All,

There has been a lot of commentary about the FBI this week questioning our work and motives. Much of it is from critics and pundits on the outside who don't know what we know and don't see what we see. What I know --- and what I see --- is an organization made up of men and women who are committed to doing their jobs professionally and by the book every day; this week is no exception.

As always, the way we maintain the trust and confidence of the American people isn't by joining in the public commentary. We do it through our work. By showing, when all the facts come out, we stuck to the process. We don't cut corners. We don't play favorites. We ask the tough questions --- including of ourselves, making sure among other things that the investigative steps we take are measured and scrupulously consistent with our national security obligations and our role upholding the Constitution. Our focus must remain, as always, on our mission and on doing the right thing, in the right way, no matter how loud the noise gets.

Let me also assure you that your safety and security are my primary concern right now. Security Division is working across the agency as we continue to stay vigilant and adjust our security posture accordingly.

I'm inspired by your extraordinary demonstrations of courage and sacrifice on behalf of the American people. And I remain proud of the rigor, objectivity, and fierce passion for the mission that you bring to the job. It's an honor to serve alongside you.

Chris
