (EMA).

First, under the EMA, the Governor has the authority, in fact the duty, to declare a state of disaster and a state of emergency because that is exactly what Michigan is facing. The EMA's language, and the experience of the entire country, support the declaration. Yet, the legal issue is a narrow one: did the Governor properly issue a new declaration under the EMA after the Legislature refused to extend the original one? The answer is yes. The statutory text and common-sense lead to this conclusion. A plain reading of the EMA shows that it does not bar a new declaration, but instead compels one whenever the conditions on the ground warrant it, as one would expect from a grant of emergency powers designed to protect and assist the people of this State in times of crisis.

Second, the Governor has properly exercised her authority under the EPGA. The statutory language is clear. The pandemic presents an "emergency," one that is an immediate threat to the public. The EPGA is not, as the Plaintiffs contend, "time limited." And wisely so. The reality – as confirmed by the universal efforts to respond to this public health threat – is that an emergency can be ongoing. The EPGA duly reflects this and equips the Governor to respond accordingly. And the Plaintiffs' effort to read into the EPGA the 28-day limit from the EMA contradicts both the EPGA's and EMA's text in multiple respects, as confirmed most plainly in the EMA's express statement of scope in § 17 that it does not "[l]imit, modify, or abridge" the EPGA or any other statutory power conferred on the Governor.

Third, the EPGA does not violate the doctrines of Separation of Powers or of non-delegation. Many states have emergency statutes granting their governors authority to take the kind of actions that the Governor has taken here. Under the EPGA, those actions must be "reasonable" and "necessary," they must be directed at "protect[ing] life and property" or "bring[ing] the emergency situation . . . under control," and they may only be taken during a time of "public emergency" or "reasonable apprehension of immediate danger." These are real limitations. This is not a grant of unlimited executive power, as there is much that the Governor cannot do. The EPGA standards are not meaningless, just as the concepts of Equal Protection or Due Process are not meaningless. This Court has upheld similar frameworks, like "good cause" as a standard. The Legislature created reasonably precise standards for the Governor given the nature of the laws at issue here.

And the Governor is not acting under an improper delegation of legislative authority. She is executing emergency response, as authorized, constrained, and guided by law. The nature of governance, and of emergencies, requires it.

Throughout, democracy remains secure. The Legislature may override the Governor. Her decisions are subject to judicial review. And she must stand for reelection. That is how our democracy works. Legitimate governmental power is derived from the consent of the governed, which is a bedrock principle animating both our founding and the present day. In a representative democracy, it is expressed through executive action taken under valid, duly enacted statutes. Under both the EMA and EPGA, the Governor has done just that.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

The coronavirus spreads easily and can cause extended hospitalization.

The facts surrounding the COVID-19 pandemic are well-established. SARS-CoV-2 is similar to other coronaviruses (a large family of viruses that cause respiratory illnesses), but the strain is novel. There is no general or natural immunity built up in the population (meaning everyone is susceptible), no vaccine, and no known treatment to combat the virus itself (as opposed to treatment to mitigate its symptoms).

It is widely known and accepted that COVID-19, the disease that results from the virus, is highly contagious, spreading easily from person to person via "respiratory droplets."[1] Experts agree that being anywhere within six feet of an infected person puts you at a high risk of contracting the disease.[2] But even following that advice is not a sure-fire way to prevent infection. The respiratory droplets from an infected person can land on surfaces and be transferred many hours later to the eyes, mouth, or nose of others who touch the surface. Moreover, since many of those infected experience only mild symptoms, a person could spread the disease before he even realizes he is sick.[3] Most alarmingly, a person with COVID-19 could display no symptoms, but still spread the disease.[4]

The severity of the disease varies from person to person. While some exhibit only mild or no symptoms, nearly 19% of those infected—particularly those with other underlying medical conditions or advanced age—may require extended hospitalization or intensive care.[5]

The Governor declares states of emergency and disaster.

On March 10, 2020, in response to the growing pandemic in Michigan, Governor Whitmer declared a state of emergency and invoked the emergency powers available to the Governor under Michigan law—pursuant to her authority under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act (EPGA), the Emergency Management Act (EMA), and Article 5, § 1. (Executive Order 2020-4, Pls' App'x 83a.) Governor Whitmer was not alone. Every state in the country declared a similar state of emergency or disaster under their state laws during the month of March.[6]

With this authority invoked, the Governor began to issue substantive executive orders to stem the tide of COVID-19 infections. These included caps on large assemblages of people,[7] closures of premises of certain places of public accommodation,[8] and various iterations of the now-rescinded Stay Home, Stay Safe Order, which was frequently adjusted in light of the ever-changing challenges presented by this pandemic.[9]

In response to impending healthcare shortages, the Governor orders certain medical care facilities to implement plans postponing non-essential medical procedures.

Relevant here, on March 20, 2020, the Governor issued Executive Order 2020-17, entitled "Temporary restrictions on non-essential medical and dental procedures." (Pls' App'x 85a.) It required "all hospitals, freestanding surgical outpatient facilities, and dental facilities, and all state-operated outpatient facilities . . . must implement a plan to temporarily postpone . . . all non-essential procedures." (Pls' App'x 86a, ¶ 1.) As the order signaled in its preamble, this postponement-plan requirement was imposed "[t]o mitigate the spread of COVID-19, protect the public health, provide essential protections to Michiganders, and ensure the availability of health care resources," such as personal protective equipment, hospital beds, and other resources – which were in high and immediate demand as a result of this aggressively spreading pandemic, but in troublingly short supply. (Pls' App'x 85a.) The Governor's Stay Home orders correspondingly incorporated these postponement requirements into their provisions regarding authorized travel. See, e.g., EO 2020-77(7)(a)(6) (permitting individuals to travel for necessary medical care, including medical procedures that had not been postponed pursuant to EO 2020-17).

The Governor terminates the states of emergency and disaster under the EMA after the Legislature refuses to extend them.

On April 1, the Governor issued Executive Order 2020-33, which expanded upon the prior declaration of a state of emergency and, consistent with the virus's aggressive and destructive spread, declared states of emergency and disaster across the State of Michigan. (Pls' App'x 88a.) Under the EMA (though not the EPGA), the declarations must be terminated after 28 days absent resolution by both houses of the Legislature. MCL 30.403(3), (4). On April 7, the Michigan House and Senate approved an extension of the declaration until April 30, 2020.

Prior to April 30, the Governor again asked the Legislature to extend the states of disaster and emergency under the EMA pursuant to MCL 30.403(3) and (4), but the Legislature did not do so.

On April 30, 2020, then, the Governor issued a series of three executive orders. First, Executive Order 2020-66 (Pls' App'x 101a) declared the previously issued states of emergency and disaster under the EMA terminated as required by MCL 30.403(3) and (4) because the Legislature refused to extend them. Although noting that "the threat and danger posed to Michigan by the COVID-19 pandemic has by no means passed, and the disaster and emergency conditions it has created very much exist," the Governor recognized that the Legislature – "despite the clear and ongoing emergency and disaster conditions afflicting our state – has refused to extend [the states of emergency and disaster] beyond today." (Pls' App'x 104a.) Accordingly, she was required by the EMA's plain language to issue an order "terminat[ing]" the states of emergency and disaster. (Id.)

Because the COVID-19 crisis persisted, the EMA requires the Governor to declare a state of disaster and emergency, which she promptly does.

After terminating the prior declarations, the Governor again declared a state of emergency and a state of disaster under the EMA. (Executive Order 2020-68, Pls' App'x 109a.) Although the measures issued pursuant to her emergency authority had been working, "the need for them—like the unprecedented crisis posed by this global pandemic—is far from over." (Pls' App'x 110a.) COVID-19, she said, > remains present and pervasive in Michigan, and it stands ready to quickly undo our recent progress in slowing its spread. Indeed, while COVID-19 initially hit Southeast Michigan hardest, the disease is now increasing more quickly in other parts of the state. [Id.]

The Governor also found, "[t]he health, economic, and social harms of the COVID-19 pandemic thus remain widespread and severe, and they continue to constitute a statewide emergency and disaster." (Pls' App'x 111a.) Thus, she stated: "I now declare a state of emergency and a state of disaster across the State of Michigan under the Emergency Management Act." (Pls' App'x 112a.) And she ordered "[a]ll previous orders that rested on Executive Order 2020-33 now rest on this order." (Id.)

The Governor reaffirms her declaration of the state of emergency under the EPGA.

In the third Executive Order of the series, the Governor reaffirmed the state of emergency under the EPGA, ordering that "[a] state of emergency remains declared across the State of Michigan under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act of 1945." (Pls' App'x 105a, Executive Order 2020-67.) And like in Executive Order 2020-68, she ordered, "Executive Order 2020-33 is rescinded and replaced. All previous orders that rested on Executive Order 2020-33 now rest on this order." (Pls' App'x 107a–108a.)

The Governor rescinds the executive orders affecting the Plaintiffs, yet the Plaintiffs maintain suit in federal court.

On May 12, 2020, Plaintiffs filed suit in the District Court for the Western District of Michigan, raising challenges both to the Governor's authority to issue Executive Orders 2020-17 and 2020-77, and the propriety of those orders under the state and federal constitutions. Pertinent here, the Plaintiffs alleged that the Governor's emergency authority under both the EMA and the EPGA terminated on April 30 (Pls' App'x 23a,¶ 92), and also claimed that the EPGA and the EMA violate the Separation of Powers of the Michigan Constitution. (Pls' App'x 25a, ¶ 100–111.)

Nine days after the Plaintiffs filed their complaint, on May 21, 2020, the Governor issued Executive Order 2020-96, which rescinded Executive Order 2020-17 effective May 28, 2020 at 11:59 p.m, and also lifted its corresponding travel limitation. (Pls' App'x 125a.) As that order's preamble explained, the urgent concerns that had required the imposition of those requirements had shown sufficiently reliable signs of abatement: "our health-care capacity has improved with respect to personal protective equipment, available beds, personnel, ventilators, and necessary supplies." (Pls' App'x 114a.)

The federal district court certifies questions to this Court.

The district court sua sponte ordered briefing on whether the Court should certify the Plaintiffs' state law claims and held a hearing to consider the question. After the hearing, the State Defendants filed a joint motion for reconsideration raising the Eleventh Amendment as a bar to the district court's exercise of any jurisdiction over the state law claims, adding it to the other jurisdictional challenges to the court's consideration of these claims (such as mootness, qualified immunity, and abstention) that they had raised in prior filings and that were then also pending before the court.

Despite the rescission of the challenged restrictions, on June 16, 2020, the court determined the case was not moot (Pls' App'x 65a), and certified two questions to this Court:

> (1) Whether, under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act, MCL § 10.31, et seq., or the Emergency Management Act, MCL § 30.401, et seq., Governor Whitmer has the authority after April 30, 2020 to issue or renew any executive orders related to the COVID-19 pandemic; and
> (2) Whether the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act and/or the Emergency Management Act violates the Separation of Powers and/or the Non-Delegation Clauses of the Michigan Constitution. [Pls' App'x 60a.]

In a separate ruling issued that same day, the court also refused to dismiss the state law claims on the basis of sovereign immunity. As the court recognized, "[S]tate officials enjoy Eleventh Amendment immunity for all lawsuits that bring state-law claims against state officials in federal court, whether the claims are monetary or injunctive in nature." (Pls' App'x 54a.) Yet, the court found that the State Defendants waived their Eleventh Amendment immunity by not raising it in the principal briefs of their motions to dismiss or in initial response to the court's invitation to brief the propriety of certification to this Court. (Pls' App'x 58a.) The State Defendants have appealed that ruling; the case remains pending in the Sixth Circuit. (CA 6, Docket No. 20-1611.)

The virus rages on.

In recent months, as Michigan began to flatten the curve of the virus's spread, other States began voluntarily reopening. Several of those states have seen dramatic increases in cases over the past several weeks, stressing hospital capacity.[10] Texas, for example, saw its hospital bed usage explode in July, more than quintupling the number of COVID-19 patients requiring hospitalization since April and May.[11] Nearly every day of July, Florida saw over 9,000 confirmed infections and several days with over 100 deaths.[12] On the whole, the United States' daily case count registered new records throughout July, and the death toll to surpassed 150,000.[13]

Given the ongoing threat in Michigan throughout this spring and summer, the Governor has extended the states of emergency and disaster under the EPGA and EMA, which remain in place today.[14] And like all 50 States, the District of Columbia, and four territories, Michigan remains subject to major disaster declarations under federal law making federal funding available to combat the disease.[15] The Governor's actions under state law are also consistent with the nation as a whole – as of this filing, all 50 states (and several territories and the District of Columbia) have in place declared emergencies.[16]

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court's review of certified questions is discretionary. See MCR 7.303(B)(4).

In each of these executive orders, the Governor noted that Executive Orders 2020-67 and 2020-68 were subject to challenge in Michigan House of Representatives and Michigan Senate v Whitmer (see, e.g., Pls' App'x 140a), and that

> This order constitutes a state of emergency declaration under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act of 1945. Subject to the ongoing litigation, and the possibility that current rulings may be overturned or otherwise altered on appeal, and to the extent the governor may declare a state of emergency and a state of disaster under the Emergency Management Act of 1976 when emergency and disaster conditions exist yet the legislature has not granted an extension request, this order constitutes a state of emergency and state of disaster declaration under that act." ARGUMENT

I. This Court should decline to review the merits of the questions.

It is a basic point that the Michigan courts are the masters of Michigan law, and that this Court is the final authority in interpreting it. That is the reason that the certified-question process, see MCR 7.308(A), is a good one. But the process is also a discretionary one, and there are occasions in which this Court should refrain from answering questions certified to it. This is such an occasion.

The State Defendants opposed the federal district court's decision to certify these questions, noting that the executive orders challenged in the complaint were rescinded in May and that other cases are pending in Michigan courts raising the same questions, including the legislative suit challenging the Governor's authority, House & Senate v Governor, No. 353655. Moreover, the State Defendants invoked their immunity under the Eleventh Amendment. The federal district court rejected these arguments and pushed forward with its sua sponte certification request.

While mootness and Eleventh Amendment immunity are issues that will be ultimately be resolved by the federal courts, this Court should bear them in mind when deciding whether to exercise its discretion to use this request as the chosen vehicle to resolve core and fundamental questions of Michigan law. These questions are by no means unique to this case and settled law casts serious doubt over the federal district court's jurisdiction to consider the claims that present them. Indeed, one potentially dispositive challenge to that jurisdiction is presently pending before the Sixth Circuit. These are not the circumstances under which this Court's certification authority is well exercised.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

A. The decision whether to answer certified questions is a matter of this Court's discretion.

This Court has authority to entertain certified questions from the federal courts. See MCR 7.308(A)(2). The rules governing certification confer "discretion" on this Court as to whether it should grant review on certified questions. See MCR 7.303(B) (identifying as "discretionary review" the circumstance in which the Court may "(4) respond to a certified question (see MCR 7.308(A)").

But the rules do not require the Court to exercise this discretion to provide an answer even though it entertains briefing on the merits of the questions. This Court has declined to answer certified questions in the past from the federal courts. See, e.g., In re Certified Question from U.S. Dist. Court for E Dist of Michigan, 490 Mich 922 (2011); In re Certified Question from United States Court of Appeals for Ninth Circuit, 474 Mich 1228 (2006). It should do the same here.

B. The claims from the Plaintiffs' complaint are moot.

The Plaintiffs' complaint in federal court is predicated on two executive orders, EOs 2020-17 and 2020-77, which required certain medical facilities to adopt temporary postponement plans for non-essential medical procedures and imposed corresponding limitations on travel. The Plaintiffs have alleged they "are suffering immeasurable and irreparable harm from" the presence of these restrictions, and they seek relief from them. (Pls' App'x 5a, Complaint, ¶18.) But these executive orders, including the challenged restrictions, have been rescinded for over two months now, and the Plaintiffs, like all other medical providers and patients, may perform and undergo all manner of medical procedures in the proper conditions.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

Under U.S. Supreme Court case law, a case is moot "when the issues presented are no longer 'live' or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Chafin v Chafin, 568 US 165, 172 (2013). An "advisory opinion[] on abstract propositions of law" must be avoided. Hall v Beals, 396 US 45, 48 (1969) (per curiam). "If a dispute is not a proper case or controversy, the courts have no business deciding it, or expounding the law in the course of doing so." DaimlerChrysler Corp v Cuno, 547 US 332, 341 (2006).

As here, where an executive order places only "temporary restrictions" that "expire[ ] before . . . [a] [c]ourt [takes] any action," the action is rendered moot. See Trump v Hawaii, 138 S Ct 2392, 2404 (2018), citing Trump v IRAP, 138 S Ct 353 (2017), and Trump v Hawaii, 138 S Ct 377 (2017).

Months ago, the Governor rescinded EO 2020-17 and its accompanying travel limitation, the focus of the Plaintiffs' complaint. In response to this change in circumstances, the Plaintiffs – echoing the federal district court's rationale – now contend that they "are still subject to various restrictions on their provision of medical services under EO 2020-145." (Pls' Brief, p 45.) But this has all the earmarks of an amended complaint, raising new allegations wholly absent from their operative complaint.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

Indeed, their new contentions are inconsistent with that complaint, which expressly alleges that the Plaintiffs seek only the opportunity to reopen with precautionary safeguards in place. (Pls' App'x 5a, Complaint, ¶32, 36.)[17]

While the Plaintiffs' point is well taken that mootness is a question for the federal court, id. at 46,[18] that argument misses the point. This Court is the gatekeeper about when it shall answer certified questions, and it should consider whether it wishes to exercise this authority to answer questions raised from a complaint that challenges restrictions that had been lifted even before the certification request was made. Stated differently, should this Court answer a certified question that should be, and may very well ultimately be, deemed moot? The Governor and Director suggest that it should not.

[17] Similarly, the federal district court noted that, while the prior travel restriction for postponed procedures had been rescinded, other aspects of the Stay Home order still generally remained in place. But again, the Plaintiffs have not sought relief from any other such restrictions, and regardless, they too have been lifted for over two months now. See EO 2020-110 (lifting the prior "stay home" requirement).

[18] It is a matter for the federal court, and one that a Michigan federal court has already found to be meritorious. See Martinko v Whitmer, Case No. 20-cv-10931, Opinion and Order granting Defendant's motion to dismiss (ED Mich June 5, 2020) (dismissing challenges to rescinded executive orders as moot and barred by the Eleventh Amendment).

Other federal courts have likewise routinely deemed moot challenges to rescinded or expired COVID-19 emergency response measures. See, e.g., Cameron v. Beshear, No. 3:20-CV-00023-GFVT, 2020 WL 2573463, at *2 (E.D. Ky. May 21, 2020); Krach v. Holcomb, No. 1:20-CV-184-HAB, 2020 WL 2197855, at *2 (N.D. Ind. May 6, 2020); *Spell v. C. This point applies with equal force regarding the Eleventh Amendment immunity defense.

The State Defendants also argued that the federal court should have dismissed the state law claims there because they were barred from consideration in that forum by the Eleventh Amendment. As the U.S. Supreme Court has explained, "[t]he ultimate guarantee of the Eleventh Amendment is that non-consenting States may not be sued by private individuals in federal court." Bd of Trustees of the Univ of Alabama v Garrett, 531 US 356, 363 (2001). That applies here where the Plaintiffs to seek to enjoin state officials on the basis of state law. See Pennhurst State Sch & Hosp v Halderman, 465 US 89, 121 (1984). The federal district court did not determine that Eleventh Amendment immunity was inapplicable, but instead held that the State Defendants waived the argument and had acceded to federal jurisdiction.

This ruling is erroneous. Waiver requires a clear intent; litigation conduct does not betray that intent unless it reflects an inconsistent and unfair invocation of immunity "to achieve litigation advantages," such as by acting to remove a case to federal court, and then later seeking dismissal from that court under the Eleventh Amendment. Lapides v Bd of Regents of Univ Sys of Georgia, 535 US 613, 620 (2002). Correspondingly, the Sixth Circuit has only found such a waiver where the State waited until after a final adverse judgment to raise it. Ku v State of Tennessee, 322 F3d 431, 435 (CA 6, 2003); see also Barachkov v Davis, 580 F Appx 288, 300 (CA 6, 2014) (rejecting the notion that immunity had been waived because it had not been raised in an opening summary judgment brief).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The State Defendants' conduct reflected no such intent or gamesmanship. This case is still young; at the time of the certification request, the parties had filed briefs regarding the Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction that was withdrawn before decision, and the State Defendants had filed opening briefs on their motions to dismiss. Throughout these preliminary filings, the State Defendants had urged the federal district court not to exercise jurisdiction over the Plaintiffs' state law claims, and the Defendants added their claim under the Eleventh Amendment to this mix as soon as they realized it was missing. These are not the circumstances by which a State affirmatively waives its right to sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment, and the State Defendants have taken an appeal to correct this threshold error of law.[19] If the State Defendants prevail on appeal, the district court's act of certifying the questions was outside of its jurisdiction, as the State Defendants were not properly before it.

The questions at issue are legitimate ones in the abstract, and important to all of Michigan's residents. But that does not make them well presented here. The Plaintiffs lack live claims, and the federal district court lacks jurisdiction. These are no small things; they are significant jurisdictional concerns, and they counsel against this Court granting the instant certification request and providing guidance not ultimately needed for the disposition of this case.

II. The Governor has properly exercised her authority under the Emergency Management Act.

The EMA requires the Governor to issue a declaration of disaster and one of emergency where the circumstances warrant it. On April 30, 2020, Michigan was facing a disaster and an emergency. Indeed, it still is. Nonetheless, despite the ongoing emergency and disaster, the Plaintiffs claim that, as of April 30, the Governor cannot issue a new declaration under the EMA because the Legislature refused to extend her prior declaration. But the EMA does not say that. It does not create that limit. To the contrary, it mandates the opposite: if emergency or disaster conditions exist, the Governor is duty-bound by the EMA to issue a declaration and activate that statute's emergency-response powers and resources to protect this State and its residents. That corresponds with the plain text of the EMA, and it makes eminent practical sense.

A. The Governor properly declared a disaster and an emergency under the EMA.

First enacted in 1976, the EMA sets forth several independent, related obligations regarding state and local responses to emergencies and disasters in the State. For the Governor, the EMA grants her the important responsibility to "cop[e] with dangers to this state or the people of this state presented by a disaster or emergency." MCL 30.403(1). This broad charge places the Governor at the forefront of emergency and disaster responsiveness and serves as a baseline for the latitude given to her by the Legislature in times of crisis. To that end, she possesses the authority to "issue executive orders, proclamations, and directives having the force and effect of law." MCL 30.403(2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

This broad statement of authority is confirmed throughout the EMA. For example, MCL 30.414(3) makes clear that the EMA "shall not be construed to restrain the governor from exercising on his own initiative any of the powers set forth in this act." The Act also emphasizes it is intended to supplement the Governor's preexisting emergency response authority, stating that it does not "[l]imit, modify, or abridge" the authority of the Governor to proclaim a state of emergency under the EPGA "or exercise any other powers vested in him or her under the state constitution of 1963, statutes, or common law of the state independent of, or in conjunction with, this act." MCL 30.417(d).[20]

Consistent with the EMA's broad authority, the Governor has the obligation to declare states of disaster and emergency if the pertinent conditions exist. She "shall, by executive order or proclamation, declare a state of disaster if he or she finds a disaster has occurred or the threat of a disaster exists." MCL 30.403(3) (emphasis added). Similarly, she "shall, by executive order or proclamation, declare a state of emergency if he or she finds that an emergency has occurred or that the threat of an emergency exists." MCL 30.403(4) (emphasis added). These provisions mirror one another.

Upon that order or proclamation, the law grants the Governor authority to marshal both state and federal resources to adequately deal with the danger facing the State.[21] The executive order or proclamation also authorizes the Governor to exercise additional broad powers, including "[s]uspending a regulatory statute, order, or rule prescribing the procedures for conduct of state business" in certain circumstances, "[c]ontrol[ling] ingress and egress to and from a stricken or threatened area," and "[d]irect[ing] all other actions which are necessary and appropriate under the circumstances." MCL 30.405(1)(a), (g), (j). And the EMA expressly defines "state of disaster" and "state of emergency" independently from "disaster" and "emergency." "[D]isaster" and "emergency" refer to conditions that the Governor may find to exist in the State.[22]

Distinctly, "state of emergency" and "state of disaster" – both of which were declared in Executive Order 2020-68 – are defined as types of executive orders or proclamations that the Governor must issue upon finding certain conditions exist. " '[S]tate of disaster [or emergency]' means an executive order or proclamation that activates the disaster [or emergency] response and recovery aspects of the state, local, and interjurisdictional emergency operations plans applicable to the counties or municipalities affected." MCL 30.402(p), (q) (emphasis added.)

[21] See, e.g., MCL 30.404(1) (deployment of forces and distribution of supplies); MCL 30.404(2) (federal assistance); MCL 30.408(1) (cooperation among state agencies).

[22] The EMA defines both "disaster" and "emergency."

Under MCL 30.402(e), " '[d]isaster' means an occurrence or threat of widespread or severe damage, injury, or loss of life or property resulting from a natural or human-made cause, including, but not limited to, . . . epidemic . . . "

"Emergency" is defined as "any occasion or instance in which the governor determines state assistance is needed to supplement local efforts and capabilities to save lives, protect property and the public health and safety, or to lessen or avert the threat of a catastrophe in any part of the state." MCL 30.402(h).

In short, "state of emergency" and "state of disaster" are species of executive orders that activate certain response efforts and resource and may – indeed, must – be issued when "emergency" or "disaster" conditions are found to exist. This plainly stated distinction is important to properly understanding the interplay between the Governor's termination of her prior declarations and her issuance of a new declaration.

As the EMA makes clear, "if [the Governor] finds that an emergency [or disaster] has occurred or that the threat of an emergency [or disaster] exists," the Governor "shall" declare so. MCL 30.403(3), (4). Under longstanding Michigan precedent, "the word 'shall' is ordinarily construed in its imperative sense, excluding the idea of discretion." State Bd of Ed v Houghton Lake Cmty Sch, 430 Mich 658, 670 (1988); see also Sauder v Dist Bd of Sch Dist No 10, 271 Mich 413, 418 (1935) (a statute that uses "shall" "is imperative" when "the public are interested"). The Governor thus has a duty to declare a state of emergency or disaster if one is occurring.

And just as the Governor is required to declare a state of disaster or emergency, i.e., issue such an executive order, if the conditions merit it, she also has the duty to "terminate" that order if the conditions cease or the Legislature refuses to extend it by resolution. MCL 30.403(3), (4). That termination, however, expressly extends only to the order itself. What does not terminate under the EMA is the Governor's duty to issue declarations, and activate the statute's emergency response mechanism, whenever the conditions on the ground warrant it.

B. Under the EMA's mandates, the Governor terminated her earlier declarations and issued new ones because there was a "disaster" and "emergency" in Michigan.

On April 30, 2020, the Legislature declined to extend the Governor's executive orders declaring states of emergency and disaster under the EMA, despite the fact that the State continued to face emergency and disaster conditions as a result of the pandemic. On April 30, then, in accordance with the mandate that the Governor "terminate" the state of emergency and disaster declarations under the EMA absent legislative extension, MCL 30.403(3), (4), the Governor so terminated. (Pls' App'x 101a, EO 2020-66.)

But the conditions on the ground remained dire. On that day alone, more than 100 Michigan residents died from the virus and over 1,100 were confirmed infected.[23] Thus, the Governor rightly found "that an emergency [or disaster] has occurred or that the threat of an emergency [or disaster] exists," triggering her duty under the EMA to declare as such. MCL 30.403(3), (4); (Pls' App'x 109a, EO 2020-68.) In carrying out her statutory duty, the Governor acknowledged that the measures implemented based on her authority under the EMA and the EPGA "have been effective, but the need for them – like the unprecedented crisis posed by this global pandemic – is far from over." (Id. at 110a.) She emphasized the continued lack of treatment for the virus, the ease of transmission, and the "lack [of] adequate means to fully test for it and trace its spread." (Id.)

Ultimately, the Governor found that "the threat and danger posed to Michigan by the COVID-19 pandemic has by no means passed, and the disaster and emergency conditions it has created still very much exist." (Id.) Given her findings and the immediate danger that this pandemic continued to present to Michigan residents, the Governor was obligated to issue the declaration.

C. The Plaintiffs' construction of the EMA conflicts with the plain text of the EMA and is unworkable.

The text of the EMA is unambiguous. It requires the Governor to terminate the order declaring a disaster or emergency declaration after 28 days if the Legislature does not extend the order's duration. See MCL 30.403(3), (4) ("After 28 days, the governor shall issue an executive order or proclamation declaring the state of disaster [emergency] terminated, unless a request by the governor for an extension of the state of disaster for a specific number of days is approved by resolution of both houses of the legislature."). But the EMA is silent about the termination of one order foreclosing the issuance of a subsequent one. Nothing in the EMA bars that action.

This silence, coupled with the EMA's ongoing emergency-response mandate to the Governor, compels only one result. The EMA does not impose a limit on the Governor to declare a disaster or emergency anew if the circumstances warrant it. This Court does not have the authority to engraft limitations where the Legislature has not created them.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

Rather, the Court applies the statute as written where the statutory language is clear. Hamed v Wayne Co, 490 Mich 1, 8 (2011). No construction is permitted. Id.[24] This is a principle with a long history. See, e.g., Voorhies v Judge of Recorder's Court, 220 Mich 155, 157–158 (1922) (the judiciary does not have the authority "to add a condition or restriction thereto found in the earlier statute and left out of the later one . . . . [t]he contention made, if allowed, would go beyond the construction of the statute, and ingraft upon its provisions a restriction which the Legislature might have added but left out.").

The Plaintiffs' construction of the EMA as barring a "new" declaration only creates questions that are unanswered in the statute:

- Does an intensification of the original threat constitute grounds for a new declaration?
- What part of the danger has to arise from the original threat and how much has to arise from the changed conditions?
- How much time has to pass before it becomes a "new" emergency, and would it bind a subsequent Governor?

The EMA provides no answer, and no guidance to a court as to how it might derive one. And unsurprisingly so. These are questions the EMA never intended to be asked, let alone to control whether the Governor can discharge her duty.

---

[24] For that reason, any reliance on legislative analyses is unwarranted, see Pls' Brief, p 12 (citing House Fiscal Agency Bill Analysis, H.B. 5496, Pls' App'x 48a–49a) where the statute's language is unambiguous. Aroma Wines & Equip, Inc v Columbian Distribution Servs, Inc, 497 Mich 337, 355 n 50 (2015) ("[T]he language of the [statute] is unambiguous and, as a result, the examination of legislative history 'of any form' is not proper . . . ."). Even if the statute were ambiguous, this Court has questioned the interpretive value of this kind of legislative history, indicating that it is entitled to "little judicial consideration." Id. And the Fiscal Analysis offered by the Plaintiffs here does not address the question of what, if any, limitation the EMA imposes on issuing a new declaration.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

These are not just academic questions. The pandemic at issue here illustrates the point. The end of July has seen a substantial increase in cases in Michigan, with more new cases here than the state has encountered since the early weeks of the pandemic. And other parts of the country, notably in the south and west, have seen a greater number of new cases and deaths than at any previous time of this crisis.

According to the Plaintiffs' construction, even if the Legislature now wished for the Governor to issue a new declaration after an initial refusal to extend the duration, that action would be barred because the EMA does not state that the Governor may issue a new declaration. That is unworkable. It turns the authorization upside down. The Governor is not directed to issue a declaration only when she has not previously done so, but is obliged when the circumstances warrant it. The universal experience of this country demonstrates that this coronavirus presents an immediate threat to our residents. The Michigan Governor stands with virtually every other executive official in this country.

If, in enacting the EMA, the Legislature had intended to try to retain ultimate control over the Governor's issuance of declarations, it could have written the statute accordingly. The Plaintiffs' list of other state laws investing their executives with emergency powers, (see Pls' Br, pp 40–41, n 10), is filled with statutes that purport to do this. (See id., listing 16 state statutes that enable the Legislature to terminate an emergency, such as Ark. Code Ann. § 12-75-107(c)(1) ("The General Assembly by concurrent resolution may terminate a state of disaster emergency at any time.").) But the Legislature here did not attempt to reserve this authority. Instead, it gave the Governor an ongoing duty to declare a state of emergency or disaster whenever one exists, with a periodic obligation to terminate, re-evaluate, and re-declare if warranted. And so the Governor has done.

This understanding is consistent with the principles of proper delegation. The Legislature may delegate authority to the Governor provided it prescribes standards for guidance that are reasonably precise in light of the subject matter of the delegation. But once the Legislature does so, it may not retain what amounts to a legislative veto. See Blank v Dep't of Corrections, 462 Mich 103, 113 (2000) (Kelly, J., lead opinion). The suggestion here is that the Legislature may delegate certain actions, but then effectively retain the "right to approve or disapprove" the Governor's later exercise of that authority.

The concept of an improper legislative veto was outlined by the U.S. Supreme Court in INS v Chadha, 462 US 919, 959 (1983). In Blank, this Court applied Chadha in considering the constitutionality of a 1977 amendment to the Administrative Procedures Act, which required an administrative agency to "obtain the approval of a joint committee of the Legislature or the Legislature itself before enacting new administrative rules." 462 Mich at 108 (Kelly, J.). The lead opinion framed the issue as "whether the Legislature, upon delegating [rulemaking authority to an executive-branch agency], may retain the right to approve or disapprove rules proposed by [the agency]." Id. at 113. It reasoned that the Legislature's approval or disapproval of an executive-agency rule is "inherently legislative" and "subject to the enactment and presentment requirements." Id. at 115–116. See also Wolf v Scarnati, ___ Pa ___ 2020 WL 3567269, *19 (July 1, 2020) ("[B]ecause the General Assembly intended that H.R. 836 terminate the Governor's declaration of disaster emergency without the necessity of presenting that resolution to the Governor for his approval or veto, we hold, pursuant to our power . . . that H.R. 836 is a legal nullity . . . .").

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

So too here. On April 30, the Governor had the power and duty to terminate her declared states of emergency and disaster under the EMA, and to declare new ones if emergency or disaster conditions existed. They existed, so she declared. The Legislature could bar her from doing this, but only through legislative enactment. See Blank, 462 Mich at 119 ("When the Legislature engages in 'legislative action' it must do so by enacting legislation," and "the Legislature cannot circumvent the enactment and presentment requirements."). There was no such enactment, and no bar to the Governor re-declaring as authorized and required under the EMA.

D. The requirement that the Governor issue a new declaration is a true limitation on her authority and does not create a circumvention of the Legislature's role in the EMA.

The Plaintiffs contend that this plain reading renders the Legislature's authority to extend the duration of the disaster or emergency "meaningless," as it constitutes a "end run" around the Legislature's role in helping the State address a disaster or an emergency. (Pls' Br, pp 13, 14). The Governor and Director disagree.

The requirement that the Governor must issue a new declaration under the EMA, rather than extend the duration of a prior one, gives rise to three distinct limitations on her authority.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

First, while a Governor's factual finding of an emergency is entitled to great deference, it is not beyond judicial review. Straus v Governor, 459 Mich 526, 533 (1999), quoting People ex rel Johnson v Coffey, 237 Mich 591, 602 (1927) ("The Governor holds an exalted office. To him, and to him alone, a sovereign people has committed the power and the right to determine the facts in the proceeding before us. His decision of disputed question of fact is final. His finding of fact, if it has evidence to support it, is conclusive on this court.") (emphasis added). Accordingly, any declaration under the EMA is subject to judicial review on the question whether the definition of "disaster" or "emergency," MCL 30.402(e), (h), was satisfied. The fact that the Governor is forced to issue a new declaration has a direct effect on when any review would occur. Namely, it would ensure that the review is of the emergency not when declared on Day 1, but as it is on the day of the re-declaration which would occur at least 28 days later. While the threat here has not dissipated, in most circumstances, the threat will become less immediate as time passes, making it more difficult to support the finding of an emergency if challenged.

Second, any declaration under the EMA may be subject to a legislative override, Const 1963, art 4, § 33 (two-thirds vote), by repeal or amending of the EMA to bar the Governor from issuing a new declaration. Cf. Dodak v State Admin Bd, 441 Mich 547, 558 (1993) ("If the Legislature disagrees with [the executive's view of the law], it can work a political resolution of the disagreement by expressly repealing [it]"). This is the way the legislative process works.

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

Third, the Governor is accountable not only to the co-equal branches of government, but also directly to the People, before whom she must stand for reelection. With a re-declaration comes renewed public scrutiny of the Governor's actions. This crisis well illustrates the point. It has been, among other things, one of the most significant political events in generations in Michigan, placing the Governor's executive actions front and center. The fact that the Legislature has chosen not to extend her original declaration beyond 28 days under the EMA has real consequences to the political process.

Finally, the Plaintiffs raise the specter of an "indefinite" emergency by the series of re-declarations by the Governor of the same emergency after the 28 days have transpired. (Pls' Br, p 12.). But that overlooks the plain language of the EMA, which expressly defines what "emergency" or "disaster" conditions must exist for the Governor to issue a declaration, and the fact that any such declaration may be subject to judicial challenge or legislative override at any time. She is not above the law, nothing that has occurred in the course of this pandemic suggests otherwise. Indeed, it is no coincidence that Michigan is one of apparently 50 states in which there is still currently a declared emergency. See n 16 above. Michigan is not an outlier. The Governor has not acted unreasonably in redeclaring a disaster and an emergency under the EMA on April 30, 2020 in response to the coronavirus. It continues to present a threat of widespread loss of life and it is essential that the Governor take action to save lives and protect the public health of Michigan's residents – just as the EMA charges her to do. MCL 30.402(e) & (h), MCL 30.403.

III. The Governor has properly exercised her authority under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act.

The EPGA invests the Governor with extraordinary – but not unlimited – power to respond to emergencies. The states have conferred emergency powers on their Governors. This is an essential aspect of good governance. On the basis of her emergency powers, the Michigan Governor – like Governors elsewhere – declared an emergency. And like every other state, Michigan continues to face an emergency.

The arguments of the plaintiffs otherwise are unavailing. Nothing in the EPGA creates a time limitation. Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, there can be an ongoing emergency, as confirmed by this very pandemic, which in some parts of the country has only now become its most dangerous. The Plaintiffs' effort to incorporate the 28-day durational limit from the EMA finds no support in the EPGA and is expressly forbidden by the EMA. And while the Legislature has created two sources of emergency power, this does not make the EMA mere surplusage. The EMA provides for additional structure for emergency responses, but has its own restrictions, while the EPGA may be narrower in other respects. Finally, the Governor has not conceded that the emergency is over.

A. The EPGA's broad, but not unlimited, grant of authority supports the Governor's declared state of emergency.

The EPGA, enacted in 1945, provides the Governor with broad powers "[d]uring times of great public crisis, disaster, rioting, catastrophe, or similar public emergency within the state." MCL 10.31(1). This Court has termed this grant of power to be "extraordinary." Walsh v City of River Rouge, 385 Mich 623, 640 (1971).

The Governor "may proclaim a state of emergency" during these times, or upon "reasonable apprehension of immediate danger" of such an emergency, "when public safety is imperiled." Id. Upon the proclamation of a state of emergency, "the governor may promulgate reasonable orders, rules, and regulations as he or she considers necessary to protect life and property or to bring the emergency situation within the affected area under control." Id. Any "orders, rules, and regulations promulgated . . . are effective from the date and in the manner prescribed in the orders, rules, and regulations." MCL 10.31(2). And they "may be amended, modified, or rescinded . . . by the governor" and "shall cease to be in effect upon declaration by the governor that the emergency no longer exists." Id. As a whole, the EPGA must "be broadly construed to effectuate [its] purpose," which is to "invest the governor with sufficiently broad power of action in the exercise of the police power of the state to provide adequate control over persons and conditions during such periods of impending or actual public crisis or disaster." MCL 10.32.

As of April 30, the State faced such a "time[ ] of great public crisis," "disaster," or "similar public emergency." MCL 10.31(1). Indeed, in April, the virus killed more Michigan residents than heart disease and cancer combined.[25] As of this filing, over 6,000 have died here, and over 150,000 have died in the United States.[26] And, as Michigan and other states have seen, this threat remains real.

These facts form the basis of the Governor's finding of a state of emergency under the EPGA, and well justify the "reasonable" and "necessary" measures she has taken "to protect life" throughout the State or bring this pandemic "under control." MCL 10.31(1). The fact that the State of Michigan remains in a state of emergency is because the State and its residents still face an emergency.

B. The Plaintiffs' argument that the EPGA is "time-limited" is contradicted by the EPGA's plain language, and their effort to insert the EMA's 28-day limit conflicts with the EPGA's text.

The Plaintiffs' overarching error is their misunderstanding of the meaning and nature of an emergency. Nothing in the EPGA – or in the reality of an emergency – provides that an emergency can only last a certain amount of time. Thus, they misread the EPGA itself when they say that emergency is "time limited," when they argue that emergency refers to a "limited period of time," and when they seek to limit the EPGA with the EMA's 28-day limit. (Pls' Br, pp 17, 19–22, 26.)

The EPGA explains that the Governor may proclaim a state of emergency "[d]uring times of great public crisis, disaster, rioting, catastrophe," or "reasonable apprehension of immediate danger of a public emergency of that kind, when public safety is imperiled." MCL 10.31(1). Nothing in these terms suggest that an "immediate danger" will only be short-lived. Indeed, it is a matter of common sense that a threat does not automatically become less "immediate" and "dangerous" simply because some predetermined amount of time has elapsed. This pandemic bears out that proposition because it continues to present that very kind of threat. The experience of other states confirms this, and it explains why – as of July 30, 2020 – every state apparently is in a state of emergency. See n 16 above.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The ordinary dictionary-definitions of "emergency" make the same point. Take the Plaintiffs' definition from the 1942 (2d ed.) Webster's New International dictionary: "[a]n unforeseen combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action; also, less properly, exigency." (Pls' Brief, pp 18, 20). This is a good definition. The pandemic was unforeseen. The point, however, is that it remains an emergency in that the danger it presents is ongoing, and thus it remains an "immediate" threat. The Plaintiffs' error is their focus on the timing of whether the pandemic is still "unforeseen." (Id. at 20). But the immediacy of the danger is the key. Five minutes after a fire engulfs a city, it is no longer "unforeseen," but the idea that the dangers it presents have passed misunderstands the meaning of emergency, and likewise the meaning of the EPGA. The language from § 2, MCL 10.32 ("broadly construed" and "legislative intent to invest the governor with sufficiently broad power of action"), provides further support, but frankly the Court need not even consider it because the EPGA's text is clear.

Sensing perhaps that this may not be dispositive, the Plaintiffs further assert that the EMA's 28-day limit may be imported into the EPGA. (Pls' Brief, pp 26–29). But again, the plain text of the EMA forecloses this argument.

In the section of the EMA governing the construction of the Act, the EMA expressly states that its terms do not "[l]imit, modify, or abridge the authority of the governor to proclaim a state of emergency" under the EPGA. MCL 30.417(d). In response, the Plaintiffs emphasize that the EMA's time limits may be imported without limiting the Governor's power of proclaiming an emergency. (Pls' Br, p 28).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

While that argument is strained, this Court need not even examine the point because the rest of § 17(d) answers the question clearly when it further states that it does not limit, modify, or abridge the "exercise any other powers vested in him or her under the state constitution of 1963, statutes, or common law of this state independent of, or in conjunction with, this act." MCL 30.417(d). The EPGA is a statute. Thus, the Plaintiffs' effort to constrain the powers of the Governor under the EPGA by its reading of the EMA is expressly rejected.

C. The Plaintiffs' other arguments are also unavailing.

The Plaintiffs' other arguments fare no better. Reading the EMA according to its plain text does not render it mere surplusage, and the Governor has not concluded that the emergency has resolved. Her declarations remain in place.

As an initial matter, the Legislature clearly intended the grant of authority to the Governor under the EMA be in addition to, and separate from, the authority it conferred under the EPGA. Section 17(d)'s text is clear on that point.

That does not mean that the scope of each ends up being the same in all instances, or that one Act is subsumed by the other. The Acts are distinct, with each providing their own terms and processes for invoking and exercising their respective grants of authority.[27]

[27] For instance, the EMA contains express limitations (see, e.g., MCL 30.417(a)-(c), regarding interference with labor disputes, news media, and jurisdiction of law enforcement agencies) and authorizations (see, e.g., MCL 30.411, regarding the provision of civil immunity), while the EPGA does not include these express limitations and authorizations.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

And the Plaintiffs overlook the comprehensive infrastructure of actors and resources that is provided by the EMA, which includes coordination with the federal government and other states, MCL 30.404, a state emergency management apparatus, MCL 30.407, 407a, 408, the coordination with local authorities, MCL 30.409, 410, 411, 413, and contingency funds, MCL 30. 418, 419. But ultimately, Section 17(d) of the EMA makes clear that the EPGA operates separately and is not limited by the EMA.

Moreover, the Plaintiffs argue the Governor terminated this emergency on April 30, 2020 in EO 2020-66. (Pls' Brief, pp 24–28). But the Governor did not terminate the emergency – she terminated the emergency declaration. As explained above, there is no question that the facts supporting the emergency endured. Also, this elides the point that she declared an emergency under the EPGA. The real issue is whether there was and is an emergency – yes, there was and is.

IV. The Emergency Powers of the Governor Act is constitutional and does not reflect an improper delegation by the Legislature and does not violate the Michigan Constitution's Separation of Powers.

Just as in the vast majority of states, the Legislature here has properly delegated emergency response authority to the Governor to take reasonable and necessary action to protect Michigan residents in times of crisis. The Plaintiffs argue that the EPGA is an improper delegation and violates the separation of powers because it lacks sufficient standards to guide the Governor. Not so.

A. The branches of government are not barred from working together, and sharing their authority is permitted so long as adequate guidance is given.

The Michigan Constitution provides for the separation of powers among the three branches of state government. In particular, the Constitution provides:

> The powers of government are divided into three branches: legislative, executive and judicial. No person exercising powers of one branch shall exercise powers properly belonging to another branch. [Const 1963, art 3, § 1.]

But Michigan courts have never interpreted the separation of powers doctrine as meaning there can never be any overlapping of functions between branches. See Soap & Detergent Ass'n v Natural Resources Comm, 415 Mich 728, 752 (1982) ("while art. 3, § 2, of the constitution provides for strict separation of power, this has not been interpreted to mean that the branches must be kept wholly separate."), citing People v Piasecki, 333 Mich 122, 146 (1952); In re Southard, 298 Mich 75, 83 (1941).

The separation of powers doctrine "ha[s] led to the constitutional discipline that is described as the nondelegation doctrine." Taylor v Smithkline Beecham Corp, 468 Mich 1, 8 (2003). While the legislative power – the power "to make, alter, and amend laws" – sits with the Legislature, Harsha v City of Detroit, 261 Mich 586, 590 (1933), both the U.S. Supreme Court and this Court "ha[ve] recognized that the separation of powers principle, and the nondelegation doctrine in particular, do not prevent Congress [or our Legislature] from obtaining the assistance of the coordinate Branches." Taylor, 468 Mich at 8 (internal quotes omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The Michigan doctrine of non-delegation has been expressed in terms of a "standards test." Westervelt v Natural Resources Comm, 402 Mich 412, 437 (1978). Under this test, "legislation which contains a delegation of power to . . . [another branch] must contain either explicitly or by reference . . . standards prescribed for guidance." Id. at 437–438. While it is clear that "a legislative body may not delegate to another its lawmaking powers," that does not prevent an official from being "clothed with the authority to say when the law shall operate . . . provided, however, that the standards prescribed for guidance are as reasonably precise as the subject-matter requires or permits." Osius v City of St Clair Shores, 344 Mich 693, 698 (1956). And the statute carries a presumption of constitutionality; it "must be construed in such a way as to render it valid." Westervelt, 402 Mich at 438.

In Michigan, like the federal system, successful nondelegation claims are exceedingly rare. See Taylor, 468 Mich at 9 ("In the federal courts these improper delegation challenges to the power of federal regulatory agencies have been uniformly unsuccessful.")

While the doctrinal language in the state and federal systems are nominally different, this Court has treated them as twins. See Taylor, 468 Mich at 7–9, 10 ("[W]e have rejected [nondelegation] claims on a basis similar to the federally developed rationale."). The first and last year that the U.S. Supreme Court struck down one statute on that ground was 1935, in two cases. See Panama Refining Co v Ryan, 293 US 388 (1935); ALA Schechter Poultry Corp v United States, 295 US 495 (1935). None has been successful since.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

In Panama Refining, there was simply no purported guidance whatsoever to guide the President's discretion. 293 US at 430 ("[T]he Congress has declared no policy, has established no standard, has laid down no rule. There is no requirement, no definition of circumstances and conditions in which the transportation is to be allowed or prohibited."); see also Mistretta v United States, 488 US 361, 373 n 7 (1989) (describing its conclusions in Panama Refining and ALA Schecter "that Congress had failed to articulate any policy or standard") (emphasis added). Such is not the case here.

B. The Legislature's delegation of emergency powers, requiring "reasonable" action "necessary to protect life and property or to bring the emergency situation . . . under control," is constitutional.

As noted, this case presents no exception to the general rule. The standards set forth in the EPGA are as reasonably precise as the subject matter requires or permits. See Westervelt, 402 Mich at 439. The Legislature did not grant the Governor a blank check. The EPGA provides the Governor the authority, after declaring a state of emergency, to "promulgate reasonable orders, rules, and regulations as he or she considers necessary to protect life and property or to bring the emergency situation within the affected area under control." MCL 10.31(1) (emphasis added). Thus, there are several limits on the Governor's authority. Her orders may come only upon a "public emergency" and the orders must not only be reasonable and necessary, they must be directed at protection of "life and property" or "bring[ing] the emergency situation . . . under control" in the "affected area." Id.

Michigan courts have consistently upheld similar language as sufficiently precise to avoid any nondelegation problem. In Klammer v Department of Transportation, 141 Mich App 253, 262 (1985), the Court of Appeals considered that the word "necessary" was a sufficiently precise standard for the retirement board in considering the length of time a certain state worker could continue after reaching the mandatory retirement age. See also GF Redmond & Co v Michigan Sec Comm'n, 222 Mich 1, 7 (1923) ("[T]he term 'good cause' for revocation of the license, relating, as it does, to the conduct of the business regulated by the policy declared in the statute, is sufficiently definite."); Smith v Behrendt, 278 Mich 91, 97–98 (1936) (holding that allowing the executive to grant oversize loads for freeway travel in "special cases" was a proper delegation of legislative authority).

These examples suffice to reveal that the courts are hesitant to invalidate laws on the basis of an allegedly improper delegation where the Legislature provides even general direction to the executive branch.

The Plaintiffs rely on two Michigan cases to support their claim, see Pls' Brief, pp 31–32, both of which are distinguishable. In Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Michigan v Milliken, this Court determined that "the power delegated to the Insurance Commissioner" regarding approval of actuarial risk factors "is completely open ended." 422 Mich 1, 53 (1985). And for good reason. The commissioner's authority was not guided at all. Instead, the commissioner was granted complete authority to " 'approve' or 'disapprove' the proposed risk factors; the basis of the evaluation is not addressed." Id. Blue Cross is a poor comparison.

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The second is Oshtemo Charter Twp v Kalamazoo Cty Rd Comm'n, 302 Mich App 574 (2013). The case likewise provides no help to the Plaintiffs, and if anything, supports the constitutionality of the EPGA. As the Oshtemo court explained, "[t]his case is extremely similar to Blue Cross & Blue Shield" in that the statute at issue provided for a "complete lack of standards," not even "in the form of a generalized statement of public policy." Id. at 591, 592. The Court of Appeals did not ultimately reach the merits of the improper delegation claim, but noted that if the "road commission's decision to 'approve or void' an ordinance were not limited to voiding those ordinances that are unreasonable, the complete lack of standards contained in the statute would very likely render it a constitutionally deficient delegation of authority." Id. at 591 (emphasis added). That is, a reasonableness standard would cure any constitutional concern. This analysis supports the EPGA's constitutionality.

And of course, the standards imposed on the Governor's authority under the EPGA are not read in a vacuum, the "subject matter" of the delegation guides how strictly or narrowly drawn the standards must be. Westervelt, 402 Mich at 439. The context of a developing "crisis, disaster, rioting, catastrophe, or similar public emergency," MCL 10.31(1), counsels granting substantial leeway to the decisionmaker. Public emergencies are not static events, nor do they unfold predictably. Response to such crises warrant – indeed require – nimbleness coupled with judgment to meet the needs of the moment. There is no specific one-size-fits-all response to a complex and ongoing emergency.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

The subject matter here requires the broadest level of leeway permissible under the nondelegation doctrine. If "the management of natural resources is a difficult and complex task," DNR v Seaman, 396 Mich 299, 311 (1976), the response to a rapidly developing and ever-changing public health crisis is even more so.

Likewise, under a substantially similar standard, the U.S. Supreme Court has "over and over upheld even very broad delegations." Gundy v United States, 139 S Ct 2116, 2129 (2019). Gundy highlighted the consistency with which the Court had granted deference to Congress, mentioning cases upholding Congressional delegations to regulate in the "public interest," or for agencies to "set 'fair and equitable' prices and 'just and reasonable' rates." Id. at 2129. Recently, the Court turned away a delegation challenge to an agency's charge to promulgate air quality standards that are "requisite to protect the public health." Id., citing Whitman v Am Trucking Associations, 531 US 457, 473 (2001). Thus, the "practical understanding" that we live in an "increasingly complex society, replete with ever changing and more technical problems," drives the hesitance to upend laws that "delegate power under broad general directives." Mistretta v United States, 488 US 361, 372 (1989). That principle holds here, and with even greater force.

The EPGA provides the Governor substantial discretion, but limits her ability to act upon a finding of an emergency, and even then the Governor may only exercise her discretion to issue "reasonable" orders "necessary" to protect "life and property" or to bring the emergency "under control." MCL 10.31(1). These guideposts are more than sufficient to pass constitutional muster.

C. The claims of the Plaintiffs that the Governor's authority is without limits under the EPGA, that she is exercising legislative authority, and that the structure of government has been compromised are mistaken.

Perhaps the most critical flaw in the Plaintiffs' position is their failure to recognize that the limits of "reasonable" and "necessary" are not just sufficient constitutionally, but they constitute true limits. The Governor has not become a law unto herself, nor has the Legislature abdicated its "core function to the executive branch" (Pls' Br p 30) by providing the Governor with a set of tools commensurate to the task of emergency response.

As noted, any declaration of an "emergency" in the first instance, or the failure to rescind that emergency because the conditions have subsided, are subject to judicial review. The claim that "they are no limit at all" (p 37) is not well taken.

Michigan jurisprudence is filled with general standards that have real meaning, that control and limit the actions of government, and ensure the liberty of all Americans. Such general principles as Equal Protection and Due Process are the bedrock of liberty in the U.S. Constitution, to say nothing of the Necessary and Proper Clause. Standards like reasonableness and necessity are not meaningless phrases, or just eloquent statements that have no jurisprudential significance. They are true standards of law that guide and restrain conduct and that enable meaningful challenge and review of that conduct. And they are the standards that the Michigan Governor has taken care to follow in responding to this emergency under the EPGA.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 8/6/2020 4:23:24 PM

Plaintiffs warn of unending "unilateral rule" by the executive (Pls' Brief, p 36), but of course nothing in the EPGA's delegation of authority purports to provide for that. The EPGA requires at all times the presence of a public emergency or reasonable apprehension of immediate danger, which is subject to judicial review. Plaintiffs fail to explain where the Constitution demands the Legislature impose some predetermined, categorical time limit on the duration of emergencies.

Nor do the Plaintiffs explain how the presence of any such time limit might bear on whether the Governor is exercising legislative authority. Indeed, while Plaintiffs stress that "[t]he Michigan Constitution cannot simply be put on the shelf for several years" (Pls' Brief, p 36), how would the Constitution no longer be offended if only placed on the shelf for 28 days? In short, the Plaintiffs' argument proves too much.[28] The Legislature has not shelved the Constitution or forfeited its institutional role by enabling executive response to emergencies through the EPGA. The states have generally conferred such emergency powers on their executive, and Michigan stands among them.

In a similar vein, even though included in the certified questions, it is telling that the Plaintiffs do not challenge the constitutionality of the EMA on this ground, see Pls' Brief, pp 29–44, where the standards under which the Governor may act ultimately rest on same general principles that guide the EPGA.

[28] As a result, the Plaintiffs' citation of more than 30 states with clauses that enable state legislatures to terminate their emergencies, see Pls' Br, pp 40–41, n 10, really only confirms that the Governor is exercising executive authority. The Legislature cannot alienate its legislative authority for even a single day.

Indeed, under § 3 of the EMA, the Governor may "issue executive orders, proclamations, and directives having the force and effect of law to implement this act." MCL 30.403(2). This general statement is given form in § 5, that provide for suspension of regulatory statutes where "necessary" to cope with the disaster or emergency, MCL 30.405(1)(a), and for the provision of state resources where "reasonably necessary" to cope with the disaster or emergency, MCL 30.405(1)(b). Yes, the same language, or the same kinds of standards, as the EPGA.

On this point, the essential fact is that the executive authority the Governor is wielding is just that, executive authority. She is not enacting laws. None of the Governors are. She is using the tools the Legislature gave her to carry out the task it entrusted to her.

It is a little like the Michigan statute that enables police officers to issue lawful orders in traffic, which if violated, are misdemeanors. See MCL 257.602.[29] In that setting, it is necessary for the police to exercise executive authority. They are not acting like a legislature, and they are not creating laws. But the police officer's orders have the force and effect of law. The same is true here, but on a broader scale.

And, as noted, many states have granted their governors similarly broad authority to meet the moment of an emergency circumstance. See the following examples from a range of states:

[29] MCL 257.602 provides: "A person shall not refuse to comply with a lawful order or direction of a police officer when that officer, for public interest and safety, is guiding, directing, controlling, or regulating traffic on the highways of this state."

[30] According to Health Security, Vol 17, No. 2, 2019, "An Assessment of State Laws Providing Gubernatorial Authority to Remove Legal Barriers to Emergency Response," p 3, Michigan's emergency powers laws are like to the majority of states:

> A majority of states have broad statutes enabling the governor to temporarily change statutes or regulations during a declared emergency. In total, 42 states explicitly permit the governor to change statutes or regulations during an emergency. In 35 states, governors are explicitly permitted to suspend or amend both statutes and regulations that interfere with an efficient, effective response to an emergency to an emergency. In 7 states (listed) governors are permitted to amend regulations during a declared emergency but are not explicitly authorized to modify or remove statutory requirements. Yet the Plaintiffs have cited no cases in which a court has apparently stepped in to nullify these grants.[31]

It is easy to understand why this is so. The Governor is best equipped to address the exigencies of an emergency, not the Legislature. While legislative deliberation ordinarily is valuable, a fast-moving, contagious disease requires an agile and flexible response, not Robert's Rules of Order.

The Legislature knows that to meet the moment, proper delegation to the executive is the wisest course, which is why it granted the authorities it did to the Governor. This pandemic has only confirmed the prescience of that judgment.

And throughout, Michigan's democracy has remained fully intact and vibrant. Of course, some officials and residents have disagreed with some actions of the Governor. That is what happens in a democracy. And the avenues that democracy duly provides to voice and act upon such disagreement have been, and continue to be, open. The Legislature has at all times remained free and empowered to take action as to this pandemic through lawmaking, including through the override of the Governor as that body may see fit. The Governor's actions are likewise subject to challenge by private parties and to review by the courts, and she will, in the end, have to stand for reelection.

[31] Insofar as the Plaintiffs rely on the decision in Wisconsin, Wisconsin Legislature v Palm, 942 NW2d 900 (WI 2020), that case is distinguishable. See id. at 914 ("[T]he Governor's emergency powers are not challenged by the Legislature, and [the agency official] does not rely on the Governor's emergency powers. Constitutional law has generally permitted the Governor to respond to emergencies without the need for legislative approval.").

While many things about this pandemic have been "sobering" (Pls' Brief, p 39), the proper operation of these democratic processes is not among them. Through the EPGA and the EMA, the Legislature duly delegated to the Governor the critical task and necessary tools of emergency response. This was a constitutional choice, and as the past few months have vividly illustrated, a wise and necessary one. There is no basis for this Court to disrupt it here.

This Court should decline to review these questions, but if it does, this Court should affirm the Governor's exercise of her authority under both the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act and the Emergency Management Act.

The appeal involves a question that a provision of the Constitution, a statute, rule or regulation, or other State governmental action is invalid.

SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORITY OF GOVERNOR AND DIRECTOR OF DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Consistent with MCR 7.312(I), Governor Gretchen Whitmer and Director of Department of Health and Human Services Robert Gordon provide supplemental authority and state the following:

1. After oral argument, the Court ordered supplemental briefing on two questions. The parties filed supplemental briefing on September 16, 2020.

2. In preparing supplemental briefing, counsel for the Governor and Director worked with the State Archives to locate executive orders or proclamations declaring a state of emergency under the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act.

3. After the Archives' staff concluded their time intensive search, counsel have identified three more that were not available before September 16, 2020:

[8] Consistent with providing this Court the most accurate information, the signing counsel identified two matters needing correction/clarification from the supplemental filing for the Governor and Director from September 16, 2020.

First, the citation to "MCL 333.5501" in note 7, page 14, should be MCL 333.5101, and the references on page 16 to "MCL 30.303, and MCL 30.305," should be to MCL 30.403 and MCL 30.405.

Second, the subject of the first two sentences on page 14 is the emergency laws MCL 333.2251 and 333.2253, and should include the following additions in bold to make that clear: "Nothing in these provisions (MCL 333.2251 and .2253), or elsewhere in the Public Health Code, purports to limit the Governor's authority under the EPGA, or deprive the Governor of the ability to act in response to epidemics that imperil the public safety. The Governor is not identified, and these emergency laws make no reference to the EPGA (or the EMA), let alone claim to displace or otherwise limit the Governor's authority under either of those statutes." The signing counsel regrets the need for these corrections/clarifications. See attached corrected pages 14 and 16.

Argument 3

I. The Emergency Powers of the Governor Act applies in the context of public health generally and to an epidemic such as COVID-19 when it imperils the safety of Michigan's residents. 3

A. The COVID-19 pandemic is a public emergency under the EPGA that imperils the safety of Michigan's residents by threatening their lives. 3

B. The fact that the EPGA does not list "epidemic" – in contrast to the Emergency Management Act – does not limit the general terms or the authority of the Governor under the EPGA. 6

C. Nothing in the public health laws of 1945 or the laws present today impinges on the Legislature's broad grant of authority to the Governor to combat emergencies under the EPGA. 9

II. An epidemic in general, and COVID-19 in particular, implicates public safety as that term is used and understood in the EPGA. 17

A. A legal term of art is one that has a settled, definite, and well-known meaning at common law. 17

B. "Public safety" has no discrete, settled legal meaning in the context of the police power, which does not demarcate a line between "public safety" and "public health." 18

C. At the time of the EPGA's enactment, it was well understood that epidemics endanger public safety as well as public health. 20

D. Prior invocations of the EPGA confirms that it covers more than simply law enforcement response to civil unrest. 24

STATEMENT OF QUESTIONS PRESENTED

On September 9, 2020, this Court requested additional briefing on two questions:

I. Whether the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act (EPGA), MCL 10.31 et seq., applies in the context of public health generally or to an epidemic such as COVID-19 in particular.

The Governor and Director answer: Yes, and yes.

Plaintiffs answer: No, and no.

II. Whether "public safety," as that term is used in the EPGA, is a term of ordinary meaning or has developed a specialized legal meaning as an object of the state's police power, and whether "public safety" encompasses "public health" events such as epidemics.

The Governor and Director answer: Ordinary meaning, and yes.

Plaintiffs answer: Term of art, and no.

INTRODUCTION

The language of the Emergency Powers of the Governor Act (EPGA) is unambiguous. It empowers the Governor to protect life and property when the public safety is imperiled by a "great public crisis, disaster, rioting, catastrophe, or similar public emergency within the state, or reasonable apprehension of immediate danger of a public emergency of that kind." MCL 10.31(1). This pandemic presents such an emergency, by imperiling the safety of Michigan's residents. In their briefing, the Plaintiffs here have conceded as much. There are two points here in response to this Court's questions.

First, the EPGA encompasses public health crises generally when they jeopardize public safety, and the COVID-19 pandemic presents exactly this sort of crisis. The public's safety is threatened by a widespread, highly contagious, as-yet untreatable virus that has killed thousands. That is why every state, like Michigan, faces a state of emergency.[1] And it is why the Plaintiffs in this case, like the plaintiffs in many other cases, have never questioned that this pandemic can create, and has created, the emergency circumstances contemplated under the EPGA. Nothing in the EMA or in the public health laws of 1945 or today undermines this conclusion, or purports to preclude the Governor from responding to public health crises that imperil public safety, such as COVID-19.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

Second, the term "public safety" was not used as a term of art in the EPGA, and it should be given its ordinary meaning and application. And as the Plaintiffs have conceded, the "public safety" is imperiled by the widespread risk of death and significant harm posed by a pandemic such as COVID-19. Michigan courts, the U.S. Supreme Court, and contemporary ordinary usage all recognize that the dangers of epidemics can, and do, affect "public safety," and the use of the EPGA by Governors in the past comports with this understanding of the statute's scope by applying to circumstances beyond quelling a riot. The deadly epidemic of COVID-19 imperils public safety, and the Governor has properly invoked the EPGA to protect the people of this State from it.

ARGUMENT

I. The Emergency Powers of the Governor Act applies in the context of public health generally and to an epidemic such as COVID-19 when it imperils the safety of Michigan's residents.

The text of the EPGA is unambiguous and requires no further construction. It empowers the Governor – during an emergency – to take action to protect the public in Michigan when their safety is imperiled. The COVID-19 pandemic presents such an emergency. The Plaintiffs have expressly recognized as much in their briefing. Moreover, the fact that the Emergency Management Act expressly references an "epidemic" does not foreclose the EPGA from addressing it as well. As the EMA made clear, the Legislature intended the two emergency acts would act side-by-side, and the EMA would not work to limit the EPGA. And the fact that the public health laws, both in 1945 and now, conferred authority on other executive agencies to respond to communicable diseases or epidemics does not limit the Governor's authority under the EPGA.

A. The COVID-19 pandemic is a public emergency under the EPGA that imperils the safety of Michigan's residents by threatening their lives.

This Court's canons of constructions place the statutory text – and its plain meaning – at the center of understanding the intent of the Legislature in enacting a law. Legion are the cases that provide that a statute must be applied as written when unambiguous and that no construction is permitted. See, e.g., McQueer v Perfect Fence Co, 502 Mich 276, 286 (2018) ("The primary rule of statutory construction is that, where the statutory language is clear and unambiguous, the statute must be applied as written"). Such is the case here.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

As this brief more fully presents below, the phrase "when public safety is imperiled" (MCL 10.31(1)) includes the circumstance in which a pandemic jeopardizes the lives of Michigan residents, as reflected in both Michigan law and federal law. See In People ex rel Hill v Bd of Ed of City of Lansing, 224 Mich 388, 393 (1923) ("of paramount necessity, a community has the right to protect itself against an epidemic of disease which threatens the safety of its members.") (emphasis added); Jacobson v Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 197 US 11, 37 (1905) ("It seems to the court that an affirmative answer to these questions would practically strip the legislative department of its function to care for the public health and the public safety when endangered by epidemics of disease.") (emphasis added). See Issue II, below.

The Plaintiffs have expressly agreed on this point that the Governor acted appropriately in addressing the COVID-19 pandemic under the EPGA. In fact, the Plaintiffs stated this point twice. Initially, the concession appeared in the introduction. See Plaintiffs' Reply, p 1 ("Plaintiffs acknowledge that for 51 days following the Governor's first declaration of a state of emergency based on COVID-19, the Governor acted within the bounds of the enabling statutes and the Michigan Constitution. This is no small concession.") (emphasis added). And then the Plaintiffs reiterated the point in the body of the reply brief in addressing the authority of the Governor under the EPGA. See id. at 3 ("The Governor acted within the limits of her authority for 51 days.").

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

In the usual case, this agreement would operate as a waiver and would foreclose the ability of the Plaintiffs to argue otherwise. See, e.g., People v Carter, 462 Mich 206, 215 (2000). And indeed, that conclusion would seem to hold even more strongly in this certified-question context, where this Court is acting in a very specific capacity, i.e., to guide a federal court's adjudication of the particular questions of state law that have been put before this Court.[2] Regardless, it is telling that the Plaintiffs have understood the EPGA to cover epidemics such as COVID-19.

---

[2] As noted in earlier briefing, this Court should decline to answer these questions, given the significant immunity and justiciability issues. And, on this point, at argument the undersigned counsel was asked whether this Court's answers to certified questions created binding precedent in the state courts, see MCR 7.308(A)(2), and he responded yes, but that he had not examined the issue. After further research, the answer to that question is more nuanced. Strictly speaking, the answer to the question does not appear to bind the requesting court. See, e.g., In re Certified Questions from U.S. Court of Appeals for Sixth Circuit, 472 Mich 1225, 1229 (2005) (Young, J., concurring) ("We have absolutely no authority to force a federal court, sister state court, or tribal court to adopt our answer to a certified question.") But the federal courts are bound to the construction of state law set by that state's highest court. Montana v Wyoming, 563 US 368, 377 n 5 (2011) ("The highest court of each State, of course, remains 'the final arbiter of what is state law.' "), quoting West v American Telephone & Telegraph Co, 311 US 223, 236 (1940). See also Grover by Grover v Eli Lilly and Co, 33 F3d 716, 719 (CA 6, 1994) ("When a state supreme court accepts a certified question, it voluntarily undertakes a substantial burden and its resolution of the issue must not be disregarded."). And Michigan's appellate courts have apparently treated this Court's decisions in certified questions as binding, as exampled by a case in which that court did not follow it as precedent because the specific proposition was not essential to the resolution of the issue. See Churella v Pioneer State Mut Ins Co, 258 Mich App 260, 270 (2003) ("In addition, the Supreme Court stated that mutual insurance company policyholders 'would be in a better position to assert a property interest in the surplus....' In re Certified Question (Fun 'N Sun RV, Inc. v Michigan), 447 Mich 765, 791 n 34 (1994), after remand 223 Mich App 542 (1997). However, this statement was not essential to the determination of that case and, thus, is not binding precedent.") (emphasis added).

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

The same basic point is true of the Legislature in their amicus brief, see p 22, which argues the same in substance as their brief in the Court of Appeals in their own case, because they do not contest that the EPGA could cover local public health emergencies. See House of Rep v Governor, ___ Mich App ___ (2020), slip op, p 15 ("Although it is the Legislature's position that the EPGA does not encompass statewide epidemics, it did not contend in its brief on appeal that the EPGA did not cover localized or regional epidemics or epidemics in general. Indeed, as noted earlier, the Legislature conceded that the parties agreed that the two acts 'cover the same subject matter.' This is akin to a waiver of the issue.") (emphasis added). The fact that the two key parties who have been litigating the breadth of the EPGA have in substance agreed that the EPGA governs this pandemic as a public health emergency strongly supports the natural, plain reading of this statute.

B. The fact that the EPGA does not list "epidemic" – in contrast to the Emergency Management Act – does not limit the general terms or the authority of the Governor under the EPGA.

Unlike the EPGA that uses general terms to encompass its breadth, the EMA provides a specific definition of "disaster" that expressly includes an "epidemic":

> (e) "Disaster" means an occurrence or threat of widespread or severe damage, injury, or loss of life or property resulting from a natural or human-made cause, including, but not limited to, fire, flood, snowstorm, ice storm, tornado, windstorm, wave action, oil spill, water contamination, utility failure, hazardous peacetime radiological incident, major transportation accident, hazardous materials incident, epidemic, air contamination, blight, drought, infestation, explosion, or hostile military action or paramilitary action, or similar occurrences resulting from terrorist activities, riots, or civil disorders. [MCL 30.402(e) (emphasis added).]

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

At oral argument, there was a suggestion that the inclusion of the term "epidemic" here meant that the EPGA did not also encompass a public crisis that resulted from an epidemic. Judge Tukel had reached that conclusion in his dissent in the Legislature's suit. See House of Rep, ___ Mich App ___, slip op p 9 (dissenting).[3]

This argument suffers from at least two fatal flaws.

First, the EMA makes clear that it does not "limit, abridge, or modify" the EPGA. MCL 30.417(d). As noted above, the ordinary understanding of a "public emergency" that imperils the safety of the public by threatening their lives would include an "epidemic of disease" such as COVID-19. See Hill, 224 Mich at 393. As previously briefed by the Governor and the Director of the Department of Health and Human Services in their principal filing here, § 17(d) ensures that the EMA does not limit the Governor's ability to proclaim an emergency under the EPGA:

>
> Limit, modify, or abridge the authority of the governor to proclaim a state of emergency pursuant to Act No. 302 of the Public Acts of 1945, being sections 10.31 to 10.33 of the Michigan Compiled Laws, or exercise any other powers vested in him or her under the state constitution of 1963, statutes, or common law of this state independent of, or in conjunction with, this act.

[3] Judge Tukel's dissent reasoned as follows:

> Thus, applying the rules of construction in a straightforward manner, it is readily apparent that the inclusion of the word "epidemic" in the definition of disaster under the EMA means that the Legislature did not understand any of the EPGA's triggering events to include an epidemic; if the EPGA applied to an epidemic, there would have been no reason to include it in the EMA definition, as it would be a redundancy, contrary to how we construe statutes, because the governor can impose all of the same relief under the EPGA as may be imposed under the EMA. [Slip op, p 9.]

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

Thus, any effort to narrow the construction of the EPGA by the EMA is expressly foreclosed by the plain terms of § 17(d), whether examining the Governor's power to proclaim a state of emergency or the Governor's powers more generally. In short, nothing in the EMA constrains the Governor's powers, including under the EPGA.

Second, insofar as this argument is advanced as one of mere statutory construction, such a claim is unavailing. Both the EMA and the EPGA cover "disaster[s]," with the EMA expressly defining the term but the EPGA not. If the EMA's definition is treated as some sort of limitation on the EPGA, such that whatever is included in the former must be excluded from the latter, there would be nothing left to the EPGA. The definition of "disaster" in the EMA encompasses "an occurrence or threat of widespread or severe damage, injury, or loss of life or property resulting from a natural or human-made cause." MCL 30.402(e). If all such circumstances were excised from the scope of the EPGA, what threats to public safety would be left? Indeed, even the one kind of event that appears to be indisputably within the EPGA's scope – rioting – is expressly included in the EMA:

> (e) "Disaster" means an occurrence or threat of widespread or severe damage, injury, or loss of life or property resulting from a natural or human-made cause, including, but not limited to . . . hostile military action or paramilitary action, or similar occurrences resulting from terrorist activities, riots, or civil disorders. [MCL 30.402(e) (emphasis added).][4]

Under this view, even the "riot statute" does not address riots – only the EMA does.

[4] As noted at oral argument, the EMA was passed in 1976 with an express exclusion of riots: "Riots and other civil disorders are not within the meaning of this term unless they directly result from and are aggravating element of the disaster." See Public Act 390 of 1976. The current language was passed in 1990. See PA 50 of 1990.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

There is no sound reason to construe the EMA and the EPGA in this fashion. Rather, this Court should give the Legislature's words their plain meaning. The Legislature made clear that the EMA was designed to be, among other things, an additional power, not one that displaced or cabined the Governor's other powers.

Canons of statutory construction are tools to divine legislative meaning, not obscure it. Here, the Legislature, in enacting the EMA, made certain that the reader would not be left to guess at its intentions, and it included § 17(d) to ensure that a reviewing court would not attempt the very thing attempted here – to use the EMA to limit the Governor's other authorities, including under the EPGA. It is no wonder that the Plaintiffs and the Legislative plaintiffs in House of Representatives did not advance this argument previously.

C. Nothing in the public health laws of 1945 or the laws present today impinges on the Legislature's broad grant of authority to the Governor to combat emergencies under the EPGA.

The laws governing public health in Michigan, in 1945 or today, do nothing to limit the Governor's authority under the EPGA. The power of the executive branch of government is vested in the Governor. Mich Const, art 5, § 1. And, unless otherwise provided by the state constitution, the Governor supervises each principal department to ensure that "the laws be faithfully executed." Art 5, § 7. In some circumstances, the state constitution further provides the Governor with "concurrent legislative authority" over the executive branch. See House Speaker v Governor, 443 Mich 560, 579 (1993) (evaluating the Governor's power "to reorganize the executive branch" under art 5, § 2).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

In enacting laws pertaining to the public health, the Legislature has, at times, conferred authority on various executive departments and agencies to respond to communicable diseases or epidemics, including in emergency circumstances. But none of these grants of authority has purported to limit the substantial authority that the Governor has over the executive branch in general, or the specific authority that the Governor has under the EPGA to respond to emergencies "when the public safety is imperiled." MCL 10.31(1). For the authority conferred by the Legislature on public health authorities, these laws did not purport to be exclusive of any powers conferred by law on the Governor. This is true of the laws from both 1945 and now.

For the public health laws that were in place when the EPGA was passed, those laws – much as the current ones – provided authority to the state board of health (later replaced by the state health commissioner) to respond to communicable diseases:

> Whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the state board of health, that cholera, diphtheria, or other dangerous communicable disease exists in any foreign country, neighboring state, or locality within this state whereby the public health is imperiled, and it shall be further shown that immigrants, passengers or other persons seeking to enter this state, or to travel from place to place within this state, are coming from any locality where such dangerous communicable disease exists, the state board of health shall be authorized to establish a system of quarantine for the state of Michigan and the governor shall have authority to order the state militia to any section of the state on request of the state board of health to enforce such quarantine.
> [Public Act 230 of 1885; CL 1948, 329.1 (emphasis added).][5]

[5] In Public Act 146 of 1919, the powers and duties to the state public health board were transferred to the state health commissioner. See CL 1948, 325.4.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

In the same vein, the Legislature provided to the state health commissioner the ability to bar public meetings to prevent the spread of epidemics, extending to the entire state if "countersigned" by the Governor:

> In case of an epidemic of any infectious or dangerous communicable disease within this state or any community thereof, the state health commissioner may, if he deem it necessary to protect the public health, forbid the holding of public meetings of any nature whatsoever except church services which may be restricted as to number in attendance at 1 time, in said community, or may limit the right to hold such meetings in his discretion. Such action shall not be taken, however, without the consent and approval of the advisory council of health. Any order made pursuant to this section shall be published in such manner as the advisory council of health may direct and shall become effective at a date specified in said order. Such order shall be signed by the health commissioner and if applicable to the entire state be countersigned by the governor.
> [Public Act 146 of 1919; CL 1948, 325.9 (emphasis added).]

These provisions enabled the state board of health (commissioner) to respond to "dangerous communicable disease[s]" by "establish[ing] a system of quarantine," or by "forbid[ding] the holding of public meetings." CL 1948, 329.1, 325.9. See also Rock v Carney, 216 Mich 280, 295 (1921) ("There is power to protect the public health; it is vested by law in public health boards to be exercised through reasonable rules and regulations duly promulgated").[6]

Also, the same substantive provision regarding communicable diseases appears in the 1929 compiled laws. See CL 1929, Ch 114, 6600, sec. 1. It is worth noting in passing that this Court rejected an improper delegation challenge to this law. See Hurst v Warner, 102 Mich 238, 246 (1894) ("the statute is constitutional"). The health code in CL 1948 was outlined by Department in Chapter 325, 325.1 to 325.307, and by communicable disease in Chapter 329, 329.1 to 329.405.

[6] The public health laws also invested the local public health officials a role in addressing communicable diseases. See CL 1948, 327.1 et seq. See also Keho v Bd of Auditors of Bay Cty, 235 Mich 163, 166 (1926).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

These statutory provisions extant in 1945 did not, however, bar the Governor from taking action in response to such diseases. To the contrary, the decision making regarding its enforcement under these provisions was expressly reserved to the Governor. And there is nothing to suggest that, by expressly reserving a role for the Governor in the state board's (commissioner's) exercise of these laws, the Legislature intended that to be the only role the Governor could or would play in protecting the public from dangerous communicable diseases.

Indeed, the authority conferred on the Governor by the EPGA enabled the Governor to provide such protections in a broader and more flexible manner. These old public health laws did not enable the response action to be tailored in form and type to what is "reasonable" and "necessary" under the particular circumstances presented by the dangerous communicable disease. MCL 10.31(1). Simply put, there is no reason to conclude that the Legislature intended to deprive the Governor of the ability to act under the EPGA in response to diseases, merely because it vested the state board of health (commissioner) with authority as well.

The same point applies to the current laws governing emergencies and public health. For emergencies that require the protection of "public health, safety, or welfare," the Administrative Procedures Act provides agencies with the authority to promulgate "an emergency rule without following the notice and participation procedures" normally required by the APA, so long as the Governor "concurs in the finding of emergency." MCL 24.248(1). The rule can last up to six months, with the Governor authorized to extend its duration by another six months upon filing a "certificate of the need for the extension." Id. As with the laws discussed above, there is nothing to suggest that, by creating this tool of emergency response – in which executive agencies are authorized to act, but only upon the Governor's approval – the Legislature intended to supplant, repeal, or limit any authority otherwise vested in the Governor, including under the EPGA.

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

So too under the Public Health Code. The key provision to address epidemics and the emergency powers of the Director of DHHS states:

> If the director determines that control of an epidemic is necessary to protect the public health, the director by emergency order may prohibit the gathering of people for any purpose and may establish procedures to be followed during the epidemic to insure continuation of essential public health services and enforcement of health laws. Emergency procedures shall not be limited to this code. [MCL 333.2253(1).][7]

[7] See also MCL 333.2251:

> (1) Upon a determination that an imminent danger to the health or lives of individuals exists in this state, the director immediately shall inform the individuals affected by the imminent danger and issue an order that shall be delivered to a person authorized to avoid, correct, or remove the imminent danger or be posted at or near the imminent danger. The order shall incorporate the director's findings and require immediate action necessary to avoid, correct, or remove the imminent danger. The order may specify action to be taken or prohibit the presence of individuals in locations or under conditions where the imminent danger exists, except individuals whose presence is necessary to avoid, correct, or remove the imminent danger.

Nothing in these provisions, or elsewhere in the Public Health Code, purports to limit the Governor's authority under the EPGA, or deprive the Governor of the ability to act in response to epidemics that imperil the public safety. The Governor is not identified, and the laws make no reference to the EPGA (or the EMA), let alone claim to displace or otherwise limit the Governor's authority under either of those statutes. Rather, the Public Health Code expressly states that it is "intended to be consistent with applicable federal and state law and shall be construed, when necessary, to achieve that consistency." MCL 333.1111(1).

> (4) If the director determines that an imminent danger to the health or lives of individuals in this state can be prevented or controlled by the promulgation of an emergency rule under section 48(2) of the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.248, to schedule or reschedule a substance as a controlled substance as provided in part 72,1 the director shall notify the director of the department of licensing and regulatory affairs and the administrator of his or her determination in writing. The notification shall include a description of the substance to be scheduled or rescheduled and the grounds for his or her determination. The director may provide copies of police, hospital, and laboratory reports and other information to the director of the department of licensing and regulatory affairs and the administrator as considered appropriate by the director.

Indeed, when the Legislature enacted the Public Health Code, it made the effect of that enactment on existing law clear, repealing many laws the Code was intended to supplant. See Strichartz, Michigan Public Health Code, (ICLE, 1982), p 896. It left the EPGA, however, fully intact. There is no basis, express or implied, to read the Public Health Code to limit the scope of the EPGA. Cf Staiger v Madill, 328 Mich 99, 112 (1950) (the principle that repeal by implication is disfavored "is of especial application in the case of an important public statute of long standing which should be shown to be repealed either expressly, or by a strong and necessary implication").

Correspondingly, consistent with this grant of authority under the Public Health Code, the Director of the Department has issued sixteen orders in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, twelve of which remain in place, and some of which govern similar subjects as the Governor's orders.[8] And the Governor has exercised authority under both the EPGA and the EMA that goes beyond the emergency powers contemplated under the Public Health Code, issuing orders that fall outside of the powers of the Director along with orders that overlap with those powers. (See list of Governor's executive orders.)[9]

As with the statutory provisions discussed above, this overlap in authority does not demand a strained reading of the EPGA. As noted already, the Governor is the chief executive and is granted authority constitutionally over the principal departments. See art 5, § 7. She stands at the top of the pyramid of authority in the executive branch and is the official of that branch most politically accountable to the people. The idea that statutory grant of authority to a department or agency, simply by virtue of its existence, limits or displaces a statutory grant of authority to the Governor would turn this pyramid upside down.

Meanwhile, it makes eminent sense that, even when executive departments and agencies are authorized to act in certain areas and ways, the Governor would retain broad authority to make decisions and act as well, particularly as to crises that threaten the safety of the public whose State she has been elected to govern. Accordingly, some of the responsibilities in responding to a public health emergency overlap between the Governor and the Director, but the Governor has additional powers in both the EPGA and the EMA, which are not contemplated by the public health emergency laws. Compare, e.g., MCL 333.2251 and .2253 with MCL 10.31(1), MCL 30.303, and MCL 30.305. As a matter of both interpretation and governance, this overlap is unexceptional and perfectly sound.

In the end, the plain language of the EPGA is clear and requires no further construction. The Governor has properly acted to protect Michigan's residents from this pandemic, which presents an ongoing threat to their safety.

II. An epidemic in general, and COVID-19 in particular, implicates public safety as that term is used and understood in the EPGA.

For the second question, this Court asked "whether 'public safety,' as that term is used in the EPGA, is a term of ordinary meaning or has developed a specialized legal meaning as an object of the state's police power, and whether 'public safety' encompasses 'public health' events such as epidemics."

"Public safety" as a concept embedded in the police power does not have a settled, defined meaning. But whether or not "public safety" is a term of art, it encompasses public health events like epidemics. In early 20th century cases discussing the breadth of the State's police power in combating outbreaks of disease, both this Court and the U.S. Supreme Court understood that epidemics implicate "public safety." Contemporary lay understanding is in concert as confirmed by dictionary definitions. And the prior invocations of the EPGA by Michigan Governors further reinforce the breadth of scope that the statute's plain language reflects. Accordingly, an epidemic such as COVID-19 falls within the scope of the EPGA.

A. A legal term of art is one that has a settled, definite, and well-known meaning at common law.

This Court is tasked with determining the Legislature's intent, with the presumption "that the Legislature intended the meaning clearly expressed – no further judicial construction is required or permitted and the statute must be enforced as written." People v March, 499 Mich 389, 398 (2016) (citation and internal quote omitted).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

Thus, when, as here, a statute fails to define a term, "we presume that the Legislature intended for the words to have their ordinary meaning." March, 499 Mich at 398; MCL 8.3a. Only when an undefined term "has 'a settled, definite, and well known meaning at common law,'" will the Court adopt that meaning over the plain and ordinary understanding. March, 499 Mich at 398, quoting People v Covelesky, 217 Mich 90, 100 (1921) (subsequent history omitted). Such "technical words and phrases . . . shall be construed and understood according to [their] peculiar and appropriate meaning. MCL 8.3a; see also March, 499 Mich at 398.

B. "Public safety" has no discrete, settled legal meaning in the context of the police power, which does not demarcate a line between "public safety" and "public health."

The four corners of the police power are not clearly defined. As the U.S. Supreme Court long ago described it, the police power, "whether called 'police,' 'governmental,' or 'legislative,' exists in each state, by appropriate enactments not forbidden by its own constitution or by the constitution of the United States, to regulate the relative rights and duties of all persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, and therefore to provide for the public convenience and the public good." Lake Shore & M S R Co v State of Ohio, 173 US 285, 297 (1899).

Although its breadth is unquestionable, the State's police power has been described in myriad ways and "is not subject to definite limitations, but is coextensive with the necessities of the case and the safeguards of public interest." Jaarda v Van Ommen, 265 Mich 673, 684 (1934).

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

In fact, this Court has described the police power as "somewhat vaguely termed" and noted that "the exact description and limitation of which have not been attempted by the courts." Withey v Bloem, 163 Mich 419, 423 (1910). See also Hamilton v Vaughan, 212 Mich 31, 43 (1920) (Fellows, J., dissenting) ("[A] hard and fast definition of the police power, inclusive and exclusive, has not been generally attempted by the courts . . . ."). The police power constitutes a package of authority that has no concrete formulation. Reviewing the multiplicity of definitions confirms this, and only highlights that "public safety," a constituent part of the "vaguely termed" police power, Withey v Bloem, 163 Mich at 423, has no "settled, definite, and well known meaning at common law," March, 499 Mich at 398.[10]

But it is not as if the police power ebbs and flows with each case. It remains the same, though the words used to describe it may vary. As such, one cannot reasonably interpret that litany of objects as having no overlap. In some formulations, for example, "public health" is listed side-by-side with "public safety," see n 10, and in others, it is defined as a part of "public safety." In Clements v McCabe, 210 Mich 207, 215 (1920), this Court stated that the police power "operates in a conceded sphere relating to public safety, order, and morals for the protection of health, person, and property, which is never questioned." Id. (emphasis added).

[10] See, e.g., Mooney v Vill of Orchard Lake, 333 Mich 389, 392 (1952) ("The test of legitimacy [of the exercise of police power] is the existence of a real and substantial relationship between the exercise of those powers in a particular manner in a given case and public health, safety, morals or the general welfare."); Cady v City of Detroit, 289 Mich 499, 504–505 (1939) ("The sovereign power of the state includes protection of the safety, health, morals, prosperity, comfort, convenience and welfare of the public, or any substantial part of the public."); People v Brazee, 183 Mich 259, 264 (1914) ("It is an attribute of sovereign power to enact laws for the exercise of such restraint and control over the citizen and his occupation as may be necessary to promote the health, safety, and welfare of society. This power is known as the police power.").

The takeaway from these various recitations of the police power is that the constituent phrases necessarily overlap. For example, the public "welfare" can no doubt be impacted by concerns of public safety. So too can the public "safety" be affected by epidemics that threaten the public health. Given the varied and inconsistent formulations, it is difficult to see how these intertwining and overlapping phrases – and "public safety" in particular – have "a settled, definite, and well known meaning at common law," let alone a meaning that permits no overlap between them. March, 499 Mich at 398.

One thing is clear, though. The concept of "public safety" has long been understood to encompass epidemics.

C. At the time of the EPGA's enactment, it was well understood that epidemics endanger public safety as well as public health.

At the time of the EPGA's enactment, the phrase "public safety" included dangers stemming from epidemics. In the early twentieth century, the U.S. Supreme Court and this Court both understood that epidemics in particular threaten "public safety." And during that era, the Legislature granted authority to certain cities to combat contagious diseases "when the public safety may so require."

Jacobson v Commonwealth of Massachusetts, is the lodestar case regarding the permissible scope of a State's emergency response to an epidemic. 197 US 11 (1905). Jacobson is the genesis of the broad latitude afforded the State in responding to public health emergencies, and that case has played a critical role in guiding courts across the country in their consideration of challenges to the States' responses to COVID-19. See, e.g., South Bay United Pentecostal Church v. Gavin Newsom, Governor of California, 509 U.S. ___ (2020) slip op., p. 2 (summary order issued May 29, 2020) (Roberts, C.J., concurring); League of Independent Fitness Facilities and Trainers, Inc v Governor Gretchen Whitmer, 814 Fed Appx 125, 127 (2020) ("All agree that the police power retained by the states empowers state officials to address pandemics such as COVID-19 largely without interference from the courts. [citing Jacobson.] This century-old historical principle has been reaffirmed just this year by a chorus of judicial voices, including our own.")

Jacobson concerned Massachusetts' delegation of authority to localities to permit mandatory vaccinations during a public health crisis. Id. The state law at issue specifically granted the authority to localities to impose mandatory vaccinations, and Cambridge exercised it during a smallpox outbreak. Id. at 12–13. A resident refused, was charged, and pled that the U.S. Constitution protected him against mandatory vaccination. Id. at 13. In rejecting his theory, the U.S. Supreme Court made clear that an epidemic endangers "public safety":

> It seems to the court that an affirmative answer to these questions would practically strip the legislative department of its function to care for the public health and the public safety when endangered by epidemics of disease. Such an answer would mean that compulsory vaccination could not, in any conceivable case, be legally enforced in a community, even at the command of the legislature, however widespread the epidemic of smallpox, and however deep and universal was the belief of the community and of its medical advisers that a system of general vaccination was vital to the safety of all. [Jacobson, 197 US at 37 (emphasis added).]

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

RECEIVED by MSC 9/16/2020 4:27:05 PM

In People ex rel Hill v Bd of Ed of City of Lansing, 224 Mich 388 (1923), this Court followed the same path, quoting Jacobson at length and defending the right of the State to guard against pandemics: "of paramount necessity, a community has the right to protect itself against an epidemic of disease which threatens the safety of its members." Id. at 391 (emphasis added). Moreover, this Court in Hill cited Jacobson for the proposition that "it cannot be adjudged that the present regulation of the board of health was not necessary in order to protect the public health and secure the public safety." 224 Mich at 391 (emphasis added). See also In re Jeffries Homes Housing Project, 306 Mich 638, 646 (1943) (characterizing as matters of "public safety" actions "diminish[ing] the potentialities of epidemics" and "prevent[ing] the spread of . . . disease"). In a similar vein, this Court has recognized that communicable diseases are "dangerous" and present a "danger." Hill, 224 Mich at 392–393 ("[a] child afflicted with leprosy, smallpox, scarlet fever, or any other disease which is both dangerous and contagious"), id. at 393 ("So a child recently exposed to such a disease may be denied the privilege of our schools until all danger shall have passed") (emphases added), quoting In the Matter of Viemeister, 179 NY 235 (1904).

This Court has thus treated public health and public safety not as separate silos of concern. Rather, it has recognized that both are implicated by epidemics. To sever these symbiotic concepts would tear at the fabric of long-held understanding and tradition about police power to protect the public in a crisis.

Common understanding by reference to a contemporary dictionary definition confirms this. "Safety" contemplates the keeping of others free from danger, hazard, and disease. Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary (1949) defines "safety" to mean "1. Condition of being safe; freedom from danger or hazard," or alternatively, "4. A keeping of oneself or others safe, esp. from danger of accident or disease." (Emphasis added.)[11] While this definition does not contemplate every malady or health issue one might experience, no matter how small, it plainly encompasses disease (and, therefore, epidemics).

This definition also makes sense in the context of the statute. State ex rel Gurganus v CVS Caremark Corp, 496 Mich 45, 59 (2014) ("Individual words and phrases are not read in a vacuum . . . ."). The Governor's authority actuates only when "public safety is imperiled." MCL 10.31(1). As a result, it is not so broad as to grant the Governor authority to combat, for example, a widespread contraction of the common cold. While that would surely be a "public health" concern, it would not be one of "public safety," because the public would not be in need of protection from a widespread risk of significant harm or death.

Trying to read "public safety" narrowly to exclude all matters of public health – for instance, as comprising only matters requiring law-enforcement actions – would not only contravene the phrase's plain meaning, but would also conflict with the types of "public emergenc[ies]" detailed in the EPGA.

Along with other limitations, the Governor may only proclaim a state of emergency under the EPGA "[d]uring times of great public crisis, disaster, rioting, catastrophe, or similar public emergency," or during "reasonable apprehension of immediate danger of" such an emergency. MCL 10.31(1). This list certainly includes events that may require law-enforcement actions to protect the public safety, such as riots. But it also includes events whose threats to public safety predominantly, if not entirely, call for other forms of police-power intervention, such as "disaster[s]" and "catastrophe[s]." Both the "broad power of action" explained in MCL 10.32 and the types of "public emergencies" in MCL 10.31(1) signal that a law-enforcement limitation should not be read into "public safety." Instead, the phrase should be read with the breadth its plain meaning requires. And when so read, it is clear that epidemics such as COVID-19 can, and do, imperil public safety.

D. Prior invocations of the EPGA confirms that it covers more than simply law enforcement response to civil unrest.

While the applicability of EPGA to this epidemic is settled by the plain language of the statute, it bears mention that this conclusion comports with how prior Governors have read and used the statute.

In questioning whether the EPGA can be used in response to an epidemic, the Legislature asserts that the EPGA has only ever been invoked twice, once for a riot and another occasion for an ice storm in 1985. (Amicus Br, p 28.) This claim is mistaken. In fact, the EPGA has been invoked multiple times since its enactment, at least three of which involved emergencies well beyond what a law-enforcement-limited reading of "public safety" would countenance.

In 1946, Governor Harry Kelly, the year after he signed into law the EPGA, he invoked it to declare a state of emergency "throughout the entire state" based on a critical coal shortage caused by a strike:

> WHEREAS, it has been represented to me by the Federal Solid Fuels Administration and Captain Donald S. Leonard, State Fuel Administrator, that the strike in the bituminous coal mines of the nation and the drastic curtailment of fuel supplies coming into the state, caused by the subsequent embargo on railroad transportation, have created a public crisis within the State of Michigan endangering the health, safety, property and general welfare of the people of the State. [Appendix A (emphasis added).]

With the recently enacted EPGA, Governor Kelly imposed restrictions to conserve coal and transfer it from some communities to others "in dire need."[12]

In 1950, Governor G. Mennen Williams encountered the same kind of crisis, and issued the same basic proclamation under the EPGA: "the shortage of coal has created a public crisis with the State of Michigan endangering the health, safety, property and general welfare of the people of the State." (Appendix B, p 3.)

For this declaration, Governor Williams also issued regulations regarding the delivery of coal and the establishment of "certificates of necessity" for the use of coal that would become effective once the local chief executive certified the existence of "emergency conditions":

> 1. The coal stocks in wholesale and retail yards be frozen and no deliveries be made therefrom except as authorized through certificates of necessity . . .
> 2. That certificates of necessity shall be issued by the local fuel administrator only to persons, agencies, institutions and utilities upon the basis of need and essential use in the following classifications . . . [Appendix B, p 1.]

On a third occasion, in 1970, Governor William Milliken invoked the EPGA as a tool for "proper safeguarding of the public health, safety, and welfare" by prohibiting certain fishing in Lake St. Clair and the St. Clair River for a duration of over 20 months.[13] Governor Milliken issued Executive Order 1970-6, which found "a state of reasonable apprehension of immediate danger to the public health, safety and welfare" and barred fishing, on threat of a misdemeanor, in Lake St. Clair and the St. Clair River. (E.O. 1970-6, Appendix C.) Apparently, there was a contamination of fish in those bodies of water, and Canada had ordered a similar measure the week prior.[14]

On April 29, 1970, Governor Milliken also proclaimed, "a state of reasonable apprehension of immediate danger to the public health, safety, and welfare from the species, Walleye," in Lake Erie. (E.O. 1970-7, Appendix D). On May 20, 1970, the Governor reiterated the "reasonable apprehension of immediate danger to the public health" by certain species of fish, and continued the prohibition on commercial fishing in Lake Erie, but dialed back the full ban on fishing in the St. Clair River and Lake St. Clair, amending E.O. 1970-6 to permit only catch-and-release recreational fishing in those bodies of water. (E.O. 1970-11, Appendix E.)[15] Again, violations of the order constituted misdemeanors. (Id.)[16]

[15] The order also expanded the catch-and-release requirement to the Detroit River, and Lake Erie, for certain species of fish. (E.O. 1970-11, ¶¶ 2–3.) The expansion of the area covered by the executive order was linked to the discovery that contaminated fish may have migrated from Lake Erie. Sports Fishing Ban at Michigan Lake Ends After 5 Weeks, New York Times, May 24, 1970, available at https://www.nytimes.com/1970/05/24/archives/sports-fishing-ban-at-michigan-lake-ends-after-5-weeks.html

[16] Of note, a legal challenge was mounted against the ban that reached this Court. But it was promptly turned away. On August 12, 1970, the Court disposed of the "complaint of plaintiff for superintending control . . . for the reasons that said complaint is without merit." See Lake St. Clair Advisory Comm v Milliken, Order issued Aug 12, 1970 (Docket No 52968). These restrictions on fishing continued under the Governor's EPGA authority for over 20 months. On December 20, 1971, the Governor found the condition supporting the emergency declaration "no longer exists" and rescinded 1970-6 and 1970-11 "pursuant to . . . the provision of Act 302 of the Public Act of 1945," which is the EPGA. (E.O. 1971-10, Appendix F.)

These prior invocations of the EPGA only confirm what the statute's plain text makes clear: "public safety" in MCL 10.31(1) contemplates matters well beyond civil unrest, and it overlaps with public health. The statute requires this reading of "public safety." Where an immediate danger to public safety exists – whether in the streets through lawlessness, in our water through contaminated fish, or in the air as COVID-19 spreads aggressively throughout the state – the EPGA offers the Governor emergency authority. Contortions of canons of construction should not stand in the way of such sound, sensible, and settled executive authority. The canons exist so that the law can be used to good effect in the real world. The EPGA has been put to such use for 75 years, and the Governor here has put it to such use in response to this pandemic – just as the statute contemplates, and just as the public safety has required.

Not all public health issues are public safety issues, and not all public safety issues are public health issues. But one thing is for certain: an epidemic such as COVID-19 is both.

A virus that is novel, airborne, highly contagious, potentially fatal, and as-yet untreatable has been menacing our State. The thousands of lives it has taken, and the countless more it has harmed, leave no doubt that it has imperiled the safety of the public. The Governor is taking the immediate action necessary to combat the virus's rampant spread and protect life. This is the greatest public health crisis of our age. And it is an emergency under the EPGA.

VERIFIED COMPLAINT FOR EXPEDITED DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Although there is no other pending or resolved civil action arising out of the specific transaction or occurrence alleged in this Verified Complaint, one policy of the Secretary of State that is challenged

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

here is substantively the same as one of the Secretary's policies that was struck down by this Court in Genetski v Benson, No. 20-000216-MM, 2021 WL 1624452 (Mich Ct Cl, 2021).

NOW COME Plaintiffs Cindy Berry, Dennis Grosse, Blake Edmonds, the Michigan Republican Party, the National Republican Congressional Committee, and the Republican National Committee (collectively, "Plaintiffs"), by and through their attorneys, Dickinson Wright PLLC, and state as follows in support of their Verified Complaint against Michigan Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson and Director of Elections Jonathan Brater (collectively, the "Secretary"):

INTRODUCTION

1. Under the Michigan Constitution, each "citizen of the United States who is an elector qualified to vote in Michigan" has the "right, once registered, to vote an absent voter ballot without giving a reason." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h). This action seeks to enforce those provisions under the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law requiring that "election officials shall: (1) verify the identity of a voter who applies for an absent voter ballot other than in person by comparing the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application to the voter's signature in their registration record; and (2) verify the identity of a voter who votes an absent voter ballot other than in person by comparing the signature on the absent voter ballot envelope to the signature on the voter's absent voter ballot application or the signature in the voter's registration record." Id.

2. The Michigan Election Law requires voters to sign applications for absent voter ballots in order to receive a ballot. See MCL 168.759 and MCL 168.761. Likewise, any voter that chooses to vote by absent voter ballot is required by law to sign their absent voter ballot return envelope in order for their ballot to count. MCL 168.764a. Local election officials are then required to verify the respective signatures on the absent voter ballot applications and the absent voter ballot return envelopes by comparing those signatures against the voter's "signature on file," which, depending on the circumstances, can mean the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file, the signature of the voter contained on the master card, or, in some instances regarding absent voter ballot return envelopes, the signature on the voter's absent voter ballot application. MCL 168.761. See also MCL 168.766a(7).

3. If, when "verify[ing] the identity" of an absent voter as required under the Michigan Constitution, the local election official determines that the signature on a voter's absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot return envelope is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, then that application or ballot must be rejected. See MCL 168.761(2) (regarding applications); MCL 168.765(2) (regarding ballots).

4. In the event an election official rejects an application or absent voter ballot due to a missing or mismatched signature, then that voter has the right to be promptly notified and afforded "an equitable opportunity to correct the issue with the signature." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h). To that end, the Michigan Election Law requires the Secretary to maintain an electronic system for tracking absent voter applications and ballots to ensure that voters are aware of the status of their application and ballot, MCL 168.764c, and, separately, also requires local election officials to notify voters when their application or ballot has been rejected due to a missing or mismatched signature so that the voter may cure their deficient signature. MCL 168.761; MCL 168.765; MCL 168.766; MCL 168.766a.

5. Together, the above-referenced provisions create a framework that (a) preserves the purity of elections and guards against abuses of the elective franchise by ensuring that each absent voter application and absent voter ballot originated from, and was completed by, the intended voter, while also (b) ensuring that those absentee voters whose identities could not be verified as a result of missing or mismatched signatures have an opportunity to cure their deficient application or ballot such that the signature verification process does not prevent any qualified elector from voting.

6. Plaintiffs, however, recently learned that Defendants Secretary Benson and Director Brater covertly issued a publication entitled "Signature Verification, Voter Notification, and Signature Cure" that directs local election officials to apply a standard to the signature verification process that is inconsistent with this balanced constitutional and statutory framework.

7. The Secretary's publication, referenced herein as the "Signature Verification Instructions," is attached hereto as Exhibit A. While the Michigan Constitution expressly mandates that election officials "verify the identity" of any voter who applies for an absent voter ballot or who votes an absent voter ballot other than in person by completing the signature comparison scheme outlined above, see Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h), the Secretary has instructed local election officials to apply a "presumption of validity" to those signatures. Ex. A, at 3.

8. This new rule, however, is directly inconsistent with the plain language of the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law. And despite the fact that this Court has held on at least three recent occasions that the Secretary issued rules in violation of Michigan's Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"), see Davis v Benson, No. 20-000207-MZ, 2020 WL 7033534 (Mich Ct Cl, 2020); Genetski v Benson, No. 20-000216-MM, 2021 WL 1624452 (Mich Ct Cl, 2021), and DeVisser v Benson, No. 22-000164-MM, aff'd O'Halloran v Secretary of State, Nos. 363503, 363505, --- Mich App ---, 2023 WL 6931928 (Mich Ct App, 2023), app'n for leave to appeal docketed, Nos. 166424-25 (Mich, 2023), the Secretary's "presumption of validity" rule was not promulgated in accordance with the APA.

9. The Secretary's presumption of validity is not the only unlawful policy that was applied to absent voter applications and ballot return envelopes during the February 2024 presidential primary election. Similar to the Secretary's presumption of validity, Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code—recently promulgated by the Secretary—is also inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

10. Indeed, while the Michigan Election Law clearly requires election officials to "verify" the signatures on both absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes (see e.g., MCL 168.765(2); MCL 168.766(1)), and while the Michigan Constitution likewise requires election officials to "verify the identity" of the absent voter by comparing the voter's signatures on absent voter ballot applications and ballot return envelopes to the corresponding voter's signature in their registration file, Rule 168.24 purports to allow election officials to approve an absent voter's signature based on mere speculation. See Mich Admin Code R 168.24(1) (permitting election officials to consider a litany of "possible explanations" for "discrepancies in signatures" such as the possibility that a "voter's signature may have changed slightly over time," that a signature was "written in haste," or that the signature may have been made on a "rough, soft, uneven, or unstable [surface].").

11. Speculation, however, is incompatible with verification. Requiring election officials to approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation is completely inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law, both of which mandate that election officials verify the identity of absent voters through the above-described signature verification process.

12. Nevertheless, the Secretary's presumption of validity as well as Rule 168.24 were recently applied during the February 27, 2024 presidential primary election for which more than 1.26 million absent voter ballots were distributed to applicants across Michigan, and at least 934,000 absent voter ballots were submitted by Michigan voters.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

13. By all accounts, neither the application of the presumption of validity set forth in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions, nor the application of Rule 168.24, was limited to the February 2024 presidential primary and, absent relief, both will apparently remain in effect with respect to upcoming elections.

14. As a result, and in light of the impending primary election on August 6, 2024, and the general election on November 5, 2024, Plaintiffs respectfully ask this Court to: (a) declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law and is therefore unenforceable; (b) declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is a "rule" as that term is defined under the APA, that the Secretary failed to follow the applicable requirements under the APA when she promulgated that rule, and that the rule is therefore invalid; (c) declare that Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code is inconsistent with both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law and is therefore unenforceable; (d) order the Secretary to rescind her Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language instructing local election officials that signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes are entitled to a presumption of validity, strike the language requiring election officials to speculate as to "possible reasons for discrepancies in signatures" under Rule 168.24, and issue new Signature Verification Instructions directing local election officials to verify the identity of any voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law; and (e) enjoin the Secretary from implementing her presumption of validity and Rule 168.24 as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election.

15. Plaintiffs seek an expedited hearing on this matter under MCR 2.605(D), which expressly authorizes this Court to "order a speedy hearing of an action for declaratory relief" and to "advance [this case] on the calendar." Expedited consideration is warranted and necessary here. There can be no dispute that the voter signature and identification verification requirements under the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law are imperative to ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections. To be clear, the relief sought here is prospective in nature: Plaintiffs seek the above-described relief—including a declaration as to their legal rights with respect to the validity of a currently existing directive issued by the Secretary, as well as a provision of the Michigan Administrative Code (i.e., Rule 168.24)—in advance of the next election to ensure that local election officials are instructed to follow the law in future elections. Absent declaratory and injunctive relief, the rights of Plaintiffs will continue to be violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts—including those acts relative to the Secretary's guidance directing the application of an unlawful presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures and the unlawful speculation as to "possible explanations" for "discrepancies in signatures" under Rule 168.24, both of which are contrary to Michigan law—in the forthcoming election.

16. Time remains to adjudicate this case and controversy on the merits in an expedited fashion prior to the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election, and without the need for temporary or preliminary injunctive relief.[1] Specifically, some jurisdictions will begin verifying absent voter ballot signatures for the August primary election on June 27, 2024, and will likewise begin verifying absent voter ballot signatures for the general election on September 26, 2024. By seeking prospective relief several months in advance of these elections, there remains ample time for an expedited merits proceeding before this Court; for expedited appellate review (if necessary); for the Secretary to issue signature verification instructions that comply with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law; and for local election officials to implement those instructions.

17. To that end, Plaintiffs will make best efforts to effectuate formal service of process as soon as possible upon the filing this Verified Complaint and receipt of corresponding summonses from this Court, and will contact the Assistant Attorneys General that typically serve as elections counsel for the Secretary to discuss a briefing schedule regarding the motion practice necessary to promptly decide the questions of law presented in this case.

PARTIES, JURISDICTION, AND VENUE

18. Plaintiff Dennis Grosse is a Michigan citizen and a registered and eligible voter residing in Berrien County, Michigan. As a registered voter that cast an absentee ballot in the February 2024 presidential primary election who also intends to vote by absentee ballot in future elections, Plaintiff Grosse has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in ensuring that his vote counts and is not diluted, and that his opportunity to vote in future elections is equal to the opportunity provided to other eligible Michigan voters that cast an absentee ballot as well as those Michigan voters that cast a ballot in a polling place.

19. Plaintiff Blake Edmonds is a Michigan citizen and a registered and eligible voter residing in Kent County, Michigan. As a registered voter that cast a ballot in a polling place for the February 2024 presidential primary election who also intends to vote in-person at polling places in future elections, Plaintiff Edmonds has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in ensuring that his vote counts and is not diluted, and that his opportunity to vote in future elections is equal to the opportunity provided eligible Michigan voters that cast an absentee ballot as well as those Michigan voters that cast a ballot in a polling place.

20. Plaintiff Cindy Berry serves as the Clerk for the Township of Chesterfield and resides in Macomb County. Plaintiff Berry has attempted to reconcile the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions—and especially the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures, and the language from Rule 168.24 permitting election officials to speculate as to "possible reasons for discrepancies in signatures"—against the text of the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law. As a local clerk, Plaintiff Berry is subject to the instructions and the Rules at issue here, and seeks a declaration regarding whether clerks are, and will continue to be, subject to Rule 168.24 and the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures that by all accounts appear to remain in effect at this time. Plaintiff Berry is also a registered voter that cast a ballot for the February 2024 presidential primary election through Michigan's early voting process, who also intends to vote by absentee ballot in future elections, and who has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in ensuring that her vote counts and is not diluted.

21. Plaintiff the Michigan Republican Party ("MRP") is a "major political party" as that term is defined by the Michigan Election Law. See MCL 168.16. Formed for the general purposes of, among other things, promoting Republican values and assisting candidates who share those values with election or appointment to partisan federal, state, and local office, MRP maintains headquarters at 520 Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan 48912. Further, MRP works to ensure that elections in Michigan are conducted in a free, fair, and transparent manner, and works to protect the fundamental constitutional right to vote of its members and all Americans, and to promote their participation in the political process. MRP brings this action on behalf of itself and its members. As a result, Plaintiff MRP has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in this litigation to protect not only its own rights, but those of its candidates and members.

22. Plaintiff the National Republican Congressional Committee (the "NRCC") is a national committee, as defined by 52 U.S.C. § 30101(14), and the Republican Party's congressional campaign committee with its principal place of business at 320 First Street S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003. The NRCC is the only national political party committee exclusively devoted to electing Republican candidates to the U.S. House of Representatives from across the United States, including from Michigan's 13 congressional districts. Each election cycle, including in 2024, the NRCC supports the election of Republicans to the United States House of Representatives by providing direct financial contributions, technical and political guidance, and by making independent expenditures to advance political campaigns. The NRCC also undertakes voter education, voter registration, and voter turnout programs, as well as other party-building activities. The NRCC brings this action on behalf of itself and its members—six of whom currently serve as congressional representatives for districts in Michigan. As a result, Plaintiff NRCC has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in this litigation to protect not only its own rights, but those of its members as well its candidates in the 2024 Michigan elections.

23. Plaintiff the Republican National Committee (the "RNC") is the national committee of the Republican Party as defined by 52 U.S.C. § 30101(14), with its principal place of business at 310 First Street, S.E., Washington D.C., 20003. In addition to managing the Republican Party's business affairs at the national level, the RNC supports state Republican parties (including MRP) by, among other actions, supporting MRP's efforts to ensure that elections in Michigan are conducted in a free, fair, and transparent manner, and to protect the fundamental constitutional right to vote of its members and of all Americans and to promote their participation in the political process. The RNC made significant contributions and expenditures in support of Republican candidates up and down the ballot and in mobilizing and educating voters in Michigan in past election cycles, and is doing so again in 2024. The RNC has clear and obvious interests in the rules under which it, and those it represents and supports, exercise their constitutional rights to vote and to participate in elections. RNC brings this action on behalf of itself and its members. As a result, Plaintiff RNC has a direct, personal, and substantial interest in this litigation to protect not only its own rights, but those of its candidates and members.

24. Defendant Jocelyn Benson is Michigan's Secretary of State and is being sued in her official capacity. Secretary Benson is the "chief elections officer of the state" responsible for overseeing the conduct of Michigan elections, and has "supervisory control over local election officials in the performance of their duties under the [Michigan Election Law]." MCL 168.21.

25. Defendant Jonathan Brater is Michigan's Director of Elections and is being sued in his official capacity.

26. This Court has exclusive jurisdiction to "hear and determine any claim or demand, statutory or constitutional . . . or any demand for . . . equitable[ ] or declaratory relief or any demand for an extraordinary writ against the state or any of its departments or officers notwithstanding another law that confers jurisdiction of the case in the circuit court." MCL 600.6419(1)(a). Additionally, this Court has authority to grant injunctive relief under MCR 3.310.

27. Because Plaintiffs raise statutory and constitutional claims and ask this Court to order equitable and declaratory relief against Defendants Secretary Benson and Director Brater, this Court has exclusive jurisdiction to hear these claims. For the same reason, venue is appropriate in this Court.

28. An actual controversy exists here between Plaintiffs and the Secretary. For the reasons explained in this Verified Complaint, Plaintiffs' respective rights—ranging from the rights of voters casting ballots in person at polling places or by mail, to clerks that are subject to the unlawful guidance and policies at issue here, and to political parties and committees (and their members) supporting candidates up and down the ballot and mobilizing and educating voters in Michigan—have been violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts, including but not limited to the issuance of the Signature Verification Instructions and the Secretary's unlawful directives that local election officials apply a presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures and that those same officials must speculate as to "possible reasons for discrepancies in signatures" rather than verifying those signatures a required by Michigan law.

29. The injury to Plaintiffs is at once completed and ongoing. Absent relief from this Court, these injuries will recur indefinitely because the Secretary, local election officials, and private citizens alike will consider the Signature Verification Instructions and Rule 168.24 binding legal authority and will continue applying the unlawful presumption of validity and speculating as to possible reasons for discrepancies in absent voter signatures. Therefore, a decision from this Court will redress the violation of Plaintiffs' rights under the Michigan Constitution and Michigan Election Law for the August 2024 primary election, the November 2024 general election, and beyond.

LEGAL AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The Constitution and the Michigan Election Law Expressly Provide a Framework for Ensuring the Accuracy and Integrity of Elections

30. Under the Michigan Constitution, "[e]very citizen of the United States who is an elector qualified to vote in Michigan" has "[t]he fundamental right to vote, including but not limited to the right, once registered, to vote a secret ballot in all elections." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(a).

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

31. Balanced against that right, of course, "are the constitutional commands given by the people of Michigan to the Legislature in Const 1963, art 2, § 4" to regulate elections. In re Request for Advisory Opinion Regarding Constitutionality of 2005 PA 71, 479 Mich 1, 16; 740 NW2d 444 (2007). There, the Michigan Constitution commands that "the legislature shall," in addition to regulating the "time, place and manner" of elections, enact laws "to preserve the purity of elections . . . to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, and to provide for a system of voter registration and absentee voting." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(2).

32. As the Michigan Supreme Court acknowledged, "[t]hese provisions have been a part of our constitution for almost as long as Michigan has been a state. As [the Michigan Supreme Court] noted in the nineteenth century, the purpose of a law enacted pursuant to these constitutional directives 'is not to prevent any qualified elector from voting, or unnecessarily to hinder or impair his privilege. It is for the purpose of preventing fraudulent voting.' " In re Request for Advisory Opinion, 479 Mich at 17. (Emphasis in original and internal citation omitted).

33. This balance is paramount to the electoral process. "In sum, while a citizen's right to vote is fundamental, this right is not unfettered. It competes with the state's compelling interest in preserving the integrity of its elections and the Legislature's constitutional obligation to preserve the purity of elections and to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, including ensuring that lawful voters not have their votes diluted." Id. at 20.

34. For example, any registered elector that votes in-person is required to prove their identity before an election official gives that elector a ballot. This mandate that an elector "prove their identity" is expressly provided in both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

Law. See MCL 168.523(1) (requiring "at each election, before being given a ballot, [that] each registered elector offering to vote must identify himself or herself by presenting identification for election purposes"); MCL 168.523(2) (providing electors without photo identification the opportunity to verify their identity by signing an affidavit in the presence of an election inspector, with the caveat that "an elector being allowed to vote without identification for election purposes as required under this section is subject to challenge as provided in [MCL 168.727]"); Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(g) (granting registered electors qualified to vote in Michigan the right "to prove their identity when voting in person or applying for an absent voter ballot in person by (1) presenting their photo identification, including photo identification issued by a federal, state, local, or tribal government or an educational institution, or (2) if they do not have photo identification [then by] executing an affidavit verifying their identity.").

35. The mandate that an elector must "prove their identity" before receiving a ballot in a polling place either by presenting photographic ID or by executing an affidavit in the presence of an election official is, indeed, constitutional. See In re Request for Advisory Opinion, 479 Mich at 22–28 (holding that the requirements in MCL 168.523, i.e., that an in-person voter prove their identity by either presenting photographic identification or by signing an affidavit affirming that the voter lacks photographic identification, provide a reasonable, nondiscriminatory restriction on the state and federal constitutional right to vote that is warranted by the state's compelling regulatory interest to preserve the purity of elections and guard against abuses of the elective franchise).

36. That mandate is also overwhelmingly supported by public opinion. See Detroit Regional Chamber, Statewide Poll Reveals Opinions on Political Landscape (June 7, 2021) https://www.detroitchamber.com/statewide-poll-reveals-opinions-on-political-landscape-covid-19-and-vaccination-perceptions-ongoing-labor-shortage-and-voting-rights/ (last visited March 25, 2024) (finding that 79.7% of respondents in statewide poll support requiring "every voter coming to the polls present a government-issued identification to cast their ballot").

37. While the process is somewhat different for those voting by absent voter ballot, the Constitution nonetheless requires voters "to prove their identity when applying for or voting an absent voter ballot other than in person by providing their signature to the election official authorized to issue absent voter ballots." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) (emphasis added); see also MCL 168.759(3) ("An elector must sign the absent voter ballot application."); MCL 168.764a (requiring electors to sign and date their absent voter ballot return envelope).

38. To that end, when an election official is provided a voter's signature for the purpose of proving that voter's identity as a precondition to that voter applying for an absent voter ballot other than in person, the Michigan Constitution mandates that the election official shall "verify the identity of a voter who applies for an absent voter ballot other than in person by comparing the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application to the voter's signature in their registration record." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) (emphasis added); see also MCL 168.761(1) ("If the clerk of a city or township receives an application for an absent voter ballot, the clerk must immediately determine if the applicant is registered to vote in that city or township and if the signature on the application agrees sufficiently with the signature on file for the individual as required in subsection (2)."); MCL 168.761(2) ("The signature on file must be used to determine the genuineness of a signature on an application for an absent voter ballot. Signature comparisons must be made using the procedures required under [MCL 168.766a].").

39. Likewise, when an election official is provided a voter's signature for the purpose of proving that voter's identity as a precondition to that elector voting an absent voter ballot other than in person, the Michigan Constitution mandates that the election official shall: "verify the identity of a voter who votes an absent voter ballot other than in person by comparing the signature on the absent voter ballot envelope to the signature on the voter's absent voter ballot application or the signature in the voter's registration record." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) (emphasis added). See also MCL 168.765(2) ("The city or township clerk shall review each absent voter ballot return envelope to determine whether the absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation in accordance with [MCL 168.766]. The review under this subsection includes verifying the signature on each absent voter ballot return envelope in accordance with [MCL 168.766a].") (emphasis added); MCL 168.766(1) (mandating that city or township clerks "shall determine" whether an absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation "by verifying both of the following: (a) [t]he elector is a registered elector and has not voted in person in that election [and] (b) [u]sing the procedures required under [MCL 168.766a], the signature on the absent voter ballot return envelope agrees sufficiently with the elector's signature on file.") (emphasis added).

40. As for verifying the signature on an elector's absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope, MCL 168.766a sets forth the standard by which local clerks must determine whether the signature is valid. Specifically, section 766a provides that "[a]n elector's signature is invalid only if it differs in significant and obvious respects from the elector's signature on file. Slight dissimilarities must be resolved in favor of the elector. Exact signature matches are not required to determine that a signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file." MCL 168.766a(2).

41. For the purposes of verifying the signature on an elector's absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope, a voter's "signature on file" means "any signature of an elector contained in the qualified voter file[,]" or, "[i]f the qualified voter file does not contain a copy of an elector's digitized signature, or is not accessible, [then] the signature of the elector contained on the master card." MCL 168.766a(7)(a)-(b). Further, and "[o]nly for purposes of the signature comparison conducted under [MCL 168.766] for an elector's absent voter ballot envelope," the term "signature on file" may also mean "the signature on the elector's absent voter ballot application." MCL 168.766a(7)(c).

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

42. If a clerk determines that the signature on an elector's absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot return envelope is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, then that application or ballot must be rejected. MCL 168.766a(3); see also MCL 168.761(2) (regarding applications); MCL 168.765(2) (regarding ballots); MCL 168.766(2) (regarding ballots).

43. When a clerk rejects an absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot due to a missing or mismatched signature—and to ensure that the election integrity measures outlined herein do not prevent any qualified elector from voting—then that voter has the right to be promptly notified and afforded "an equitable opportunity to correct the issue with the signature." Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h).

44. In that vein, Michigan law requires the Secretary to maintain an electronic system for tracking absent voter applications and ballots to ensure that voters are aware of the status of their application and ballot. See MCL 168.764c; see also Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(i).

45. Separately, the Michigan Election Law also requires local election officials to notify voters when their application or ballot has been rejected due to a missing or mismatched signature so that the voter may cure their deficient signature. MCL 168.761; MCL 168.765; MCL 168.766(3)-(6); MCL 168.766a(3)-(6).

46. Importantly, while the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law set forth a detailed framework for verifying the identity of absent voters through signature verification, neither the Michigan Constitution nor the Michigan Election Law provides that those signatures should be presumed valid as instructed by the Secretary in her Signature Verification Instructions. Nor does the Michigan Constitution or the Michigan Election Law provide that election officials may speculate as to possible reasons for discrepancies in signatures, despite contrary provisions under Rule 168.24 and the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions.

Genetski v Benson: This Court finds that the Secretary's guidance regarding signature verification as to AV ballot applications and AV ballot return envelopes—which mandated a presumption of validity as to those signatures—violated the Administrative Procedure Act.

47. This is not the first time that the Secretary has improperly attempted to direct local election officials to apply a presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures. On October 6, 2020, the Secretary issued guidance to local clerks and election officials instructing them to, among other things, apply a presumption of validity when verifying signatures on absent voter applications and ballots.

48. The MRP and Allegan County Clerk Robert Genetski sued the Secretary, alleging, inter alia, that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes conflicted with the Michigan Election Law and, separately, that the Secretary's presumption of validity constituted a "rule" that failed to comport with APA rule-issuance procedures. That case was captioned as Genetski v Benson, No. 20-000216-MM (Mich Ct Cl, 2021).

49. In a written Opinion and Order dated March 9, 2021, this Court granted summary disposition in favor of the Genetski plaintiffs because the challenged signature verification guidance—including the Secretary's instruction that signatures on absent voter applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes be presumed valid—were issued in violation of the APA. See Genetski v Benson, No. 20-000216-MM (Mich Ct Cl, 2021), Opinion and Order Granting Summary Disposition, at 14, attached hereto as Exhibit B (concluding that the Secretary's signature verification standards "amounted to a 'rule' that should have been promulgated in accordance with the APA. And absent compliance with the APA, the 'rule' is invalid."); see also id. at 10 ("Policy determinations like the one at issue—which places a thumb on the scale in favor of a signature's validity—should be made pursuant to properly promulgated rules under the APA or by the Legislature.").

50. Because the Court concluded that the Secretary's signature verification guidance was invalid for failing to comply with the APA, it did not address the Genetski plaintiffs' claim that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures conflicted with the Michigan Election Law. Id. at 10 n 5 ("Given that the standards are invalid for being enacted without compliance with the APA, the Court declines, for now, to determine whether the mandatory presumption [of validity] imposed is contrary to the law, as plaintiffs have alleged in Count I."). As a result, the Genetski plaintiffs' claim that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures conflicted with the Michigan Election Law was dismissed without prejudice. Id. at 1, 14–16.

The Secretary promulgates rules regarding signature verification as to AV ballot applications and AV ballot return envelopes, but abandons the "presumption of validity" mid-rulemaking due to an onslaught of opposition during the public hearing and comment period.

51. Several months after the Genetski court concluded that the Secretary's signature verification instructions violated the APA, the Secretary commenced the rulemaking process under the APA by proposing rule set number 2021-61 ST, entitled "Signature Matching for Absent Voter Ballot Applications and Absent Voter Ballot Envelopes." See generally Michigan Legislative Council, Joint Committee on Administrative Rules Documents for 2021-061 ST (available at https://council.legislature.mi.gov/JCAR/Documents?path=/JCARFiles/Rule%20Documents%20by%20Department%20and%20Rule%20Number/Department%20of%20State/2021-061%20ST) (last visited March 25, 2024) (public rulemaking record for 2021-061 ST).

52. An early draft of the ruleset proposed by the Secretary, dated August 5, 2021, is attached hereto as Exhibit C. Among those proposed rules, the Secretary included language that would require local election officials to presume the validity of signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes during the verification process. Specifically, draft R 168.22(2) / Rule 2(1) stated as follows at that time:

> (1) In determining for purposes of section 761(2) of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.761, whether a voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, signatures must be reviewed beginning with the presumption that the voter's signature is his or her genuine, valid signature.

Ex. C, at 1 (emphasis added).

53. That presumption of validity, however, was met with an onslaught of public opposition during the public hearing and comment period.

54. For example, State Senator Ruth Johnson—former Oakland County Clerk, Michigan Secretary of State from 2011-2019, and then-Chair of the Senate Elections Committee—submitted a written comment stating that she "strongly oppose[s] these rules as written and find[s] them to be in direct contradiction to existing Michigan election law." Senator Johnson's Public Comment on Proposed Ruleset 2021-61 ST is attached hereto as Exhibit D.

55. As for the Secretary's proposed presumption of validity regarding absent voter signatures, Senator Johnson wrote that the presumption "is in direct conflict with the statutory language which instructs clerks to 'determine' the genuineness of signatures." Ex. D, at 1. See also id., at 2 ("I feel strongly that the presumption of genuineness contained in these proposed administrative rules is inappropriate and not in conformance with existing Michigan election law."). From Senator Johnson's perspective as a former county clerk and former Secretary of State, the proposed rules would "abrogate clerks' statutory role by presuming signatures to be valid upon receipt...." Id.

56. Similarly, State Representative Ann Bollin—former Brighton Township clerk from 2003-2018, and then-Chair of the House Elections and Ethics Committee—also submitted a written comment in opposition to the proposed rules. Representative Bollin's Public Comment on Proposed Ruleset 2021-61 ST is attached hereto as Exhibit E.

57. As explained by Representative Bollin, "[s]ignature verification is a hallmark standard that protects the voter." Ex. E, at 2. Representative Bollin, who, again, served as a local clerk for sixteen years, commented that "[t]he makers of these proposed rules would have us believe that this standard of 'initial presumption of validity' is common practice. This is false." Id. at 3. Rather, "[t]his alleged standard was a directive put forth by the [Secretary] last year that resulted in a lot of confusion and potential fraud," and, as acknowledge by Representative Bollin, the standard was then struck down by the Court of Claims in Genetski. Id. Thus, while Representative Bollin detailed her "serious concerns about the changes the Department of State is proposing," she believed "we can work together with our local clerks to improve upon these proposed rules and create a better product that both advances democracy AND protects the vote and ensures our elections are secure." Id. at 4 (emphasis in original).

58. Following the public hearing and comment period, Secretary Benson abandoned the presumption of validity in the proposed ruleset. To that end, and in response to ruleset changes proposed by the Legislature's Joint Committee on Administrative Rules ("JCAR"), the Secretary formally notified JCAR that she "accepts JCAR's proposal to strike the instruction in R 168.22(1) that local election officials must begin review of a voter's signature on an absent voter ballot application or an absent voter ballot envelope with a 'presumption' that the signature is valid." A copy of the Secretary's March 4, 2022 Response to JCAR's Proposed Changes to JCAR No. 21-73, MOAHR No. 2021-61ST, is attached hereto as Exhibit F. Thus, the Secretary represented that she would "remove the term presumption from R 168.22(1) without otherwise substantially changing the text of the Ruleset already reviewed by JCAR." Id. at 1.

59. Shortly thereafter, the Secretary issued an updated version of the draft ruleset that excluded the prior language that would have required local election officials to presume the validity of signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes. One such version of the updated draft ruleset that was generated in redline form indicated the above-referenced change to draft R 168.22(2) / Rule 2(1) as follows:

> (1) In determining for purposes of section 761(2) of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.761, or for the purposes of 766(2), 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.766, whether a voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, ~~signatures must be reviewed beginning with the presumption that the voter's signature is his or her genuine, valid signature. A~~an election official may determine that~~decline to accept~~ a signature does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file only ~~if,~~ after reviewing the ~~an~~ absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature using the process set forth in these rules~~, the election official determines that the signature does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file~~.

A redlined copy of the amended ruleset proposed by the Secretary, dated March 7, 2022, is attached hereto as Exhibit G.

60. The amended ruleset, which excluded the Secretary's previous proposed instruction requiring local election officials to presume the validity of signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes during the verification process, was added to the Michigan Administrative Code, effective December 19, 2022. See Mich Admin Code R 168.22.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

61. Aside from the rulemaking record, the Secretary's abandonment of the presumption of validity was highly publicized. See, e.g., David Eggert, Benson rejects GOP changes to signature-verification rules, Associated Press (Mar. 4, 2022) https://apnews.com/article/elections-michigan-jocelyn-benson-f0bd1e768957e1b60aaf16f5f504b69c (last accessed March 25, 2024) (reporting that while the Secretary rejected most of JCAR's proposed revisions to the ruleset, the Secretary "said she will remove language instructing election officials to presume that a signature is genuine and valid[,]" and "Rep. Luke Meerman, a Republican member of [JCAR] from Coopersville, welcomed Benson's decision to strike the presumption that signatures are valid, saying 'we are making it so people can have faith in Michigan's election process.'").

62. Indeed, State Representative Luke Meerman—the alternate chair of JCAR—announced in a press release that JCAR had "succeeded in its push for greater security measures in Secretary of State Jocelyn Benson's proposed election rules." Mich. House Republicans, Benson withdraws attempt to water down signature verification standards after legislative push back (Mar. 4, 2022) https://gophouse.org/posts/benson-withdraws-attempt-to-water-down-signature-verification-standards-after-legislative-push-back (last accessed Mar. 25, 2024). While the Secretary had "proposed administrative rules to require local election officials to review signatures on absentee applications and ballots starting with a presumption that the signature is valid," Rep. Meerman stated he was "pleased" that the Secretary had withdrawn that aspect of the proposed ruleset and "that Secretary Benson has acknowledged that state law does not give her the power to water down signature requirement standards." Id.

63. Thus, there can be no question that the presumption of validity was removed from proposed ruleset number 2021-61 ST before those rules were added to the Michigan Administrative Code.

Despite abandoning the "presumption of validity" during the rulemaking process, the Secretary nonetheless continues to direct local election officials to apply a presumption of validity when verifying signatures on AV ballot applications and AV ballot return envelopes.

64. Meanwhile—and despite the express mandates under the Michigan Constitution that voters must "prove their identity when applying for or voting an absent voter ballot" and that election officials shall "verify the identity" of those voters by comparing the aforementioned voters' signatures to the corresponding signature in each voter's registration record, despite the holding in Genetski that the Secretary's previous signature verification instructions (which directed local election officials to presume that absent voters' signatures are valid) were issued in violation of the APA, and despite the fact that the Secretary abandoned the presumption of validity when she finally promulgated signature verification rules under the APA—the Secretary is still instructing local election officials to apply a "presumption of validity" to absent voter signatures.

65. On the Department of State's public website, the Secretary maintains a guidance document entitled, "Election Officials' Manual, Chapter 6: Michigan's Absent Voter Process." A copy of the February 2024 version of the "Election Officials' Manual, Chapter 6: Michigan's Absent Voter Process" (hereinafter, the "Absent Voter Process Manual") is attached hereto as Exhibit H.

66. Section VIII of the Absent Voter Process Manual provides instructions regarding the process for verifying signatures on absent voter ballot applications. See Ex. H at 12 ("VIII. Absent voter ballot application signature verification requirement"). Likewise, section XVI of the Absent Voter Process Manual provides instructions regarding the process for verifying signatures on absent voter ballot return envelopes. See id. at 18-19 ("XVI Ballot verification requirement").

67. While the Secretary's presumption of validity is not included in the Absent Voter Process Manual, that publicly-available manual is not the only set of instructions that the Secretary has issued regarding the verification of absent voter signatures.

68. Indeed, both of the above-referenced sections of the Absent Voter Process Manual—Section VIII regarding the verification of signatures on absent voter ballot applications, and Section XVI regarding the verification of signatures on absent voter ballot return envelopes—incorporate by reference an entirely separate set of instructions issued by the Secretary regarding the verification of absent voter signatures. See Ex. H at 12 ("For further guidance on reviewing signatures, contacting voters, and curing missing or mismatched signatures, refer to Signature and Cure Guidance in the eLearning Center.") Id. at 19 ("For further guidance on reviewing signatures, contacting voters, and curing missing or mismatched signatures, refer to Signature and Cure Guidance in the eLearning Center.")

69. According to the Absent Voter Process Manual, this separate set of signature verification instructions is "[a]vailable in the eLearning Center at https://mielections.csod.com/ui/lms-learning-details/app/material/ae9edc3b-8bfd-4494-a5c1-eb7022679d7a." Id. at 12, n 4; id. at 19, n 5.

70. That document, however, is protected from public scrutiny and is not publicly available, as the corresponding hyperlink launches the Secretary's "Michigan Elections eLearning Center," access for which is restricted to local election officials (i.e., clerks, deputy clerks, etc.). As demonstrated in the screenshot below, individualized credentials issued by the Secretary are required to access documents housed in the Secretary's Michigan Elections eLearning Center:

71. Upon information and belief, the document attached hereto as Exhibit A (and referenced throughout as the Secretary's "Signature Verification Instructions") is the "Signature and Cure Guidance in the eLearning Center" incorporated by reference in—and available at the hyperlinks in footnotes 4 & 5 of—the Absent Voter Process Manual.

72. The Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions clearly instruct local election officials to apply a presumption of validity to absent voter signatures:

> Clerks must determine whether the signature being validated agrees sufficiently with the signature on file. Voter signatures are entitled to an initial presumption of validity. An initial presumption of validity does not mean that all signatures are "presumed valid" without further review. Instead, clerks must review all signatures and should determine that a signature does not agree sufficiently on file only after completing review of the signature as described in these instructions and in Michigan election law, MCL 168.766a, et seq.; and R 168.21, et seq.

Ex. A, at 3 (bold and underlined emphasis added).

The Secretary's presumption of validity violates the Administrative Procedures Act and is otherwise inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law.

73. The Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures violates the APA, the Michigan Constitution, and the Michigan Election Law.

74. Regarding the APA, the Secretary's presumption of validity was not among ruleset No. 2021-61ST recently promulgated by the Secretary.

75. In fact, while the Secretary included the presumption of validity in the initial proposed ruleset, the Secretary's then-proposed presumption of validity was met with an onslaught of public opposition during the rulemaking process such that the Secretary expressly abandoned the presumption during the rulemaking process.

76. The Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions—which expressly include the presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures—are clearly intended to be binding on local election officials.

77. The cover of both the Absent Voter Process Manual and the Signature Verification Instructions expressly indicates that the respective documents are "INSTRUCTIONS PROVIDED BY THE MICHIGAN BUREAU OF ELECTIONS." Ex. A, at cover (emphasis in original); Ex. H, at cover (emphasis in original).

78. Moreover, the Signature Verification Instructions contain express self-descriptors that are typically associated with documents meant to have the effect of a rule or law. For example, the Signature Verification Instructions expressly provide that:

> This document provides instructions for:
>
> 1. Reviewing signatures immediately upon receipt and providing voter notification for a mismatched signature.
>
> 2. Verifying the voter's signature against the QVF.

3. Curing missing or mismatched signatures.

Ex. A, at 1 (emphasis added).

79. Instructions issued by the Secretary of State are binding on local election officials conducting elections. See Davis v Secretary of State, 333 Mich App 588, 598; 963 NW2d 653 appeal denied, 506 Mich 1040; 951 NW2d 911 (2020) (citing Secretary of State v Berrien Co Bd of Election Comm'rs, 373 Mich 526, 530-531; 129 NW2d 864 (1964)).

80. Certainly, the Michigan Election Law requires the Secretary of State to "issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act [MCL 24.201 et seq.] for the conduct of elections and registrations in accordance with the laws of this state," MCL 168.31(1)(a).

81. It is undisputed, however, that Secretary Benson must comply with the APA when making a "rule"—a term that the Michigan APA expressly defines as "an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency, including the amendment, suspension, or rescission of the law enforced or administered by the agency." MCL 24.207 (emphasis added).

82. The Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures therefore constitutes a rule as defined under the APA.

83. Contrary to the Secretary's instruction to apply a presumption of validity to absent voter signatures, neither the Michigan Constitution nor the Michigan Election Law indicate that absent voter signatures should be presumed valid.

84. Rather, the Michigan Election Law clearly requires election officials to "verify" the signatures on both absent voter ballot applications and absent voter return envelopes. See MCL

168.765(2) ("The city or township clerk shall review each absent voter ballot return envelope to determine whether the absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation in accordance with [MCL 168.766]. The review under this subsection includes verifying the signature on each absent voter ballot return envelope in accordance with [MCL 168.766a].") (emphasis added); MCL 168.766(1) (mandating that city or township clerks "shall determine" whether an absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation "by verifying both of the following: (a) [t]he elector is a registered elector and has not voted in person in that election [and] (b) [u]sing the procedures required under [MCL 168.766a], the signature on the absent voter ballot return envelope agrees sufficiently with the elector's signature on file.") (emphasis added).

85. More importantly, the Michigan Constitution expressly requires that election officials shall "verify the identity" of voters who apply for an absent voter ballot and of those who vote an absent voter ballot by comparing each voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot return envelope to the voter's signature in their registration record. Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) (emphasis added).

86. The term "verify" as used in both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law is incompatible with the term "presumption" as used in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions. Compare "Verify." Merriam-Webster.com Dictionary, Merriam-Webster, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/verify (last visited March 25, 2024) (defining "verify" as "to establish the truth, accuracy, or reality of") and "Establish." available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/presume (last visited March 25, 2024) (defining "presume" as "to suppose to be true without proof.")

87. As outlined above, the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures is directly inconsistent with both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law. When the Michigan Constitution and Michigan Election Law expressly mandate that election officials verify the identity of absent voters through a signature comparison process, the Secretary is not authorized to change that standard to something less than verification, be it through a presumption of validity or otherwise.

88. Likewise, and despite the fact that Defendants are subject to the APA, see MCL 24.203(2) (defining "agency" in a way that includes the Secretary of State), the above-referenced rule change was not promulgated in accordance with the APA. See also Genetski v Benson, No. 20-000216-MM, 2021 WL 1624452, at *4 (Mich Ct Cl, 2021) (Ex. B at 7) ("A 'rule' not promulgated in accordance with the APA's procedures is invalid.") (citations omitted).

89. Instead, it appears that the Signature Verification Instructions and the Secretary's underlying presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures were promulgated without any formal rulemaking or process. Indeed, the Signature Verification Instructions are not even available to the public, and are instead maintained by the Secretary on her Michigan Elections eLearning Center, access to which is restricted to local election officials.

The Secretary's Rule 168.24, which directs election officials to speculate regarding "possible explanations for discrepancies in signatures," is inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law.

90. The Secretary's policy requiring election officials to consider "possible explanations for discrepancies in signatures" as embodied by Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code violates the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

91. Under Rule 168.24, election officials are required to consider as "possible explanations" for "discrepancies in signatures" the notions that, inter alia, a "voter's signature style may have changed slightly over time," the voter's "signature may have been written in haste," or the voter may have signed their absent voter application or ballot return envelope on a surface that was "rough, soft, uneven, or unstable." See Mich Admin Code R 168.24(1).

92. Contrary, however, to the Secretary's mandate under Rule 168.24, neither the Michigan Constitution nor the Michigan Election Law permit election officials to speculate as to possible explanations for discrepancies in signatures.

93. Rather, the Michigan Election Law clearly requires election officials to "verify" the signatures on both absent voter ballot applications and absent voter return envelopes. See MCL 168.765(2) ("The city or township clerk shall review each absent voter ballot return envelope to determine whether the absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation in accordance with [MCL 168.766]. The review under this subsection includes verifying the signature on each absent voter ballot return envelope in accordance with [MCL 168.766a].") (emphasis added); MCL 168.766(1) (mandating that city or township clerks "shall determine" whether an absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation "by verifying both of the following: (a) [t]he elector is a registered elector and has not voted in person in that election [and] (b) [u]sing the procedures required under [MCL 168.766a], the signature on the absent voter ballot return envelope agrees sufficiently with the elector's signature on file.") (emphasis added).

94. More importantly, the Michigan Constitution expressly requires that election officials shall "verify the identity" of voters who apply for an absent voter ballot and of those who vote an absent voter ballot by comparing the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot return envelope to the voter's signature in their registration record. Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) (emphasis added).

95. If a clerk determines that the signature on an elector's absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot return envelope is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, then that application or ballot must be rejected, see MCL 168.766a(3); MCL 168.761(2) (regarding applications); MCL 168.765(2) (regarding ballots); and MCL 168.766(2) (regarding ballots), which in turn initiates the local election official's duty to notify that voter that their application or ballot has been rejected due to a missing or mismatched signature so that the voter may cure their deficient signature. See MCL 168.761; MCL 168.765; MCL 168.766(3)-(6); MCL 168.766a(3)-(6).

96. As outlined above, the Secretary's Policy mandating that election officials speculate as to "possible explanations for discrepancies in signatures" under Rule 168.24 is directly inconsistent with both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law. When the Michigan Constitution and Michigan Election Law mandate that election officials verify the identity of absent voters through a signature comparison process, the Secretary is not authorized to change that standard to something less than verification, whether through a promulgated rule or otherwise.

97. An administrative rule simply cannot conflict with a statute. Brightmoore Gardens, LLC v Marijuana Regulatory Agency, 337 Mich App 149, 161; 975 NW2d 52 (2021) ("[A]n [administrative] agency is not empowered to change law enacted by the Legislature. . . .When an administrative rule conflicts with a statute, the statute controls"). When, as here, "a statute and an administrative rule conflict, the statute necessarily controls." Grass Lake Improvement Bd v Dep't of Environmental Quality, 316 Mich App 356, 366; 891 NW2d 884 (2016).

Judicial intervention is necessary to ensure that the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law are enforced during the August 2024 primary election and the November 2024 general election.

98. As recognized in the Carter-Baker Commission Report, absentee voting "has been one of the major sources of fraud." See, Building Confidence in U.S. Elections: Report of the Commission on Federal Election Reform (i.e., the "Carter-Baker Commission Report"), at 35, September 2005, available at https://www.eac.gov/sites/default/files/eac_assets/1/6/Exhibit%20M.PDF (last visited March 25, 2024).

99. For that reason, the Carter-Baker Commission recommended that "[t]o verify the identity of voters who cast absentee ballots, the voter's signature on the absentee ballot can be matched with a digitized version of the signature that the election administrator maintains," and that this signature matching "should be done consistently in all cases, so that election officials can verify the identity of every new registrant who casts an absentee ballot." Id. at 20 (emphasis added)

100. To that end, the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law expressly provide the above-described signature verification framework that (a) preserves the purity of elections and guards against abuses of the elective franchise by ensuring that each absent voter application and absent voter ballot originated from, and was completed by, the intended voter, while also (b) ensuring that those absentee voters whose identities could not be verified as a result of missing or mismatched signatures have an opportunity to cure their deficient application or ballot such that the signature verification process does not prevent any qualified elector from voting.

101. Akin to verifying a voter's identity at a polling place through either the showing of an approved form of identification or completing an affidavit in the presence of an election inspector under Michigan law, this signature verification process is pivotal to protecting the integrity of Michigan elections.

102. Unlike the verification of identity at polling places, however, the signature verification process is completed by local clerks outside the presence of election inspectors, election challengers, and poll watchers. See, e.g., MCL 168.765(2) (providing that signature verification must be completed by the "city or township clerk," and further providing that ". . . a precinct board of election inspectors or an absent voter counting board must not make any further signature verification for an absent voter ballot return envelope.") (emphasis added); MCL 168.768 ("If the elector's signature is missing or the statement that the absent voter ballot is approved for tabulation is incomplete, the board of election inspectors must immediately contact the city or township clerk.").

103. In other words, unlike the verification of the identity of those voters who vote in-person, which occurs in the presence of election inspectors, election challengers, and poll watchers, the verification of the identity of an absent voter through the signature verification process occurs behind closed doors and only in the presence of clerks and their subordinates.

104. The Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions—including the presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures and Rule 168.24—were applied during the February 27, 2024 presidential primary election. In other words, the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity and Rule 168.24 were applied to signatures on more than one million absent voter applications leading up to the February 27, 2024 presidential primary election, and were then applied to more than 934,000 absent voter ballot return envelopes during the election itself.

105. This, despite the fact that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures was not promulgated in accordance with the APA, and despite the fact that both the presumption of validity and Rule 168.24 are directly inconsistent with both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law.

106. As a result, Plaintiffs have no other adequate remedy than to bring this suit to ensure that Michigan's Constitution and Election Law—rather than the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity and Rule 168.24—are enforced during the August 2024 primary election, the November 2024 general election, and beyond.

COUNT I – VIOLATIONS OF THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTION (PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY)

107. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

108. As set forth in paragraphs 1-7, 37-39, 46, 64, 83, and 85-87 (among others) of this Verified Complaint, the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures is directly inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution.

109. Injunctive and declaratory relief are therefore necessary to remedy the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures. Plaintiffs are unable to reconcile the mandate set forth in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions requiring that absent voter signatures are entitled to a presumption of validity with those provided under the Michigan Constitution.

110. There is a current ripe case or controversy between the parties concerning the legality of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions. Local clerks have already reviewed absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes pursuant to the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity. This undoubtedly has and will continue to result in invalid ballots being counted despite missing or mismatched absent voter signatures. Absent declaratory or injunctive relief from this Court, that presumption will continue to be applied in future elections, in which case Plaintiffs' respective rights and interests will continue to be violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts, including the issuance of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding continued implementation of the Secretary's mandate that absent voter signatures be entitled to a presumption of validity.

111. For the reasons explained above, Plaintiffs will face irreparable harm if the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures remain in place, and justice requires the issuance of injunctive relief.

112. It is in the public interest to issue injunctive relief to ensure that Michigan's elections are carried out in accordance with the Michigan Constitution, and specifically to ensure that, inter alia, election officials verify the identity of absentee voters as required under the Michigan Constitution. Aside from being mandated by the Michigan Constitution, this signature verification process is critical to election security and designed to ensure that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter.

113. Plaintiffs lack an adequate remedy at law to prevent the enforcement of the Secretary's unlawful Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures.

114. Finally, the balance of harms clearly weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. To not enjoin unlawful directives such as the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures set forth in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions would allow a single state officer to circumvent (and essentially amend) valid and enforceable constitutional mandates on the same subject. That is certainly not in the public interest, which expects its public officials to follow the law. Nor would the public be harmed by such relief as they, too, have an interest in ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections and that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter as required under the Michigan Constitution.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and is therefore unenforceable; that this Court enjoin the Secretary from implementing her presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election; that this Court order the Secretary to rescind her Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language in that document instructing local election officials that signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes are entitled to a presumption of validity, and issue new Signature Verification Instructions directing local election officials to verify the identity of any voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Constitution; and that this Court award any other relief that it deems just and equitable.

COUNT II – VIOLATIONS OF THE MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW (PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY)

115. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

116. As set forth in paragraphs 1-6, 37-42, 46, 64, 83-84, and 86-87 (among others) of this Verified Complaint, the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures is directly inconsistent with the Michigan Election Law.

117. Injunctive and declaratory relief are therefore necessary to remedy the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures. Plaintiffs are unable to reconcile the mandate set forth in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions requiring that absent voter signatures are entitled to a presumption of validity with those provided under the Michigan Election Law.

118. There is a current ripe case or controversy between the parties concerning the legality of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions. Local clerks have already reviewed absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes pursuant to the Secretary's unlawful presumption of validity. This undoubtedly has and will continue to result in invalid ballots being counted despite missing or mismatched absent voter signatures. Absent declaratory or injunctive relief from this Court, that presumption will continue to be applied in future elections, in which case Plaintiffs' respective rights and interests will continue to be violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts, including the issuance of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding continued implementation of the Secretary's mandate that absent voter signatures be entitled to a presumption of validity.

119. For the reasons explained above, Plaintiffs will face irreparable harm if the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures remain in place, and justice requires the issuance of injunctive relief.

120. It is in the public interest to issue injunctive relief to ensure that Michigan's elections are carried out in accordance with the Michigan Election Law, and specifically to ensure that, inter alia, election officials verify the identity of absentee voters as required under the Michigan Election Law. Aside from being mandated by the Michigan Election Law, this signature verification process is critical to election security and designed to ensure that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter.

121. Plaintiffs lack an adequate remedy at law to prevent the enforcement of the Secretary's unlawful Signature Verification Instructions and corresponding presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures.

122. Finally, the balance of harms clearly weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. To not enjoin unlawful directives such as the Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures set forth in the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions would allow a single state officer to circumvent (and essentially amend) valid and enforceable state laws on the same subject. That is certainly not in the public interest, which expects its public officials to follow the law. Nor would the public be harmed by such relief as they, too, have an interest in ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections and that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter as required under Michigan law.

voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Election Law; and that this Court award any other relief that it deems just and equitable.

COUNT III – VIOLATION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES ACT

123. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

124. Under MCL 168.31, the Secretary is required to "issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 to 24.328, for the conduct of elections and registrations in accordance with the laws of this state."

125. As set forth in paragraphs 6-8, 47-50, 64-72, 74-82, and 88-89 (among others) of this Verified Complaint, the Secretary issued a rule by including in her Signature Verification Instructions the mandate that local election officials apply a presumption of validity as to all absent voter signatures.

126. The Secretary's presumption of validity as to absent voter signatures constitutes a "rule" under the APA. The Secretary's presumption of validity is an instruction, standard, and/or procedure generally applicable to all absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballots, and contains a mandatory statement from this state's chief elections office declaring that clerks must presume that signatures are valid. See MCL 24.207; see also Ex. A, at 3 ("Voter signatures are entitled to an initial presumption of validity.").

127. The Secretary issued this rule without following the procedures required under the APA.

128. Because the Secretary failed to comply with the APA when she included in her Signature Verification Instructions the mandate that local election officials apply a presumption of validity as to all absent voter signatures, this Court should find that the Secretary's presumption of validity rule is invalid, and should require that the corresponding text of the Michigan Constitution and Michigan Election Law be enforced.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

129. The Secretary's actions here are also subject to collateral estoppel.

130. The elements of collateral estoppel are: (1) a question of fact or law essential to the judgment that was actually litigated and determined by a valid and final judgment; (2) the same parties had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue; and (3) mutuality of estoppel.

131. The legal question addressed in Genetski was whether the Secretary's signature verification guidance, which included the Secretary's instruction that signatures on absent voter applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes be presumed valid, was issued in violation of the APA. See Ex B (concluding that the Secretary's signature verification standards "amounted to a 'rule' that should have been promulgated in accordance with the APA. And absent compliance with the APA, the 'rule' is invalid."); see also id. at 10 ("Policy determinations like the one at issue—which places a thumb on the scale in favor of a signature's validity—should be made pursuant to properly promulgated rules under the APA or by the Legislature."). Therefore, the first element of collateral estoppel is satisfied here.

132. The Michigan Republican Party, which was a plaintiff in Genetski, is a plaintiff here, too. Likewise, Secretary Benson and Director Brater were both defendants in Genetski just as they are here, too. Therefore, the second and third elements of collateral estoppel are satisfied here.

133. The burden of persuasion in Genetski was the same as in the present matter.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is a "rule" as that term is defined under the APA, that the Secretary failed to follow the applicable requirements under the APA when she promulgated that rule, and that the rule is therefore invalid; that this Court find that the doctrine of offensive collateral estoppel applies here by virtue of this Court's decision in Genetski; that this Court enjoin the Secretary from implementing her presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election; that this Court order the Secretary to rescind their Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language in that document instructing local election officials that signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes are entitled to a presumption of validity, and issue new Signature Verification Instructions directing local election officials to verify the identity of any voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law; and that this Court award any other relief that it deems just and equitable.

COUNT IV – VIOLATIONS OF THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTION (RULE 168.24)

134. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

135. As set forth in paragraphs 1-5, 9-11, 37-39, 46, 90-92, 94, and 96-97 (among others) of this Verified Complaint, the Secretary's Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code is directly inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution.

136. Injunctive and declaratory relief are therefore necessary to remedy the Secretary's unlawful mandate under Rule 168.24 requiring election officials to approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation. Plaintiffs are unable to reconcile that mandate with those provided under the Michigan Constitution.

137. There is a current ripe case or controversy between the parties concerning the legality of Rule 168.24. Local clerks have already reviewed absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes pursuant to Rule 168.24. This undoubtedly has and will continue to result in invalid ballots being counted despite missing or mismatched absent voter signatures. Absent declaratory or injunctive relief from this Court, this unlawful acceptance of absent voter signatures based on mere speculation will continue in future election, in which case Plaintiffs' respective rights and interests will continue to be violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts, including the promulgation of Rule 168.24, the issuance of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions, and the corresponding continued implementation of the Secretary's mandate that election officials accept signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation.

138. For the reasons explained above, Plaintiffs will face irreparable harm if the Secretary's Rule 168.24 remains in place, and justice requires the issuance of injunctive relief.

141. Finally, the balance of harms clearly weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. To not enjoin unlawful directives such as the Secretary's Rule 168.24 mandate would allow a single state officer to circumvent (and essentially amend) valid and enforceable constitutional mandates on the same subject. That is certainly not in the public interest, which expects its public officials to follow the law. Nor would the public be harmed by such relief as they, too, have an interest in ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections and that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter as required under the Michigan Constitution.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court declare that the Secretary's mandate under Rule 168.24 requiring election officials to accept signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation is inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and is therefore unenforceable; that this Court enjoin the Secretary from implementing Rule 168.24 in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election; that this Court order the Secretary to rescind her Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language in that document instructing local election officials to accept signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation, and issue new Signature Verification Instructions directing local election officials to verify the identity of any voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Constitution; and that this Court award any other relief that it deems just and equitable.

COUNT V – VIOLATIONS OF THE MICHIGAN ELECTION LAW (RULE 168.24)

142. Plaintiffs incorporate the allegations of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully stated herein.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

143. As set forth in paragraphs 1-5, 9-11, 37-42, 46, 90-93, and 95-97 (among others) of this Verified Complaint, the Secretary's Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code is directly inconsistent with the Michigan Election Law.

144. Injunctive and declaratory relief are therefore necessary to remedy the Secretary's unlawful mandate under Rule 168.24 requiring election officials to accept signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation. Plaintiffs are unable to reconcile that mandate with those provided under the Michigan Election Law.

145. There is a current ripe case or controversy between the parties concerning the legality of Rule 168.24. Local clerks have already reviewed absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes pursuant to Rule 168.24. This undoubtedly has and will continue to result in invalid ballots being counted despite missing or mismatched absent voter signatures. Absent declaratory or injunctive relief from this Court, this unlawful acceptance of absent voter signatures based on mere speculation will continue in future elections, in which case Plaintiffs' respective rights and interests will continue to be violated and jeopardized by the Secretary's acts, including the promulgation of Rule 168.24, the issuance of the Secretary's Signature Verification Instructions, and the corresponding continued implementation of the Secretary's mandate that election officials approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation.

146. For the reasons explained above, Plaintiffs will face irreparable harm if the Secretary's Rule 168.24 remains in place, and justice requires the issuance of injunctive relief.

147. It is in the public interest to issue injunctive relief to ensure that Michigan's elections are carried out in accordance with the Michigan Election Law, and specifically to ensure that, inter alia, election officials verify the identity of absentee voters as required under the Michigan Election Law. Aside from being mandated by the Michigan Election Law, this signature verification process is critical to election security and designed to ensure that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter.

148. Plaintiffs lack an adequate remedy at law to prevent the enforcement of the Secretary's unlawful mandate under Rule 168.24 requiring election officials to approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation.

149. Finally, the balance of harms clearly weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. To not enjoin unlawful directives such as the Secretary's Rule 168.24 mandate would allow a single state officer to circumvent (and essentially amend) valid and enforceable state laws on the same subject. That is certainly not in the public interest, which expects its public officials to follow the law. Nor would the public be harmed by such relief as they, too, have an interest in ensuring the integrity and accuracy of Michigan's elections and that each application for an absent voter ballot and each corresponding absent voter ballot originated from and was completed by the intended voter as required under the Michigan Election Law.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court declare that the Secretary's mandate under Rule 168.24 requiring election officials to approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation is inconsistent with the Michigan Election Law and is therefore unenforceable; that this Court enjoin the Secretary from implementing Rule 168.24 in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election; that this Court order the Secretary to rescind her Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language in that document instructing local election officials to approve signatures with discrepancies based on mere speculation, and issue new Signature Verification Instructions directing local election officials to verify the identity of any voter who applies for or who votes an absent voter ballot as required by the Michigan Election Law; and that this Court award any other relief that it deems just and equitable.

REQUEST FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Honorable Court order "a speedy hearing" of this action and "advance it on the calendar" as provided under MCR 2.605(D), and that it issue the following relief:

A. Declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is inconsistent with the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law and is therefore unenforceable;

B. Declare that the Secretary's presumption of validity as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes is a "rule" as that term is defined under the APA, that the Secretary failed to follow the applicable requirements under the APA when she promulgated that rule, and that the rule is therefore invalid;

C. Declare that Rule 168.24 of the Michigan Administrative Code is inconsistent with both the Michigan Constitution and the Michigan Election Law and is therefore unenforceable;

D. Enjoin the Secretary from implementing her presumption of validity and Rule 168.24 as to signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes in advance of the August 6, 2024 primary election and the November 5, 2024 general election;

E. Order the Secretary to rescind their Signature Verification Instructions, strike the language in that document instructing local election officials that signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes are entitled to a presumption of validity,

F. Award Plaintiffs their costs, expenses, and attorney fees incurred in this action; and

G. Award any other relief this Honorable Court deems just and equitable.

Introduction

Michigan election law requires absent voter (AV) ballot applications to be signed for an AV ballot to be issued. It also requires election officials to verify that the signature on an AV ballot envelope agrees sufficiently with the voter's signature in the Qualified Voter File (QVF) or the voter's signature on the AV ballot application for the ballot to be tabulated. Michigan election law and the department's administrative rules require AV applications and ballots to be accepted unless the signature does not agree sufficiently with the voter's signature on file. MCL 168.761, 765a, 766, 766a, 766b, R 168.21, et seq.

This document provides instructions for:

1. Reviewing signatures immediately upon receipt and providing voter notification for a mismatched signature.
2. Verifying the voter's signature against the QVF.
3. Curing missing or mismatched signatures.

Reviewing signatures immediately upon receipt and providing voter notification for a mismatched signature

Upon receipt, clerks must review absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot envelopes (AV application or ballot envelope) as soon as possible to determine whether a signature has been provided and whether the signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file. If a clerk determines that the voter's signature on the AV ballot application or AV ballot return envelope is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, the clerk must reject that application or return envelope and provide the voter with notice and the opportunity to cure the deficiency. Under the Michigan Constitution, the voter "has a right to be notified immediately and afforded due process, including an equitable opportunity to correct the issue with the signature." Mich. Const. Art II, Sec 4(1)(h).

Beginning 45 days before an election, Michigan election law requires clerks to notify a voter of a missing or mismatched signature on the voter's AV ballot or AV return envelope.

Between 45 and six calendar days before an election, the clerk must make a reasonable effort to verify or reject the AV ballot application or AV return envelope and to notify the voter of a signature deficiency no later than the end of the next business day following receipt.

Beginning five calendar days before the election and on Election Day, the clerk must verify or reject the AV ballot application or AV return envelope by the end of the calendar day of receipt.

The clerk must notify the voter of the signature deficiency by telephone, email, or text message, if available, or by U.S. mail if the other options are not available. The notice must indicate all of the following:

- The nature of the deficiency and that the deficiency has resulted in the rejection of the voter's AV ballot application or AV ballot return envelope
- The need to cure the deficiency in order for the AV ballot application to be accepted or for the AV ballot to be tabulated
- How to cure the deficiency
- The deadline for curing the deficiency
- The alternative methods of voting if the deficiency is not cured

A voter may cure a deficiency by completing and submitting a cure form. Michigan election law requires voters be permitted to receive and return a cure form electronically, in person, or by mail with postage prepaid. A voter must be permitted to submit an electronic image of the voter's physical signature for a cure form returned electronically. A cure form must be accepted if the signature on the cure form agrees sufficiently with the signature on file. If the clerk determines that the signature on the cure form does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, the clerk must reject the cure form and contact the voter to provide information on other options to cure the deficiency and to provide the alternative methods of voting available for that election. If an AV application or AV ballot is rejected because the signature is missing or does not sufficiently agree with the signature on file, the cure form will be available to print from QVF for that voter.

For AV applications, the clerk must inform the voter of the need to cure the signature deficiency and the voter's options for doing so:

- Before 4 p.m. on the Friday before Election Day, by returning a cure form electronically, in person, or by mail. (Clerks must not send an AV ballot to an applicant by first-class mail after 5 p.m. on the fourth day before Election Day.)

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

- Between 4 p.m. on the Friday and 4 p.m. on the Monday before Election Day, in person at the clerk's office.
- After 4 p.m. on the Monday before Election Day, (if available for that election) or at the precinct on Election Day (it is too late to cure the application for an AV ballot).

For AV ballot return envelopes, the clerk should inform the voter of the need to cure the signature deficiency and the voter's options for confirming that the voter signed the ballot or for providing a signature:

- By 5 p.m. on the third day after Election Day, the voter must confirm that the voter signed the ballot return envelope or provide a signature, either in person or by submitting an electronic image of the physical signature. An AV ballot return envelope that has not been cured by 8 p.m. on Election Day must be retained at the clerk's office.

An AV ballot return envelope that is cured after the close of polls on Election Day but before 5 p.m. on the third day after the election must be tabulated if the voter did not vote in person. If a cure form which resolves the signature deficiency on a voter's AV ballot return envelope is received by the clerk by 5 p.m. on the third day following the election, the clerk must approve the AV ballot for tabulation. Any AV ballot return envelopes that have not be cured by the deadline remain rejected.

Clerks must determine whether the signature being validated agrees sufficiently with the signature on file. Voter signatures are entitled to an initial presumption of validity. An initial presumption of validity does not mean that all signatures are "presumed valid" without further review. Instead, clerks must review all signatures and should determine that a signature does not agree sufficiently on file only after completing review of the signature as described in these instructions and in Michigan election law, MCL 168.766a, et seq.; and R 168.21, et seq.

Clerks should consider a voter's signature questionable only if it differs in significant and obvious respects from the signature on file. Slight dissimilarities should be resolved in favor of the voter. Exact matches are not required.

Redeeming qualities

When reviewing petition signatures that are not a perfect match with the signature on file, clerks must consider whether there are redeeming qualities

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

in the signature as compared to the signature on file. The following list includes some possible explanations for signatures that do not match exactly, but keep in mind that other legitimate reasons may exist. Redeeming qualities include but are not limited to the following:

- Similar distinctive flourishes between the application or envelope and the QVF
- More matching features than nonmatching features
- Signature features do not match because it appears as if the voter's hand is trembling or shaking
- Only part of the signature matches the signature on file, for example, if only the first letters of the first and last name match
- Signature is partially printed but partially matches the signature on file
- Signature is a recognized diminutive of the voter's full legal name
- Signature omits a middle name, replaces a middle name with an initial, or replaces a middle initial with a name
- Signature style has changed slightly from signature on file

Explanations for differences in signatures

Clerks must also consider the following as possible reasons for discrepancies in signatures:

- Evidence of trembling or shaking in a signature could be health-related or the result of aging
- The voter may have used a diminutive of their full legal name, including, but not limited to, the use of initials, or the rearrangement of components of their full legal name, or omitting a second last name
- The voter's signature style may have changed slightly over time
- The signature may have been written in haste
- The surface of the location where the signature was made may have been rough, soft, uneven, or unstable

Clerks may also consider factors applicable to a particular voter, such as the age of the voter, the age of the signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, the possibility that the voter is disabled, the voter's primary language, and the quality of any digitized signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, and any other plausible reason given by the voter that satisfies the clerk when following up on a questionable signature.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Voter communication

If clerks have genuine concerns about a signature's validity, they have the option of contacting the voter during the review process and obtaining an explanation from a voter (for example, the voter injured their hand), that satisfies the clerk that the signature is valid. This communication does not satisfy the separate requirement to notify voters who are found to have a missing or mismatched signature, which must be provided when required as discussed in the next section.

Voters should be encouraged to sign AV ballot applications and AV ballot return envelopes in a way that reasonably resembles the signature given for driver's license/state ID or voter registration purposes, so that the signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file.

Curing a missing or mismatched signature

Clerks should review for missing or questionable signatures, and notify voters of these issues, using the timeline and procedures specified in the section of this document regarding "Reviewing signatures immediately upon receipt and providing voter notification for a mismatched signature." As noted, clerks should use any and all means available to contact voters, including phone, email, and mail. Written notice must always be issued. Two sample written notices are included at the end of this document; one asks the voter to provide a signature to compare against the ballot application signature and the other to provide a signature to compare against the ballot signature. Clerks do not need to use these exact notices.

The clerk must retain proof of having provided written notice to the voter and any signed forms returned to the clerk for 22 months following the final certification of the election.

Sample notice to voter who must provide application signature

Dear Voter,

Your absent voter ballot application will be REJECTED because of a missing signature or because of your signature did not match the signature on file. You WILL NOT BE ISSUED an absentee ballot because of the signature discrepancy, unless you TAKE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING ACTIONS:

- Sign this signature cure form and mail it back to the clerk's office at [address], fax it to [number], or scan/photograph and email this signed form to [email]. The form must be received by 4 p.m. on the Friday before Election Day to allow time for the mailing of your absentee ballot. Please come to your local clerk's office in person if there are seven or fewer days to Election Day.

- You may visit the clerk's office at [address] and re-sign the application until 4 p.m. on the Monday before Election Day.

- If you do not cure the absent voter ballot application by 4 p.m. the Monday before Election Day, you may still vote at your early voting site (if available for the election) or at your precinct on Election Day.

OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING SUMMARY DISPOSITION IN PART TO PLAINTIFFS AND GRANTING SUMMARY DISPOSITION IN PART TO DEFENDANTS

Case No. 20-000216-MM

Hon. Christopher M. Murray

Before the Court is defendants' January 20, 2021 motion for summary disposition filed pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(4) and (C)(8), as well as plaintiffs' February 3, 2021 cross-motion for summary disposition filed pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8). Plaintiffs' cross-motion will be GRANTED in part with respect to Count II of the amended complaint because the challenged signature-matching standards were issued in violation of the Administrative Procedures Act. As a result of the grant of summary disposition in plaintiffs' favor on Count II, Count I of the amended complaint will be dismissed without prejudice. In addition, defendants' motion for summary disposition will be GRANTED in part with respect to Counts III and IV of the amended complaint.

I. BACKGROUND

The issues raised implicate signature-matching requirements for absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballot return envelopes contained in this state's election law. MCL

168.759 and MCL 168.761 require voters to sign applications for absent voter ballots in order to receive a ballot. In addition, this state's election laws require voters who choose to vote by absent voter ballot to sign their absent voter ballot return envelopes in order to have their ballots counted. MCL 168.764a. The signatures on the applications and the return envelopes are compared against signatures in the qualified voter file or those that appear on the "master registration card" in order to determine whether the signatures match. Signatures on applications or return envelopes that do not "agree sufficiently" with those on file are to be rejected. MCL 168.761(2). As of October 6, 2020, MCL 168.761(2)[1] was amended by 2020 PA 177 to give notice to voters' whose signatures do not "agree sufficiently" with those on file that their absent voter ballot application has been rejected. The purpose of the notice is to give voters the opportunity to correct inaccuracies with absent voter ballot signatures. The same notice requirements also apply to rejected signatures for absent voter ballots. MCL 168.765a(6). There is no dispute that this state's election law does not define what it means for signatures to "agree" or to "agree sufficiently" for purposes of comparing the signature on file with the signature on a received absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot.

On the day PA 177 became effective, defendant Jocelyn Benson issued what defendants refer to as "guidance" for local clerks who are charged with inspecting signatures on absent voter ballot applications and ballots. The document, which was entitled "Absent Voter Ballot Processing: Signature Verification and Voter Notification Standards" largely mirrored guidance defendant Benson had previously issued. This guidance regarding signature verification forms the heart of the issues in the present case and it requires additional examination.

[1] 2020 PA 302 further amended MCL 168.761 and other provisions of this state's election law. Those amendments do not become effective until June 27, 2021. This opinion and order only examines those provisions of the statute that are currently in effect at this time. And no issues have been raised with respect to the yet-to-be-effective statutory requirements.

The stated purpose of the at-issue document was to "provide[ ] standards" for reviewing signatures, verifying signatures, and curing missing or mismatched signatures. Under a heading entitled "Procedures for Signature Verification," the document stated that signature review "begins with the presumption that" the signature on an absent voter ballot application or envelope is valid. Further, the form instructs clerks to, if there are "any redeeming qualities in the [absent voter] application or return envelope signature as compared to the signature on file, treat the signature as valid." (Emphasis in original). "Redeeming qualities" are described as including, but not being limited to, "similar distinctive flourishes," and "more matching features than nonmatching features." Signatures "should be considered questionable" the guidance explained, only if they differ "in multiple, significant and obvious respects from the signature on file." (Emphasis in original). "[W]henever possible," election officials were to resolve "[s]light dissimilarities" in favor of finding that the voter's signature was valid.[2]

The section on signature-verification procedures goes on to repeat the notion that "clerks should presume that a voter's [absent voter] application or envelope signature is his or her genuine signature, as there are several acceptable reasons that may cause an apparent mismatch." (Emphasis omitted). Next, the guidance gave excuses or hypothetical explanations for why signatures on absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballots might not be an exact match to those that are on file. Finally, the document again mentioned the presumption when, in conclusion, it stated that clerks "must perform their signature verification duties with the presumption that the voter's [absent voter] application or envelope signature is his or her genuine signature." (Emphasis added). By all accounts, the guidance set forth in that document was not limited to the then-upcoming November 2020 general election, nor has it been rescinded. Rather, it appears that the guidance remains in effect for local clerks with respect to upcoming elections.

II. PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Robert Genetski is the Allegan County Clerk. He, along with plaintiff Michigan Republican Party, filed a complaint alleging that defendant Benson's October 6, 2020 guidance is unlawful. The December 30, 2020 amended complaint alleges that the presumption in favor of finding valid signatures is unlawful, as is the directive to find "any redeeming qualities" for signatures. They contend that the presumption contained in the guidance issued by defendant Benson will allow invalid votes to be counted. Plaintiff Genetski has not, however, alleged that this guidance caused him to accept a signature that he believed was invalid.

The four-count amended complaint asks the Court to issue declaratory and injunctive relief with respect to future elections. Count I alleges that defendant Benson violated various provisions of this state's election law by issuing the challenged guidance regarding signature-matching requirements which allegedly conflicts with this state's election law. They ask the Court to issue injunctive relief to remedy the allegedly unlawful guidance. Additionally, they seek a declaratory ruling regarding the validity of defendant Benson's guidance.

Count II of the amended complaint alleges that defendant Benson's guidance was a "rule" as defined by the Administrative Procedures Act (APA) that was issued without compliance with the APA. Plaintiffs allege that the guidance is in fact a rule because it is generally applicable and requires local election officials to apply a mandatory presumption of validity to signatures. Plaintiffs ask the Court to declare that the "rule" is invalid.

Count III alleges a violation of Const 1963, art 1, §§ 2 and 5, as defendant Benson's guidance will result in the counting of invalid absent voter ballots which will ultimately result in the dilution of valid votes cast by this state's electorate. They argue that defendant Benson's guidance is so vague and imprecise that it cannot be applied uniformly throughout the state.[3]

Count IV alleges that plaintiff Genetski had a right to request an audit of his choosing under Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h) as it relates to absent voter ballots. Plaintiffs acknowledge that defendants have announced and/or completed a state-wide audit of the November 2020 general election; however, according to plaintiffs, the audit does not address plaintiffs' concerns because it did not review whether signatures on absent voter ballots were properly evaluated. Plaintiffs ask the Court to declare that the right to request an audit under art 2, § 4(1)(h) encompasses the type of absent-voter-ballot review requested in the amended complaint. Plaintiff also suggests the manner in which such an audit should be conducted.

III. ANALYSIS

A. MOOTNESS AND RIPENESS

Defendants argue that this Court should refrain from evaluating the merits of plaintiffs' complaint because the issues are either moot or not ripe. With respect to mootness, there is no dispute that Count III, which raises an equal protection claim arising out of the November 2020

[3] Plaintiffs' briefing has conceded that this claim is now moot, with the November 2020 election having already come and gone. As a result, the Court will not address this claim in any additional detail.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

general election, is moot and must be dismissed. However, the Court declines to find that plaintiffs' remaining challenges are either moot or not ripe. Those issues concern the validity of guidance that is still in effect (Counts I and II), or an audit (Count IV) that, according to the plain text of art 2, § 4(1)(h) and MCL 168.31a, may be requested after the election has occurred. Moreover, defendants have not advanced a specific mootness/ripeness argument with respect to the audit claim. As a result, the Court declines to find that the issues raised in Counts I, II, and IV of the amended complaint would have no practical effect on an existing controversy or that it would be impossible to render relief. Cf. Garrett v Washington, 314 Mich App 436, 449-450; 886 NW2d 762 (2016) (describing the mootness doctrine).

The Court also rejects defendants' contention that there is no actual controversy. As noted, plaintiffs seek declaratory relief. MCR 2.605(A)(1) requires that there be "a case of actual controversy" for the issuance of declaratory relief. "In general, 'actual controversy' exists where a declaratory judgment or decree is necessary to guide a plaintiff's future conduct in order to preserve his legal rights." Shavers v Kelley, 402 Mich 554, 588; 267 NW2d 72 (1978). Here, plaintiffs—particularly plaintiff Genetski, who is a local clerk subject to the guidance at issue—sought a declaration regarding whether he is and will continue to be subject to guidance that by all accounts remains in effect at this time. This clearly presents an actual controversy that is appropriate for declaratory relief. See id.

Defendants argue that no actual controversy exists because the Legislature could change the applicable law, or because defendant Benson could decide to revoke the guidance. That argument would seek to turn the requirements of declaratory relief on their head and would eviscerate the purpose of declaratory relief. If the Court were to adopt the view that no actual controversy exists because the law could change, there could be no limit to the number of cases that could be dismissed as moot. Here, plaintiffs have sought a declaration as to their legal rights with respect to the validity of a currently existing directive issued by defendant Benson in advance of the next election. That the law could hypothetically change in the future is not a reason to avoid issuing a declaration of the parties' currently existing legal rights, as plaintiffs have sought here. Indeed, the ability to seek an advance declaration of legal rights on an existing policy is one of the very reasons why the declaratory judgment rule was adopted in the first instance. See UAW v Central Mich Univ Trustees, 295 Mich App 486, 496; 815 NW2d 132 (2012) (discussing the purposes of the declaratory judgment rule).

B. WHETHER DEFENDANT'S ACTIONS VIOLATED THE APA

The dispositive issue, as the Court see it, concerns the APA and whether defendant Benson was required to comply with the APA when she issued the "Signature Verification and Voter Notification Standards." The Secretary of State has authority, under MCL 168.31(1)(a), to "issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 to 24.328, for the conduct of elections and registrations in accordance with the laws of this state." Under the APA, a "rule" is defined as "an agency regulation, statement, standard, policy, ruling, or instruction of general applicability that implements or applies law enforced or administered by the agency, or that prescribes the organization, procedure, or practice of the agency, including the amendment, suspension, or rescission of the law enforced or administered by the agency."[4] MCL 24.207. A "rule" not promulgated in accordance with the [4] There is no dispute that defendant Benson is subject to the APA, generally. See MCL 24.203(2) (defining "agency" in a way that includes the Secretary of State). The only dispute is whether this particular action is subject to the APA.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

APA's procedures is invalid. MCL 24.243; MCL 24.245; Pharris v Secretary of State, 117 Mich App 202, 205; 323 NW2d 652 (1982).

An agency must utilize formal APA rulemaking procedures when establishing policies that "do not merely interpret or explain the statute or rules from which the agency derives its authority," but rather "establish the substantive standards implementing the program." Faircloth v Family Indep Agency, 232 Mich App 391, 403-404; 591 NW2d 314 (1998). "[I]n order to reflect the APA's preference for policy determinations pursuant to rules, the definition of 'rule' is to be broadly construed, while the exceptions are to be narrowly construed." AFSCME v Dep't of Mental Health, 452 Mich 1, 10; 550 NW2d 190 (1996). It is a question of law whether an agency policy is invalid because it was not promulgated as a rule under the APA. In re PSC Guidelines for Transactions Between Affiliates, 252 Mich App 254, 263; 652 NW2d 1 (2002).

As for whether the guidance or directive at issue is a "rule" subject to the APA, the Court must look beyond the labels used by the agency and make an independent determination of whether the action taken by the agency was permissible or whether it was an impermissible rule that evaded the APA's requirements. AFSCME, 452 Mich at 9. In other words, the Court "must review the actual action undertaken by the directive, to see whether the policy being implemented has the effect of being a rule." Id. (citation and quotation marks omitted).

Examining the "Signature Verification and Voter Notification Standards" through that lens, the Court agrees with plaintiffs that the same constitutes a "rule" that should have been promulgated pursuant to the APA's procedures. The standards are generally applicable to all absent voter ballot applications and absent voter ballots, and it contains a mandatory statement from defendant, this state's chief election officer, see MCL 168.21, declaring that all local clerks

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

"must perform their signature verification duties" in accordance with the instructions. (Emphasis added). In addition, clerks must presume that signatures are valid. That this presumption is mandatory convinces the Court that it is not merely guidance, but instead is a generally applied standard that implements this state's signature-matching laws. See MCL 24.207 (defining "rule"); AFSCME, 451 Mich at 8 (describing what constitutes a "rule" under the APA); Spear v Mich Rehab Servs, 202 Mich App 1, 5; 507 NW2d 761 (1993) (focusing on the mandatory nature of policies in support of the conclusion that the same constituted a "rule" under the APA).

Defendants cite three statutory exceptions to rulemaking—MCL 24.207(g), (h), and (j)—but the Court is not persuaded that the standards are saved by any of these exceptions. The first argument is that MCL 24.207(j), which is sometimes referred to as the "permissive power exception," applies and exempts the standards from the APA's rulemaking requirements. MCL 24.207(j) exempts from the APA's definition of "rule," a "decision by an agency to exercise or not to exercise a permissive statutory power, although private rights or interests are affected." Here, defendant Benson points to MCL 168.31(1)(a) as the source of her "permissive statutory power." That statute provides that the Secretary of State "shall" "issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.201 to 24.328, for the conduct of elections and registrations in accordance with the laws of this state." MCL 168.31(1)(a). According to defendant Benson, MCL 168.31(1)(a) allows her to eschew the rule-making process in order to issue "instructions" like the standards at issue.

The Court disagrees. First, the Court disagrees with defendants' characterization of the standards at issue, for the reasons stated above. Second, the cited statutory authority requires defendant Benson to issue instructions that are "in accordance with the laws of this state." MCL 168.31(1)(a). Here, it is not apparent that the mandatory presumption of signature validity is "in accordance with the laws of this state."[5] To that end, nowhere in this state's election law has the Legislature indicated that signatures are to be presumed valid, nor did the Legislature require that signatures are to be accepted so long as there are any redeeming qualities in the application or return envelope signature as compared with the signature on file. Policy determinations like the one at issue—which places a thumb on the scale in favor of a signature's validity—should be made pursuant to properly promulgated rules under the APA or by the Legislature. See AFSCME, 452 Mich at 10.

Third, a review of the plain language of MCL 168.31(1) and of caselaw discussing the permissive-power exemption does not support defendants' argument.[6] The primary problem with defendant Benson's argument is that the language in MCL 168.31(1) is too generic to support her positions. MCL 168.31(1)(a) simply states that the secretary shall "issue instructions and promulgate rules pursuant to the" APA "for the conduct of elections." If that were sufficient to constitute an explicit or implicit grant of authority to be excepted from the APA rule-making process, then defendants would never have to issue APA-promulgated rules for any election-related matters. This view, where the exception would effectively swallow the rule, does not find support in caselaw. See, e.g., AFSCME, 452 Mich at 12. That is, while defendant has statutory discretion to decide whether to take certain actions, the implementation of her discretionary decisions—absent a more precise directive than is contained in the statutes at issue—

[5] Given that the standards are invalid for being enacted without compliance with the APA, the Court declines, for now, to determine whether the mandatory presumption imposed is contrary to the law, as plaintiffs have alleged in Count I. Resolution of that issue becomes unnecessary in light of the decision to grant relief to plaintiffs on Count II of the complaint.

[6] The Court incorporates and restates its reasoning and discussion of a similar issue from Davis v Benson, (Docket Nos. 20-000207-MZ & 20-000208-MM).

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

must still adhere to the APA if that implementation takes the form of a rule. See id. (recognizing that the Department of Mental Health did not need to take a certain action; however, once the Department exercised its discretion to act, the implementation of the decision "must be promulgated as a rule."); Spear, 202 Mich App at 5 (holding that while the agency's "decision to employ a needs test represents the discretionary exercise of statutory authority exempt from the definition of a rule under [MCL 24.207(j)], the test itself, which is developed by the agency, is not exempt from the definition of a rule and, therefore, must be promulgated as a rule in compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act."). Thus, while defendant Benson undoubtedly has discretion under MCL 168.31 to issue guidance or to instruct local clerks regarding signature validity requirements, the implementation of her discretionary decision can still be subject to the APA's requirements.

Furthermore, the caselaw relied on by defendants in arguing for a different conclusion is easily distinguishable, and, in some cases, even lends support for the Court's conclusion. See e.g., Detroit Base Coalition for Human Rights of Handicapped v Dep't of Social Servs, 431 Mich 172, 187-188; 428 NW2d 335 (1988); Mich Trucking Ass'n v Mich Pub Serv Comm, 225 Mich App 424, 430; 571 NW2d 734 (1997); By Lo Oil Co v Dep't of Treasury, 267 Mich App 19, 47; 703 NW2d 822 (2005). In the cases cited above, the pertinent agency's enabling statute expressly or impliedly authorized the specific action later taken by the administrative agency; additionally, and significantly, those statutes also permitted the specific action to be achieved either through rulemaking or other means. See Detroit Base Coalition, 428 Mich at 187-188 ("The situations in which courts have recognized decisions of [an agency] as being within the [MCL 24.207(j)] exception are those in which explicit or implicit authorization for the actions in question has been found."). Here, MCL 168.31(1) provides generalized authority to defendant, and it lacks specificity with respect to the action taken (implementation of a mandatory presumption of signature validity), making the statute distinguishable from the statutes at issue in cases such as Detroit Base Coalition, Mich Trucking Ass'n, and By Lo Oil Co.[7]

Defendants raise concerns that this Court's interpretation of MCL 168.31(1)(a) would leave the term "instructions" without any practical effect. According to defendants, this Court's view would raise questions regarding whether defendant Benson could do anything when advising and directing local election officials as to the proper methods of conducting elections. The Court disagrees with the premise of defendants' position because, regardless of what is permissible under MCL 168.31, it is apparent that that which occurred here is not permissible, absent compliance with the APA. Here, defendant issued a mandatory directive and required local election officials to apply a presumption of validity to all signatures on absent voter ballot applications and on absent voter ballots. The presumption is found nowhere in statute. The mandatory presumption goes beyond the realm of mere advice and direction, and instead is a substantive directive that adds to the pertinent signature-matching statutes. And for similar reasons, defendants' arguments about efficiency and the need for quick action do not change the Court's decision. That is, nothing about the Court's opinion should be read as limiting the Secretary of State's ability to take quick action when she so desires. However, when that action takes the form of a rule, then the APA and MCL 168.31 require that the APA be invoked. In other words, the statute gives the Secretary of State

[7] Remarkably, defendants continue to place reliance on the conclusions of the majority in Pyke v Dep't of Social Servs, 182 Mich App 619; 453 NW2d 274 (1990). But as noted in prior opinions, Judge Shepard's dissent in Pyke was later adopted by the Palozolo Court, and as that Court noted, its decision was binding under what is now MCR 7.215(J)(1). Palozolo v Dep't of Social Servs, 189 Mich App 530, 533-534 & n 1; 473 NW2d 765 (1991). The Pyke Court's view on MCL 24.207(j) is irrelevant.

the authority and the ability to meet the needs of a situation. But when the action taken constitutes a "rule" under MCL 24.207, the appropriate procedures must be followed.

Defendants' citation to the rule-making exceptions contained in MCL 24.207(g) and (h)—which are the primary exemptions cited in their reply briefing—are no more convincing. Turning first to MCL 24.207(g), this subsection is an exception to the APA's rule-making requirements for an "intergovernmental, interagency, or intra-agency memorandum, directive, or communication that does not affect the rights of, or procedures and practices available to, the public." This exception is inapplicable, however, because the at-issue standard involves a mandatory presumption that directly affects local election officials' duties with respect to the determination of whether a voter's signature on either an absent voter ballot or a returned ballot will be deemed to be valid. Cf. Kent Co Aeronautics Bd v Dep't of State Police, 239 Mich App 563; 609 NW2d 593 (2000) (finding that a directive fit within the exception where it did not create any obligations or require compliance).

Nor is defendants' citation to the exception contained in MCL 24.207(h) convincing. That exception applies to a "form with instructions, an interpretive statement, a guideline, an informational pamphlet, or other material that in itself does not have the force and effect of law but is merely explanatory." MCL 24.207(h). This exception "must be narrowly construed and requires that the interpretive statement at issue be merely explanatory." Clonlara, Inc v State Bd of Ed, 442 Mich 230, 248; 501 NW2d 88 (1993) (citation and quotation marks omitted). If the purported "interpretive" statement changes the requirements of the law it is alleged to have interpreted, the exception does not apply. Id. See also Schinzel v Dep't of Corrections, 124 Mich App 217, 221; 333 NW2d 519 (1983). Here, because nothing in this state's election law refers to a presumption of validity, let alone a mandatory presumption, the standards at issue cannot be deemed to be merely explanatory. See Clonlara, 442 Mich at 248, 251. That is, rather than merely explaining existing obligations under the law, the standards have imposed new obligations that do not appear within the plain language of this state's signature-matching statutes.

In sum, the standards issued by defendant Benson on October 6, 2020, with respect to signature-matching requirements amounted to a "rule" that should have been promulgated in accordance with the APA. And absent compliance with the APA, the "rule" is invalid. Whether defendant Benson had authority to implement that which she did not need not be decided at this time because it is apparent the APA applied to the type of action taken in this case. Accordingly, plaintiffs are entitled to summary disposition on Count II of the complaint, and the Court will dismiss Count I without prejudice as a result.

C. PLAINTIFFS' AUDIT CLAIMS ARE WITHOUT MERIT

Finally, the Court examines Count IV of the complaint, which concerns plaintiffs' request for an audit. Const 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h), provides that a qualified Michigan voter has the right to have "the results of statewide elections audited" in a manner prescribed by law. (Emphasis added). MCL 168.31a, amended after adoption of the aforementioned audit language, provides as follows:

> (1) In order to ensure compliance with the provisions of this act, after each election the secretary of state may audit election precincts.
> (2) The secretary of state shall prescribe the procedures for election audits that include reviewing the documents, ballots, and procedures used during an election as required in section 4 of article II of the state constitution of 1963. The secretary of state and county clerks shall conduct election audits, including statewide election audits, as set forth in the prescribed procedures. The secretary of state shall train and certify county clerks and their staffs for the purpose of conducting election audits of precincts randomly selected by the secretary of state in their counties. An election audit must include an audit of the results of at least 1 race in each precinct selected for an audit. A statewide election audit must include an audit of the results > of at least 1 statewide race or statewide ballot question in a precinct selected for an audit. An audit conducted under this section is not a recount and does not change any certified election results. The secretary of state shall supervise each county clerk in the performance of election audits conducted under this section.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

> (3) Each county clerk who conducts an election audit under this section shall provide the results of the election audit to the secretary of state within 20 days after the election audit. [Emphasis added.]

Plaintiffs acknowledge that an audit of the November 2020 general election results was conducted. They argue that they have the right to request an audit with respect to the subject of their choosing—signatures on absent voter ballot applications and on absent voter ballots—and in the manner of their choosing. For at least two reasons this claim is not supported by art 2, § 4 or the implementing statute, MCL 168.31a. First, the constitution speaks of an audit of election results, not signature-matching procedures. Second, while the statute allows for an audit that includes "reviewing the documents, ballots, and procedures" used in the election, the statute plainly leaves it to the Secretary of State to "prescribe the procedures for election audits" and mandates that the Secretary of State shall conduct audits "as set forth in the prescribed procedures." In other words, there is no support in the statute for plaintiffs to demand that an audit cover the subject of their choosing or to dictate the manner in which an audit is conducted. MCL 168.31a(2) leaves that to the Secretary of State. As a result, plaintiffs have failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted as it concerns Count IV, and this count will be dismissed with prejudice pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8).

IV. CONCLUSION

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(10), plaintiffs' cross-motion for summary disposition is GRANTED in part with respect to Count II of the amended complaint because the guidance issued by the Secretary of State on October 6, 2020, with respect to signature-matching standards was issued in violation of the Administrative Procedures Act.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that pursuant to MCR 2.116(C)(8) defendants' motion for summary disposition is GRANTED in part on Counts III and IV of the amended complaint.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Count I of the amended complaint is dismissed without prejudice, for the reason that the at-issue standards are invalid under the Administrative Procedures Act.

(By authority conferred on the secretary of state by sections 31, 759, 761, 765, and 765a of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.31, 168.759, 168.761, 168.765, and 168.765a)

R 168.21, R 168.22, R 168.23, R 168.24, R 168.25, and R 168.26 are added to the Michigan Administrative Code, as follows:

R 168.21 Definitions.

Rule 1. As used in these rules:

(a) "Election official" means the township, city, or county clerk or their staff responsible for verifying signatures.

(b) "Qualified voter file" means the voter registration database maintained by the Secretary of State.

(c) "Signature on file" means the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file or on the absent voter ballot application.

R 168.22 Sufficient agreement of voter signature; initial presumption of validity.

Rule 2. (1) In determining for purposes of section 761(2) of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.761, whether a voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, signatures must be reviewed beginning with the presumption that the voter's signature is his or her genuine, valid signature.

(2) A voter's signature should be considered invalid only if it differs in multiple, significant, and obvious respects from the signature on file. Slight dissimilarities should be resolved in favor of the voter. Exact matches are not required to determine that a signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file.

R 168.23 Redeeming qualities.

Rule 3. (1) If there are any redeeming qualities in the absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature as compared to the signature on file, the signature must be treated as valid. The bureau of elections shall provide examples of signatures with redeeming qualities and questionable signatures.

(2) Redeeming qualities include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) Similar distinctive flourishes.

(b) More matching features than nonmatching features.

(c) Signature features do not match because it appears as if the voter's hand is trembling or shaking.

(d) Only part of the signature matches the signature on file, for example, if only the first letters of the first and last name match.

(e) Signature is partially printed but partially matches the signature on file.

(f) Signature is a recognized diminutive of the voter's full legal name.

(g) Signature omits a middle name, replaces a middle name with an initial, or replaces a middle initial with a name.

(h) Signature style has changed slightly from signature on file.

R 168.24 Explanations for differences in signatures.

Rule 4. (1) Elections officials shall consider the following as possible explanations for the discrepancies in signatures:

(a) Evidence of trembling or shaking in a signature could be health-related or the result of aging.

(b) The voter may have used a diminutive of their full legal name, including, but not limited to, the use of initials, or the rearrangement of components of their full legal name, such as a reversal of first and last names, use of a middle name in place of a first name, or omitting a second last name.

(c) The voter's signature style may have changed slightly over time.

(d) The signature on the absent voter ballot envelope or provisional ballot envelope may have been written in haste.

(e) The surface of the location where the signature was made may have been rough, soft, uneven, or unstable.

(2) In addition to the characteristics listed in R 168.23(2)(f) and (g), the elections official may also consider factors applicable to a particular voter, such as the age of the voter, the age of the signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, the possibility that the voter is disabled, the voter's primary language, and the quality of any digitized signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, and any other plausible reason given by the voter that satisfies the clerk when following up on a questionable signature.

R 168.25 Timing of signature review and notification.

Rule 5. (1) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is received at least 6 calendar days prior to the election, the clerk must notify the voter of issues with the voter's signature by the end of the next business day following receipt of the application or ballot envelope.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

(2) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is received less than 5 calendar days prior to the election, the clerk must review applications and envelopes immediately upon receipt and immediately contact a voter upon determination that the voter's signature on the application or the envelope is missing or does not match the signature on file.

(3) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is missing the voter's signature, or if the clerk determines that the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or on the absent voter ballot envelope does not agree sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, the clerk shall inform the voter using any and all contact information available that their absent voter ballot application or their absent voter ballot envelope is missing a signature or has a non-matching signature, and the need to cure the signature deficiency. The clerk must notify the voter by phone and email, and, in the absence of the voter's email address, by United States mail.

R 168.26 Curing signature deficiencies.

Rule 6. A voter may cure a missing or mismatched signature by providing a signature on the absent voter ballot application or ballot envelope with the missing or mismatched signature or by providing a signature on another form or method as specified by the election official on their website or in the election official's office. A voter may cure a missing or mismatched signature up until the close of polls on Election Day.

Re: Public Comment on Proposed Ruleset 2021-61 ST

I write to provide comment on the Department of State, Elections & Campaign Finance proposed Administrative Rules for Signature Matching Standards for Absent Voter Ballot Applications and Absent Voter Ballot Envelopes (Rule Set 2021-61 ST). I strongly oppose these rules as written and find them to be in direct contradiction to existing Michigan election law.

MCL 168.761 states in part that:

> (2) The qualified voter file must be used to determine the genuineness of a signature on an application for an absent voter ballot. Signature comparisons must be made with the digitized signature in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain a digitized signature of an elector, or is not accessible to the clerk, the city or township clerk shall compare the signature appearing on the application for an absent voter ballot to the signature contained on the master card. [emphasis added]

While MCL 168.766 states in part that:

> (2) The qualified voter file must be used to determine the genuineness of a signature on an envelope containing an absent voter ballot. Signature comparisons must be made with the digitized signature in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain a digitized signature of an elector, or is not accessible to the clerk, the city or township clerk shall compare the signature appearing on an envelope containing an absent voter ballot to the signature contained on the master card. [emphasis added]

However, the proposed administrative rules state in part that "signatures must be reviewed beginning with the presumption that the voter's signature is his or her genuine, valid signature." [emphasis added] This is in direct conflict with the statutory language which instructs clerks to "determine" the genuineness of signatures.

Furthermore, the proposed administrative rules go on to say that "if there are any redeeming qualities…the signature must be treated as valid." [emphasis added] This is a vague and biased standard that would serve to always err on the side of declaring a signature to be genuine and valid and which again does not conform to the statutory language which states that a clerk's determination should be based on whether "the signature on the absent voter ballot application does not agree sufficiently with the signature on the master card or the digitized signature contained in the qualified voter file". [MCL 168.761, emphasis added]

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Finally, the proposed rules also provide for a clerk to utilize hypothetical factors such as "the possibility that the voter is disabled" without any due diligence or contact with the voter to make such a determination. This goes beyond the authority of the administrative rulemaking process and seeks to instead make changes to election law that would be properly considered by the legislature.

I would further comment, that current law provides for a cure process to be used by clerks when there is a doubt as to the genuineness of a signature submitted on an absentee ballot application or absentee ballot envelope. And in fact, the legislature strengthened and added new protections for voters in this regard in my sponsored Senate Bill 757 of 2020 which was passed by the legislature and signed into law by the governor on October 7, 2020. This legislation made statutory changes which require clerks to notify a voter so that they have an opportunity to rectify cases in which the signature submitted does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file "as soon as practicable, but in no event later than 48 hours after determining the signatures do not agree sufficiently or that the signature is missing."

I feel strongly that the presumption of genuineness contained in these proposed administrative rules is inappropriate and not in conformance with existing Michigan election law. Nor is the provision to mandate the acceptance of a signature as genuine if it has "any" redeeming quality whatsoever. The "determination" of genuineness as provided in law should be a wholistic one to ensure that the signature - as stated in statute - "agrees sufficiently" with the signature on file. Finally, guidance to clerks that they may consider hypothetical factors such as the "possibility that the voter is disabled" without contacting the voter or having other factual grounds to make such a determination is also not consistent with existing law and constitutes an overreach in the rulemaking process which spills into the sole domain of the legislature.

Administrative rules for signature matching should pertain to signature matching (i.e. guidance to clerks with the input of handwriting experts which assists clerks in making a determination as to the genuineness of a signature). These proposed rules as written would instead serve to abrogate clerks' statutory role by presuming signatures to be valid upon receipt, accepting signatures regardless of whether they "agree sufficiently" if they have "any" redeeming quality, and by allowing clerks to guess reasons as to why a signature may not match with no further verification or grounds for that determination.

Secretary Benson:

The Department of State has proposed rules that will compromise the integrity of Michigan elections. As a former clerk for over 16 years and now serving as a legislator and Chair of the House Elections and Ethics Committee, I find it imperative that these rules not advance until we can ensure that the rules will protect the vote and the voter.

Presidential elections are always anomalies and 2020 was no different. It was an unprecedented election cycle. This was Michigan's first general election since the passage of Proposal 3 with no reason AV's and same day registration, a contentious presidential election cycle, and one that saw a record influx of outside money directly interfering with our elections. These factors, coupled with a pandemic and changes made to our election laws through executive orders or by the bench, eroded public trust and voter confidence. Politics have taken precedence over principles. Personal agendas over good governance and policy.

While Michigan's election is behind us, we need to learn from it. It is clear there are opportunities to improve our elections to help restore voter and candidate confidence.

Creating a pathway to make it easier to cheat or harder to vote should not be our goal. It should be easy to vote and hard to cheat. It is that simple. Our common goal – no matter where you stand politically – should be that every eligible voter can vote freely, secretly, independently, and securely and with confidence that their vote counted.

These proposed rules will erode the public's trust and allow political agendas to take precedence over sound public policy. We simply cannot adopt these rules in current form for the following reasons:

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

MOAHR 2021-60 – Disqualification from Ballot Based Upon Contents of Affidavit of Identity

The Department of State will be doing a disservice to the people of Michigan if you enact a rule that disqualifies candidates simply because they forget to disclose every single jurisdiction in which they previously sought nomination or election – and without giving them a chance to correct mistakes caught before the filing deadline. It's overly harsh and goes against the goal of encouraging voter participation and expanding competition in races.

This same rule would put cumbersome new requirements on city and township election officials who are not responsible for campaign finance records. Campaign finance reports are filed with the Secretary of State's office or a county clerk's office.

Many campaign finance reports are not available online. This means county, township, and city staff would have to spend time and manpower to manually search records across the state on a quest to try and determine whether a candidate should be disqualified. Having to review potentially thousands of campaign finance records will be a major undertaking that will increase costs and cause delays for clerks' offices that are already understaffed.

MOAHR 2021-61 –Signature Matching for Absent Voter Ballot Applications and Absent Voter Ballot Envelopes

This rule would weaken the signature matching standards that are currently in place for absent voter applications and absent voter ballot envelopes. Signature verification is a hallmark standard that protects the voter. With the elimination of the requirement that a first-time voter must appear in person before an authorized election official since Proposal 3 to validate their identity, it is even more important that we tighten the signature rules, not loosen them.

The proposed rule definition of "signature on file" is not in accordance with state law. MCL 168. 761 (2) and MCL 168.766 (2) clearly state that signatures must be compared to the QVF or the mastercard file. It should not include the signature on the absent voter ballot application as a point of reference because that assumes that signature is valid without proper verification techniques being applied. The definition should only include those signatures that are "actually" on file either in the QVF, or the mastercard file.

This proposed rule would also create an automatic presumption that any signature on an absentee voter ballot application and absentee voter ballot envelope is valid. This rule includes overly broad "redeeming qualities" that would allow mismatched signatures to be accepted. It also includes vague "explanations for differences" that would be subject to vastly different interpretations from election officials in communities across our state.

Common sense dictates that the standard that should be followed for signature verification is that the signature should bear a "significant resemblance" to the signature on file. The rule components dealing with redeeming qualities and explanations for differences should default to a "significant resemblance" standard.

Accepting signatures where only part of the signature, a partially printed signature or a person who has changed their signature to only use initials instead of what is on file is not appropriate.

As a former clerk who verified signatures for thousands of voters, it easy to determine that a voter has signed on a rough surface but it is utterly ridiculous to think this standard should carry the same weight in verifying a voter's signature as signature characteristics that can readily validate a voter's signature. For example, how the I's are dotted, the capital letters are made, the spacing, etc.

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

We must rely on a "significant resemblance" standard. Signatures must have certain consistent markers. Again, this includes the way capital letters are written, and the way in which the letters "i" and "t" are dotted and crossed.

The makers of these proposed rules would have us believe that this standard of "initial presumption of validity" is common practice. This is false.

This alleged standard was a directive put forth by the SOS last year that resulted in a lot of confusion and potential fraud. This was challenged in Robert Genetski and Michigan Republican Party v. Jocelyn Benson and Jonathon Brater in the Court of Claims. On March 9, 2021 Judge Christopher Murray ruled that the SOS had no authority to provide this directive "because the challenged signature-matching standards were issue in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act."

As for the rules on timing of signature review and notification Rule 168.25, those provisions are set out in statute under MCL 168.761 (2) and MCL 168.765a (6) which were just signed into law last year. It should also be noted that the statute does not require the clerk to notify the voter by phone and email. It states by mail, phone, or email. This was also passed just last year and should remain as an option. Clerks have many responsibilities leading up to the election and with unreliable internet in many parts of state, we need to provide reasonable accommodations for our 1,500-plus clerks.

Rule 168.26 on curing signatures is overly simplistic. It essentially states that if the clerk thinks the signature is mismatched, they contact the voter and request they provide another signature which may also not match the signature on file. More diligence is necessary to cure mismatched signatures. It may even be on a separate piece of paper as written in the proposed rule.

Additionally, these rules should require regular updates of signatures and uniform signature verification training for election officials.

MOAHR 2021-62 Online Absent Voter Ballot Applications

The rules pertaining to online voter ballot applications are also insufficient. Local clerks currently rely upon physical signatures on absent voter applications and ballots to verify that an absentee ballot is being mailed to and voted by the person eligible to receive that ballot. These signatures are compared to the QVF and the master card if necessary. This has been a long-standing practice.

Confirmation that the signature has been checked is required to be noted on the AV application and the ballot before it is forwarded for processing should be incorporated into statute or the rule.

In 2020, the SOS directed voters to simply take a picture of their signature and submit it electronically to the local clerk. These images were often distorted, unreadable and resulted in delays in providing voters with their ballots until the signatures could be cured.

Local clerks were often not equipped with quality printers and supplies to print these "pictures." Signature curing took longer than necessary and resulted in voter confusion, duplicate applications, and disenfranchisement. The SOS's public service announcements were often confusing and misleading.

Electronic uploads via unsecured email portals can lead to voter fraud and serve as a potential identity theft threat. It's just not that hard to find access to another person's name, address, birthday, and driver's license number. Slapping the digital signature of a voter that's already on file with the Secretary of State onto an online absentee ballot application – as Rule 168.33 proposes – strips away this important safeguard. Of course, the two signatures are going to match – they're the same exact file. There should be a two-factor authentication to prevent fraud and ensure absentee voting is a system the public can trust.

There are several other factors that make this practice difficult for clerks. Not all clerks have the same technological capabilities to move away from paper forms and applications. Rule 3 (4) which would allow voters to upload a copy of their physical signature ignores these potential technical limitations. Only a limited number of states have implemented this, and the security risks may not be fully known.

There are multiple ways for individuals to apply for an absentee ballot and with permanent AV application lists, we should not compromise perceived convenience for security.

The impact statement implies that these proposed rules are common practices in the SOS office. However, the idea of an online voter ballot application was only created last year because of a public health pandemic with no input from anyone. Something that has been used only once is not a common practice.

As I have detailed, I have serious concerns about the changes the Department of State is proposing – and so do hundreds of other residents and election officials. I believe we can work together with our local clerks to improve upon theses proposed rules and create a better product that both advances democracy AND protects the vote and ensures our elections are secure.

RE: Proposed Changes to JCAR No. 21-73, MOAHR No. 2021-61ST

Dear Senator Bumstead and Representative Meerman,

The Secretary of State acknowledges receipt of the changes proposed by the Joint Committee on Administrative Rules (JCAR) on February 23, 2022 to ruleset JCAR No. 21-73, MOAHR No. 2021-61ST (Ruleset). The Department appreciates JCAR's engagement with the Ruleset. For the following reasons the Secretary declines eight of JCAR's nine proposed changes, but accepts one of the proposed changes:

1. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that definition of "signature on file" in R 168.21(1)(d) be changed. JCAR's suggestion – that "[t]he e Secretary should change this definition to say that a signature on file is limited to the QVF digital signature and that a master[]card signature be considered a signature on file only when a QVF digital signature is missing" – is indistinguishable from the definition of "signature on file" in R 168.21(1)(d) as originally submitted to JCAR ("'Signature on file' means the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain the voter's digitized signature, the signature of the voter contained on the master card is the signature on file."). Because the proposed change is no different than the language in the proposed rule, the Secretary rejects the change.
2. The Secretary accepts JCAR's proposal to strike the instruction in R 168.22(1) that local election officials must begin review of a voter's signature on an absent voter ballot application or an absent voter ballot envelope with a "presumption" that the signature is valid. While the language reflects current practice, and while the Secretary does not read the presumption language in the same manner the language was read by JCAR, the confusion created by the term justifies its removal from the rule. The Secretary will remove term presumption from R 168.22(1) without otherwise substantially changing the text of the Ruleset already reviewed by JCAR.
3. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that the voter contact process laid out in R 168.22(3) be made mandatory, or that the term "genuine concerns" is insufficiently clear. A clerk has a genuine concern about a voter's signature when the clerk cannot determine whether the signature on an absent voter ballot application or an absent voter ballot envelope does or does not match the signature on file, but still believes the voter may have signed the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope in question. For example, a clerk in a small jurisdiction may personally know the voter whose signature is in question, or know of a reason that the voter's signature may not match the signature on file. R 168.22(3) allows clerks in this position the option to contact the voter directly and inquire as to the origin of the signature before determining the signature's validity. In other words, the clerk may contact the voter to ask if the voter did, in fact, sign the absent voter ballot application or absent voter envelope in question, rather than requiring that the clerk reject the absent voter ballot application or absent voter envelope and requiring that the voter complete a more onerous cure process. The pre-determination contact process is made optional because it may not be practical to implement in every jurisdiction across Michigan, but it is provided as an option to avoid the burdens of unnecessary signature curing for clerks and voters alike.

4. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that the list of redeeming qualities in Rule 168.23(2) should be changed. In the Secretary's judgement, the list of redeeming qualities included in the Ruleset submitted to JCAR properly addresses the many ways in which a voter's signature may permissibly vary from the signature on file, while creating clear criteria for finding that a signature provided on an absent voter ballot application or an absent voter ballot envelope does not adequately match the signature on file. Additionally, the list of redeeming qualities correctly balances the need for a uniform floor on signature match processes across the state while allowing clerks flexibility to tailor the process to the needs of their jurisdiction. Finally, the Secretary does not find the list of redeeming qualities included in the ruleset to be confusing, nor does JCAR provide any evidence that JCAR's suggested language would add any clarity beyond the criteria included in the Ruleset.
5. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that R 168.24(1) be amended. The five factors in R 168.24(1) are similar to factors included in signature matching guidance in other states and election jurisdictions. In the Secretary's judgment, the factors provided in the rule are neither vague nor ambiguous, and JCAR provides no evidence to the contrary. Likewise, JCAR declares, with no evidence, that some of the five factors "seem unlikely" to occur. JCAR's opinion is not born out in the real world - all five factors are drawn from real-world situations that filing officials observe election after election. The Secretary also finds JCAR's suggestion that the rule should be changed because the rule envisions such common situations as a signature being made in haste, or a voter's signature changing as the voter ages, unconvincing. Finally, the Secretary disagrees with JCAR's assertion that the rule creates undue flexibility in the signature-matching process. As with R 168.23(2), the Secretary believes that R 168.24(1) strikes the correct balance between creating a uniform, statewide floor on the signature matching process while allowing local election officials to tailor the process to the needs of their communities.
6. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that the timing of the notification required in R 168.25(1) be modified. First, the statute cited by JCAR deals only with notification of an invalid signature; it is silent on the timing of the notification of the process by which a voter may cure an invalid signature. As a practical matter, informing voters of the cure procedure in a timely fashion makes the cure process available to more voters. Second, in the Secretary's view the statutory deadlines for informing voters of issues with their signatures creates a floor, but not a ceiling, on notification timing, and the Secretary retains the power to require a compressed, and thus a more voter friendly, notification timeline.

7. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that R 168.25(8) be changed to reduce the ways in which a voter may be informed of an issue with their signature. As explained above regarding the timing of such a notification, in the Secretary's view the statutory requirements surrounding the method of notification establish a floor, but not a ceiling, on the methods that clerks may be required to employ. The Secretary, in the role of chief election official, retains the power to require clerks take actions above the statutory floor. Additionally, the ability of the voter to take advantage of the cure process laid out in this ruleset is contingent upon quick and effective notification of an issue with the voter's ballot.
8. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that R 168.26(1)(b) provides insufficient detail about the appearance or structure of a cure form for signature match issues. Under MCL 168.31(1)(e), the Secretary has the power to "[p]rescribe and require uniform forms . . . the [S]ecretary considers advisable for use in the conduct of elections and registrations." The Secretary will use that power to create and distribute the cure form envisioned by this rule and need not include any additional detail about that form in this Ruleset.
9. The Secretary rejects the suggestion that R 168.26(3) be clarified to forbid clerks from using the mail system to cure a received absent voter ballot envelope that contains a non-matching signature or that does not bear a signature. There are no reports of this process ever being employed in Michigan, and the Secretary has no reason to believe such a process would be employed under the Ruleset. Such a process would be ineffective and result in delays that may prevent curing prior to 8 p.m. on Election Day. Moreover, such a process would be cumbersome – the clerk would need to package the absent voter ballot envelope to allow a new mailing, print the appropriate labels, and either include a second package for the voter to use to return the absent voter ballot envelope or rely on the voter to find a package to use for to return the newly-cured absent voter ballot envelope. These burdens and the accompanying complexity, combined with the lack of discernable advantage over the other methods of signature curing provided in the Ruleset, make it unlikely that a clerk would engage in multiple-mailing process with which JCAR is concerned.

This letter serves to notify JCAR that the Secretary is withdrawing this Ruleset under MCL 24.245a(10)(a) as permitted by MCL 24.245c(2), effective immediately. The Secretary will submit notice of the change to R 168.22(1) explained above to the Michigan Office of Administrative Hearings and Rules (MOAHR) for review, as required under MCL 24.245c(2). Upon receiving approval from MOAHR as to the form of the changes and a decision from MOAHR as to any burden created by the changes, the Secretary will take the appropriate action under MCL 24.245c(3) or MCL 24.245c(4).

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

BUREAU OF ELECTIONS

SIGNATURE MATCHING FOR ABSENT VOTER BALLOT APPLICATIONS AND ABSENT VOTER BALLOT ENVELOPES

Filed with the secretary of state on

These rules take effect immediately upon filing with the secretary of state unless adopted under section 33, 44, or 45a(9) of the administrative procedures act of 1969, 1969 PA 306, MCL 24.233, 24.244, or 24.245a. Rules adopted under these sections become effective 7 days after filing with the secretary of state.

(By authority conferred on the secretary of state by sections 31, 759, 761, 765, and 765a of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.31, 168.759, 168.761, 168.765, and 168.765a)

R 168.21, R 168.22, R 168.23, R 168.24, R 168.25, and R 168.26 are added to the Michigan Administrative Code, as follows:

R 168.21 Definitions.

Rule 1. As used in these rules:

(a) "Election official" means the township, city, or county clerk or their staff responsible for verifying signatures.

(b) "Master card" means the master card document referenced in 761(2), 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.761, and 766(2), 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.766.

(c) "Qualified voter file" means the voter registration database maintained by the Secretary of State.

(d) "Signature on file" means the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file. If the qualified voter file does not contain the voter's digitized signature, the signature of the voter contained on the master card is the signature on file. If an absent voter ballot application signature has been compared against the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file or on the master card and the absent voter ballot application signature has been determined to agree sufficiently with the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file or on the master card, the absent voter ballot application signature is also a "signature on file" for the purpose of this ruleset. Nothing in this ruleset shall be construed to allow an absent voter ballot application signature to be used to validate an absent voter ballot envelope signature unless the absent voter ballot application signature has been found to agree sufficiently with the signature of the voter contained in the qualified voter file or on the master card.

R 168.22 Sufficient agreement of voter signature; initial presumption of validity; voter contact by clerk.

Rule 2. (1) In determining for purposes of section 761(2) of the Michigan election law, 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.761, or for the purposes of 766(2), 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.766, whether a voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, ~~signatures must be reviewed beginning with the presumption that the voter's signature is his or her genuine, valid signature. A~~an election official may determine that~~decline to accept~~ a signature does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file only ~~if,~~ after reviewing the ~~an~~ absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature using the process set forth in these rules~~, the election official determines that the signature does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file~~.

(2) A voter's signature should be considered invalid only if it differs in significant and obvious respects from the signature on file. Slight dissimilarities should be resolved in favor of the voter. Exact matches are not required to determine that a signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file.

(3) If, after examining a voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature using the process set forth in these rules, an election official has genuine concerns about the signature's validity, the election official may contact the voter to address those concerns prior to determining that a signature is not valid. Any efforts by the election official to contact a voter under this subsection is not notification for the purposes of R 168.25 that the absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature has been found not to agree sufficiently with the signature on file. An election official who is unable to determine that the absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with the signature on file after contacting or attempting to contact the voter for clarification under this subsection is still bound by the notification timelines set forth in R 168.25.

R 168.23 Redeeming qualities.

Rule 3. (1) In determining whether an absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature agrees sufficiently with a signature on file, election officials shall consider whether any redeeming qualities are present. The bureau of elections shall provide examples of signatures with redeeming qualities and questionable signatures.

(2) Redeeming qualities include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) Similar distinctive flourishes.

(b) More matching features than nonmatching features.

(c) Signature features do not match because it appears as if the voter's hand is trembling or shaking.

(d) Only part of the signature matches the signature on file, for example, if only the first letters of the first and last name match.

(e) Signature is partially printed but partially matches the signature on file.

(f) Signature is a recognized diminutive of the voter's full legal name.

(g) Signature omits a middle name, replaces a middle name with an initial, or replaces a middle initial with a name.

(h) Signature style has changed slightly from signature on file.

R 168.24 Explanations for differences in signatures.

Rule 4. (1) Elections officials shall consider the following as possible explanations for the discrepancies in signatures:

(a) Evidence of trembling or shaking in a signature could be health-related or the result of aging.

(b) The voter may have used a diminutive of their full legal name, including, but not limited to, the use of initials, or the rearrangement of components of their full legal name, such as a reversal of first and last names, use of a middle name in place of a first name, or omitting a second last name.

(c) The voter's signature style may have changed slightly over time.

(d) The signature may have been written in haste.

(e) The surface of the location where the signature was made may have been rough, soft, uneven, or unstable.

(2) In addition to the characteristics listed in R 168.23(2)(f) and (g), the elections official may also consider factors applicable to a particular voter, such as the age of the voter, the age of the signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, the possibility that the voter is disabled, the voter's primary language, and the quality of any digitized signature or signatures contained in the voter's record, and any other plausible reason given by the voter that satisfies the clerk when following up on a questionable signature.

R 168.25 Timing of signature review and notification.

Rule 5. (1) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is received at least 6 calendar days prior to the election, the clerk must notify the voter of issues with the voter's signature by the end of the next business day following receipt of the application or ballot envelope.

(2) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is received less than 5 calendar days prior to the election, an election official must review that absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope by the end of the calendar day on which the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope was received by the clerk. If the election official determines that the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, the election official must contact the voter by the end of the calendar day on which the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope was received by the clerk.

(3) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is received by the clerk by 8 p.m. on the calendar day prior to an election, an election official must review the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope before the end of the calendar day prior to the election. If the election official determines that the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, the election official must contact the voter by the end of the calendar day prior to the election.

(4) For the purposes of this rule, if the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope comes into the physical control of the clerk's office before or during the clerk's scheduled business hours, that absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope is considered to have been received by the clerk on the day of submission. If an absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope comes into the physical control of the clerk's office after the end of the clerk's scheduled business hours, or if the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope comes into the physical control of the clerk's office on a day on which the clerk does not have scheduled business hours, that absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope is considered to have been received on the first subsequent day during which the clerk has scheduled business hours.

(5) If a clerk's jurisdiction maintains one or more absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope drop boxes, each drop box must be checked by an election official for any absent voter ballot applications or absent voter ballot envelopes that have been deposited prior to the end of the clerk's scheduled business hours on every day during which the clerk has scheduled business hours. The election official checking the drop box must retrieve each absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope contained in the drop box at that time. Each absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope retrieved at that time is considered to have been received by the clerk on that day. An absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope deposited in those drop boxes on a day during which the clerk does not have scheduled business hours will not be considered to have been received by the clerk until the next day on which the clerk has scheduled business hours.

(6) An absent voter ballot envelope that is collected by an election official through the procedure laid out in 764b(4) or (5), 1954 PA 116, MCL 168.764b, shall be considered received when the election official comes into physical possession of the ballot envelope.

(7) Nothing in this rule shall prevent an election official from providing notification more quickly than mandated by this rule to a voter that the voter's absent voter ballot application signature or absent voter ballot envelope signature has been determined not to agree sufficiently with the signature on file.

(8) If the absent voter ballot application or the absent voter ballot envelope is missing the voter's signature, or if the clerk determines that the voter's signature on the absent voter ballot application or on the absent voter ballot envelope does not agree sufficiently with the voter's signature on file, the clerk shall inform the voter using any and all contact information available that their absent voter ballot application or their absent voter ballot envelope is missing a signature or has a non-matching signature, and the need to cure the signature deficiency. The clerk must notify the voter by phone and email, and, in the absence of the voter's email address, by United States mail.

R 168.26 Curing signature deficiencies.

Rule 6. (1) Any of the following methods may be used to cure a missing or mismatched signature:

(a) A voter may provide a signature on the absent voter ballot application or ballot envelope with the missing or mismatched signature;

(b) A voter may complete and submit a signature cure form prescribed by the Secretary of State; or

RECEIVED by MCOC 3/28/2024 12:37:48 PM

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

(c) A voter may follow another form or method of curing a missing or mismatched signature as specified by the election official on their website or in the election official's office.

(2) A voter may cure a missing or mismatched signature up until the close of polls on Election Day.

(3) If a request if made by a voter, an election official may facilitate the cure of a missing or mismatched signature by making arrangements to

(a) collect a cure form; or

(b) provide the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope missing a signature to the voter so that the voter might sign the absent voter ballot application or absent voter ballot envelope.

I. Introduction

Michigan's state constitution and the Michigan Election Law allow any voter to request and vote an absent voter ballot. This chapter covers the absent voter (AV) ballot process, including applications, deadlines, procedures for issuing absent voter ballots, emergency absent voter ballots, and receipt of absent voter ballots. Questions about the content of this chapter should be directed to Elections@Michigan.gov.

II. Eligibility

Every person registered to vote in Michigan is entitled to request, receive, and vote an absent voter ballot for an upcoming election. A request from a voter is not required for the Secretary of State or any county or municipal clerks to provide an absent voter application to a voter in person, electronically, or by mail with prepaid return postage.

III. Absent voter ballot application process

A voter must request their absent voter ballot in writing from their city or township clerk. An emailed request for an absent voter ballot is considered to be a written request, so long as the mandatory elements explained below are present. A clerk cannot issue an absent voter ballot in response to an oral request made over the phone or in person. However, upon receiving an oral request, a clerk may issue the voter making that request an absent voter ballot application.

A written request for an absent voter ballot is sufficient and must be honored by the clerk so long as the request includes the voter's name and a visible signature. This application may be submitted in-person or via mail, fax, email, or online at Michigan.gov/Vote. A physical written application may be scanned or otherwise digitized and emailed to the voter's local clerk, so long as the voter's signature is visible. The city or township clerk is required to issue an absent voter ballot application to any registered voter who requests one at any time during which an absent voter ballot application may be accepted.

Obtained by Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Michigan FOIA

To ease the absent voter ballot application process for voters and clerks wishing to use a paper application, the Bureau of Elections provides a fillable absent voter ballot application form, available online.[1] Local clerks are also permitted to design their own absent voter ballot application form, so long as the form requests the voter's name and signature and follows all other requirements laid out in this chapter.

Absent voter ballot must be sent immediately

City and township clerks must immediately process absent voter applications. As noted below, to facilitate immediate delivery the clerk should send the ballot immediately after reviewing the AV ballot application, which must be done by the end of the next business day following receipt of the application in most cases. If the signature on the application agrees sufficiently with the signature on file, and it is within the 40-day period before the election listed in the application, the clerk must immediately send or deliver the ballot to the applicant. If it is sent by mail, the ballot must be sent with a postage prepaid absent voter ballot return envelope. For information on using the state-funded prepaid postage permit, see the Prepaid Postage Guide and FAQ.[2]

Voters may submit an absent voter ballot application prior to the time at which absent voter ballots are delivered to the clerk. If a voter has submitted an absent voter ballot application to the clerk and the clerk has verified the signature on that absent voter application the clerk must send the voter an absent voter ballot immediately upon delivery of absent voter ballots to the clerk.

Opportunity to cure a deficiency and notice

If the application is found to be deficient, the voter must be notified of the insufficiency and the voter's options to cure that deficiency.

Between 45 and 6 days before an election, the clerk must make a reasonable effort to verify or reject the AV ballot application received during this time by the end of the next business day following receipt. If the clerk determines that the voter's signature on the application is deficient, the clerk must notify the voter by telephone, email, or text message, if available, or by U.S. mail if the other methods are unavailable.

Beginning five days before an election and on Election Day, the clerk must verify or reject the AV ballot application received during this time by the end of the calendar day of receipt. If the clerk determines that the elector's signature on the application is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file, the clerk must notify the elector by phone, email, or text message, if available, or by U.S. mail if the other methods are unavailable.

After 4 p.m. on the Friday before the election, if the clerk determines that the voter's signature on an AV ballot application is missing or does not agree sufficiently with the signature on file after this time, the clerk must immediately notify that voter of the rejection of their application.

Online absent voter ballot application

Voters who have a Michigan state driver's license or state ID can also request an absent voter ballot online at Michigan.gov/Vote. Applications submitted through Michigan.gov/Vote are signed using the signature that the voter submitted when applying for their driver's license or state identification card.[3] A digital signature is an acceptable signature for the absent voter ballot application.

Requirements for in-person absent voter ballot applications

If a voter applies to receive an absent voter ballot in person at their city or township clerk's office, the voter is required to present a picture ID or sign the Affidavit of Voter not in Possession of Picture Identification form. Both the acceptable picture IDs and the Affidavit are the same as those required for in-person voter registration and in-person voting on election day. For more information, see Chapter 2: Voter Registration in Michigan. A copy of the Affidavit of Voter not in Possession of Picture Identification is also included in Appendix I.

A voter who does not have an acceptable picture ID and who signs the Affidavit of Voter not in Possession of Picture Identification must be issued a ballot.

[3] Later in 2024, registered voters without a Michigan Driver's License or state ID will be able to apply for an AV ballot online by taking a picture of their signature and uploading it with their online application.

A voter who applies for an absent voter ballot in person at their local clerk's office before 5 p.m. on the Friday prior to the election may choose to either receive the absent ballot at the clerk's office at the time the application is submitted or to have the clerk mail the absent voter ballot to the voter's address. A voter who applies for an absent voter ballot in person at their local clerk's office after 5 p.m. on the Friday prior to the election must receive the ballot at the clerk's office after submitting the application; the voter cannot opt for the ballot to be mailed to the voter's address. If a voter applying for an absent voter ballot does not have a valid picture ID and signs the Affidavit of Voter not in Possession of Picture Identification, and if the voter receives their absent voter ballot at the clerk's office, the voter's absent voter ballot must be processed as a challenged ballot. For more information on how to process a challenged ballot, see the section Preparing a Challenged Absent Voter Ballot below.

Voters who submit an absent voter ballot application through the mail, fax, or email, who submit the application through a municipal drop box, or who submit their application using any method that does not include an in-person interaction with their local clerk or the clerk's staff, are not required to show a picture ID to be issued their absent voter ballot.

Multiple-Election (or "Dual") absent voter ballot applications

Voters submitting an absent voter ballot application to receive an absent voter ballot for a primary election or presidential primary may opt for that application to also serve as the voter's application to receive an absent voter ballot for multiple elections – specifically, all elections following that primary or presidential primary in the calendar year. While the application has been referred to as a "dual" application in the past, when it typically applied to a primary and its corresponding general election, the application now functions as a multiple-election application. For example, a voter can submit a single absent voter ballot application for both the August primary election and the November general election. A voter could also submit a single absent voter ballot application for a presidential primary election and every election that follows it, which may include a May regular election, August primary election, and November general election. The multiple-election or "dual" application could also include any special elections that follow the primary or presidential primary.

A voter may also choose to submit their absent voter ballot application for only the primary election. A voter may request their absent voter ballot application not be treated as a multiple-election or dual application for any reason, including because the voter wishes to vote in person in certain elections. The number of voters who submit these types of applications will likely decline in future years as more voters join the permanent ballot list, described further below.

Any absent voter ballot application form developed by a local clerk must allow voters to select from the options described.

Accessible absent voter ballot applications

Voters with print disabilities can apply for an accessible electronic absent voter ballot through the Democracy Live OmniBallot program, which is available at Michigan.Gov/Vote.

Print disabilities are disabilities that interfere with the effective reading, writing, or use of printed material. This definition includes persons who are blind or visually impaired, those with learning disabilities, as well as those with a physical disability that interferes with holding or manipulating paper or a pen and pencil.

Accessible applications must include the voter's Michigan driver's license number, state ID number, or the last four digits of the voter's Social Security Number along with other voter registration information. Accessible applications do not need to be signed. When voters complete the application for an accessible ballot, the Bureau of Elections verifies the information provided matches the voter's QVF information and the application is added to the voter's QVF record. The Bureau of Elections then generates the voter's ballot in the OmniBallot platform. Finally, the Bureau emails the clerk two links: one for the clerk to verify the OmniBallot ballot is accurate, and one for the voter to access the ballot. The Bureau also provides includes instructions on how to use the OmniBallot system in this email.

When a clerk receives the email, the clerk should first open the designated clerk link and verify that the ballot is accurate. Next, the clerk should email the designated voter link and instructions on how to use the OmniBallot system to the voter. The instructions supplied in the email from the Bureau to the clerk should appear in the body of the email sent to the voter. Finally, the clerk marks in QVF that the voter has been sent an accessible ballot and records the letter "A" followed by the ballot number (for example A0001). The voter completes the ballot on the OmniBallot platform, prints it, and returns the completed ballot to the clerk in a signed envelope.

Absent ballot applications received from military and overseas voters

If a voter applies for an absent voter ballot using a Federal Postcard Application (FPCA) or submits a Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot (FWAB), the voter should be processed as a MOVE voter. If a voter applies for an absent voter ballot using a regular application and lists a foreign address as the mailing address or temporary address, the voter should also be processed as a MOVE voter. If the voter provides an address in the United States that appears to be a military address, the clerk should contact the voter to determine if the voter is a MOVE voter. For instructions on receiving absent voter ballot applications and issuing absent voter ballots to military and overseas voters, see Chapter 7: Federal Registration and Absent Voter Programs.

IV. Maintaining a permanent ballot list

When applying for an absent voter ballot, a voter may also request to receive an absent voter ballot by mail for all future elections. Once this application is verified, the voter becomes a permanent mail ballot voter and must be sent an absent voter ballot for every election. The local clerk must retain these applications. In the future, these applications or a report verifying that a voter on the permanent ballot list has moved will be able to be added to the voter's record in QVF to more easily document a voter's move to different jurisdictions.

The Secretary of State or appropriate clerk can remove a voter from the permanent ballot list only in the following circumstances:

- The voter submits a signed request to remove their name from the permanent ballot list.
- The voter is no longer qualified to vote in Michigan.
- The Secretary of State or appropriate clerk receives reliable information that the voter has moved residences to another state, or has moved to another residence within the state without updating the voter's registration address.
- The voter does not vote for 6 consecutive years. If an application is rescinded for this reason, the clerk must send a notice to the voter that the application has been rescinded.

Presidential primary ballot selection form

For presidential primary elections, the two major political parties have separate ballots with their party's prospective candidates, and each voter may select only one party's ballot to vote. To indicate which partisan primary they intend to vote in, a permanent mail ballot voter must submit a presidential primary ballot selection form to their clerk online, by mail, or in person.

Clerks will send presidential primary ballot selection forms with prepaid return postage to all permanent mail ballot voters who have not made a ballot selection no later than 60 days before the presidential primary. If a voter becomes a permanent mail ballot voter after this deadline, the clerk must immediately send a ballot selection form with prepaid return postage.

Clerks must send ballot selection forms to the same addresses that voters requested for mailing absent voter ballots.

Clerks must notify permanent mail ballot voters who have not made of ballot selection by the 40th day before the presidential primary of the requirement to make a selection in order to receive a presidential primary ballot. The notification must be by phone, email, and text message if available. If the voter's phone number and email address are unavailable, clerks must send notice by mail, and may additionally notify the voter by other available methods.

If the presidential primary has offices or proposals on the ballot other than President of the United States, a separate ballot with only those other offices or proposals will be mailed to the voter, along with a notice indicating that the voter did not make a presidential primary ballot selection and the process by which the voter can still participate in the presidential primary election, including early voting or voting in-person on Election Day.

The Bureau of Elections will provide future instructions regarding the discontinuation of the permanent absent voter ballot application list; until that time, clerks should continue to issue absent voter ballot applications for all elections to those on the list.

V. Deadlines for requesting an absent voter ballot

There are several deadlines affecting the submission of absent voter ballot applications. The municipal clerk, or authorized personnel appointed by the clerk, must be available in the election official's office or at another publicly published or posted location to accept and process absent voter ballot applications at the deadlines laid out in this section.

Deadline to request an absent voter ballot be mailed to a voter

If a voter wishes to have their absent voter ballot mailed to their address, the absent voter ballot application must be received by the clerk no later than 5 p.m. on the Friday prior to the election.

While a voter has the legal right to request that their absent voter ballot be mailed to their address so long as the clerk receives the voter's absent voter ballot application by 5 p.m. on the Friday prior to the election, the Bureau recommends that clerks encourage voters submitting near the deadline to request their absent voter ballot be issued in person at the clerk's office to avoid mail delays or other issues.

If a voter's absent voter ballot application is received by the clerk after 5 p.m. on the Friday prior to the election and indicates that the voter wishes the absent voter ballot to be mailed to the voter's address, the clerk should alert the voter that their absent ballot request cannot be fulfilled. The clerk should inform the voter that the voter may appear in person at the clerk's office to request their absent voter ballot or may vote in person at their early voting site, if early voting is available for that election or at their polling place on Election Day. An absent voter ballot application rejected as untimely for one election must still be processed for any future elections listed on the application.

Deadline to request an absent voter ballot be issued to the voter at the clerk's office

Absent voter ballots can be issued to a registered voter at the clerk's office at any time until 4 p.m. on the day prior to the election. A voter may then complete and submit the absent voter ballot at the clerk's office, return the absent voter ballot to the clerk or an absent voter ballot dropbox until 8 p.m. on Election Day, or tabulate the absent voter ballot at the voter's polling place on Election Day.

Every voter waiting in line at their clerk's office to request an absent voter ballot at 4 p.m. on the day prior to the election must be issued an absent voter ballot and allowed to complete the ballot in the clerk's office.

Same day voter registration

A voter who registers to vote or who updates their registration on Election Day by appearing in person at their clerk's office is also eligible to request and receive an absent voter ballot until 8 p.m. on Election Day. If the voter requests an absent voter ballot in person at the clerk's office on Election Day after registering to vote or updating their voter registration, the voter must complete the absent voter ballot in the clerk's office and must return the completed ballot to the clerk prior to leaving the clerk's office.

Every person waiting in line to register to vote or to update their voter registration at 8 p.m. on Election Day, and who is able to meet the requirements to register to vote, must be given the opportunity to request an absent voter ballot and allowed to complete the ballot in the clerk's office, including after 11:59 p.m. on Election Day if necessary.

Election Day vote centers

Cities or townships that processed at least 500 Election Day voter registrations in either or both of the previous two November general elections are also able to establish an Election Day vote center to tabulate ballots for voters who register or update their registration on Election Day.

Election Day vote centers function as polling places and must be located in the same building where the city or township clerk provides Election Day registration, which may include the clerk's satellite office.

For municipalities with an Election Day vote center, every person waiting in line to register or update voter registration at 8 p.m. on Election Day, and who is able to meet the requirements to register to vote, must be allowed to complete that transaction and to cast a ballot at the Election Day vote center, including after 11:59 p.m. on Election Day if necessary.

physically disabled or because of a family death or illness, the timing of which made it impossible for the voter to apply for an absent voter ballot by the statutory deadline.

A voter facing an emergency prior to 5 p.m. on the Friday before Election Day may submit a normal absent voter ballot application. An emergency absent voter ballot request must be made after 5 p.m. on the Friday before the election and before 4 p.m. on Election Day.

To submit an emergency absent voter ballot, the voter must complete a written request that includes the following elements:

- A statement that the voter is qualified to vote in the election.
- A statement indicating whether the emergency is caused by a physical disability or by a family death or illness requiring the voter to be absent from the jurisdiction on Election Day.
- A statement that the emergency occurred at a time that made it impossible for the voter to submit an absent voter ballot application by the statutory deadline.

Clerks may, but are not required to, provide an Emergency Absent Voter Application form that a voter may use in lieu of creating the written statement described above.

The voter requesting the emergency absent voter ballot may authorize another person to receive the voter's absent voter ballot, and to deliver that absent voter ballot to the voter. The authorization to receive an emergency absent voter's ballot and to deliver that ballot to the voter must be in writing and must be signed by the applicant. An emergency absent voter ballot may also be delivered by hand to the applicant by a person authorized by the clerk to handle this task.
